Ver. 21. ᵖ Οὐ μόνον ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, not only in this world.] By comparing theſe words with Col. 2. 10. where Chriſt is ſaid to be the head of all principality and power; and with Phil. 2. 9. where God is ſaid to have given him a name above every name; I am inclined to think theſe words only ſignify that our Lord Chriſt is exalted above all power that is, or ever ſhall be; for, Not to be done in this world, nor in the world to come, Matth. 12. 32. is never to be done, Luke 12. 32.; ſee note on Matth. 12. 32. Note alſo, that the word ὄνομα, name, doth alſo ſignify perſons; ſee the note on Acts 1. 15. And that men of great power and dignity are ſtyled, both in ſcripture and in other writers, Anſhe haſhem, οἱ ἄνδρες οἱ ὀνομαστοὶ, men of name, that is, renown; ſo are the giants ſtyled, Gen. 6. 4. and the princes of the congregation, Numb. 16. 2. So that to be exalted above every name that is named, is to be advanced, even in his human nature, above men and angels of the higheſt power and dignity. Though, after the controverſy aroſe concerning the Deity of Chriſt, the fathers, to avoid the argument of the Arians from theſe words, chuſe rather to interpret this of the name of Son, mentioned by St Paul in theſe words, Heb. 1. 6. To which of the angels ſaid he, Thou art my Son? So Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact in locum, and Epiphanius, hær. 69. p. 325. (See the note on Heb. 1. 4.).

Ibid. A name above every name.] That the word ὄνομα doth alſo ſignify perſons, ſee note on Acts 2. 15. And men of great power and dignity are ſtyled, both in ſcripture and in other writers, Anſhe haſhem, οἱ ἄνδρες οἱ ὀνομαστοὶ, men of name, i. e. renown. So are the giants called, Gen. 6. 4.; and the princes of the congregation, Numb. 16. 2.; ſo that to be exalted above every name that is named, is to be advanced, even in his human nature, above men and angels of the higheſt dignity, by being exalted to the right hand of the Father, Heb. 1. 4. 5. After the dignity of Chriſt was conteſted by the Arians, the Fathers, to avoid their argument from theſe words, choſe rather to interpret this of the name of the Son, mentioned by St Paul, Heb. 1. 6. To which of the angels ſaid he, Thou art my Son? So Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact on this place, and Epiphanius, hær. 69. p. 325. though the words, ver. 20. He hath raiſed him from the dead, and ſet him on his right hand in heavenly places, ſtrongly plead for the firſt interpretation.

Ver. 23. ᵠ Πάντα ἐν πᾶσι, all in all.] For he aſcended up on high, that he might fill the members of his church with all gifts neceſſary for the edification of his ſaints, till they came to the fulneſs of the meaſure of the ſtature of Chriſt, chap. 4. 10. 11. 12. In him all fulneſs dwells, and we are πεπληρωμένοι, filled full in him, who is the head of principalities and powers, Col. 2. 9. 10.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. AND you (alſo) hath he (raiſed, and) quickened (with, and by Chriſt, chap. 1. 20. and 2. 5.), who were [a] dead in treſpaſſes and ſins,

2. Wherein (in which ſins) in time paſt ye walked (living) [b] according to the courſe (and faſhion) of this (evil) world, [c] according to (the ſuggeſtions of) the prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit which (even) now worketh in the children of diſobedience, (the Heathen world).

3. Among whom alſo we all (who are Gentiles) had our converſation in times paſt, in the luſts of our fleſh, fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind (or of our hearts); and were by [d] nature (indeed, by birth among Heathens, and in our natural ſtate before Chriſt) the children of wrath, even as others (of the Gentiles were.)

4. (This, I ſay, was our former ſtate); but God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us (Gentiles),

5. Even when we were (thus) dead in ſins, [e] hath quickened us together with Chriſt, (through his rich grace; for) by grace ye are ſaved, (i. e. are brought into a ſtate of ſalvation.)

6. And hath raiſed us up together, (not only by a ſpiritual conformity to his reſurrection, Rom. 6. 5. 11. but alſo by an aſſurance of a like reſurrection, 1 Pet. 1. 3. he being riſen as the firſt fruits, 1 Cor. 15. 20. and the firſt-born from the dead, Col. 1. 18.) and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus, (our head thus raiſed and exalted, and thus aſcended into heaven, as our forerunner, Heb. 6. 20. and 10. 13. 14.)

7. That in (and through) the ages to come he might (by this means) ſhew the exceeding riches of his grace, in (this) his kindneſs to us, through Chriſt Jeſus.

8. (I ſay the riches of his grace); for [f] by grace are ye ſaved, through faith (in Chriſt); and that (faith is) not of (and from) yourſelves: it is the gift of God, (the objects of our faith being only made known by divine revelation, 1 Cor. 2. and only confirmed, and ſo made credible to us, by the teſtimony which God hath given to them):

9. Not of works (done before faith by us), leſt any man ſhould boaſt, (as doing any thing which might antecedently deſerve, or make him meet to be acquainted with, and made partaker of this ſaving grace):

10. (Not of works, for this reaſon alſo); for we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, which God [g] hath before ordained [ἵνα περιπατήσωμεν, ſub. ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς, to which God hath before prepared us) that we ſhould walk in them.

11. Wherefore remember, that ye being (were) in times paſt Gentiles in the fleſh, who are called the uncircumciſion by that (nation of the Jews) which is called the circumciſion (by reaſon of their circumciſion) made with hands;

12. (And) that at that time ye were without (the knowledge of) Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, (to whom the Meſſiah primarily belonged), and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe (made to their forefathers), [h] having no (firm and lively) hope (of ſpiritual and future bleſſings), and (being) without (the knowledge of the true) God in the world:

13. But now in Chriſt Jeſus, ye who ſometimes were afar off (from God, and from the bleſſings imparted to the Jews), are made [i] nigh (to God, as they were) by the blood of Chriſt.

14. For he is our peace-(maker), who hath made both (Jew and Gentile) one, (as to the privileges of the goſpel, John 10. 16. Gal. 4. 28.), and hath broken down the [k] middle wall of partition betwixt us, (i. e. aboliſhed the ceremonial law, which was a partition-wall betwixt Jew and Gentile);

15. Having aboliſhed in (or by) his (own) fleſh (that which made) the enmity (betwixt Jew and Gentile), even the law of commandments, (conſiſting) in ordinances (peculiar to the Jews), for to make in himſelf (or create), of two, [l] one new man, (to whom, as their head, they are both united into one body, thus) making [m] peace (betwixt both);

16. And that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the croſs, having ſlain the enmity (betwixt both to God) thereby, (or upon it; for when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, Rom. 5. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 18. Col. 1. 21. Or, having ſlain, that is, aboliſhed by his croſs, thoſe ordinances which were ὑπεναντία ἡμῖν, contrary to us, Col. 2. 14. as excluding us from the ſociety of God's people, and cauſing the enmity betwixt the Jews and Gentiles, ver. 15.)

17. And (having procured this reconciliation, he) came and (ἐλθὼν εὐηγγελίσατο, he coming by his apoſtles) preached peace to you (Gentiles) which were afar off, and to them that were near (i. e. Jews.)

18. For through him (thus reconciling us to God) [n] we both (Jew and Gentile) have acceſs by one Spirit (of adoption conferred upon us) to the Father, (and are enabled to come unto him as our Father, Rom. 8. 15.)

19. Now therefore ye (Gentiles) are no more (to be reckoned as) [o] ſtrangers and foreigners, but (as) fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and of the houſehold of God;

20. And

20. And are built upon the foundation of the apoſtles (of the new), and the prophets (of the old covenant), Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner-ſtone; (who ſupports and cements the whole building, both of believing Jews and Gentiles, and unites both into one body by his Spirit, Pſal. 117. 22.);

21. In whom all the building (being thus) fitly framed together, (or compacted) groweth into one holy temple in the Lord. (They then belong not to this building, whoſe bodies are not an holy temple to the Lord):

22. In whom ye (Epheſians) alſo are builded together for [d] an habitation of God through the Spirit.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. Νεκρὸς ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις, dead in ſins.] They who interpret this phraſe thus, You who are dead to ſins by baptiſm, ſeem not to have looked to the fifth verſe, where they who are here ſaid to be dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, are ſaid to be quickened; or to the parallel place, Col. 2. 13. where it is ſaid, You who were dead in ſins, and the circumciſion of the fleſh, he hath quickened; nor indeed to the phraſe, which is never uſed in the plural number in that ſenſe, but only in the ſingular, viz. Rom. 6. 2. and 10. 11.

Ibid. Καὶ, and.] That this glorious hope, this bleſſed inheritance, this happy reſurrection, will be your portion, you may learn from what God hath already done for you; for he hath quickened you who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, ver. 1. and ſo hath brought you into a ſtate of ſalvation, ver. 5. and made you meet to be partakers of the inheritance of ſaints in light, Col. 1. 12. He alſo hath raiſed up your head, and placed him, and in him your nature in heavenly places, and ſo hath, in a manner, raiſed you up, and made you ſit together with him there, ver. 6. You being hence aſſured, that all his living members ſhall be raiſed up to live for ever with him; for if we believe that Chriſt is riſen, we muſt believe that them who ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him, to be for ever with the Lord, 1 Theſſ. 4. 14. 17. And to him that overcometh, ſaith Chriſt, will I give to ſit down with me on my throne, even as I alſo have overcome, and am ſet down with my Father on his throne, Rev. 3. 21.

Ver. 2. [b] Κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα, according to the courſe of this world.] That is, according to the life which men of this world, deſtitute of faith in Chriſt, do live: for, as Phavorinus ſaith, αἰὼν, the word age, is ὁ ζωὴ, ἢ ὁ βίος, the life of man, or τὸ μέτρον τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης ζωῆς, the meaſure of human live. Thus, τὸν αἰῶνα διάγειν, in Iſocrates and Xenophon, is to paſs the time of life; τελευτᾶσαι τὸν αἰῶνα, in Herodotus and Sophocles, is to end this live, or to die.

Ibid. [c] Κατὰ τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος, according to the prince of the power of the air.] It was the opinion both of Jews and Heathens, ἀέρα τὸν ἄνω ψυχῶν εἶναι πλῆρη, that the air was full of ſpirits, called dæmons, as Diogenes (b) ſaith, in the Life of Pythagoras: and the Jews, in the Pirk Avoth, teach, "A terra "uſque ad firmamentum omnia eſſe plena turmis et "præfectis;" that, from the earth to the firmament, all things were full of theſe companies and rulers; and that there was a prince over them who was called ὁ κοσμοκράτωρ, the governor of the world, that is, of the darkneſs of it; ſee note on chap. 6. ver. 12. This evil ſpirit is here ſaid ἐνεργεῖν, inwardly to work in the children of diſobedience; and elſewhere, to lead them captive to his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26.: and their converſion is ſtyled, a recovery of them from the power of Satan, Acts 26. 18. And hence we may rationally conclude, that the good Spirit doth alſo inwardly work in pious perſons, enabling them to will and to do; it being unreaſonable to conceive, the evil ſpirit ſhould have more power over thoſe wicked men in whom he dwells, than the good ſpirit hath in thoſe pious perſons in whoſe hearts he is ſaid to dwell.

Ver. 3. [d] Καὶ ἤμεθα τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς, and were by nature children of wrath.] The ancient fathers generally affirm, that ſin cannot owe its original purely to that nature in which we were born, but only τῇ αὐθαιρεσίᾳ, i. e. to the choice or conſent of the will; and that they who make us to be ſinners, merely by the derivation of our natures from our progenitors, do make God, the author of our nature, to be the author of our ſin. The ſame they ſeem to do, who ſay that ſin is propagated by generation, and that an infant is therefore properly, by birth, a ſinner, it being God who hath eſtabliſhed that order in the generation of mankind; which neither he that begets, nor he that is begotten, can correct, and by whoſe benediction mankind increaſe and multiply: and reaſon will inſtruct us, that to be born or not, is not in our power; and that, what is not in our power to avoid, can never be our crime, nor render us obnoxious to the eternal wrath of God.

ſtrate, that the apoſtle here intendeth no ſuch thing, becauſe he ſpeaks of perſons dead in (actual) treſpaſſes and ſins, in which in times paſt they had walked, according to the courſe of the (Heathen) world, and the ſuggeſtions of Satan; of men who had their converſation in times paſt in the fleſh; fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind, and were, on that account, the children of wrath, as well as other Heathens. And therefore Suidas, agreeably to the context, ſaith, that "nature is here put for "cuſtomary practice," according to the frequent import of that word in profane authors: in Philo, (i) in whom cuſtom is ἐχθρὰ φυσις ἀληθείας, a nature oppoſite to truth: and in our common proverb, that Cuſtom is a ſecond nature. His words are theſe, "When the apoſtle ſaith, we are by nature the "children of wrath, he ſaith not this according to "the proper acceptation of the word nature, for "then he had caſt the blame on the author of "nature; but he underſtands by it a long and "evil cuſtom (k)." And Didymus Alexandrinus ſaith, "The appoſtle intends by it τὸ περικείμενον τῇ "φύσει ἤ τὸ κακὰ φύσιν, not that which is according to "nature, but that which is acceſſory to it (l)."

2. The fathers do more generally ſay, that to be by nature the children of wrath, is here the ſame as to be truly and indeed ſo (m): and that the Epheſians and other nations are ſtyled ſuch here, becauſe, in that eſtate, they continually provoked God to wrath by their idolatries and fleſhly luſts; and ſo they are here ſtyled, ſay they, children of wrath, partly as being born in Heatheniſm, and therefore indole idolatræ (n), and ſo out of covenant with God, (in which eſtate the whole body of the Heathens are repreſented; as having no hope of the bleſſings promiſed to thoſe who were in covenant with God, and without (the favour and protection of) God in the world. And perſons ſo abandoned by him are in ſcripture ſtyled the objects of his hatred, comparatively to thoſe who are in covenant with him; as in theſe words, Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated, Mal. 1. 2. And when God determined to reject, and to forſake his people, he ſtyles them, the generation of his wrath, Jer. 7. 29. as being worthy of his wrath, as wicked perſons are ſtyled ſons of death, and of perdition, as having done thoſe things which rendered them worthy of death and deſtruction; i. e. not for original ſin, but for a long ſeries of actual and habitual tranſgreſſions. So Abiathar is ἀνὴρ θανάτου, a man of death, 1 Kings 2. 26. And whereas Eſthius ſaith, that the word τέκνα, children, ſhews that this phraſe relates to what they were from their nativity; this may be eaſily confuted from theſe following expreſſions, ſome of them frequent in the holy ſcripture, viz. τέκνα Θεῦ, the children of God, John 1. 12.; τέκνα σοφίας, the children of wiſdom, Matth. 11. 19.; τέκνα ὑπακοῆς, children of obedience, 1 Pet. 1. 14.; τέκνα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, children of the promiſe, oppoſed to children of the fleſh, Rom. 9. 8. Gal. 4. 28.; καταράς τέκνα, accurſed children, 2 Pet. 2. 14.: for we are not ſons of God, of wiſdom, of obedience, of the promiſe, or curſe, by nativity, but by our own good or evil actions. And whereas he adds, that the apoſtle writes this in the perſon of the Jews, this is moſt plainly falſe; the Jews being not under the prince of the power of the air, i. e. the conduct and government of Satan, as were thoſe Heathens, whoſe gods were dæmons, and who ſacrificed to devils, and not to God. Moreover, they who are here ſaid to be quickened, when they were dead in treſpaſſes, are ſaid, Col. 2. 13. to be quickened when dead in treſpaſſes, and the uncircumciſion of the fleſh, which cannot poſſibly agree to the Jews. We all, here therefore, is only all the Gentiles, whatſoever Mr Cl. ſays to the contrary; nor is there any thing more common, than for St Paul to ſpeak thus. So, Tit. 3. 3. We ourſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another: not we apoſtles, or we Jews, but we Gentiles. And this is here evident to a demonſtration; for what is here we, ver. 2. and 5. is ye, ver. 8.; what is we, ver. 10. is again ye, ver. 11. 12. 13.; what is we, ver. 18. is ye, ver. 19.

Ibid. Καὶ ἦμεν τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς, and were by nature children of wrath.] We were children of wrath, ſaith Jerom, vel propter corpus humilitatis, corpuſque mortis, "by reaſon of the vile mortal body to "which our ſouls were condemned," which was the opinion of Origen; or quod ab adoleſcentia mens hominum appoſita ſit ad malitiam, "becauſe the mind "of man is prone to iniquity from his youth:" vel quod ex eo tempore, quo poſſumus habere notitiam Dei et ad puberitatem venimus, omnes aut opera, aut lingua, aut cogitatione peccamus; or "becauſe, when "we come to ripeneſs of years, and attain to the "knowledge of God, we offend all in thought,

"word, and deed:" where it is obſervable, that though he brings in Origen's peculiar opinion, as one reaſon of this appellation, yet hath he not the leaſt hint of our being the children of wrath, on the account of Adam's ſin. See my interpretation confirmed by Mr Thorndike, &c.

Ver. 5. Συνεζωοποίησε τῷ Χριστῷ, hath quickened us together with Chriſt.] Not only by giving us a new birth, or renovation of life, but an aſſurance alſo of eternal life; for becauſe I live, ſaith Chriſt, you ſhall live alſo, John 14. 19. We ſhall be ſaved by his life, Rom. 5. 10.

Ver. 8. Τῇ γὰρ χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι, for by grace ye are ſaved.] That we may underſtand aright how we are here, and in other places, ſaid to be ſaved by grace and mercy, and not by works, it may deſerve to be obſerved,

1. That though the apoſtle here ſaith, By grace ye are ſaved, not of works; yet, leſt any man ſhould hence be tempted to infer, that Chriſtians may be ſaved without doing works of righteouſneſs, when they have time and opportunity to do them; he expreſsly adds, and that by way of reaſon of what he had aſſerted, that we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, which God hath ordained that we ſhould walk in them. Since then to walk in righteouſneſs, according to the import of that phraſe in ſcripture, implies, that the tenor of our lives be ſpent in works of righteouſneſs; ſurely we cannot reaſonably hope to be accepted by God, if we neglect the very end for which we are created in Chriſt Jeſus, or decline that way in which God hath ordained us to walk. Hence the apoſtle tells the ſame Epheſians, that if they had been taught the Chriſtian faith, as the truth was in Jeſus; they knew themſelves obliged to put off the old man, and to put on the new, which after God is created in righteouſneſs, and true holineſs; and that it was their duty to walk as children of light, proving what is acceptable to the Lord, and bringing forth thoſe fruits of the Spirit, which are in all goodneſs, righteouſneſs, and truth, chap. 4. 21. 22. chap. 5. 8. 9.

Note, 2*dly*, That when the apoſtle ſaith, we are ſaved not by works, his meaning is not to exclude all works from having any influence on our ſalvation, but only to exclude thoſe works which are done antecedently to faith, and to the renovation of the Holy Ghoſt, or antecedently to their being called by the goſpel to ſalvation. This is apparent from the reaſon here aſſigned, why we are not ſaved by works, viz. Becauſe we were not fitted, or prepared, to do good works, till we were firſt in Chriſt; which, as it doth exclude good works performed before faith in Chriſt, ſo doth it as effectually eſtabliſh thoſe which are afterwards to be performed, by virtue of the new nature given to us, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.

Object. And whereas ſome object againſt this anſwer, that the apoſtle ſaith, We are ſaved by grace, not of works, leſt any man ſhould boaſt, which boaſting doth not ſeem to be excluded, if our ſalvation doth any way depend on works done by us, whether they be legal or evangelical, done before or after faith:

Anſ. To this I anſwer, That though ſalvation doth depend upon good works, or on ſincere obedience to be performed by us after faith, yet is all boaſting utterly excluded: 1. Becauſe the good works we do, proceed not from ourſelves, but purely from the grace and Spirit of God; for it is God that worketh in us both to will and to do, of his good pleaſure. As therefore the apoſtle ſaith of the gift of tongues, and healing, and the like, which were ſo frequent in the church of Corinth, and were occaſions of their boaſting, Who maketh thee to differ in theſe things from others? or what gift haſt thou which thou haſt not received? and if thou haſt received it, wherefore doſt thou boaſt as if it were thine own, and thou hadſt not received it? 1 Cor. 4. 7. ſo may we here: What good work doſt thou which thou haſt not received grace and the good Spirit to perform? and if thou haſt received ſtrength from God for the performance of them, wherefore doſt thou boaſt? this being the apoſtle's rule, that we can boaſt of nothing but that which we have not received, or which is purely from ourſelves.

2. Though God is pleaſed to make the doing good works a neceſſary condition of ſalvation, ſo that without them we ſhall not obtain it, yet is all boaſting utterly excluded, becauſe it is of grace that our imperfect works are counted good, and that they are at all rewarded by God; for it is alone through that new covenant which God hath eſtabliſhed in Chriſt Jeſus, that all the imperfections which adhere to our beſt performances are pardoned, ſeeing the covenant of works requires perfect obedience, and tendereth no pardon to the leaſt offence. Now, upon what account can any of us boaſt of doing that which in itſelf deſerveth condemnation, though through grace it finds acceptance? Boaſting, ſaith the apoſtle, is not excluded by the law of works, Rom. 3. 27. and 4. 4. becauſe to him that worketh, the reward is not reckoned of grace, but of debt, Rom. 11. 6. grace and works that deſerve juſtification and ſalvation being perfectly oppoſite to one another. Where therefore the reward is ſtill of grace, and not of debt; where it is given on the account of works imperfect, which deſerve nothing from God, there boaſting is excluded. Note,

3. That when the apoſtle ſaith, We are ſaved by grace, there the word ſaved doth not ſignify the final final and complete ſalvation which we ſhall enjoy in heaven, but only our being placed in the way of ſalvation, and put into that eſtate, in which, if we continue grounded and ſettled in the faith, and be not moved from the hope of the goſpel, Col. 1. 23. we ſhall undoubtedly be ſaved. That this may be the ſenſe of theſe expreſſions, We are ſaved by grace, and, According to his mercy he ſaved us, Tit. 3. 5. cannot be doubted, if we conſider that this is frequently the import of this phraſe in other places, as when it is ſaid at the converſion of Zaccheus, This day ſalvation is come to this houſe, Luke 19. 3. that baptiſm doth ſave us, 1 Pet. 3. 21. that there were added to the church οἱ σωζομένους, the ſaved, Acts 2. 47.; ſee John 4. 22. Rom. 8. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 18. That this muſt be the proper import of it in theſe places, is evident from this conſideration, that the perſons to whom the apoſtle here ſpeaks were not actually and completely ſaved, but only by embracing the goſpel, which is ſtyled the word, the goſpel of ſalvation, the power of God through faith to ſalvation, were placed in that way which leadeth to eternal life, and which is called the way of ſalvation. It being therefore of God's free grace and mercy that any church or nation is called to the knowledge of ſalvation, and hath the word of life revealed to them, it being by that faith which is the gift of God that they are juſtified, and ſo placed in the way of ſalvation, and by his free gift that they enjoy the Holy Spirit, by which they are enabled to work out their ſalvation, they may well be ſaid to be ſaved by grace through faith, according to thoſe words of the ſame apoſtle, 2 Tim. 1. 9. He hath ſaved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his purpoſe and grace which was given us in Chriſt. But then this hinders not our complete ſalvation at the great day from being conferred upon us with reſpect to our works, by him who hath declared, he will render to every one according to his works: glory, honour, and immortality, to every one that worketh good, and that by patient continuance in well-doing ſeeketh for it, Rom. 2. 6. 7.

Ver. 10. [e] Προητοίμασεν, he hath before prepared us;] i. e. before we do them, by giving us the knowledge of his will, and the aſſiſtance of his Spirit to perform them; i. e. our entire renovation, or new creation, by which alone we are enabled to do works good and acceptable in his ſight, is from God, who by Chriſt Jeſus hath given us the knowledge of our duty, and by his grace and Spirit hath enabled us for the performance of it. They miſlead men who extend this to our whole ſalvation from the beginning to the end, which though it be ſo of grace, as to be carried on from the beginning of the new nature to the end of our life, by the aſſiſtance of God's grace and Holy Spirit, yet is not ſo of grace as to exclude thoſe works of righteouſneſs God hath prepared us to walk in, they being the conditions requiſite to make faith ſaving, the terms on which alone we are to enter into life, Matth. 7. 21. Luke 10. 25. 28. Rom. 2. 6. 7. 10. 2 Pet. 1. 5.—11. Rev. 22. 14. and according to which we ſhall receive our future recompenſe, Rom. 2. 6. 1 Cor. 3. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Gal. 6. 4. 5.

Ver. 12. [f] Ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες, having no hope] after this life, 1 Theſſ. 4. 13. I would not have you ſorrowful for them that ſleep, as οἱ λοιποὶ, the reſidue of the world, who have no hope. See note on 2 Tim. 1. 10.

Ibid. [g] Ἄθεοι, without the true God.] For then not knowing God, they ſerved τοῖς μὴ φύσει οὖσι θεοῖς, thoſe which by nature were not gods, Gal. 4. 8. even their wiſe men changed the truth of God into a lie, and worſhipped the vulgar deities, Rom. 1. 25. they were Heathens, carried about to dumb idols, 1 Cor. 12. 2. Hence at their converſion they are ſaid to turn from idols to ſerve the living and true God, 1 Theſſ. 1. 9. In this ſenſe the Chriſtians ſtyled the Heathens ἄθεοι, Atheiſts, becauſe τὸν μὲν ὄντως ὄντα θεὸν ἠγνοήκασι, they knew not the true God; ſo Clem. Alex. protrep. p. 14. and Theodoret here. And the Heathens ſtyled the Chriſtians ſo, becauſe they denied thoſe to be gods whom they eſteemed truly ſuch; ſo Juſt. Mart. apol. 2. p. 56. Athenag. p. 6. And the Stoics reckoned two kinds of Atheiſts; one that contemned the gods, τὸν τοῖς ἱδρυμένοις θεοῖς λοιδορούμενον, the other that ſpake things contrary to the deity, Laert. l. 7. § 119.

Ver. 13. [h] Ἐγγὺς, nigh] Thoſe Jews who had no ceremonial defilement to be purged away, and who had made an atonement for their known ſins, were admitted to come near to God, as being holy; they had a freedom of acceſs to God in his tabernacle and temple, whence they are ſtyled, ὁ λαὸς ἐγγίζων αὐτῷ, the people that draw near to God, Lev. 10. 3. Pſal. 65. 4. and 148. 14. and God is ſaid to be ὁ θεὸς ἐγγίζων αὐτοῖς, a God near to them, Deut. 7. 4. both by relation, as having owned them as his children and family, and entered into covenant to be their God, and by his more eſpecial preſence with them; for the Schechinah, or the glorious preſence, dwelt among them in the holy place. Now, all theſe privileges, ſaith the apoſtle, are equally conferred upon the Gentiles, they are now made near to God, ver. 13. have acceſs to him, ver. 18. are fellow-citizens of the ſaints, and of the family of God, ver. 19. the Schechinah dwells in them as in a temple, and they are made an habitation of God through the Spirit, ver. 21. 22.

Ver. 14. [i] Τὸ μεσότοιχον, the middle wall.] This refers to that partition-wall in the temple, which ſeparated the court of the Gentiles from that into which the Jews entered, on which was written, That no alien alien might go into it; it being, ſaith Joſephus (o), a ſanction of Antiochus, μὴ δεῖν ἀλλόφυλον ἴεναι τῆς ἁγίας περιβόλου, that no alien ſhould enter into the court of the ſanctuary which was incloſed with the ſept. And this inſcription was writ in Greek and Latin.

Ver. 15. ⁿ Εἰς ἵνα καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, into one new man.] As being both to walk in newneſs of life, and by the new law of Chriſtianity, and by Chriſt's new commandments of love.

Ibid. ° Εἰρήνην, peace.] This peace Chriſt hath made between Jew and Gentile, by aboliſhing the ceremonial law which made the enmity, and with God, by reconciling both to him by his death.

Ver. 16. Ἐν αὐτῷ.] i. e. ἐν τῷ σταυρῷ, by the croſs; ſo Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact read. Other copies read ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himſelf: but this reading, ſaith St Jerom, is only of the Latin copies, and it ſeems to have had its riſe from the former verſe. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 18. ᵖ Οἱ ἀμφότεροι, we both.] Hence we learn, 1. That Chriſt not only reconciled Jew and Gentile to one another, but that he reconciled both to God; for by him we have προσαγωγὴν, acceſs to the Father, a freedom of acceſs to God, ver. 18. and chap. 3. 12. Now, where this phraſe in the New Teſtament is uſed with reſpect to Chriſt, it ſtill imports the freedom of acceſs vouchſafed to them who formerly were by their ſins excluded from God's gracious preſence; this is obtained, ſay theſe words, by virtue of his blood, making our peace by him, reconciling us to God by his croſs, and bringing them near to God who were afar off. How is he our peace? Becauſe the chaſtiſement which procured our peace was upon him, Iſ. 53. 5. How did he reconcile us to God? but by the croſs, i. e. by bearing our ſins in his body on the croſs? 1 Pet. 2. 24. By virtue of this blood the Gentiles, who formerly were aliens, are made near to God; they who were ſtrangers, were made God's domeſtics; they who emphatically were ſinners, Gal. 2. 15. were made fellow-citizens of the ſaints; they who were children of wrath, ver. 2. to them is God reconciled: and after all this, can it reaſonably be denied, that Chriſt hath pacified God to the Gentiles by his blood? Or doth not all this import a reconciliation on God's part to them?

To ſhew the reaſon of this reconciliation, let it be noted, that God being an holy God, none were to come into his preſence who had any pollution or defilement on them upon pain of death, till they were ſanctified or cleanſed from it, by ſome purification or atonement made for them to God. He dwelt in the camp of Iſrael, and ſo thoſe lepers which were ſo unclean as to pollute the camp, were driven from it, Lev. 13. 46. Numb. 5. 2. 3. 2 Kings 15. 5. and thoſe ſin-offerings which were polluted with the ſins of the whole congregation, were carried out of the camp, Lev. 16. 21. 22. Heb 13. 11.

God dwelt more eſpecially in the temple; and therefore they who had leſſer impurities, i. e. who were defiled by the dead, or by an iſſue, or a menſtruous woman, were not to come thither till they were cleanſed from thoſe defilements, Lev. 12. 4. 15. 31.

Moreover, he being a God of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, they who had committed any ſin of ignorance, and lay under the guilt of it, were not permitted to come into the court of the men of Iſrael, till they had brought their offering of atonement. Ainſworth on Numb. 5. 3.

Now God being ſtill the ſame holy God, of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament ſeem as plainly to make our freedom of acceſs to God to depend upon our being ſanctified, or purged from our defilement, and our being delivered from the guilt of ſin, by an atonement made by the blood of Chriſt for our iniquities; that ſo, they being pardoned, we may have peace with God, and an acceſs to his favour. This plainly ſeems to be the import of the words, Heb. 9. 13. If the blood of bulls and goats, and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling the unclean, ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh, and by ſo doing, procureth an admiſſion of the perſon cleanſed to ſerve God in the ſanctuary, Numb. 19. 9. 12. 17. how much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who through the eternal Spirit offered himſelf without ſpot to God, purge your conſcience from dead works, or works expoſing you to death, the puniſhment of the perſon who came unclean into God's preſence, that ſo you may be admitted to ſerve the living God?

Ver. 19. ᵠ Ξένοι, ſtrangers.] The proſelytes who joined themſelves to the God of Iſrael, were by the Jews, and by the ſcriptures, ſtyled ſtrangers. He that only took upon him to worſhip the true God, and obſerve the precepts of Noah, was Ger Toſhab, a ſtranger permitted to dwell among them, and to worſhip in the court of the Gentiles. He that was circumciſed, and became obedient to the law of Moſes, was Ger Tzedek, a proſelyte of righteouſneſs. But both were called ſtrangers, according to that maxim of the Jews, All the nations of the world are called נכרים, ſtrangers before the God of Iſrael; but the Jews are ſaid to be קריבים, near to him. But now, ſaith the apoſtle, there is no ſuch difference, the believing Gentiles being equally admitted with believing Jews to the privileges of the New Jeruſalem, and equally related to God as part of his family.

Ver. 22. ʳ Thus Philo ſaith (p), That good men are θεοῦ οἶκος καὶ ἱερὸν, God's houſe and holy temple. See note on 1 Cor. 6. 20.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. [a] FOR this cauſe, I Paul (am) the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt for you Gentiles.

2. (I am, I ſay, a priſoner for you Gentiles, as you muſt know), [b] if (ſince) ye have heard of the diſpenſation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward, (or for you Gentiles):

3. How that he, (ὅτι, for he, or that he), by (particular) revelation, made known to me the myſtery (of the calling of the Gentiles, Gal. 1. 16. Acts 9. 15. 21. 22.), as I wrote before in few words, (viz. chap. 1. 9. 10. 11. 12.; 2. 19.),

4. Whereby when you read (πρὸς ὃ ἀναγινώσκοντες, to which attending), you may underſtand my knowledge in the myſtery of Chriſt, (touching the calling of the Gentiles);

5. Which in other ages was not made known to the ſons of men, [c] as it is now revealed to his holy apoſtles and [d] prophets by the Spirit (of wiſdom and of knowledge, given them to diſcern all myſteries, 1 Cor. 12. 8.; 13. 2.);

6. (It being not before revealed as now it is), that the Gentiles ſhould be fellow-heirs (of God with the believing Jews), and of the ſame body (with them), and partakers of his promiſe, (the promiſe of the Spirit, Gal. 3. 14.) in (and through) Chriſt, (only) by (virtue of) the goſpel (preached to them, and believed by them.)

7. [e] Of which (goſpel) I was made a miniſter, according to the gift of the grace of God given to me, (to be the apoſtle of the Gentiles, for which work I was enabled) by the effectual working of his power, (in ſigns and wonders, &c. Rom. 15. 19.)

8. Unto me, (I ſay), who (by reaſon of my former perſecutions of the church of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15. 9.) am leſs than the leaſt of all ſaints is this grace given, that I ſhould preach among the Gentiles the unſearchable riches of Chriſt, (i. e. the exceeding bleſſings to be obtained by faith in him);

9. And to make all men (Jews and Gentiles) ſee, what is the fellowſhip of the myſtery (of the calling of the Gentiles to be thus fellow-heirs with the Jews), which from the beginning of the world hath been hid (ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων, from former ages) in (the purpoſe of) God, [f] who created all things (belonging to the old and new creation) by Jeſus Chriſt:

10. To the intent that (Gr. ἵνα, that) now to the [g] principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the (things done in and by the) church the manifold wiſdom of God,

11. [h] According to the eternal purpoſe which he purpoſed (or made) in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord:

12. In whom we have boldneſs (or freedom) and acceſs with confidence (to God the Father) by the faith of him, (i. e. the faith we have in him as our Mediator. See note on chap. 2. 18.)

13. Wherefore I (Paul the priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt for you Gentiles, ver. 1.) deſire that you faint not (that you be not diſheartened) at my tribulations for you, which is (rather matter of) your glory, (you having cauſe to glory that I your apoſtle ſuffer ſo much for the goſpel I preach to you, this being to you a confirmation of the truth of it.)

14. (And) for this cauſe I bow my knees to the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (praying to him),

15. Of whom [i] the whole family in heaven and earth is named, (the angels in heaven, and ſaints on earth, being ſtyled the ſons of God),

16. That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, (i. e. according to his glorious riches), to be (ſtill more) ſtrengthened with might by his (Holy) Spirit in the inward man;

17. That Chriſt may dwell in your hearts by faith; that you being (firmly) rooted and grounded in love (to him who ſent his Son to die for you),

18. May be able to comprehend (together) with all ſaints, what is [k] the breadth, and length, and depth, and height (of this myſterious love towards you);

19. And may (be able to) know the love of Chriſt, which (in its full extent even) paſſeth knowledge, that you may be filled with all the [l] fulneſs of God.

20. Now to him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we aſk or think, according to the power (of the Holy Ghoſt) that worketh in us, (and ſo miraculouſly confirms his doctrine to the world),

21. Unto him (I ſay) be (aſcribed all) glory in the (aſſemblies of the) church, by (and through) Chriſt Jeſus, (through whom we offer up all our prayers and praiſes, Heb. 13. 15. Eph. 5. 20.), throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Τούτου χάριν, for this cauſe;] i. e. Becauſe I aſſert that theſe privileges belong equally to the believing Gentiles, though they be not circumciſed; this being the reaſon why the Jews ſo fiercely perſecuted him, and forced him to appeal to Cæſar, Acts 22. 22. and 25. 11. 12. and 26. 17.; and why, after he came to Rome, the Jews preached Chriſt not ſincerely, but out of envy to him, him, to add affliction to his bonds, Philip. 1. 15. 16.

Ver. 2. ᾽Εἰγε ἠκούσατε, if ye have heard.] Hence ſome raiſe a ſecond objection againſt this epiſtle's being written by St Paul to the Epheſians; for, ſay they, to them with whom he had ſo long converſed, there could be no doubt whether they had heard of the diſpenſation of the grace of God given him towards them. But indeed this is no objection to them who will conſider, that this epiſtle was not written to the Epheſians only, but alſo to all the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus, many of whom had never ſeen his face, nor heard his voice. And, 2. If we conſider, that he ſpeaks here particularly of the manner of his receiving this diſpenſation, viz. by immediate revelation from Chriſt Jeſus, of which the Galatians, among whom he had alſo preached, were ignorant; and therefore the apoſtle, in his epiſtle to them, ſaith, γνωρίζω ὑμῖν, of this I certify you, confirming his aſſertion with an oath, Gal. 1. 11. 12. 16. Add to this, 3*dly*, That the particle εἴγε is not here a particle of doubting, but of affirmation, and is to be rendered, as Theophylact doth, ἐπειδή, ſince; ſo the Hebrew DK is often rendered quandoquidem; and ſo Philo (q) uſes this particle in theſe words, Εἰγὰ τὰ ἑκούσια, ἢ τὰ κατ' ἄγνοιαν διὰ ἀδιαφόρων λόγον ἔχειν φασί τινες, Seeing ſome ſay of things done involuntarily, and out of ignorance, that they are not to be accounted ſins. And when he ſays, Abel yet lives (r), εἰγὰ καὶ ἑαυτῆς ὄν θεῷ καὶ φωνῇ χρώμενον ἐνέφηνεται, ſeeing that he had ſtill a voice to cry to God. And that Sarah is repreſented by Moſes, both as barren and very fruitful (s), Εἰγὰ τὴν πολυαρθρωτάτου τῶν ἐθνῶν ἐξ αὐτῆς ὁμολογεῖ γένεσθαι, ſince he confeſſes, that from her ſhould proceed the moſt populous of nations. See alſo the note on chap. 1. 15.

Ver. 5. ᾽Ως νῦν ἀπεκαλύφθη, as it hath been now revealed.] It was in the general made known, that in Abraham ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed; and that Chriſt ſhould be a light to the Gentiles; of which ſee note on ver. 10.: but it was not made known to the Jews, that the Gentiles ſhould be fellow-heirs with them of the ſame ſalvation and celeſtial inheritance. For that this was matter of admiration to the firſt Jewiſh converts, we learn from theſe words, Then hath God alſo given to the Gentiles repentance unto life, Acts 11. 18. They did not know or believe that the Gentiles ſhould be made members of the ſame body, and admitted to the ſame privileges, and made partakers of the ſame Spirit with them. Hence the believing Jews ἐξέστασαν, were in an ecſtaſy when they ſaw that the gift of the Holy Ghoſt was poured on the Gentiles, Acts 10. 45. Gal. 2. 14.; and much leſs did they know that the partition-wall, which made the diſtance and enmity between them, ſhould be taken away by the Meſſiah, as the apoſtle here teacheth, ver. 14. 15.; that the hand-writing of ordinances was to be blotted out on this account, Col. 2. 14.; and that theſe privileges were to be conferred upon them without circumciſion, or obſervation of the law of Moſes: they rather thought they were either firſt to be made Jews, and then Chriſtians, or only were to come as ſlaves and drudges to them who were the children of the kingdom. And hence the apoſtle ſpends a great part of the epiſtles to the Romans and Galatians, to aſſert this privilege of the Gentiles againſt the Judaizing Chriſtians. In a word, to the Jews anciently belonged υἱοθεσία, the ſonſhip, and ſo the inheritance, for if ſons, then heirs, Rom. 8. 17. and promiſes, Rom. 9. 4.; and they conceived, that none were ever to be admitted into their body, or to partake of thoſe privileges unleſs they were circumciſed, and became obedient to the law of Moſes, Acts 15. 1. which they thought never was to ceaſe, or to be antiquated: and therefore, ſay the Greek fathers, the apoſtle here declares, that God now, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, equally admitted the believing Gentiles to theſe privileges by faith without circumciſion, or obedience to the law of Moſes.

Ibid. ᾽Και προφήταις, and to the prophets.] That the apoſtle here underſtands the prophets of the New Teſtament, or thoſe who in the firſt ages of the church received the prophetical grace, and by it underſtood all myſteries, 1 Cor. 13. 2. the words ὡς νῦν, as now it is revealed under the goſpel to the prophets, will not ſuffer us to doubt. And this fully anſwers all the objections of Eſthius againſt the expoſition I have given of the former words.

Ver. 7. Οὗ ἐγενόμην διάκονος, of which I am made a miniſter.] Mr L. thinks, that this ſtrongly implies a denial that others were made miniſters of the ſame doctrine: but as it cannot imply that Barnabas and others appointed to go with him, or that Silas and Timotheus, who preached the ſame doctrine, 2 Cor. 1. 19. were not alſo miniſters of that doctrine; ſo the commiſſion Chriſt gave to all his apoſtles being to preach the goſpel, and to make diſciples through all the Gentile world, it is not eaſy to conceive that thoſe nine who were ſent to preach to the Gentiles, as well as St Paul, ſhould none of them underſtand their commiſſion aright; eſpecially if we conſider how fully the council met at Jeruſalem eſtabliſh St Paul's doctrine with reſpect to the Gentile converts, declaring, as St Peter doth, that they being Jews, expected to be ſaved by faith in Chriſt, as did the Gentiles; that God had put no difference betwixt them and the circumciſed Jews, purifying their hearts by faith, and giving them the Holy Spirit, as he had done to his believing Jews; and that therefore to endeavour to put the yoke of circumciſion on their necks, was to tempt God, that is, to diſtruſt the evidence that he had given of his acceptance of them without circumciſion, Acts 15. 8. 9. 10. 11.; and the whole ſynod declare, that they who ſaid they ought to be circumciſed, and to keep the law, troubled them with words tending to the ſubverſion of their ſouls, ver. 24.; whereas it ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to them, to lay upon them none of theſe burdens, ver. 28. And, laſtly, that they who were pillars of the church of the circumciſion, knowing the grace given to St Paul, approved his commiſſion of preaching to the Gentiles, as he did, Gal. 2. 9.

Ibid. ε Κατὰ τὴν δωρεὰν τῆς χάριτος, according to the gift of grace.] That the apoſtolate is by St Paul oft ſtyled grace, ſee the note on Rom. 1. 5. And that in this ſenſe he underſtands the gift of grace here, is evident from the following words.

Ver. 9. ϛ Τῷ πάντα κτίσαντι, who created all things.] The ancients commonly ſay, that God the Father is ὁ πρῶτος δημιουργὸς, the prime and chief creator of the world, as being the original of all creating power, and he, as it were, commanding, and the Son executing his command, who is hence ſtyled ὁ πρόσχωρος δημιουργὸς, the immediate creator, or ἀντεργὸς τοῦ κόσμου, the artificer of the world (t). Hence Irenæus (u) ſo often ſaith, Patrem omnia feciſſe per verbum, or verbo virtutis; and that the Son and Holy Spirit are quaſi manus, as it were the hands of God by which he made all things (x), and to both which all the angels are ſubject.

Ver. 10. ζ Ταῖς ἀρχαῖς καὶ ταῖς ἐξουσίαις, to the principalities and powers.] This phraſe, though uſed of evil ſpirits, chap. 6. 12. may be underſtood of good angels, the myſtery of godlineſs been then ſeen of angels, 1 Tim. 3. 16. and the things which the apoſtles preached by the Holy Ghoſt, being ſuch as the angels deſired to look into, 1 Pet. 1. 12. That the words ἐπουράνιος and ἐπουράνια always ſignify things or perſons in heaven, is very evident; ſo Πατὴρ ἐπουράνιος, is our heavenly Father, Matth. 18. 25. ὁ ἐπουράνιος, the Lord from heaven, 1 Cor. 15. 48. 49.; τὰ ἐπουράνια, heavenly things, to be taught only by him who was in heaven, John 3. 12. 13.; σώματα ἐπουράνια, heavenly bodies, viz. the ſtars, 1 Cor. 15. 40.; βασιλεία ἐπουράνιος, the kingdom to be enjoyed in heaven, 2 Tim. 4. 18. Heb. 11. 16.; Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουράνιος, the Jeruſalem that is above, Heb. 12. 22.; ὑπόδειγμα τῶν ἐπουρανίων, the pattern of things in heaven, Heb. 8. 5.; τὰ ἐπουράνια, heavenly things, Heb. 9. 23. Hence are they diſtinguiſhed from things on earth, or under the earth, Philip. 2. 10. The words are five times uſed in this epiſtle, and always ſignify heavenly places; ſo it doth when we are ſaid to ſit down with Chriſt ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly places, chap. 2. 6.; when Chriſt is ſaid to be ſet down with God ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly places, chap. 1. 10. that being the conſequence of his aſcenſion into heaven, 1 Pet. 3. 22. Heb. 13. 10. 12. and therefore it is well rendered in heavenly places, ver. 3. So it ſignifies, when the apoſtle ſpeaks of principalities, powers, and ſpiritual wickedneſſes, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, chap. 6. 12. and ſo it muſt ſignify when he ſpeaks here of good angels in the ſame places: nor can it be well joined with σοφία, because διὰ τῆς ἐκκλησίας intervenes.

To Mr L.'s objection, That "it is not eaſy to conceive that the declaration of this myſtery ſhould be to this intent, that the angels, good or bad, ſhould be acquainted with it," it may be anſwered,

1. That the apoſtle doth not ſay this was God's ſole intent in the revelation of this myſtery; but only that this, amongſt others more important, might be one.

2. That the particle ἵνα ſignifies adeo ut, ſo that; ſee note on 1 Cor. 14. 13. and then the words will not reſpect God's intention in this revelation, but only the conſequence of it. But whereas, from thoſe words, ver. 6. was not made known, &c. Mr Le Clerc ſaith thus, "The ſame thing which is there ſaid in "other ages not to have been made known to the "ſons of men, is ſaid here to have been unknown "alſo to angels; which being ſo, I confeſs I do not "well underſtand how they who are neither pro"phets nor angels, can find out ſo many places in "the prophets, in which the calling of the Gentiles "is manifeſtly and directly foretold; for certainly "if it was revealed to the prophets, they under"ſtood it; and if it could be gathered from the li"teral ſenſe of any prophecies, the angels might "have underſtood it by thoſe prophecies;" whereas I ſay, he deſcants thus: What would he have? Would he deny, againſt the plain and frequent ſayings of St Paul, that the calling of the Gentiles was revealed to, and plainly foretold by the prophets, as his words do import? Let him, if he can, confute St Paul proving it againſt him, that the Lord had commanded the Gentiles ſhould be called in theſe words of the prophet Iſaiah, I have ſet thee to be a light to the Gentiles, and to be for ſalvation to the ends of the earth, Acts 13. 46. 47.; and his four other proofs from the prophets, Moſes, David, and Eſaias, that the Gentiles were to glorify God for his mercy to them in Chriſt Jeſus, that Root of Jeſſe who was to riſe up to govern the Gentiles, and in whom the Gentiles were to truſt, Rom. 15. 9. 10. 11. 12. Yea, let him confute the apoſtle James, ſaying, Simeon hath declared how God at firſt did viſit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name: and to this agree the words of the prophets, After this I will build again the tabernacle of David, &c. that the reſidue of men might ſeek after the Lord, and all the nations upon whom my name is called, Acts 15. 14.—17. Nor doth the apoſtle any where hint, that the calling of the Gentiles was not revealed to, or by the prophets, but only that it was not ſo made known in all the particularities of it, ὡς νῦν, as it is now diſcovered by the apoſtles and prophets of the New Teſtament; ſee the note on ver. 6. 2. It was alſo known to, and preached by the angels, declaring the glad tidings of great joy, which ſhould be to all nations through Chriſt, Luke 2. 10. 11. he being as well a light to lighten the Gentiles, as the glory of his people Iſrael. Nor does the apoſtle here ſay, as he ſuggeſts, that this was unknown to the angels, but only that what was before made known to them by prophecies, was now made known to them by the church, i. e. the Gentiles actually called; though all the circumſtances mentioned, note on ver. 6. might not be fully known before even to them.

Ver. 11. ᵇ Κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, according to the fore-diſpoſing of the ages.] In the firſt of the ages his wiſdom ſeeing fit to give the promiſe of a Saviour to a fallen Adam; in the ſecond age to typify and repreſent him to the Jews in ſacred perſons, rites, and ſacrifices; and in the age of the Meſſiah, or the laſt age, to reveal him to the Jews, and preach him to the Gentiles.

Ver. 15. ⁱ Πᾶσα πατριὰ, the whole family.] It is frequent with the Jews to make mention of the angels as the family in heaven, and of men, eſpecially thoſe that are in covenant with God, as his family on earth; as when they ſay, God doth nothing but he firſt conſults with his family שמעלה above, that is, with the angels; and that he that addicts himſelf to the ſtudy of the divine law for the ſake of the law; conciliates to himſelf peace with the family above, and with the family below, that is, with angels in heaven, and men on earth. They are alſo called קדישי עלא, the ſaints above, Targ. in Job 15. 15. and the ſons of God, as in theſe words of Job 1. 6. and 2. 1. And on a day came ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ, the ſons of God; and chap. 38. 7. Where waſt thou when ἄγγελοί μου, all the ſons of God ſhouted for joy? And ſo are all true believers ſtyled; for to as many as believed he gave power to be the ſons of God, John 1. 12. and they at the reſurrection ſhall be like the angels, and be the ſons of God, Luke 20. 36.

Ver. 18. ᵏ Τὸ πλάτος καὶ μῆκος, the breadth, length, depth, and height.] By the breadth of this love ſome of the fathers underſtand the great extent and generality of Chriſt's affection; his death being deſigned for the benefit of all perſons, Jew and Gentile, through all ages, from Adam to the end of the world; and in all places, he having by it reconciled things in heaven, and things in the earth, chap. 1. 10. By the depth of it, ſay they, is ſignified the greatneſs of his humiliation; love to mankind having induced him to change the form of God for that of a ſervant, humbled the Lord of life to an ignominious and painful death, and brought him from the higheſt heavens to the loweſt hell, into which, they conceive, he deſcended for our ſakes. The length of it imports, ſay they, his love to us from the beginning of the world, we being choſen in Chriſt from the beginning, chap. 1. 4. and 3. 11. The height of his affection is manifeſted, ſay they, in that being now exalted to the right hand of majeſty, he is ſtill there employed in acts of greateſt kindneſs to us, uſing his whole power in heaven and earth for the benefit of his church. But it ſeems more natural to ſay, that the apoſtle, by enumerating theſe dimenſions, only intends to ſignify the exceeding greatneſs of the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge. Thus Job, ſpeaking of the unſearchable wiſdom of God, and his unfathomable perfections, puts theſe inquiries, Canſt thou ſearch him out to perfection? it is higher than the heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than hell, what canſt thou know? the meaſure of it is longer than the earth, and the breadth of it than the ſea, Job 11. 7. 8. And the ſon of Syrach ſaith, The height of heaven, and the breadth of the earth, the abyſs and wiſdom who can ſearch out? Ecclus 1. 3. And the apoſtle cries out, O the depth of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments! &c. Rom. 11. 33. And in this ſenſe theſe four dimenſions will chiefly be deſigned to import what the apoſtle ſtyles, the unſearchable riches of the love of Chriſt, ver. 8. It therefore ſeems unreaſonable to think, that the love of Chriſt paſſing knowledge, ſhould import only the love of Chriſt paſſing, i. e. excelling the knowledge or ſkill in myſtical interpretations which the Gnoſtics pretended to. For as the word γνῶσις put abſolutely hath no ſuch import that I know of in the holy ſcripture, ſo after the mention of all theſe dimenſions, and the unſearchable riches of it, ver. 8. it ſeems a very faint expreſſion to ſay, it ſurpaſſed that vain and inſignificant knowledge to which the Gnoſtics pretended; their myſtical interpretations, recorded by Irenæus, being above meaſure vain and impious, even a myſtery of iniquity. And as for the phraſe ὑπερβάλλουσα τῆς γνώσεως, it is juſtified by Ariſtotle (y), who hath it twice in one chapter, viz. ὑπερβάλλειν τῆς συμμετρίας, to exceed the meaſure; ὑπερβάλλειν τῶν πλωτήρων, to excel other navigators.

Ver. 19. [1] Εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, with all the fulneſs of God. Εἰς pro ἐν, ſee note on Col. 1. 20. that is, ſay ſome, with the higheſt degrees of faith and love; or with all fulneſs of ſpiritual gifts, eſpecially thoſe of knowledge and wiſdom, which might enable them to comprehend the greatneſs of his love. Thus, chap. 4. 10. He aſcended up on high, that he might fill all things with ſpiritual gifts, mentioned ver. 10. that he might give gifts unto men, ver. 8. and ch. 1. 23. his church is ſtyled, the fulneſs of him that filleth all in all, i. e. who filleth all his members with thoſe gifts.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. I Therefore the priſoner of the Lord, (ἐν Κυρίῳ, in bonds for Chriſt), beſeech you, that ye would walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

2. [a] With all lowlineſs and meekneſs, with long-ſuffering, (and ſo) forbearing one another in love;

3. Endeavouring (thus) to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

4. (For you know, that) there is one body (of the whole church), and [b] one Spirit, (which animates the whole body), even as you are called in one hope of your calling, (i. e. and you know alſo, that you are all called to the ſame hope of eternal life.)

5. (There is alſo to us Chriſtians) one Lord, [c] one faith (in this Lord), one baptiſm (by which we do profeſs this faith),

6. [d] One God and Father of all, who is above all (by his eſſence), and through all (by his providence), and in you all (by his Spirit.)

7. But (though the body is but one, yet) unto every one of us (who are members of this body) [e] is given grace (enabling us to ſerve this body) according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt.

8. [f] Wherefore (to manifeſt this) he (the pſalmiſt) ſaith, When he (Chriſt) aſcended up on high, he led captivity (Satan and death) captive, (Heb. 2. 14. Judg. 5. 12.), and [g] gave gifts unto men, (i. e. received them, Pſal. 68. 19. to give to them.)

9. Now that he aſcended, what is it but (a demonſtration) that he alſo deſcended firſt [h] into the lower parts of the earth?

10. He that deſcended (thus into the lower parts of the earth), is the ſame alſo who (after his reſurrection) aſcended up [i] far above all heavens, that he might fill all things (with his gifts, according to his promiſe, that when he was aſcended, he would ſend the Spirit upon his apoſtles and diſciples, John 14. 17. and 15. 26. and 16. 7. Luke 24. 49.)

11. And (accordingly) he gave ſome, apoſtles (to reveal his will): and ſome, prophets (to explain the myſteries of faith): and ſome, evangeliſts (to propagate this faith to other nations): and [k] ſome, paſtors, and teachers (to inſtruct others in it.)

12. [l] (And this variety of gifts was conferred upon them) for the perfecting (Gr. compacting) of the ſaints (into one body), for the work of the miniſtry, (that they who had them might miniſter to the temporal neceſſity, as did the deacons, and the ſpiritual concerns of others, as did the apoſtles, prophets, evangeliſts, paſtors, and doctors), for the edifying of the body of Chriſt (in faith and love):

13. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge (or acknowledgment) of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, (i. e. to perfection in knowledge of the faith and of the will of God, Col. 1. 28.), unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, (i. e. ſo as to be Chriſtians of a full maturity and ripeneſs in all the graces derived from Chriſt Jeſus to the body):

14. That (ſo arriving to perfection in faith and knowledge) we henceforth (may) be no more children toſſed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the ſleight of men, and cunning craftineſs, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, (Gr. by the ſubtilty of men, through their craftineſs, for the managing of deceit):

15. But ſpeaking (or keeping) the truth in love, may grow up into (or increaſe in) him in all things, who is the head, even (into) Chriſt:

16. [m] From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint ſupplieth, according to the effectual working in the meaſure of every part, (Gr. compacted and cemented together by every joint of ſupply, according to its power in proportion of every part), maketh increaſe of the body, to the edifying of itſelf in love.

17. This I ſay therefore and teſtify in the Lord, that ye (who have theſe aſſiſtances in faith and piety) walk not henceforth as other (unconverted) Gentiles walk [n] in the vanity of their (own) mind;

18. Having the underſtanding darkened, (and) being [o] alienated from the life of God [p] through the ignorance that is in them, becauſe of the [q] blindneſs of their heart:

19. Who being paſt feeling, (inſenſible of the vileneſs of their actions), have given themſelves up to laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs [r] with greedineſs.

20. But ye have not ſo learned (the doctrine of) Chriſt;

21. If ſo be (or ſince) that ye have heard him (by our preaching), and have been taught by him, (Gr. inſtructed in him), as the truth is in Jeſus:

22. (To

22. (To wit), that ye put off concerning the former converſation (in Heatheniſm), [r] the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts, (i. e. the luſts which deceive you, promiſing that pleaſure and ſatisfaction which they cannot yield, or which you practiſed whilſt Heathens, being deceived by your Heathen prieſts, declaring they were acceptable to the gods, and the philoſophy and vain deceit of thoſe men who allowed them):

23. And be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind;

24. And that ye (may) put on the new man, which after (the image of) God is created in righteouſneſs, and true holineſs.

25. Wherefore putting away [s] lying, (a vice too common among Heathens, and oppoſite to truth and righteouſneſs), ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour: for we are members one of another; (now, lying tends to diſſolve ſocieties, and hurt the members of the ſame body.)

26. (If you) [t] be angry, (take heed) and ſin not: [x] let not the ſun go down upon your wrath.

27. [y] Neither give place to the (temptation of the) devil.

28. [z] Let him that ſtole (before his converſion), ſteal no more: but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he [aa] may have to give to him that needeth.

29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, [bb] that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers.

30. [cc] And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are ſealed to the day of redemption, (chap. 1. 13. 14.)

31. (And to this end), let all bitterneſs, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil-ſpeaking be put away from you, with all malice.

32. And be ye kind one towards another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven you.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 2. 3. [a] NOte here from the fathers, That ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ ἴσχυσιν ἀνεξόμεθα ἀλλήλων, where love is retained, there will be mutual forbearance: and from Zanchy, That peace cannot be preſerved without that mutual forbearance, and that humility which excludes, and that meekneſs which is oppoſite to anger and contention.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἓν πνεῦμα, one Spirit.] From theſe, and the former words, the unity of the Spirit, it ſeems plain to me, that the union of the myſtical body of the church catholic conſiſts in this, that they all have the ſame Spirit communicated to them from their head Chriſt Jeſus. For the whole body of Chriſtians is here ſaid to have one Spirit, and their unity is ſtyled the unity of the Spirit. The body is one, ſaith the apoſtle, 1 Cor. 12. 12. for by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, ver. 13. And to the whole body of the church of Corinth he ſpeaks thus, Know ye not that you are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? 1 Cor. 3. 16. Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghoſt that is in you? chap. 6. 19. Chriſt, ſaith the Apoſtle here, chap. 2. 16. 17. 18. hath reconciled both Jew and Gentile into one body unto God, and hath made peace between them, for by him we have both acceſs by one Spirit to the Father; ὅτι ὅν, and therefore having thus one Spirit, by which we are made one body, and ſons of the ſame Father, we are all fellow-citizens of the ſaints, and of the family of God: and are built up all together into an habitation of God through the Spirit. Now hence it follows,

1. That only ſincere Chriſtians are truly members of that church catholic, of which Jeſus Chriſt is the head, ſince the whole body is united to him by the communication of the Holy Spirit, whom the wicked of the world cannot receive, John 14. 17. they being ſenſual, having not the Spirit, Jude 19.

2. That nothing can unite any profeſſor of Chriſtianity to this one body, but the participation of the Spirit of Chriſt; and therefore nothing elſe can make him a true member of that church which is his body. Hence the apoſtle doth inform us, negatively, that if any man have not the Spirit of Chriſt dwelling in him, he is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. 11. and affirmatively, that by this we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit that he hath given us, 1 John 3. 24. And again, By this we know that he abideth in us, and we in him, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit, chap. 4. 13. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are ſons of God, Rom. 8. 14.; and, becauſe we are ſons, God hath ſent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, Gal. 4. 6. It therefore muſt be owned as a certain truth, that nothing can unite us to that church and body of which Chriſt Jeſus is the head, but the participation of the Spirit.

3. That no error in judgment, or miſtake in practice which doth not tend to deprive a Chriſtian of the Spirit of Chriſt, can ſeparate him from the church of Chriſt.

4. Hence it demonſtratively follows, That no church-governors, jointly or ſeverally, can be by God appointed to be the living judges, or the infallible directors of our faith. For ſince in matters of faith we muſt have a judgment of certainty, we cannot own them as ſuch by virtue of that aſſiſtance of the Holy Holy Ghoſt, which alone can make them ſuch, till we are certain they belong to that church of which Chriſt Jeſus is the head, and to which only the promiſe of the Spirit doth belong, i. e. till we are certain they are ſincere and upright Chriſtians. Since therefore God hath given us no certain rule to know this by, we may reſt ſatisfied, that he deſigned no ſuch magiſterial guides ſhould be continued in his church.

Ver. 5. [c] Μία πίστις, one faith.] It plainly is aſſerted in the holy ſcriptures, that there is one common faith, Tit. 1. 4.; one like precious faith, 2 Pet. 1. 1. of all that bear the name of Chriſtians. An unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to which we muſt all arrive, Eph. 4. 13. A faith once delivered to the Saints, Jude 3. for which we muſt ſtrive earneſtly, and in which we muſt build up ourſelves; a faith of the goſpel, for which we are exhorted to contend as with one ſoul, Philip. 1. 27. But vain is hence the inference of the Papiſts, "That this one faith "muſt be either theirs, and then we cannot be ſaved "without it; or ours, and then they cannot be ſa-"ved;" for this one faith, into which all Chriſtians were baptized, contains neither the doctrines in which they differ from us, nor we from them, but only the apoſtles creed, which the whole church of Chriſt, for many centuries, received as a perfect ſyſtem of all things neceſſary to be believed in order to ſalvation; as I have fully proved, Treatiſe of Tradition, part 2. chap 7. § 4. 5. 6. 7. 8.

Ver. 6. Εἷς Θεὸς, one God.] Here, ſay the Socinians, that God who is ſtyled one, is alſo ſtyled the Father, and to him is aſcribed this epithet, ſo common among the philoſophers, to denote the Supreme Deity, that he is ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πᾶσι, God over all. But to this it is anſwered,

1. That we deny not that God the Father is one God over all, or that there is one who is both one God, and the Father: only we add, that there is alſo one, who is one God of the ſame eſſence, and the Son; and ſo alſo ſay we of the Holy Spirit: and that as the one Lord, and the one Spirit here, do not exclude the Father from being both Lord and Spirit; ſo neither doth the one God and Father exclude the Son, or Holy Spirit, from being God, but only from being God the Father. It alſo is to be noted, that the primitive fathers, before the Nicene council, did not ſcruple to diſtinguiſh Chriſt from God the Father, by ſtyling him another God from the Maker of all things, ὑπὲρ ὃν ἄλλος Θεὸς οὐκ ἔστι, above whom there is no other God. Juſtin Martyr (z) twice deſcribes the Father by this diſtinctive character, that he is God, ὑπὲρ ὃν ἄλλος Θεὸς οὐκ ἔστι, above whom there is no other God; ſaying, that Chriſt did nothing but what ὁ τὸν κόσμον ποιήσας, ὑπὲρ ὃν ἄλλος οὐκ ἔστι Θεὸς, the Maker of the world, above whom there is no other God, would have him do; and yet he at leaſt twenty times aſſerts, that Chriſt is God and Lord, and that he is the perſon ἀφ' οὗ ὁ οὐρανὸν καὶ γῆν (a), by whom he made the heaven and earth, and by whom he will renew them; the Word of God, διὰ οὗ ὁ οὐρανὸς καὶ γῆ, καὶ ὁ πᾶσα κτίσις ἐγένετο, by whom the heaven and the earth, and the whole creation was made. So Irenæus often ſaith (b), that the "Father is only to be "called God and Lord;" and yet he adds, that this is not ſaid to exclude the Son, "who is in the Fa-"ther, and hath the Father in him, and hath his "principality in all things."

Ver. 7. [e] Ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις, is given grace.] Theſe graces therefore being the gift of Chriſt, and not our own, no one ſhould be puffed up, or deſpiſe others on the account of them; nor ſhould envy any others to whom he thinks fit to give them in an higher meaſure.

Ver. 8. [f] Διὸ λέγει, Wherefore he ſaith.] That this pſalm relates to the Meſſiah, we learn from the Jews themſelves, who interpret this pſalm of him; for the words, ver. 32. are by them thus paraphraſed, "All nations ſhall bring gifts to the King Meſſiah," Schemoth Rabbah, § 15. Let it be alſo noted, that Chriſt triumphed over death and Satan on the croſs, Col. 2. 15.: but he led Satan captive more gloriouſly, when, after his aſcenſion, he poured his Holy Spirit on his apoſtles and diſciples, and by that Spirit enabled them to caſt out devils in his name, and turn men from the power of Satan to God, Acts 26. 18. He alſo then triumphed over death moſt ſignally, when thus aſcending he became Lord over the dead, and had the keys of death and hades in his hands, Rom. 14. 9. Rev. 1. 18. Note alſo, That to lead captivity captive, is a phraſe common in the Old Teſtament, to ſignify a conqueſt over enemies, eſpecially over ſuch as formerly had led them captive; ſo Judg. 5. 12. Ariſe Barak, αἰχμαλώτισον αἰχμαλωσίαν, lead captivity captive. See 1 Kings 8. 46. 2 Chron. 28. 5. 11. 17. Numb. 21. 1. Deut. 21. 10.

ſaith Dr Hammond, " he received gifts to give to " men," from the nature of the Hebrew לקח, which ſignifies both to give, and to receive; and thus it is rendered by the Targum, Syriac, and Arabic. But, ſaith Mr Cl. " when the word ſignifies to give, " there follows a dative caſe, Exod. 25. 2. whereas " the Hebrew here hath באדם, which has made " learned men conjecture, that St Paul read לאדם, " to man." But, firſt, this is not always true; for Hoſ. 14. 2. we read thus, Take away iniquity, וקח טוב and give good; and where a dative caſe is added, an accuſative either goes before it, as, Thou haſt received קחז אותה לי מתנות gifts for men; and Judg. 14. 2. Get her to me; and ver. 3. or elſe follows after it, as 1 Kings 3. 24. קחו לי חרב Give me a ſword; ſee chap. 17. 10. Exod. 18. 12. and 25. 2. and as for ב in באדם, who knows not that it ſometimes ſignifies pro, for, and ſometimes only is the ſign of the dative caſe? See Naldius de partic. Hebr. p. 158. 163.

Ver. 9. [b] Εἰς τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς, into the lower parts of the earth.] That is, into the grave. So Pſal. 63. 9. They that ſeek my ſoul to deſtroy it, ſhall go into the lower parts of the earth, i. e. they ſhall fall by the ſword, ver. 10. Iſ. 44. 23. Sing, O heavens, ſhout the lower parts of the earth. " We " cannot be aſſured," ſaith Biſhop Pearſon (c), " that " the deſcent of Chriſt, which St Paul here ſpeak- " eth of, was performed after his death; nor can " we be aſſured, that the lower parts of the earth " do ſignify hell; they may well refer to his incar- " nation, according to that of David, Pſal. 139. 15. " My ſubſtance was not hid from thee, when I was " made in ſecret, and curiouſly wrought in the lower " parts of the earth; or to his burial, according to " that of the prophet, They that ſeek my ſoul to " deſtroy it, ſhall go into the lower parts of the earth, " κατώτερα γὰς μέρη τὸν θάνατον εἰκάζων, he calls his death " his deſcent into the lower parts of the earth," ſay Chryſoſtom and Theodoret on the place.

Ver. 10. [i] Ὑπεράνω πάντων τῶν οὐρανῶν, far above all heavens.] He being made higher than the heavens, Heb. 7. 26. that is, than the airy and the ſtarry heavens, and aſcending above them into the preſence of God, who hath ſet his glory above the heavens, Pſal. 8. 1. and is exalted above them, Pſal. 57. 5. 11. and 108. 4. 5.

Ver. 11. [k] Τὺς δὲ ποιμένας καὶ διδασκάλους, and ſome paſtors and teachers.] That theſe paſtors and teachers were, in the firſt ages, men of extraordinary gifts, is evident from this very place; for the preceding words, he gave gifts unto men, ſome apoſtles, ſome prophets, &c. ſhew that all the perſons mentioned here were partakers of the gifts which Chriſt aſcending up on high, and ſending down the Holy Spirit, gave to men. Hence, among the different χαρίσματα, gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, are reckoned διδασκαλία, teaching, Rom. 12. 6. 7. and among the gifts exerciſed in their aſſemblies, διδαχὴ, doctrine, 1 Cor. 14. 6. 26. among the perſons who had received the διαιρέσεις χαρισμάτων, diverſities of gifts, are reckoned after prophets, διδάσκαλοι, teachers, 1 Cor. 12. 28. Rom. 12. 6. 7. and here. And ſo Tertullian (d) makes mention of them, as perſons " endued with " the grace of knowledge." The paſtors ſeem probably the ſame with the κυβερνήσεις, governments, 1 Cor. 12. 28. and the προϊστῶτες, Rom. 12. 8. And it is evident from both thoſe places, that there were alſo men endued with thoſe ſpiritual gifts there mentioned. Hence it is obſervable of theſe doctors, that when the extraordinary gifts of the church ceaſed, their very names grew out of uſe, they being very rarely mentioned in the ſucceeding ages of the church.

Ver. [l] 12.——15. From theſe five verſes the Papiſts argue for an infallible guide, thus: " Chriſt gave " apoſtles, paſtors, and teachers, that Chriſtians " might not be toſſed to and fro with every wind of " doctrine; this end could not be compaſſed by " giving us ſuch guides and inſtructors in belief, " as were merely fallible, and who might lead us " into circumvention of error. Moreover, God gave " ſuch paſtors to his church, till we all come to " the unity of the faith, which will not be till the " laſt days of all; wherefore till the end of the " world, the world ſhall be provided of them, and " by them be ſecured from being like children toſſed " to and fro."

Anſ. I anſwer, That this text is ſo far from proving a ſucceſſion of infallible guides, in matters of faith, to the world's end, that it ſeems rather to eſtabliſh the doctrine of the Proteſtants, touching the fulneſs and perſpicuity of the holy ſcriptures, in all neceſſary articles of Chriſtian faith, and to overthrow the pretended neceſſity of infallible guides, in order to that end. For,

1. To come to a perfect man, as to the unity of faith, and knowledge of the Son of God, is, in the ſcripture-language, to be ſufficiently inſtructed in the articles of the Chriſtian faith and knowledge. Thus when our Lord ſaith to the young man, If thou wilt be perfect, ſell all that thou haſt, Matth. 19. 21. by comparing theſe words with thoſe in St Mark and St Luke, Mark 10. 21. One thing is lacking, or is wanting to thee, Luke 18. 22; it is evident, that to be perfect there, is not to be wanting in the knowledge or practice of any thing to be done, that this young man might have eternal life.

οις, among them that are perfect, 1 Cor. 2. 6. the meaning is, ſay the Greek commentators (e), περὶ τοὺς τελείαν παραδεξαμένους πίστιν, among thoſe who are perfectly inſtructed in the faith. And when he ſaith, As many as are perfect, let us mind the ſame thing; he ſpeaks of perſons fully inſtructed in their Chriſtian liberty: and when he ſaith, Leaving the principles of the oracles of Chriſt, let us go on to perfection, he calls us to advance to a more full inſtruction in the faith and knowledge of Chriſt. See note on 1 Cor. 2. 6.

2. Note, That the apoſtles, and firſt preachers of the goſpel, were made miniſters of his church, πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τῦ Θεῦ, to teach fully the word of God, Col. 1. 25. 26.; to teach every man in all wiſdom, that they might preſent every man perfect in Chriſt Jeſus, ver. 28. And accordingly, departing from the churches planted by them, they commended them only to the word of grace, which was able to build them up, and give them an inheritance among all that are ſanctified, Acts 20. 32.

3. Obſerve, that the apoſtles, prophets, evangeliſts, paſtors, and teachers, here named, were given at our Lord's aſcenſion for theſe ends; for when he aſcended up on high, ἔδωκε, he actually gave ſome apoſtles, &c. and that even thoſe paſtors and teachers had their χαρίσματα, or ſupernatural gifts of the Holy Spirit, to fit them for that end. Whence it demonſtratively follows, that theſe gifts ceaſing ſoon after, a ſucceſſion of ſuch perſons was neither promiſed, nor was neceſſary to this end; for if ſo, Chriſt muſt be charged with breach of promiſe, and being wanting to the church in what was neceſſary for the obtainment of thoſe ends.

4. Obſerve, that theſe apoſtles, prophets, evangeliſts, paſtors, and teachers, endued with theſe ſupernatural gifts, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt into a perfect man, not doing all, or any of theſe things in perſon ſince their death; and yet being given for the accompliſhing theſe ends, muſt be acknowledged to have done all theſe things, as far as they were needful, by ſome other way. Now, there being no other way in which they could do it, but by their writings left behind them as a rule of faith, and by which, they being dead, yet ſpeak; it follows, that theſe writings duly attended to, muſt be ſufficient for theſe ends; and conſequently they muſt, both with ſufficient fulneſs and perſpicuity, inſtruct us in all the neceſſary articles of Chriſtian faith and knowledge. Hence (f) Chryſoſtom informs us, that they writ the goſpel πρὸς καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων, for the perfecting the ſaints, for the work of the miniſtry, for the edifying of the body of Chriſt. In a word, it is evident, this text doth as much prove a neceſſity of apoſtles, prophets, and evangeliſts, in all future ages of the church, to keep her members fixed in the truth, as of paſtors and doctors; theſe apoſtles, prophets, and evangeliſts, being here placed in the firſt rank of thoſe whom God hath given for this end: ſince therefore theſe apoſtles, prophets, and evangeliſts, were only given in the firſt ages of the church, it evidently follows, that the perſons mentioned in this text were not given them to do this perſonally to the world's end, but only to do it by the doctrine they then taught.

Ver. 16. [n] Ἐξ ᾧ, from whom.] That is, from which head, the whole body of Chriſtians duly compacted together, ſome ſuſtaining the office of an inferior head, ſome of an eye, ſome of an hand, ſome of a foot, 1 Cor. 12. 15. 16. 17. by the aſſiſtance which every of theſe parts, thus united together, gives to the whole, according to the particular proportion of its gifts, increaſeth or grows in love, and ſo each member edifies one another.

Ver. 17. [o] Ἐν ματαιότητι τῦ νόος, in the vanity of the mind.] The Heathen idols are frequently in the Old Teſtament ſtyled μάταια, vain things; and the apoſtles preached to the Gentiles to abſtain and turn ἀπὸ τῶν ματαίων τούτων, from thoſe vain things, Acts 14. 15. by compliance with which they became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh hearts were darkened, Rom. 1. 22. And this ſeems to be the vain converſation, from which, ſaith St Peter, they were redeemed, 1 Pet. 1. 18. and the vanity of the mind here mentioned.

Ver. 18. [p] Ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι, alienated from the life of God;] i. e. not only from that way of life which God approves of, but which reſembles him in purity, righteouſneſs, truth, and goodneſs.

Ibid. [q] Διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν τὴν οὖσαν ἐν αὐτοῖς, by the ignorance that is in them.] This ſeems to refer to their ignorance of the nature, the attributes, and the providence of God, and of a future ſtate of happineſs and miſery.

[r] The hardneſs of their hearts here mentioned, they had contracted by wicked habits and cuſtoms, the frequency of vile examples, and by thoſe corrupt principles which made them inſenſible of their impurity and laſciviouſneſs; for they committed whoredom and adultery, ſaith Origen (g), διδάσκοντες μὴ πάντως παρὰ τὸ καθῆκον τοῦτο γίνεσθαι, teaching that in theſe things they did nothing contrary to good manners.

Ver. 19. [s] Ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ, with greedineſs.] "Hoc "totum fecerunt in avaritia, dum nunquam luxurian- "do ſaturantur, nec eorum terminum habet volu- "ptas." Hieronymus in locum.

Ver. 22. [t] Τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον, the old man.] Sig-

nifies thoſe evil habits they ſo long practiſed in the ſtate of Heatheniſm; the new man, that divine life, that life of righteouſneſs and holineſs, which Chriſtianity requires: and it is called holineſs of truth, or inward holineſs, in oppoſition to the outward and ceremonial holineſs of the Jews.

Ver. 25. [t] Τὸ ψεῦδος, Lying.] Which the Heathen philoſophers thought lawful, when it was good, or profitable for them; as owning that rule of Menander, Κρεῖττον δὲ ἐλέσθαι ψεῦδος, ἢ ἀληθὲς κακὸν, A lie is better than an hurtful truth: and that of Proclus, Τὸ γὰρ ἀγαθὸν κρεῖττον ἐστι τῆς ἀληθείας, Good is better than truth: and that of Darius in (h) Herodotus, Ἔνθα γάρ τι δεῖ καὶ ψεῦδος λεγέσθαι, λεγέσθω, When a lie will profit, let it be uſed. And that of (i) Plato, He may lie who knows how to do it ἐν δέοντι καιρῷ, in a fit ſeaſon: for there is nothing decorous in truth, ſaith Maximus Tyrius (k), but when it is profitable: yea, ſometimes, ſaith he, καὶ ψεῦδος ὄφελον ἀνθρώπους, καὶ τὸ ἀληθὲς βλάψαι, truth hurts, and a lie profits men. And to countenance this practice, both Plato (l) and the Stoics (m) ſeem to have framed a Jeſuitical diſtinction, between lying in words, and with aſſent to an untruth, which they called lying in the ſoul: the firſt they allowed to an enemy, in proſpect of an advantage; and for many other diſpenſations of this life: that is, their wiſe man may tell a lie craftily, and for gain; but he muſt not embrace a falſehood through ignorance, or aſſent to an untruth.

Ver. 26. [u] Ὀργίζεσθε καὶ μὴ ἁμαρτάνετε, Be angry, and ſin not.] Theſe words, though ſpoken imperatively, are not a command to be angry, but a caution to avoid ſinful anger; as when the prophet ſaith to Nineveh, Fortify thy ſtrong holds, the ſword ſhall cut thee off, Nah. 3. 14. i. e. though thou doſt fortify them, it ſhall do ſo. And the ſon of Syrach, Cocker thy child, and he ſhall make thee afraid, chap. 30. 9. i. e. this will be the iſſue of it. So Iſ. 8. 9. 10.

Ibid. [x] Ὁ ἥλιος μὴ ἐπιδύετω, Let not the ſun go down upon thy wrath.] This precept, ſaith Plutarch (n), the ſcholars of Pythagoras obſerved, who when they had been angry, and reproached one another, πρὶν ἢ τὸν ἥλιον δῦναι, before the ſun went down, they ſhook hands, and embraced one another. This muſt the Chriſtian do, before he offers up to God his evening-ſacrifice, that ſo he may lift up to God pure hands, without wrath, 1 Tim. 2. 8.

Ver. 27. [y] Let a man be always careful that he be not angry, ſay the Jews (o); for whoſo is angry, "omnes ſpecies gehennæ ei dominantur," is ſubject to the dominion of the infernal fiends.

Ver. 28. [z] Ὁ κλέπτων, let him that ſtole, &c.] This exhortation was needful, becauſe "in many nations "it was not counted a ſin to ſteal," ſaith Sextus Empiricus (p): "nor were they much aſhamed at "it, when it was objected to them," ſaith Baſilides (q).

Ibid. [aa] Ἵνα ἔχῃ μεταδιδόναι, that he may have to give.] This charity the primitive Chriſtians expected even from them that laboured with their own hands. So Hermas ſaith (r), "It is good to give liberally to "all that are in need, out of the labours of our "own hands."

Ver. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good for edification.] Severe here are the words of St Jerom: "Quoties "loquimur aut non in tempore, aut opportuno loco, "aut non, ut convenit audientibus, toties ſermo "malus procedit de ore noſtro ad deſtructionem eo-"rum qui audiunt: conſideremus itaque quid loqui-"mur, quia pro omni verbo otioſo reddituri ſumus "rationem in die judicii; et etiamſi non lædamus, "non tamen ædificemus, mali verbi nobis luenda ſit "pœna." To qualify the rigid ſeverity of theſe words, ſee the note on Matth. 12. 36. See the reading of this, and the 32d verſe, vindicated, Examen Millii, ibid.

Ibid. [bb] Ἵνα δῷ χάριν, that it may miniſter grace.] That is, ſaith Theodoret, that it may be acceptable to, as well as good for the hearers; ſee the note on Col. 3. 16.

Ver. 30. [cc] Καὶ μὴ λυπεῖτε, and grieve not the Holy Spirit.] The Holy Spirit being a divine perſon, it is certain that he cannot properly be grieved, or vexed as we are. We therefore muſt remove from this expreſſion, when it is applied to him, all turbulent motions, all real pain, diſquiet, diſcontent,

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. BE ye therefore followers of (this love of) God, as (becomes his) dear children;

2. And walk in love, as Chriſt alſo (hath given an example, who) hath loved us, and hath given himſelf for us, [a] an offering and a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour.

3. But fornication, and all uncleanneſs, or covetouſneſs, (inordinate deſire), let it not be once named among you, (that you may walk) [b] as becometh ſaints:

4. Neither (Gr. μηδὲ, and let not) [c] filthineſs, nor (and) fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, which are (things) not convenient (to your calling, be uſed among you); but rather (let your employment be that of) giving of thanks.

5. For this ye know, that no whoremonger, or unclean perſon, nor covetous man who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt, and of God (the Father).

6. [d] Let no man deceive you with vain words, (as if theſe things might be conſiſtent with the favour of God): for becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience.

7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them (in thoſe ſins).

8. For ye were [e] ſometimes (children of) darkneſs, (being ſubject to thoſe deeds of darkneſs, chap. 2. 1. 2. 3. chap. 4. 18. 19.); but now are ye (children of the) light (by your faith) in the Lord; walk (therefore) as children of the light.

9. For the fruit [f] of the (Holy) Spirit (by which ye are enlightened) is in all goodneſs, righteouſneſs, and truth, (and ſo inſtructs you to avoid thoſe deeds of wickedneſs;)

10. (Walk then as children of the light,) proving (δοκιμάζοντες, approving) what is acceptable to the Lord.

11. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs (committed by the Heathens), but [g] rather reprove them:

12. (They being ſuch as deſerve to be reproved); for it is a ſhame even to ſpeak of thoſe things which are done of [h] them in ſecret.

13. But all things that are reproved, are made manifeſt by the light, (or being diſcovered by the light, are made manifeſt): for whatſoever doth make (any thing) manifeſt, is light.

14. Wherefore (to ſhew that Chriſtians are light, and ſo obliged to avoid the works of darkneſs) [i] he (the Lord) ſaith (to thoſe Gentiles who are yet in darkneſs), Awake thou that ſleepeſt, ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light.

15. See then that ye walk circumſpectly, (or how exactly you walk), not as fools, (running yourſelves into unneceſſary dangers, by an indiſcreet zeal), but as wiſe (to manage your affairs ſo as to avoid them by all lawful means);

16. [k] Redeeming the time, (i. e. uſing all prudent means to prolong your lives), becauſe the days (in which you live) are evil, (and therefore perilous, and ſuch as will require much wiſdom to preſerve you from dangers.)

17. Wherefore be ye not unwiſe (in managing this, and other affairs), but (act as) underſtanding what the will of the Lord is, (viz. That in ſuch caſes he requires you to be wiſe as ſerpents, and not to caſt pearls before ſwine, who will tear you for them; and ſemblably not to ſacrifice your lives, by an indiſcreet zeal in diſcovering thoſe myſteries, but to ſhew the vileneſs of them with ſuch prudence, as may preſerve you from periſhing by the diſcovery.)

18. [l] And be not drunk with wine (as the Heathens uſe to be in the feſtivals of their gods, and eſpecially in their Bacchanalia), [m] wherein is exceſs, (Gr. ἀσωτία, diſſoluteneſs); but be (ye) filled with (the Holy) Spirit, (as Chriſtians uſe to be in their aſſemblies; ſee Prov. 23. 30. and 20. 1.):

19. Speaking to yourſelves [n] in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, (with which the Chriſtians were inſpired in their aſſemblies, 1 Cor. 14. 15. 26.), ſinging (them with the mouth) and (alſo) making melody in your hearts to the Lord;

20. Giving thanks [o] always for all things unto God and (or, who is) the Father (of us all, chap. 4. 6.), in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt;

21. Submitting yourſelves one to another (according to the divine ordinance) in the fear of God, (who is the author of that order.)

22. (And therefore) wives, ſubmit yourſelves to your own huſbands, as unto the (ordinance of the) Lord, (the huſband of his ſpouſe the church.)

23. For the huſband is the head of the wife, even as Chriſt is the head of the church; and (this) he is (as being) the Saviour of the body.

24. Therefore as the church is ſubject to Chriſt, ſo let the wives be to their own huſbands in every (lawful) thing.

25. (And ye) huſbands (alſo, ſee that you) love your wives, even as Chriſt alſo loved the church, and gave himſelf (up to the death) for it:

26. That he might ſanctify (or conſecrate and fit it for his ſervice) and cleanſe it (Gr. having cleanſed it) by the waſhing of water, (i. e. by that baptiſm which is the laver of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5.), and (by) the word (of his grace, which is able to ſanctify us, Acts 20. 32. John 17. 17.);

27. That (ſo) he might preſent it to himſelf a glorious church, [p] not having ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; but that it ſhould be holy, and without blemiſh.

28. So ought men to love their wives, [q] as their own bodies; (they two being made one fleſh, ſo that) he that loveth his wife, loveth himſelf.

29. For no man ever yet hated his own fleſh, but nouriſheth it, and cheriſheth it, even as (doth) the Lord the church, (which is his ſpouſe):

30. For we are members of his body, [r] of his fleſh, and of his bones.

31. For this cauſe (was it ſaid at the production of Eve, and her being given for a meet help to Adam, Gen. 2. 24. that) ſhall a man leave his father and mother, and ſhall cleave to his wife, and they two ſhall be one fleſh.

32. [s] This is a great myſtery; but (when I repreſent it as ſuch) I ſpeak (chiefly of the myſtical ſenſe of it) concerning Chriſt and the church.

33. Nevertheleſs (on the other account alſo) let every one of you in particular ſo love his wife even as himſelf; and (let) the wife ſee that ſhe reverence her huſband.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 2. Προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν, an offering and oblation.] That the death of Chriſt is here ſtyled an oblation offered up to God for us, cannot be denied: but Crellius ſaith, that the apoſtle ſpeaks not here of an expiatory oblation; becauſe the oblation here mentioned is ſaid to be offered for a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour: which phraſe is ſcarce ever uſed concerning expiatory ſacrifices, but chiefly of burnt-offerings, which were not of themſelves expiatory, and are by Moſes diſtinguiſhed from ſacrifices for ſin.

But, 1. That ſacrifices of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour were uſed to make atonement for, and to expiate the ſin of men, is proved from the ſacrifice of Noah: for whereas in the Greek we read, that when that ſacrifice was offered, God ſmelled ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, a ſacrifice of a ſweet ſavour; in the Hebrew he is ſaid to ſmell Eth ruach hamnica, "a ſavour of reſt;" that is, which made God's anger to reſt, ſay the Jewiſh writers (f). Joſephus informs us, that Noah, by this ſacrifice, "intreated that God would now "be atoned, and would no more conceive ſuch "diſpleaſure againſt the earth," i. e. the inhabitants of it. And by the Syriac verſion it is rendered an "odour of placability," becauſe, as Vatablus and Munſter on the place obſerve, God then ceaſed from his anger, and was appeaſed: ſo that the firſt time this phraſe is uſed, it is taken for an expiatory ſacrifice, and is deſigned to appeaſe the wrath of God. The ſacrifices which Job offered for his ſons and daughters, and for his three friends, were burnt-offerings, as the phraſe עלה העלות ſhews; and yet they were offered, the one to expiate for the ſin of his children, Job 1. 5. the other to appeaſe the wrath of God kindled againſt his three friends, chap. 42. 7. Moreover, it is evident from ſcripture, that this phraſe ὀσμὴ εὐωδίας, a ſweet ſavour, is uſed not only of burnt-offerings, but of ſacrifices for ſin; thus, If any people of the land ſin through ignorance;——when his ſin comes to his knowledge, the text ſaith, he ſhall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemiſh, περὶ τῆς ἁμαρτίας, a ſacrifice for the ſin he hath ſinned, and the prieſt ſhall burn it upon the altar, εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, for a ſweet ſavour to the Lord; and the prieſt ſhall make atonement for him, and it ſhall be forgiven him. To this importance of the phraſe doth David manifeſtly allude, when he ſaith to Saul, If the Lord hath ſtirred thee up againſt me, ὀσφρανθῇ ἡ θυσία, let him ſmell an offering. And when this ὀσμὴ εὐωδίας, ſacrifice of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour, is applied to burnt-offerings, they are declared to be favourably accepted, to make atonement for him that offers them. This the ſon of Syrach ſeems plainly to ſay of their ſacrifices of ſweet ſavour in the general, when he ſpeaks thus of Aaron: He choſe him out of all the people to offer ſacrifices to the Lord, incenſe, and a ſweet ſavour, for a memorial, to make reconciliation for his people (t). Thus of the burnt-offerings in Leviticus it is ſaid, That he that brings them ſhall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering, and it ſhall be accepted for him to make atonement for him, Lev. 1. 4. Now, as the Hebrew doctors tell us (u), That this impoſition of hands was always joined with confeſſion of ſins over the ſacrifice, which confeſſion ſtill concluded with a prayer, that the ſacrifice might be an expiation for them; ſo the phraſe, It ſhall be accepted to make atonement for him, Lev. 14. 20. uſed here, and elſewhere, concerning holy things, is as much as is ever ſaid of expiatory ſacrifices. Nor is it any objection to the contrary, that burnt-offerings are uſually diſtinguiſhed from ſin-offerings; the reaſon of that being this, ſaith Ainſworth (x), that burnt-offerings were for the atonement of general ſins, and ſuch as often were unknown to men, whereas for ſpecial ſins there was appointed a ſpecial ſacrifice, and ſin-offering. This, ſaith Dr Outram (y), was the opinion of the Jews, that burnt-offerings were intended for the expiation of ſin. And this, ſaith Mr Selden (z), was their practice, to offer theſe as expiatory ſacrifices for ſtrangers.

Ver. 3. [b] Καθὼς πρέπει ἁγίοις, as becometh ſaints.] Worthy of obſervation is the note of St Jerom here, "Ex quo ſanctus non poteſt appellari, quicunque, "extra fornicationem, in aliqua immunditia, et a-"varitia voluptatum qua ſe delectaverit, invenitur."

Ver. 4. [c] That the words μωρολογία and εὐτραπελία are to be interpreted to an impure ſenſe, may probably be gathered from the words joined with them, fornication, uncleanneſs, filthineſs, and more probably from the reaſon rendered for the abandoning them all; viz. That no fornicator, or unclean perſon, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of God, or of Chriſt. Μωρολογία is in the Rabbinical phraſe, פרי נכול, turpitudo oris, of which they proverbially ſay (a), בל המגבל פיו, "Quicunque fœde loquitur, "perinde eſt ac ſi introduceret porcum in ſanctua-"rium." To commit נבלה, folly in Iſrael, is to commit whoredom, or adultery: and the word by the Septuagint is ſometimes rendered τὸ ἄσχημον, indecency, ſometimes ἀφροσύνη, ſometimes μωρία, folly, and ſometimes ἀκαθαρσία, filthineſs. And the ſoliciting a woman to fornication by filthy words, is in the Targum expreſſed thus, לא תנבל, "Non de-"turpabis verbum oris," Thou ſhalt not ſpeak impurely with thy mouth, to cauſe thy fleſh to ſin, Eccl. 5. 6.

Εὐτραπελία is by Suidas rendered μωρολογία, κυφότης, ſcurrility, levity, by Phavorinus, βωμολοχία. Now βώμολόχος is a filthy ſcurrilous man; and in Ariſtophanes, βωμολόχοις ἥκιστα χάιρειν, is to be pleaſed with filthy ſcurrilous words. Hence Oecumenius and Theophylact reckon them both as ὀχήματα τῆς πορνίας, the forerunners or incentives to fornication.

As for the word πλεονεξία, that it hath ſometimes an impure ſenſe, ſee note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 6. though being here ſtyled idolatry, it ſeems more naturally to relate to the love of riches, which renders us moſt truly guilty of that ſin. Though it be alſo true, that he who loveth pleaſures more than God, is guilty of that ſin; and this impurity was a frequent, and almoſt general appendix of idol-worſhip.

That the Epheſians ſtood in need of theſe inſtructions, we learn from (b) Democritus Epheſius, who, ſpeaking of the temple of the Epheſian Diana, hath much περὶ τὰς χλιδὰς αὐτῶν, of the ſoftneſs and luxury of the Epheſians; and from Euacles (c) in his book De Epheſiacis, who ſaith, ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἱερὰ ἱδρύσασθαι ἑταίρᾳ Ἀφροδίτῃ, in Epheſus they built temples to Venus, the miſtreſs of the whores. And from Strabo, who informs us, "That in their ancient temples there "were old images, but in their new σκολιὰ ἔργα, vile works were done, l. 14. p. 640.

Ver. 6. [d] Μηδεὶς ἀπατάτω, let no man deceive you.] Among the Heathens ſimple fornication was held a thing indifferent; the laws allowed, and provided for it in many nations; whence the grave Epictetus counſels his ſcholars, only to whore ὡς νόμιμον ἦν, according to law (d): and in all places they connived at it. "He that blames young men for their mere-"tricious amours," ſaith Cicero, "does what is "repugnant to the cuſtom and conceſſions of our "anceſtors; for when was not this done? when "was it not permitted (e)?" This was ſuitable both to the principles and practices of many of their grave philoſophers, eſpecially of the Stoics (f), who held it "lawful for others to uſe whores, and for them to "get their living by ſuch practices." Hence, even in the church of Corinth, ſome had taught this doctrine. See note on 1 Cor. 6. 13.

Ver. 8. [e] Ποτὲ σκότος, ſometimes darkneſs.] That the ſtate of the Gentile world, both in the Old and the New Teſtament, is repreſented by a ſtate of darkneſs, and that of Chriſtians by a ſtate of light; ſee note on Rom. 13. 12.

copies, and all the Latin and the Syriac read τῆ φωτὸς, the fruits of the light, with which you are enlightened; and ſo doth St Jerom here, taking no notice of the other reading.

Ver. 11. ὁ Ἐλέγχετε.] Reprove them, make them aſhamed of them, by bringing them to the light, ἐλέγχων γὰρ ἀντὶ τῦ αἰσχύνων, ἐλέγχω τὸ κεκρυμμένον ἀτόπημά τινος εἰς φῶς ἄγων. Phavorinus.

Ver. 12. ᵇ Τὰ κρυφῆ γινόμενα, done of them in ſecret.] In their myſteries, which therefore were ſtyled ἀπόῤῥητα μυστήρια, none being permitted to divulge them upon pain of death. Hence even the word μυστήριον hath its name, ſay grammarians, from μύειν τὸ στόμα, to ſtop the mouth. The Eleuſinia Sacra were performed in the night, agreeably to the deeds of darkneſs committed in them; ſo were the Bacchanalia, hence called Nyctelia; and they were both full of deteſtable iniquity; and upon that account, ſaith Livy (g), were baniſhed by the Roman ſenate out of Rome and Italy: ἀκόλουθα γὰρ τῆ Διονυσιακῆ πότῃ τὰ ἀφροδίσια, "luſt being a conſequent on the Bacchana- "lia," ſays the Scholiaſt on Ariſtophanes (h). Hence is that of Ariſtippus (i), ἐν βακχεύμασιν δὲ ἡ σώφρων ἐ διαφθαρήσεται, a chaſte woman will not be corrupted at the Bacchanalia. And thoſe precepts, that a married woman ſhould abſtain (k) τοῖς ἀγύρταις καὶ μαλάγμοις, from the feaſts of Bacchus, and the mother of the gods, becauſe they tended to drunkenneſs, and the corrupting of chaſte women.

Ver. 14. ᶦ Λέγει, he ſaith.] Epiphanius ſaith (l), theſe words were ſpoken by Elias; and Georgius Syncellus (m), that they were taken from the apocryphal books of Jeremiah; others think they are cited from Iſ. 60. 1. 19. 22.

Ibid. Awake thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, καὶ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστὸς, and Chriſt ſhall enlighten thee, or ſhine upon thee: and yet our tranſlation, that Chriſt ſhall give thee life, is very juſtifiable, as giving the true ſenſe of the metaphor; ſo Pſal. 13. 14. Lighten my eyes, that I ſleep not in death, i. e. preſerve my life; Prov. 29. 13. The poor and rich meet together, the Lord enlighteneth both their eyes. See Job 3. 20.; 33. 30. Mr Dodwell citing theſe words, ſaith, "Chriſt ſhall give thee light, is the ſame with "the immortal light; and this is an addreſs to the "dead, who are frequently ſaid to ſleep, in the pro- "phetic ſtyle of the New Teſtament; and the light "ſeems to allude to the baptiſmal illumination of "the Spirit, upon owning of the true faith." But as in this he is ſingular, and hath not one authority ancient or modern, agreeing with him in this interpretation, or to the application of it to Chriſt preaching to the dead in hades, and baptizing them, St Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Photius, and Theophylact among the Greek interpreters, Ambroſe, or Hilary the Deacon, and St Jerom among the Latins, all ſaying poſitively that the words are to be underſtood metaphorically of a ſleep, and death in treſpaſſes and ſins; ſo is it alſo evident, that the words cannot bear this ſenſe. For,

1. If they that ſleep here ſignifies literally thoſe whoſe bodies ſleep in the grave, the addreſs to them to riſe from the dead, muſt be an addreſs to their bodies to riſe from the grave; and ſo they muſt be firſt raiſed from the dead before Chriſt gives them light.

2. To ſleep, when it is uſed to ſignify death in the New Teſtament, always relates to the body ſleeping in the grave, or in the duſt; as John 5. 28. 29. 1 Cor. 11. 30.; 15. 20. 51. 1 Theſſ. 4. 14.; 5. 10. and never to the ſoul in hades, or to the ſpirits in priſon there: for, as St Jerom notes on the place, Spiritus mortem nunquam legimus, "We never read "in ſcripture of the death of a ſpirit in the literal "ſenſe." And,

3. The preceding verſes plainly ſhew, that the apoſtle introduceth theſe words as a call to the Gentiles ſitting in darkneſs to awake out of their ſleep in ſin, ther death in treſpaſſes and ſins, chap. 2. 1. 5. that they might enjoy the light of Chriſt's goſpel; for, ſaith he, chap. 5. 8. Ye were once darkneſs, but now are ye light in the Lord, walk as children of the light: ver. 11. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them; which you who are children of the light, and on whom God hath ſhined, to give the light of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6. may do, for all that maketh manifeſt is light, Eph. 5. 13. Wherefore λέγει, the ſcripture ſaith to thoſe Gentiles who are yet in darkneſs, Awake, thou that ſleepeſt, and ariſe from the dead, and Chriſt ſhall give thee light, Eph. 5. 14. So again, 1 Theſſ. 5. 5. 6. Ye are the children of the light and of the day, not of the night, nor of darkneſs; therefore let us not ſleep as others do. See the note on Rom. 13. 12. So Clemens Alexandrinus (n), in his exhortation to the Gentiles, ſaith, Ἀφυπνίζω γέ τοι, καὶ τῦ σκότους αὐτῦ τοὺς πλανωμένους διανίστησι, He by his exhortation raiſes out of ſleep thoſe that erred in and through darkneſs. See alſo the reading of the text confirmed, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 16.

Ver. 16. [a] Ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, redeeming the time.] Here note,

1. That the times of peril and trouble are ſtyled evil days; in this ſenſe Jacob ſaith his days were evil, πονηραὶ ἡμέραι, by reaſon of the troubles he met with from Laban and his brother Eſau, Gen. 47. 9. The pſalmiſt, that the righteous ſhall not be aſhamed ἐν καιρῷ πονηρῷ, in the evil day, Pſal. 37. 19. The wiſe man ſhall be ſilent, ſaith Amos, in that time, for it is καιρὸς πονηρὸς, an evil time, chap. 5. 13. i. e. a time of lamentation, ver. 16. of darkneſs, ver. 18. and that is by the prophet Micah ſtyled ὁ καιρὸς πονηρὸς, an evil time, chap. 2. 2. which brought thoſe judgments on them which they could not eſcape. And in the cloſe of this epiſtle, to ſtand ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ πονηρᾷ, is to ſtand in the times of fiery trials and ſevere perſecutions by the inſtruments of Satan, chap. 6. 13.

Ἐξαγοράζειν τὸν καιρὸν, to redeem the time,] is by all honeſt ways and prudent methods to endeavour to avoid the dangers, and to eſcape the perſecutions to which theſe perilous times may render us obnoxious. So when king Nebuchadnezzar had threatened that the Chaldeans and magicians ſhould be cut in pieces if they declared not his dream, and they ſtill put him off with this anſwer, Let the king tell the dream, and we will tell him the interpretation; the king replies, Of a truth I know, ὅτι καιρὸν ὑμεῖς ἐξαγοράζετε, that you would gain the time, i. e. you hope by theſe anſwers to delay the time of your puniſhment, and to contrive ſome way to eſcape it. So the ſcholiaſt upon the place expounds it, καιρὸν ὑμεῖς ἀγοράζετε, τουτέστιν, ὑπερθέσεσιν θεραπεύετε διασκεδάσαι τὴν ἀπειλὴν τὴν καιρῷ σκοτεινῇ τὸ παρ' ὑμῶν ζητούμενον, You hunt after delays, ſeeking by the protracting of the time to make me forget what I aſked of you. And Theodoret expounds it thus, You prolong the time τῇ ἐκδάσει τὸν καιρὸν ἀναμένοντες, hoping for time to eſcape. So alſo Col. 4. 5. Walk in wiſdom towards thoſe that are without, i. e. your Heathen governors and magiſtrates, redeeming the time, i. e. endeavouring, by all Chriſtian prudence, to avoid the calamities they are ſtill ready to bring upon you, anſwering them with as much wiſdom and gentleneſs of ſpeech as you are able; for walking among wolves, it concerns you to be wiſe as ſerpents. And though it may not be ſo pertinent to this text, yet will it be very profitable to the men of this age to conſider the practice of the Heathens in this caſe: for Ælian (o) informs us of the Lacedæmonians, that they were much concerned that men ſhould ſpend their time well, ταμιεύμενοι παντα χόθεν εἰς ἐπιγόμενα, employing it ſtill upon urgent buſineſs, and ſuffering no man either to be idle, or to employ himſelf about trifles, ὡς ἂν μὴ πρὸς τὰ ἔχθρα τῆς ἀρετῆς ἀναλισκόμενος, ſo that he might employ his whole time in virtuous actions. And Stobæus ſaith (p), that the Lucani, a people of Italy, and the Athenians, puniſhed thoſe that were idle, as well as thoſe that were guilty ἄλλου τινὸς ἀδικήματος, of any other crime. And ſeeing time is a talent given us by that God, in whoſe hand our lives are, it muſt be given us for ſome good end, and muſt be miſ-ſpent when it is not employed to ſuch ends.

Ver. 18. [b] Μὴ μεθύσκεσθε οἴνῳ, be not drunk with wine.] The Heathens, who held drunkenneſs unlawful at other times, thought it a duty at the ſolemnity of Bacchus, and of other gods. Plato ſaith, "That no "man ſhould be allowed to be drunk but at the ſo- "lemnities of the god that gave them wine." And when Megillus the Lacedæmonian had told the Athenians, that he ſaw their whole cities drunk at the ſolemnities of Bacchus, and that the inhabitants of Terentum did the ſame, "Marvel not at that," ſaith the Athenian, "for the law with us requires it." And Plutarch ſaith (q), That ὀργιάζοντες ἢ θυσίαις παροῦσι, ἢ τελεταῖς, when they celebrated the orgia of Bacchus, or were preſent at their ſacrifices, or ſacred myſteries, they allowed themſelves to be delighted μέχρι μέθης, even to drunkenneſs. This was the uſual appendix of their ſacrifices; they thinking this a duty, ſaith Athenæus (r), in the ſervice of their gods. Hence Ariſtotle, and others, ſay, that drunkenneſs had its name from the intemperance they uſed after they had offered ſacrifice.

Ibid. [c] Ἐν ᾧ ἐστιν ἀσωτία, in which is exceſs.] That ἀσωτία ſignifies luxury, is proved from the prodigal, of whom it being ſaid, that he lived ἀσώτως, Luke 15. 13. this is interpreted, ver. 30. by devouring his living with harlots; and from Heſychius, who interprets ἀσώτως by the word αἰσχρῶς, filthily. Phavorinus ſaith, the ἄσωτος is the ἀκόλαστος, ἀσελγὴς, luſtful and unchaſte perſon; and hence ἀσώτιον ſignifies a ſtew or brothel-houſe. Now, that this drunkenneſs miniſters to this laſciviouſneſs, as the poets often teach; ſo the practice and experience of the Heathens found it true, their compotation and banquetings ſeldom concluding without the introduction of lewd women, and their Bacchanalia ending in whoredom and adultery, ἀκόλαστον οἶνος, Prov. 20. 1.

Ver. 19. [d] Ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις, in pſalms and hymns, &c.] In their Bacchanalia they ſung their drunken hymns to Bacchus, ſaying, Εὐοῖ Σαβοῖ, Εὐοῖ Βακχὶ, and had their Φαλλικὰ ἄσματα. In oppoſition to which drunken and impure ſongs, the apoſtle here exhorts

St Jerom here ſaith, "Canere igitur et pſallere, magis animo quam voce "debemus, hoc eſt, quippe quod dicitur, Cantantes "et pſallentes in cordibus veſtris Domino. Audiant "hæc adoleſcentuli, audiant hi, quibus pſallendi in "eccleſia officium eſt, Deo non voce ſed corde can-"tandum, nec tragœdorum ad modum guttur et "fauces dulci medicamine colliniendus, ut in eccle-"ſia theatrales moduli audiantur, et cantica, ſed in "timore, in opere, in ſcientia ſcripturarum;" which ſhews that choriſters or quire-men had then obtained an office in the church, though he ſeems not much to approve them.

Ver. 20. ° Πάντοτε, always.] See note on 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. ὑπὲρ πάντων, for all things; for his ſparing mercies, Pſal. 103. 3. 4.; his preventing mercies, Eph. 1. 4. Ver. 26. Ἐν ῥήματι, by the word;] that is, ſaith Chryſoſtom, by the words uſed in the form of baptiſm, to wit, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 27. ᵖ Μὴ ἔχουσαν σπίλον, ἢ ῥυτίδα, not having ſpot or wrinkle.] This ſeems to refer to the accuracy of the Jewiſh baptiſm, who thought not the perſon well baptized if there were any wrinkle which kept the fleſh from the water, or any ſpot or dirt which was not thoroughly waſhed by it. And thus the church is cleanſed at preſent from the guilt of ſin by the blood of Chriſt, 1 John 1. 7. 2 Cor. 11. 2. Col. 1. 22.

Ver. 28. ᵠ Ὡς ἑαυτῶν σώματα, as their own bodies.] The Jews ſay, "He that loveth his wife as his own "body, and honoureth her more than his own bo-"dy, of him the ſcripture ſaith, Peace ſhall be in "his tabernacle, and he ſhall viſit his tabernacle, and "ſhall not ſin," Talmud. Sanh. fol. 76. 2.

Ver. 30. ʳ Ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ, of his fleſh and of his bones.] This phraſe being not only uſed to expreſs an intimate relation, Gen. 29. 14. Judg. 9. 2.; but being the very words which Adam uſed concerning Eve, made out of his rib, Gen. 2. 23. ſhews that the apoſtle had his eye upon the myſtical ſenſe of the production of the woman from the man, of which the Jews ſpeak.

Ver. 31. Καὶ προσκολληθήσεται πρὸς τὴν γυναῖκα αὐτοῦ.] Jerom being an enemy to wedlock, inſinuates that theſe words are an addition to the text; but the contrary is evident, they being found in all verſions, all the Greek ſcholiaſts, in the codex Alex. and Hilary D.

Ver. 32. ˢ Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστιν, this is a great myſtery.] He doth not ſay, as Mr Clerc interprets the words, But I ſpeak concerning the love of Chriſt to his church; nor was that any myſtery at all, as being long ago revealed, and a thing known to all Chriſtians; but this was indeed a myſtery till the apoſtle here revealed it to the Epheſians, that, as the learned Dr Allix ſaith (s), the firſt match between Adam and Eve was a type of that between Chriſt and his church; and in this, ſaith he, the apoſtle followed the Jewiſh notions; for the Jews ſay (t), according to Voiſin, Sod Adam Hu Sod Meſſiah, "The "myſtery of Adam is the myſtery of the Meſſiah, "who is the bridegroom of the church." Theſe two great perſons therefore confirm the obſervation of Munſter, That "the creation of the woman from "the rib of the man, was made by the Jews to ſig-"nify the marriage of the celeſtial man, who is "bleſſed, or of the Meſſiah, with the church." Whence the apoſtle applies the very words which Adam ſaid concerning Eve his ſpouſe, to thoſe Chriſtians who are the ſpouſe of Chriſt, ſaying, We are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones, ver. 30. For the fuller explication of theſe words, note from the Biſhop of Ely (u), "That the pro-"foundeſt of the Hebrew divines, whom they now "call Cabbaliſts, having ſuch a notion as this a-"mong them, that ſenſible things are but an imi-"tation of things above, conceived from thence, "that there was an original pattern of love and "union, which is between a man and his wife in "this world; this being expreſſed by the kindneſs "of Tipheret and Malcuth, which are the names "they give to the inviſible bridegroom and bride "in the upper world; and this Tipheret, or the "great Adam, in oppoſition to the terreſtrial and "little Adam here below, as Malcuth (i. e. the "kingdom) they call alſo by the name of Cheneſ-"eth Iſrael, the congregation of Iſrael, who is uni-"ted, ſay they, to the celeſtial Adam, as Eve was "to the terreſtrial. So that in ſum they ſeem to "to ſay the ſame that the apoſtle Paul doth, when "he tells us, that marriage is a great myſtery, but "he ſpeaks concerning Chriſt and his church: for the "marriage of Tipheret and Malcuth, or Cheneſeth Origen ſeems to have had ſome notice of the relation this paſſage had to Adam and Eve, when he ſpeaks thus: " If any man deride us for uſing the example of " Adam and Eve, in theſe words, And Adam knew " his wife, when we treat of the knowledge of God, " let him conſider theſe words, This is a great myſ- " ſtery (x)." Tertullian frequently alludes to the ſame thing, ſaying, " This is a great ſacrament, " Carnaliter in Adam, ſpiritualiter in Chriſto, propter " ſpirituales nuptias Chriſti et eccleſiæ; carnally in " Adam, ſpiritually in Chriſt, by reaſon of the ſpi- " ritual marriage betwixt him and his church." Exhort. ad caſtitat. l. 5. p. 521. de anima, c. 11. et 12. *et adv. CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. CHildren, obey your parents [a] in (compliance with the commandment of) the Lord; for this is right, (that you ſhould yield obedience to them who gave you life.)

2. (For) honour thy father and thy mother (with reverence, obedience, and maintenance, ſaith the fifth commandment), which is the firſt commandment (in the decalogue) [b] with (a) promiſe (annexed to it.)

3. [c] (And the promiſe is this), That it may be well with thee, and (that) thou mayſt live long upon the earth.

4. And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, (by ſevere treatment and rigid injunctions, ſee Col. 3. 21.); but (rather) [d] bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, (inſtructing them in the principles of piety towards God, and faith in our Lord Jeſus.)

5. Servants, be obedient to them that are your maſters (though they be only ſo) according to the fleſh, (the Spirit being immediately ſubject to God alone), with fear (of diſpleaſing them), and trembling (leſt you juſtly ſhould incur their anger, ſerving them) in ſingleneſs of your heart, as (knowing that in thus ſerving them, you do ſervice) unto Chriſt, (who requires this of you, whoſe goſpel you will credit by your ſincere obedience to your maſters for his ſake, Tit. 2. 2. and whoſe doctrine you will blaſpheme by your diſobedience, under pretence of any Chriſtian liberty from the obſervance of your duty to them, 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2.)

6. (Serve them therefore) not with eye-ſervice, (and whilſt they behold you) as men-pleaſers (uſe to do); but as (becomes) the ſervants of Chriſt (in this relation), doing the will of God (who requires this obedience to them, 1 Pet. 2. 18. 19. 20.) from the heart:

7. With good-will doing (them) ſervice, as (conſidering you do it) to the Lord (himſelf), and not to men (only):

8. (And) knowing that whatever good any man doth (out of obedience to the Lord, a reward of), the ſame he ſhall receive of the Lord, whether he be (a) bond (man) or free.

9. And ye maſters, do the ſame things to them, (ſhew the like good-will to, and concern for them), forbearing threatenings (Gr. ἀνιέντες, remitting of the evils which you threaten to them); [e] knowing that your maſter alſo is in heaven, neither is there reſpect of perſons (or conditions) with him.

10. Finally, my brethren, be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

11. (And to this end) put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to ſtand (your ground) againſt [f] the wiles of the devil.

12. For we wreſtle not (only) againſt fleſh and blood, (i. e. men who are compounded of them; ſee note on Gal. 1. 16.), but (alſo) againſt (evil) principalities, againſt powers, (ſuch as Chriſt triumphed over, Col. 2. 15.), againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, (i. e. thoſe evil ſpirits which ſtill rule in thoſe Heathen nations which are yet in darkneſs, chap. 5. 8. 1 Theſſ. 5. 5.; ſee note on Rom. 13. 12.), againſt ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places, (i. e. againſt thoſe evil ſpirits which have their ſtations in the regions of the air; ſee note on chap. 2. 2.)

13. Wherefore (I again exhort you to) take unto you [g] the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withſtand (theſe dangerous enemies) in the evil day (of trial, perſecution, and temptation), and having done all, to ſtand (firm againſt them.)

14. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about [h] with truth, and having on the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs;

15. [i] And your feet ſhod with the preparation of the goſpel of peace;

16. Above all (the reſt), taking [k] the ſhield of faith, wherewith ye ſhall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked (one.)

17. And take the [l] helmet of ſalvation, (for an helmet the hope of ſalvation, 1 Theſſ. 5. 8.), and the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, (by hiding which in your hearts you will be preſerved from ſin, Pſal. 119. 11.):

18. Praying always (ſee 1 Theſſ. 5. 17.) with all prayer and ſupplication (1 Tim. 2. 1.) in the Spirit, (x) Com. in Jon. p. 264.

(ſee note on 1 Cor. 14. 6.), and watching thereunto with all perſeverance, and (with) ſupplication (not for yourſelves only, but) for all ſaints; (your charity to others being a means to procure God's favour to yourſelves);

19. And for me (in particular), [n] that (a door of) utterance may be given to me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the myſtery of the goſpel;

20. For which I am an ambaſſador in bonds, that therein I may ſpeak boldly, as I ought to ſpeak.

21. But (and) that ye may alſo know my affairs, and how I do (at Rome), Tychicus a beloved brother, and faithful miniſter in (the things of) the Lord, ſhall make known to you all things:

22. Whom I have ſent to you for the ſame purpoſe, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.

23. Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

24. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt [o] in ſincerity. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἐν Κυρίῳ, in the Lord;] that is, ſay Oecumenius and Theophylact, as far as their commandments are conſiſtent with the will of God.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἐν ἐπαγγελίᾳ, with promiſe;] i. e. a ſpecial promiſe; for that which is annexed to the ſecond commandment, is rather a general aſſertion than a ſpecial promiſe.

Ver. 3. [c] The apoſtle doth not add theſe words, which the Lord giveth thee; becauſe they particularly belonged to the Iſraelites, who were to be excluded from their own land, and he would give them no ground to think they ſhould continue in it. Note alſo hence, that the goſpel hath its temporal promiſes, as well as ſpiritual, Matth. 6. 33. 1 Tim. 4. 8. 1 Pet. 3. 10. 11. 12. That this promiſe did not at all concern the Epheſians, is Mr Clerc's miſtake; for God is not the God of the Jews only, but alſo of the Gentiles, and will reward moral duties performed by them, as well as by the Jews.

Ver. 4. Provoke not your children to anger,] by diſinheriting them, by laying heavy burdens upon them, and uſing them rather as ſlaves than ſons; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. For it is not, ſaith Ariſtides, a thing of a ſmall conſideration, what principles are put into them in their youth; but it is τὸ πᾶν, the foundation of all they do hereafter. "And if lovers of horſes, "birds, and dogs, are careful of their education; is "it not juſt," ſaith St Chryſoſtom, "that Chriſtians "ſhould be more careful of the education of their "children?" eſpecially if they conſider, that upon this education depends much their eternal ſtate, and that they will contract the guilt of their eternal ruin, who neglect this duty.

Ibid. [d] Ἐντρέφετε, bring them up in the nurture.] This, ſaith Oecumenius, is the way to make them obedient; and if you furniſh them with ſpirituals, temporal things will follow. "Make them read the "ſcriptures," ſaith Theophylact, "which is the duty "of all Chriſtians; for is it not a ſhame to inſtruct "them in Heathen authors, whence they may learn "bad things, and not to inſtruct them in the oracles "of God?"

Ver. 8. The ſame ſhall he receive of the Lord.] So that though he be not rewarded for the good he doth by his earthly and unbelieving maſter, he will moſt certainly be recompenſed by his Lord Chriſt.

Ver. 9. [e] Εἰδότες, knowing,] 1. That you, with reſpect to God, are ſervants; and that as you mete to your ſervants, he will mete to you. 2. That his compaſſion and readineſs to forgive your treſpaſſes, ſhould make you alſo ready to remit the treſpaſſes of your ſervants. 3. That the relation of ſervants doth not make God leſs ready to ſhew kindneſs to them, and own them as his children; and therefore ſhould not induce us to deſpiſe, and deal ſeverely with them.

Ver. 11. [f] Τὰς μεθοδίας, the wiles;] that is, ſaith Phavorinus, ἐπιβουλὰς, ἐνέδρας, δόλους, the deceits he puts upon us, the ſnares he lays for us, the machinations he contrives againſt us.

Ver. 13. [g] Τὴν παναπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the whole armour of God,] here, and ver. 10. 11. which makes us ſtrong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, conſiſts of ſuch things as either are in us, as truth, faith, righteouſneſs, peace, the hopes of ſalvation; or are to be uſed by us, as prayer, and attendance on the word of God, and not in any immediate influx of the power of God without the uſe of theſe. Yea, this is here ſtyled the whole armour of God, nothing more being requiſite to enable us to come off victors in this combat; ſo that in theſe things doth conſiſt the power of his might, or by theſe it is certainly to be obtained.

That the evil day is the day of trial and perſecution, ſee note on chap. 5. 16.

Ver. 14. [h] Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, with truth.] That the goſpel is throughout the epiſtles emphatically ſtyled the truth, ſee note on Rom. 2. 8. And this ſeems to be the truth here mentioned, viz. a full perſuaſion of the truth of that religion we profeſs, or that ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith by which we are enabled to reſiſt the roaring lion, 1 Pet. 5. 8. 9.; ſee 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. James 1. 6. The breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs is an exact obſervance of our duty to God, and a righteous deportment towards men, in all the offices of juſtice, truth, and charity, which will beget in us that good conſcience, which will ſupport us in the day of temptation, and procure honour and eſteem, love and compaſſion from men. The phraſe is taken from Iſ. 59. 18.

Ver. 15. [i] Ὑποδησάμενοι τὰς πόδας, and your feet ſhod, &c.] For explication of this phraſe, obſerve, 1ſt, That ſhoes were anciently a part of military armour; for in the ſtory of Goliath there is mention of his greaves of braſs upon his legs, 1 Sam. 17. 6. and in the ſtory of the Trojan wars, χαλκοκνημίδες Ἀχαιοί, the Grecians which were ſhod with greaves of braſs, are the armed Grecians. Note, 2dly, That to be ſhod, doth ſignify our being ready for the work we go about. Thus the Iſraelites were commanded to eat the paſſover ſhod, i. e. ready for their journey out of Egypt; and the apoſtles were required to be ſhod with ſandals, that they might be ready to go whither their maſter ſhould be pleaſed to ſend them, Mark 6. 8. The goſpel of peace is either that goſpel which proclaims peace with God through faith in Chriſt, or which lays upon us the higheſt obligations to live peaceably with all men: ſo that the meaning of theſe words ſeems to be this, That ye may be ready for the combat, be ye ſhod with the goſpel of peace; i. e. endeavour after that peaceable and quiet mind the goſpel calls for; be not eaſily provoked or prone to quarrel, but ſhew all gentleneſs, and all long-ſuffering to all men; and this will as certainly preſerve you from many great temptations and perſecutions, as did thoſe ſhoes of braſs the ſoldiers from thoſe ſharp ſticks and gall-traps, which were wont to be laid privily in the ways, to obſtruct the marching of the enemy.

Ver. 16. [k] Τὸν θυρεὸν τῆς πίστεως, the ſhield of faith.] That faith which is the confident expectation of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. 11. 1. for this is the victory over the world, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4.

Ver. 17. [l] Τὴν περικεφαλαίαν τὸ σωτηρίου, the helmet of ſalvation;] i. e. we muſt be well aſſured, that if we fight the good fight of faith, there will be laid up for us an immortal crown of glory, which God the righteous Judge will give us, 2 Tim. 4. 8.; that he who cannot lie, hath promiſed to him that overcometh to eat of the tree of life, Rev. 2. 7.; to taſte the hidden manna, ver. 17.; to be a pillar in the New Jeruſalem, Rev. 3. 12.; that you ſtrive and fight for an incorruptible crown that fadeth not away, 1 Cor. 9. 25. And this hope will be as an helmet to defend your heads from all the ſtrokes of a temptation. This in Iſ. 59. 18. is περικεφαλαία σωτηρίου, the helmet of ſalvation upon the head.

Ver. 19. [m] Λόγος ἐν ἀνοίξει στόματος, that utterance may be given to me.] A door of utterance, Col. 4. 6. This is a Rabbinical phraſe (x), פתחון פה, the opening of the mouth ſignifying an occaſion of ſpeaking, and confidence in ſpeaking: ſo that the apoſtle here requeſts their prayers, that he, being looſed from his bonds, may have again an opportunity of preaching the goſpel, and alſo that he may do it publicly and plainly, μετὰ παῤῥησίας, with due confidence and boldneſs.

Ver. 24. [n] Ἐν ἀφθαρσίᾳ, in ſincerity;] i. e. not only with a ſincere love, uncorrupted by the oppoſite love of any luſt forbidden by him, but with a conſtant and perpetual love, which no temptation can abate, or cauſe to ceaſe, or to wax cold; or as Mr L. without the mixture of thoſe legal obſervations by which the enemy, ſaith St Paul, φθαρῇ, corrupts the minds of Chriſtians from the ſimplicity of the goſpel, 2 Cor. 11. 3. See the note on chap. 1. 2.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to the PHILIPPIANS.

IT is the obſervation of Theodoret, Oecumenius, and others, that Philippi was a city of Macedonia, under the metropolis of Theſſalonica, which is confirmed, note on ver. 1.

This epiſtle is by the ſame Greek ſcholiaſts ſaid to be written by St Paul, when he was in bonds at Rome. That he had been in bonds ſome time before, we may gather from chap. 1. 12. 14.; from the Philippians ſending Epaphroditus to him with relief, and his return to them with this epiſtle after a dangerous ſickneſs; and from his hopes to come quickly to them, chap. 2. 24.; and therefore he is ſuppoſed, by the moſt exact chronologers, to have writ this epiſtle in the eighth year of Nero, and the ſixty-ſecond of our Lord.

That the apoſtle here warns them againſt the Gnoſtics, or that theſe Gnoſtics joined with the Judaizing Chriſtians to perſuade the Gentiles to Judaize, I have not read in any of the ancients; but the Greek ſcholiaſts agree in this, that he warns them againſt τὴν ἐξαπατὴν τῶν ἐξ Ἰουδαίων μὲν πεπιστευκότων, the deceit of the believing Jews, who endeavoured to corrupt them, προφάσει τῆς σκιᾶς τοῦ νόμου, καὶ περιτομῆς, by impoſing on them circumciſion, and the ſhadows of the law, and ſaying, that without theſe they could not be juſtified (a), chap. 3. 18. 19. And this is abundantly confirmed from the whole third chapter, where the apoſtle declares, he judges it for their ſafety to write to them to beware of dogs, of evil workers, and of the conciſion, and by his ſtyling them the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, ver. 18. 19. See note on chap. 3. 2. 3. 15. 16.

And, laſtly, It is noted by Theodoret, and others of the fathers, that Epaphroditus, mentioned in this epiſtle as their meſſenger, chap. 2. 15. and 4. 18. was alſo their biſhop (b), or the perſon ὃς τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν ἐπεσκόπει ἐπεμέλειτο, to whom the care of their ſouls had been committed; though, I confeſs, the words τὸν ἀπόστολον ὑμῶν, your apoſtle, do not prove it.

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

EPISTLE to the PHILIPPIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. [a] PAUL and Timotheus the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus, which are at (Gr. in) Philippi, [b] with the bishops and deacons (there):

2. (I wish) grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3. (And) I (Paul) thank my God upon every remembrance of you (in my prayers),

4. Always in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy,

5. (Which joy I have) for your [c] fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now; (i. e. for your continuance in the faith, and the profession of the gospel);

6. [d] Being confident of this very thing, that he who hath begun a good work (the good work of faith) in (or among) you, will perform it to the day of Jesus Christ:

7. Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, (Gr. τοῦτο φρονεῖν, to have this care for you all, which I shew in my prayers, and my continual remembrance of you, ver. 4.), [e] because I have you in my heart, (or you have me in your heart), inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the gospel, you all are partakers of my grace, (Gr. as those who are all my copartners of grace in my bonds, &c.)

8. (And of this my care for you I can call God to witness); for God is my record, how greatly I long after you all, in the bowels of Jesus Christ, (or the most passionate degree of Christian love.)

9. And this I pray (for you), that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge, and all [f] judgment;

10. That ye may approve (the) things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere, and without offence till the day of Christ;

11. [g] Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are (taught) by Jesus Christ to the glory and praise of God.

12. But (to proceed to my own affairs, about which you have been so solicitous, ver. 7.) I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which have happened to me, (through the malice of my adversaries), have fallen out rather to the furtherance (than the hinderance) of the gospel:

13. So that my bonds in (and for the cause of) Christ are manifest in the palace, and in all other places; (i. e. it is manifest not only in the palace, but throughout all Rome, that I am in bonds for the faith of Christ);

14. [h] And many of the brethren in the Lord waxing confident by my (patience and courage in my) bonds, are (become) much more bold to speak the word (of God) without fear.

15. Some indeed (there are who) preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good-will (and kind affection to me and to the gospel)

16. The

16. The one (party) preach Chriſt of contention, not ſincerely, (not from love to him, but diſaffection towards me), ſuppoſing (by this means) to add affliction to my bonds, (or to bring further tribulation on me now in bonds):

17. But the other (party preach Chriſt out) of love (to him, and me his ſervant), knowing that I am ſet up (or lie in bonds) for the defence of the goſpel.

18. What then? (ſhall this afflict me? no; ſince) notwithſtanding every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Chriſt is (ſtill) preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19. For I know that this ſhall (be ſo far from accompliſhing their end of adding tribulation to my bonds, that it ſhall) turn to my ſalvation (i. e. my deliverance) through your prayers (for me), and the ſupply of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, (enabling me to plead ſo as ſhall tend to my enlargement, ver. 25.),

20. According to my earneſt expectation, and my hope, that (through the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of courage which God hath promiſed, and given to us, 2 Tim. 1. 7.) in nothing I ſhall be aſhamed, but (that) with all boldneſs, as always (hitherto), ſo now alſo [1] Chriſt ſhall be magnified in my body, whether it be by (my) life (now), or by (my) death (hereafter.)

21. For (the motive) to me to live is (the ſervice of) Chriſt, and to die (for him) is (my greateſt) gain.

22. But if (it happen that) I live in the fleſh, this is the fruit of my labour, (Gr. is worth my labour): yet what I ſhall chuſe I know not, (i. e. were it left to my choice, I ſhould be in a ſtrait which of the two conditions to chuſe.)

23. For I am in a ſtrait between (theſe) two, having a deſire [k] to depart, and to be with Chriſt, which is far better (for me than continuing here, were I only to reſpect my own intereſt):

24. Nevertheleſs, (for me) to abide in the fleſh, is more needful for you.

25. And having this confidence (that you will receive this advantage by my abiding in the fleſh), I know that I ſhall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance (in) and joy of faith:

26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jeſus Chriſt for me, by (or through) my coming to you again.

27. Only let (this be your care, that) your converſation be as becometh the goſpel of Chriſt, that whether I come and ſee you, or elſe be abſent, I may hear (a comfortable account) of your affairs, that you ſtand faſt [l] in one ſpirit, with one mind, ſtriving together for the faith of the goſpel;

28. And (being) in nothing terrified by (the threats and perſecutions of) your adverſaries: which is to them an evident token of (your) perdition, (viz. that you are an obſtinate people, bent on your own ruin), but to you (it is a token) of ſalvation, and that of God, (it being righteous with God to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you, but to you reſt, 2 Theſſ. 1. 5.)

29. For unto you it is given (by God as an eſpecial favour) in the behalf of Chriſt, not only to believe in him, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake;

30. Having the ſame conflict (with the enemies of the faith) which you ſaw in me (when I was among you, Acts 16. 23. 1 Theſſ. 2. 2.), and now hear to be in me, (ver. 16.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] NOte, that Timothy is here joined with Paul in the ſalutation, not in the writing this epiſtle; ſee ver. 3.

Ibid. [b] Σὺν ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις, with the biſhops and deacons.] Various are the expoſitions of theſe words, and great are the contentions about the true import of them. For,

1. Some, with the Pſeud-Ambroſius, interpret theſe words thus, Paul and Timothy, the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, with the biſhops and deacons that are with us, to the ſaints in Philippi. But as none of the Greek fathers thought fit to take any notice of this ſtrained expoſition, ſo may the harſhneſs of it appear by comparing it with the like prefaces to ſome of the other epiſtles; v. g. 1 Cor. 1. 1. 2. Paul an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to the church of God that is at Corinth, σὺν πᾶσι τοῖς ἐπικαλουμένοις τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, with all that call upon the name of the Lord; 2 Cor. 1. 1. Paul an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, to the church of God that is at Corinth, σὺν τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖσι τῇ Ἀχαΐᾳ, with all the ſaints that are in all Achaia; are places exactly parallel to theſe words, Paul and Timothy, the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt, to all the ſaints that are in Philippi, with the biſhops and deacons; and yet can any man think that Paul the apoſtle, with all that called upon the name of the Lord Chriſt, or with all the ſaints that were in all Achaia, writ to the church of Corinth, which was part of that Achaia? 2. When the apoſtle takes in thoſe that were with him, as copartners in writing to another church, he doth it thus, Paul an apoſtle, καὶ οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ πάντες ἀδελφοὶ, and all the brethren that are with me, write to the churches of Galatia, Gal. 1. 1. 3. Had he then intended to greet the Philippians in the like manner, he would have writ in the like ſtyle, Paul and Timothy, καὶ οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ ἐπίσκοποι καὶ διάκονοι, and the biſhops and deacons that are with me, to the church in Philippi.

The learned Dr Hammond ſaith, That Philippi was a metropolis which had many biſhops under it, on which account it is ſtyled, πάσης τῆς μητροπόλεως τῆς Μακεδόνων; μακεδονίας πόλις, the chief city of that part of Macedonia, Acts 16. 12. and by Photius, τῆς Μακεδόνων ἐπαρχίας μητρόπολις, the metropolis of the province of the Macedonians. And by this," ſaith he, "it appears that in Philippi there might be more biſhops than one, even "as many as there were cities under that metropolis." But this ſolution was,

1*ſt*, Unknown to the ancient fathers, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, St Jerom, who all contend that biſhops here muſt ſignify preſbyters, "becauſe there could "not be more biſhops than one, properly ſo called, "in one city;" whereas had they known this to have been a metropolis, they muſt have known that this had been a ſatisfactory anſwer to that objection.

2*dly*, They tell us, that Philippi was then under the metropolis of Theſſalonica, which was the metropolis of all Macedonia. Thus Chryſoſtom on theſe words, chap. 4. 16. When I was in Theſſalonica, ye miniſtered to my neceſſity, &c. obſerves, this was a great encomium of the Philippians, that ἐν μητροπόλει καθήμενος παρὰ τῆς μικρᾶς ἐτρέφετο πόλεως, being in the metropolis, he was nouriſhed by a little city. Thus Theodoret (a), in his preface to this epiſtle, ſaith, Φιλιππήσιοι τῆς Μακηδονίας ἦσαν ὑπὸ μητρόπολιν τότε Θεσσαλονίκην, "the Philippians were inhabitants of Macedonia, "under the metropolis of Theſſalonica." And Theophylact, that they were ὑπὸ μητρόπολιν τότε Θεσσαλονίκην τελοῦντες, then, when the apoſtle writ this to them, under the metropolis of Theſſalonica. That Theſſalonica was then the metropolis of Macedonia, is plain from Antipater, the Theſſalonian poet, who flouriſhed in the times of Auguſtus Cæſar, and calleth Theſſalonica the mother of all Macedonia (b). It is called alſo the metropolis of Macedonia by Socrates; and in the eccleſiaſtical ſenſe it is ſo called by Aëtius (c), the biſhop thereof, in the council of Sardica. And ſo ſay all the notitiæ antiquæ at the end of Carolus Paulus, who ſaith that Philippi was no metropolis for the firſt ſix centuries; but after that Macedonia was divided into prima and ſecunda, it came to have the honorary title of the metropolitan city, and therefore might be ſtyled ſo by Photius, who lived in the ninth century: but by St Luke it is not ſtyled the firſt city τῆς ἐπαρχίας, of the province, but τῆς μερίδος, of that part of Macedonia which they that came from Thrace thither touched at; as appears by Dion's deſcription of it (d), and chiefly from Diodorus Siculus (e), who ſaith, ἡ δὲ πόλις αὐτὴ κεῖται κατὰ τῆς Θρᾴκης, that this city, being taken by Philip, was very ſerviceable to him, as lying near Thrace, and other places very conveniently.

3*dly*, The Greek and Latin fathers do with one conſent declare, that τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους οὕτως ἐκάλεσε, the apoſtle here calls their preſbyters their biſhops. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, among the Greeks; and, among the Latins, St Jerom (f), Pſeud-Ambroſius (g), Pelagius, and Primaſius; and that not only for the aforementioned reaſon, that there could be but one biſhop properly ſo called in one city; but for another alledged by them all, that τῶν ἐκοινώνει τοῖς ὀνόμασι, then the names were common to both orders, the biſhops being called preſbyters, and the preſbyters, biſhops. And this, ſaith Theodoret, is manifeſt in this place, becauſe he adds here, "deacons to the biſhops, making no "mention of their preſbyters (h)." The learned Dr Pearſon therefore ſeems δειλίαν τῇ ὑποθέσει, too much to favour his own hypotheſis, when againſt all theſe teſtimonies, both of Greek and Latin fathers, he ſaith, it is not yet proved, that there were then at Philippi any preſbyters of the ſecond order; for ſurely this is proved from the authority of all theſe fathers. He therefore ſaith, 1. That before the converted Jews and Gentiles did unite into one church, there were two biſhops of the ſame church. This he proves from thoſe words of Epiphanius, "Alexandria never had two biſhops at a time, ὡς "ἄλλαι ἐκκλησίαι, as other churches had (i)." But, if I am not much miſtaken, this relates not to the primitive and apoſtolic time, but to the times of the Meletians, who founded biſhops, preſbyters, and deacons, and by them ἐκκλησίας ἰδίας, private churches, calling them churches of the martyrs; whereas thoſe of Peter's party called theirs catholic churches. But though this ſchiſm continued long, and even in the time of Theodoret prevailed in Egypt; and, as Dænæus notes, infected almoſt all Chriſtian regions; yet, ſaith Epiphanius, it never ſo prevailed in Alexandria as in other churches, there being never there two biſhops, one of the Catholic, another of the Meletian churches, as there were in many other places: and if this be the true import of theſe words, it is eaſy to diſcern how impertinent they are to the true expoſition of this place. He adds alſo from the ſame Epiphanius, that Paul and Peter were both apoſtles and biſhops of Rome, as doubtleſs they alſo were at Antioch, and where-ever they met, but they were only biſhops there; becauſe apoſtles there, one of the Jews, the other of the Gentiles, and in this they had no ſucceſſors. St Jerom (k) indeed takes notice of this evaſion, but then he lays the cenſure of contentious perſons upon them that made it.

The ſame learned biſhop adds, that were it true, that there were but one biſhop in one city, it would not follow, that the word biſhops here could not be taken in the proper ſenſe, becauſe the apoſtle doth not here call them biſhops of the church, or city of Philippi, but only ſaith, they were then at Philippi; he might write therefore to them whom he knew to be then at Philippi, though they were biſhops of other churches. But, 1. As none of the ancients have ever ſaid one word of any other biſhops than met at Philippi, ſo the words ſeem not well conſiſtent with this evaſion; for writing τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίπποις, he doubtleſs writes to the ſaints dwelling in Philippi; writing therefore to them with the biſhops and deacons, he muſt be ſuppoſed to write alſo to the biſhops and deacons dwelling at Philippi.

I therefore acquieſce in the opinion of Theodoret, who ſays that St Paul then wrote to the preſbyters and deacons of that city, becauſe their biſhop Epaphroditus, whom he ſtyles his brother and companion in labour, and fellow-ſoldier, and their apoſtle, was then with him at Rome, chap. 2. 25.; and that he therefore mentions them, becauſe they were ſo inſtrumental in ſending the contributions to him, mentioned chap. 4. 15.

Ver. 5. [c] Κοινωνία.] That fellowſhip; for that κοινωνία here doth not ſignify their liberality towards the propagation of the goſpel, but their communion with the apoſtles in the goſpel, as it doth 1 John 1. 3. 7. I gather, 1. From the phraſe ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, which is emphatically put to ſignify τὸ ἔργον πίστως, the work of faith; as when we are ſaid, καθ' ὑπομονὴν ἔργου ἀγαθοῦ, by patient continuance in the good work to ſeek for glory, Rom. 2. 7.; that being the work of God, that we ſhould believe in his Son, John 6. 29. 2. From the phraſe, He that hath begun the good work in you, will perform it to the day of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that being ſtill uſed by the apoſtle to teſtify his hopes, that they would continue ſtedfaſt in faith and obedience, till they received their crown, 1 Cor. 1. 8. 1 Theſſ. 3. 13. and 5. 23.

Ver. 6. [d] Πεποιθὼς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, Being confident, &c.] This the apoſtle ſpeaks, not out of any opinion of the election of all the Philippians to eternal life, or of the certainty of their perſeverance to the end by virtue of that election; for then why doth he exhort them to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling, chap. 2. 12.; to ſtand faſt in the Lord, chap. 4. 1.; and to retain the word of life, that he might have joy in the day of Chriſt, that he had not run in vain, or laboured in vain among them, chap. 2. 16.? He ſpeaks this therefore from a judgment of charity, ἀπὸ τῶν παρελθόντων πρὸς τὰ μελλόντα τοπαζόμενος, "conjecturing," ſaith Theophylact, "from "what was paſt, what they would be for the future;" becauſe, ſaith he, it ſeems juſt or fit for me to conceive this good hope of you, by reaſon of that great affection you retain to me, and your patience in enduring the like afflictions: now, he that only gives theſe reaſons of his confidence, gives us juſt reaſons to conceive, he knew nothing of the neceſſity of their perſeverance by virtue of any abſolute election to ſalvation.

Ver. 7. [e] i. e. Becauſe you have had your hearts upon me in my bonds, ſending Epaphroditus to miniſter to me in my neceſſities, chap. 2. 25. and contributing of your own ſubſtance to me, chap. 4. 14. ſending once and again to me, whilſt I was in bonds, for the defence of the faith, ver. 15. 16. thoſe things, which being a ſweet ſavour, a ſacrifice acceptable and well-pleaſing to God, ver. 18. confirm my hope concerning you; eſpecially when I find you yet ſtanding firm under the like afflictions, having the ſame conflict which you ſaw in me, when I was among you, Acts 16. and now hear to be in me, chap. 1. 30.

Ver. 9. [f] Ἐν πάσῃ αἰσθήσει.] The outward ſenſes being the inſtruments by which we diſcern and diſtinguiſh material objects; the word αἴσθησις, which is here rendered judgment, is from them derived to the mind, diſcerning and paſſing judgment on ſpiritual things; and is by Phavorinus ſtyled ἡ νοῦς γεῦσις ἀκριβὴς τῶν διακρινομένων, the exact taſte of things that differ, or are to be diſcerned by the mind: in which ſenſe the word is often uſed by the Seventy, eſpecially in the book of Proverbs, where it is twenty times ſo uſed; and hence it bears the like ſenſe in the apoſtle; and they who have this exactneſs of judgment, are ſaid to have αἰσθητήρια, ſenſes exerciſed, to diſcern betwixt good and evil, Heb. 5. 14.

Ver. 10. [g] Ἵνα ἦτε εἰλικρινεῖς, καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι.] Εἰλικρινεῖς πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, ἀπρόσκοποι καὶ ἄνεγκτοι, ſincere in their deportment towards God, inoffenſive in their behaviour towards men.

Ver. 11. [h] For all that Chriſt does as a prop[illegible] from God, or as aſſuming the perſon [illegible] Mediator, muſt refer ultimately to the glory of the Father, chap. 2. 11.

Ver. 14. — 18. [i] For explication of theſe four verſes, let it be noted in the general, that they who preached Chriſt ἐξ ἐριθείας, out of contention, did not preach Chriſt, or the goſpel in truth, and out of love to it, ver. 17. 18. but only in pretence, or

upon this occaſion, from ſtrife and envy againſt St Paul, being grieved that he had free liberty of preaching Chriſt to all that came to him for two years, Acts 28. 30. and alſo that they did not acknowledge St Paul to be ſet up, or by God appointed for the defence and propagation of the goſpel. Whence it appears, that they could not be perſons who only did contend with St Paul for the glory of being the moſt diligent and ſucceſsful promoters of the goſpel; or as ſuch, envying the apoſtle's glory, ſet up for themſelves, boaſting as if they were the only publiſhers of the goſpel. But yet it is difficult to aſſign the perſons here intended by St Paul. Oecumenius and Theophylact ſay, they were the unbelieving Jews, who by divulging every where about Rome, what was the doctrine of Chriſtianity which Paul preached, how oppoſite it was to the Roman gods and their worſhip, what tumults it had cauſed, how many it had turned from their old religion to the faith of Chriſt, and who he was in whom the Chriſtians did believe, thought to enrage the emperor againſt St Paul, the great promoter of this doctrine. And in this, ſay they, might St Paul rejoice, as giving occaſion to others to inquire into the Chriſtian faith, and ſo to come unto it; for, ſaith Tertullian, "deſinunt odiſſe quod deſinunt ignorare;" "when they once know, they ceaſe to hate it:" but ſuch cannot be ſaid to preach Chriſt without an intolerable catachreſis; nor can St Paul be ſuppoſed to rejoice in ſuch a repreſentation of the Chriſtian faith, as they made. Others therefore ſay, with a greater likelihood, theſe were the Judaizing Chriſtians, who, with the goſpel, taught the obſervation of the law; for from theſe aroſe ἔριδες καὶ διχοστασίαι, ſtrife and diſſenſions, 1 Cor. 1. 11. and 3. 3.; zeal, animoſities, and contentions, 2 Cor. 12. 20. and that on the account of this apoſtle, whom they would ſcarce own as an apoſtle of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 7. 2. but rather looked upon as one that walked according to the fleſh, chap. 10. 2. and would have excluded him from the churches, Gal. 4. 16. 17.: and yet at their preaching Chriſt, though not ſincerely, the apoſtle may be ſuppoſed to rejoice, becauſe he knew the time was near when the hay and ſtubble they built on the foundation, ſhould be revealed, and the deſtruction of the temple and city of Jeruſalem would ſufficiently confute their vain additions to the faith.

Ver. 20. [1] Ἐν τῷ σώματί μου, Chriſt ſhall be magnified by me in my body.] For if I live in the body, the power of Chriſt will be magnified in delivering me out of ſo great danger: but if I be put to death for his ſake, that power will be magnified, which enables me ſo chearfully to die for the faith, as I am ready to do.

Ver. 22. Οὐ γνωρίζω, I know not.] Ἄπαξ λεγόμενον ἐν τούτῳ τῷ σημαινομένῳ.] This γνωρίζω, ſaith J. Gregory, is but once uſed in this ſenſe; which is true, if he confines this to the New Teſtament. But Phavorinus mentions another Gregory, who uſed it in this ſenſe; and Conſtantine ſays it occurs thus in Iſocrates and Lucian.

Ver. 23. [k] Πολλῷ μᾶλλον κρεῖσσον, to depart, and to be with Chriſt, which is much better.] "Becauſe," ſaith Crellius, "the time betwixt death and the reſurrection is not to be reckoned; therefore the apoſtle might ſpeak thus, though the ſoul hath no ſenſe of any thing after death." But could St Paul think a ſtate of inſenſibility much better than a life tending ſo much, as his did, to the glory of God, to the propagation of the goſpel, and the furtherance of the joy of Chriſtians? Could he call ſuch an inſenſate ſtate, a being with Chriſt, and a walking by ſight, in oppoſition to the life of faith? 2 Cor. 5. 7. 8. Others ſay, the apoſtle ſpeaketh thus, becauſe he expected that the general reſurrection, and the day of judgment, ſhould be in his time: but the words will not bear this ſenſe; for the apoſtle ſaith, he is in a conſtraint betwixt theſe two, whether he ſhould chuſe that life which would enable him to gain many to Chriſt, and miniſter greatly to the neceſſities of his church, or that which would cauſe him to live with Chriſt, viz. as to his better part, i. e. whether his body and ſoul ſhould be diſſolved, or he ſhould ſtill live in the fleſh? Now, it is impoſſible that the ſame man, at the ſame time, ſhould expect the reſurrection and the day of judgment, and yet expect to live in the fleſh, and to abide with the church in the fleſh, when none of the members of the church ſhould abide in the fleſh, but ſhould enjoy that reſurrection, which would place them with Chriſt, as well as himſelf; that he ſhould deſire his ſoul ſhould be diſſolved, or ſeparated from the body, that he might be preſent with the Lord, and yet at the ſame time expect that day, when he ſhould be clothed upon with his celeſtial body. Moreover, he himſelf informs us, that the apoſtles expected only the reſurrection, when other Chriſtians ſhould ariſe at the great day; for thus he ſpeaks, He that raiſed up the Lord Jeſus from the dead, will raiſe us alſo by him, and will preſent us with you, 2 Cor. 4. 14. And this confutes their gloſs, who ſay the apoſtle expected to be with Chriſt, as an eſpecial privilege belonging to him as an apoſtle, or a martyr for Chriſt; ſee the note on 2 Cor. 5. 8.

Ver. 27. [l] In one ſpirit, with one mind.] That is, with love and concord, ſaith Oecumenius; ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 10. 11. or with full conſent: ſo ψυχῇ μιᾷ, 1 Chron. 12. 38. So in Irenæus, l. 1. c. 3. to act

συμφώνους, with one accord and consent, is to act as having μίαν ψυχὴν, καὶ τὴν αὐτὴν καρδίαν, καὶ ἓν στόμα, one soul, heart, and mouth.

Ver. 29. To you it is given not only to believe in him, but also to suffer for his name.] Where note, 1. That to suffer for Christ's sake, is χάρις, grace and favour, ver. 7. It is a gift which is matter of great joy, Matth. 5. 12. Rom. 5. 13. Jam. 1. 2. 2. That they who from these words, to you it is given to believe, infer, that faith is so the gift of God, as that men are purely passive in it, have as much reason to infer, that we suffer for the name of Christ, without the concurrence of our own wills, both being said to be equally given.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. IF there be therefore any consolation (παράκλησις, any force of exhortation) in (beseeching you in the name of) Christ, if (there be) any comfort of (mutual) love, if (there be) any fellowship of the Spirit (of love exciting you to it), if ye have) any bowels and mercies (for me the prisoner of Christ);

2. Fulfil ye my joy (in this), that ye be (all) like-minded, having the same love (one to another), being of one accord, of one mind, (or minding the same thing.)

3. Let nothing be done (among you) through strife (who shall be the greatest), or (through desire of) vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind [a] let each esteem (an) other better than himself.

4. Look not every man on his own things, (or concernments only), but every man also on the things of others, (being concerned for their welfare.)

5. Let this mind be in you (with respect to these matters), which was also in Christ Jesus:

6. Who being [b] in the form of God (when he appeared to the patriarchs), [c] thought it no robbery to be [d] equal with God, (Gr. did not covet to appear as God):

7. But (divesting himself of his former glory) made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the [e] form of a servant, (by ministering to others), and [f] was made in the likeness of man, (Gr. being in the likeness of man):

8. And being found in fashion as an (ordinary) man, he humbled himself (yet more), and became obedient to death, even the death of the cross.

9. Wherefore [g] God also hath highly exalted him (even as to his manhood), and given him a name, (a dignity and majesty) which is above every name (of majesty, Eph. 1. 21. Heb. 1. 4.):

10. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, (humbly acknowledging his authority, even those) of things in heaven (i. e. the holy angels), and things in earth, (i. e. men), and things under the earth, (the dead, who being raised by him, shall acknowledge his power; for to them the apostle doth apply these very words of the prophet Isaiah, Rom. 14. 11. 12. Rev. 5. 13. Is. 45. 23.);

11. And that every tongue (i. e. men of all nations and languages, Rev. 7. 13) should confess, that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

12. Wherefore, my beloved, (remembering the dignity of Christ, and your subjection to him), as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, (when you had me to be your monitor), but now much more in my [h] absence, (which God by the workings of his Holy Spirit supplies); work out your own salvation with fear and trembling.

13. For it is God who (in my absence, by his inward teachings) worketh in you both to will and to do of his own good pleasure.

14. (And) do all things without murmurings, and disputings; (i. e. obey the precepts of the Christian faith, and of your spiritual monitors chearfully, and without grudging, and readily, without exacting a reason of every command they lay upon you):

15. That ye may be blameless and harmless, (as becomes) the sons of God, (being) without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world:

16. Holding forth (ἐπέχοντες, holding fast) the word of life, (under all persecutions and temptations); that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither laboured in vain.

17. And as for me a prisoner, if I not only should continue absent from, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ.] But if I be (also) [i] offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, (i. e. that I may present you Gentiles an acceptable sacrifice to God through faith, and the sanctification of the Holy Spirit, Rom. 15. 16.), I joy and rejoice with you all, (I count these sufferings the matter, not of my sorrow, but my joy.)

18. (And if this come to pass), for the same cause (or in the like manner) also do ye joy and rejoice with me.

19. But (though I speak this) I trust in the Lord Jesus, (that he will work such a deliverance for me, chap. 1. 19. 25.; as that not needing him so much here, I may be able) to send Timotheus shortly to you, that (whatever be my condition here) I also may (or I may yet) be of good comfort, when I know your state, (i. e. your stedfastness in the faith, and your charity to one another.)

20. (To send Timothy, I say;) for I have no man (with me) like-minded, who will (so) naturally (and with like affection) care for your estate.

21. For

21. For all (here) ſeek their own (intereſts and ſafety, and) not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt's; (that is, comparatively to Timothy and Epaphroditus, mentioned ver. 25.; for I find others too generally more concerned for their own ſafety than for advancing the kingdom of Chriſt with the hazard of their own lives and fortunes.)

22. But ye know the proof (ye have had experience) of him, that as a ſon with the father, he hath ſerved with me in the goſpel; (yielding honour and obedience to me, and with the like ſpirit labouring to promote the affairs of the goſpel.)

23. Him therefore I hope to ſend (to you) preſently, ſo ſoon as I ſhall ſee how it will go with me, (i. e. what will be the iſſue of my bonds.)

24. But I truſt (or I truſt alſo) in the Lord, that I alſo myſelf (being ſet at liberty) ſhall come ſhortly (to you.)

25. Yet (being not hitherto able to come myſelf, or to ſend Timothy) I ſuppoſed it neceſſary to ſend to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-ſoldier, but your [a] meſſenger, and he that miniſtered to my wants.

[a] 26. For he longed after you all, (i. e. deſired much to ſee you), and was full of heavineſs, becauſe that ye had heard that he had been ſick, (as knowing your affection to him would render you full of ſorrow upon his account.)

27. [b] For (and) indeed he was ſick nigh unto death: but God had mercy upon him; and not on him only, but on me alſo, leſt (by his death) I ſhould have ſorrow upon ſorrow.

28. I ſent him therefore the more carefully, that when you ſee him again (recovered), ye may rejoice (on the account of it), and that I may be the leſs ſorrowful, (finding your ſorrow for him turned into joy.)

29. Receive him therefore in the Lord (and for his ſake) with great gladneſs, and hold ſuch (as ſtand thus affected to his ſervice) in reputation.

30. Becauſe for the work of Chriſt (i. e. the promotion of his goſpel, and the miniſtration to me the priſoner of the Lord) he was nigh unto death, [c] not regarding (but freely hazarding) his (own) life to ſupply your lack of ſervice towards me.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 3. [a] LET each eſteem, &c.] This refers not to judgment, it being not in our power always thus to eſteem of others, but to practice; as if he ſhould have ſaid, Be as ready to aſſiſt and help others, as if you were their ſubjects and inferiors; ſo the example of Chriſt requires, and ſo the precept runs, That he who is the greateſt, ſhould be a ſervant to others.

Ver. 6. [b] Ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ, In the form of God.] By this expreſſion moſt interpreters do underſtand, that the apoſtle doth intend Chriſt was eſſentially and truly God; but though this be a certain truth, yet I conceive this cannot be the import of this expreſſion in this place.

1. Becauſe the apoſtle exhorteth his Philippians to humility, after the example of our Lord; now, humility conſiſts not in the change of nature, but of condition; and therefore his exinanition of the form of God, ſeems rather to reſpect our Lord's condition, than his nature.

2. There is no more reaſon to ſay, the form of God ſignifies the eſſence of God, than that the form of a ſervant ſignifies the eſſence of a ſervant; but evident it is, that the form of a ſervant doth not ſignify the eſſence, but the ſtate and the condition of a ſervant, which is a mere relation; nor doth his manumiſſion change his nature, but his ſtate.

3. According to this import of the phraſe, it cannot well be ſhewed how he did empty himſelf, or lay aſide this form; for though, by taking of a body, he concealed, yet could he not be ſaid to empty himſelf of, or lay aſide the Godhead, eſpecially when in that body he gave ſuch numerous and ſignal demonſtrations of divine power and wiſdom, both in his miracles, his doctrine, and knowledge of the hearts of men.

4. This word μορφὴ, form, both in the Old and New Teſtament, doth often ſignify the external ſhape: as when it is ſaid of Belteſhazzar (l), Dan. 5. 6. 10. and of Daniel (m), chap. 7. 28. that their forms were changed: of Nebuchadnezzar, that (n) his form returned to him, Dan. 4. 36.: of Chriſt, that he appeared to two of his diſciples ἐν ἑτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in another form, Mark 16. 12. and that μετεμορφώθη, he was transfigured before three of them, Matth. 17. 2.; but it no where ſeems to ſignify the eſſence of a man, either in the Old or the New Teſtament.

Grotius and the Socinians ſay, that Chriſt is ſaid to be in the form of God, by reaſon of the miracles he wrought on earth, they being indications of the power of God reſiding in him. But this interpretation cannot ſtand. For,

1. Chriſt is here plainly ſaid to have been in the form of God, before he took upon him the form of a ſervant, or the ſimilitude of a man; for as theſe words,

words, Being found in the faſhion of a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient to the death, do ſhew, that he was found in the faſhion of a man before he humbled himſelf to become obedient to the death; ſo, by parity of reaſon, theſe words, Being in the form of God, &c. he emptied himſelf, and took upon him the form of a ſervant, being found in the likeneſs of man, do ſhew that he was firſt in the form of God, before that being found in the likeneſs of man, he took upon him the form of a ſervant.

2. It is plainly here aſſerted that Chriſt emptied himſelf of this form of God at his humiliation; whereas he never laid aſide his power of working miracles, but did continue to exert it to his death.

3. This power of miracles is never in the ſcripture ſtyled the form of God; and were this all that was intended by that phraſe, both Moſes and Elias, and our Lord's apoſtles, might, upon that account, be ſaid to have been in the form of God; ſeeing both Moſes and Elias wrought many miracles on earth, and Chriſt declared concerning his diſciples, that they ſhould work greater miracles than thoſe which he had done, John 14. 12.

I therefore, by this form of God, do underſtand that glorious form in which God on his throne is repreſented; that Majeſty in which he is ſaid to appear in ſcripture, and in which the λόγος, or the Word, did ſhew himſelf of old to Moſes and the patriarchs. For explication of this ſenſe, I ſhall ſhew, 1. How God in the Old Teſtament is repreſented as appearing, ſhewing his form and glory to the ſons of men.

2. That Chriſt did, in this form, appear to Moſes, and the patriarchs of old.

3. That ſince our Lord's aſcenſion he hath been inveſted with this form of God; he hath appeared in it, and hath declared it belongs to him: though, for the time of his humiliation, he was pleaſed to diſpoſe, or put it off. And,

1. The appearance or ſimilitude of God is repreſented in the Old Teſtament in a bright ſhining cloud or light, a flame of fire, or the attendance of an hoſt of angels. Thus in that viſion of the prophet Daniel, The Ancient of days did ſit; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire; a ſtream of fire did iſſue from before him, thouſands of thouſands miniſtered unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtood before him, Dan. 7. 9. 10. Thus God appeared on Mount Sinai, where his preſence was attended with an hoſt of angels, according to that ſaying of the pſalmiſt, The chariots of God are twenty thouſand, even thouſands of angels; and the Lord is among them as in Sinai, Pſal. 68. 18.; where the Targum adds, The word of the Lord deſired to place his majeſty upon it; Jehovah dwelleth only in the heaven of heavens for ever. He appeared there alſo in a bright ſhining cloud, or flame of fire; for the glory abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it ſix days, and the ſight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire, Exod. 24. 16. 17. And ſeeing of theſe majeſtic ſymbols, is to ſee God, ver. 12. to ſee the God of Iſrael, ver. 10.; that is, ſay Onkelos and Jonathan, the glory of God. And when Moſes doth again repeat the decalogue, he adds theſe words, Deut. 5. 22.—24. The Lord ſpake to all your aſſembly in the mount, out of the midſt of the fire of the cloud: and you ſaid, Behold, the Lord God hath ſhewed us his glory, and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire. We have ſeen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth. The word of the Lord our God ſhewed the divine majeſty of his glory, ſaith the Targum of Jonathan; and "we heard "the voice of his word," ſaith Onkelos. And the prophet Habakkuk, in his ſong of God, ſaith thus, His glory covered the heavens, his brightneſs was as the light, and bright beams came out of his ſide, Hab. 3. 3. 4. There he diſcovered Schecantiah, his ſchechinah, i. e. his glorious majeſty, ſaith the Targum. When Jacob had a viſion of angels aſcending and deſcending, he preſently cries out, This is no other than the houſe of God, this is the gate of heaven; ſurely Jehovah is in this place, and I knew it not, Gen. 28. 17. Schechinti Dii, "the glory of the "Lord is here," ſay the Targums. And when God ſhewed himſelf to the people in the cloud, then did the glory or ſimilitude of God appear, as the expreſſion is, Numb. 12. 8. τὴν δόξαν Κυρίου, the glory of the Lord, ſaith the Septuagint; ſo 1 Kings 8. 11. Thus doth the ſcripture repreſent that God who dwelleth in light inacceſſible, before whoſe face the angels do continually ſtand as miniſtering ſpirits. And this alſo is the Rabbinical expoſition of the chabod dii (o), "the glory of the Lord;" that it is, either a ray of divine light, or a guard of angels.

2. That Chriſt was in the form of God, even before he took upon him human nature, will be apparent, if we conſider, that even before he purged our ſins, he was the brightneſs of his Father's glory, light of light, Heb. 1. 3. and in the language of the book of Wiſdom, A pure ſtream flowing from the glory of the Almighty, the brightneſs of the everlaſting light, Wiſd. 7. 25. 26. And that he at the concluſion of his humiliation prays, that God would glorify him with the glory which he had with him before the foundation of the world, John 17. 5. That it was the opinion both of the ancient Jews, and of the Chriſtians from the beginning, that it was the λόγος, or the Meſſiah, who appeared to the patriarchs of old in light and ſplendor, and ſometimes with the attendance of holy angels. And, 3. that we have great evidence of this matter, both in the Old and New Teſtament. In the books of Exodus and Numbers we read, that the children of Iſrael tempted the Lord, ſaying, Is the Lord among us, or not? Exod. 17. 7. Numb. 21. 6. and that the Lord ſent therefore fiery ſerpents among them: but, in 1 Cor. 10. 9. we are informed that they tempted Chriſt, and were deſtroyed of ſerpents. See this reading juſtified, note on 1 Cor. 10. 9. Chriſt therefore, as to his divine nature, was then preſent with, and tempted by them. God alſo ſaith to his people thus, Exod. 23. 20. 23. Behold, I ſend an angel before thee, to keep thee in thy way, and to bring thee to the place which I prepared; beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions, for my name is in him. Now, the ancient Rabbins ſay (p), this was the angel, the Redeemer; or an uncreated angel, in whom was Jehovah. And the words plainly ſeem to intimate this to us, ſeeing the power of remitting ſins, aſcribed here to him, belongeth only to that God againſt whom they were committed. Moreover, when God being incenſed againſt Iſrael for making the golden calf, had threatened to withdraw himſelf, and only ſend an angel before them to drive out the inhabitants of Canaan before them, Exod. 33. 2. this ſeems an evil word to the people, and they mourn becauſe of it, viz. of thoſe words, I will not go up in the midſt of thee; that is, ſay Onkelos and Jonathan, "I will not cauſe שכינתי my glorious "preſence to go up with thee." Nor doth Moſes himſelf reſt in this anſwer, but ſpeaks thus to God, If thy preſence go not with me, carry us not up hence, ver. 15. "If the Schechina go not with us," ſaith Onkelos, ἐὰν μὴ αὐτὸς συ; "If thou thyſelf go not with "us," ſay the Septuagint, R. Salomon, and Eben Ezra: which ſenſe the following words require, For wherein ſhall it be known that I and thy people have found grace in thy ſight, is it not in that thou goeſt with us? ver. 16. Whence it is evident, that they were not contented with the promiſe of a created angel, but required God's preſence to go with them; and that God granted this requeſt, ver. 17. Thus Philo Judeus (q) often informs us, that the angel who went before them, was no created angel, but the Divine Word, or God himſelf: "For," ſaith he, "Moſes prays to God himſelf to be his gover- "nor, in the way that leadeth to himſelf, ſaying, "If thou go not with us, carry us not up hence." And again, "He uſes the Divine Word for a guide; "for ſo ſpeaks the oracle, Behold, I will ſend my "angel before thy face to lead thee in the way," Exod. 23. 20.

3. That after his aſcenſion to the right hand of majeſty and glory, the Lord Chriſt did again reaſſume this form, and appear in this majeſtic ſplendor, is evident from the New Teſtament: thus he appeared to Stephen, who, looking up ſtedfaſtly to heaven, ſaw the glory of God, and the Son of man ſtanding at the right hand of God, Acts 7. 55. Thus he appeared to a perſecuting Saul, in a light from heaven above the brightneſs of the ſun, ſaying to him, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt, Acts 26. 13. Thus, in the viſion of St John, Rev. 1. 14. 16. his eyes were as a flaming fire, and his countenance as the ſun ſhining in its ſtrength. Thus he declared he would appear at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, to puniſh that rebellious people: The Son of Man, ſaith he, will come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels, Matth. 16. 27. Luke 9. 26. 28. And his ſecond advent ſhall be with the ſame tremendous glory; for he ſhall be then revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. 8.

4. Seeing then this ſplendor, and this attendance of holy angels, is repreſented in ſcripture as the ſimilitude, the ſhape, the face, and majeſtic preſence of God; ſeeing it is evident, that, before the incarnation, the λόγος, or divine Word, had this glory, and in it did appear to Moſes and the patriarchs, and that in order to the exerciſe of a regal power over his church; ſeeing it is certain from the New Teſtament, that, after his aſcenſion, he again reaſſumed this form and power, it is highly probable this was the form of God here mentioned; this was the likeneſs to God in which, at his humiliation, he did not covet to appear, but rather choſe to lay it aſide, that ſo he might appear amongſt us, not as the Lord of heaven, attended with an hoſt of angels, or in the dazzling brightneſs of his Father's glory, but in the faſhion of a man.

Ibid. Οὐχ ἁρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ, thought it no robbery to be equal with God.] This Greek phraſe is only to be met with in Plutarch, ſaith Grotius, (though I cannot find it there), and in Heliodorus; in which writer it plainly ſignifies, to covet earneſtly, or look upon a thing as much to be deſired, and ſnatched at. Thus when Cybele went about to al-lure Theagenes to the luſtful embraces of Arſace, finding him out of the temple, in a by-apartment, ſhe did (r) ἁρπαγμα ποιῆν την ξυντυχίαν, i. e. ſhe ſnatched at the occaſion, or looked upon it as a thing deſirable for her purpoſe; and when none of her propoſals or allurements would prevail with Theagenes to gratify the Queen's deſires, ſhe brake forth into this admiration (s), "What averſeneſs from love "is this? A young man in the flower of his age "thruſts from him, or refuſes, a woman like unto "himſelf, and deſirous of him, καὶ ὐκ ἁρπαξαι ἐδὲ "ἔμψυχον ἡγῆται τὸ πρᾶγμα, and does not look upon this "as a great offer, and a thing very deſirable." And when ſhe had found out that his affection to Chariclea was the cauſe of this averſeneſs, ſhe propoſes to Arſace the death of Chariclea, as an expedient to gain his affection, and (t) ἁρπαγμα τὸ ῥηθὲν ἡσθήσεται ὁ Ἀρσάκης, Arſace embraces the motion as a thing very deſirable, or to be coveted. So that ἁρπαγμα ἡγῆσθαι, ſaith Semidius, is, rem optatam perſequi, et ſtudioſiſſime occupare.

Ibid. ὑπάρχων ἴσα Θεῷ.] is to be, or to appear as God, or in the likeneſs of God: ſo the word ἴσα is adverbially uſed frequently in the Septuagint, anſwering to the Hebrew Caph, Job 5. 14. They grope in the noon-day ἴσα νυκτὶ, as in the night; chap. 10. 10. Haſt thou not curdled me ἴσα τυρῷ, as cheeſe? chap. 11. 12. Man is born ἴσα ὄνῳ ἀγρίῳ, like a wild aſs's colt; chap. 13. 12. Your remembrance is ἴσα σποδῷ, like unto aſhes, and ver. 20. he conſumeth ἴσα ἀσκῷ, as a bottle; chap. 15. 16. Man drinketh in iniquity ἴσα πότῳ, as drink; chap. 24. 20. Wickedneſs ſhall be broken ἴσα ξύλῳ, as a tree; chap. 27. 16. He prepareth raiment ἴσα πηλῷ, as the clay; chap. 28. 2. Braſs is molten out of the ſtone, ἴσα λίθῳ, as the ſtone; chap. 29. 14. I put on judgment, ἴσα διπλοΐδι, as a robe; chap. 40. 15. He eateth graſs ἴσα βοσὶν, as an ox; Iſ. 51. 23. Thou haſt laid thy body ἴσα τῇ γῇ, as the earth; Wiſd. 7. 1. I myſelf am a mortal man, ἴσον ἅπασι, like to all men; and the firſt voice I uttered was πασὶν ἴσα κλαίων, weeping, as all others do, ver. 3. So that the ſenſe of theſe words ſeems to me to be this, that though Chriſt in his former appearances ſtill repreſented himſelf in the form and likeneſs of God, yet coming now into the world for the ſalvation of mankind, he did not covet or deſire to appear in that majeſtic ſplendor and authority, but rather choſe to come in the ſimilitude of a man, and in the form of a ſervant. Nor doth this expoſition give any advantage to the Socinians, but equally confute their hereſy, and gives a better anſwer to their arguments than the uſual expoſition can give. For,

1. Hence the pre-exiſtence of Chriſt before his being born of the bleſſed virgin, is proved to a demonſtration.

2. Hence alſo it is evident, that there muſt be two natures in Chriſt; that of the λόγος, which appeared from the beginning to the patriarchs, and that which he received, when as man he was conceived in the virgin's womb.

3. Hence it appears, that this nature in which he appeared before his conception in the virgin's womb muſt be divine: for what other nature could appear in the form of God, and challenge to itſelf the glory, which by the Jews was ſtill eſteemed a certain indication of the divine preſence, and in the New Teſtament is ſtyled the glory of the Father? eſpecially if we conſider, that he who thus appeared hath the incommunicable name JEHOVAH ſo oft aſcribed to him, is ſtyled the Judge of the whole earth, and either challengeth to himſelf the divine attributes and offices, or never doth refuſe them when they are offered to him by men. Moreover, where is the humiliation, or the exinanition here mentioned, in that Chriſt would not be, or appear as God in the world, if, having only an human nature, he could not do ſo without being guilty of the blaſphemy the Jews laid to his charge, that he being a man, made himſelf God? whereas he differed in nothing from an ordinary man, but only in the extraordinary gifts conferred by God upon him. And if his nature was divine, it of neceſſity muſt be eternal, ſince the divine nature can have no beginning of exiſtence.

Ibid. μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, he took upon him the form of a ſervant.] This phraſe cannot import only his taking of the human nature, that being ſufficiently expreſſed by ſaying, that he was made in the likeneſs of man; beſides, he ſtill retains the human nature, but doth not now retain the form of a ſervant, but of the Lord of all things. Nor are we to underſtand by it his outward poverty, which equalled him to ſervants, ſaith the learned Grotius, as having nothing of his own; for that is not the ſtate of a ſervant only, but of a ſon in his minority, and of many unfortunate perſons who were never ſervants. Nor, 3*dly*, muſt we underſtand by it, as the Socinians do, his ſubmiſſion to be uſed as a ſlave or ſervant, by being whipt, and bound, and crucified; for that is the humiliation which he ſuffered after he had taken upon him the form of a ſervant, as thoſe words plainly ſhew, He took upon him the form of a ſervant, and being found in the faſhion of a man, he became obedient to the death. Nor is this proper to a ſervant, but to a malefactor; for a ſervant is not leſs a ſervant when he is not whipped or ſcourged; he therefore may be rather ſaid to have taken upon him the form of a ſervant, by miniſtering to men, and being among them as one that ſerved; for as the buſineſs of a ſervant is to do nothing for himſelf, but for the good of others, and to ſpend himſelf in miniſtering to their advantage, ſo the Son of man came not to be miniſtered unto, but to miniſter, and, at the cloſe of that miniſtry, to give his life a ranſom for many.

Ver. 7. [f] Ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος, and being in the likeneſs of men.] That our Lord had the real nature, and not only the outward ſhape or reſemblance of a man; that he had a body conſiſting of fleſh, blood, and bones; a ſoul and ſpirit; and ſo all the conſtituent parts of a man, the ſcripture plainly teſtifies. Nor doth this phraſe ἐν ὁμοιώματι, in the likeneſs of man, contradict it, it being uſed of a real likeneſs by the participation of the ſame nature as to kind: thus Adam is ſaid to beget a ſon ἐν ὁμοιώματι αὐτῦ, in his own likeneſs, who yet was certainly of the ſame nature with him: and Chriſt is ſaid ὁμοιωθῆναι, to be made like to his brethren, by the participation of the nature of Abraham, and his communion with them in the ſame fleſh and blood, Heb. 2. 14. 16. 17. And it was both proper and elegant for the apoſtle to uſe this expreſſion here, by reaſon of the oppoſition he deſigned to ſhew betwixt Chriſt's former glorious, and his then preſent humble ſtate, he being then ἐν μορφῇ τῦ Θεῦ, in the form of God, now ἐν ὁμοιώματι τῦ ἀνθρώπυ, in the likeneſs of a man.

Ver. 9. [g] Αὐτον ὑπερύψωσι, God hath exalted him.] The fathers on this place adviſe us, εἰς τὴν ἀνθρώπινιν, οὐ δὲ εἰς τὴν θεότητα ταῦτα διανοεῖν, to refer theſe things not to the divine, but to the human nature, the apoſtle not ſpeaking here of the exaltation of the divine nature of Chriſt, by the manifeſtation of his concealed glory and power, but of the exaltation of that nature which had ſuffered; this exaltation being in ſcripture repreſented as the reward of our Lord's ſalutary paſſion; for we ſee him, ſaith the apoſtle, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour, Heb. 2. 9.; and again, the elders about the throne ſay, Worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain to receive power, and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, Rev. 5. 12. and 4. 11. Moreover, St John declares, that this dominion and power was given to the Son of man, becauſe he was ſo, John 5. 17. though it was given to the man Chriſt Jeſus, becauſe the fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in him.

Ver. 11. [h] Εἰς δόξαν, to the glory.] He does not ſay, as the Socinians contend, that Chriſt is exalted to the glory of God the Father, though that be true of the advancement of his human nature; but he ſaith, that being thus exalted, he is to be acknowledged of all tongues and nations as their Lord, to the glory of the Father; nothing more tending to his glory than that all perſons owning Chriſt as their Lord, and yielding obedience to him, ſhould abound in theſe works of righteouſneſs, which are through Jeſus Chriſt to the glory of God the Father, chap. 1. 11. Eph. 1. 12. Moreover, ſeeing the Father thus exalted the humanity of Chriſt, ſince he united the λογος to the human nature, for it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell, what hinders that this exaltation ſhould be ſaid to be to the glory of God the Father, from whom he received even the divine nature?

Ver. 12. [i] Ἐν τῇ ἀπουσίᾳ μυ, in my abſence;] i. e. When I was preſent with you, I by my counſels and exhortations ſtirred you up to deſire, and do what was according to the mind of God; he, in my abſence, is more immediately preſent with you, by the inward motions of his Holy Spirit, to excite you both to will and to do what is well-pleaſing to him. Having therefore now all things adminiſtered more immediately by God, which are requiſite to make you willing and able to perform your duty, it doth more highly concern you to work out your ſalvation. Thus Ignatius ſaith (u), That he being now in chains, and going to Rome to receive the crown of martyrdom, the church of Syria had God inſtead of him to be her paſtor, and that Chriſt alone was Biſhop over her. This ſenſe I gather from theſe words, much more in my abſence; for what other reaſon can be offered of theſe words than that which this interpretation gives?

Hence it is evident, that God worketh in us to will and to do, not by a phyſical operation, which makes it neceſſary for us to will and to do what he would have us do; for why then doth the apoſtle admoniſh his Philippians to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling? for what is more abſurd than to exhort another to do himſelf what God doth for him without his concurrence, or to require him to will what he cannot but will and do, for this reaſon, becauſe another renders it neceſſary for him ſo to will? And what ground of fear can there be, leſt God ſhould fail in his work? That the word ἐνεργῶ doth not require this ſenſe, is evident, becauſe in ſcripture it occurs very often where it muſt be underſtood, not of a phyſical, but only of a moral operation; as when Satan is ſaid ἐνεργῦν, to work in the children of diſobedience, Eph. 2. 2. and of the myſtery of iniquity, that ἐνεργεῖται, it now works, 2 Theſſ. 2. 7. 2*dly*, When it is attributed to thoſe cauſes which produce not their effects by any phyſical, but only by moral operations, as when the word is ſaid to be ἐνεργὴς, powerful, Heb. 4. 12.; The word ὁ ἐνεγῶσι, which effectually works in them that believe, 1 Theſſ. 2. 13.; that faith worketh by love, Gal. 5. 6.; that charity is ἐνεργὴς, effectual, Philem. ver. 6; and of concupiſcence, that ἐνεργεῖτο, it worketh in our members, Rom. 7. 5. 3*dly*, When it is aſcribed to God ſending upon men ἐνεργειαν πλάνης, the efficacy of deceit; for ſurely God worketh no evil phyſically. In a word, did God thus work in us to will and do, the work could no more be aſcribed to us than the motion which was impreſſed on the body of Lazarus, when he came out of the grave, or upon Paul when wrapt up to the third heavens, could be aſcribed to them; and the will would not deſerve that name, as being neither free nor praiſe-worthy. And therefore all the Greek interpreters obſerve, that the apoſtle ſaith, It is God that worketh in us both to will and to do, οὐκ ὡς ἀφαιρῶν τὸ ἀντεξούσιον, not as denying our free-will, or τὴν ἀκουσίως βιαζόμενον, conſtraining the unwilling (x), ἀλλ' ὅτι προθυμίαν ἐυρίσκων, αὔξει ταύτην διὰ τῆς χάριτος, but, becauſe finding a readineſs of mind, he increaſeth it by his grace; and becauſe he works together with thoſe who work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling, τοῖς γὰρ τοιούτοις συνεργεῖ, for with ſuch he co-operates, ſaith Oecumenius.

Ver. 14. Do all things without murmurings, χωρὶς διαλογισμῶν, and diſputings;] that is, ſay the Greek commentators, without murmuring under your ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt, chap. 1. 29. or doubtings, or reaſonings, whether you ſhould continue ſtedfaſt in the faith or not.

Ver. 17. [k] Εἰ σπένδομαι, if I be offered.] The apoſtle here hath an elegant alluſion to the Jewiſh ſacrifices: they were prepared for the altar on which they were to be offered by the Levites and the prieſts, and this was their λειτουργία, ſervice, and there was poured upon the ſacrifice oil or wine, which was the σπονδὴ, or libation; if then, ſaith the apoſtle, whilſt I am thus λειτουργῶν, wholly employed in rendering you Gentiles an acceptable ſacrifice to the Lord, my blood ſhould be the libation to be poured out upon this ſacrifice, I ſhould rejoice even thus to die in your ſervice, and for the confirmation of your faith; ſee Rom. 15. 16.

Ver. 25. [l] Ὑμῶν ἀπόστολον, your apoſtle.] So they were uſually ſtyled who gathered ſacred money, and carried it up to Jeruſalem. And ſo, ſay ſome, he calls Epaphroditus, becauſe he brought the contributions of the Philippians to him at Rome. But the word apoſtle is never uſed in the New Teſtament but either of thoſe who were in the ſtrict ſenſe apoſtles of the Lord, or elſe were eminent miniſters and preachers of the goſpel: thus Titus, and the brother of St Paul, which is the uſual appellation of St Timothy, ſee note on Heb. 13. 23. are ἀπόστολοι, the apoſtles of the churches, 2 Cor. 8. 22. 23. and Andronicus and Junia, who had long preached the goſpel, are ſtyled ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, eminent among the apoſtles of Chriſt. I therefore conclude with Theodoret (y) upon the place, and upon chap. 1. 1. that the epiſcopal care of this church was committed to him: and that this is the import of the word apoſtle here; this being the note of the ſame Theodoret, that formerly τοὺς νῦν καλουμένους ἐπισκόπους, ἀποστόλους ἀνόμαζον, they who are now called biſhops, were ſtyled apoſtles; and Hilary the Deacon ſaying here, Erat enim eorum apoſtolus, ab apoſtolo factus, "He was "conſtituted their apoſtle, i. e. biſhop," by St Paul, who therefore commands them to receive him in the Lord, ver. 28. i. e. for the ſake of the Lord Chriſt, whoſe miniſter he was.

Ver. 27. [m] Note, that here we find Epaphroditus was not recovered by the gift of healing, then frequent in the church, that gift being not exerciſed by them to whom it was imparted at their own pleaſure, but as God was pleaſed by a ſpecial inſtinct and a ſtrong faith to incite them to the exerciſe of it: theſe gifts being therefore given for the ſake of unbelievers, to convince them of the truth of the Chriſtian faith, God thought not fit that it ſhould be ordinarily exerciſed upon believers, leſt it ſhould be looked upon, not as a gift, but as the effect of art or ſkill, or a thing done among them by confederacy.

Ver. 30. [n] Παραβολευσάμενος, not regarding his life,] or, as others read, παραβολευσάμενος, or παραβολησάμενος, hazarding his life; that is, ſay the Greek commentators, εἰς κίνδυνον ἔβριψεν ἑαυτὸν, he brought himſelf in danger of death; not by venturing on the Emperor's diſpleaſure, but by labouring ſo as to contract a dangerous diſeaſe, which he did, ſaith the apoſtle, to ſupply your lack of ſervice towards me, which is not ſo to be underſtood as if he charged them with any want of ſervice or affection to him, ſee chap. 4. 10. but thus, that Epaphroditus did this, being preſent with him, to ſupply that ſervice, which they, being abſent, were not in a capacity to perform. Note alſo, that παραβολευσάμενος is the reading of all the Greek ſcholia, Photius, and Cod. Alex.; and, ſay Heſychius and Phavorinus, is in ſenſe the ſame with παραβολευσάμενος, and ſo it is not certain that there was ever any other reading. And therefore Theodoret on the place ſaith, the apoſtle ſpeaks thus: οὐκ ἐπειδὴ τὴν ἀκουσίως βιάζεται, ἀλλ' ὅτι προθυμίαν ἐυρίσκων αὔξει ταύτην διὰ τῆς χάριτος, not as if God conſtrained the unwilling, but becauſe where he finds a readineſs of mind, he increaſeth it by his grace.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. FInally, (τὸ λοιπὸν, henceforth), my brethren, rejoice in the Lord. To write the ſame things (which I have delivered) to you (by word of mouth), to me is not grievous, but to (for) you [a] it is ſafe.

2. (I therefore exhort you again to) beware of [b] dogs, beware of [c] evil-workers, beware of the [d] conciſion.

3. For we are the (true and ſpiritual) circumciſion, which worſhip God in the ſpirit (of our mind, Eph. 4. 23.), and rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus, and have [e] no confidence in the (circumciſion of the) fleſh, (as if this would commend us to God):

4. Though (were this any proper ground of confidence) I might alſo have confidence in the fleſh (as well as they who boaſt of this: for) if any other man think that he hath whereof he might truſt in the fleſh, I (have) more (reaſon ſo to do):

5. (For I was) [f] circumciſed the eighth day, (the very day preſcribed by the law, Gen. 17. 12.), of the ſtock of Iſrael, (my parents and anceſtors being all of Iſrael), of the tribe of Benjamin, (that tribe which cleaved to Judah, and revolted not with Jeroboam to the worſhip of the calves, 1 Kings 12. 21.), an Hebrew of the Hebrews, (both by nation and language, 2 Cor. 11. 22. Acts 21. 40.); as touching (the obſervance of) the law, a Phariſee, (one of the ſtricteſt ſects of our religion, Acts 26. 5.);

6. Concerning zeal (for the Jewiſh religion, I have ſhewed that above others, in) perſecuting the church (of Chriſt, Acts 22. 3. 4. and 26. 11.); touching the righteouſneſs which is in (and by) the law, (I have lived) blameleſs (as to that, Acts 23. 1.)

7. But what things (of this nature) were (then reputed) gain to me, thoſe I (have) accounted (as) loſs for Chriſt-('s ſake.)

8. Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things (of this world) but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord: for whom I have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Chriſt, (i. e. obtain an intereſt in him, and the bleſſings purchaſed by him),

9. And be found in him, not having my own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, (which cannot juſtify me, but leave me ſtill under the curſe of it, Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 3. 10.), but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, (viz.) [g] the righteouſneſs which is (approved) of God (i. e. the righteouſneſs which is) by faith (in Chriſt):

10. That I may know him (to be the Meſſiah, and the Saviour of the world, which knowledge is neceſſary to life eternal, John 17. 3. 1 Cor. 2. 2.), and the [h] power of his reſurrection, and the [i] fellowſhip of his ſufferings, being made conformable to his death;

11. If by (theſe, or) any (other) means I might attain to the reſurrection of the dead, (promiſed by him to all his faithful ſervants and ſufferers.)

12. [k] (For I can)-not (look upon myſelf) as though I had already attained, (or caught hold of the prize of my high calling, ver. 14. the reſurrection of the dead, ver. 11.), or were already perfect, (i. e. crowned with it): but I follow after (or purſue it), if that I may apprehend (or reach) that (prize) for (the obtaining of) which alſo I am apprehended of Chriſt Jeſus: (for when I fled from him, he caught hold on me, converted me to the faith, that believing in him I might obtain life everlaſting, 1 Tim. 1. 15. 16. εἰ καὶ, if that, or that alſo; ſee note on 1 Tim. 5. 10.)

13. Brethren, I count not myſelf to have apprehended, (i. e. caught hold of the prize): but this one thing I do, forgetting (not looking after) thoſe things which are behind, and reaching forth to thoſe things which are before,

14. I preſs toward the mark, (the goal), for the (obtaining the) prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus.

15. Let us therefore, as many as be [l] perfect, (or thoroughly inſtructed in our Chriſtian duty), be thus minded (as I have told you I am, i. e. ſo as to believe the circumciſion of the Spirit, not that of the fleſh, and the righteouſneſs which is of God by faith, are the things eſpecially to be regarded for the obtaining of this prize): and if in any thing ye be otherwiſe minded, (imagining the Judaical performances may alſo commend you to God), God ſhall (in due time) reveal even this unto you; (i. e. he will convince you of the no-neceſſity of theſe things in order to his favour.)

16. Nevertheleſs, (in the mean time), whereto we have already attained, (i. e. as far as we have attained to the knowledge of it), let us walk by the ſame rule, (viz. that circumciſion availeth nothing, but a new creature, Gal. 6. 15. 16.), let us mind the ſame thing.

17. Brethren, be (ye) followers together of me (in this matter, who have renounced all my Jewiſh privileges), and mark them (for your patterns), who walk ſo, as ye have us for an example (of the ſpiritual circumciſion, and of minding the prize of our high calling.)

18. For many (zealots for the law ſo) walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt:

19. [m] Whoſe end is deſtruction, whoſe God is their their belly, and whoſe glory is in their ſhame, who mind earthly things.

20. (Imitate us, I ſay), for [n] our converſation (or our city) is in heaven, from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt;

21. Who ſhall change [o] our vile body, (now ſubject to corruption, paſſions, and ſorrows), that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to ſubdue all things unto himſelf.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἀσφαλὲς, it is ſafe;] viz. becauſe things only delivered by word of mouth may ſlip out of memory: Litera ſcripta manet. Here is St Paul's judgment againſt oral tradition.

Ver. 2. [b] Τὺς κύνας, dogs.] It is the obſervation of the fathers (z), that the name of dogs was anciently given to the Gentiles, as being without the covenant, according to thoſe words of Chriſt, It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and give it to dogs. But with the things the names are now changed, they being now without the covenant, and the believing Gentiles admitted to it, and therefore they are called the children, but the Jews dogs. And it is well noted by Dr Lightfoot (a), that our Lord uſed this language, Matth 15. 26. "not to expreſs his own ſentiments of the Gentiles, but in "compliance with the common language of the "Jews, who proverbially ſaid, the Gentiles are "likened to dogs, whereas we are God's peculiar "people, even his ſons and daughters." Where alſo it is obſerved by the ſame worthy perſon, that even the Talmudiſts ſay of the generation in which the Meſſiah or the Son of David ſhould come, that "the ſynagogues ſhould become ſtews, and the faces "of that generation ſhall be as dogs."

Ibid. [c] Evil-workers;] for they labour only to pull down God's building, and to deſtroy the church of Chriſt. Elſewhere he ſtyles them deceitful workers, 2 Cor. 11. 13. not ſpeaking of the Gnoſtics, as ſome imagine, but of the Jews; for ſo it follows, Are they Hebrews? Are they Iſraelites? So am I, ver. 22.

Ibid. [d] Τὴν κατατομὴν, the conciſion.] For circumciſion being no longer a rite of entering into covenant with God, it is no better than a cutting off the fleſh; and they who ſtill inſiſted on it as a thing neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation, cut themſelves off from Chriſt, Gal. 5. 2. 3.

Ver. 3. [e] No confidence in the fleſh.] That the Jews had a great confidence in the merit of circumciſion, ſee note on Rom. 2. 13.

Ver. 5. [f] Περιτομὴ ὀκταήμερος, circumciſed the eighth day.] The Jews themſelves ſay, that circumciſion before that time was no circumciſion, and after that time it was of leſſer value; ſee Buxtorf. ſynag. Jud. cap. 4. p. 109. And Origen (b) informs us, that "the Jews held that the circumciſion perform-"ed on the eighth day was that which was chiefly "intended, and that the performing it on any other "day was only allowed in caſe of ſickneſs." Hence they thought it neceſſary to circumciſe a child on the ſabbath-day, though all manner of work was forbidden on that day, rather than defer circumciſion a day beyond the time, John 7. 22. and made it a rule, that the reſt of the ſabbath gives place to circumciſion (c). And this opinion, as it agrees with the text, Gen. 17. 12. ſo it ſeems to have obtained long before our Saviour's time; for the Septuagint and the Samaritan verſion read thus, The uncircumciſed male, who is not circumciſed τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὀγδόῃ, the eighth day, ſhall be cut off, he hath broken my covenant, Gen. 17. 14.

Ver. 8. Διὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus.] There hath been a ſharp contention about the import of theſe plain words, ſome contending that the apoſtle here intends the knowledge of the perſon of our Lord, and of his offices, and of the benefits which he hath purchaſed for us in his perſon, and doth convey to us by his offices. And others pleading, that it is the knowledge of the goſpel of Chriſt, which is here intended, and the excellency of it, which is here commended; whereas I think there is no real difference betwixt theſe two opinions: for we know nothing of the perſon and of the offices of Chriſt, or of the benefits which he hath purchaſed for us, and conveys to us by them, but by the revelation of the goſpel; and ſo the excellency of his perſon and offices, and of that goſpel which reveals them to us, muſt be in effect the ſame; nor would the knowledge of the goſpel be ſo excellent, were it not for the revelation of the dignity of his perſon and of his offices, and of the benefits we receive from them.

Ver. 9. [g] Τὴν ἐκ Θεῦ δικαιοσύνην, the righteouſneſs of God.] That the righteouſneſs of God, in St Paul's ſtyle, doth always ſignify the righteouſneſs by faith in Chriſt Jeſus dying for us, ſee note on Rom. 1. 17. And hence it is evident, that the apoſtle cannot here ſpeak of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to us. For, 1. He does not oppoſe to his own righteouſneſs, which is of the law, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him, but his own faith in Chriſt imputed unto him for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 5. 2. He ſpeaks of his faith in Chriſt dying and ſhedding his blood for him; and therefore not of his active obedience, conſtituting us righteous as Chriſt was, but of his paſſive obedience, procuring for us juſtification, or the remiſſion of ſins.

Ver. 10. [h] Καὶ τὴν δύναμιν, &c. the power of his reſurrection;] i. e. the power exerciſed in his reſurrection, by which we are begotten to a lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 4. and are aſſured of our own reſurrection, 2 Cor. 4. 14. Col. 2. 12. this being that knowledge he ſo earneſtly requeſts for his Epheſians, chap. 1. 19. 20. and alſo the power of it, to aſſure us of our juſtification through faith in him, Rom. 4. 24. 25. and of our freedom from condemnation, Rom. 8. 34.

Ibid. [i] Τὴν κοινωνίαν, &c. the fellowſhip of his ſufferings;] by being conformed to his death: 1. Spiritually, by dying unto ſin; as knowing, that if we be thus conformed to him in the likeneſs of his death, we ſhall be like unto him in his reſurrection, and ſhall live with him, Rom. 6. 5. 8. And, 2. By ſuffering and taking up the croſs for his ſake; as knowing, that if we thus ſuffer with him, we ſhall be alſo glorified with him, Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 13.

Ver. 12. 13. 14. [k] Ὡς ἤδη δέδρομως τὰ πάντα λέγει.] He in theſe verſes makes a continual alluſion to the race run in the Olympian games, where he that ran was ſtill ὑπεροδὸν ἐκτενόμενος, upon the ſtretch, and preſſing forwards, without looking back to thoſe whom he had left behind; and purſuing the goal, that firſt coming to it, he might catch hold of the prize, and ſo be crowned with it. And two things are here noted by the fathers, worthy of our obſervation:

1. That if this great apoſtle, who had ſuffered ſo many things, and was in deaths often, and who had laboured ſo abundantly, ὕπω ἐθάρρει περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως ἐκείνης, was not yet confident of a bleſſed reſurrection, but only ſtriving, if ſo be he might attain unto it, ſuch as we muſt have leſs ground of confidence.

2. What continual diligence and labour this purſuit requires: for you know, ſaith Chryſoſtom, with what great ſtretch the purſuer runs, he looks upon no man, he throws out of the way every thing that might hinder him; he employs his body, eye, ſtrength, ſoul, and mind upon the work, πρὸς ἕτερον μὲν οὐδὲν ὁρῶν, πρὸς δὲ τὸ βραβεῖον μόνον, looking to nothing elſe but only to the prize.

Ver. 15. [l] Τέλειοι, perfect.] That to be perfect is to be ſufficiently inſtructed in the true grounds and principles of Chriſtian faith, hath been ſhewed, note on 1 Cor. 2. 6. and on Matth. 19. 21.; and by comparing this paſſage with the diſcourſe of the ſame apoſtle, in his 5th and 6th chapters to the Galatians, we may learn what it is τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι, to walk by the ſame rule: for as there he ſharply inveighs againſt the Galatians for hearkening to the teachers of the neceſſity of circumciſion, ſo here he warns his Philippians to beware of them and their doctrine, from ver. 2. to 7.: as there he oppoſeth to circumciſion the croſs of Chriſt, in which alone he gloried, Gal. 6. 14.; ſo here he oppoſeth to it the fellowſhip of his ſufferings, ver. 8. 9.: as there he ſays he is perſuaded of his Galatians, that οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονήσουσι, they will be no otherwiſe minded, Gal. 5. 10.; ſo here he exhorts his Philippians τοῦτο φρονεῖν, to mind the ſame thing, ver. 16.: as there he teaches them by his own example not to yield to thoſe who urged on them circumciſion, Gal. 2. 14. 20.; ſo here he exhorts the Philippians to walk in this caſe as they had him for an example, ver. 17. which example he had laid before them, ver. 4. 9.: and as there he promiſed mercy and peace τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχήσουσι, to them that walked by the rule or canon he had there laid down, Gal. 6. 15. 16.; ſo here he admoniſheth the Philippians τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι, to walk by the ſame rule. This rule muſt therefore be that which he there lays down, That in Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature. Thoſe who are fully perſuaded of this, he ſtyles the perfect, requiring of them a life exactly conformed to this rule, from others only as far as they had attained to the knowledge of it; informing them that the time was at hand when God, by deſtroying the Jewiſh temple, and diſſolving the Jewiſh church and œconomy, would farther reveal this truth to them, and convince them of the vanity of theſe Judaical performances.

Ver. 19. [m] Ὧν τὸ τέλος, whoſe end is deſtruction.] That the deſcription here given of theſe men agrees well with the manners of the Gnoſtics, cannot be denied; but yet that the apoſtle ſpeaketh not of them, but of the Jews, moſt ancient and modern commentators do aſſert. And there ſeems reaſon to prefer this latter expoſition; 1. Becauſe he ſaith he had told his Philippians often of theſe men: now, ver. 1. he informs them, that he then writ to them of the ſame things which he had before ſpoken to them by word of mouth, viz. that they ſhould beware of thoſe Jews whom he there ſtyles dogs, evil-workers, the conciſion. 2. He oppoſes his own example, ample, who had renounced all his Jewiſh privileges, and the example of thoſe who worſhipped God in the ſpirit, and rejoiced in Chriſt Jeſus, and had no confidence in the fleſh, ver. 3. 17. to the example of theſe men. And, 3. The deſcription he gives of them, is agreeable to what he elſewhere ſaith of the ſame Jews. For,

1. They were enemies to the croſs of Chriſt, that being not only a ſtumbling-block to the unbelieving Jews, 1 Cor. 1. 23. but being alſo overthrown by them who preached up the neceſſity of circumciſion, and of legal obſervations, to ſalvation: from hence, ſaith the apoſtle, it follows, that Chriſt is dead in vain, Gal. 2. 21. and that then the ſcandal of the croſs is ceaſed, Gal. 5. 10. and that Chriſt would profit them nothing who were upon this account circumciſed, Gal. 5. 2. and that they were fallen from grace, ver. 4.; and from the apoſtle's diſcourſe, in the beginning of this chapter, it appears, ſaith Eſthius, that he here ſpeaketh of theſe men.

2. That their end was to be deſtruction, the apoſtle teacheth in theſe words, Such are falſe apoſtles, deceitful workers, whoſe end ſhall be according to their works, 2 Cor. 11. 13. 15.; and this he ſpeaks of them who were Hebrews and Iſraelites, ver. 22. as alſo here, ver. 4.

3. That their god was their belly, i. e. that they chiefly had regard to that, as we learn from the ſame apoſtle, ſaying, Theſe ſerve not the Lord, but their own bellies; which, ſaith Theodoret, he ſpeaks of the evil defenders of the law; ſee note on Rom. 16. 18.; and that they were γαστέρες ἀργοί, ſlow bellies, or luxurious people, Tit. 1. 12.; ſee the note there; and that they devoured thoſe they perverted, 2 Cor. 11. 20. Their glory was in their ſhame; that is, ſay the ancient fathers, in the circumciſion of the ſhameful member; ſay others, in thoſe evil works, ver. 2. which ought to be the matter of their ſhame, they being ſuch as blaſphemed the name of God among the Gentiles, Rom. 2. 24. they minded earthly things, counting gain godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 5. Tit. 1. 11.

Ver. 20. ᵃ Ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς, Our converſation is in heaven.] So Philo (d) repreſents God's prieſts and prophets; for having ſaid of men, οἱ μὲν γῆς, οἱ δὲ οὐρανοῦ, ſome are of the earth, ſome of heaven, he adds, that of the latter ſort are prieſts and prophets, who tranſcending all ſenſual things, would not be called κοσμοπολῖται, citizens of the world, but tranſlating themſelves into the intellectual world, dwell there, ἐγκαρδίους ἀφθάρτων ἀσωμάτων ἰδεῶν πολιτείᾳ, being inrolled in the policy of incorporeal and incorruptible beings. They, ſaith the apoſtle, mind earthly things, and ſo are κοσμοπολῖται, men who have this world for their city; nos autem civitatem cœlum habemus, but we have heaven for our city, as Budæus renders the words, as living in expectation of a city, whoſe builder and maker is God, Heb. 11. 10.

Ver. 21. ᵒ Τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, our vile body.] The body of our humiliation; that is, ſaith Methodius, our body which ταπεινῶται ἀπὸ σφάλματος, is humbled by the fall, and become mortal. "That body," ſaith Irenæus (e), "which is humbled by falling "into the earth, and which ſhall be transformed "from a mortal and corruptible, into an immortal "and incorruptible body."

Note here, 1. What a value is put upon the reſurrection and redemption of the body from corruption, as if it were the chief thing which Chriſtians waited for, and expected from our Saviour at his coming, Rom. 8. 23.

2. Note the divine power in Chriſt, to whom is here aſcribed that reſurrection, which is frequently made an indication of the Godhead, it being God who raiſeth from the dead, Rom. 4. 17. Acts 26. 6. and which is aſcribed to the exceeding greatneſs, and to the energy of his mighty power, Eph. 1. 19. and yet is here aſcribed to the energy of Chriſt. And,

3. Note the pious obſervation of the fathers, that their folly can never be ſufficiently lamented who deprive themſelves of ſuch a glorious reſurrection: So Oecumenius and Theophylact.

Note, 4. That Philo (f) and the Platoniſts ſo call theſe bodies, ὡς ταπεινοῦσιν ἐπάγοντα τῇ ψυχῇ, becauſe theſe earthly tabernacles do humble and depreſs the ſoul. See alſo the reading of the text defended, Examen Millii, ibid.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. THerefore, my brethren, dearly beloved, and longed for, my joy and crown, ſo ſtand faſt in the Lord, my dearly beloved, (as thoſe who do expect his coming to confer theſe bleſſings on you, 1 Cor. 15. 58. or ſo ſtand faſt in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, as I have taught you, Gal. 5. 1.)

2. I beſeech Euodias, and beſeech Syntyche, that they be of the ſame mind ᵖ in (the concerns of) the Lord.

3. And I intreat thee alſo, true [b] yoke-fellow, help thoſe women who laboured with me in the (promotion of the) goſpel, with Clemens alſo, and others my fellow-labourers, [c] whoſe names are written in the book of life.

4. Rejoice in the Lord always, and again, I ſay, rejoice.

5. Let [d] your moderation be known unto all men, (for) [e] the Lord is at hand.

6. Be careful (anxiouſly ſolicitous) for nothing, but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication (Gr. deprecation) with thankſgiving, let your requeſts be made known (i. e. preſented) unto God.

7. And [f] the peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding, ſhall keep your hearts and minds (ſtedfaſt) in Chriſt Jeſus.

8. [g] Finally, brethren, whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, if there be any (thing) praiſe-(worthy), think on theſe things (to do them.)

9. Thoſe things which you have both learned and received, and heard (from me), and ſeen in me, do: and the God of peace (the giver of internal peace) ſhall be with you.

10. But [h] I rejoiced (ἐχάρην δὲ, for this cauſe I rejoiced) in the Lord greatly, that now at the laſt your care of me (i. e. to ſupply my wants) hath flouriſhed again, [i] wherein you were alſo careful, but you lacked opportunity.

11. Not that I ſpeak (this) in reſpect of (any deſire in me, that you, or others, ſhould ſupply my) wants, for I have learned in whatſoever ſtate I am, therewith to be content.

12. I know both how to be abaſed, and I know how to abound; every where, and in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to ſuffer need.

13. [k] I can do all (theſe and other) things (required by Chriſtianity) through Chriſt that ſtrengthens me.

14. (But) notwithſtanding (this my proficiency), ye have done well that ye did (thus) communicate with (me in) my affliction.

15. Now, ye Philippians, know alſo (for our honour), that in the beginning of (my preaching) the goſpel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but you only, (i. e. I have received ſupplies from no other church but yours.)

16. (You indeed kindly did it); for even (when I was) in Theſſalonica, ye ſent once and again to (ſupply) my neceſſities.

17. (And of this I remind you), not that I deſire a (further) gift (for my own benefit), but (becauſe) I deſire fruit that may abound to your account (in the day of the Lord, who will not then forget your labour of love in miniſtering to his ſaints, Heb. 6. 10.)

18. (I ſay, not that I deſire more); for I have (received) all (that can be needful for me), and abound; I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were ſent from you, (which are) an odour of a ſweet ſmell, [l] a ſacrifice acceptable, well-pleaſing to God.

19. But (and) my God ſhall ſupply all your need, according to his riches in glory, (i. e. his glorious riches), by Chriſt Jeſus, (i. e. he ſhall return you a ſupply of your ſpiritual wants for your charity to me in temporals.)

20. Now unto God and (i. e. who is) our Father, be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

21. Salute every ſaint in Chriſt Jeſus. The brethren which are with me greet you.

22. All the ſaints ſalute you, chiefly they that are of Cæſar's houſehold.

23. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, to mind the ſame thing,] here, is not to be of the ſame judgment in all things, for no man can become of the ſame judgment with another by intreaty, but only by conviction: the exhortation therefore is, 1. To have the ſame love to one another, chap. 2. 2.; with the ſame ſoul and ſpirit to promote the goſpel of Chriſt, chap. 1. 27.; to walk by the ſame rule, as far as they have attained to the knowledge of it, chap. 3. 16. 17.

Ver. 3. [b] Σύζυγε, yoke-fellow.] That this yoke-fellow cannot be St Paul's wife, is certain, becauſe he declares himſelf an unmarried man, 1 Cor. 7. 7. i. e. either a virgin or a widower. 2. Becauſe a woman cannot be ſtyled γνήσιε, but γνησία σύζυγε. It is unlikely he ſhould mean Epaphroditus, he being not then at Philippi, but with him at Rome, ver. 11. It may be therefore one of the rulers of the church, whom he ſaluted in the front of this epiſtle.

Ibid. [c] Ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς, whoſe names are written in the book of life.] This is a Judaical phraſe, viz. they are written for life, Iſ. 4. 3.; ſee the Targum there. And they ſhall not be written in the book of eternal life, which is written for the juſt of the houſe of Iſrael, Targum in Ezek. 13. 9. And it doth not ſignify the abſolute election of any to eternal life, but only their preſent right to that inheritance, by virtue of the obedience of faith, Rev. 20. 15. and 21.

21. 7. For, 1. The apoſtle declares of all the Jews to whom he writ, that they were come to the general aſſembly of the firſt-born who were written in heaven, Heb. 12. 23. and yet he in the following verſe ſaith to them, See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh. 2. Chriſt threateneth to ſome, that he would blot their names out of the book of life, Rev. 22. 19. and promiſeth to him that overcometh, that he would not blot his name out of the book of life, Rev. 3. 5.; and God himſelf ſaith to Moſes, Whoſoever hath ſinned againſt me, him will I blot out of the book which I have written, Exod. 32. 32. 33. that is, out of the book of the juſt, ſaith the Targum of Jonathan.

The apoſtolical conſtitutions ſay (g), we come to be written in this book τῇ ἡμετέρᾳ νοήσει καὶ σπουδῇ, by our good affection and induſtry. St Baſil (b), "That as "men are written in this book, when they are con- "verted from vice to virtue, ſo may they be blotted "out of it when they backſlide from virtue to vice;" according to the ſaying of the pſalmiſt, Pſal. 69. 28. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not written with the righteous; that is, ſaith Ainſworth, "Let them be cut off from being any longer "thy people, or regiſtered in the writing of the "houſe of Iſrael." And ſaith St Jerom (i), "They "were written in the book of God, who, in the days "of Antiochus Epiphanes, legem fortiſſime defende- "rant, firmly continued in the law; and they were "blotted out of it qui legis prævaricatores extite- "rant, who were deſerters of it."

Ver. 5. [d] Τὸ ἐπιεικὲς, your moderation.] Your meekneſs and patience under all your trials: Be ye patient, ſaith St James, for the coming of the Lord is at hand, chap. 5. 8. See Heb. 10. 36. 37. This is almoſt the conſtant ſenſe of the Greek word in the Septuagint, where it anſwers to חנן, and סלח, and ſignifies to be gracious and propitious, 1 Sam. 12. 22. Ezra 9. 4. Pſal. 85. 4. Ἐποίησας οἷς ἡμᾶς καλὰ πᾶσαν ἐπιείκειάν σου, thou haſt dealt with us according to all thy goodneſs, and thy great mercy. So Cant. pucror, ver. 18. Let us torture the juſt man, that we may know τὴν ἐπιείκειαν αὐτοῦ, his meekneſs, Wiſd. 2. 19. Thou judgeſt ἐν ἐπιεικίᾳ, with mildneſs, chap. 12. 18. He will yield to your deſires, ἐπιεικῶς καὶ φιλανθρώπως, favourably and kindly, 2 Mac. 9. 27.: ſo the Syriac and Arabic, who render it manſuetudo veſtra. So Phavorinus, ἐπιεικὲς, πρᾶον, καὶ τὸ εἶκον, τὸ ὑποχωρεῖν. And yet that τὸ ἐπιεικὲς is well rendered moderation, is certain; for ἐπιείκεια is rendered by Phavorinus μετριότης, moderation, ἐπιεικῶς by Suidas, and Phavorinus, μετρίως ἤτοι συμμέτρως, moderately, or in meaſure; ἐπιεικὲς and ἐπιεικὲς by Heſychius, and Suidas μετρίως, that is, moderate; and, in the ſame Suidas, ἐπιεικῶς ζῆσθαι is to live moderately, that is, temperately; and ἐπιεικῶς γεγράφθαι, is to be written moderately, without bitterneſs or paſſion.

Now, becauſe this moderation is much talked of, but neither rightly underſtood, nor duly practiſed, I ſhall endeavour to ſhew what is the proper import of the word, and what are the proper objects of it. And,

1. Moderation is not derived from the word medium, but from modus; and that is from the Hebrew madad, he meaſured; or middah, a rule, or meaſure; and, in the Greek, is ſtyled μετριότης, from μέτρον, a meaſure: whence it is evident, that moderation, properly ſo called, and in the moral ſenſe of the word, belongs only to things, in which we are ſubject to a vitious exceſs; or to act beyond that rule or meaſure, which ſcripture, or religion, doth preſcribe for the due regulation of our actions and paſſions; and it reſpects, 1. and principally, the government of our paſſions, whence the due government of them is, by philoſophers, ſtyled μετριοπαθεία, the moderation of our paſſions. Now, they are either our concupiſcible paſſions, that is, paſſions of deſire, and then the moderation required of us, muſt conſiſt in ſuch a government or reſtraint of our affections and deſires, that in our love, deſire of, or our delight in any thing, we never do exceed the worth, or excellency of the object, or of the end we do purſue: or,

2. Our angry paſſions, which render us averſe from things or perſons, or diſpleaſed with them, and then we moderate theſe paſſions, when,

1. We have no averſation from, or hatred to, or diſpleaſure againſt thoſe things which have no real evil in them, and ſo can be no proper objects of our averſation or diſpleaſure: or, 2. When we are not more diſpleaſed at, or grieved for any thing, than reaſon, or the laws of Chriſtianity permit us ſo to be; for then we can never exceed the meaſure of that averſation and diſpleaſure, which reaſon and Chriſtianity allows, and ſo we never ſhould offend in the exertion of our angry paſſions. And, with reſpect to this, the wiſe man ſaith, He that is ſlow to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his ſpirit, than he that taketh a city. 3. This moderation muſt be extended to the effects of theſe paſſions; 1ſt, In the tongue, by evil ſpeeches; whence the good man is ſaid to moderate his words with diſcretion, Pſal. 112. 5. 2dly, In his actions proceeding from thoſe appetites, as in our purſuit of temporal good things, and in our ſtriſe and contentions about them. And, 3dly, In the effects of our angry paſſions, that is, in our deportment to, and our puniſhment of offenders. Now, hence it follows,

(g) L. 8. cap. 1. (b) In Iſ. 4. 3. to. 2. p. 123. (i) On Dan. 12. 5.

1. That

1. That moderation can have only place in things which are not always evil in themſelves, but become ſo, by exceeding that rule and meaſure which is preſcribed for the due management of them. This word muſt therefore be abuſed, and falſely uſed, when it is applied to things which are always evil in themſelves, in what degree ſoever they are done. They therefore abuſe this word, who talk of whoring moderately, or being moderately wicked; for what we neither ought to be or do at all, can never be done moderately, or without exceeding the rule we ought to walk by.

2. Hence it is demonſtratively evident, that moderation is always a virtue, it being always virtuous to reſtrain the exceſſes of our paſſions and appetites, and the exorbitances of our angry paſſions, and to regulate our words and actions, according to the rule and meaſure by which we ought to act.

3. Hence obſerve, that they who render the word ἐπιείκια, here uſed, meekneſs and patience, mildneſs or gentleneſs, mean the ſame thing as they who render it moderation; for meekneſs, gentleneſs, mildneſs, is only the due moderation of our angry paſſions, in reſpect to thoſe injuries and provocations which we meet with in this world. And patience is that virtue, which teacheth us to ſuffer any worldly evil without murmuring, diſcontent, or diſcompoſing our ſpirits; and reſults evidently from a due moderation of our affections to theſe things: and this ſeems clearly to be the import of the word in this text; for, ſaith the apoſtle, ver. 4 though you are ſufferers with me for the ſake of Chriſt, yet rejoice always; and, ver. 6. μὴ μεριμνᾶτε, be not anxious about any temporal concerns, or events: let not either your care for them, or fear of loſing them, diſtract your ſpirits, but let your moderation, as to theſe things, be known unto all men, ver. 5.; for the Lord is at hand, to protect, preſerve, ſupport you, and to reward your patience and reſignation, as to theſe affairs.

4. And whereas, by a late author, this moderation of the paſſions, and of our concerns about things ſuitably to their nature, is commended highly; but, ſaith he, the moderation pleaded for by many, hath no affinity with this virtue; in this he is exceedingly miſtaken; for all the moderation that hath, or can be pleaded for by men of ſenſe and reaſon, is only this, that men would be concerned for things ſuitably to their natures; that as for things indifferent and mutable, they would be indifferent in their concerns about them; neither quarrelling with the church eſtabliſhed, nor refuſing communion with her, becauſe ſhe doth injoin them; nor being ſo ſtiff in the retaining of them, as not to ſuffer mutable things to be changed by the ſame power by which they were at firſt appointed, when the wiſdom of our governors ſhall think this fit for the good of the church, which is the moderation of the church of England (k); and that men would ſet ſuch a true value upon peace, union, and charity, which are great Chriſtian virtues, and very beneficial to the church, as to let indifferent and circumſtantial rites give place to thoſe more neceſſary things, when theſe governors, the proper judges in that caſe, think there is ground of hope, that they may be promoted by a little yielding in thoſe things which do not commend us to God, or by a change of ſome doubtful, and even innocent expreſſions, into expreſſions which remove the doubt, and miniſter no occaſion of offence to the weak.

This, I conceive, is the true import of the word moderation, when it refers to actions and paſſions, words and cenſures, ſubject to a vitious exceſs.

Sometimes the adjective moderate, or adverb moderately, hath reſpect to meaſures either of things dry or liquid; and then it is not a meaſure of things moral, or as they are capable of being good or evil; but as they are more or leſs, great or ſmall, high or low, long or ſhort, or of a middle nature betwixt both; and, in this ſenſe, a man is ſaid to be moderately learned, wiſe, or rich: and hence you may perceive the fallacy they put upon us, who ſay moderation is not always a virtue, becauſe it is no virtue to be moderately learned or wiſe; this being that which logicians call μεταβασις εἰς ἄλλο γένος, or a tranſition from one meaning of the word to another, which always makes the ſyllogiſm to conſiſt of four terms, and therefore the concluſion falſe; for whenſoever moderation is required, or commendable, there the exceſs is always vitious and blame-worthy; whereas it is rather commendable, and an ornament of the mind, to be more than moderately wiſe and learned, and no diſparagement to be more than moderately rich.

Ibid. ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς, the Lord is at hand.] "So "the apoſtle thought," ſaith Grotius upon the place: tacitly inſinuating that they were miſtaken in this matter: but this expoſition, reflecting very injuriouſly upon the authority of the apoſtles, and the ſpirit by which they ſpake; and that of the fathers, ἡ κρίσις ἐγγὺς ἐστιν, the day of judgment is at hand, being found by experience falſe, we of neceſſity muſt have recourſe to ſome other expoſition of their words, when they ſo often tell the Chriſtians to whom they write, That the Lord is at hand; that he ſtands even at the door, James 5. 9.; that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, ver. 8.; that the end of all things is at hand, 1 Pet. 4. 7.; that the day of the Lord is near,

Heb.

Heb. 10. 25.; that it is but a little while, and ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that is coming, will come, and will not tarry. I ſay, we muſt of neceſſity, for expoſition of theſe places, have recourſe to ſome other advent of our Lord: for it is by no means to be granted, that the apoſtles were miſtaken in their apprehenſions of this matter, and that they confidently aſſerted, that the great day of judgment was then at hand; when after ſixteen hundred years it is yet far off; the deſtruction of Antichriſt, the calling of the Jews, and the millennium, ſucceeding theſe great epochas, being to precede that day. For this bold conjecture ſhakes the foundations of the Chriſtian faith; it imputes not only fallibility, but actual falſehood to the writers of theſe epiſtles, and makes them guilty of falſehood in the promiſes of the New Teſtament, and in the motives which they uſed to encourage believers to a Chriſtian patience under the preſſures they endured, and renders them deceivers of their hopes. Let it be therefore noted,

1. That theſe expreſſions are chiefly uſed in the catholic epiſtles, and the epiſtle to the Hebrews; that is, in the epiſtles directed to the Jewiſh churches, who were no ſtrangers to thoſe phraſes, and who were well acquainted with a tremendous advent of the Lord, to puniſh the rebellions and infidelity of that nation. So, for inſtance, Joel 2. 1. All the inhabitants of the land (of Judah) ſhall be confounded, ὅτι πάρεστιν ἡμέρα Κυρίου ὅτι ἐγγύς, becauſe the day of the Lord is at hand, a day of darkneſs and gloominess; a day of clouds and of thick darkneſs. And ver. 11. The day of the Lord is great and very terrible, who can abide it? And ver. 31. The ſun ſhall be turned into darkneſs, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. Zech. 14. 1. 2. Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, and I will gather all nations againſt Jeruſalem to battle. Mal. 3. 2. Who may abide in the day of his coming, and who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? And chap. 4. 1. Behold, the day cometh that ſhall burn as an oven.

2. There is alſo frequent mention of this time and day in the New Teſtament, when the Lord would come to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews, and alſo of the nearneſs of that time; for the Baptiſt calls them to repentance from this very motive, that the axe was then laid to the root of the tree, Matth. 3. 10.; that one was coming whoſe fan was in his hand, ver. 12. Our Saviour ſpends a whole chapter in ſpeaking περὶ ἡμέρας ταύτης, of that day, Matth. 24. 36. and of the coming of the Son of man to the deſtruction of that nation, ver. 27. 37.; of the coming of the Lord, ver. 42.; of the age in which he would thus come, ver. 34.; of the ſigns when his coming was ἐγγύς, near at hand, καὶ ἐπὶ θύραις, at the door, (which are the very words both of St Paul and St James); when there would be a τέλος, an end of all things belonging to the Jewiſh temple and conſtitution, ver. 14. Now, to this coming of the Lord, foretold by his own ſelf in the very expreſſions of the prophets, and in the words uſed here by the apoſtles, in their writings to the Jewiſh converts, we may very well refer the words forecited, and if there be any other of like nature.

And the fitneſs of theſe exhortations to meekneſs and patience, on the account of the nearneſs of this day, and the advent of the Lord to puniſh the unbelieving Jews, will be apparent from this conſideration, That they were the chief perſecutors of thoſe of their own nation who embraced the Chriſtian faith, Rom. 15. 31. 1 Theſſ. 2. 14. And they alſo ſent out their meſſengers to other nations to repreſent the Chriſtians to them as the worſt of men, and to excite them to join with them in the perſecution of them, as Juſtin Martyr doth inform us; and therefore it muſt be very acceptable to the poor perſecuted Chriſtian Jews, to hear that theſe enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, theſe inſtigators of the Heathen to perſecute them, ſhould, by the coming of the Lord to deſtroy their church and nation, be diſabled from doing them any farther miſchief; and alſo that thoſe deceitful workers of the ſame nation, who troubled the churches with preaching the neceſſity of circumciſion, and the obſervation of the law of Moſes, ſhould not be able long to inſtil thoſe doctrines, their church and temple being to be ſhortly ruined, and they themſelves being no longer able to obſerve the law.

Ver. 7. [f] Εἰρήνη Θεοῦ, the peace of God.] As ἀγάπη Θεοῦ, and χάρις Θεοῦ, do generally ſignify the love and favour of God to us; ſo εἰρήνη Θεοῦ, the peace of God, moſt naturally imports the peace and reconciliation which we have with God through faith in Chriſt; for being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God. Hence is the goſpel, which proclaims this pardon and juſtification to believers, ſtyled the goſpel of peace, Eph. 6. 15. the preaching peace by Jeſus Chriſt, Acts 10. 30. Eph. 2. 17. who is our peace, ver. 14.: and in the preface to all the epiſtles, the apoſtle wiſheth to the Chriſtians, χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη, grace and peace through God the Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: and this peace is ſtyled εἰρήνη ψυχῆς, the peace of the ſoul, Hag. 2. 9. So that the ſenſe of theſe words ſeemeth to be this: The ſenſe and experience of the divine favour, and the inward peace and ſecurity which ariſeth from it, ſhall be ſufficient to keep you ſtedfaſt in the faith of Chriſt. He promiſeth not deliverance from calamities, but inward peace and tranquillity of mind under them, and that as the effect of conſtant prayer, and a ſenſe of the divine favour to them.

Ver. 8. [g] Hence two things may be noted; 1. That there there are things naturally honeſt, juſt, lovely, and praiſe-worthy. 2. That there is no virtue, nothing praiſe-worthy, but what falls under the compaſs of this general precept.

Ver. 10. [b] I rejoiced in the Lord;] i. e. in your liberality, not as a thing tending only to ſupply my wants, but as a thing highly acceptable to the Lord, ver. 8. and as a fruit of your affection to him, which he will reward, ver. 17.

Ibid. [i] Ἐνῷ ἐφρονεῖτε ἠκαιρεῖσθε δέ, of which thing you were ſtill mindful, but you wanted ability.] Οὐκ ἴσχυε ἐν χειρὶν, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀφθονίᾳ ἦτε, you had it not in your hands, your were not in a condition to help me; ſo Theodoret, Chryſoſtom, Theophylact; though Oecumenius and Phavorinus render it, with our tranſlation, καιρὸν οὐκ εἴχετε, you lacked opportunity.

Ver. 13. [k] Hence the fathers obſerve three things: 1. That the art of contentment requires much learning, exerciſe, and meditation. 2. That it is as difficult to learn how to be full, as to be hungry, abundance having deſtroyed more than penury, and expoſed them to more pernicious luſts. 3. That our proficience in this, or any other virtue, is to be aſcribed, not to ourſelves, but to the divine aſſiſtance.

Ver. 18. [l] Ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, a ſacrifice acceptable.] There were two altars, ſaith Dr Hammond, in the temple of the Jews, the altar of incenſe within the temple, and that of ſacrifice without in the court; on theſe two were offered all things that were offered to God, and under theſe two heads, an odour of incenſe, and a ſacrifice, are works of charity here repreſented, as being the prime things now under the goſpel to obtain God's favour and acceptation.

THE

EPISTLE to the COLOSSIANS.

THAT St Paul writ this epiſtle to the Coloſſians, when he had not yet ſeen them, is the opinion of moſt of the ancient ſcholiaſts: this is confeſſed even by Theodoret, though he ſaith this doth not follow from the words cited to confirm this opinion, but the contrary. The words are theſe: I would have you know what great ſolicitude I have for you, and for them of Laodicea, and for as many as have not ſeen my face in the fleſh, Col. 2. 1.; which he renders thus; Not for you only, and for them of Laodicea, but alſo for them that have not ſeen my face in the fleſh: but the connective particle being not ἀλλὰ or ἀλλὰ καὶ, but alſo, but only καὶ, and, ſeems to favour our tranſlation, and the opinion of the ancients (a). He adds, that the apoſtle went from Phrygia, of which Coloſſe was the metropolis; whence he collects he muſt have preached there. But this will not follow, ſince the firſt time he only went through Phrygia en paſſant, Acts 16. 6.; and the ſecond time, chap. 18. 23. he only ſtaid to confirm the brethren already converted; but that he came to Coloſſe, is not ſaid. The arguments offered to prove he had not then ſeen them, ſeem ſtronger, as appears not only from the words now cited, but from other expreſſions in the ſame epiſtle; for he intimates, chap. 1. 4. that he had only heard of their faith in Chriſt; and ver. 7. that they had learned the faith, not from him, but Epaphras, whom he ſtyles to them a faithful miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt.

Note alſo, that this epiſtle was writ at the ſame time with that to the Philippians, and ſo A. D. 62.

As for the occaſion of it, Theodoret (b) informs us, that it was writ againſt thoſe Jewiſh Chriſtians who endeavoured to impoſe the obſervation of the law upon the Gentile converts, as is apparent from his caution to them, to beware of them who ſpoiled them after the rudiments of the world, chap. 2. ver. 8. and that becauſe they were circumciſed in Chriſt, ver. 11. and he had blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances which was againſt them, ver. 14.; and from the inference thence made, Let no man judge you therefore in meat, or in drink, or in reſpect of an holy-day, or of the new-moons, or of the ſabbath-days, which are a ſhadow, ver. 16. 17. The reſt ſay, that it was written againſt them who ſowed among them (c) Jewiſh and Heatheniſh doctrines; and in particular againſt them who endeavoured to bring in (d) the worſhip of angels. Of the Gnoſtics here mentioned by Eſthius, they have not one word to ſay.

PARAPHRASE

ON THE

EPISTLE to the COLOSSIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. PAUL an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother,

2. [a] To the ſaints and faithful brethren in Chriſt, which are at Coloſſe, (writeth thus): Grace be unto you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

3. We give thanks to God, [b] and (who is) the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, praying always for you:

4. Since [c] we heard of your faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and of the love which ye have to all the ſaints, (which love is ſtill the fruit of a true faith, 1 Cor. 13. 2. Gal. 5. 6.):

5. (We give thanks, I ſay) for the hope (of an eternal inheritance, 1 Pet. 1. 3.) which is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before (from Epaphras) in the word of the truth of the goſpel (preached by him):

6. Which (goſpel) is come to you, as it is (alſo heard of) [d] in all the world, and bringeth forth fruit (in them), as it doth alſo in you, ſince the day ye (firſt) heard of it, and knew (ἐπέγνωτε, acknowledged) the grace (and favour) of God (to you) in truth (and ſincerity.)

7. As ye (have) alſo learned of Epaphras our dear fellow-ſervant, who is for you a faithful miniſter of Chriſt;

8. Who alſo declared to us your love (to me) in the ſpirit, (your ſpiritual and affectionate love to me, wrought in you by that Spirit whoſe fruit is love.)

9. For this cauſe we alſo, ſince the day we heard of it, (i. e. this your affection to us), do not ceaſe to pray for you, and to deſire (of God) that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will, (advancing) [e] in all (the gifts of) wiſdom and ſpiritual underſtanding:

10. That (having thus attained to the knowledge of the things of God) ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleaſing, (i. e. ſo as to pleaſe him in all things), being fruitful in every good work, and increaſing (ſtill more) in the knowledge of God;

11. (That knowing the hope of your calling, and the riches of the glory of the inheritance of the ſaints, Eph. 1. 19. Rom. 15. 13. ye may be) ſtrengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and long ſuffering with joyfulneſs, (Eph. 3. 16.; i. e. That through the Spirit of glory and power, 1 Pet. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 7. given to you, you may be enabled conſtantly to ſuffer all afflictions you endure for the ſake of Chriſt, and of the glory he hath promiſed, with patience and joy);

12. Giving thanks to the Father, [f] who hath (thus prepared and) made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light, (for which we ſuffer, 2 Theſſ. 1. 5.):

13. Who

13. Who hath delivered us from the [z] power of darkneſs, and hath tranſlated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, (or the Son of his love):

14. In whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveneſs of (our) ſins. (See note on Eph. 1. 7.)

15. [a] Who is the image (and repreſentation to us) of the inviſible God, [b] the firſt-born (or Lord) of every creature:

16. For [c] by him (who is the firſt-born of every creature) were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, viſible (the ſun, moon, and ſtars) and inviſible (the whole hoſt of angels), whether they be (named) thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him (as the cauſe), and for him (as the end of their creation);

17. And he is before all things (as to his being), and by him all things conſiſt.

18. And he is the head of the body, the church, (Gr. of the church, as to government and gracious influences): who is the beginning (of the Chriſtian church), the firſt-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence.

19. [d] For it pleaſed the Father that in him ſhould all fulneſs (of divine power) dwell, (all fulneſs of power to create, redeem, preſerve, and raiſe the church, which is his body);

20. And having made peace through the blood of his croſs, by him to [e] reconcile all things to himſelf, (Gr. and by him to make all things friendly in him, making peace betwixt them by the blood of his croſs); by him, I ſay, (did he thus reconcile all things), whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

21. And you (Gentiles) that were ſometime alienated (from the life of God, Eph. 4. 18.), and enemies in your mind (to him) by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled (to the Father),

22. In the body of his fleſh through death, to preſent you (to the Father) holy and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight, (Eph. 1. 4. and 5. 7.):

23. [f] (If you will be) if you continue in the faith, grounded and ſettled (in it), and be not moved away (by the floods of affliction, or by the blaſts of perſecution, which may come upon you, Matth. 7. 24. 25.) from the hope of the goſpel, (i. e. the hope laid up for you in heaven, ver. 5.), which you have heard (of from Epaphras, viz. the hope), which was preached to every creature under heaven, (i. e. Gentile as well as Jew); whereof I Paul am made a miniſter.

24. Who now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the [g] afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh, for his body's ſake, which is the church:

25. Whereof I am made a miniſter according to the diſpenſation of God, which is given to me for you (Gentiles) to fulfil, πληρῶσαι, fully to preach) the word of God;

26. Even the myſtery (of the calling of the Gentiles to the ſame hopes and privileges with the believing Jews, Eph. 3. 3. 4. 5 6.) which hath been hid from (paſt) ages, and from (former) generations (ver. 5.), but now is made manifeſt (by the apoſtles and prophets) to his ſaints:

27. To whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this myſtery among the Gentiles (Eph. 3. 8. 9); which is Chriſt (preached to, and received) in (i. e. among) you, (as) the hope of glory:

28. Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all (ſpiritual) wiſdom; that (ſo) we may preſent every man perfect (i. e. fully inſtructed; ſee note on Eph. 4. 13.) in Chriſt Jeſus:

29. Whereunto (ὑς ὅ, for which thing) I alſo labour (earneſtly), ſtriving according to his working, who worketh in me mightily, (i. e. according to the mighty power of God aſſiſting me, to confirm the doctrine of Chriſt, by ſigns, and miracles, and mighty deeds, Rom. 15. 19.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 2. [a] TO the ſaints.] See note on 1 Cor. 1. 1. Note alſo, that the Holy Ghoſt is not mentioned in theſe places, becauſe he is the fountain of this grace, and, by him, God the Father and the Son dwell in us, John 14. 23. So that praying for this grace, is praying for the communion of the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 3. Εὐχαριστοῦμεν, we give thanks.] From this and verſe 9. note, That the good ſhepherd ſhould not only feed his flock, but pray continually for them, and give thanks for the ſpiritual bleſſings conferred on them.

Ibid. [b] Καὶ.] As the Hebrew ו hath oft the import of id eſt in the Old Teſtament, ſee Noldius, p. 280. 27.; ſo Matth. 23. 5. Thy King cometh, ſitting upon an aſs, καὶ πῶλον, i. e. a colt, the foal of an aſs; ſee Matth. 11. 2. 71. Luke 19. 30. 35. John 12. 14. 15.: and frequently it ſignifies nempe, "to wit;" ſo that mountain, יהלבנן, to wit, Lebanon, Deut. 3. 26. So Judg. 6. 25. 2 Sam. 20. 14. Jer. 21. 7.; ſo John 12. 23. We ſtone thee for blaſphemy, καὶ ὅτι, to wit, becauſe thou being a man, makeſt thyſelf God; 1 Cor. 15. 24. That with one mouth ye may glorify God, καὶ πατέρα, who is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

ſo Gal. 1. 4. Phil. 4. 20. Col. 2. 2. James 7. 3. 9. As therefore God, who is the God of Iſrael, was the characteriſtic of the true God to the Jewiſh nation; ſo God, who is the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is the characteriſtic of the ſame God to the Chriſtians, who worſhip him under that title, as being the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and in him our Father, we being the ſons of God through faith in him, and deriving all our bleſſings from the Father through him.

Ver. 4. [c] Ἀκούσαντες, Hearing.] From this verſe, and from chap. 2. 1. it is evident, that St Paul did not in perſon preach to the Coloſſians, and indeed that he never had ſeen them, they being converted by Epaphras, chap. 1. 7. 23. and perhaps alſo by the means of Timothy, who therefore is mentioned in the beginning of this epiſtle, as ſaluting them together with Paul.

Ver. 6. [d] Ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ, in all the world.] And which is preached to every creature under heaven, ver. 23. This, by an uſual hyperbole, is to be underſtood of the moſt noted parts of the world, from which the reſt might hear of it. In which ſenſe Cyrus ſaith, that God had given him all the kingdoms of the earth, Ezra 1. 2. And God, ſaith Jeremiah, will call for a ſword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, Jer. 25. 29. i. e. of the whole kingdom of Babylon, and the ſlain of the Lord ſhall be from one end of the earth to the other, over all the kingdoms of the world, ver. 26. And the Romans, Aſiatics, and Egyptians, &c. are ſtyled devout men of every nation under heaven, Acts 2. 5.

Ver. 9. [e] Ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, in all wiſdom.] Among the ſpiritual gifts vouchſafed for the edification of the church, are reckoned the word of wiſdom, and of knowledge, 1 Cor. 12. 8. whereby they were enabled, through the Spirit, to know the things which are given them of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. and to compare ſpiritual things with ſpiritual, ver. 13. For the abundance of theſe gifts vouchſafed to the churches, he ſometimes gives thanks, as 1 Cor. 1. 4. 5. 7. Eph. 1. 3. And, for the increaſe of them, he ſometimes prays, as here, and Eph. 1. 17.

Ver. 10. Περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου, that you may walk worthy of the Lord to all well-pleaſing.] Note here the end of all our Chriſtian knowledge, viz. a converſation fruitful in good works, and a life acceptable and well-pleaſing to God.

Ver. 12. [f] Ἱκανώσαντι ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου τῶν ἁγίων ἐν φωτί, who has made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the ſaints in light.] The other reading, viz. καλέσαντι, who hath called you, for ἱκανώσαντι, who hath made you meet, is contrary to all the old verſions, the Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgar, and all the Greek ſcholiaſts; and therefore not to be admitted as a various lection, but only as the miſtake of ſome copyiſt. Note alſo, that here is an alluſion to the inheritance of the Jews in Canaan, ſtyled the land of their inheritance; for it was divided into ſo many μερίδες, or places meaſured out by line, to be poſſeſſed by the ſeveral tribes, excepting that of Levi, and then by lot aſſigned to every reſpective tribe, Joſh. 13. according to God's commandment, Numb. 26. 55. and 33. 54. And that diviſion which thus came to any of them by lot, was his μερὶς κλήρου, the portion which by lot befel him. But, ſaith the apoſtle, we are made meet, not for an earthly inheritance, as that was in Canaan, but for that heavenly portion God hath allotted us in heaven, the region of light and happineſs, we being already tranſlated into the kingdom of his Son Chriſt, become his ſubjects, and ſo under his care, and conduct, and protection, ruled by his word, which is the word of life; and by his Spirit, the earneſt of this inheritance, and ſhall hereafter be advanced by him into his heavenly kingdom.

Ver. 13. [g] Ἐκ τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους, the power of darkneſs.] That darkneſs ſignifies the ſtate of Heathen ignorance, ſee note on Rom. 12. 2. The power of it is that power which Satan, the prince of darkneſs, had over the Heathen world, to keep them in idolatry and brutiſh luſts, Eph. 2. 2. Hence the apoſtle ſaith, He was ſent unto the Gentiles, to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 17. See Luke 22. 53.

Ver. 14. Τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ.] That theſe words do indeed belong to the text, is evident, not only from Theodoret, Oecumenius, Iren. l. 5. c. 2. p. 395. and the Arabic, but from St Paul himſelf, Eph. 1. 7.

Ver. 15. [h] Εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the image of the inviſible God.] The Socinians contend, that Chriſt is here ſtyled the image of the inviſible God, becauſe he, by his goſpel, hath made known the will of God unto us; in this ſenſe, ſay they, he is ſtyled the image of God, 2 Cor. 4. 3.; and, in this ſenſe, he ſaith to Philip, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father. Schlictingius notes, that he is called the image of God, now that he is in heaven, and ſo not according to any thing appertaining to him which is inviſible, but according to ſomething by which he may be ſeen and known, i. e. ſaith he, as he hath made himſelf known to us in the goſpel.

But the more natural import of the phraſe ſeems to be this, That Chriſt is the image of God, as making him who is inviſible in his eſſence, conſpicuous to us by the divine works he wrought, they being ſuch as plainly ſhewed, that in him dwelt the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily; for an inviſible God can only be ſeen by his effects of power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, by which, ſaith the apoſtle, from the creation creation of the world, the inviſible things of God, to wit, his power and Godhead, have been made known by the things that are made, Rom. 1. 20. He, therefore, who, in the works both of the old and new creation, hath given us ſuch clear declarations of the divine power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, is upon this account as much an image of God as any thing can be. To this ſenſe the image of God here ſeems neceſſarily reſtrained by the connective particle ὅτι; he is the image of God, for by him all things were created. Moreover, that this place is parallel to that in the epiſtle to the Hebrews, the words ſufficiently declare; here he is the image of God, there the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; here he is the firſt born, or Lord of every creature, there the heir of all things; here it is ſaid, that all things were created by him, there, that he made the world; here, that by him all things do conſiſt, and there, that he ſupporteth all things by the word of his power. Now, that there he is ſtyled the image of God's glory, and the character of his perſon, by reaſon of that divine power, wiſdom, and majeſty, which ſhined forth in his actions, Schlictingius is forced to confeſs. It is not therefore to be doubted, that he is here ſtyled the image of God in the ſame ſenſe; and it is highly probable, that he is called the image of the inviſible God, as appearing to the patriarchs, and repreſenting to them that God, who lives in light inacceſſible, to which no mortal eye can approach, according to theſe frequent deſcants of the (a) Ante-Nicene fathers, that "God the Father being inviſible, one whom no "man hath ſeen, or can ſee, he appeared to the "patriarchs by his Son." And that in this ſenſe Chriſt ſaith to Philip, He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the Father, he himſelf intimates, by adding, that the Father abiding in him did the works he performed, John 14. 9. 10. 11. and that they ought to believe he was in the Father, and the Father in him, for the works ſake. And in the epiſtle to the Corinthians, he is plainly ſtyled the image of God, for the like reaſon, viz. becauſe that God, who at firſt created light out of darkneſs, had ſhined upon the Gentiles, to make known to them the glory of God, in the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt. Now, this glory of God is, chap. 3. thoſe miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, by which the goſpel was confirmed, and chap. 4. 7. ἡ ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως τοῦ Θεοῦ, the excellency of the power of God.

Ibid. Πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, the firſt-born of every creature.] Since, ſay the Socinians, the firſt-born is of the order and number of thoſe things of which he is the firſt-born; Chriſt therefore being here ſtyled the firſt-born of every creature, muſt be in the order and of the number of creatures. But this inference is neither conſiſtent with their own principles, nor with the words of the apoſtle. Not with their own principles; for in what rank of creatures will they place Chriſt? If among the old, then they muſt allow him an exiſtence before the beginning of the world, which yet they peremptorily deny; if among the new, they muſt confeſs he had a nature which wanted to be renewed, changed, and reformed; that in him, as well as in us, though in him before us, all old things paſſed away, and all things became new; ſince otherwiſe he cannot be of the order and number of them who underwent this change.

2. This opinion cannot conſiſt with the words of the apoſtle, who ſtyles Chriſt the firſt-born of every creature, becauſe by him all things were created, ὡς ἐστὶ πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα. Now, he who is therefore the firſt-born of the whole creation, becauſe he created all things, cannot himſelf be any part of the creation, either in heaven or earth, or be numbered amongſt his creatures; but only be ſo called becauſe he was πρὸ πάντων, before all things; ſo אני ממך, hani mimecka, is πρωτότοκος ἐγώ σου, 2 Sam. 19. 43. I am before thee. 2*dly*, Chriſt, ſaith our excellent primate, is here ſtyled ὑπερτότοκος, the firſt-born, as being the Lord of all things. For, firſt, it is reaſonable to conceive, that ὁ πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, the firſt-born of every creature, ſhould be the ſame in ſenſe with that of the ſame apoſtle in the parallel place, where he is ſtyled ὁ κληρονόμος πάντων, heir of all things. Now, thus it will ſignify in this ſenſe, according to that of Juſtinian, "To act as an heir is to act as lord; for "the ancients uſed the word heir for a lord." Pro hærede ſe gerere, eſt pro domino gerere; veteres enim hæredes pro dominis appellabant, Inſtitut. l. 2. tit. 19. § 6.

In this ſenſe alſo is the word primogenitus uſed in the ſcriptures; for becauſe the dominion and principality anciently followed the primogeniture, according to thoſe words, He gave the dominion to Joram, ὅτι αὐτὸς ὁ πρωτότοκος, becauſe he was the firſt-born, 2 Chron. 21. 5. it came in common uſe to ſignify that dominion. So of David, ſaith God, I will give him to be Beckor, πρωτότοκον, the firſt-born, high above the kings of the earth; I will give him τῶν βασιλέων ἁπάντων τὴν ἐξουσίαν, power over all kings, ſaith Aquilas (b); I will ſet him ἀνώτατον τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς, the ſupreme over the kings of the earth, ſo

Symmachus,

Symmachus. No, ſaith Mr Clerc, "this doth not "ſignify a lord over other kings, but a moſt excel- "lent and glorious king." But for this we ſhall not acquieſce in his bare word, againſt the opinion of all the ancient commentators on the place; ſeeing the foregoing words, ver. 26. I will ſet his hand in the ſea, and his right hand in the river, are equivalent to theſe, I will give him power over the kings of the Philiſtines on the one hand, ſee 2 Sam. 8. 12. and over the Syrians on the other, ver. 6. He ſhall have, ſaith the Chaldee, Sultanuhi, his empire over the kings of the earth; I will elevate him over them, ſaith the Syriac; and ſo accordingly we find he did, exalting him over the Syrians, who were tributaries to him, 2 Sam. 8. 6. and over all the kings which were ſervants to Hadareſer, 2 Sam. 10. 19. And this was neceſſary to be done, to render him a fit type of that Son of David, who was to be King of kings, and Lord of lords. And thus he is alſo πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, the firſt-born from the dead, ver. 18. as being Lord over the dead; ſince for this cauſe he died, and roſe again, ἵνα κυριεύσῃ, that he might be Lord over the dead, and over the living, Rom. 14. 9. and ſo might be ὁ πᾶσιν πρωτεύων, primas tenens, imperium habens in omnibus, pre-eminent in all things. Since then the firſt-born is naturally the heir, and ſo the lord of the family, and therefore the word heir amongſt the ancients did ſignify lord, ſeeing St Paul, who here ſtyles him the firſt-born, doth in a place parallel to this, ſtyle him the heir of all things; why may we not conceive the perſon of whom David was a type, may be alſo here ſtyled the firſt-born, as being prince over, and high above all creatures, they being all the work of his hands? For ſo the reaſon follows.

Ver. 16. [Ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, all things were created by him that are in heaven, and that are in the earth.] The gloſs of Grotius (c) and the Socinians (d) runs thus: "That "to Chriſt is here aſcribed, not the creation of the "old world, and all things that are in it, but only "the creation, that is, the renovation of all things "under the goſpel-ſtate, or the reformation of "mankind by Jeſus Chriſt, and the goſpel preached "to them, and the reconciliation of angels to "men." But this interpretation is ſo forced, and remote from the moſt uſual ſenſe of the words, and it is ſo flat and mean to ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt was before every new creature, that is to ſay, before the renovation made by himſelf, or rather by his apoſtles after his exaltation, and to prove this by that very renovation, that even Mr Clerc is forced to reject it as evidently falſe; which it will certainly appear to be from theſe conſiderations.

1. That the apoſtle ſpeaks here of the creation of ſuch things as are not capable of this moral creation, viz. the creation πάντων τῶν ὁρατῶν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, of all things viſible upon earth. Now, the τὰ ὁρατὰ, Rom. 1. 20. and τὰ βλεπόμενα, Heb. 11. 31. i. e. the things which are made and ſeen, comprife the whole viſible creation, all things without life, metals, ſtones, elements, all vegetables, and all beaſts And did the goſpel come to make a moral renovation among theſe? did Chriſt and his apoſtles preach to ſtones and trees? 2. Under all things in heaven, and all things inviſible, muſt be compriſed all the good angels, which are therefore elſewhere ſtyled κυριότητες, ἀρχαὶ, καὶ ἐξουσίαι, Eph. 1. 21. and 3. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 22. Now, they cannot be proper ſubjects of this new creation, or moral renovation; for of this new creation the ſcripture never ſpeaks but in relation to an old, which was to be aboliſhed, changed, and done away by it; for in them who are made καινὴ κτίσις, a new creation, all old things are paſt away, and all things are become new in them, 2 Cor. 5. 17. They put off the old man, and put on the new, which is created after God in righteouſneſs and holineſs, Eph. 4. 22. 24. Col. 3. 9. 10. Now, it is manifeſt, that nothing of all this can agree to the good angels, and much leſs to the evil angels, who are ſtill creatures, and therefore not to be excluded from expreſſions ſo general as theſe are.

2. The words in this ſenſe were far from being true when the apoſtle ſpake them; for a very ſmall remnant of the Jews were then converted to the Chriſtian faith, and of the Gentiles few, in compariſon of thoſe multitudes which afterwards embraced the faith; and yet the apoſtle plainly ſpeaks of a creation wholly paſt already, uſing the aoriſt in theſe words, ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, by him have all things been created; and the perfect tenſe in theſe words, δι' αὐτοῦ πάντα ἔκτισται, by him all things were created.

3. Though the Socinians may be able to produce ſome few inſtances where the words κτίσις and κτίζω are to be taken in a moral ſenſe, yet cannot they ſhew one inſtance where the creation of all things in heaven and in earth, viſible and inviſible, is ever uſed in a moral ſenſe, or concerning any other creation than that of which Moſes ſpeaks, ſaying, Thus the heaven and the earth were made, and all the hoſt of them, Gen. 1. 2.

4. The apoſtle afterwards begins his diſcourſe of this moral creation or reconciliation of the world to God by Chriſt, and the renovation of his church, in theſe words, ver. 18. 19. 20. And he is the head of the body, the church, &c. For it pleaſed the Father —by him to reconcile all things to himſelf, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. And you that were ſometimes alienated, and enemies in your minds by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled, in the body of his fleſh by death, to preſent you holy and unblameable, and unreproveable in his ſight, ver. 21. 22. Now, theſe things being thus connected, by the particle γὰρ, to what he had before ſaid of the creation of all things by Chriſt, demonſtratively ſhew that he was not then ſpeaking of that renovation which he begins to ſpeak of in theſe following words.

5. This expoſition of this place, touching a true and proper creation of all things by Jeſus Chriſt, is by the fathers (e), from the beginning, laid down as a rule, to which the orthodox keeping cloſe, might eaſily ſhew, that the heretics who held the world was created by angels, deviated from the truth. Now, this was the hereſy of Simon Magus and Cerinthus (f), as Irenæus there informs us.

Ver. 18. ὁ Πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, the firſt-born from the dead.] Εἰς γὰρ ἀθάνατόν τι καὶ ἀφθαρτὸν ζωὴν ἔκφυγεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων πλὴν τοῦ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, "for none be- "ſides our Saviour ever yet roſe to an immortal "and incorruptible life." Author quæſt. reſpon. ad orthod. quæſt. 85.

Ver. 19. For explication of theſe words, it is to be noted, that the great end of our Saviour's ſufferings was to reſcue our bodies, condemned for ſin unto death, from that mortality, and to beſtow on all whom God ſhall give him, eternal life, by raiſing of their bodies to a ſtate of incorruption: for becauſe the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, and thereby ſubject to mortality, he alſo took part of the ſame, that through death he might deſtroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and might deliver them who through the fear of death were all their lifetime ſubject to bondage, Heb. 2. 14. 15.

That therefore the church, which is his body, is repreſented as the church of the firſt-born inrolled in the heavens, Heb. 12. 23. a church againſt which the gates of hades, or of death, ſhall not prevail, to hinder their enjoyment of this reſurrection to a life of happineſs; they are the ſons of God, and therefore children of the reſurrection, Luke 21. 36. therefore heirs of God, joint heirs with Chriſt, who ſhall be glorified with him, Rom. 8. 17. ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, ver. 21. ſhall have the adoption, viz. the redemption of the body, ver. 23. and they are alſo repreſented as perſons fore-ordained to be conformed to the image of Chriſt, by having their vile bodies changed into the likeneſs of Chriſt's glorious body, ver. 29.

Note, 2. That to this end was Chriſt raiſed, that he, the firſt-born from the dead, might raiſe up his whole body from the dead, he being raiſed from the dead as the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept, 1 Cor. 15. 20.; for to this end Chriſt both died and roſe again, that he might be the Lord both of the dead and of the living, Rom. 14. 9.; and God hath therefore exalted him, that at the name (i. e. the power) of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, of things in heaven, in the earth, and under the earth, Philip. 2. 10. that is, the bodies of the dead; for by this argument, and from theſe very words, the apoſtle proves the reſurrection and a future judgment, Rom. 14. 10. 11. 12. He is therefore ſo the firſt-born of the dead, as to be the Lord of them, according to our former interpretation of the word firſt-born, and as to have power to raiſe them up who ſleep in him, and bring them with him, 1 Theſſ. 4. 14.; to give eternal life unto them, and raiſe them up at the laſt day, John 5. 28. 29. and 17. 2.; and thus hath he the pre-eminence in all things, being Lord of all creatures, dead and living, and giving both their firſt and their new being to them, and rendering his members conformable to his glorious image, that ſo they may be joint heirs with him in glory. And this is the conſtant doctrine of Irenæus, who informs us, "That Chriſt died that "he might be the firſt-born from the dead, and the "prince of life (g): that the death of this juſt man "gave him the principality of things under the "earth, he having before the principality in hea- "venly things; that they who denied the reſurrec- "tion of the fleſh, contradicted the ſalvation of "that for which the whole diſpenſation of the "Son of God was deſigned; that he died, that

Ver. 20. [m] Ἀποκαταλλάξαι, to reconcile.] This word, ſay Heſychius, Suidas, and Phavorinus, ſignifies φιλοποιῆσαι, to make friends, or to reduce perſons to their former amity. This by the fathers (i) is thus explained, that whilſt man continued in his obedience to God, angels and men were in a perfect friendſhip, but when men became diſobedient to their Sovereign Lord, the angels became averſe to them, becauſe their Lord was diſhonoured by them: but God being reconciled to us by the death of his Son, they alſo became friends and miniſtering ſpirits to us, and we became of the ſame church and body with them, under the ſame head Chriſt Jeſus, Heb. 12. 22.; And ſo all things in heaven and earth were gathered into one, Chriſt, Eph. 1. 10.

Ver. 23. [n] Note, hence it follows, that they who have true faith, and juſt ground of hope, may fall away from them.

Ver. 24. [o] Τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the afflictions of Chriſt.] Chriſt having told us, that what was done to his members is done to him, Matth. 25. 40. 45. the afflictions of his members are ſtyled the perſecutions and afflictions of Chriſt, Acts 9. 4. 5. Now, the Jews ſpeak much of the afflictions of Chriſt and his diſciples, comprehending both under the name of חבלי משיח, the afflictions of the Meſſiah (k), dividing them into three parts; of which, ſay they, the fathers, and the preceding generation ſuffered one part; another part was ſuffered by the generation of deſtruction, or by the Jews deſtroyed by Titus; and a third by the generation of the Meſſiah, or by his diſciples. Of theſe afflictions of Chriſt, I, ſaith the apoſtle, have already had a ſhare, and I go on to fill up the reſidue of theſe my ſufferings in the fleſh, which I am to bear in the diſcharge of my miniſtry, for the benefit of his church. And ſuitable to this interpretation is that of Lyranus on the place: " Paſſiones Chriſti dupliciter accipiuntur, uno modo " pro illis quas ſuſtinuit in corpore proprio, et ſic " nihil ibi reſtat ad implendum; alio modo quas " in finem uſque ſeculi patietur in corpore myſtico, " et ſic reſtant multarum paſſionum reliquiæ adim-" plendæ."

Verſe 2. [a] Εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, for ἐν ἐπιγνώσει, in the knowledge.] See the note on the firſt chapter, ver. 20.

Ibid. [b] Τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ, the myſtery of God, even the Father, and of Chriſt;] i. e. the diſpenſation of the divine grace of God, in offering ſalvation to the Gentiles by Chriſt, and conferring on them, equally with the Jews, the bleſſings of the goſpel. This is the myſtery which, ſaith he, in the former ages was hid, but now is manifeſted to the ſaints, to whom God would make known what was the riches of the glory of this myſtery among the Gentiles, which is Chriſt (preached) among you (as) the hope of glory, ver. 26. 27. This, ſaith he, is the myſtery, which from the beginning hath been hid in God, Eph. 3. 9.; the myſtery of God, and of Chriſt, ver. 3. 4. 5.; that the Gentiles ſhould be fellow-heirs (with the believing Jews), and of the ſame body, and partakers (with them) of his promiſes in Chriſt by the goſpel, ver. 6. See alſo Rom. 16. 25. 26. Col. 4. 3. And that the Gentiles might have a perfect knowledge of this myſtery, and of the riches of divine grace, and love to them in it, is the apoſtle's prayer, Eph. 3. 16. 17. 18. 19. But whereas Crellius and Schlictingius here note, that the particle καὶ, and, added to the word Chriſt, diſtinguiſhes him as well from God as from the Father; it doth no ſuch matter, but only diſtinguiſheth the myſtery of the Father, ſending his Son into the world to be a Saviour to the Gentiles, from the myſtery of Chriſt procuring this ſalvation for them by his blood. "The eccleſiaſtical tradition," ſaith Irenæus (l), "teaches us to believe in God the "Father omnipotent, who made heaven and earth, "and in one Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, incarnate "for our ſalvation, our Lord, God, Saviour, and "King." And ſo theſe words may be conſtrued, the myſtery of both the Father and Chriſt. See note on chap. 1. 3.

Ver. 3. [c] Ἐν ᾧ, in whom.] Some make theſe words relate to the myſtery mentioned in the foregoing verſe: but it ſeems rather to reſpect the perſon of Chriſt as Mediator, the knowledge of whom, ſaith the apoſtle, hath an excellency beyond all other knowledge, Philip. 3. 8.; for ἐν ᾧ περιετμήθητε, in whom you are circumciſed, ver. 11. of this chap. 2. and ἐν ᾧ, in whom ye are riſen again, ver. 12. plainly relate to Chriſt's perſon and his performances as Mediator; and the whole following chapter ſpeaketh of him, and of the benefits we have received ἐν αὐτῷ, by him. The apoſtle alſo doth apply this to him, by ſaying, As you have received the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſo walk in him, ver. 8.; and by warning us againſt the deceit of vain philoſophy, becauſe in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead. But yet ſeeing theſe hid treaſures of Chriſt's wiſdom are revealed to us by his goſpel only, and thence alone we obtain all our knowledge of him as Mediator, and of all the offices he ſuſtains as ſuch, there ſeemeth to be no great difference betwixt referring this to his perſon, and referring it to his doctrine.

Ver. 5. [d] Τὴν τάξιν ὑμῶν, your order.] As to walk diſorderly, in the apoſtle's ſtyle, is not to walk according to the traditions they had received from the apoſtles or preachers of the goſpel, 2 Theſſ. 3. 6. ſo their order may import their compliance with them in manners, diſcipline, and union.

Ver. 8. [e] Διὰ τῆς φιλοσοφίας, by philoſophy, &c.] What is the πιθανολογία, the enticing ſpeech, ver. 4. and the philoſophy and vain deceit, which the apoſtle warns them againſt, is not ſo eaſy to determine. Some good interpreters refer what follows in this chapter to the hereſy of Simon Magus and the Gnoſtics, to which many paſſages in this chapter may be well applied. Others refer them to the Jewiſh doctors, who had then mixed the philoſophy of the Heathens with their ceremonial worſhip, and had thence learned to allegorize it; and others divide the matter betwixt Jew and Gentile. And that the Jewiſh doctors are very much concerned in this chapter, we learn from ver. 14. 15. 16. and the rudiments of the world relate to their legal obſervations, as being common to them with the Gentile world. See note on Gal. 4. 8. The commandments of men, or their traditions, may alſo have reſpect to them who were the zealous aſſertors of them, Matth. 15. Acts 21. 21.; and indeed this verſe ſeems to be the key to, or the foundation of all that follows in this chapter, ranking the diſcourſe of the apoſtle under theſe two heads, viz. cautions againſt the ſeductions of the Jews, zealous for the obſervation of their rites and ceremonies, and againſt the ſeductions of Heathens by their vain philoſophy, dreſſed up by them anew, both as to its doctrines and morals, and ſet off with the moſt ſpecious pretences, ſtyled here πιθανολογία, enticing ſpeech.

Ver. 9. [f] Πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος, all the fulneſs of the Godhead.] This fulneſs, according to the Gnoſtics, was made up of their thirty Æones. The Heathens, beſides the ſupreme God, owned many other local gods preſiding over nations, and ſo made up the plenitude of the godhead of them all, as of ſo many partial deities. Againſt ſuch opinions the apoſtle here aſſerts, that the whole fulneſs of the Godhead dwelt in Chriſt, and that bodily, i. e. in his body, as its temple; and, ſay the fathers, as the ſoul dwelleth in the body; ſay others, bodily, that is, eſſentially. The apoſtle doth not roundly ſay, that Chriſt is God, but expreſſes his divine nature thus, partly to repreſent to the Jews the divinity of Chriſt, with alluſion to the God of Iſrael dwelling in the temple; partly to oppoſe him to the πλήρωμα of the Gnoſtics, and to the partial deities of the Heathens. Here therefore it is to be obſerved,

1. That the apoſtle doth not here ſay, that the Divinity is aſſiſtant to Chriſt, but that the fulneſs of it doth κατοικεῖν, reſide in him, which is never ſaid in ſcripture of any other perſon but of him alone, who having ſtyled his body a temple, John 2. 19. 21. the fulneſs of the Deity may be properly ſaid to dwell in him bodily, as it dwelt ſymbolically in the ark.

Note, 2. That Chriſt is not here ſaid to be filled with the fulneſs of God, as the church is, by reaſon of the gifts with which ſhe was repleniſhed, and the doctrine ſhe had received from God, Eph. 1. 23. but the whole fulneſs of the Godhead is here ſaid to reſide in him. Now, θεότης and τὸ θεῖον do never ſignify the gifts of God, or the doctrine of the goſpel, but the divine nature only; nor can the will or revelation of God be ſaid to dwell bodily in any perſon. I conclude therefore, "that the body born of the virgin, "receiving the whole fulneſs of the Godhead bodi-"ly, was immutably united to the Divinity, and "deified, which made the ſame perſon, Jeſus Chriſt, "both God and man (m)."

Ver. 10. [g] Κεφαλὴ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας, the head of all principality and power.] Epiphanius (n) informs us, that Simon Magus deviſed ſome names of principalities and powers, ſaying, "That none could be "ſaved who learned not the ſacred diſcipline, and "how to offer his ſacrifice to the Father of all "things, by theſe principalities and powers." In oppoſition to theſe things, ſay ſome, the apoſtle aſſerts, that Chriſt created all theſe principalities and powers, chap. 1. 15. and was the head and lord of them; and ſo in him, without their aſſiſtance, the Coloſſians were complete, and fully inſtructed to ſalvation.

Or elſe theſe things may be referred to Cerinthus and his followers. For,

1. He lived in the apoſtles times, and was a great oppoſer of the truth of the goſpel, and particularly an enemy to St Paul (o), becauſe he contended it was not neceſſary for the Jews, nor lawful for the Gentiles, to obſerve the law of Moſes, for which Cerinthus was a zealot. And he, ſaith the ſame Epiphanius (p), reproved St Peter for going into the uncircumciſed, and raiſed the tumult in Antioch about circumciſion.

2. He lived long in Egypt (q), and was inſtructed in philoſophical ſciences, and from thence went and ſet up his ſect in Aſia the Leſs, and Syria, ſay Theodoret and Epiphanius (r). Being therefore ſkilled in philoſophy, and ſetting up his hereſy in Aſia Minor, where Coloſſe was, he may well be here reflected on by St Paul, eſpecially if we conſider how much his opinions agreed with thoſe which are here cenſured by him. For,

3. He was zealous for circumciſion, and other obſervances of the law of Moſes, and ſo concerned in what is here ſaid, ver. 11. 14. 15. 16. 17. 2*dly*, He ſaid (s), "the world was made by angels, or inferior "virtues, and not by the ſupreme God; and that "he himſelf received his doctrine by the revelation "of angels." 3*dly*, He held Jeſus to be born of Joſeph and Mary, as other men, and Chriſt to have deſcended upon him, and at his paſſion to have returned to his pleroma.

And St John refuted him, ſaith Irenæus, "by e-"ſtabliſhing the principle of one God omnipotent, "who made all things viſible and inviſible by his "word;" which is the very thing the apoſtle in this chapter doth aſſert.

Ver. 11. ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει, &c. the putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh.] Thus Philo (t) informs us, that circumciſion imports the cutting off our ſinful pleaſures and paſſions, and our impious opinions. See Rom. 2. 28. 29. and the reading of the text defended, Examen Millii.

The apoſtle here plainly diſcourſeth againſt thoſe heretics or falſe apoſtles, who laboured to introduce the neceſſity of circumciſion. Now, that Cerinthus was one who pleaded for the neceſſity of it, Epiphanius, St Auſtin, and others do inform us; but that Simon Magus did ſo, I find not in church-hiſtory. The apoſtolical conſtitutions (u) ſpeak of ſome falſe apoſtles, who held it neceſſary περιτέμνεσθαι νομίμως, to circumciſe men according to the law; but then they are diſtinguiſhed from the impure hereſy of Simon Magus, who was ſo far from contending for the obſervation of the law and prophets, that he taught his followers (x), νόμῳ καὶ προφήταις μὴ χρᾶσθαι, not to regard them, μηδὲ φρίττειν, not to fear the threats of the law (y), as being not the law of God, ἀλλ' ἀρχικῆς δυνάμεως, but of ſome evil power, ſaith Theodoret; and declaring, ſaith Epiphanius (z), that whoſoever believed the Old Teſtament, incurred death. Note,

2. That the apoſtle ſpeaking here of the circumciſion made without hands, and of the circumciſion made in baptiſm, and conſiſting in the putting off the ſins of the fleſh, cannot, by the circumciſion of

Chriſt, mean his own perſonal circumciſion which was made with hands, but that which he hath inſtituted in the room of it, viz. baptiſm. Note,

3. That baptiſm therefore is a rite of initiation to Chriſtians, as circumciſion was to the Jews; for by virtue of our ſpiritual circumciſion in baptiſm, he proves we have no need of the outward circumciſion to be a type of the purity obtained by baptiſm.

4. Hence I infer, that baptiſm is Chriſt's ordinance for infants of believing parents, as circumciſion was of old for the infants of the Jews; for if it had been otherwiſe, and infants under Chriſtianity had not been received by any federal rite into covenant with God, the objection of the neceſſity of circumciſion as to them would have ſtill held, they entering into covenant by no other rite, and ſo remaining ſtrangers from the church, and as much aliens from the adoption, the covenant, and promiſes, as the Gentiles were; which ſure the Jews would have objected, if truly they could have done it to the reproach of Chriſtianity. That inſtitution therefore muſt, for the comfort and ſatisfaction of their parents, afford ſome way of ſanctifying theſe infants, or of admitting them among the number of God's children, which being confeſſedly no other than that of baptiſm, it muſt be ſuppoſed to allow that to them, that by it, in the phraſe of Irenæus, infantes et parvuli renaſcantur in Deum, "infants and little children "may be regenerated (a)."

Ver. 13. [i] Καὶ τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ τῆς σαρκὸς, and the uncircumciſion of the fleſh.] By the defect of circumciſion, they being, ſaith the parallel place, on that account without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe, Eph. 2. 11. 12.

Ver. 14. [k] Χειρόγραφον τοῖς δόγμασιν, the hand-writing of ordinances.] Δόγμα is a reſcript or ordinance concerning any thing, a royal or imperial decree, Dan. 2. 13. and 3. 10. 12. 29. and 6. 8. 10. 13. 15. 26. Luke 2. 1. Acts 17. 7. Hence ritual preſcriptions are called δόγματα, Ezek. 20. 26. The hand-writing of ordinances, in the parallel epiſtle, Eph. 2. 15. is the law of commandments ἐν δόγμασι, in ritual ordinances, or the ceremonial law; and it is ſaid here to be againſt and contrary to the Gentiles, as being a middle wall of partition hindering them from coming to God, and putting an enmity betwixt them and God's people, ver. 14. 15. which Chriſt hath taken away, by aboliſhing and diſſolving the obligation of it, and admitting the Gentiles fellow-heirs of the ſame promiſes and bleſſings with the Jews without it; or it is contrary to us, as being the miniſtration of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. 2. 7. 9.

Ver. 15. [l] Τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰς ἐξουσίας.] The principalities and powers here mentioned are the powers of wickedneſs, the ſpirits of Satan, who is ſtyled ὁ ἐξουσία τῆς σκότους, the power of darkneſs, Luke 22. 53. and of the air, Eph. 2. 2. ὁ ἀρχὼν, the prince of this world, John 12. 31. and 14. 30. whoſe emiſſaries are the principalities and powers, the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, the ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places, againſt which we wreſtle, Eph. 6. 12. Theſe powers Chriſt deſtroyed by his croſs, becauſe, as the apoſtle ſaith, Through death he deſtroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lives ſubject to bondage, Heb. 2. 14. 15. Moreover, the Heathens lay under two great infelicities: 1*ſt*, That they were aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenant of promiſe, and without God in the world; the remedy which divine wiſdom found out, and our Lord's ſalutary paſſion effected, with reſpect to this, is diſcourſed of in the preceding verſe. 2*dly*, That they were ſubject to the power and deluſions of evil and apoſtate ſpirits, walking according to the prince of the power of the air, the ſpirit that now worketh in the children of diſobedience. Theſe principalities and powers Chriſt deſpoiled on the croſs, by the name of a crucified Jeſus, and by the very ſign of the croſs, caſting out the prince of the world from his dominions, temples, and oracles, and from thoſe human bodies he poſſeſſed; and ſo openly convincing the Heathens, that the deities they ſo long had worſhipped were evil ſpirits, and by the miracles wrought in his name, drawing them from their Heathen worſhip to him. And this expoſition is confirmed from theſe words, He made a ſhew of them openly, which plainly ſeemeth to refer to this conqueſt over them. Moreover, it may be noted, that Simon and Cerinthus held εἶναι τὸν αἰῶνα ὑπὸ ἀρχόντων τούτων καὶ ἐξουσιῶν τῆς κακίας καθασκευασμένον, that the world was made by theſe evil ſpirits, and men were ſubject to the power of them, and were per eum et Helenam ſuam ex illis angelicis poteſtatibus liberandos (b), to be delivered by Simon and his Helen from them. This, ſaith the apoſtle, our Lord hath fully done upon the croſs; and ſo we need no aſſiſtance of Simon or Cerinthus to perform this work; and much leſs need we the aſſiſtance of thoſe dæmons, which the Heathens worſhipped as good angels, who had the government of the inferior world committed to them; Chriſt having triumphed over them, and wholly ſpoiled them of that power. And from theſe Heathen deities he paſſes on again to the rudiments of the Jews, making that inference from what had been diſcourſed from ver. 11. to 14. which we ſee in the following verſes.

Ibid. = Ἐν αὐτῷ, in it.] It is certain that Origen (c) and others of the ancients read ἐν ξύλῳ, on the wood, ſo did the Arabic verſion; others read, ἐν ἑαυτῷ, in himſelf: but ſeeing that reading, as St Jerom teſtifies, is only in the Latin copies, and ſince Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact read as we, and moſt copies do, without taking notice of any other reading, we may rely ſecurely on it.

Ver. 17. = Σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων, a ſhadow of things to come.] Dr Spencer well obſerves, that there is no neceſſity from theſe words of aſſerting that theſe, and all the ritual conſtitutions of the law of Moſes, ſhadowed forth ſome Chriſtian myſtery; but only that they were but as mere ſhadows, compared to that ſolid and ſubſtantial truth Chriſt by his goſpel hath diſcovered to us; as Joſephus ſpeaking of Archelaus, who exerciſed the kingly power without the title of it, ſaith, ἦκεν, περὶ τῆς δυναστείας σκιὰν αἰτησόμενος βασιλείας, ἧς ἔφασαν ἑαυτῷ τὸ σῶμα, "he came to requeſt "of Cæſar the ſhadow of that kingdom, the body of "which he had uſurped or ſnatched to himſelf be-"fore." De bello Jud. l. 2. c. 4. p. 777.

Note 2. That ἐν μέρει ἑορτῆς, is well rendered in reſpect, or on account of a feaſt; as when the apoſtle ſaith, That which was made glorious was not glorious, ἐν μέρει τούτῳ, in this reſpect, 2 Cor. 3. 10. and I have ſent the brethren, leſt our boaſting of you ſhould be found vain, ἐν τούτῳ μέρει, in this reſpect, chap. 9. 3. And when St Peter ſaith, If any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him glorify God, ἐν τούτῳ μέρει, on this account. So 2 Maccab. 15. 18. The care they took for their wives and children, was ἐν ἐσχάτῳ μέρει, of no account with them, their chief care being for the temple. Now, hence to make out the argument againſt the Sabbatarians, note,

1. That the hand-writing of ordinances here mentioned reſpecteth ceremonial ordinances; for of them only it can be truly ſaid, they were againſt us, and were contrary to us, they were blotted out, and nailed to the croſs of Chriſt, and were ſhadows of, or in reſpect of things to come.

2. That when it is ſaid, Let no man judge you in reſpect of thoſe things, the meaning is, let no man cenſure or condemn the Chriſtian for not obſerving theſe new moons, feaſts, or ſabbaths.

3. That the apoſtle here by ſabbaths does not mean the firſt and laſt days of the great Jewiſh feaſts, which were by them obſerved as ſabbaths; or the ſabbath of the ſeventh year, or of the year of jubilee: but only, or chiefly, the weekly ſabbaths of the Jews.

1*ſt*, Becauſe the apoſtle having ſaid before, Let no man condemn you for not obſerving the Jewiſh feſtivals, or any part of them, cannot rationally be ſuppoſed, in the words following, to condemn only the ſame thing.

2*dly*, In the New Teſtament the word ſabbath, or ſabbaths, is uſed above ſixty times, and in fifty-ſix of thoſe places, it doth unqueſtionable ſignify the Jewiſh weekly ſabbaths, and in the other the whole week. Since then the ſabbath in the New Teſtament is never uſed for the firſt or laſt days of the Jewiſh feaſts, but is there ordinarily uſed for their weekly ſabbath, we ought in reaſon to conclude, it here imports that ſeventh-day ſabbath, which it doth uſually import in other places; and not thoſe ſolemn days of the Jewiſh feaſts, thoſe jubilees, or ſeven years ſabbaths, which it doth never elſewhere ſignify in the New Teſtament.

3*dly*, Where-ever the word ſabbath is mentioned in the Old Teſtament, in conjunction with new moons, or Jewiſh feaſts, it doth import the ſeventh-day ſabbath diſtinctly from all others; as will appear from the peruſal of all the places where theſe things are jointly mentioned, as 2 Kings 4. 23. Iſaiah 1. 13. and 66. 23. Lam. 2. 6. Ezek. 45. 17. and 46. 1. Hoſ. 2. 2. Amos 8. 4. Being then here mentioned with new moons and Jewiſh feaſts, it is reaſonable to conceive it ſignifies the ſeventh-day ſabbath.

4*thly*, The ſabbath-day in the Old Teſtament is often contradiſtinguiſhed to all other ſolemn feaſts, and more particularly to new moons and anniverſary feaſts; and therefore being here mentioned with them, we may preſume it cannot ſignify them, or any portion of them, but rather that it doth import that Jewiſh ſabbath, which in other places is put in oppoſition to them, as 1 Chron. 23. 31. 2 Chron. 2. 4. and 31. 3. Neh. 10. 32. 33. Seeing then the word ſabbath, where-ever it is uſed in conjunction with new moons or feaſts, in ſcripture, ſtill ſignifies the Jewiſh weekly ſabbath, we cannot doubt, but, in conjunction with them here, it ſignifies the ſame thing. Seeing the word is often put in oppoſition to new moons and ſolemn feaſts, indefinitely taken, what reaſon have we to conceive, that in this place it ſhould be taken for any part or portion of them? Hence then I argue thus:

No man ought to condemn the Chriſtian for not obſerving the Jewiſh ſabbath, becauſe Chriſt hath blotted out the hand-writing of ceremonial ordinances which was againſt them; wherefore the Jewiſh ſabbath being a ceremonial ordinance, therefore it is blotted out, therefore the Chriſtian is not obliged to obſerve it. Again, that which is joined with meats and drinks, and with new moons, which are things confeſſedly ceremonial, no difference at all being obſerved by the apoſtle, as to their being named hand-writings, things cancelled, ſhadows, and the like,

like, that muſt be ceremonial. Laſtly, That which is a ſhadow of, or in reſpect of things to come, of which Chriſt, by his advent, exhibited the body, that muſt be ceremonial, that muſt be cancelled, and aboliſhed by Chriſt, and then the Jewiſh ſabbath muſt be ſo.

Ver. 18. ° Καταβραβευέτω, Let no man beguile you of your reward.] So Suidas, Παραλογιζέτω, Let no man put a cheat upon you. So Phavorinus. Ἐπηριαζέτω, Let no man damage you: Chryſoſt. and Theophyl.

Ibid. Καταβραβευέτω;] This word ſignifies to give the prize to one, when the victory was obtained by the other; ſo Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Thophylact: accordingly Suidas (d) ſaith, this is the thing which the apoſtle means by the word, and becauſe, by this unjuſt ſentence, the perſon, to whom it is due, is deprived of his reward; hence it comes to bear that ſenſe: and ſo the whole is by Stephanus rendered, Nemo vos debito bravio fraudet; which as it juſtifies our tranſlation, ſo it ſhews the damage Chriſtians will ſuſtain by thus worſhipping angels, even the loſs of that crown of glory, which Chriſt hath purchaſed for his faithful ſervants.

Ibid. Θέλων ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ, pleaſing himſelf in his humility.] Or affecting it, and ſo not addreſſing to God immediately, but by angels; for ſo the word θέλειν anſwers to the Hebrew Chaphetz, which imports pleaſing or delighting ourſelves in any thing. So 1 Sam. 18. 12. Θέλει ἐν σοὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς, the king is pleaſed with thee, 2 Sam. 15. 26. If he ſay, οὐκ ἐθέλησα ἐν σοὶ, I am not pleaſed with thee. Matth. 20. 26. 27. ὃς ἂν θέλῃ ἐν ὑμῖν, Who among you affects to be great or firſt? And chap. 27. 43. Let him deliver him, εἰ θέλει αὐτὸν, if he delighteth in him. As for the perſons here referred to, note,

1. That the Greek commentators affirm generally, that the apoſtle doth through this whole epiſtle oppoſe himſelf to ſome falſe Chriſtians, who held δεῖν συνάγεσθαι ἡμᾶς πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα διὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων, that we ought to addreſs to the Father by the holy angels. But then ſome of them add, that the pretence of humility was this, (e) "That it was too "much for us to come to God immediately by Chriſt, "this being above our infirmity." But this, though it agrees well with the humility here mentioned, it ſeems not to accord either with the principles of Simon Magus, who held himſelf to be both the Father and the Son; or of Cerinthus, who held Chriſt was only a man, born after the common way of generation, and ſo could not exalt himſelf thus above the angels; and much leſs doth it accord with the ſentiments of the Heathens. Oecumenius ſaith, the apoſtle ſpeaketh here of them who did τὰς νομικὰς παρατηρήσεις τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ ἐπιμιγνύειν, mix legal obſervances with the goſpel; and Theophylact, that he ſpeaks περὶ τῶν Ἰουδαιζόντων, of the Judaizers. And Theodoret (f) explains this more fully thus; "They who "were zealous for the law, perſuaded men to wor- "ſhip angels, becauſe, ſay they, the law was given "by them; this they adviſed men to do, pretending "humility, and ſaying that the God of all things "was inviſible, and inacceſſible, and incomprehen- "ſible, and that it was fit we ſhould procure the di- "vine favour by the means of angels." Now, if this be ſo, this paſſage cannot well agree to Simon Magus and his followers: for though they worſhipped angels, as Irenæus (g), Tertullian (h), Epiphanius (i), Theodoret (k) note, and held that their Proarche or Propater, was ſo inacceſſible, and incomprehenſible; yet did they not ſeem to worſhip God by angels, but rather to perform their magical operations, by invoking them. He alſo, and his followers, as hath been ſhewn, were great enemies to the law, and ſo could not introduce the worſhip of good angels upon this account, that the law was given by them.

But then, as for Cerinthus, and other falſe apoſtles of the Jews, they owned Chriſt Jeſus as the Meſſiah, and yet were ſtiff aſſertors of the obligation of the law; and they by their philoſophy had introduced the worſhip of angels, after the Heathen manner. For Epiphanius informs us of Cerinthus, that he ſaid, "(l) The law and the prophets came from the an- "gels; and that he who gave the law, was one of "the angels that made the world." They had imbibed the philoſophy of Plato (m), which ſaith, "The "demons " demons are of a middle nature betwixt gods and " mortals; that they brought our prayers and offer- " ings to them, and their commands to us; and " were to be worſhipped and invoked upon that ac- " count." That God had no immediate commerce with men, but all his converſe with us was by the mediation of theſe dæmons. And, ſuitable to this philoſophy, we find the angel, Tobit 12. 12. 15. ſaying, that he was one of the ſeven angels οἱ προσαναφέρουσι τὰς προσευχὰς τῶν ἁγίων, who offered up the prayers of the ſaints; and that when Tobit and Sarah prayed, he brought the memorial of their prayer before the Holy One. And Philo (n), in ſeveral places, declares, that as the philoſophers ſaid of their dæmons and heroes, ſo Moſes introduces the angels περιοδεύοντας, doing the office of ambaſſadors, καὶ διαγγελλοντας τάτε παρὰ τοῦ ἡγεμόνος τοῖς ὑπηκόοις ἀγαθὰ, καὶ τῷ Βασιλεῖ ὧν ἂῦ ὑπήκοοι χρεῖοι, and being meſſengers of good things, from God to his ſubjects, and carrying back to God their needs. In his book of the giants (o), he ſtyles them ambaſſadors of good communications of men to God, and of God again to men. And in his book De ſomniis (p), he repreſents them as " the ears and " eyes of the great King, ſeeing and hearing all " things; for," ſaith he, " they bring the com- " mands of the Father to his children, and the " needs of the children to the Father; not that God " needs their miniſtry, but that it is very needful " and beneficial for us frail men to have ſuch medi- " ators, as being unable, not only to receive God's " chaſtiſements, but even his very benefits, ſhould " he immediately confer them on us by himſelf." If Cerinthus had imbibed this philoſophy, which had then obtained among the Jews, and was ſo well known in the world, that one ſo much inſtructed in it, as Theodoret ſaith he was, could not well be ignorant of it; here is a ſufficient foundation for his introducing the worſhip of thoſe angels which gave the law, under pretence of humility; Philo (q) declaring, that, when the law was firſt given, " the " people deſired it might be ſo, and requeſted of " God theſe mediators, Saying, ſpeak thou to us, and " let not God ſpeak to us, leſt we die.

Ibid. ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, intruding into thoſe things he hath not ſeen.] So read all the Greek and Latin copies now extant. Fabius. Now, this did the philoſophers, and thoſe Chriſtians which embraced their ſentiments, in all their inducements to worſhip theſe angels and inferior ſpirits; as, v. g.

1. In their pretence that (r) " the divine nature " could not immediately be converſed with, but that " all the intercourſe betwixt God and men was by " the intermediation of theſe dæmons; it being a " debaſing of the divine nature, to think we could " converſe with him without their intervention."

2. In ſaying that they were to be worſhipped χάριν τῆς ἐυφήμου διαπορείας, for their laudable interceſſion; and διὰ τῆς ἐυεργεσίας, for the (ſ) benefits of common life we receive from them.

3. As having from the ſupreme Deity their power and authority, and preſiding over us, καλὰ τάξιν ἢ ἕκαστος ἐτάχθη, according to the order appointed to them; and being therefore worſhipped, θείῳ νόμῳ καὶ θείᾳ βουλήσει, by the divine law and counſel; and only, ſaith Celſus, as he will have them to be honoured. Plato in Phædro, p. 264. Hierocles in Carm. Pythag. p. 9. 18. Celſus apud Orig. l. 8. p. 381.

4. Becauſe, by worſhipping theſe miniſters of his, we do a thing φίλον ἐκείνῳ, grateful to him, ſaith Celſus (t). Now, in all theſe things they did manifeſtly ἐμβατεύειν, intrude into things of which they neither had, nor could have any knowledge from the light of nature. And ſo do alſo the Romaniſts, in ſaying, that ſaints and angels ſee all things, or perceive our prayers, by ſeeing him who ſeeth all things; that they are worſhipped by the divine law and counſel; and that by invoking them, we do a thing grateful to him: it being certain that nothing of this nature can be proved from ſcripture, or from primitive tradition.

Moreover, Theodoret and Oecumenius here obſerve, that this worſhip of angels continued long in Piſidia, Phrygia, and Laodicea, near to Coloſſe, where they had (u) εὐκτήρια τῷ ἁγίῳ Μιχαὴλ, oratories of St Michael, the captain of the Lord's hoſt, as he is called, Joſh. 5. 14. which leads us to the very riſe of this worſhip, both among Jews and Chriſtians. For the Jews generally held, that he who is ſtyled the captain of the Lord's hoſt, was the angel Michael; ſee note on Heb. 2. 5. And his office, ſaith Origen, is, mortalium preces, ſupplicationeſque curare (x), "to "preſent the prayers of men;" and in the book of the Paſtor we read, ſaith he, that Chriſtians ἅμα τὸ πιστεύειν ὑπὸ τῷ Μιχαὴλ γίνονται, as ſoon as they believe, are under the government of Michael. (y) "The good "meſſenger," ſaith Hermas, "being Michael, "qui populi hujus habet poteſtatem, et gubernat eos, "who hath the government over this people." Whence by (z) Nicephorus he is ſtyled ὁ τῆς χριστιανῶν πίστεως ἔφορος, the preſident or overſeer of the Chriſtian faith.

Ver. 19. [r] Καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλὴν, and not holding the head.] Hence it appeareth, 1. That the apoſtle here ſpeaks of ſuch perſons as had embraced Chriſtianity, owning Chriſt Jeſus to be the head of the church, and being by profeſſion dead with Chriſt from the rudiments of the world, ver. 20.

2. That the fault they were guilty of was not the worſhipping angels, as mediators of redemption, but of interceſſion only, i. e. as mediators to bring us to God, and to preſent our prayers to him, as appears from the foregoing note.

3. That Jeſus Chriſt is repreſented in the holy ſcripture, as he by whom we have προσαγωγὴν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, acceſs to God in prayer with confidence, Eph. 2. 18. and 3. 12. Heb. 10. 19.—22. And ſo having acceſs to him by prayer, through any other mediator of interceſſion, muſt be intrenching on the office of the head of the church, and ſo not holding the head: and that the practice of the church of Rome, in praying to angels, is here condemned, I have fully proved in a Diſcourſe of the idolatry of the church of Rome, chap. 11.

Ibid. [s] Ἐπιχορηγούμενον, by joints and bands having nouriſhment miniſtered;] i. e. from which head communicating the gifts of the Spirit to his myſtical, as the head doth its ſpirits to the natural body, the whole body of Chriſtians (duly compacted together, by the aſſiſtance which every part of it gives to the whole; ſome ſuſtaining the office of inferior heads, ſome of an eye, ſome of an hand or foot, 1 Cor. 12. 15. 16. 17.) increaſeth in that love which proceedeth from the God of love, which he requires and approves, and which tends to his glory, and is therefore ſtyled the increaſe of God; as that righteouſneſs which he approves, and accepts of, is ſtyled the righteouſneſs of God, Rom. 1. 17. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Phil. 3. 9. Jam. 20. See the note on Eph. 4. 15. 16.

Ver. 20. [t] Ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων τοῦ κόσμου, from the rudiments of the world.] That theſe rudiments ſignify the Moſaical inſtitutions, as being for matter moſt the ſame with the rites uſed by the Heathens, proved, note on Gal. 4. 3. And this is alſo evident from the argument here uſed, to reſtrain the Coloſſians from being ſtill in bondage to them, viz. That they are blotted out, cancelled, and done away by the death of Chriſt, to which we profeſs to be conformed, ver. 14. To live in the world, is to live after the preſcripts of the men of the world, by whom theſe rites were uſed.

Ibid. [u] Δογματίζεσθε; are ye ſubject to ordinances? Δογματίζεσθαι, is to make rules and conſtitutions concerning theſe things. Thus of the feaſt of dedication of the temple purged from defilement, ἔστησαν μετὰ κοινῆς προσταγμάτος, they ordained by a common ſtatute and decree, that every year thoſe days ſhould be kept, 2 Mac. 10. 8. So when Judas had ſlain Nicanor, ἐδογμάτισαν πάντες μετὰ κοινῆς ψηφίσματος, they ordained all with a common decree, in no caſe to let that day paſs without ſolemnity, chap. 15. 36. See Eſd. 3. 9. 3. Eſdr. 6. 34. And ſo that may be rendered here, Why, as living yet in conformity to the world, are ye ſubject to the decrees and conſtitutions about them? Such as are,

Ver. 21. [x] Μὴ ἅψῃ, Touch not.] This may refer either to what is mentioned by St Paul, as the aphoriſm of ſome philoſophers or heretics, It is good for a man μὴ ἅπτεσθαι, not to touch a woman. Or it may be referred to things ſuffocated, or dead of themſelves, or offered to idols; which, as Clemens (a) of Alexandria ſaith, the Jews were not allowed to touch.

Ibid. [y] Μηδὲ γεύσῃ, taſte not.] This, doubtleſs, refers to meats and drinks, either fleſh and wine, which ſome of the philoſophers, particularly the Pythagoreans, would not taſte of. And ſome falſe apoſtles, mentioned by the (b) apoſtolical conſtitutions, forbade marriage, and "required men to abſtain from fleſh and wine, repreſenting marriage "and the procreation of children, and the eating "of fleſh, as things abominable."

Ibid. [z] Μηδὲ θίγῃς, handle not,] Any thing which may pollute you by touching it, or being offered to idols.

things periſh in the uſing.] The word φθόρα is uſed often by St Peter, ſpeaking of ſuch men, not for natural, but a moral corruption; as when he ſaith, they were partakers of the divine nature, who have eſcaped τὴν φθορὰν, the pollution which is in the world through luſt, 2 Pet. i. 4. and that they, as natural brute beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed, ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not, and ſhall periſh ἐν τῇ φθορᾷ αὐτῶν, in their own corruption, 2 Pet. ii. 12. And ver. 19. Whilſt they promiſe them liberty, they themſelves are the ſervants τῆς φθορᾶς, of corruption. And ſo the meaning of theſe words may be, that when theſe things are obſerved in compliance with the commands and doctrines of men, as things neceſſary, they corrupt men who uſe them thus. But I prefer the other ſenſe, which ſaith, that theſe meats periſh in the uſing, according to that (c) aphoriſm of the civil law, "We uſe thoſe things which remain after the uſe of them; his vero abutimur, quæ nobis utentibus pereunt."

Ver. 23. ββ Ἅτινα ἐστι λόγον μὲν ἔχοντα τῆς σοφίας, which things have a ſhew of wiſdom.] Theſe words plainly refer to the former verſes; ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ, will-worſhip, to the θέλων ἐν θρησκείᾳ τῶν ἀγγέλων, pleaſing themſelves in the worſhipping of angels; and ſo it muſt be as bad as that; the ſhew of humility, to the doing this from a pretence of humility, ver. 18. the neglecting of the body, and making no proviſions for it, to the ſatisfying of the fleſh, to the abſtinence from fleſh, wine, and women, and from things offered to idols.

It remains only to conſider who were the perſons here intended. That they were not the Gnoſtics, or followers of Simon Magus, is evident: "For they," ſaith Irenæus (d), "were men who indulged to the fleſh, and who privily corrupted the women whom they taught; they were carefully to meditate upon the myſtery of wedlock, and upon that account enticed other mens wives to themſelves." And Epiphanius adds (e), That they participated of all manner of fleſh; that they indulged to drunkenneſs and venery, execrating them who were uſed to faſtings." They therefore could not be the men who neglected the body, by abſtaining from meats, and made no proviſion for the fleſh. They therefore ſeem to me to have been partly the Eſſenes, and partly the Pythagorean philoſophers. For,

1. Of the Eſſenes, Joſephus ſaith, that ὅτι γαμετὰς εἰσάγονται, &c. (f) "they neither would have "wives nor ſervants;" as thinking ſervitude an injury to our common nature, or tending to injuſtice; and marriage, to ſedition. And again, (g) Γάμον μὲν, ὑποψίαν παρ' αὐτοῖς, "they contemn marriage, not "becauſe they would have marriage taken away, or "the ſucceſſion of mankind to ceaſe, but to avoid "the intemperance of women; and becauſe they "think none of them can keep their faith to one." Philo ſays (h), "They have women with them, but "they are only ſuch as are γεραιαὶ, old women, or "παρθένοι τὴν ἀγνείαν, virgins as to their chaſtity, not "out of neceſſity, but διὰ ζῆλον καὶ πόθον σοφίας, from "their zeal to, and deſire of wiſdom." He adds, Σιτοῦνται δὲ πολυτελῶς ὐδὲν, ἀλλὰ ἄρτον ἁυτιλῷ καὶ ὕψον ἅλας, &c. (i) "They eat nothing that is delicate, having on"ly mean bread and ſalt for their meat; and, if "they be delicate, hyſſop for their ſauce, and river"water for their drink. (k) They uſe no wine in "their feaſts, οἶνος μὲν γὰρ ἀφροσύνης φάρμακον; for wine," ſay they, "is the incentive to madneſs." He goes on, τραπέζα καθαρὰ τῶν ἐναίμων, "Their table is pure "from all things that have blood in them, or from "the fleſh of living creatures; for ſuch things," ſay they, "irritate concupiſcence." And of this abſtinence from certain meats they are ſo tenacious, ſaith Joſephus (l), that "they will rather endure "all ſorts of torments, ἢ φαγεῖν τι τῶν ἀσυνήθων, than "eat any thing they were not accuſtomed to eat." Moreover, there were ſome things they muſt not touch, as (m) "oil; for κηλῖδα ὑπολαμβάνουσιν τὸ ἔλαιον, "they look on oil as a defilement; ſo that if any "of them be unwillingly anointed with it, he muſt "waſh it off from his body. The younger amongſt "them muſt not touch the elders, (n) ὥστε εἰ ψαύσειαν "αὐτῶν ἐκείνους ἀπολούσασθαι, καθάπερ ἀλλοφύλῳ συμφέρουσας, and "if they touched them, the elders waſhed them"ſelves as if they had touched an alien." They were ſuch ſtrict obſervers of the Sabbath, that they would provide no meat for themſelves, nor go to ſtool on that day. They had alſo (o) τοὺς τῶν ἀγγέλων ὀνόμασα, "certain names of angels which they held "in veneration;" and alſo proper δόγματα, opinions

" or decrees, which they ſwore never to deliver to " others, otherwiſe than as they had received them." And thus they dogmatized. And laſtly, All this was the effect τῆς περὶ φιλοσοφίας ἐρωτος, " of their paſſion " for philoſophy," of which Philo (p) ſo often ſpeaks in his deſcription of them. So great reaſon is there to conceive they may be concerned in this chapter.

2. Theſe things being introduced as the rudiments of the world, and living according to theſe δόγμασι, preſcriptions, being living as in the world, I chiefly incline to refer theſe things to the abſtinence from touching and taſting fleſh and wine, and handling women, and from all the objects which gratify the ſenſes, the taſte, the eye, the touch, taught by the followers of Pythagoras and Empedocles; and defended with ſuch variety of learning by Porphyry, the very title of whoſe book is De abſtinentia ab eſu animalium, " of abſtinence from eating the fleſh " of any living creature." This he founds upon this principle, that τὸ ζῆν κατὰ τὸν νοῦν, (q) " To live " the intellectual life, and to enjoy the contempla- " tion of the moſt perfect Being, it is neceſſary we " ſhould abſtract our minds, as much as is poſſible, " from all ſenſual objects;" from the pleaſures which ariſe διὰ γεύσεως, from the taſte, particularly of wine; and from the touch: for, ſaith he, " ἅψαι, the ſen- " ſual objects which we touch, are not only σωμα- " τῶσαι τὴν ψυχὴν, ſuch as transform the ſoul into th " body, but alſo ſuch as ſtir up ſwarms of luſts a " paſſions in it." Hence he infers, that all the things are τὰ αἰσχρὰ, filthy and polluting, and ſuc as hinder τῆς ψυχῆς καθαρὰν ἐνέργειαν, the pure oper tions of the ſoul; therefore he that would live t intellectual live, muſt abſtain (r) " not only fro " the uſe of women, but from all ſenſual thing " they being ſuch as do defile the ſoul." Moreov what the apoſtle ſpeaks of the deceit of philoſoph exactly agrees with the ſentiments of thoſe me Doth he ſay, that it is κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ἀνθρώπων; i. according to the tradition of men? This abſtinen is ſtyled by Porphyry (s) νόμῳ ἄγραφος καὶ θείος, a divi but unwritten law. Doth he ſay of them, δόγμα ζονται, they make decrees and ordinances? This o nion is by Porphyry ſtyled (t) δόγμα παλαιὸν καὶ φίλον, an ancient decree, and acceptable to the go and τὸ διορίζόμενον, a conſtitution, or a thing defin Doth the apoſtle ſtyle it ἐθελοθρησκία, will-worſhi It is alſo (u) by Heraclides Ponticus ſtyled δεισιδαιμ ſuperſtition, and ſaid by Porphyry eſpecially, to done on the account of wiſdom, and the ſubdu of the body. So full an agreement is there betwi this philoſophy, and that which the apoſtle hath he ſaid concerning it.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. 2. [a] Τὰ ἄνω ζητεῖτε, ver. 1. φρονεῖτε, ver. 2.] Theſe phraſes ſeem to import, 1. That we ſhould put the higheſt eſtimate and value on things above. 2. That we ſhould have them fixed on our ſpirits, and familiarly occurring to our thoughts, by fervent meditations and ſerious reflections on them. 3. That we ſhould have our wills inclined to them, and our affections poſſeſſed with fervent love and paſſionate deſires of them; for ζητεῖν is, ſaith Phavorinus, λογίζεσθαι, καὶ ἐνθυμεῖσθαι, σφόδρα, καὶ ἀπορρίπτεσθαι. 4. That we ſhould employ our faculties and members in purſuit of them with diligence and conſtancy; for ζητεῖν is niti, curare, ſummo ſtudio quærere, as ζητεῖν πολέμου in Demoſthenes, ζητεῖν ἀφελέσθαι, nitor auferre, Plutarch, ζητεῖν δὲ πολυπραγμονεῖν, Schol. Ariſtoph. p. 289.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν ἡ πρόσ.] i. e. Your true life, which conſiſts in fruition of God, and which you ſhall live for ever with him, is hid with Chriſt, who is now removed from your ſight, and placed at the right hand of God; for it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be, 1 John 3. 2.

Ver. 4. [c] Note, Hence we learn that Chriſtians are not to expect to reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years, becauſe they are not to mind or ſeek τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, the things upon earth, but only thoſe above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God; whereas, were this life on earth a bleſſing, and reward which God had promiſed them for their ſufferings, they might mind it, and ſet their affection on it: as alſo from all thoſe places where the hope, reward, inheritance of Chriſtians, is ſaid to be reſerved in the heavens for them; for, as Oecumenius notes, ει ἐν ἐρανοῖς ἡ κληρονομία μυθώδης ἡ χιλιοέτης ἀποκατάστασις, if our inheritance be in heaven, the ſuppoſed millennium on earth muſt be but a fable. Great is your reward in heaven, ſaith Chriſt to the Chriſtian ſufferer, Matth. 5. 12. Luke 9. 23. Your hope is laid up for you in heaven, Col. 1. 5. See 1 Pet. 1. 4.

Ver. 5. [a] Νεκρώσατε ἐν, Mortify therefore your earthly members.] There being in us naturally the old man, ver. 9. Eph. 4. 22. and the body of ſin; the inordinate affections and luſtings of it are ſtyled the members of that body; partly becauſe they exert themſelves by the members of the natural body; and partly, becauſe, as the members of the body are employed to fulfil and accompliſh the deſires of the natural body, ſo theſe affections are employed to gratify the deſires of the body of ſin: theſe members are ſtyled earthly members, becauſe they reſpect only earthly things, they fix our hearts upon, and employ our minds about them; to mortify them, is to reſiſt, and to ſuppreſs their motions, that we do not obey them, or gratify them in their inordinate deſires and affections, but carefully ſhun all the occaſions of ſin, and uſe thoſe means which tend to the ſubduing of it. And this exhortation being directed to believers, ſhews, that as they are by profeſſion, and by baptiſmal obligation, dead to ſin; ſo have they continual need to proceed in the practice of this duty, that they be not overcome by the deceitfulneſs of ſin, by their fleſhly luſts, which tend to fornication and uncleanneſs; their deſires of worldly honours, and vain-glory, which are evil concupiſcences, and by the inordinate love of the world, which is ſtyled covetouſneſs.

Ibid. Επιθυμία κακὴ, evil concupiſcence.] If hence it follows, that all concupiſcence is evil, then from διαλογισμοὶ κακοὶ, mentioned Mark 3. 21. it follows, that all thoughts and reaſonings are evil; and from ὁμιλίαι κακαὶ, mentioned 1 Cor. 15. 33. it alſo follows, that all our converſation with one another muſt be evil; ſo certain is it, that this place doth not prove that all concupiſcence is evil. And to be ſure the very firſt motions of concupiſcence, which ariſe naturally in the ſenſual appetite, and prevent our reaſon and deliberation, cannot be here intended, becauſe the apoſtle reckons this concupiſcence among thoſe members of the body which muſt be mortified, which the firſt motions of the appetite can never be.

2. Becauſe he adds, That becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience: now, theſe firſt motions, if ſuppreſſed, and not conſented to, when they ariſe, can never render us children of diſobedience, and much leſs ſubject to the wrath of God. And if Satan hath the power to inject ſuch motions, or raiſe ſuch ideas in the brain, if they be our ſins, though not conſented to, it muſt be in his power to make us ſin, whether we will or no. From all which conſiderations it ſeems neceſſary to underſtand this of deliberate fleſhly luſtings indulged to, and not reſtrained by us.

Ibid. [c] Ητις ἐστὶν εἰδωλολατρία, covetouſneſs, which is idolatry.] Becauſe as Heathens place their confidence in idols, even ſo the avaritious man doth place his confidence in gold and ſilver, which are the matter of their idols; he chiefly doth purſue them, and for their ſakes only doth other matters. And that ſuch actions do partake of the true nature of idolatry, reaſon as well as ſcripture will evince: for reaſon ſhews, that love, hope, truſt, obedience, are parts of that internal worſhip which we owe to God in the moſt excellent degrees, and which he more regards than building temples, or erecting altars, the bending of the knee or body, or any act of outward worſhip, and therefore in thoſe acts doth more eſpecially conſiſt God's worſhip; wherefore he that confers them upon any creature in that degree, or in thoſe actions in which they only ought to be aſcribed to God, muſt be as truly an idolater, as he that payeth to a creature any outward act of religious and divine worſhip. And as the covetous perſon, though he doth not indeed believe his riches or his money to be a God; yet by ſo loving, and ſo truſting in them, as God only ought to be loved and truſted in, he is as truly guilty of idolatry, as if he ſo believed. So though the Roman Catholics do not believe their ſaints and angels to be God; yet by addreſſing to them even (x) mental prayers, and giving to them the inward worſhip of the ſoul, which, as St Auſtin (y) well obſerves, "the catholic church always reſerved to God," they are as guilty of idolatry, as if they did believe them to be gods, ſince thereby they aſcribe to them the knowledge of the heart, and of the inward motions of the ſoul, which only do belong to God.

(x) Qui dicit ſtultum eſſe (ſanctis) in cœlo regnantibus voce vel mente ſupplicare, anathema ſit. Concil. Trid. ſeſſ. 25.

Ver. 7.

Ver. 7. [f] The Coloſſians dwelling in Phrygia celebrated the ſacra of Bacchus (z), and of the mother of the gods, called therefore Phrygia Mater, and doubtleſs complied with all the luxury of Aſia Minor, of which they were a part.

Ver. 8. [g] Αἰσχρολογίαν, filthy communication.] This is uſually referred to obſcene and impure words; but Heſychius, Phavorinus, and J. Pollux, l. 2. c. 4. have informed us, that the word ſignifies reproachful words, ſuch as tend to put a man to ſhame; and to this ſenſe the words preceding make it moſt proper to refer it, wrath, anger, malice, or evil machinations of the heart, being the inward diſpoſitions which render us diſaffected to, and prone to do evil to others; railing and opprobrious ſpeeches, which tend to render our brother infamous to others, being the uſual effects of theſe evil diſpoſitions.

Ver. 9. [h] Hence it appears, that to be addicted to lying is an evidence that we have not yet put off the old man.

Ver. 10. [i] Εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, in knowledge.] The Chriſtian faith being the knowledge of the truth which is after godlineſs, Tit. 1. 1. it being that by which we eſcape the pollutions of the world through luſt, 2 Pet. 2. 20. and recover out of the ſnare of Satan, 2 Tim. 2. 25. 26. that by which we have all things given us which appertain to life and godlineſs, 2 Pet. 1. 3. and that, ſaith the apoſtle here, by which we are enabled to walk worthy of the Lord unto all well-pleaſing, being fruitful in every good work, and increaſing in them, as we increaſe εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ, in the knowledge of God. The being renewed in this knowledge may well import our being renewed in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, Eph. 4. 24. eſpecially if we conſider, that whilſt the judgment ſtill continues to approve the things which are moſt excellent, the will ſtill chuſes, and the inferior faculties will be employed in proſecution of them.

Ver. 12. [k] Ὡς ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, as the elect of God.] That the apoſtle ſpeaks not here of any abſolute election of ſome particular perſons to eternal life, but of their being choſen out of the Heathen world to be his church and people, is evident, becauſe he ſpeaks to the church in general; and yet to theſe elect he promiſeth the bleſſings of Chriſtianity, only if they continue in the faith rooted and grounded, and be not moved away from the hope of the goſpel, chap. 1. 23.; 2. 2. 4. 18. expreſſing his care and fear leſt they ſhould be deceived, and robbed of their rewards.

Ver. 15. [l] Βραβευέτω, rule.] Μεσιτευέτω, ἰθυνέσθω, ſaith Phavorinus, i. e. let that peaceable diſpoſition which God requires from all Chriſtians be the umpire and director to compoſe all differences among you, for peace hath God for its author. He hath called us to it; he hath made us all one body, and nothing is more unſeemly or pernicious than that the members ſhould be at diſcord with each other. In Joſephus (a) it ſignifies, Let him have the chief place; thus of Jehoſhaphat he ſaith, he did βραβεύειν, ἅπασι ἴσος, excel, as being equal to them all.

Ver. 16. [m] Ὁ λόγος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, the word of Chriſt.] The word dictated by the Holy Spirit is therefore the word of Chriſt, becauſe the Spirit is the Spirit of Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 11. as proceeding both from the Father and the Son.

Ibid. [n] Ἐν χάριτι, ſinging with grace;] that is, ſay ſome interpreters, χαριέντως, Becher., ſo as that their hymns may be grateful to others, and be received by them with ſpiritual delight, which is, ſay they, the import of the phraſe, Eph. 4. 29. Col. 4. 6.; but this ſeems rather to depend on others than ourſelves: ſay others, he exhorts them to ſing with a grateful mind, full of the ſenſe of divine goodneſs, in which ſenſe χάρις τῷ Θεῷ is often uſed, ſee 1 Cor. 15. 27. 2 Cor. 2. 14.; but according to the ancients (b), he exhorts them, ἀπὸ χαρισματος ἁδειν, to ſing by the gifts given them by the Holy Ghoſt, of which one is the word of wiſdom; and this expoſition is confirmed by the parallel place, Eph. 5. 18. 19. Be ye filled with the Spirit, ſpeaking to one another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs. Now, theſe gifts being chiefly exerciſed in their aſſemblies, where eſpecially they did ψάλλειν τῷ πνεύματι, ſing in the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 14. 15. 16. and every one had his pſalm, and his διδαχὴ, doctrine, ver. 26. I conceive theſe ſpiritual ſongs, in which they were to teach and to admoniſh one another, may refer chiefly to their aſſemblies, then managed by their prophets, in which they met together for that end. So Pliny doth inform us, that the Chriſtians uſed to meet together on a certain day, carmenque Chriſto quaſi Deo dicere ſecum invicem, "and ſing an hymn to Chriſt as God." Lib. 10. ep. 97.

Ver. 17. [o] Ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, in the name of the Lord.] To do all in the name of the Lord is, 1ſt, To have reſpect in all things to his will, as knowing we are obliged to live to him, 2 Cor. 5. 14. to the honour of his name and doctrine. 2dly, To be deſirous that our actions may be well-pleaſing to him, 2 Cor. 5. 8. 9. 3dly, To expect acceptance of our actions, prayers, John 14. 13. 14. 15. 16. and praiſes, through him, Heb. 13. 15. and a recompenſe of them from him hereafter, Eph. 6. 8. here, ver. 24.; and ſaith

Ibid. ᵛ Πατρὶ δι' αὐτοῦ, to the Father by him.] "It "is the manner of the ſcriptures," ſaith Biſhop Davenant, "to refer our prayers and praiſes to the per- "ſon of the Father, becauſe he is the fountain of "the Deity;" add, and becauſe they are to find acceptance through the interceſſion of, and the preſenting of them by the Son, Rev. 8. 3. 4. Our prayers muſt be offered to the Father in his name, John 16. 23. and yet the bleſſing aſked is to be given by him, John 15. 16. that the Father may be glorified in the Son, John 14. 13. 14. Our praiſes muſt be offered up to the Father in the name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. 5. 20.; by him we muſt offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, Heb. 13. 15.; theſe ſpiritual ſacrifices being acceptable to God through Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 2. 5.; and yet it is very frequent in theſe epiſtles, to pray as well to our Lord Jeſus Chriſt as to God the Father; ſee note on Rom. 10. 13.; and in the Revelation to give praiſe and glory to him, chap. 4. 9. 11. and 5. 12. 13. But it is eſpecially to be noted, that all the Greek interpreters here obſerve, that this is ſpoken againſt the worſhip of angels or dæmons, which the philoſophers, and eſpecially the Platoniſts, had introduced, as thinking them the perſons who carried up all our prayers and praiſes to God, and conveyed down all his bleſſings to us.

Ver. 17. Do all ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου, in the name of the Lord.] It is well worth the obſervation, that all the ancient commentators on this epiſtle do frequently inform us, that it was written to prevent the worſhip of angels, and to fix Chriſtians to the worſhip of Jeſus Chriſt only. Hilary's preface to this epiſtle ſaith, it is an exhortation to the Coloſſians, ne alicui præter Chriſtum aliquam eſſe ſpem putarent, to place no hope in any other but in Chriſt. St Chryſoſtom notes on the firſt verſe of the firſt chapter, that the diſeaſe of the Coloſſians being this, that δι' ἀγγέλων προσάγεσθαι ἤοντο τῷ Θεῷ, they thought they were to come to God by angels; the apoſtle endeavours to correct this diſtemper, by telling them, that what he ſaid in this epiſtle to them was according to the will of God; and Oecumenius brings in the apoſtle ſpeaking thus, Know therefore, that it is according to the will of God, ὑπὸ υἱὸν ὑμᾶς προσάγεσθαι, that you ſhould come to him by his Son, and then, πῶς δὲ ἀγγέλων προσαγωγὴν εἶναι ὑπειλήφατε; how is it that you think you ſhould come to him by angels? And again, This is the will of the Father, δι' οὗ προσάγεσθαι αὐτῷ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους, καὶ μὴ δι' ἀγγέλων, that men ſhould have acceſs to him by the Son, and not by angels. The ſame words he repeats on ver. 18. and on chap. 2. 3. Chryſoſtom notes, that by ſaying that all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid in him, he teaches πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ αἰτεῖν, to aſk all things by Chriſt; Oecumenius, that the myſtery of the Father and the Son is this, τὸ τὴν προσαγωγὴν, τὸν τε τὸν Πατέρα διὰ τοῦ υἱοῦ γίνεσθαι, καὶ οὐ διὰ τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων, that the introduction to the Father ſhould be by the Son, and not by the holy angels. Theodoret upon this verſe ſaith thus, Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι τὰς ἀγγέλους σέβειν ἔπεισαν, αὐτὸς τὸ ἐναντίον παρεγγυᾷ ἀντὶ τοῦ τοὺς λόγους καὶ τὰ ἔργα κοσμῆσαι τῇ μνήμῃ τοῦ δεσπότου Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῷ Θεῷ δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ Πατρὶ τὴν εὐχαριστίαν δι' αὐτοῦ ἀναπέμπειν, becauſe they (who perverted the Coloſſians) perſuaded them to worſhip angels, he injoins the contrary, that they ſhould adorn their words and deeds with the commemoration of the Lord Chriſt, and ſend up thankſgiving to God the Father by him, μὴ δι' ἀγγέλων, and not by angels. St Chryſoſtom here having ſaid, that he commands us to do all things according to God, μὴ τοὺς ἀγγέλους ἐπεισάγειν, and not to introduce the angels, adds, that the devil envying our honour, τὰ τῶν ἀγγέλων ἐπεισήγαγε, hath introduced the worſhip of angels; and concludes thus, Be he an angel, an archangel, or a cherubim, endure it not, ἐπεὶ δοῦ αὐτοὺ οἱ δαίμονες καταδέξονται, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀποστήσονται, for neither will they receive, but reject it when they ſee their Lord diſhonoured, ἐγὼ σε ἐτίμησα καὶ ἔπεσον, ἐμὲ κάλει, καὶ σὺ ἀτιμάζεις αὐτόν. I have honoured thee, and ſaid, Call upon me, and thou diſhonourſt me.

Ver. 19. ᵠ Ἀγαπᾶτε, love your wives;] delighting in their converſation, Prov. 5. 18. 19. deſiring to promote their welfare both temporal and eternal, for this is ſurely comprehended in loving her as we do ourſelves, Eph. 5. 33. providing for her all things neceſſary to the happineſs and comfort of her life, for this is loving her as Chriſt did love his church, ver. 25. This, ſay the very Heathens (d), is the property of a ſincere affection in the general, and therefore much more of that affection which we are to bear to our own fleſh and body, as the wife is to be eſteemed, Eph. 5. 28. 29.

Ibid. ʳ Καὶ μὴ πικραίνεσθε πρὸς αὐτάς, and be not bitter againſt them;] for, as St Ambroſe ſaith, Non eſt dominus, ſed maritus; non ancillam ſortitus es, ſed uxorem; gubernatorem voluit te eſſe Deus ſexus fortioris, non tyrannum, Hexam. 5. 7. Hence the prieſt who ſacrificed to Juno Nuptialis, ſaith Plutarch (e), did ſeparate the gall from the ſacrifice, and throw it away, ſignifying τὸ μηδέποτε δεῖν χολὴν μηδὲ ὀργὴν γάμου παρεῖναι.

Ver. 24. Now, ſaith Chriſt, …u ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only …alt thou ſerve, Matth. 4. 10. and God alone is worthy of religious invocation from all Chriſtians, being only omniſcient, omnipreſent, and the ſearcher of all hearts; Chriſt therefore muſt be tru-…God. Moreover, the apoſtle reckons it part of the idolatry of the Heathen, that they ſerved or paid religious worſhip to them which by nature were no gods, Gal. 4. 8.; the Socinians therefore either muſt confeſs Chriſt is by nature, as well as by office, God, or elſe acknowledge that they are guilty of idolatry, in giving this religious worſhip to him.

Ver. 25. [t] Προσωποληψία, reſpect of perſons.] Chriſt, in judging men at the laſt day, will have no reſpect to the quality or external condition of any man's perſon, but whether he be bond or free, he ſhall receive recompenſe for the good that he hath done, in obedience to him; whether he be maſter or ſervant, he ſhall be puniſhed for the wrong that he doth in thoſe relations; it being certain from chap. 2. that the Judaizers were got into the church of Coloſſe, and that many of them denied that the Jews ought to be ſervants to any; and the Eſſenes judging all ſervitude unlawful. (See note on 1 Pet. 2. 15. 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2.) This might be the reaſon why here and Tit. 2. the apoſtle is ſo large in charging this duty upon ſervants.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὸ δίκαιον, what is juſt and equal.] Hence it is evident, that juſtice is to be obſerved towards ſervants, and that there be offices of humanity and charity due to them. As, 1. That we do not look upon them as vile perſons, but as partakers of the ſame grace and nature with us, and ſo not only ſervants, but as brethren, Philem. ver. 16. 2. That we do not always puniſh all their miſcarriages, but ſometimes do remit the puniſhments which in anger we threatened to inflict, Eph. 6. 9. 3. That we do not make them ſerve with rigor, καὶ καλατενεῖς αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ μόχθῳ, Thou ſhalt not oppreſs, afflict, or wear him out with labour, but ſhalt fear the Lord, Lev. 25. 43. 4. That we permit them to plead their cauſe, and to defend their right, provided they do it with humility, not contradicting, or ſpeaking againſt the commands of their maſters, Tit. 2. 9. If I did deſpiſe the cauſe of my man-ſervant, or maid-ſervant, when they contended with me, what then ſhall I do when God riſeth up? and when he viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer him? Job 31. 13. 14. 5. That to well-deſerving ſervants we give ſomething even above their wages, and after a long and profitable ſervice we do not ſuffer them to go empty from us: When thou ſendeſt him out from thee, thou ſhalt not let him go away empty, thou ſhalt furniſh him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine-preſs; of that wherewith the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee, thou ſhalt give unto him, Deut. 15. 13. 14. Theſe things the Lord commanded under the Old Teſtament, becauſe their ſervants were his ſervants alſo, redeemed by him out of Egypt, Lev. 25. 15. Deut. 15. 15. and therefore they ſeem as ſtrongly to oblige under that œconomy, where we are all the ſervants of Chriſt, our common Lord, and redeemed by his precious blood, Eph. 6. 6. 1 Cor. 7. 22. 23.

Ver. 3. [b] Προσευχόμενοι περὶ ἡμῶν, praying for us.] That this apoſtle, who ſo paſſionately writes to Chriſtians, deſiring that they would ſtrive together with him in their prayers to God, Rom. 15. 30. 31.; that they would always with all perſeverance pray for him; that they would continue in prayer, that God would open to him a door of utterance to ſpeak the myſtery of Chriſt, Eph. 6. 18. 19. Col. 4. 2. 3.; and that he might be delivered from unreaſonable and wicked men, 1 Theſſ. 5. 25. 2 Theſſ. 3. 1. 2.; ſhould never pray to the Virgin Mary, and to angels, or to ſaints departed, for any of theſe things, is an evidence that he approved not of thoſe prayers.

Ver. 6. [c] Ἐν χάριτι, with grace;] i. e. with ſweetneſs and courteouſneſs, ſaith Theodoret, that it may be acceptable to the hearers: ἵνα αὐτοὺς κεχαριτωμένους ἐργάζηται, that it may render you gracious to, and favoured by them, ſo Theophylact; ſeaſoned with ſalt. Salt is the ſymbol of wiſdom, and in this ſenſe the word is uſed, Matth. 5. 13. Mark 9. 15. Have, ſaith Theodoret, σύνεσιν πνευματικὴν, ſpiritual wiſdom, that ye may know, &c.

Ver. 7. [d] Τυχικός.] That this epiſtle was written at the ſame time with that to the Epheſians, is pleaded from this, that it was ſent by the ſame perſon Tychicus, with the very ſame words contained in this and the following verſe, Eph. 6. 21. 22.

Ver. 9. [e] Oneſimus;] of whom St Jerom ſaith (g) We read, that of a ſervant he was made a deacon.

Ver. 10. [f] Μάρκος.] It ſeems evident hence, that St Paul's diſpleaſure againſt him, mentioned Acts 15. 38. laſted not long; for he deſires Timothy to bring him with him, as being profitable to him for the miniſtry, 2 Tim. 4. 11. and ſtyles him his fellow-labourer, Philem. 24.

Ver. 11. Theſe only are my fellow-workers in the (promotion of the) kingdom of God, which have been a comfort to me.] Hence it is evident, that either St Peter was not at Rome when St Paul was, or that he was no comfort to him, no promoter of the kingdom of God with him, which ſure is no compliment to St Peter.

Ver. 12. [g] Ἐπαφρᾶς.] That Epaphras was about this time priſoner at Rome is concluded very probably from Philem. 23. where he is ſtyled by St Paul his fellow-priſoner; for that the epiſtle to Philemon and this were written at the ſame time, may be conjectured, by the naming Timothy at the beginning, and all the ſame perſons, ſave only Juſtus, viz. Epaphras, Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas, at the end of both of them; but that he was biſhop of Coloſſe, is not ſaid by any of the Greek commentators on the place: he might have this zeal for them mentioned in theſe two verſes, either as being one of them, ver. 12. or as being employed in preaching the goſpel to them.

Ver. 15. [h] The church which is in his houſe;] i. e. his Chriſtian houſehold; for all the brethren are mentioned before. So Theodoret, Oecumenius, St Chryſoſtom, and Theophylact note, that τὸν οἶκον πᾶν πιστὸς εἶχεν, ὥστε καὶ ἐκκλησίαν καλεῖσθαι, he had made his whole family Chriſtians, ſo as to be called a church.

Ver. 16. [i] Καὶ τὴν ἐκ Λαοδικείας, and that from Laodicea.] Some ſay, that the epiſtle here mentioned, is from Laodicea, was the firſt epiſtle of St Paul to Timothy, becauſe the poſtſcript ſaith it was written from Laodicea; but that ſubſcription is eaſily confuted, both from this conſideration, that the firſt epiſtle to Timothy was written two or three years after this; ſee the preface to it; and from this very epiſtle, in which the apoſtle mentions them of Laodicea among thoſe who had not ſeen his face in the fleſh, chap. 2. 1. St Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact underſtood by it ſome epiſtle writ by them of Laodicea to St Paul; but the apoſtle doth not ſay, Read the epiſtle ſent to me from Laodicea, nor doth he mention one word of ſuch an epiſtle ſent from them to him here, or elſewhere; nor is it to be doubted but he would have anſwered their epiſtle had they ſent any, as he did that which the church of Corinth ſent to him. Others underſtand this of an epiſtle ſent by St Paul to them, which is now loſt: but all the ancients are not only ſilent in this matter, but ſome of them expreſsly do explode this imagination, obſerving, that the apoſtle propoſes to their reading, not τὴν πρὸς Λαοδικεῖς, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐκ Λαοδικείας γραφεῖσαν, an epiſtle writ to the Laodiceans, but only from Laodicea, to be ſent to Coloſſe. I therefore acquieſce in their opinion who underſtand this of the epiſtle to the Epheſians, ſent, by the admonition of St Paul, from Epheſus, the metropolis of Laodicea, ſubject to it, as the epiſtles to the church of Corinth belonged to all the churches of Achaia, 2 Cor. 1. 1.: for Tertullian (h) witneſſeth, that this epiſtle to the Epheſians was by Marcion ſtyled the epiſtle to the Laodiceans; and the place which Marcion cites in Epiphanius (i), as from the epiſtle to the Laodiceans, is in the epiſtle to the Epheſians, chap. 4. 5. 6. viz. There is one Lord, one faith, one baptiſm, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. Moreover, the epiſtle to the Coloſſians, as I have ſhewed, and as Theodoret notes, was writ ſoon after that to the Epheſians, and ſent to them both by the hands of Tychicus; and there is a great reſemblance obſervable betwixt them, both in the doctrines and exhortations, and in the very expreſſions: ſo that it is not to be wondered that the apoſtle would have that epiſtle alſo read to the Coloſſians, to let them ſee, that he writ the ſame doctrine, and gave the ſame inſtructions to other churches of the ſaints.

Ver. 17. [k] Ἀρχίππῳ, Archippus.] That this Archippus ſhould be then biſhop of Coloſſe, as St Jerom on the epiſtle to Philemon thinks, and that St Paul ſhould not write one word, or ſend one ſalutation to him, but ſend to the people of Coloſſe to admoniſh him of his duty, is not very credible in itſelf, nor do the ancients teſtify that he bore that character.

THE PREFACE TO THE First EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS.

THAT St Paul laid the foundation of the gospel among the Theſſalonians, ἀπιλεγόντων μὲν Ἰουδαίων, the Jews contradicting, and openly contending againſt it, we learn from the hiſtory of the Acts (a): and this church conſiſting, as Oecumenius notes (b), partly of Jews, and partly of Gentiles, they were perſecuted both by the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles; the Jews exciting the Gentiles to this perſecution, Acts 17. 5. The apoſtle therefore writes to confirm them in the faith, and to prevent their being ſhaken by theſe perſecutions; informing them, that it was nothing ſtrange they ſhould thus ſuffer from thoſe Jews, who had killed the Lord Jeſus, and had perſecuted both the apoſtles and their own prophets; or that they ſhould ſuffer from their own countrymen, as the Jews in Judea did from theirs, chap. 2. 14.

Moreover, concerning this epiſtle, the firſt note of the fathers is this, Theſſalonica was the metropolis of Macedonia (c); whence we may certainly conclude that Philippi was not ſo.

This epiſtle muſt be written after the council held at Jeruſalem, A. D. 49.; from thence Paul goes to Antioch, Acts 15. 30. ſtays there ſome conſiderable time, ver. 35. from thence goes through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the brethren, ver. 41. thence to Derbe and Lyſtra, chap. 16. 1. through Phrygia and Galatia, ver. 6. then to Troas, ver. 8. to Samothracia and Neapolis, ver. 11. and ſo to Philippi, ver. 12. then to Amphipolis and Apollonia, and ſo to Theſſalonica, chap. 17. 1.; there planting the goſpel; thence they are expelled by the Jews and Gentiles, and go to Beræa, ver. 10. thence to Athens, ver. 15. and from thence to Corinth, chap. 18. 1. where Timotheus coming to him, and giving him a comfortable account of their faith and conſtancy, he writes this epiſtle to them, chap. 3. 6.; whence it appears, that it could not be written in leſs time than a year or two after that council; and that the inſcription of it running thus, Paul, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus, to the church of the Theſſalonians, it muſt be written after their return to him, and ſo not from Athens, as the ſubſcription hath it, but from Corinth, Acts 18. 1. 5. A. D. 51. or 52. for it was written after he had been ſeparated from them but a little while, chap. 2. 17.

WITH

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

First EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. (I) Paul (the apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt), and Sylvanus and Timotheus, (my fellow-labourers, write) [a] to the church of the Theſſalonians, (eſtabliſhed) in (the knowledge and worſhip of) God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: (wiſhing) grace (may) be to you, and peace from God our Father, and (from) the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

2. (And advertiſing you, that) we give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers,

3. [b] Remembering without ceaſing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (ver. 10. when we appear) [c] in the ſight of God, and (even) our Father:

4. (And) knowing, brethren beloved, (by your proficiency in theſe Chriſtian virtues), [d] your election of God.

5. For our goſpel came not to you in word only, but alſo in (the) power (of miracles), and in (or with) the (diſtributions of) the Holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance (or full conviction both to you of the truth of our doctrine, and to us, that God hath choſen you to be his church and people); as you know what manner of men we were among you for your ſake, (or how we were enabled by theſe things to give full proof of our miniſtry.)

6. And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord (in your ſufferings for his ſake), having received the word in much affliction, (Acts 17. 5. and yet) [e] with joy in the Holy Ghoſt:

7. So that ye were examples (of faith and patience) to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8. For from you ſounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, (and ſo they could not be ignorant of your good works), but alſo in every place (the fame of) your faith to Godward is ſpread abroad, (or hath gone forth), ſo that we need not to ſpeak any thing (to others of the grace of God given us towards you, Eph. 3. 3. Col. 1. 25.)

9 [f] For they themſelves ſhew of us, what manner of entering in we had unto you, (i. e. with what power and aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt we preached the goſpel to you, ver. 5.), and how (thereupon) ye turned to God from idols, to ſerve the living and true God,

10. And to wait for (the coming of) his Son from heaven (to be glorified in his ſaints, 2 Theſſ. 1. 10.), whom he (hath already) raiſed from the dead, even Jeſus who (by his death hath) hath delivered us from the wrath to come.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ Θεσσαλονικέων, to the church of the Theſſalonians.] "He names not "the preſbyters and deacons," ſaith Grotius, "be- "cauſe the church was newly planted, and had not "received its full form;" and yet in his note on thoſe words, chap. 5. 12. I intreat you, brethren, know them that labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, he ſaith, οἱ κοπιῶντες, the labourers are the princes of the aſſembly, called biſhops; οἱ προϊστάμενοι, they that are over you are the preſbyters; but againſt this ſee the note there.

Ver. 3. [b] Ἀδιαλείπτως μνημονεύοντες, remembering without ceaſing;] i. e. as often as we appear before God our Father, thankfully remembering your faith, fruitful in good works; your love to the ſaints making you laborious to promote their good, and your hope in the Lord Jeſus, ver. 10. rendering you patient in all tribulations for his ſake, chap. 5. 17. See note there.

Ver. 3. Your labour of love and patience.] Oecumenius here notes, that it is the property of true love, τὰ πάντα ὑπὲρ τῶ ἠγαπημένε πάσχειν, to ſuffer all things for the ſake of the beloved.

Ibid. [c] Ἀπὸ Θεῶ Πατρὸς, from God the Father, ver. 1. and before God even our Father, ver. 3.] The Spirit of God vouchſafed under the goſpel enables us to cry, Abba, Father, i. e. to come to God with the aſſurance of his fatherly affection to us, as being now the ſons of God through faith in Jeſus Chriſt; on which account is God our father, or the father of us Chriſtians, Eph. 3. 15. ſo often mentioned for their conſolation in thoſe times of peril.

Ver. 4. [d] Την ἐκλογὴν ὑμῶν, your election of God.] The goſpel came to ſome in word only, i. e. they heard the ſound of it, but did not believe and obey it, and ſo the word did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it, Heb. 4. 2.; and theſe were only κλητοὶ, called, but not ἐκλεκτοὶ, choſen, Matth. 22. 14. To others, the preaching of the apoſtles was attended with a greater power of miracles and extraordinary effuſions of the Holy Ghoſt, prevailing on many to embrace it as the word of God; ſo that from hence the apoſtles had full aſſurance, that it was the good pleaſure of God to gather a church of believers and faithful people there; and theſe were called the elect, ἐκλογὴ Θεῶ, the election of God, the election of grace, i. e. men choſen to be partakers of the bleſſings of the goſpel, and to be God's peculiar church and people. For the apoſtle doth not here ſpeak of any abſolute election of the whole church of the Theſſalonians to eternal life, becauſe he could have no certain knowledge of it; or if he had, he could not have been under any juſt grounds of fear, as we find he was, leſt by ſome means the tempter ſhould have tempted them, and their labour be in vain among them, chap. 3. 5. Moreover the reaſon of his knowledge here aſſigned, viz. the miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, with which his preaching was attended, gave him a certain knowledge that God deſigned to gather there a church of Chriſtians; but it was no certain indication of their election to eternal life, ſeeing the apoſtle informs us, that they who had taſted of theſe powers of the world to come, and received theſe gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, might fall away, ſo as not to be renewed to repentance, Heb. 6. 4. 5. 6. and many of the converted Jews actually did ſo afterwards.

Ver. 6. [e] Μετὰ χαρᾶς, with joy of the Holy Ghoſt.] In the foregoing verſe he lays before them the outward teſtimonies of the truth of Chriſtianity from the miracles wrought, and the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt exerciſed among them; here he appeals alſo to the inward teſtimonies they had received of it, even a ſtrong ſpiritual joy wrought in them by the Holy Ghoſt, under the ſharpeſt ſufferings, according to thoſe words of St Peter, If ye ſuffer for the ſake of righteouſneſs, and be reproached for Chriſt's ſake happy are ye; for the Spirit of glory, and of God reſts upon you, 1 Pet. 4. 14.

Ver. 9. [f] These words, ſaith Theodoret (a), ſtruct us how to expound our Saviour's words, This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God; teaching us, that he is ſo ſtyled in oppoſition not to Jeſus Chriſt, but to idols only.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. (WE need not, I ſay, ſpeak any thing farther of the effectual working of God with us in our entrance in unto you); for yourſelves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not [a] in vain, (i. e. not without demonſtration of divine aſſiſtance, chap. 1. 5.)

2. But (we had ſuch aſſurance of God's will to preach to you, that) even after that we had ſuffered before, and were ſhamefully intreated, as ye know at Philippi, (Acts 16. 23.), we were (ſtill) bold in the ſtrength of our God, to ſpeak unto you the goſpel of God, (though this we did) with much contention

3. For our exhortation (made to you to embrace the gospel) was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile, (as are the exhortations of the philosophers among you, and the deceitful workers of the Jewish nation, who endeavour to corrupt you):

4. But as we were allowed (Gr. have been approved) of God (as persons fit) to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak (the truth sincerely), not as pleasing men, but (as approving ourselves to that) God, who trieth our hearts, (Gal. 1. 10.)

5. For neither at any time used we [b] flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness, (2 Cor. 2. 17.)

6. Nor of men sought we glory, (or high estimation), neither of you, nor yet of others (provisions), when we might (not only with a fair pretence, but with just reason) have been (thus) [c] burdensome, as (being) the apostles of Christ.

7. (I say, we sought not high esteem, or rich provisions); but we were [d] gentle (meek and unburdensome) among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children, (bearing herself the burden of them, and giving them her milk, as we dispense to you the sincere milk of the word freely):

8. (And so, being affectionately desirous of you-(r good), we were willing to have imparted to you, not the gospel of God only, but also our [e] own souls, (i. e. to have spent our lives in your service), because ye were dear unto us.

9. (And of this affection you cannot well be ignorant); [f] for ye remember, brethren, our labour and travel: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable to any of you, we preached to you (freely) the gospel of God.

10. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily (towards God), and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves (whilst we conversed) among you that believe.

11. As (and likewise) you know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, (Gr. how we loved every one of you, as a father doth his children, exhorting you to the performance of your duty, comforting you under your tribulations, and testifying),

12. That ye would (ought to) walk [g] worthy of God, who hath called you to his kingdom and glory.

13. For this cause also (or, and for this thing) thank we God without ceasing, because when you received the word of God, which you heard from us, ye received it not as the word of men (speaking from their own human wisdom), but (as it is in truth) the word of God, [h] which effectually worketh also in you that believe (the fruits of Christian patience.)

14. For ye, brethren, (in this) became followers of the churches of God, which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered (patiently) like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews (their countrymen):

15. Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and (before him) their own prophets, and have (since) persecuted us (his apostles); and they please not God, and are [i] contrary to all men (who are not of their own nation or religion):

16. (And this they shew in) forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved, (by the preaching of the gospel), [k] to fill up their sins always, (i. e. which they are given up to do, to fill up the measure of their sins, which being thus disposed, and thus deserted by God, they will do): for (the) wrath (of God) is come upon them to the uttermost.

17. But we, brethren, being (by their impatient malice) taken from you for a short time, (Acts 17. 5. 10. and this) in presence (only), not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face (again) with great desire.

18. Wherefore we would have come unto you (even I Paul) once and again; but [l] Satan (by his ministers still) hindered us.

19. For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? are not even ye (Gr. ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ ὑμεῖς, will it not among others be you also, when we stand), in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?

20. For ye are (even at present) our glory and joy.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verse 1. [a] Οὐ κενὴ, not vain.] I grant that the apostle doth not intend to signify by this phrase, only that his word was not ineffectual among them, but also to declare the reason why it was not so, viz. because it wanted not a demonstration of divine authority and power to confirm them in the faith that heard it, and those that preached it in their expectations of success, and their assurance that the Thessalonians were by God designed to receive the faith; as it would have been, had it come to them in word only, and not in power, and the Holy Ghost, and much assurance. For the word vain, when it is applied to God's message, signifies the not accomplishing the great ends for which it was designed: so Is. 55. 11. The word that goeth out of my mouth shall not return to me in vain, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the things whereto I sent it. And Jer. 8. 8. How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it, the pen of the scribes is in vain. And Jer. 2. 30. In vain have I ſmitten your children, they have received no correction. Our entrance therefore to you was not in vain; that is, it was not without ſuch divine aſſiſtance as was ſufficient to work conviction in you, and to engage you to embrace the truth delivered to you.

Ver. 5. [b] Ὁ λόγος κολακείας,] here ſignifies flattering words, or words that are flattery, as λόγος ἀκοῆς, ver. 13. is the word heard, and λόγος ἀληθείας, the word which is the truth, 2 Cor. 6. 7. Col. 1. 5. and πρόφασις πλεονεξίας, is a pretence to gratify their covetouſneſs: for that the apoſtles never were under a defamation or accuſation of theſe things, neither could the Theſſalonians know, nor was it a thing proper to call God to witneſs to; but that no ſuch guilt could truly be charged upon them, the Theſſalonians might know, and that they inwardly deſigned no ſuch thing, God only could be witneſs, as being alone the ſearcher of the heart.

Ver. 6. [c] Ἐν βάρει εἶναι, be burdenſome.] This ſeems not to refer to the cenſures of the church, but to the apoſtles living at the charge of their converts; for he ſaith, ver. 9. that he and his companions laboured night and day, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαι, that they might burden none of them. So 2 Cor. 11. 9. Other churches ſupplied my wants, ſo that in all things I have kept myſelf ἀβαρῆ, unburdenſome to you. And 1 Tim. 5. 16. If any man or woman that believeth hath widows, let them relieve them, καὶ μὴ βαρεῖσθω ἡ ἐκκλησία, and let not the church be burdened with them.

Ibid. Though we might have been burdenſome.] Here Theophylact cries out, βαθὺ τῆς προθυμίας καὶ τῆς ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ σκανδαλίσαι τινὰ σπουδῆς, "O the ſtudy and ſe-"dulity of the apoſtle, not to ſcandalize any per-"ſon!" And the deſcant of Eſthius upon the words is this, We accommodated ourſelves to you in all things, neque jus noſtrum, neque imperium urgentes, ut veſtram promoveamus ſalutem; "forbearing "our own right, to promote your happineſs." And if the apoſtles forbore to exerciſe their own power, that they might not be burdenſome to the weak Theſſalonians, how much more would they have done it to prevent their ruin?

Ver. 7. [d] Ἤπιοι, meek.] If the various lection noted by Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, who here read νήπιοι, children, were the original, the ſenſe would run thus, But we, O children, were among you as a nurſe that cheriſheth her children; ſee ver. 11. And that Origen read ſo, is certain from his commentary on St Matthew, p. 372. 375.

Ver. 8. [e] Τὰς ἑαυτῶν ψυχὰς, our own ſouls,] i. e. our own lives; as when Chriſt is ſaid to give τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, his life a ranſom for many, Matth. 20. 28. to lay down τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ, his life for the ſheep, John 10. 11. 15. 17. and 15. 13. 1 John 3. 16.; and when we are bid to lay down τὰς ψυχὰς, our lives for the brethren, 1 John 3. 16. or ſaid to loſe or gain τὴν ψυχὴν, our life, Luke 9. 24. John 12. 25. See Acts 20. 10. Rom. 11. 3. and 16. 4. 2 Cor. 12. 15. Phil. 2. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 19.

Ver. 9. [f] It is the opinion of Dr Hammond, that the apoſtle, here from the third to the fourth verſe, refers to the Gnoſtics, and clears himſelf from the vile arts they uſed, and ill deſigns they had in promoting their deluſions. But this epiſtle being writ, ſaith the ſame Reverend perſon, about the year fifty, and whilſt Simon Magus was yet living, it cannot be proved that theſe Gnoſtics were then in being, much leſs that they ever were at Theſſalonica.

We read in ſcripture of ſome teachers of the law, who gave heed to fables, 1 Tim. 1. 4. 7. and who counted gain godlineſs, chap. 6. 5.; of ſome Jews who were deceitful workers, 2 Cor. 11. 13. 22. 1 Cor. 4. 2. and had their πανουργίαι, ſubtilties, 2 Cor. 11. 3. and who were given to uncleanneſs, Rom. 2. 22. and taught unclean doctrines, 1 Cor. 3. 16. 17. chap. 6. 13.—19. 2 Cor. 12. 21. See the note there. And it is likely the apoſtle might in theſe words reſpect thoſe deceivers.

Or we may refer theſe things to the philoſophers of thoſe times, who did συλαγωγεῖν, make a prey of men by philoſophy, and vain deceit, Col. 2. 8.; who were, ſaith the poet, in Athenæus (b), μειρακιαξεται, deceivers of young men, and δοξοματαιόφρονες, deſirous of vain-glory; whoſe buſineſs it was (c) χαριτογλωσσεῖν, to ſpeak to pleaſe men; who taught only for ſtipends, or ἐργολαβίας ἕνεκεν, as Diodorus Siculus (d) ſaith of the Grecian philoſophers; and τῶν κατὰ τὴν ἐργολαβίαν κέρδους ἕνεκα ζηλούντων, philoſophized, ſaith Plato (e), out of love of gain; and who are every where repreſented as (f) given to impurity, and exerciſing the vileſt practices with thoſe they taught their vain philoſophy. Whence they were ſometimes baniſhed from the places of their abodes, ſaith Athenæus (g), ὡς διαφθείροντες τοὺς νέους, as corruptors of the youth; and did κυνικῶς ζῆν, lead the lives of Cynics. And Plato (h) himſelf confeſſeth, that one reaſon why they were ſo generally decried, was this, that moſt of them were πανοῦργοι, the worſt of men.

Ver. 11. 12. Οἴδατε ὡς ἕνα ἕκαστον ὑμῶν ὡς πατὴρ τέκνα ἑαυτοῦ παρακαλοῦντες ὑμᾶς, You know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one of you as a father does his children.] Here our tranſlation puts the παρηγορούμενοι, perſuading, teſtifying, or charging, which begins the 12th verſe, before the beginning of the 11th, which is an unusual transposition, and changeth the participles into verbs; which, though it be usual, cannot here be admitted because of the ἵνα following παρακαλοῦντες; I think therefore it is better to own an ellipsis, or deficiency of the word ἐρωτῶμεν, or ἐξαπόστειλον, or ἐβάλψαμεν, from ver. 7.; of which ellipsis we find many instances, v. g. there is an ellipsis of the verb ἐποίει, Rom. 8. 3. of ἐλπίζετε, Eph. 1. 13. See 1 Cor. 4. 15. Gal. 2. 7. 2 Thess. 2. 7. 1 John 2. 19. Matth. 20. 23. And then the words may be thus translated, Ye know how I loved every one of you as a father doth his children, exhorting, and comforting you, verse 12. and charging you.

Ver. 12. [g] Ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, worthy of God.] i. e. That you would walk, 1. So as is best pleasing to him. 2. As becomes them who are called to enjoy a glorious kingdom. 3. As most conduceth to his glory. And, 4. So as to resemble his imitable perfections in your conversation.

Ver. 13. [h] Ὃς ἐνεργεῖται, which effectually worketh in you.] For, saith Theodoret, προφητικῆς καὶ αὐτοὶ χάριτος ἀπολαύσαντες, καὶ προεφήτευον, καὶ γλώσσαις ἐλάλουν, καὶ θαύματα ἐτελοῦμεν περιδόξα, They partaking of the prophetical grace, both prophesied, and spake with tongues, and did great miracles. For to those who in those times embraced the gospel, were granted χαρίσματα καὶ ἐνεργήματα, the gifts and operations of the Holy Ghost, 1 Cor. 12. 6. 10. 11. Eph. 3. 20. So that as Satan was πνεῦμα ἐνεργοῦν, a spirit working in the children of disobedience, Eph. 2. 2. and they that were possessed by him, were styled ἐνεργεμένοι; so they who had the afflatus of the Holy Spirit, found him effectually working in them, Jam. 5. 16. And as the Antichrists, or adversaries of the truth, wrought lying wonders, κατ' ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Σατανᾶ, according to the deceitful working of Satan, in and by them, 2 Thess. 2. 9. 11.; so had the Christians, from the Holy Spirit, their ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, miraculous operations, by which they were enabled to confirm the faith: and these spiritual gifts were to them strong confirmations of the faith, the seals and earnest of the blessings promised, and that which did enable them not only to suffer patiently, but also to rejoice in tribulations, Rom. 5. 3. 4. 5. 1 Thess. 1. 6. 2 Tim. 1. 7. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 14.

Ver. 15. [i] Contrary to all men.] Thus Tacitus (i) saith of them, Apud ipsos fides obstinata, misericordia in promptu, sed adversus omnes alios hostile odium. "They have great fidelity and kindness towards "men of their own nation, but as great hatred to "all others." But that which the apostle chiefly here respects, was their fond imagination that God would grant no salvation to the Gentiles, upon any other terms than their being circumcised, and obedient to the law of Moses, Acts 15. 1.; on which account they became enemies to the gospel, and the preachers of it; because they offered salvation to the Gentiles, through faith in Christ, without observation of their law, Rom. 11. 28. Gal. 4. 16. Hence also note, That none are greater enemies to the good of mankind, than they who do obstruct the preaching and the propagating of the gospel through the world.

Ver. 16. [k] Ἀναπληρῶσαι, to fill up the measure of their sins.] Our Lord had said to them, Fill ye up the measure of your fathers, by adding to the murder of the prophets, the murder of me, and of those prophets and wise men I shall send to you, Matth. 23. 32.—35. that upon you of this generation may come all the bloodshed from Abel to this present time, Luke 11. 49. 51. This prediction, saith the apostle, is now fulfilled; and they, by fulfilling it, have filled up the measure of their sins; and God's wrath is so incensed against them, that it will now destroy their church and nation, εἰς τέλος, to the uttermost; so that it shall not be now as formerly, when they were sometimes in bondage, and again in freedom from their enemies; sometimes were captives, and then returned again, after seventy years, to their own land; found God for a while angry, and anon reconciled to them: but this wrath shall now remain upon them to the uttermost, till the times of the Gentiles are come in, Luke 21. 24.; see note on Rom. 11. 25.; or εἰς τέλος, till they be consumed; so the phrase is used often in the Old Testament, as εἰς τέλος ἀποθανώμεν; shall we be consumed with dying? Numb. 17. 13. They fell by the sword, εἰς τέλος, till they were consumed, Josh. 8. 24. slaying them, εἰς τέλος, till they were consumed; and chap. 10. 20. i. e. God's wrath hath begun to fall upon them; and they will still continue under it, till they be consumed by it.

Ver. 18. [l] Ὁ Σατανᾶς, Satan.] Hence note, That they who obstruct the progress of the gospel, and persecute the promoters of it, are the ministers of Satan, and therefore bear his name. So chap. 3. 5. 2 Cor. 11. 15. Rev. 2. 10.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. WHerefore, when we could no longer forbear, (μηκέτι στέγοντες, no longer enduring to want the certain knowledge of your affairs, though we had given commandment to Timothy to come quickly to us to Athens, Acts 17. 15. yet as for me and Silas) we thought it good to be left at Athens alone, (rather than to continue ignorant of the ſtate of your faith, ver. 5.):

2. And (therefore) ſent Timotheus our brother (in Chriſt, Philem. 16. Heb. 13. 23.), and (the) miniſter of God, and our fellow-labourer in (advancing) the goſpel of Chriſt, to [a] ſtabliſh you (in), and to comfort you concerning your faith;

3. That (ſo) no man ſhould (might) be moved (from his ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith) by theſe afflictions; (and not you eſpecially): for yourſelves know (from us), that we (Chriſtians) are appointed thereunto, (for hereunto are we called, 1 Pet. 2. 21.)

4. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before (it came to paſs), that we ſhould ſuffer tribulation: even as it (ſhortly after) came to paſs, (Acts 17. 5.—10.), and ye know (it did ſo.)

5. For this cauſe, when I could no longer forbear, I ſent (καγὼ μηκέτι στέγων ἔπεμψα, I alſo, not bearing longer the uncertainty of your affairs, have ſent) to know (the ſtedfaſtneſs of) your faith, leſt by ſome means the [b] tempter (may) have tempted you, and (ſo) our labour (among you ſhould) be in vain.

6. But now, when Timotheus came from you to us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and (in particular) that you have (ſtill a) good remembrance of us always, deſiring greatly to ſee us, as we alſo (do to ſee) you.

7. Therefore, (διὰ τοῦτο, by this), brethren, we were comforted over you (ἐφ' ὑμῖν, concerning you, or in you) in all our affliction and diſtreſs by (reaſon of) your (conſtancy in the) faith.

Ver. 8. For [c] now we live (joyfully), if ye ſtand faſt in the Lord.

Ver. 9. [d] For what (ſufficient) thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your ſakes before our God,

10. Night and day (alſo) praying exceedingly, that we might ſee your face, and might perfect that which is (yet) lacking in your faith, (by reaſon of our very ſmall ſtay with you, Acts 17. 1.—10.)?

11. [e] Now God himſelf, and (or, who is) our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, direct our way unto you.

12. [f] And the Lord make you to increaſe and abound in love one towards another, and [g] towards all men, even as we do (abound in love) towards you:

13. [h] To the end he may eſtabliſh your hearts unblameable in holineſs before God, even our Father, (τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ ἡμῶν, our God and Father), at the (glorious) coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all his ſaints.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 2. [a] Στηρίξαι ὑμᾶς, To eſtabliſh you] in it, by conſideration of that miraculous power, and thoſe gifts of the Holy Ghoſt which accompanied our preaching, and your receiving of it, 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. 6. and which are ſtill exerciſed among you, chap. 5. 19. 20. to comfort you concerning it, by conſideration of the joys of the Holy Ghoſt, which you have found already, under your afflictions, chap. 1. 6. by the ſalvation you are to obtain by Chriſt, the life you ſhall for ever live with him in glory, chap. 4. 17. 18. chap. 5. 9. 10. 11.; the eternal reſt you ſhall have, when the Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to be glorified in his ſaints, and of which your conſtancy in the faith, under theſe ſufferings, will make you to be accounted worthy, 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. 6. 7. 10.

Ver. 5. [b] Ὁ πειράζων.] Here note, 1. That the perſecutions of the ſaints are aſcribed to Satan, the tempter, who, by his miniſters, endeavours to hinder the progreſs of the goſpel, chap. 2. 18. and by their perſecutions to terrify men, and ſeduce them from the profeſſion of it. See Rev. 2. 10.

2. That πειράζων here doth ſignify, not barely to tempt, but to ſucceed in his temptation; for otherwiſe the labour of the apoſtle could not be rendered vain among them. See note on Gal. 6. 1.

3. Note, That it is hence evident, that the apoſtle did not think them ſecure (by the election of them, mentioned chap. 1. 4.) from falling ſo, as that his labour might have been in vain among them.

Note, 4. from Eſthius, That a faithful perſon truly juſtified may ſo fall from the faith, as that it ſhall become in vain to him.

Ver. 8. [c] Νῦν ζῶμεν, now we live.] Ζῆν, ſaith Suidas, is to live μετὰ τρυφῆς καὶ πολυτελείας, with delight and magnificence; according to that of Horace, Virendum hodie, which is the frequent import of the Hebrew word chajah; as in that wiſh, Let the king live, 1 Sam. 10. 24. 1 Kings 1. 25. 2 Kings 11. 12. i. e. Let him have a proſperous and happy reign. And in the words of the pſalmiſt, Pſal. 16. 11. Thou wilt ſhew me the way of life; in thy preſence is fulneſs of joy. Pſal. 34. 13. He that would live, i. e. ſee good days. So Pſal. 22. 26. and 38. 19. Eccl. 6. 8. and 7. 12. "Our maſters teach," ſaith Maimonides (k), "That the juſt are called living, even "in their death; the wicked, dead while they live:

"because the first are happy in their death; the "second, miserable in their life."

Ver. 9. [d] Esthius observes from ver. 9. That both the apostles joy, and their faith and constancy, were the gift of God; nam gratiarum actio non est nisi de beneficiis acceptis. He might also have observed, with others, the excellent pattern the apostle here gives to all the bishops and pastors of the church, to be continually solicitous to know of the welfare of their flock, incessantly praying for it, blessing God daily for it, and looking upon it as the very felicity of their own lives.

Ver. 11. [e] Here the note of Schlictingius runs thus: "You see that our Lord Jesus takes care of "our affairs and actions, and therefore we deser- "vedly invoke him in our necessities;" as the apostle again doth, ver. 12. But since this invocation of him by all Christians, in all places, must suppose him omniscient, omnipresent, and the searcher of the heart, and these are the properties of God alone; it also must suppose him to be truly God.

Ver. 12. [f] Ὑμᾶς δὲ ὁ Κύριος πλεονάσαι καὶ περισσεύσαι.] These are optative aorists, which signify transitively, μεταβατικῶς, say the grammarians; and therefore are well rendered by our translation, The Lord make you to increase, and make you to abound. See note on 2 Cor. 9. 8. Ecclus 45. 5.

Ibid. [g] And towards all men.] "This," saith Theophylact (m), "is the character of divine love, to "comprehend all; whereas human love hath re- "spect to one man, and not to another."

Ver. 13. [h] Ἀμέμπτους, that he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness.] Hence note, That a general and abounding charity to all men, being that by which we become most like to God, and that which tends to cover our own sins, 1 Pet. 4. 8. especially if it be charity to the souls of men, James 5. 20. tends to stablish our hearts unblameable before God in love, and to procure our acceptance with him at the great day of our accounts, Matth. 25. 35. 36.

Note also, That to stablish our hearts unblameable at Christ's coming, is so to confirm us in holy living, that we may be found unblameable by him at that day. See note on 1 Cor. 1. 8. 1 Thess. 5. 23. 2 Pet. 3. 14.

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. FUrthermore then we beseech you, brethren, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as you have received of us (directions) how ye ought to walk, and to please God, so you would abound more and more (in your care to conform yourselves to them.)

2. (In which thing you need no further instructions); for ye know what (holy) commandments we gave you [a] by the Lord Jesus.

3. For (we have already told you, that) this is the will of God, even your sanctification, (and this sanctification requires) that ye should abstain from fornication:

4. [b] (And) that every one of you should know how (much it is your duty) to possess his (body, which is the) vessel (of the Holy Spirit) in sanctification and in honour; (i. e. free from those lusts which are πάθη ἀτιμίας, Rom. 1. 26. dishonourable passions);

5. Not in the lusts of concupiscence, [c] even as the Gentiles (do) which know not God:

6. That [d] no man go beyond (the bounds of matrimony) or defraud his brother in any matter, (Gr. or exceed toward his brother in this matter): because the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we have also forewarned you, and testified.

7. (He is, I say, the avenger of all such Christians, as acting oppositely to their holy calling); for God hath not called us (Christians) to uncleanness, but unto holiness.

8. He therefore that despiseth (this command), despiseth not man (only), but God who hath also given [e] to us his Holy Spirit.

9. (This I thought necessary to say, to warn you against that uncleanness which so reigneth in the Heathen world, and to which you so strongly were addicted, whilst you were without the knowledge of God in the world.) But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write (so fully) to you: for ye yourselves are [f] taught of God to love one another.

10. And indeed ye do it to all the brethren, which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more (in this Christian virtue);

11. And that ye study to be quiet, and [g] to do your own business, (not meddling with other mens matters), and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

12. That (so) ye may walk honestly (εὐσχημόνως, decently, and in good behaviour) towards them that are without, and that ye may have [h] lack of nothing.

13. But (especially) I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning (the state of) them that are asleep, that ye sorrow not (for them), [i] even as others (other Gentiles do), which have no hope (of a resurrection of the body).

(m) Τοῦτο γὰρ τῆς κατὰ θεὸν ἀγάπης ἴδιον, τὸ πάσας περιπλέκεσθαι· ἐὰν δὲ τὸν δεῖνα μὲν, τὸν δεῖνα δ' ᾖ, κατ' ἄνθρωπον ἡ ἀγάπη.

14. For if we believe that Jeſus died, and roſe again, (as the firſt-fruits of them that ſlept, 1 Cor. 15. 20.); even ſo (are we to believe, that) [k] them alſo which ſleep in Jeſus, will bring God with him, (when he comes to judge the world, and reward all his faithful ſervants.)

15. For this we ſay unto you, (not from ourſelves, but) by the word of the Lord, that [l] we who are (then) alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, ſhall not prevent them which are aſleep, (ſo as to receive our happy change, before their reſurrection.)

16. For the Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and (then) the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt:

17. Then we which are alive and remain (on the earth), ſhall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and ſo ſhall we ever be [m] with the Lord.

18. Wherefore, comfort one another (concerning your deceaſed friends) with theſe words.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 2. [a] Διὰ τῦ Κυρίυ, by the Lord.] Note hence, That the inſtructions and commandments which the apoſtles gave to the churches, are to be looked upon as the commandments of the Lord, and as the will of God; they being dictated by his Spirit, ver. 8. and delivered by his authority, who ſaid, He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that heareth me, heareth him that ſent me, Luke 10. 16.

Verſe 4. 5. [b] Here note, 1. That theſe inſtructions were very neceſſary for the Theſſalonians, ἐκεῖ γὰρ πλείστη ἀταξία, καὶ ἀκαθαρσία, for there was all manner of diſorder and impurity, ſaith Socrates (n). And Athenæus (o) informs us, τὴν τέτων τρυφὴν, that their luxury invited the Perſians into Greece; that it was their cuſtom, in their banquets, to bring in their (p) wenches dancing naked, and afterwards they enjoyed them at their pleaſure.

2. Note alſo, That having mentioned fornication, ver. 3. he ſeems, ver. 4. and 5. to advance to other Heathenith luſts, deſiring them to keep their veſſels in ſanctification and honour: 1. By preſerving their bodies from unnatural luſts, which are by the apoſtle ſtyled πάθη ἀτιμίας, diſhonourable paſſions; and their matrimonial bed from defilement, by the uſe of other women, Heb. 13. 4. Accordingly theſe things, in ſcripture, are expreſſed by ignominy and vileneſs; by the Septuagint, by τὰ ἀσχήμα, things indecorous and diſhonourable; which word the apoſtle applies to unnatural luſts, Rom. 1. 26. and in the language of the Targum and the Rabbins, they are ſtyled קלנא, ignominy and vileneſs. Thus Sychem is ſaid to have wrought קלנא, ſaith the Chaldee; τὸ ἀσχήμον, the Septuagint; i. e. ignominy in Iſrael, by knowing Dinah. This is the name the Chaldee gives to the adultery committed by the men of Benjamin upon the Levite's concubine, Judg. 19. 24. the incest committed by Amnon on his ſiſter Thamar, 2 Sam. 13. 12. and in the (q) Rabbinical language, to abuſe boys, בקלין, is to uſe them to the ſatisfying of unnatural luſts.

Ibid. [c] Καθάπερ τὰ ἔθνη, even as the Gentiles.] Among whom theſe luſts abounded, and by whom they were allowed. For whoredom was eſteemed no crime; (r) they taught, μὴ πάντως παρὰ τὸ καθῆκον τῦτο γίνεσθαι. Their (s) orator ſpeaks thus: "Si "quis eſt qui etiam meretriciis amoribus interdi- "ctum juventuti putet——abhorret non modo a "hujus ſeculi licentia, verum etiam a majorum con- "ſuetudine atque conceſſis. Quando enim hoc non "factum eſt? Quando reprehenſum? Quando non "permiſſum? Quando denique fuit, ut quod licet "non liceret?" Epictetus (t) adviſes them who can not abſtain, to uſe it only ὡς νομιμὸν ἐσὶ, as the law allowed it. Now that, ſaith Plato (u), was τῶν ἐλευθέρων γυναικῶν μὴ ἅπτεσθαι, not to meddle with free women, but only libertines and ſervants, and thoſe that ſold themſelves to it. And Demoſthenes (x) declares of all the Grecians thus: Τὰς μὲν ἑταίρας ἡδονῆς ἕνεκα ἔχομεν, τὰς δὲ παλλακὰς τῆς καθ' ἡμέραν παλλακείας, τὰς δὲ γυναῖκας τῦ παιδοποιεῖσθαι γνησίως.

The τὸ παρὰ φύσιν τόλμημα, as Plato ſtyles it, obtained in Greece without blame, ſaith Berdeſanes (y) amongſt the Grecians and many Barbarians, ſaith Plato (z); amongſt the Cretians and Lacedæmonians, ſaith the ſame Plato. How prone the Romans and other nations were to it, Plautus, Petronius Arbiter, Ariſtophanes, and Athenæus (a), ſufficiently inform us, as alſo that it was the ſin of the philoſophers eſpecially.

Ver

Ver. 6. [d] Μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν, not to go beyond or defraud.] It is the opinion of all the Greek scholiasts, that this verse contains a prohibition of adultery, Πλεονεξίαν ἐνταῦθα τὴν μοιχείαν ἐκάλεσε. By the word πλεονεξία, he denotes adultery, say Theodoret and Thyophylact. God hath put bounds to this appetite, say Oecumenius and Theophylact, by tying us to one wife, ὥστε ἡ πρὸς ἑτέραν μίξις, παράδοσίς τις καὶ πλεονεξία ἐστὶν, so that to be familiar with one another is excess and covetousness; and when this is done to another man's wife, it is to exceed to the injury of his brother. And as (b) St Jerom hath observed, the words preceding, which speak of abstaining "from fornication, and keeping our vessels in sanc-"tification and honour, and not in the lusts of "concupiscence;" and the words following, which give this reason of the precept, that God hath not called us to uncleanness, but to holiness, seem also plainly to inforce this sense, which the Greek, in the judgment of the forecited fathers, will bear. For,

1. The words ὑπερβαίνειν and ἐπιβαίνειν, bear this sense in other authors. Thus Philo (c), speaking of unnatural lusts committed by men, saith ἀνδρες ὑπ' ἀλλήλων ἐπιβεβήκασι. And Plutarch (d) saith of the Egyptians, that they call "that land which Nile "ascends, mixing and engendering with it, the "body of Isis." And when Nile is thus ὑπερβαλὼν καὶ πλησιάσας, filling and ascending, they call this the joining of Osiris with Nepthe. So the Hebrew word בוא, from which Βῶ and Βάω, and from them βαῖνω, is derived, hath this signification, as Josh. 23. 12. If you contract affinity with the Heathens, ובאתם בהם and go in unto them, εἰ ἐπιγαμίας ποιήσετε, καὶ συγκατα-μιγῆτε αὐτοῖς, if you marry and mix with them, saith the Septuagint, the Lord will not drive them out. And in the Misnah, הביעל אחותן is, he that reveals the nakedness of his sister, and may be rendered ὑπερβαίνων τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτοῦ.

2. The word πλεονεξία bears the same sense in that verse, in which Venus promises to him that finds and brings her Cupid to her, not a bare kiss, but something more, saying, ἀ γυμνὸν τὸ φίλαμά τοι ξένε, καὶ πλέον ἔξεις. And Socrates (e) tells Callicles, pleading for those pleasures, That men ought not to be ἐπιθυμίας ἀκολάστους of unbounded lusts, σὺ δὲ πλεονεξίαν οἶμαι δεῖν ἀσκεῖν, but thou, saith he, thinkest that a man may exceed in these matters. And in the scholiast of (f) Aristophanes, these are put as words equivalent, ὑπερπαίειν, ὑπερβαίνειν, πλεονάζειν.

And whereas against this interpretation it is objected, that the words following, viz. in any matter, being general, will not admit of this restrained sense:

I answer, That in the Greek the words are ἐν τῷ πράγματι, and may be rendered, in this matter; or in the matter, viz. forementioned, or absolutely, in the matter; for so it plainly signifies in these words, 2 Cor. 7. 11. You have approved yourselves clear ἐν τῷ πράγματι, in this matter: and it being observed by Phavorinus and Suidas (g), that the word πράγμα is used by the ancients in an evil sense; and the apostolical constitutions complaining that the younger widows marrying again, under pretence that they (h) could not contain, were engaged in an evil matter; and by Oecumenius being glossed thus, ἐν τῇ μίξει, I hope I have sufficiently vindicated this interpretation of Dr Hammond and the ancients, from the exceptions of Mr le Clerc.

Ibid. Ἐν τῷ πράγματι, in this matter.] So it plainly signifies in those words, 2 Cor. 7. 11. You have approved yourselves clear ἐν τῷ πράγματι, in this matter.

Ver. 8. [e] Εἰς ἡμᾶς, to us.] To us apostles, to enable us to give you these commandments; and to us Christians, to render us the temples of the Holy Ghost, which temples we corrupt by our uncleanness, 1 Cor. 3. 15. 16. chap. 6. 15. 16. 17. and 11. 19. 2 Cor. 6. 16.

Ver. 9. [f] Θεοδίδακτοι, taught of God.] By this new commandment, that we love one another, 1 John 3. 11. 23. and 4. 21. Matth. 22. 39. θεοδίδακτοι γὰρ ἡμεῖς ἱερὰ ὄντως γράμματα παρὰ τοῦ ὑὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ παιδευόμενοι, saith Clemens of Alexandria (i), We are taught by God having the holy scriptures; and by the example of that God, who loved us, and gave his Son for us, Eph. 5. 2. Hence they who are taught of God, are said to hear (his commands) and learn (by his example), John 6. 45.

Ver. 11. [g] Τὰ ἴδια, to do your own business.] I follow here the sense of Dr Hammond, and other interpreters; though the following words, to work with your own hands, ſeem to lead to the doing their own buſineſs themſelves, and not to leave all to ſlaves and ſervants, as the idle and luxurious of old were wont to do. See Athenæus, l. 12.

Ver. 12. [b] Καὶ μηδενὸς χρείαν ἔχητε, and that ye may have lack of nothing.] i. e. From the Heathen. So the Greek ſcholiaſts: for, ſay they, if Chriſtians, ſeeing a Chriſtian beg, when he is able to live by his work, are ſcandalized, how much more will Heathens be ſo? And indeed this was one objection of the Heathens againſt Chriſtians, that they were (k) infructuoſi in negotiis, uſeleſs creatures. The apoſtle therefore doth exhort them ſo to provide for their neceſſities by their honeſt labour, that they may not need the help of infidels, and never may be forced by their wants to aſk it of them.

Ver. 13. [i] Καθὼς οἱ λοιποὶ, as do others.] Though many Heathens believed the immortality of the ſoul, none of them had any expectation of the reſurrection of the body. This the philoſophers, who ſtyled the body the priſon of the ſoul, and thought it the great hinderance of knowledge and of virtue, repreſented as a very deſpicable thing, (l) τὸ σφόδρα μιαρὸν, καὶ ἀπόπτυστον ἅμα καὶ ἀδύνατον. So Celſus: It is vile, ſaith he, abominable, and impoſſible; σκωλήκων ἡ ἐλπὶς, a hope fitter for worms than men. And he confutes the poſſibility of it, not only from the repugnancy of the thing to nature, but alſo from the vileneſs of it, declaring God therefore cannot do it, (m) "becauſe "as he will not do what is againſt nature, ſo he can-"not do what is vile." Plotinus ſaith, that ſuch a reſurrection would only be ἀνάστασις εἰς ἄλλον ὕπνον, a reſurrection to another ſleep. And all the other Heathens held it a thing impoſſible, and without example, and therefore made it matter of their ſport; it being, ſaith Origen, μυσήριον γελώμενον ὑπὸ τῶν ἀπίστων. See Juſtin. M. Apol. 2. p. 57. C. D. Theophilus ad Autol. l. p. 77. De Minuc. p. 11. Arnob. l. 2. p. 51. Lact. l. 7. c. 22.

Ver. 14. [k] Τοὺς κοιμηθέντας διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, thoſe that ſleep in, or through Jeſus.] That the martyrs are not here excluded, is certain; but I ſee no reaſon to grant, that this expreſſion ſhould peculiarly reſpect them. All the Greek ſcholiaſts interpret the words generally. Chryſoſtom and Theophylact ſay, that they who ſleep in Jeſus, are the faithful in general; Oecumenius, "thoſe that ſleep in the faith of Je-"ſus." The apoſtle treating of this ſubject, calls all the dead, τοὺς κοιμηθέντας ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, thoſe that ſleep in Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15. 18.; and the context here requires this ſenſe; for the apoſtle ſpeaks, ver. 13. of them that ſleep in general, and of the hope of the reſurrection in general. And when Chriſt comes to judgment, he will not bring the martyrs only, but all the faithful with him. See ver. 15. 16. where the ſame perſons are the dead with Chriſt.

Ver. 15. [l] Ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες, we who are alive.] It is well obſerved by the Greek ſcholiaſts, that the apoſtle ſpeaks theſe words, οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ ἑαυτῷ προσώπῳ, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῶν κατ' ἐκεῖνον τὸν καιρὸν περιόντων ἀνθρώπων, not of himſelf, but of the Chriſtians that were to remain alive at the day of judgment: ſo Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact; for he well knew he was not perſonally to live till the reſurrection; yea, he himſelf expected a reſurrection, ſaying to the Corinthians, He that raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe up us alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you, 2 Cor. 4. 14. He laboured that he might attain to the reſurrection of the dead, Phil. 3. 11. Yet there are ſome divines, who, from this and ſome other places in the epiſtles, conceive that the apoſtles ſometimes thought, and declared to other Chriſtians, that they themſelves might live until the reſurrection; and that St Paul afterwards changed this opinion, and admoniſhed the Theſſalonians of it, 2 Theſſ. 2. This I conceive to be a dangerous miſtake, and highly prejudicial to the Chriſtian faith, and the authority of the apoſtles; for if the churches of Chriſt had once received this doctrine from them, and afterwards had underſtood, even from their own confeſſion, that it was a miſtake, this would have naturally led them to conceive that they might have been miſtaken alſo in any other doctrine contained in their epiſtles, and to ſuſpect the certainty and truth of all that was contained in them. And this the apoſtle ſeemeth to inſinuate in theſe words, 2 Theſſ. 2. 1. 2. I beſeech you, brethren, that you be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, or troubled, either by word or letter, as from us, as that the day of Chriſt is at hand: for theſe words ſeem plainly to import, that in the apoſtle's own judgment, the belief that the apoſtles had taught by word, or by epiſtle, this doctrine, would tend to the unſettling of their minds in the faith.

But that St Paul taught no ſuch doctrine in any of his epiſtles to the Theſſalonians, will be exceeding evident.

1. From the following words in that chapter: for there, ſaith he, ver. 3. Let no man deceive you by any means; declaring them deceivers, who either taught this doctrine, or impoſed it on them, as ſpoken or indited by them; there alſo having ſaid in oppoſition to that vain imagination, that day was not to come, till there was a falling away firſt, and the man of ſin was revealed; he adds, Remember you not that when I was yet with you, I told you theſe things? ver. 5. He therefore had taught them the contrary, before he had indited either of these epistles, and therefore in them cannot rationally be supposed to contradict himself.

2. From the very words used for proof of this opinion; for they are introduced with this solemnity, This we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we that are alive; in which words he most plainly voucheth the authority of Christ Jesus for the truth of what he saith; and therefore, if he were mistaken, either our Lord himself must err with him, or the apostle must vouch Christ's word, and his authority, when Christ had spoken no such word, and given him no authority to speak this doctrine in his name; both which assertions overthrow the certainty and truth of all St Paul's epistles. Now, hence it follows, that the apostle could not deliver this assertion in any other of his epistles; for all the learned do agree in this, that these epistles to the Thessalonians were the first epistles St Paul wrote; whence it must follow, that he could not deliver in his following writings to that church or any other churches, that doctrine which he had so industriously before confuted, and declared very dangerous, in his epistle to the church of Thessalonica.

The truth seems therefore to be this, that as our Lord had told them, it was not for them to know the times and seasons, Acts 1. 7. so were they left still in the dark touching the time of the general judgment, and therefore they continually speak of it as a day that was to come upon men as a thief in the night, ipsis insciis, as here, chap. 5. 1. They perhaps did not know when it might happen, and so they say nothing at any time dogmatically, but only ἐιδιαζως, and disjunctly, if we shall be found clothed, and not naked; and here, chap. 5. 10. Whether we sleep or wake. Nor are these sayings to be taken personally, as meant of the apostles, but rather as spoken by them in the person of Christians in the general, some of which would be then surviving.

Ver. 16. [f] Καὶ ἐν σάλπιγγι Θεοῦ, and in the trump of God.] Pious here and fit to be regarded is the note of Theodoret, that if the loud sound of the trumpet, when the law was given from Mount Sinai, was so dreadful to the Jews, that they said to Moses, Let not the Lord speak to us, lest we die; how terrible must be the sound of this trumpet which calls all men to the final judgment?

Ver. 17. [m] Σὺν Κυρίῳ, with the Lord.] From which words it may be probably collected, that even the souls of the faithful were not ever with the Lord, or in his celestial presence before the resurrection.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. [a] BUT of the (exact) times and (critical) seasons, brethren, (when the coming of the Lord shall happen), you have no need that I should write unto you.

2. For (you) yourselves know perfectly (from what I taught when present with you) that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night, (of the time of whose coming the master of the house can have no certain knowledge, Matth. 24. 42. 43. and 25. 13. Mark 13. 33. Luke 12. 39. 40. and 21. 36.)

3. [b] For when they (of the Jewish nation then, and the wicked at the great day of wrath) shall say, Peace and safety, (expecting no such thing as wrath and judgment); then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape (it).

4. But ye, brethren, are not (as formerly) in (a state of) darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief, (or come upon you unexpected, or unprepared for it.)

5. Ye are all (by virtue of your faith and knowledge, and your profession of Christianity) the children of light, (as having the light, and believing in it, John 12. 36. Eph. 5. 8.), and the children of the day (of grace, Rom. 13. 12. 13. and of salvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2.): we are not of the night, nor of darkness, (as the Jewish nation at present is, upon whom the darkness is come, John 12. 35. and who are cast out into utter darkness; see note on Matth. 8. 12. and as the Heathens always were; see note on Rom. 13. 12.)

6. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, (securely in their sin, without expecting judgment, or preparing for it, Matth. 28. 38. Luke 17. 26.—30.); but let us watch and be sober, (that that day do not come upon us unawares, nor find us overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, Luke 21. 34. 36. this being only proper to them who are of the night.)

7. For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that are drunken, [c] are drunken in the night.

8. But let us who are (children) of the day, be sober, (and vigilant, 1 Pet. 4. 7. and 5. 8.), putting on the [d] breast-plate of faith and love, (that firm assurance of faith, which will not suffer us to doubt of the divine assistance, and that love which casts out fear of any thing we may suffer for the cause of Christ), and for an helmet (to your head), the hope of salvation.

9. (Which hope of salvation we Christians have); for God hath not appointed us unto wrath, (as he hath done the Heathen world who are children of wrath, Eph. 2. 3. and the unbelieving Jews, who are vessels of wrath fitted for destruction, Rom. 9. 22. and upon whom wrath is coming to the end, 1 Thess. 2. 16.);

2. 16.), but to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

10 Who died[e] for us, that whether we [f] wake or ſleep, (i. e. whether he come in the night, and ſo find us taking our natural reſt, or in the day when we are waking), we may live together with him (when he comes.)

11. Wherefore comfort yourſelves together (with this hope), and [g] edify one another, even as alſo you do.

12. And we beſeech you, brethren, to know (and reverence) them which labour among you, and [h] are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you;

13. And to eſteem them very highly in love for their works ſake. And be at peace among yourſelves.

14. Now (παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ, and) we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, (as walking not according to the doctrine they have received from us, 2 Theſſ. 3. 6. 14.), comfort the feeble-minded, (who are of a wounded ſpirit under afflictions, ὀλιγόψυχοι, Prov. 18. 14. that are of a fearful ſpirit under them, Iſ. 35. 4. of a grieved ſpirit, Iſ. 54. 6. whoſe ſpirit fails under them, Iſ. 57. 16. whoſe hands hang down, and whoſe knees are feeble, Heb. 12. 12.), ſupport the weak (in faith, who are ſoon ſcandalized, and apt to periſh by it, Rom. 14. 1. 2. 21. 1 Cor. 8. 7. and 9. 10. 11. 12.), be patient toward all men.

15. See that none render evil for evil unto any man, (whatever the provocation may be, Rom. 12. 27.): but ever follow that which is good, both among yourſelves, and to all men, (even them that hate you, Matth. 5. 44.)

16. [i] Rejoice evermore.

17. Pray [k] without ceaſing.

18. [l] In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Chriſt Jeſus concerning you.

19. [m] Quench not the Spirit.

20. [n] Deſpiſe not prophecyings.

21. [o] Prove all things (by the ſpirit of diſcretion which is in the church, and the conſonancy of their pretended prophecies and interpretations with what we have delivered to you; and then) hold faſt that which is good.

22. (And) [p] abſtain from all appearance of evil.

23. And the very God of peace ſanctify you wholly: and I pray God (that) your [q] whole ſpirit, and ſoul and body be preſerved blameleſs to the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

24. [r] Faithful is he who calleth you (to this holineſs), who alſo will do (his part towards) it.

25. Brethren, pray for us. (See note on Col. 4. 4.)

26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiſs.

27. [s] I charge you by the Lord, that this epiſtle be read to all the holy brethren.

28. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. 2. [a] THat all this to the 12th verſe doth evidently belong only to the deſtruction of the perſecuting Jews and Gnoſtics, at the time of Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the Jewiſh church and nation, is confidently aſſerted by a reverend and learned commentator on this place; but is not once hinted by the ancients, who all interpret theſe words περὶ τῆς κοινῆς συντελείας, of Chriſt's general advent. Nor do his arguments prove his aſſertion.

Arg. 1. Firſt, Whereas he ſaith, Ἡμέρα Χριστοῦ, "the "day of Chriſt," here mentioned, "is, without "queſtion, the ſame which is ſo often called the "coming of Chriſt, for the deſtroying of the ene-"mies of Chriſtianity:"

Anſ. It is certain, that this day of Chriſt, in the epiſtles, doth almoſt generally ſignify the day of our Lord's coming to the final judgment; as in the following words: He ſhall confirm you unto the end, that you may be blameleſs in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. 1. 8.; That the Spirit may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. 5. 5.; You are our rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jeſus, 2 Cor. 1. 14; He that hath begun a good work in you, ſhall perfect it to the day of the Lord Jeſus, Philip. 1. 6.; That ye may be ſincere, and blameleſs, until the day of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 10.; That I may rejoice in the day of Chriſt, Philip. 2. 16. See 2 Tim. 1. 12. 18. and 4. 8.

Arg. 2. Secondly, Whereas he adds, "That this "cannot belong to the laſt coming of Chriſt to "judgment; becauſe the apoſtle had made that "the ſubject of his former diſcourſe, chap. 4. and "enters upon this as a diſtinct matter, with a περὶ "δὲ," &c.:

Anſ. It is granted, that the time when this judgment ſhall be is a diſtinct matter from the judgment itſelf, which is all that this argument proves.

Arg. 3. Thirdly, Whereas he argues this, "From "the end of this diſcourſe, which is to comfort the "Chriſtians which were under perſecution, and give "them patience and conſtancy, for which this was "a fit conſideration, that this judgment of God "would come ſuddenly, and when it was leaſt ex-"pected, and ſo would ſurpriſe them if they were "not watchful; all which belonged peculiarly to "this doom upon the Jews, and not to the general "judgment, which thoſe who then lived were not "concerned in:"

Anſ.

Ans. 1*st*, It is certain, that the apostle both in this epistle, chap. 4. 18. and in his other epistle, chap. 1. doth comfort his Thessalonians under their persecutions, from the consideration of Christ's coming to reward them at the day of judgment.

2*dly*, It is also certain, that Christ and his apostles exhort Christians to be watchful, that they may not be surprised at the day of judgment. So doth Christ, Matth. 25. 13. Luke 12. 35.—40. So doth St Paul, 2 Cor. 5. 9. 10. So doth St Peter, 2 Pet. 3. 11. 12. 14. as being that which all men, who must die, and after that be judged according to what they have done in the flesh, must be as well concerned to prepare for, by watchfulness, as if it were to come while they were living; and upon this account it is that the apostle, in this chapter, ver. 23. and in the forecited places, prays so oft that Christians may be confirmed, and kept blameless to the day of the Lord Jesus.

Let it be then observed, that the apostle had spoken, chap. 1. 10. of their waiting for the coming of the Lord from heaven; chap. 3. 13. Of his coming with all his saints; chap. 4. 16. Of his coming with the voice of the archangel, and of the trump of God. He had also hinted, chap. 2. 10. that the unbelieving Jews were, by their opposition to the gospel, preached to the Gentiles, and by their persecutions of them who had embraced it, filling up the measure of their sins, and drawing down that day of wrath upon them, which is mentioned, Matth. 24. I therefore shall descant on these words, as relating to both these days of judgment.

Ver. 3. [b] Josephus (n) informs us, that when the tumults foretold by our Saviour were begun, the Jews were expecting σημεῖα ἐλευθερίας, signs from God of their liberty; and that "after all the clear signs "God had given them of their approaching ruin, "and when it was even accomplished, they were "confidently expecting τὴν ἀπὸ Θεοῦ βοήθειαν, the divine "aid (o)." And, which is more remarkable, that the promise of a Messiah, which their sacred books declared was to come κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν ἐκεῖνον, about that time, was τὸ ἐπάραν αὐτοὺς μάλιστα πρὸς πόλεμον, that which chiefly incited them to the war (p).

Ver. 7. [c] Note, O the sad dissoluteness of the manners of the Christians of our age, who frequently are guilty of that drunkenness in the day-time, which Heathens only practised in the night!

Ver. 8. [d] Θώρακα, the breast-plate of faith, &c.] This metaphor, relating to our Christian warfare, is taken from soldiers who anciently watched, or kept centinel in their armour, having especially their helmet and breast-plate on; for, as Livy (q) notes, Scuto præ se erecto stabant galeati, "they stood "with their shield before them, and their helmet "on their heads." Whence he says of Paulus Æmilius, that milites novo more scutum in vigiliam ferre vetuit, "after a new manner he forbade the soldiers "to wear their shield when they watched." Now, the head and heart being the two chief fountains of life and sensation, the preserving them safe, is, in effect, the preserving of the whole man.

Ver. 10. [e] Εἴτε γρηγορῶμεν, εἴτε καθεύδωμεν·] that is, say some, whether we live or die: and true it is, that Christians dying are said to fall asleep. So 1 Cor. 11. 30. κοιμῶνται ἱκανοί, some are fallen asleep; chap. 15. 51. πάντες μὲν οὐ κοιμηθησόμεθα, we shall not all sleep; so here, chap. 4. 13. I would not have you ignorant, περὶ τῶν κεκοιμημένων, concerning them that are fallen asleep; and ver. 14. τοὺς κοιμηθέντας, them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. But because in all these places the Greek word is never καθεύδω, but always κοιμάομαι, I prefer the exposition of the paraphrase.

But then that the hope of salvation, ver. 8. the περιποίησιν σωτηρίας, the obtainment of salvation by Christ Jesus, ver. 9. the living with him, ver. 10. should refer chiefly to the purchase of deliverance from Jewish persecutions, and the enjoyment of this present life, I can by no means grant; for the Christian's hope is the hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 3.; the hope of the redemption of the body from corruption, chap. 8. 23. 24.; the hope which is laid up for us in heaven, Col. 1. 5.; the hope of glory, ver. 27.; a blessed hope, Tit. 2. 13.; the hope of eternal life, chap. 3. 7.

The salvation purchased for us by Christ's death is not deliverance from persecutions, for all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecutions, 2 Tim. 3. 12.; in these we are to be conformed to his death, Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 12. he having suffered, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps, 1 Pet. 2. 21.

And to live with Christ, is to live in a state of glory with him, and be conformed to his resurrection, Rom. 6. 8. 2 Tim. 2. 12. Col. 3. 3. 4. 1 Pet. 4. 13. And this is the comfort which the apostle had given them, chap. 4. 18. and to which he now proceeds.

over them, in the plural, ſhould be the biſhops of the metropolis of Theſſalonica, ſeems very improbable, there being ſcarcely any ordinary fixed officers then placed in the church, anno Chriſti 49 or 51, when this epiſtle was written: and therefore the learned Mr Dodwell (r), notwithſtanding theſe words, ſaith, Quod nulla ſit rectorum mentio in utravis epiſtola ad Theſſalonicenſes, "that there is no "mention of any fixed rulers in either of the epi-"ſtles to the Theſſalonians." And, 1. We find no notice taken of them in the front of theſe epiſtles, as there is of the biſhops and deacons, Philip. 1. 1.; no ſalutation of them in the cloſe of theſe epiſtles, the words of ſalutation being only theſe, Salute all the brethren with an holy kiſs. 2. We find no directions given to them in particular, (but only to the brethren in general), touching ſuch matters as muſt have related to their office only, or chiefly, had they been ſettled rulers in the church. The charge in the very next verſe runs thus, We exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak. In the ſecond epiſtle, chap. 3. 6. thus, We command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw yourſelves from every brother that walks diſorderly, and not according to the tradition which ye received from us. And, ver. 13. 14. And ye, brethren,— if any man obey not our word by this epiſtle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be aſhamed; yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother. And, laſtly, To theſe brethren the adjuration is here directed, ver. 27. charging them by the Lord, that this epiſtle be read to all the holy brethren. It is therefore to be noted, that the apoſtles, prophets, preachers, evangeliſts, who were all extraordinary officers, are reckoned among thoſe whom God had ſettled in the church, 1 Cor. 12. 12. and Chriſt, aſcending up on high, had given for the edification of his body, Eph. 4. 11. 12. Some of theſe prophets and teachers were in moſt churches, as at Antioch, Acts 13. 1. and officiated in them, ver. 3.; at Rome, chap. 12. 6. 7.; at Corinth, 1 Cor. 14.; at Galatia, ſee note on chap. 6. 1. Some of them were itinerants, ſent by the apoſtles or prophets to teach other churches, and by the Holy Spirit ſeparated to that work, Acts 13. 2. 3. 4. exhorting and confirming the Chriſtians where they came, as being prophets authorized ſo to do, Acts 16. 32. and travelling up and down for the converting and eſtabliſhing of the Gentiles, 3d epiſtle of St John, ver. 7. 8.; ſee note on 1 Cor. 12. 28. Of one of theſe two kinds of prophets, and teachers, and ſpiritual men, the apoſtle may here be underſtood.

Ibid. Know them who labour among you, and are over you in the Lord.] Here, ſaith Theophylact, "if you honour them who preſide over you in tem-"poral affairs, how much more ſhould you reſpect "them who do it in ſpiritual things, who regene-"rate you in baptiſm, pray for you, viſit you in ſick-"neſs, and miniſter phyſic to your ſouls?"

Ver. 16. ᵇ Κἂν εἰς πειρασμὸς, κἂν εἰς λύπας ἐμπέσητε.] Oecumenius, Though you fall into manifold temptations and afflictions, James 1. 2. and be brought into a very low condition in this world, yet rejoice in the Lord always, Philip. 4. 4.; Rejoice in the hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 3. and of that great reward you ſhall receive for all your ſufferings, Matth. 5. 11. 12. Heb. 10. 34. and in the ſpiritual fruits they work in you, Rom. 5. 4. James 1. 3.

Ver. 17. ⁱ Ἀδιαλείπτως, without ceaſing.] To give, once for all, the true ſenſe of thoſe injunctions, ſo frequent in the ſcripture, to pray, and to give thanks always, and without ceaſing; obſerve,

1. That theſe phraſes do, in the mildeſt ſenſe, import, that theſe ſhould be the employment of every day, our morning and evening ſacrifice, that ſo beginning and ending the day with them, we may be, in the ſcripture-language, ſaid to do them always. Thus St Luke tells us, chap. 24. 53. that the apoſtles were continually in the temple, διαπαντὸς, praiſing God, that is, they were καθ' ἡμέραν, daily in the temple, Acts 2. 46. 47. reſorting thither at the third hour of the morning, and at the ninth of the evening-ſacrifice, Acts 3. 1. The ſacrifice which was appointed to be thus offered daily at morning and evening, is, in the Hebrew תמיד, the continual ſacrifice, Dan. 8. 11. and accordingly is rendered by the Septuagint ἡ θυσία διαπαντὸς. Thus the Minchah, which the high prieſt offered every day, half of it in the morning, and half in the evening, is ſtyled by them ἡ θυσία διαπαντὸς, the continual ſacrifice, Lev. 6. 20.; the burnt-offering which was offered without intermiſſion, twice a-day, is, in the Hebrew, תמיד עלת, and in the Seventy, ὁλοκαύτωμα τὸ διαπαντὸς, the continual ſacrifice, Numb. 28. 24. 31. And in alluſion to it, the author to the Hebrews ſaith of our High Prieſt, By him let us offer up the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually. This therefore is the prime import of the phraſe.

2. Theſe phraſes do import, that we ſhould be employed in the performance of theſe duties, as Providence doth miniſter occaſion for them. In this ſenſe is the word always uſed twice, when our Lord ſaith, I was always in the temple, whether the Jews always reſort, John 18. 20.; for neither did the Jews always reſort unto the temple, but only at the hours of prayer, nor did Chriſt always teach in it, but only when he went up to Jerusalem. And thus the Holy Ghost in scripture leads us to expound these phrases, injoining us to abound always to every good work, 2 Cor. 9. 8. and elsewhere to do good ὡς καιρὸν ἔχωμεν, as we have occasion, Gal. 6. 10.; so to pray always, Luke 18. 1. is to pray ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, in every season, chap. 21. 36.; and to pray without ceasing here, is to pray ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ, in every opportunity, Eph. 6. 18.; so 1 Maccab. 12. 11. Ἡμεῖς δὲ ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ ἀδιαλείπτως, We at all times, without ceasing, both in our feasts, and other convenient days, do remember you in the sacrifices which we offer, i. e. we do it as oft as we have occasion to offer sacrifice.

3. In reference to our prayers particularly, it imports, that we should not grow faint and weary, when Providence seems for a season to defer the blessing we implore, Luke 18. 1. but should still προσμένειν, abide in supplication, 1 Tim. 5. 5. and ἀγρυπνῶν, watch unto it with all perseverance, Eph. 6. 18.

Ver. 18. [k] Ἐν παντὶ, in every thing;] for sparing and preventing, for common and extraordinary, general and special, past and present, temporary and spiritual mercies; not only for prosperous and grateful, but also for afflicting providences, for chastisements and seasonable corrections: Πάντας γὰρ πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον τοῦτο ὁ Θεὸς, κἂν ἡμεῖς ἀγνοῶμεν αὐτοῦ τὰς οἰκονομίας· for God designs them all for our good, though we at present see not how they tend unto it.

Ver. 19. [l] Quench not the Spirit;] Τοῦτο, χάρισμα μὴ ἐμφάσεσθε ἢ κολύετε, τῷ ἀποστρέφεσθαι ἢ μὴ ἐᾶν λαλεῖν· that is, Hinder not the gifts of the Spirit, by turning away from them that have them, and not suffering them to speak. These gifts were quenched by strife, emulation, schisms, and contention about them, 1 Cor. 3. 1. 3. 2. By a disorderly use of them, not to the edification of the church, but to vain ostentation, confusion in the church, and the scandal of Heathens, 1 Cor. 14.; by a neglect to exercise them, 1 Tim. 4. 14.; and by the prohibition of them; Forbid not to speak with tongues, 1 Cor. 15. 39.

Ver. 20. [m] Προφάσει τῶν ψευδοπροφητῶν, ἢ τὰς ἀληθεῖς λύσωσι, Oecumenius. Some of these false prophets had crept into the church of Thessalonica, as is hinted in those words, Be not troubled by (them who pretend a revelation from the) Spirit, as if the day of Christ were at hand, 2 Thess. 2. 2. which made them less regardful of what was delivered by men pretending to this gift, and made it necessary for St John to say, Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they be of God; for many false prophets are gone out into the world, 1 John 4. 1.; and to prevent the mischief the Thessalonians might receive from them, the apostle here adds, Try all things, &c. ver. 21.

Ver. 21. [n] Δοκιμάζετε, try.] Note, That the apostle doth not here bid the guides of the church try all things, and the people hold fast that which they delivered to them; but gives an injunction common to all Christians, having their senses exercised to discern betwixt good and evil, to all who are obliged to hold fast that which is good, and not to believe false prophets; which is a strong argument for the perspicuity and the sufficiency of the holy scripture for this work, and against the necessity of a living judge; for he that must try all things, must also try the doctrine of this living judge; and therefore, till he hath made this trial, must not admit his doctine as an article of Christian faith; for these words plainly teach, that what we must hold fast, must first be tried. "Hearers," saith St Basil, "who are instructed in the "scriptures, ought to try the things spoken by their "teachers, καὶ τὰ μὲν σύμφωνα ταῖς γραφαῖς δέχεσθαι, τὰ δὲ "ἀλλότρια ἐκβάλλειν, and receive those doctrines which "are consonant, and reject those which are alien "from the holy scriptures; because St Paul hath "said, Try all things; hold fast that which is good." See Clem. Alex. strom. 1. p. 354. strom. 6. p. 655. Orig. in Joh. tom. 19. ed. Huet. p. 268. and hom. 2. in Ezek. F. 135. G. St Jerom. in ep. ad Eph. l. 3. c. 5. p. 101. Cyril of Alex. in Joh. l. 4. p. 374. 407. and l. 1. adv. Nestor. p. 2.

Ver. 22. [o] Ἀπὸ παντὸς εἴδους πονηροῦ, from all kinds or sorts of evil.] So the Syriac doth render these words. So Chrysostom and Theophylact upon this place. St Basil and Leontius, cited by Dr Hammond, who descant thus upon the words, Fly not from this, or that only, but from every sin. Or, 2*dly*, If the apostle here exhorts us to abstain from all appearance of evil, his meaning cannot be this, that we should abstain from what appears evil to others, it being in many cases impossible to know what appears so, and impracticable to act by such a rule, because it would destroy our Christian liberty in things indifferent, and create in our minds continual perplexities, there being scarcely any thing which may not appear evil to some or other of those numerous sects which swarm among us; he therefore only must injoin us to abstain from that which, after trial, seems evil to ourselves, and is judged by us so to be; for the apostle makes these two things, the holding that which is good, and the abstaining from all appearance of evil, the consequent of trying all things. Now, we try all things, that, after trial, we may hold that which seemeth to us good, and abstain from that which seemeth to us evil, not to abstain from that which seemeth so to others only.

Ver. 23. [p] Ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ πνεῦμα, ἢ ἡ ψυχὴ, ἢ τὸ σῶμα, your whole spirit, and soul, and body.] Here the apostle justifies the ancient and true philosophy, that man is, as Nemesius styles him, τριμερὴς ὑπόστασις, a compound of three different parts. This was the doctrine of the Pythagoreans, as we learn from Jambilicus (s), who having told us, that man conſiſts of ſoul and body, adds, that the ſoul conſiſts of two parts, one endued with reaſon, and one without reaſon. This alſo was the philoſophy of the Platoniſts, as we learn from Nemeſius (t), Salluſt, and Laertius, who informs us, that there is in man a ſoul irrational, which follows the affections of the body, and a mind which uſeth the body as its inſtrument, and fights againſt it. This alſo was the doctrine of the Stoics; whence Antoninus ſaith, the three conſtituent parts of man are, σῶμα, ψυχὴ, νῦς, the body, ſoul, and mind. Irenæus (u), and Clemens of Alexandria (x) and Origen (y), ſay the ſame. Mr le Clerc here is very poſitive, that this philoſophy is falſe, and that there is nothing in man but his body and his reaſonable ſoul; but he ſaith nothing to ſuſtain this confidence againſt thoſe two excellent philoſophers, Gaſſendus (z), and Dr Willis (a), who have eſtabliſhed this philoſophy beyond all reaſonable contradiction. Nor can the conflict betwixt the mind and ſpirit, and the fleſh, mentioned, Rom. 7. 14.—25. and Gal. 5. 16. 17. be explained; nor can any man tell what the τὸ ἀρχικὸν, or ruling principle in us, is to govern, without admitting this inferior ſoul as the fountain of all our ſenſual appetites; or even tell us what it is to die, unleſs it be to make this inferior ſoul, which conſiſts in the motion of the animal ſpirits, and the ſenſitive appetites they produce in us, to ceaſe to act, or move, as formerly. He will have ψυχὴ here to ſignify life, as indeed it doth in other places, but never where the conſtituent parts of a man are enumerated, as here they are; and ſeeing the ſpirit and the body are unqueſtionably the conſtituent parts of a man, it is reaſonable to conceive, that the ψυχὴ mentioned here muſt be ſo alſo, eſpecially ſince it is divided from the ſpirit and the body by the particle καὶ. Moreover, by following the motions of this brutiſh appetite, is a man ſtyled ψυχικὸς, the animal man; and by being animated and informed by this ψυχὴ, is the body called σῶμα ψυχικὸν, an animal body, 1 Cor. 15. 44. 45.; and by conveying of this ψυχὴ, or inferior ſoul to his poſterity, is the firſt Adam ſaid to be made εἰς ψυχὴν ζῶσαν, to convey this animal life to his poſterity; though this at laſt may be only a ſtrife about words, the animal ſpirits being included in the body.

Ver. 24. ὁ πιστὸς ὁ καλῶν ὑμᾶς, Faithful is he that calleth you.] Who therefore will not be wanting in what is requiſite on his part towards it: I ſay his part; for if the fidelity of God required that he would ſanctify and preſerve us blameleſs to the end, without our care and induſtry, or ſhould work in us abſolutely and certainly that care, and the apoſtle believed this, how could he fear leſt the Theſſalonians ſhould be ſo overcome by Satan's temptations, as that his labour with them might have been in vain, 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. this being in effect to fear that God might be unfaithful to his promiſe?

Ver. 27. ἐνορκίζω ὑμᾶς, I adjure you by the Lord.] In judicial oaths the cuſtom among the Jews was, not for the perſon who came under the obligation of an oath, to pronounce the words of ſwearing with his own mouth, but an oath was exacted from him by the magiſtrate or ſuperior, and ſo he became bound to anſwer upon oath by hearing the voice of adjuration, φωνὴν ὁρκισμοῦ, ſo the Septuagint, Lev. 5. 1. See Gen. 50. 15. thy father ὥρκισε, made us ſwear before he died; Joſh. 6. 26. ὥρκισεν Ἰησοῦς ἐναντίον Κυρίου, Joſhua adjured them, ſaying, Curſed be the man before the Lord, that riſeth up and buildeth Jericho; 1 Sam. 14. 24. Saul had adjured the people, ὁρκίσας ὥρκισε τὸν λαὸν, ſaying, Curſed be the man that eateth any food; that is, he charged the people with an oath; 1 Kings 22. 16. Ποσάκις ὁρκίζω σε; How oft ſhall I adjure thee? So in the New Teſtament, the high prieſt ſaith to Chriſt, ὁρκίζω σὲ κατὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ ζῶντος, I adjure thee by the living God. Now, hence two things are evident, 1. That St Paul did not judge all judicial oaths unlawful, for then he would not have laid this oath upon his Theſſalonians. 2. That Chriſt did not forbid judicial, but only voluntary oaths, becauſe it was not in the power of the Jews to whom he ſpake, to avoid judicial oaths, nor would he then have anſwered to the adjuration of the high prieſt.

THE PREFACE TO THE Second EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS.

HAVING offered a new interpretation of the ſecond chapter of this epiſtle, which treateth of the man of ſin, commonly called Antichriſt, there mentioned, I ſhall here give the reaſons why I could not acquieſce in any of the expoſitions already given either by Proteſtants or Papiſts, and anſwer ſome objections againſt the expoſition I have put upon the words of the apoſtle in that chapter. And,

§ 1. Firſt, Whereas Mr Obadiah Walker hath taken a great deal of pains to apply all that the apoſtle ſaith to Mahomet and his followers, that vain conceit will be demonſtratively confuted from the following conſiderations.

1. That the apoſtle here exhorts the Theſſalonians, not to be ſhaken in mind, or troubled either by Spirit, or by letter, or by word as from us (the apoſtles), as if the day of the Lord were at hand, ver. 2. Now, what day doth the apoſtle mean? Surely that day when the Lord ſhall conſume the wicked one by the breath of his mouth, and by the brightneſs of his coming, ver. 8. Now, ſure it is that Mahomet came not till 567 years after the writing this epiſtle, viz. A.D. 608. nor is our Lord yet come to conſume him with the breath of his mouth, nor know we when he will do ſo: how therefore could it be that they who were foretold ſo punctually of the apoſtaſy which ſhould introduce the man of ſin, and what yet hindered the revelation of him in his ſeaſon, as the Theſſalonians were, ver. 5. 6. ſhould think the day of the Lord's coming to deſtroy Mahomet and his followers was at hand? Or that they ſhould be led into this apprehenſion by any word, epiſtle, or revelation, made, ſpoken, or written by the apoſtles or prophetic men concerning him? Could they then know from the mouth of St Paul, that this man of ſin was one Mahomet, who was not to appear till 567 years after his ſpeaking of him, and when he did appear, was to continue above a thouſand years before the coming of our Lord to conſume him, and yet by any of his words be induced to conceive the day of the Lord was at hand?

Moreover, If the coming of our Lord here mentioned, was to conſume the beaſt, or Roman antichriſt, ſeeing this beaſt was to ariſe out of the ruins of the Roman empire, and if St Paul had told them any thing from Daniel of this matter, he muſt have let them know that this was ſo; and alſo that this antichriſt, when riſen out of the ruins of the empire, was to continue for a time and times and half a time, that is, 1260 years before the coming of our Saviour to deſtroy him. It is as difficult to conceive how, after this, the Theſſalonians could think Chriſt's coming to conſume the beaſt, could be then inſtant when this epiſtle was indited.

§ 2. Arg. 2. I argue, ſecondly, againſt this opinion, from thoſe words, Remember ye not, that when I was with you, I told you of theſe things, ver. 5. 6. 7. that is, I told you of the apoſtaſy that was to precede the man of ſin; how he ſhould exalt himſelf above all that is called God, &c.; and what it was that hindered his being revealed in his ſeaſon. Now, can any one believe that the apoſtle, who was not with the Theſſalonians long enough to perfect what was lacking in their faith, 1 Theſſ. 3. 10. ſhould yet employ his time in telling them a long ſtory of the apoſtaſy of the Arians and Neſtorians, ſaith Mr Walker, and of one Mahomet, who ſhould thus exalt himſelf, and what then hindered his being revealed? Could he ſay that very myſtery of iniquity, this Mahomet, was to bring into the world, then wrought, only becauſe there were ſome heretics, already come, who confeſſed not that Jeſus Chriſt was come in the fleſh, though Mahomet confeſſed this very freely? As well may it be ſaid, that the myſtery of Quakeriſm, wrought in the ſecond and third centuries, becauſe some heretics of those times taught doctrines like those they now profess.

And since it is equally improbable the apostle, in that little time, should speak to them of the apostasy of the church of Rome from the faith, and how the Bishop of Rome should lord it over Christian emperors, and over the laws of God and Christ, and wear out the saints of the Most High for 1260 years, and is still more improbable, that he should say all this then to them, and here again bring the same thing to their remembrance, and yet that not the least intimation of any thing of this nature should appear in any Christian writers on this subject, for six following centuries; since, I say, this is so, this argument must be of equal strength against those who conceive the Papal antichrist should primarily and chiefly be intended here.

§ 3. Arg. 3. Thirdly, I argue against this opinion from those words, And then shall that wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the breath of his mouth, &c. ver. 8. For hence it seems plain, this wicked one was to be destroyed by the coming of our Lord soon after the time of his revelation, and not above a thousand years after; as both the opinion of those Papists, who say that he is Mahomet, and of those Protestants who say he is the Pope and his clergy, must make the interval betwixt his revelation and destruction be; for the same thing that hindered his revelation, hindered the coming of our Lord to destroy him thus revealed: and these two things seem to be thus connected: "The "day of the Lord will not come till there come first "an apostasy, and by that a revelation of the man "of sin; when therefore this apostasy, and this re- "velation of the man of sin happens, then will "Christ come to consume him." And otherwise the Christians of after-ages might have been subject, from the apostle's words, to a like mistake to that here mentioned, seeing, to tell them they had no reason yet to expect this day of the Lord, because it was not to come till the man of sin was revealed, and to add, when that which hindered the revelation of him in his season was once taken away, then should he also be revealed, whom the Lord should consume with the brightness of his coming, must fairly lead them to expect this day soon after his revelation, and not after he had been thus revealed above a thousand years.

§ 4. Those arguments are such as equally confute the opinion of those Protestants who conceive the apostle primarily to characterize the Pope and his clergy, and of those who apply these words to Mahomet.

Arg. 4. But, fourthly, I argue against them who suppose Mahomet to be the man here intended, from these words of the apostle, that the coming of this wicked one shall be according to the working of Satan, in all power, signs, and lying wonders, ver. 9; for the words δυνάμεις, σημεῖα, τέρατα, powers, signs, and wonders, are never used in scripture for any wonderful things done by God upon men, or any ecstasies or conferences of angels with them, but always for outward signs done by them upon other things or persons; such as were the healing of the sick and lame, the casting out of devils, the raising of the dead. See note on Heb. 2. 4. Now, Mahomet every where professeth that he came not with any such miracles, and therefore he could not be the person here designed. For his opposers demanded of him such miracles, saying, "Moses and Jesus, "according to thy own doctrine, wrought miracles "to prove their mission from God, and therefore if "thou be a prophet, and greater than any that were "ever sent before thee, as thou boastest thyself to "be, do thou the like miracles to manifest it to us; "do thou make the dead to rise, the dumb to speak, "the deaf to hear, &c. and then we will believe in "thy word." This objection, saith Dr Prideaux (a), he endeavoured to evade by several answers. "One "while he tells them, he is only a man sent to "preach to them the rewards of paradise, and the "punishments of hell; at another time, that their "predecessors contemned the miracles of Saleh and "the other prophets, and that for this reason God "would work no more among them; and a while "after, that those whom God had ordained to be- "lieve, should believe without miracles, and those "whom he had not ordained to believe, should not "be convinced though all these miracles should be "wrought in their sight which they required. But "this not satisfying, as being a plain confession that "he wanted that power of miracles, which all other "prophets had to prove their mission, several of "those that were his followers departed from him. "Having therefore got the sword into his hand, "and an army to back his cause, his doctrine then "was, that God had sent Moses and Jesus with mi- "racles, and yet men would not be obedient to "their word; and therefore he had now sent him in "the last place without miracles, to force them by "the power of the sword to do his will.

"However," says he, "it is not to be denied, "that there are several miracles reckoned up which "Mahomet is said to have wrought; as that he did "cleave the moon in two; that the trees went forth "to meet him; and that the stones saluted him;" which are the miracles here mentioned by Mr Walker. But then he adds, "That they who relate

" them are only such as are reckoned among their " fabulous and legendary writers; their learned " doctors renounce them all, as doth Mahomet him- " self, who, in several places of his Alcoran, owns " that he wrought no miracles."

§ 5. Against the opinion of Grotius, that Caius Caligula was the man of sin, it is superfluous to say much, it being grounded upon an error in chronology, that St Paul writ this epistle A. D. 40. when Caius appeared; whereas it is certain from 1 Thess. 1. 5. that Paul had been at Thessalonica before this epistle was writ: for St Paul went up to Jerusalem, say the best chronologers, A. D. 49. and it is evident that then he had not been at Thessalonica, and so had writ no epistle to them, it being writ after his entrance in to them, ver. 9.; after he had spoken to them the gospel of God, chap. 2. 2.; after he had been taken from them for a short time, ver. 17. Now, that he had not been at Thessalonica before his going up to the council at Jerusalem, appears from the history of the Acts, which saith, that after this council he went to Antioch, chap. 15. 30.; then through Syria and Cilicia, ver. 41.; then to Derbe and Lystra, chap. 16. 1. 2.; then through Phrygia, Galatia, and Mysia, and so to Troas, ver. 6. 7. 8.; then to Samothracia, Neapolis, and Philippi, ver. 11. 12.; and having passed through Amphipolis, and Apollonia, he came to Thessalonica, chap. 17. 1. He therefore coming only thither eight years after the death of Caius, and not writing this epistle till after he had left them, could not then write of Caius as the man of sin to be yet revealed.

§ 6. I pass on to the interpretatation of Dr Hammond, which is this.

1. " That the man of sin, the son of perdition, " was Simon Magus, together with his followers " the Gnostics, designed for destruction. Paraph. " on ver. 3.

2. " That Simon Magus setting himself in the " head of them, Christ should destroy him by extra- " ordinary means, the preaching and the miracles of " St Peter; and the Gnostics that adhered to him, " at the destruction of the unbelieving Jews. Pa- " raph. on ver. 8.

3. " That the falling away first, must be a great " departure or defection from the faith to the here- " sy of the Gnostics, or the Christians breaking off " their compliance with the impenitent Jews, leaving them as obdurate, and departing avowedly " to the Gentiles. Paraph on ver. 3.

4. " That which with-holdeth, and he that let- " teth, was the apostles not giving over preaching " to the Jews as hopeless and refractory, and going " to the Gentiles. Paraph. on ver. 6.; and the " Christians walking warily, and doing nothing " contrary to the Mosaical law.

5. " That the mystery already working was this sort " of men already formed into a sect under their ring- " leaders Simon and Carpocrates. Paraph. on ver. 7.

Now, against this opinion I argue,

1. From the day of the Lord here mentioned, ver. 1. 2. for that indeed doth often signify in scripture the day of the Lord's coming to the destruction of the temple, city, and nation of the Jews, which, saith the Reverend Dr Hammond, is the true import of the phrase here; but it never signifies his coming to destroy Simon Magus. Moreover, it is plain from the 8th verse, that this coming of the Lord is to destroy the man of sin, he being to be destroyed by the brightness of his coming; how then can this day be the time appointed for the destruction of Simon Magus, who perished some years before Christ's coming to the destruction of Jerusalem? For, according to Valesius (b), Eusebius, and Simeon Metaphrastes, Simon perished in the reign of Claudius; he coming then to Rome, and St Peter then also coming after him, to detect his frauds; whence he well argues, that (c) " it is not probable he " should long there insult over the Christian faith, " St Peter being then present to oppose him." Now, if this be true, he perished at the least sixteen years before the destruction of Jerusalem, and Christ came to destroy him within four years after the writing this epistle. If he perished, as others will have it, in the fourth of Nero, he must die twelve years before Christ came to destroy Jerusalem; or if he continued till the twelfth of Nero, opposing Christianity twelve years at Rome, under the very nose of the two chief apostles, which is not very probable, yet must he die four years before Christ's coming to the destruction of Jerusalem, and therefore could not be destroyed by the brightness of his coming.

Must we then refer this only to the destruction of his followers the Gnostics? That they were then in being, I could never yet see proved, and much less that any of them perished at the destruction of Simonem sub Claudio Romam venisse, et fraudulenta edidisse miracula, cumque etiam constet Petrum ejusdem Claudii temporibus Romam se contulisse, ad Simonis fraudes confutandas, verisimile non est Simonem tam diu, præsente et adstante Petro, insultasse fidei Christianæ.

Jerusalem.

Jeruſalem. I know the Doctor cites Euſebius (d), as ſaying that the Gnoſtics, Θόγυ δύσπλον εἰς τὸ παλιλλὲς ἀπισθήκασιν, in a moment were utterly extinct; whereas it is manifeſt Euſebius ſays this, not of the Gnoſtics, but the Nicolaitans; nor could he ſay it of them who flouriſhed chiefly in the ſecond century: whence it is ſtyled Seculum Gnoſticum: moreover, it is a plain flaw in this, or any like interpretation, to make the head of any party with his followers, to be the man of ſin to be conſumed by the coming of our Lord; and yet to make the antiſignanus periſh before his coming, and his followers only at it.

Add to this, that the whole foundation of this opinion depends upon the (e) tale of Simon Magus's flying in the air at Rome, and his falling down and breaking his bones, at the prayer of St Peter (f); which is a thing not only uncertain, but, in the judgment of many learned perſons, abſolutely falſe. Cotelerius, a Romaniſt, is forced, ἐπίσχειν, to ſuſpend his judgment about it: 1. By reaſon of the original of the ſtory, which, ſaith he, had its riſe e libris apochryphis et pſeudepigraphis, from apocryphal and ſpurious authors (g).

2. By reaſon of the great diſcrepancy to be found among them, in their relations of divers circumſtances of this ſtory: ſome of them ſaying, that Simon Magus made himſelf (h) wings to fly; ſome, that he was held up by two devils (i); others that he made himſelf a (k) chariot, or aſcended in a fiery chariot, drawn by four horſes; and all ſay that he did this by the art of magic.

Again, they differ equally as to the effects this fall had upon this magician; ſome ſaying that he died by it, and was (l) ſeen dead upon the ſpot, that it (m) daſhed out his brains, (n) broke his whole body, yea, brake it into (o) four parts. Others, that (p) Peter prayed he might not die, and ſo he only broke his thigh, ſay ſome; or his hands and feet, as others.

Some tell us, this was done in the reign of Claudius; and others, that it was done in the reign of Nero; ſome that it was done by Peter (q) only; others, that it was done by St Peter and St Paul (r); ſome that it was done by prayer (s); and others, that they added faſting to their prayer: ſo little agreement is there amongſt them in any circumſtance of this action. And,

3. The ſtory may deſerve to be ſuſpected, by reaſon of the ſilence of all the ancients of the three firſt centuries, who ſpeak much of his being at Rome, and of his being honoured with a ſtatue there, but ſay nothing of his flight, or fall, by virtue of the prayers of St Peter, though they had juſt occaſion to ſpeak of it, had they believed the ſtory. For Juſtin Martyr (t), in his Apology, ſpeaks twice of this ſtatue; and deſires the emperor and ſenate, that, learning the truth, they would aboliſh that ſtatue; but he ſaith not one word of this illuſtrious combat, which was ſo admirable a conviction of his fraud. Clemens of Alexandria (u) ſaith, That Simon heard St Peter preach a little while, but addeth not one word of what he ſuffered by St Peter's prayers. Tertul-

Ian (x) having noted, that, after the coming of the goſpel, magicians were always puniſhed, ſpeaks only of Simon Magus as ejected out of the church, though he obſerves that Elymas was ſtruck blind. And that in the (y) Acts of the apoſtles, he received a juſt ſentence, and worthy of himſelf, from the apoſtle Peter, but addeth not one word of what he ſuffered from St Peter at Rome. Origen (z) proves, that there was οὐδὲν θεῖον, nothing divine in Simon, from the nature of his doctrine, which made idolatry a thing indifferent; and from the ſucceſs of it, it being in his time almoſt extinct, and that he periſhed with his ſilver; but adds not a hint of his periſhing by the prayers of the apoſtles, which was the ſtrongeſt proof againſt his pretenſions that he was the power of God. Euſebius (a) declares, how the devil raiſed up Simon as the great adverſary to the apoſtles, and how the divine grace, by their appearance and preſence, extinguiſhed that flame; and how the providence of God ſent Peter after him to Rome, in the days of Claudius, to ſet himſelf againſt him; and how he prevailed, by cauſing the light of the goſpel to ſhine there; but gives not the leaſt hint of his being thus overcome, or thrown down, by the prayers of Peter. The biſhops of Rome, who, ſaith Cotelerius, ſua tacere non ſolent, "uſe not to be ſilent in matters relating to themſelves," ſay nothing of it. Nor is it credible, ſaith Hornius (b), ſcriptores Romanos tam memorabilem rem præterituros fuiſſe; that all the Roman writers of thoſe times, Suetonius, Tacitus, Pliny, &c. ſhould paſs over ſo memorable a thing in ſilence; eſpecially if Simon was ſo honoured by Claudius, and beloved by Nero, as ſome authors of this ſtory ſay he was. It ſeems inconſiſtent, ſaith Valeſius, with that other ſtory, of Simon's being honoured at Rome as a god, by the emperor, ſenate, and the people, and the continuance of his ſtatue there in Juſtin Martyr's days; which ſure it would not have done, had he been ſo remarkably defeated, or deſtroyed before their eyes. And laſtly, St Auſtin (c) freely owns, that at Rome "this ſtory was by moſt "people deemed falſe." And is ſuch a tale fit to be laid as the foundation of the interpretation of this chapter?

§ 7. Arg. 2. This opinion may alſo be confuted from thoſe words, This day ſhall not come, unleſs there be an apoſtaſy firſt, and the man of ſin be revealed. For,

1. It is intolerable to think that act, which was ſo neceſſary for the promotion of the goſpel among the Gentiles, viz. the not impoſing on them circumciſion, and the Jewiſh yoke, and the ceaſing to preach in the ſynagogues of the Jews, was the apoſtaſy intended by the apoſtle in theſe words. The zealots among the Jews might ſay of Paul, Thou teacheſt apoſtaſy from the law of Moſes; for afterwards the (d) Ebionites rejected all his epiſtles, ἀποστάτην ἀποκαλοῦντες αὐτὸν τοῦ νόμου, calling him an apoſtate from the law; but that St Paul himſelf ſpeaking to the Gentiles, ſhould call this his own practice an apoſtaſy, is incredible.

Moreover, what advantage would it do them in this matter, to tell them of an apoſtaſy which had happened before their converſion, Acts 13. 46. Lo, we turn unto the Gentiles, for ſo hath the Lord commanded us; and happened again about the time of writing this epiſtle, Acts 19. 9.; and finally, ſaith the Doctor, was completed when St Paul came to Rome, about five or ſeven years after, at the moſt? Might not the coming of the Lord be at hand, though an apoſtaſy, ſo near to be completed, were to go before it? See Jam. 5. 8. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 7.

2. As for the apoſtaſy of a conſiderable part of Chriſtians, to the abominable impiety of the Gnoſtics, I have all along, in the interpretation of theſe epiſtles, conſidered that, and find no reaſon to aſſert it, nor any thing that favours it, till we come to 2 Pet. 2. 20. 21. It is true indeed, as Juſtin Martyr (e) and Euſebius teſtify, that moſt of the Samaritans worſhipped "Simon as the chief God;" "but ὀλίγοι ἐν ἄλλοις ἔθνεσιν, few in other nations," ſay

they, "did it;" but that one ſingle perſon fell off from Chriſtianity to him, they ſay not. Euſebius (f) is expreſs, that neither the hereſy of Simon Magus, nor of others, had any prevalency in the times of the apoſtles. The great apoſtaſy which, after the writing this epiſtle, firſt appeared, and againſt which the catholic epiſtles of St James, Peter, and St John, and eſpecially the epiſtle to the Hebrews, was written, was that of the converted Jews to Judaiſm again; and to this Dr Lightfoot probably refers the apoſtaſy here mentioned; our Lord having foretold, that the devil, once caſt out of them by the goſpel, ſhould return to them with ſeven more evil ſpirits than himſelf; and concluding that parable with thoſe words, ſo ſhall it be with this preſent generation, Matth. 12. 43. 44. 45. Which opinion is well conſiſtent with my interpretation of this chapter, and may be embraced by them who like not my notion of this apoſtaſy.

2. This man of ſin was yet to be revealed, ver. 3. and there was yet a ſeaſon to come, in which he was to be revealed, ver. 6. 8. Whereas, by the confeſſion of Dr Hammond, Simon Magus was revealed as an oppoſer of Chriſt, and an ἀντίπαλος, or antagoniſt to the apoſtles long before: for he ſaith, that (g) "Being denied the power of working mi-"racles, which he would have bought of the a-"poſtles, ſoon after he ſet up, and oppoſed him-"ſelf againſt Chriſt; and accordingly is here called "ὁ ἀντικείμενος, the adverſary, or, he that oppoſeth "himſelf." Now, the time when he would have bought of them this power of working of miracles, was A. D. 35; that is, fourteen years before St Paul wrote this epiſtle; if then ſoon after he ſet up, and oppoſed himſelf againſt Chriſt, he muſt diſcover himſelf ſoon after the year 35, and ſo before the writing this epiſtle. He adds in the ſame note, "That Simon Magus came to Rome in the begin-"ning of Claudius's reign, and there did ſuch mi-"racles by the help of the devils, that he was ta-"ken for a god, and accordingly had a ſtatue erect-"ed to him, with this inſcription, Simoni deo ſan-"cto." Euſebius there adds, That the devil had ſet him up as the great and equal antagoniſt of the divine apoſtles. St Jerom (h) alſo ſaith, That, in the ſecond year of Claudius, St Peter came to Rome to oppoſe him. He therefore who was then ſet up as the great adverſary of the apoſtles, and as ſuch oppoſed by them, in the ſecond year of Claudius, that is, A. D. 42, muſt be diſcovered then, that is, nine years before the writing this epiſtle. Euſebius there adds, That the flame he had there raiſed, by the appearance and preſence of the apoſtles, i. e. of Peter, as the words following ſhew, ἡ τάχος ἐσβέσθη, was ſoon extinguiſhed; which ſeems to prove, that Simon Magus's oppoſition to Chriſt, was not only diſcovered, but even extinguiſhed with his perſon before the writing this epiſtle. And indeed Irenæus, and almoſt all the ancients agree in this, with Dr Hammond, that Simon Magus having ſuffered this repulſe from Peter at Samaria, began (i) "to ſearch "ſtill more into the depths of magic, that he "might be more able to contend with the apoſtles;" and that by this means he aſtoniſhed many, was honoured by Claudius with a ſtatue, and glorified by many as a god. "He ſoon returned," ſaith Theodoret, "to his former arts (k)." Now, can we think that a man, who deſigned to be reckoned μέγας τις, ſome great one, and to ſeem glorious in the world, ſhould purſue that deſign, by hiding, and not diſcovering himſelf about fifteen years?

In a word, it cannot reaſonably be thought that almoſt all Samaria ſhould worſhip him; that he ſhould be honoured in the days of Claudius as a god, at Rome, by the emperor, the ſenate, and the people; and that the devil ſhould ſet him up as the great adverſary of the apoſtles, long before this time; and that the ſeaſon of his being revealed ſhould be yet to come.

§ 8. Arg. 3. 3*dly*, I argue againſt this opinion, from theſe words, He ſitteth in the temple of God, ver. 4.; for whether we enterpret this of the temple of Jeruſalem, or of the church of God, which are all the interpretations known to the ancient fathers, or applied by them to theſe words, it is certain, that neither Simon Magus, nor his followers, ſat in any of them. The Doctor (l) therefore is forced to ſay, this agrees to Simon, as being worſhipped at Samaria, in thoſe places which had been ſet apart to the worſhip of the true God, they worſhipping him there, θυμιάμασι, καὶ θυσίαις, καὶ σπονδαῖς, with all ſorts of ſacrifices. But would St Paul ſtyle the Samaritan temple, had it been then ſtanding, as it was not, the temple of God? Would he have done this, after our Lord's declaration made againſt them, that they worſhipped they knew not what? The truth is, that the temple built upon their holy mountain was long before deſtroyed by Hircanus; and that which Herod built them, they regarded not, as ſtanding not upon that mountain. Where therefore was the temple in which they offered all kind of ſacrifices to this magician? Indeed the Doctor uſeth too much artifice, in thus connecting theſe things; for that almoſt all the Samaritans did worſhip Simon Magus as the firſt or principal god, Euſebius doth ſay from Juſtin Martyr, hiſt. eccl. 2. 13; but that they then worſhipped him with any kind of ſacrifices, he doth not ſay: but only, that ſome of his followers, who (m) "pretended to embrace the Chriſtian "religion," (which Simon Magus then profeſſedly oppoſed), "fell back to the worſhip of dæmons, and "had got images of Simon and Helen, which they "thus worſhipped with ſacrifices."

§ 9. Arg. 4. Remember you not, ſaith the apoſtle, that I told you of theſe things? Now, is it probable, that, in the ſhort time he ſtaid with them, he ſhould tell them how Simon Magus ſat in the temple of God, and that Chriſt's coming was to deſtroy him; and that ſo ſoon as St Paul ſhould leave off preaching in the Jewiſh ſynagogues, Simon Magus and his followers would be revealed? Credat Judæus Appella. For the myſtery of iniquity doth already work, ver. 7.; that is, ſaith Dr H. this ſort of men are already formed into a ſect, under their ringleaders, Simon and Carpocrates. Wonderful! that Carpocrates, who, ſay Clemens of Alexandria (n), Euſebius, and Theodoret, appeared only in the time of Hadrian, that is, A. D. 107, at the ſooneſt, ſhould be the ringleaders of a ſect at the writing of this epiſtle, that is, at leaſt 56 years before he began his hereſy.

It follows, ver. 8. And then ſhall that wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord ſhall conſume with the ſpirit of his mouth, &c; that is, ſaith Dr Hammond, "Then immediately ſhall ye ſee the ſect of "the Gnoſtics ſhew itſelf, join with, and ſtir up the "Jews, and bring heavy perſecutions upon the "Chriſtians; and having this opportunity to calum"niate them to the Jews, behave themſelves as their "profeſſed oppoſers. And Simon Magus ſhall ſet "himſelf forth in the head of them, whom, as a "profeſſed enemy of Chriſt, Chriſt ſhall deſtroy by "extraordinary means, by the preaching and mi"racles of St Peter; and for all the apoſtatizing "Gnoſtics that adhere to him, they ſhall be involved in the deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews, "with whom they have joined againſt the Chri"ſtians." In which long paraphraſe there is nothing certain, and nothing which can be confirmed, either from ſcripture or antiquity. That there were then any Gnoſtics in being; that they ever then did, or were in a capacity to perſecute the Chriſtians; that any ſingle perſon of them periſhed, at the fatal time of the deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews, I never yet ſaw proved. That Simon Magus ſhould ſet himſelf in the head of theſe Gnoſtics, or of any other of his followers, who was extinct before they bore that name, is not credible. That his followers, who pretended that Simon himſelf was the chief or principal god; who worſhipped him, and the very images of Simon and Helena, with all kind of ſacrifices; who held, "the law and pro"phets were not to be regarded," ſhould ingratiate themſelves, and join with the Jews, is ſtill more incredible. And laſtly, That Simon Magus periſhed by the miracles of St Peter, I have ſhewed to be improbable. And this I think ſufficient to be offered againſt this interpretation.

§ 10. I ſhould proceed to thoſe conſiderations which ſeem to lie againſt that opinion, which holds, that the apoſtle primarily intends the Papal Antichriſt; but I have already done this, both in this preface, and in the following annotations; and therefore ſhall at preſent only add, That this man of ſin is to ſit in the temple of God, and probably to do it then when the apoſtle writ: for he gives it as a character, by which the Theſſalonians, to whom he writ, might know him, and then he could be no other than the Jewiſh doctors. Moreover, this temple of God muſt either be the temple of God, properly ſo called, which was deſtroyed by Titus, A. D. 70; and then again, the man of ſin, who was to ſit in it, muſt denote the ſame perſons; or, as ſome of the moſt ancient fathers, Irenæus (o), Hippolytus (p), St Cyril (q), and St Ambroſe (r) thought, either the ruins of that temple, or another to be built by

Antichriſt in behalf of the Jews: and then, as it is not reaſonable to think the apoſtle would abſolutely ſtyle that the temple of God, which had never been ſo, and which was only built by one who magnified himſelf againſt, and openly blaſphemed the true God; ſo is it more unreaſonable to think the pope and his clergy ſhould ſit in it. They therefore who think that they are here eſpecially intended, embrace the ſentiments of the fathers of the fifth and the following centuries, viz. of Chryſoſtom (s), Theodoret, St Auſtin, and St Jerom, that by the temple of God, we are to underſtand the Chriſtian church. But this interpretation is liable to this objection, That it is not reaſonable to conceive the Holy Spirit, without any mark of diſtinction, would give that name to the apoſtate church, in which the beaſt and the falſe prophet did preſide, ſhe being by the ſame Spirit, when he ſpeaks more unqueſtionably of her, ſtill repreſented as ſpiritual Sodom, and Egypt, myſtical Babylon, and the mother of fornications and abominations, Rev. 11. 8. 17. 5. Hence Bellarmine (t) makes this inference from the interpretation of the Proteſtants, That, if it be true, the Roman church in which the pope preſides, muſt be the church of God. To this our writers anſwer, That this name was given to the church of Rome, becauſe ſhe once was ſo. But when was that? was it not before the man of ſin ſat in her, and exalted himſelf above God and Chriſt? And can he properly be ſaid to ſit in the church of God, who, whilſt he ſitteth in it, is not the man of ſin, nor does thoſe things which belong to him; and when he is the man of ſin, ſitteth no longer in the church of God, but in ſpiritual Egypt, the oppreſſor of God's people, in myſtical Babylon, the mother of idolatry, and the great enemy of the church of God, and in the ſynagogue of Satan?

But that I may not wholly differ from my brethren in this matter, I grant theſe words may, in a ſecondary ſenſe, be attributed to the Papal Antichriſt, or man of ſin, and may be ſignally fulfilled in him, in the deſtruction of him by the Spirit of Chriſt's mouth, he being the ſucceſſor to the apoſtate Jewiſh church, to whom theſe characters agree, as well as to her; and therefore in the annotations I have ſtill given a place to this interpretation alſo.

§ 11. Laſtly, As for the objections which may be raiſed againſt the ſenſe which I have put upon theſe words, I have already anſwered moſt of them in the annotations; only two ſtill remain to be more fully anſwered, viz.

Object. 1. That all the fathers and ancient interpreters ſeem not only ſilent as to this import of theſe words, but generally ſeem to refer the τὸ κατέχον, that which with-held this revelation of the man of ſin, to the Roman empire.

Anſ. To this I anſwer, 1. That this objection may be retorted upon all the other opinions with equal ſtrength; for what is there ſaid by any of the fathers or eccleſiaſtical writers for ſix hundred years, whence it may be concluded that either Mahomet, or the Pope of Rome, were the man of ſin here mentioned? What hint hath any commentator, Greek or Latin, in his notes upon this chapter, for a thouſand years, given, that the Pope and his clergy were the perſons here intended?

If it be here replied, That they do conſequentially overthrow this opinion, by making the Roman empire to be the τὸ κατέχον, that which with-held: I anſwer, That they more fully overthrow the opinion which ſaith, the Papal government is Antichriſt, or the man of ſin.

1. By ſaying that (u) Antichriſt was coming, and at hand, long before the appearance of the little horn, which ſprung up only from the ruins of the Roman empire, which happened A. D. 475.

2. By teaching, ſo generally as they did, that Antichriſt being once revealed, was to continue not 1260 years, but only three years and an half. See note on verſe 8.

3. That he was to be of the Jewiſh extract, one (x) of the tribe of Dan, who was alſo to be circumciſed. And,

4. That he ſhould be an enemy to (y) idolatry and image-worſhip, as Irenæus, Hippolytus, Cyrillus Hieroſ. St Chryſoſtom, and Theodoret ſay.

In a word, they generally held, as I have ſhewed, note on ver. 10. That antichriſt was to come with ſigns and wonders to deceive the Jews, that they might be puniſhed for their infidelity. All which things muſt be manifeſtly inconſiſtent with the common notion, that the Pope's hierarchy muſt be the man of ſin here primarily intended by St Paul.

3. I anſwer, That though the fathers do not expreſsly ſay, the Jewiſh nation was the man of ſin which the apoſtle here intended, yet many of them have ſaid thoſe things on which this our interpretation doth depend; as, v. g. that this man of ſin was to be of Jewiſh extract; that he was to ſit in the temple of Jeruſalem, and that he was to come chiefly to deceive the unbelieving Jews, that ſo they might be puniſhed for their infidelity. And,

Laſtly, As to the τὸ κατέχον, or rather ὁ κατέχων, he that letteth, I only in this differ from them, that whereas they refer this to the Roman empire, I do refer it a Roman emperor; and as ſome of them held that Nero (z) was this antichriſt, and man of ſin, and others, that he was Domitian (a); ſo do I hold that Claudius, the predeceſſor of that Nero, was the perſon that with-held § 12. Object. 2. It farther is objected, That the Jews were long before revealed to be the great oppoſers of Chriſtianity, and the Scribes and Phariſees had long ſat in the temple of God; wherefore the revelation of the man of ſin being only to take place for ſome conſiderable time after the writing of this epiſtle, the Jewiſh nation cannot be reaſonably deemed the man of ſin.

Anſ. I have already anſwered this objection in the paraphraſe, by ſhewing that theſe are the deſcriptions of the man of ſin, by which the Theſſalonians, and others, might then know him; and that they were all ſpoken in the preſent tenſe; ſhewing what he already did, and that he was yet more fully to be revealed, either by his actual apoſtaſy from the Roman government, which happened in the twelfth of Nero, or by the great apoſtaſy of the believers of that nation from the faith.

2. I add, That the Jewiſh nation not only had a great opinion of their dearneſs to the God of heaven, but were alſo looked upon by their proſelytes and others, as God's peculiar and beloved people; and therefore ſuch a change of providence as made it appear to all men they were become the generation of his wrath, muſt alſo be a revelation of them as the greateſt of ſinners. And ſince this came upon them after they had rejected our Meſſiah, and crucified the Lord of life, it muſt be a diſcovery that they became ſons of perdition, upon this account; and in this ſenſe the removing that which letted, muſt make way for the revelation of that wicked one whom the Lord would conſume with the breath of his mouth. As then the Roman church, though ſhe is thought by us to be the antichriſt here ſpoken of, and the beaſt mentioned in the Revelation, is yet, by many other Chriſtian churches in the Weſt, thought to be the true catholic church of Chriſt, and her biſhop to be the vicar of Chriſt, the ſucceſſor of Peter, and the head of the univerſal church, and ſo will only be revealed to them to be what we now deem her, when ſhe ſhall go into deſtruction, and be deſtroyed by the ſword of Chriſt, and by the breath of his mouth: ſo was the church of Jeruſalem then only fully revealed to Jew and Gentile, and to the Judaizing Chriſtians, to be not what they did erroneouſly think her, but what the apoſtle here doth repreſent her, when our Lord did thus conſume her by the breath of his mouth, and God ſo ſignally demonſtrated ſhe was a veſſel of his wrath fitted for deſtruction.

This epiſtle ſeems to be written ſoon after the firſt, and as Biſhop Pearſon probably conjectures, in the ſame year, Sylvanus and Timotheus being ſtill with him when he writ it, as they were at the writing of the firſt epiſtle, 2 Theſſ. 1. 1. Now, St Paul ſtaid at Corinth only a year and ſix months, Acts 18. 11. and there he had preached a conſiderable time, every ſabbath-day, before they came to him, Acts 18. 45. and ſo before he writ his firſt epiſtle, it being written after that Timothy was come to him, 1 Theſſ. 3. 6. and they ſeem to be gone from him before he left Corinth, to go to Syria, for then he had only with him Priſcilla and Aquila, Acts 18. 18. ſo that the interval betwixt theſe two epiſtles could not be above a year.

ANNOTATIONS

Second EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. PAUL, and Sylvanus, and Timotheus (write) to the church of the Theſſalonians (eſtabliſhed) in (the knowledge and worſhip of) God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

2. (Wiſhing) grace to you, and peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

3. We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet (for us to do), becauſe that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all towards each other aboundeth:

4. So that we ourſelves glory in you (or boaſt of you) in the churches of God, for your patience and (for your) faith (which produceth this patience) in all your perſecutions and tribulations which you endure.

5. Which (diſpenſation of divine wiſdom appointing you to ſuffer, 1 Theſſ. 3. 3. and permitting others thus to perſecute you) is a manifeſt token of the righteous judgment of God, (theſe ſufferings befalling you), that you may be accounted worthy of the (celeſtial) kingdom of God, for which ye alſo ſuffer, (and ſo are in aſſurance of a day when God will thus reward you.)

6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with (that) God (to whom belongeth recompenſe, Rom. 12. 19. and who will avenge his elect that cry unto him day and night, Luke 18. 7.) to recompenſe tribulation to them that trouble you;

7. And to you who are troubled (as we are), reſt with us, (which reſt we both completely ſhall enjoy), when the Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven (attended) with his mighty angels, (as he ſhall be at the laſt day, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. when he will come to give every one according to his works, Matth. 16. 27. Mark 8. 38. and gather all the nations of the world before him, Matth. 25. 32. Jude 14. 15.),

8. (When he ſhall come, I ſay), in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them (among the Heathens) who know not God, and (of thoſe Jews and Gentiles) who (having heard) obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

9. Who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, (from whoſe bliſsful preſence they ſhall for ever be excluded, Matth. 25. 41. 46.) and (ſhall find that deſtruction inflicted on them) by the glory of his power, (that being the time when God will make known his power, on the veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, Rom. 1. 23.);

10. (And it is alſo a righteous thing with him, then to recompenſe to you eternal reſt), when he ſhall come to be glorified in (his dealings with) his ſaints, and

and to be admired (for his great love) in (and by) all them that believe, (and particularly by you) becauſe our teſtimony among you was believed in that day.

11. Wherefore alſo we pray always for you, that our God would count you worthy (ἀξιώσῃ τῆς κλήσεως, would make you worthy, ver. 5.) of this calling (to his kingdom, and glory), and fulfil all the good pleaſure of his goodneſs (in you), and the work of faith with power:

12. That the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt may be glorified in you, (by your continuance in your faith), and ye in him (or by him), according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (by which you are enabled to continue in the faith, and fulfil the good pleaſure of his will.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 2. GRace and peace from God the Father, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Becauſe he ſaith not by our Lord, but, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, hence Theodoret pleads for an equality in power, and by conſequence in eſſence, of the Father and the Son.

Ver. 5. Τῆς δικαίας κρίσεως, of the righteous judgment of God, &c.] "This place," ſaith Eſthius (a), "proves againſt the heretics, that life eternal is "not ſo to be aſcribed to the grace of God, as not "to be attributed alſo to the worth and merits of "men, proceeding from the grace of God."

But the true import of theſe words will be ſufficiently contained in theſe following particulars.

1. That the juſtice of God obligeth him to recompenſe the obedience and ſufferings of his faithful ſervants, either in this, or in the world to come; ſince were it otherwiſe, we could have no ſufficient motive to perſeverance in obedience to him, or ſuffering for his ſake; and therefore this, by the apoſtle, is laid as the foundation of all the ſervice which we pay unto him, even the firm belief that God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6.

2. That ſince God doth not, and, according to the nature of the thing, he cannot recompenſe them in this life, who ſuffer all calamities and loſſes they can endure here, and even death itſelf for his ſake, his juſtice will oblige him to do it in the next. Hence the apoſtle ſaith of himſelf and all his fellow-ſufferers, If in this life only we have hope in Chriſt, we are of all men the moſt miſerable, 1 Cor. 15. 19. and puts the queſtion thus, If the dead riſe not at all,——why ſtand we in jeopardy every hour? ver. 29. 30. But,

3. That this reward ſhould be for kind ſo excellent, as is the beatific viſion, the being heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, the being like to him in glory, and for duration ſhould be eternal, can never be on the account of that ſtrict juſtice which rendereth to every one his due, ſeeing there can be no proportion betwixt a finite action or paſſion and an infinite reward; and therefore the ſame apoſtle, who ſaith here, ἀξιωθῆναι ὑμᾶς, we for theſe ſufferings are accounted worthy of this kingdom, doth elſewhere poſitively declare the ſufferings of this preſent life οὐκ ἄξια, not worthy of the glory that ſhall hereafter be revealed, Rom. 8. 18. Nor can the grace of God, vouchſafed to enable us thus to perſeverance in ſufferings, enhance the merit of thoſe ſufferings, or make the reward in juſtice due unto us; ſince if it be of grace that we thus ſuffer, then it is not of debt that we are thus rewarded, God being not in ſtrict juſtice obliged to reward his own free gifts and graces he confers upon us. But,

4. Even this eternal recompenſe being promiſed to thoſe who ſuffer for the ſake of Chriſt, by him who hath ſaid, Be thou faithful to the death, and I will give thee a crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. and propounded as the chief encouragement, thus to endure with patience to the end, Matth. 5. 12. it may be ſaid, by virtue of that promiſe, to be in juſtice due to them who do thus ſuffer for it, it being a part of juſtice to perform our promiſes, and be faithful to our words. This therefore is a faithful ſaying, If we ſuffer with him, if we endure, we ſhall live and reign with him, 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12.; and we may reſt aſſured, that God the righteous Judge will give this crown of righteouſneſs to us at that day, 2 Tim. 4. 8.; that being approved, we ſhall receive that crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him, Jam. 1. 12. But then God being not obliged in ſtrict juſtice to promiſe ſo great a recompenſe, he cannot be ſaid to confer it ex dignitate, merito, aut æqualitate rei, by reaſon of the dignity or worth of theſe our ſufferings, or becauſe the reward is only equal to the merit of them, but only ex juſtitia pacti, becauſe his promiſe hath made it juſt and equal for him ſo to do.

Ver. 6. Εἴπερ δίκαιον, ſeeing it is a righteous thing.] Here the Greek ſcholiaſts note εἴπερ is put for ἐπειπερ or ἐπειδήπερ, that is, ſiquidem for quandoquidem, as it is, Rom. 8. 9. and ſo the Hebrew im oftentimes ſignifies; niſies; ſee Nold. de partic. Heb. p. 88.; and therefore, ſay they, it is not a particle ἀμφιβολίας ἀλλὰ βεβαιώσεως, of doubting, but of confirmation.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. NOW we beſeech you, brethren, by (or concerning) [a] the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by our gathering together to him, (mentioned, Matth. 24. 31.),

2. That ye be not ſoon ſhaken in mind, (ἀπὸ τοῦ νοὸς, from the ſentence you formerly received from me), or be troubled, neither by ſpirit, (i. e. by any pretended revelation), nor by word (ſpoken by us, and by others miſunderſtood, 2 Pet. 3. 15. 16.), nor by letter, as from us, (i. e. by any thing contained in our former epiſtle, chap. 4. 15. and 5. 2. or rather in thoſe words, chap. 2. 16. Wrath is come upon them εἰς τέλος, to the uttermoſt, ſo) as (to conceive) that the day of Chriſt [b] is at hand.

3. Let no man deceive you (by theſe pretences) by any means: for that day ſhall not come, except there come [c] a falling away firſt (of the Jews from the Roman empire, or from the faith), and (by that means) the [d] man of ſin be revealed, (who is) the ſon of perdition:

4. Who [e] oppoſeth (himſelf now to the Chriſtian church), and [f] exalteth himſelf above all that is called God, or that is worſhipped (Gr. [g] σέβασμα, or worſhip); ſo that he as God [h] ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God.

5. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, [i] I told you (of) theſe things, (viz. of the man of ſin to be revealed, and of theſe characters of him?)

6. And now ye know [k] what with-holdeth, that he might be revealed [l] in his time.

7. For the [m] myſtery of iniquity doth already work, (i. e. the Jews are already making ſome efforts towards this apoſtaſy): only he [n] who now letteth, will let, (or, only there is that with-holdeth as yet, and will continue ſo to do), [o] until he (or it) be taken out of the way.

8. And then ſhall [p] that wicked one be [q] revealed, whom the Lord ſhall [r] conſume with the ſpirit (or breath) of his mouth, and ſhall [s] deſtroy with the brightneſs of his coming:

9. Even him whoſe coming is after the working of Satan, with [t] all power, and ſigns, and lying wonders,

10. And with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs in them that periſh; [u] becauſe they received not the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved.

11. And for this cauſe [x] God ſhall ſend (among) them ſtrong deluſion, (which will have this effect upon them), that they ſhould (ſhall) believe a lie:

12. That they all might be damned (Gr. judged and condemned) who believed not the truth, (the goſpel preached to them; ſee note on Rom. 2. 8.), but had pleaſure in unrighteouſneſs, (or falſehood; ſee note on 1 Cor. 13. 6.)

13. But we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, becauſe God hath from the beginning (of our preaching to you, ſhewed, 1 Theſſ. 1. 4. 5. that he had) choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, (which gives the earneſt of it, and makes us meet for it), and belief of the truth (which promiſeth it):

14. [y] Whereunto (i. e. to which faith and ſanctification) he hath called you, by (the preaching of) our goſpel, [z] to the obtaining of the glory (Gr. to the glorious ſalvation) of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

15. Therefore, brethren, ſtand faſt (in the faith), and [a] hold the traditions which you have been taught, whether by word, (ver. 5. 6.) or, (by this) our epiſtle.

16. Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, and God even our Father, (through him), who hath loved us, and hath given us everlaſting conſolation, and good hope through grace,

17. Comfort your hearts, and ſtabliſh you in every good word and work.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. [a] Ὑπὲρ τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ Κυρίου, by the coming of the Lord.] That ὑπὲρ, with a genitive caſe, ſignifies de, or circa, about, or concerning, cannot be doubted. It is rendered concerning, Rom. 9. 27.; ſee 2 Cor. 12. 5. 8. It is thrice rendered of, in the ſame import, as 2 Cor. 1. 7. Our hope ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, of you is certain; chap. 8. 23. Whether any inquire ὑπὲρ Τίτου, of Titus; and ver. 24. Our boaſting ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, i. e. concerning you; Philip. 1. 7. It is meet for me to think thus ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, of you all. Hence Phavorinus ſaith it is uſed ὁμοίως τῷ περὶ. See 2 Cor. 7. 5. and 9. 3.

The coming of Chriſt is, by the Reverend Dr Hammond, referred to Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews, and throw down their temple, and their worſhip which depended on it. This is the παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, the coming of Chriſt, or of the Son of man, ſo often mentioned in our Lord's prediction prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and of the temple, Matth. 24. 3. 27. 37. 39. This is moſt certainly the import of the phraſe in St James twice, when he exhorts the brethren to be patient ἕως τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ Κυρίου, till the coming of the Lord, adding that this παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου, coming of our Lord was at hand, and the Judge ſtood before the door, James 5. 7. 8. 9.

As for the phraſe, our gathering together to him, it ſeems parallel to the words of Chriſt, Matth. 24. 31. ἐπισυνάξουσι τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ, his angels ſhall then gather his elect. And to apply it to the Theſſalonians, let it be noted, that they were partly converts of the Jews and proſelytes: for the converts made by St Paul's preaching to them were of the believing Jews, and the devout Greeks, Acts 17. 4. who, in expectation of our Lord's prediction, as well as from their obſervation of the Jewiſh feſtivals, might be inclined to go up to Jeruſalem. Moreover, till the writing of this epiſtle, if not long after, even till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Jewiſh converts kept up their ſynagogue-worſhip, and many proſelytes and other Chriſtians did not ſcruple to aſſemble with them; the Jewiſh converts thought themſelves obliged to do it, they being all zealous of the law, Acts 21. 20. and many of the Gentile Chriſtians complied with it at Corinth, Galatia, and Philippi; but after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, there was an end of this ſynagogue-worſhip, the day having revealed that God was no longer pleaſed with it, and then they met together ſtill as churches of Chriſt, and this might be their ἐπισυναγωγὴ πρὸς αὐτὸν, the gathering together to him, here ſpoken of.

But yet, conſidering that this παρουσία, or coming of Chriſt, in the former epiſtle, is uſed four times, with relation to Chriſt's coming at the day of judgment, viz. chap. 2. 19. and 3. 13. and 4. 15. and 5. 23. it may be thought more reaſonable to refer this paſſage to the ſame advent, and paraphraſe it thus, I beſeech you, brethren, by (the bleſſing you expect at) the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and at our gathering together to him.

Ver. 2. ὡς ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν, is, or hath been inſtant.] To conceive that ſignal day of the deſtruction of their enemies the Jews, and the deliverance of the Chriſtians, mentioned, Joel 2. 31. 32. Mal. 4. 1. 2. come, and find themſelves deceived in that conception, might cauſe great trouble to them, and even ſhake their ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith.

Ver. 3. ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία πρῶτον, a falling away firſt.] The rebellion of the Jews againſt the Chaldeans was always ſtyled apoſtaſy, and the Jews, upon that account, apoſtates. So Jeruſalem is repreſented as πόλις ἀποστάτις, a city that rebelled againſt kings, and in which ἀποστάσεις γίνονται, rebellions were found, Ezra 4. 12. 15. 19. Thus Ezra 3. 2. 18. 22. they are ſtyled Ἰουδαῖοι ἀποστάται, rebellious Jews; and ver. 27. it is ſaid, that they were given to rebellion and war. See Neh. 2. 19. and 6. 6. 1 Mac. 13. 16. 2 Mac. 5. 11. And in like manner, their revolt from the Roman government is, by Joſephus (b), generally expreſſed by the ſame word: "Coming from Rome," ſaith he, "in the time of Nero, when Felix was procurator "of Judea, I found then the beginnings of innova- "tions, καὶ πολλοὺς ἐπὶ τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἀποστάσει μέγα φρονοῦντας, "and many much addicted to apoſtaſy from the "Roman government. One Juſtus," ſaith he (c), "provoked the people εἰς ἀποστασίαν, to rebellion; but "John the ſon of Levi ſeeing ſome of them διὰ τὴν "ἀποστασίαν τὴν ἀπὸ Ῥωμαίων μέγα φρονοῦλας, prone to apo- "ſtaſy from the Roman government, endeavoured "to keep them to their duty."

But if any like not this notion of apoſtaſy, they may underſtand theſe words of the great apoſtaſy of the Jews foretold by Chriſt, Matth. 24. 11. 12. and which happened not only in Judea and Paleſtine, but throughout Aſia, 2 Tim. 1. 15. and in all other places where they had embraced the goſpel. Of which apoſtaſy note,

1. That when the apoſtle writ this epiſtle, it was yet to come; for though the myſtery of iniquity was already working, in the ſeductions of the falſe apoſtles and deceitful workers of the Jewiſh nation, endeavouring to corrupt the minds of the Gentile converts from the ſimplicity that was in Chriſt, 2 Cor. 11. 3. and to bring them into bondage to the Jewiſh law, Gal. 2. 4. and ſo deprive them of that liberty wherewith Chriſt had made them free; yet the greater defection of the Jewiſh converts to their old Judaiſm ſeems to have had its riſe about ten years after the writing this epiſtle. For it is certain, that A. D. 63, when the apoſtle writ the epiſtle to the Hebrews, it was begun already, and many of the Jewiſh converts then were in great danger of falling back unto perdition, as appears from the vehement admonitions and exhortations of the apoſtle to them, to beware, leſt there ſhould be in any of them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God; and to exhort one another daily to this ſtedfaſtneſs, as knowing we are only partakers of Chriſt, if we hold the beginning of our confidence firm to the end, chap. 3. 12. 13. 14.; To labour to enter into that reſt Chriſt had prepared for them, leſt any man fall after the ſame example of unbelief, chap. 4. 11.; Not to forſake the aſſembling of themſelves together, as the manner of ſome was, chap. 10. 25.; nor to caſt away their confidence, ver. 35.; To lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees, and make ſtraight paths for their feet, left that which is lame be turned out of the way; and to look diligently, left any man fall from the grace of God, chap. 12. 12. 13. 15. As also from the representation of the dreadful state of all who should apostatize after this manner, that it was impossible to renew them to repentance, chap. 6. 4. 6.; that they were nigh to cursing, and their end was to be burned, ver. 8.; that there was no more sacrifice for their sin, but a fearful looking for of destruction, and fiery indignation, chap. 10. 26. 27. and vengeance from the living God, ver. 30. 31.; that it would certainly be a falling back to perdition, ver. 38. 39; that there would be no escaping for them who turned away from him who spake to them from heaven, chap. 12. 25. The same we learn from the like exhortations of St James, to joy and patience under their afflictions, chap. 1. 1. to 12.; chap. 5. 7. to 12.; of St Peter, 1 epist. 3. 14. 15. chap. 4. 12. to 19. chap. 5. 8. 9. 10. And from St John's frequent exhortation, to hold to that which they had received from the beginning, and to continue walking in the truth. Now, the occasions of this great apostasy seem to have been these three.

1st, Their zeal for the observation of the law, which they conceived to be of eternal obligation, especially to the Jews, to whom particularly it was given, and for the covenant of circumcision, which they esteemed highly meritorious; see note on Rom. 2. 13.; that which made them perfect, gave them life, and delivered them from hell, according to these sayings of theirs, He that is circumcised, is perfect; he that is circumcised, shall not go to gehinnom: And I said unto thee in thy blood, Live, Ezek. 16. 6.; this is the blood of the circumcision (d). This they endeavoured to impose upon the Gentile converts; and all the myriads of Jewish converts were all zealous for the observation of it by the Jews, and looked upon it as downright apostasy for them to forsake Moses, and not to circumcise their children, and walk according to their customs received from Moses, or from their traditions, ἀποστασίαν διδάσκεις ἀπὸ Μωσέως, Acts 21. 21. And this seems to be the reason why St Paul, in the epistle to the Hebrews, discourseth so largely of the necessity of the change of the law, viz. that, by establishing that truth, he might put a stop to the apostasy occasioned by their contrary persuasion.

2dly, Their beloved dream of a temporal kingdom to be erected by their Messiah at his coming, the halcyon days that were then expected by them, and the dominion they should then have over the nations, who were not, according to their sentiments, to come into the Messiah, otherwise than as their slaves or servants. How deeply this imagination was fixed even in the hearts of Christ's apostles, we learn, as from many other things, so especially from their question to him after his resurrection, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom unto Israel? Acts 1. 7. And because our Lord gave this answer to it, viz. It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own hands; but ye shall receive power, the Holy Spirit coming upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and all Judea, and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth, ver. 7. 8. They were prone to think, that at least, after the apostles had done this, they might expect our Lord should come in the clouds of heaven, to set up this kingdom; they therefore believed in him rather as a temporal, than a spiritual king; they owned him rather as a true prophet, to persuade them to be righteous, than as a Saviour, to procure to them remission of sins, and a new covenant established in his blood. Hence Origen, speaking of those words of Christ, If I say the truth, why do you not believe? which, he conceives, were spoken to those Jews which believed; he saith, "they might be said to believe, in one "sense, and not to believe, in another." So, v. g. (e) "They that believe in Jesus Christ crucified in the days of Pontius Pilate, but believe "him not to be born of the Virgin Mary, (i. e. "the Ebionites), believe in him, and do not believe in him." And again, (f) "They who "believe in Jesus, who did in Judea the signs and "wonders which were written of him, but believe "him not to be the Son of that God who made "heaven and earth, believe in him, and believe "not in him;" and this relateth to others of the Jews. And hence it seems to be, that the apostle is so large in treating of the sacerdotal office of our Lord, and of the new covenant established in his blood. Moreover, the Jews were generally possessed with this opinion, that (g) "about that " time their Meſſiah ſhould ſet up this temporal " kingdom ;" and they generally expected, not a Meſſiah to ſuffer for their ſins, of whom they ſeem then to have had no notion, John 12. 34. but a great king to ſubdue their enemies under them. And this was their great ſtumbling-block, that (h) our Jeſus appeared not to be ſuch a one ; and this was the great thing that animated them to the war. When therefore the goſpel had been preached to the world, and there was no appearance of Chriſt's coming in the clouds to be their king and their deliverer, but rather to deſtroy their temple and their nation, they began to fall off from him, as not anſwering their expectation, or the predictions of their prophets, and to give ear to their falſe prophets, ſaying to them, Lo, here is Chriſt, and there is Chriſt, according to our Lord's prediction, Matth. 24. 22. and promiſing freedom and deliverance, ſaith Joſephus (i), to as many as ſhould follow them.

And, laſtly, The great cauſe of this apoſtaſy, of which the ſcriptures take a more ſpecial notice, was the grievous perſecutions they ſuffered in all places from their fellow Jews, and from thoſe Heathens they had inſtigated againſt them. This, by St Paul, is ſtyled a great fight of afflictions, againſt which he deſires them to arm themſelves, by faith and patience, and the conſideration of the coming of their Lord, and by the example of that cloud of witneſſes which they had ſet before them, Heb. 10. 11. 12. By St Peter it is ſtyled the fiery trial, which was come to try them, 1 Pet. 1. 4. 12. and by which they were in heavineſs, through manifold triſulations, 1 Pet. 1. 6. And againſt which St James endeavours to ſtrengthen them, by the conſideration of the bleſſed fruits and glorious recompenſe their patience under them would produce, chap. 1. and of the preſence of their Lord, who would ſhortly come to reſcue them, and give a happy iſſue of them, chap. 5. By reaſon of which perſecutions ſome began to uſe great compliances with the Jews, to avoid their rage ; others, to fall away from the Chriſtian faith, hoping perhaps that they might ſtill obtain ſalvation in that religion, in which they expected to find it before they embraced Chriſtianity.

Others, who refer this to the church of Rome, underſtand by this apoſtaſy, a falling away from the doctrine and the true worſhip of God and Chriſt, by idolatry in the worſhip of a conſecrated wafer, of angels, ſaints, images, and relics ; on which account that church is repreſented under the characters of ſpiritual Egypt, of myſtical Babylon, and the mother of fornications, Rev. 11. 8. and 17. 5.

Ibid. ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας, the man of ſin.] If you read here, ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἀνομίας, the man of diſobedience, who will not ſubmit to law and govern-ment, as do the manuſcripts of Stephanus and Lincoln, nothing can more exactly agree to the Jewiſh nation, which, in the times of Joſephus (k), had this character, That it was ἔθνος δυσάρεστον καὶ δυσπειθὲς φύσει πρὸς τὰς βασιλείας, a nation naturally averſe from ſubjection to kings. If we retain the common reading, no nation under heaven more deſerved to be ſtyled the man of ſin, than did the Jewiſh nation, after the ſpirit of ſlumber and blindneſs was come upon them, Rom. 11. 8. for the rejection of the promiſed Meſſiah. Their own Joſephus ſaith, It is impoſſible to recount ſeverally the particulars of their wickedneſs ; but in the general it may be ſaid, that never any city ſuffered ſuch calamities, μήτε γενεὰν ἐξ αἰῶνος γεγονέναι κακίας γονιμωτέραν, nor was ever any generation, ſince the memory of man, more fruitful in iniquity. See this more fully proved, note on Rom. 2. 1. Then therefore more eſpecially was this man of ſin revealed to be ſo. This character doth alſo very well agree to the beaſt mentioned in the Revelation, which being ſpiritual Sodom and Egypt, Rev. 11. 8. the mother of fornications, and the abominations of the earth, chap. 17. 5. may very well deſerve the title of the man of ſin.

Object. If it be here objected againſt the application of this character to the Jewiſh nation, That the man of ſin ſeems to relate to ſome ſingle perſon, and therefore cannot be interpreted of a whole nation, eſpecially if they act not under ſome head or other :

Anſ. I anſwer, That I have for this the authority of the prophet cited here, v. 8. who ſaith, He ſhall ſmite the land (Chald. the ſinners of the land) with the word of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips, Jemoth Reſhang, ἀνελεῖ ἀσεβῆ, He ſhall conſume the wicked one. Which wicked one, whether we underſtand it, with the fathers, of Antichriſt, or, with the Jews, of Armillus, i. e. the Romans, or, with the Proteſtants, of the Papal polity, under the name of one, muſt comprehend all his aſſociates and followers, though they be many nations. Thus alſo doth the prophet Iſaiah introduce God ſpeaking to all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem and Juda: And now, Joſheb, inhabiter of Jeruſalem יְהוֹשֶׁבֵי, ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῦ Ἰούδα, and man of Juda, chap. 5. 3. and ver. 7. ὁ ἄνθρωπος, the man of Juda is my pleaſant plant. And Jeremiah ſpeaks in the perſon of the whole Jewiſh nation, ſaying, I am the man that have ſeen affliction, Lam. 3. 1. and ſo on to ver. 22. So in the parable, Matth. 22. 11. our Saviour repreſents the Jewiſh nation, from whom the kingdom of God was to be taken away, and who were to be caſt out into outer darkneſs, ver. 13. by the man who had not on his wedding-garment. So the two witneſſes, Rev. 11. 3. and the woman clothed with the ſun, Rev. 12. 1. repreſent the whole body of true Chriſtians. And the beaſt, chap. 13. 1. the woman arrayed in purple and ſcarlet, chap. 17. 4. and the great whore, chap. 19. 2. include all the members of the Roman church. And therefore it is evident, that this objection of a ſingle perſon ſeems equally to lie againſt all the other hypotheſes. And as they had their heads in which they were united, ſo had the Jewiſh nation their high prieſt and ſanhedrim, their rulers of the people, their ſcribes and Phariſees, the heads of this man of ſin, as the pope and his clergy are the head of the beaſt.

Ibid. ὁ ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, the ſon of perdition.] This alſo perfectly agrees to the Jews, not only becauſe Chriſt was to ſmite them with the breath of his mouth; ſee note on ver. 8. and to ſmite the land with a curſe, Mal. 4. 6.; but becauſe they are ſet forth as veſſels of wrath fitted εἰς ἀπώλειαν, for deſtruction, Rom. 9. 22.; as men appointed to wrath, 1 Theſſ. 5. 9; to ſudden deſtruction, ver. 4. as men whoſe end is ἀπώλεια, deſtruction, Philip. 3. 19. Note alſo, that this agrees exactly to the great whore, who is to go εἰς ἀπώλειαν, into deſtruction, Rev. 17. 8. 11.

Ver. 4. ὁ ὁ ἀντικείμενος, who oppoſeth himſelf.] This word in the Old Teſtament repreſents the adverſaries of God and his church. So Iſ. 66. 6. The voice of the Lord rendering recompenſe τοῖς ἀντικειμένοις, to his enemies. And Eſth. 9. 2. They who ſought the hurt of the Jews, are οἱ ἀντικείμενοι τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις. And in like manner in the New Teſtament, ὁ ἀντικείμενος is in the general the adverſary of Chriſt, and of Chriſtianity; as in thoſe words, Give no occaſion τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ, to the adverſary to blaſpheme, 1 Tim. 5. 14. In particular the Jews, as they were οἱ ἀντικείμενοι τῷ Χριστῷ, the adverſaries of Chriſt, Luke 13. 17.; ſo in our Lord's diſcourſe on the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they are ſtyled the adverſaries of the apoſtles in theſe words, I will give you a mouth and wiſdom, which οἱ ἀντικείμενοι ὑμῶν, your adverſaries ſhall not be able to reſiſt, or gainſay, Luke 21. 15. They are the ἀντικείμενοι πολλοί, of which St Paul ſpeaks, ſaying, A great door and effectual is opened to me in Epheſus, and there be many adverſaries, 1 Cor. 16. 9.; as you may learn from Acts 19. 9. where we find them ſpeaking evil of the way of Chriſtianity before the multitude, and St Paul ſeparating from them upon that account. And in thoſe words of St Paul to the Philippians, chap. 1. 28. In nothing be ye terrified by (the malice and perſecution of) your adverſaries, ὑπὸ τῶν ἀντικειμένων; which malice and perſecution is to them ἔνδειξις ἀπωλείας, an evident token of perdition, but to you of ſalvation; ſee 2 Theſſ. 1. 5. And with good reaſon is this name given to them eſpecially, they being the men who killed the Lord Jeſus, and perſecuted his apoſtles; who pleaſed not God, and were adverſaries to all men; forbidding the apoſtles to preach to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved, 2 Theſſ. 2. 15. 16. When they began to preach the word of life, the high prieſt, the captain of the temple, and the Sadducees, Acts 4. 1. and the whole order of the prieſthood, ver. 6. ſtyled τὸ συνέδριον, the ſanhedrim, ver. 15. command them not to ſpeak at all in the name of Jeſus, ver. 18. on which account theſe rulers are ſaid to be aſſembled againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt, ver. 26. And the anſwer of the apoſtles to them is, That God was rather to be obeyed than man. After this the high prieſt and all his aſſociates place the apoſtles ἐν τῷ συνεδρίῳ, in the ſanhedrim, Acts 5. 17. 27. calling them to an account for diſobeying their commands; and having received this anſwer from the apoſtles, That God muſt be obeyed rather than man, they beat them in the ſanhedrim, and again command them not to ſpeak in the name of Jeſus, ver. 40. 41. Soon after we find Stephen brought before the ſcribes and elders, εἰς τὸ συνέδριον, into the ſanhedrim, chap. 6. 12. and the high prieſt, chap. 7. 1. and they who ſat ἐν τῷ συνεδρίῳ, in the ſanhedrim, having examined him, and the witneſſes againſt him, they ſtoned Stephen, ver. 59. which death could only be inflicted on him by the ſanhedrim. After this Saul receives letters from the high prieſt, chap. 9. 1. and from all the elders, chap. 22. 5. to bind all Chriſtians he could find in any of their ſynagogues, and bring them to Jeruſalem, Acts 9. 2. 14. Yea in the ſecond, or, as Biſhop Pearſon ſaith, in the fourth year of Nero, the high prieſt, καὶ ὅλον τὸ συνέδριον, and the whole ſanhedrim meet, Acts 22. 30. and Paul is brought before them, chap. 23. 1. By all which paſſages, as we ſee how they are ſtill ſhewing themſelves adverſaries to Chriſt and his diſciples; ſo we learn the falſehood of that Jewiſh ſtory, that forty years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Jewiſh ſanhedrim removed from from thence to Joppa; which, ſaith Mr Selden (l), as I have never read any ſuch thing in the ancients, ſo may it be confuted from the life of Joſephus. It was this ſanhedrim that admitted that public prayer againſt the Chriſtians, called Berachoth Haminim, the curſing of the heretics. They therefore called Jeſus accurſed, 1 Cor. 12. 2. and ſo, as Juſtin (m) M. ſaith, they diſhonoured Chriſt as much as they could, καταρώμενοι ἐν ταῖς συναγωγαῖς ὑμῶν τοὺς πιστεύοντας ἐπὶ τὸν Χριστὸν, curſing in their ſynogogues thoſe that believe in him. Thus did they crucify afreſh the Son of God, and put him to an open ſhame; yea, ſaith the ſame Juſtin (n), ἄνδρας ἐκλεκτοὺς ἀπὸ Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐκλεξάμενοι, εἰς ἅπασαν τὴν γὴν, they ſent choſen men from Jeruſalem throughout the whole earth, repreſenting the Chriſtian faith as an atheiſtical hereſy. Now, this could be done only by the ſanhedrim. It was, laſtly, by the high prieſt and his ſanhedrim aſſembled at Jeruſalem, that James the brother of our Lord, with ſome other Chriſtians, is condemned to be ſtoned for blaſphemy againſt the law (o). Yea, when the war was begun, affairs ſeem ſtill to be ordered by the high prieſt and ſanhedrim. For it was after the flight of Ceſtius Gallus from Jeruſalem, that Joſephus (p) was made governour of Galilee, and (q) thence he writes τῷ συνεδρίῳ τῶν Ἱεροσολυμιτῶν, to the ſanhedrim of Jeruſalem, for inſtruction. And Ananias (r) the high prieſt acknowleges that they had engaged in the war againſt the Romans, only for their liberty. So that things ſeem to have been managed to that time by the high prieſt and ſanhedrim, who appearing thus upon all occaſions with the utmoſt rage againſt Chriſt and Chriſtians, might well be deemed not only ἀντικείμενοι, their adverſaries, but antichriſts. But then the Roman Antichriſt being alſo to wear out the ſaints of the Moſt High, Dan. 7. 25.; and caſt down ſome of the hoſt of heaven, Dan. 8. 10.; the beaſt being to ſlay the witneſſes, Rev. 11. 7. to make war with the ſaints, and overcome them, chap. 13. 7. and even to be drunk with the blood of the ſaints, and of the martyrs of Jeſus, chap. 17. 6. 18. 24. ſhe doubtleſs muſt emphatically deſerve this title.

Ibid. ὑπεραιρόμενος ἐπὶ πᾶν τὸ λεγόμενον θεὸν ἢ σέβασμα, Exalting himſelf above all that is called god, or is worſhipped.] The word λεγόμενος, called, ſhews the apoſtle here ſpeaks of magiſtrates, who are called gods in ſcripture, Pſal. 82. 6. and particularly of the Roman emperor, whoſe title was Σεβαστὸς, Auguſtus, and who are here ſignified by σέβασμα, as God is by the word Θεὸς. And how the Jews exalted themſelves againſt every thing that is called God, or the magiſtracy, we may obſerve, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, in ſuch paſſages as theſe, 2 Pet. 2. 10. They deſpiſe government, Jude 8. They deſpiſe dominion, and ſpeak evil of dignities, and in their own ſtories to endleſs examples. How they ſtood affected to them, we may learn from the queſtion they put to our Saviour, Shall we pay tribute to Cæſar or not? Matth. 22. 17. For had he anſwered, No, they then thought they ſhould have ground to repreſent him as an enemy to Cæſar; if, Yea, to repreſent him to the people as a betrayer of his country's liberty and freedom, (s) τὴν ἐπιτίμησιν ἐδὲν ἄλλο ἢ ἀλικὴς δουλείαν ἐπιφέρειν λέγοντες, they looking on the payment of this tribute-money as a ſign of ſlavery. And from their Talmudical ſaying, We have no king but God, and from their imagination, that it was a wicked thing, (t) μετὰ τὸν Θεὸν φέρειν θνητὸς δεσπότας, to own any mortal governor under God; ſee note on 1 Pet. 2. 16. And that the Pope and his church have thus exalted themſelves above kings and emperors, church hiſtory and their own canon law will not ſuffer us to doubt. See Downham de Antichriſto, lib. 4. c. 2. 3.

Ibid. ὥστε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ναὸν Θεοῦ ὡς Θεὸν καθίσαι, So that he ſitteth in the temple of God as God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God.] Only the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, their prieſts, high prieſts, and doctors, or expounders of the law, ſat in the temple of God, then properly ſo called; and there the high prieſt and the ſanhedrim took upon them the power of judging in capital cauſes. Thus they ſtoned Stephen; thus alſo they ſtoned James the brother of our Lord, and others with him; and St Paul perſecuted the Chriſtians even to death by their authority, Acts 22. 4. 5. and thus they ſat in the temple of God, as Gods. The ſcribes and Phariſees alſo ſhewed themſelves as God, by ſetting up their traditions above the commandments of God, pretending to diſpenſe with them, and by ſo doing, ſaith our Saviour, ἀκυροῦν ἀθετεῖν, ἀθεῖν, to lay aſide, reject, and to make void the commandments of God, Matth. 15. 16.; Mark 7. 8. 9. 10. 13. to eſtabliſh their traditions. And, ſecondly, By preferring them to, and requiring greater reverence to be given to their traditions, and their doctrines, than to the written word of God; ſaying, That "the words of the ſcribes are more a-"miable than the words of the law, and more " weighty; that a prophet was not to be believed " without a ſign or a miracle; but they were to " be believed without them," with other blaſphemous ſayings, cited by Dr Lightfoot (u) on Matth. 15. 2. and by Dr Pocock, who ſhews that they held their vows ſo ſacred, that they were obliged to violate the laws of God to keep them, and that in ſuch caſes they could not obſerve God's precepts without great ſin. And, thirdly, This they did by taking to themſelves the titles of guide and father, which, in our Saviour's interpretation, belonged only to God and Chriſt, Matth. 23. 8. 9. 10. See the note there. And, fourthly, As being, by their own confeſſion, Θεόμαχοι, fighters againſt God, by their oppoſition to the apoſtles commiſſionated by God, Acts 5. 39. and 23. 9. Here then let it be noted,

1*ſt*, That theſe are the deſcriptions of the man of ſin, by which the Theſſalonians might then know him, and they run all in the preſent tenſe, ſhewing what he already did; and therefore it is no objection againſt my interpretation of theſe words, that the ſanhedrim, the ſcribes and Phariſees, had long ſat in the temple of God, and done the things here attributed to the man of ſin.

2*dly*, Let it be noted, that it is propheſied, Dan. 11. 35. 36. that a king ſhall do according to his will, and ſhall exalt himſelf, and ſhall magnify himſelf above every god; and that this, by St Jerom and Theodoret upon the place, is interpreted concerning Antichriſt. And that the Pope of Rome hath manifeſtly not only thus exalted himſelf above all that is called God, by uſurping a power over kings and emperors, as in the former note; but alſo ſhewed himſelf in the church as God, by claiming that infallibility which is the property of God, and by diſpenſing with his laws, and alſo by equalling himſelf to Chriſt, who is God. See Downham de Antichriſto, l. 4. c 5. And therefore, according to the ſentiments of all thoſe fathers, who by the temple do underſtand the church of God, he hath by theſe things ſhewed himſelf that he is God.

Ibid. Ὡς θεόν.] I doubt not, ſaith Dr Mills, that theſe words are added to the text, they being wanting in Irenæus, l. 5. c. 25. in Origen contra Celſum, p. 89. and 307. in Cyril Hieroſ. p. 161. in the Vulgar, and Cod. Alex. which if true would be a great advantage to my hypotheſis; but they being owned by all the Greek ſcholiaſts, the Syriac and Arabic verſions, by Cyril Alex. Glaph. in Gen. p. 178. and by Theodoret, hær. fab. l. 5. c. 23. I dare not depend upon his confidence.

Ver. 5. [b] Ταῦτα ἔλεγον ὑμῖν, I told you of theſe things.] Theſe are the words which ſeem to me to ſettle my interpretation of this chapter. For of the Jews, and their oppoſing of themſelves to the doctrine of Chriſtianity, and the profeſſors of it, he told them in his firſt epiſtle, chap. 2. 15. 16. and when he was with them, the perſecutions that both he and they ſuffered from them, Acts 17. 15. 16. gave him a juſt occaſion to ſpeak both of their oppoſition to the goſpel, and of the deliverance they ſhortly might expect from ſuch enraged perſecutors; this being hinted for the encouragement of Chriſtians, in moſt of his epiſtles: but that he ſhould tell them any thing of Mahomet, or of the papal antichriſt, who were not then in being, or to be known then to the Theſſalonians by any of the characters here mentioned, is not ſo eaſy to conceive. Though ſince the characters here referred to are partly to be found, Dan. 11. 35. 36. and that place by the ancients (x) is thought to relate to Antichriſt, and to be here referred to by St Paul, this is by ſome expoſitors thought to refer to ſomething the apoſtle might have taught them from the prophet Daniel, touching Antichriſt. See the preface, § 1. 2. 3.

Ver. 6. [i] Καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, And now ye know what with-holdeth.] Or rather, and ye know what now with-holdeth; and according to this ſenſe of the words, that which hindered the full revelation of this man of ſin, muſt be in being, and actually with-holding when this epiſtle was indited. Some of the fathers (y) have conjectured, that the τὸ κατέχον, or that which hindered, was the gifts of the Holy Spirit then given to believers, and exerciſed in the aſſemblies of Chriſtians; but they more generally do refer this to the Roman empire (z), ſaying, That the apoſtle here teacheth, that " till that be taken " away, antichriſt ſhall not come." " This," ſay they, " the apoſtle here expreſſeth ſo covertly and " obſcurely (a), that he might not incenſe the Ro- " man emperors againſt the Chriſtians," as he muſt have done, had he openly and boldly ſaid, " Antichriſt

Ib. ᾽Εν τῷ ἰδίῳ καιρῷ, in his ſeaſon.] i. e. In the time prefixed for the falſe chriſts and antichriſt to come, Matth. 24. 5. 24. in the laſt hour of the Jewiſh church and œconomy, according to theſe words of St John, 1 John 2. 18. Little children, it is the laſt hour; and as ye have heard (from Chriſt) that antichriſt ſhall come; ſo now are there many antichriſts, by which ye may know that this is the laſt hour.

They who refer this to the papal antiehriſt, ſay that this ſeaſon relates to the tempus ſtatutum, the time prefixed, Dan. 11. 25. For antichriſt, ſaith he, ſhall proſper till the indignation be accompliſhed, or till God's indignation againſt the Jewiſh nation ceaſeth; and to the time, times, and half a time, mentioned, Dan. 7. 25. during which time the little horn was to wear out the ſaints of the Moſt High, and to the 1260 days in which the beaſt ſhould triumph, and the witneſſes ſhould be clothed in ſackcloth, Rev. 11. 3. or to the time, times, and half a time, mentioned, Rev. 12. 6. 14.

Ver. 7. ᾽Το γὰρ μυστήριον ἤδη ἐνεργεῖται ἀνομίας, for the myſtery of iniquity doth already work;] that is, The Jews have already imbibed their pernicious principles, that it is not lawful to pay tribute to Cæſar, or to be ſubject to any other government under God: they have already made ſome ſeditious attempts, not only in Babylon, but in Judea, under Theudas Gaulonites; (b) and alſo have been incited farther to do ſo by one Dortus, and his aſſociates, who perſuaded the multitude ἐπὶ τῇ Ῥωμαίων ἀποστάσει, to revolt from the Romans. Joſephus alſo doth inform us, that before that time there were many tumults (c) in Judea, ὑπὸ τυχῆς βασιλείαν ὁ καιρὸς ἀνέπεισε, and that the time prevailed with many to uſurp the kingdom. This myſtery was alſo working by the falſe apoſtles, and deceitful workers of the Jews, cauſing ſome of the Gentile Chriſtians to warp from the ſimplicity of the faith, to the Jewiſh rites, to mix Judaiſm with Chriſtianity, and ſo to turn from him that called them, to another goſpel. The fathers, Theodoret only excepted, ſay this myſtery of iniquity was already working, (d) in Nero, the forerunner of Antichriſt, and the calamities he brought upon the Chriſtians. On which account ſome of them taught that he was antichriſt; and others, that he was to be raiſed again to be ſo. But this is an extravagancy ſufficiently confuted from this one obſervation, That theſe words were written in the reign of Claudius, whereas the perſecution of the Chriſtians happened only twelve years after, in the reign of Nero. Others, who ſay this myſtery was working in the falſe prophets then in being, till they can ſhew us any falſe prophets then in being, which were not of the Jewiſh nation, do not contradict, but eſtabliſh our aſſertion. And laſtly, others, though they do zealouſly contend againſt Dr Hammond, that Simon Magus could not be the man of ſin here mentioned, yet ſay, it is probable he was the myſtery of iniquity then working, and the forerunner of antichriſt, becauſe he did " ſet up himſelf as the ſupreme God, brought in the " invocation of angels, and the worſhip of images, " and taught idolatry to be a thing indifferent, and " was the father," as the beaſt is ſtyled the mother of abominations; but thus they ſeem to me to build up again, what they had ſo induſtriouſly pulled down. For it is highly reaſonable to conceive the myſtery of iniquity then working, ſhould be that very myſtery which afterward was to be completed by a more full appearance of the man of ſin, as will appear from the connection of the words, Remember ye not, that when I was with you, I told you theſe things, (who was the man of ſin to be revealed, and what were his characters, ver. 3. 4. and what it was that hindered at preſent the revealing of him): for the myſtery of iniquity is already working, (i. e. he is doing that covertly, which when he is revealed, he will do more openly;) only he that hinders (his full appearance) will do ſo, till he be taken away; and then ſhall this wicked one be revealed? Who ſees not now, that all thoſe interpretations muſt be falſe, which make the myſtery of iniquity to be one perſon, or one kind of perſons; and the man of ſin, or antichriſt, another; as they muſt do, who make the myſtery of iniquity to be Simon Magus, or the falſe prophets, or heretics, in being when this epiſtle was indited; and the man of ſin, the Pope of Rome and his clergy? This myſtery of iniquity, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, cannot be underſtood but of the Jewiſh nation. And ſo it is explained again and again by St John, ſaying, This is the laſt hour; and as you have heard that antichriſt cometh, ſo now are there many antichriſts; by which we know this is the

And chap. 4. 3. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth not Jeſus Chriſt, who is come in the fleſh, is not of God; and this is the ſpirit of antichriſt; this is the deceiver, and the antichriſt, Epiſt. 2. 7. Here therefore is a plain account of the working of the myſtery of iniquity in the falſe chriſts and prophets of the Jewiſh nation, who alſo were the great incendiaries to, and agents in the apoſtaſy of that nation from the Roman government. See note on ver. 10.

Ibid. Ὁ κατέχων, He that letteth.] Quis niſi Romanus ſtatus? "Who but the Roman ſtate?" ſaith Tertullian (e); ſo many of the fathers as hath been noted on the foregoing verſe. And whereas it may be objected againſt this ſenſe, that it ſeems plainly from the word ὁ κατέχων, that he muſt be a perſon, rather than a ſtate; they who are of this opinion anſwer, He is here ſpoken of as one ſingle perſon, though the government conſiſted of a ſucceſſion of emperors, becauſe one of them only reigned at a time, and the government was diſſolved by taking away the laſt governor. My conjecture is this, He who now letteth, i. e. The Emperor Claudius will let till he be taken away; i. e. he will hinder the Jews from breaking out into an open rebellion in his time, they being ſo ſignally and particularly obliged by him, that they cannot for ſhame think of revolting from his government; for he had made two edicts in their favour, the one concerning the Alexandrian Jews, to this effect, (f) "That the juſt "Jews ſhould ſuffer nothing becauſe of the madneſs "of Caius, who would be worſhipped as a god, and "that they ſhould have liberty to obſerve their own "laws and cuſtoms." And that other (g) edict, in which he gives them "liberty over his whole empire, "without moleſtation, to obſerve their own laws "and cuſtoms;" declaring that he did it, "becauſe "he judged them worthy of that favour, for their "affection and fidelity to the Roman government."

After his death, the affairs of the Jews, ſaith Joſephus, became worſe and worſe, not only by reaſon (h) γόητων ἀνθρώπων οἱ τὸν ὄχλον ἠπάτων, of thoſe magicians who deceived the people, and of thoſe thieves who ſtirred them up to the war againſt the Romans, (i) μηδὲν ὑπακούειν αὐτοῖς λέγοντες, perſuading them not to be ſubject to them; but becauſe Nero, in his third year, ſends a letter to Portius Feſtus governor of Judea, by which the Jews are deprived of their ἰσοπολιδία, equal ſhare of government in Cæſarea; whence, ſaith Joſephus, was the riſe of all our calamities, the Jews perſiſting ſtill in ſedition, μέχρι δὲ τὸν τοῦδε μὴν ἐξῆψαν, till they broke out into the war. In the ſeventh of Nero, Albinus ſucceeds Feſtus, then dead, who, ſaith Joſephus, was ὁ μάλιστα λυμηνάμενος τὴν χώραν, (k) one who exceedingly waſted the country, and laid the ſeeds of their future captivity. In the tenth of Nero, Geſſius Florus ſucceeds him, who (l) πολλῶν ἀνέπλησε κακῶν Ἰουδαίους, brought many calamities upon the Jews, ſaith Joſephus; which having tragically repreſented, he concludes thus, What ſhall I ſay more? τὸν γὰρ πρὸς Ῥωμαίους πόλεμον ὁ κατακλύσας ἡμᾶς ἤρασθαι Φλῶρος, for it was this Florus who compelled us to the war againſt the Romans, which began in the twelfth of Nero.

Ibid. Ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται, till he be taken away.] i. e. ſay ſome, till the Roman government be taken away; as it was by the exile of Auguſtulus, A. D. 476. Say I, till Claudius be taken away, as he was by poiſon, ſaith Suetonius; for as tolli de medio, among the Latins, ſo in the Greek, ἐκ μέσου γίνεσθαι, imports, one to be taken away by death, and oft-times by a violent death; ſo ἐξαναλῶσαι ἐκ μέσου τῆς παρεμβολῆς is, to deſtroy them out of the middle of the camp, till they were conſumed: ſo of Core and his company, it is ſaid, ἀπώλοντο ἐκ μέσου τῆς συναγωγῆς, they were deſtroyed from the midſt of the congregation, Numb. 16. 33. Thus of the righteous ſaith the prophet, ἦρται ἐκ μέσου, he is taken away, he reſts in his grave, Iſ. 57. 2. So Jeremiah, ἐξῆρε ἐκ μέσου, The Lord hath taken away all my mighty men from the midſt of me, Lam. 1. 15. And ſo God ſaith of the falſe prophet, Ezek. 14. 8. 9. Ἐξαρῶ αὐτὸν ἀφανῆ αὐτὸν ἐκ μέσου τοῦ λαοῦ μου, I will cut him off from the midſt of my people.

Ver. 8. Ὁ ἄνομος, the wicked;] Who will not be ſubject to the laws to which their forefathers, from the time of Pompey, have ſubmitted.

Ibid. ἀποκαλυφθήσεται, ſhall be revealed;] Either by his actual apoſtaſy from the Roman government, or by the great apoſtaſy of the believers of that nation; of which, ſee note on ver. 3.

Ibid. Ὃν ὁ Κύριος ἀναλώσει τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, Whom the Lord ſhall conſume by the ſpirit of his mouth.] That the apoſtle here refers to Iſ. 10. 4. appears by his uſing the very words of that prophet, which run thus: He ſhall ſmite the land with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhall he ſlay the wicked one. Now, what is the land there, is well expounded by Malachi in theſe words, chap. 4. 6. Leſt he ſmite the earth with a curſe. Where both the Hebrew and the Greek uſe the ſame words.

Now,

Now, in Malachi it is evident, and confeſſed, that by the earth, the land of Judea muſt be meant, as it is uſually in the book of Pſalms, Pſal. 16. 3. and 25. 13. and 37. 3. 9. 11. 22. 29. 34. ſeeing to them alone the prophet was then ſent to propheſy. It is therefore reaſonable to conceive, that the ſame phraſe ſhould have the ſame import in the prophet Iſaiah; to ſmite this land with the breath, or ſpirit of his mouth, is, to ſmite in his wrath and indignation. So Job 4. 9. By the blaſt of God, by the breath of his noſtrils, ἀπὸ πνεύματος ἐργῆς αὐτοῦ, or, of his anger, are they conſumed; and to conſume with his fiery indignation. Thus Tophet is ordained of old, the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, θυμὸς Κυρίου, the indignation of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone doth kindle it. So Pſal. 18. 8. A ſmoke aſcended in his anger, and fire out of his mouth devoured. And ver. 15. At thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blaſt of the breath of thy noſtrils, ἀπὸ ἐμπνεύσεως πνεύματος ὀργῆς σου, by the breath of the wind of thine anger. This therefore again anſwers to the words of Malachi, chap. 4. 1. Behold, the day cometh that ſhall burn as an oven, and all the proud, and all that do wickedly, ſhall be as ſtubble; and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up. And to that of the Baptiſt, Matth. 3. 10. And now the axe is laid to the root of the trees; every tree therefore that bringeth not forth good fruit, ſhall be hewn down, and caſt into the fire. Which alſo evidently belongs to the Jewiſh nation, which ſaid, We have Abraham for our father, ver. 9. and to whom alone the Baptiſt is there ſpeaking. And again, ver. 12. he ſaith of Chriſt, His fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly cleanſe his floor,—and burn the chaff with unquenchable fire: plainly alluding to the words of Malachi, that all the wicked ſhall be as chaff, or ſtubble. This being ſo, the earth to be ſmitten with the rod of his mouth, muſt be the people or inhabitants of the land; or, as the Chaldee, the ſinners of the earth, the unbelievers, and wicked of Judea, to be conſumed by that indignation and fire of the Lord, Mal. 4. 1. So ſaith Procopius on the place, "Doth the "Lord threaten to Judea, ἐπὶ τῇ καθ' αὐτῆς παροινίᾳ, "for her contumely againſt him, ſaying, Thy houſe "is left unto thee deſolate, and ἐγκαταλιμφθήτω πολί- "μῳ καὶ πυρὶ διδασκάπτεται, being left deſolate, is con- "ſumed by ſword and fire."

That theſe words may have a more full completion in the deſtruction of the beaſt, or myſtical Babylon, which is alſo to be ſlain by the ſword proceeding from the mouth of Chriſt, and deſtroyed by the fierceneſs of his wrath, and, with the falſe prophets, to be caſt alive into the lake of fire and brimſtone, I deny not: but that this ſhould be the primary intent of the words of Iſaiah, and that he ſhould be there propheſying of the deſtruction of the church of Rome, ſeems to me a Rabbinical gloſs, not much to be inſiſted on, eſpecially ſince the apoſtle, Rom. 15. 12. applies the tenth verſe of this chapter to the firſt calling of the Gentiles.

Ibid. Καὶ καταργήσει τῇ ἐπιφανείᾳ τῆς παρουσίας αὐτοῦ. And ſhall conſume with the brightneſs of his coming.] The day of the Lord's coming to deſtroy Jeruſalem is ſtyled by Joel, chap. 2. 31. ἡμέρα Κυρίου ἡ μεγάλη καὶ ἐπιφανὴς, the great and bright day of the Lord: and Mal. 4. 5. Behold, I ſend you Elias the prophet, (i. e. the Baptiſt, in the ſpirit and power of Elias, Luke 1. 17.), πρὶν ἐλθεῖν τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ Κυρίου τὴν μεγάλην καὶ ἐπιφανῆ, before the coming of the great and bright day of the Lord. And that our Lord's coming in his day, after he had ſuffered, and been rejected of that age, or generation, in which he ſuffered, ſhould be as lightning ſhining from one end of the heaven to the other, he expreſsly tells his diſciples, Luke 17. 24. And when this ἐπιφάνια καὶ παρουσία, brightneſs and appearance of the Son of man was to happen, he ſufficiently inſtructs them in theſe words, As the lightning φαίνεται, ſhineth from the eaſt to the weſt, οὕτως ἔσται καὶ ἡ παρουσία τοῦ υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, ſo ſhall the coming of the Son of man be; ὅπου γὰρ, for wheresoever the carcaſe is, there ſhall the eagles be gathered together, Luke 17. 24. 37.; which ſenſibly applies this matter to the deſtruction of the Jews, by the Roman army, whoſe enſign was the eagle. This therefore is a further confirmation of our expoſition.

Laſtly, Obſerve the connection of theſe verſes; there is a τὸ κατέχον νῦν, ſome thing, or perſon, that with-holdeth now; and ὁ κατέχων ἄρτι, he that now with-holdeth, will do ſo till he be taken away, καὶ τότε, and then ſhall the wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord ſhall deſtroy. Now, would not any one here think, that if the Roman government were that which with-held, antichriſt ſhould preſently be revealed, and appear to the world to be ſo, (as all the (m) fathers, who were of that opinion, held), ſoon after the diſſolution of that government, according to thoſe words of (n) St Jerom, Qui tenebat, de medio fit, et non intelligimus antichriſtum appropinquare; quem Dominus Jeſus Chriſtus interficiet ſpiritu oris ſui? "He that with-held is taken "away; and do we not underſtand that antichriſt "is at hand?" And again, Would not any one hence be prone to think, that the Lord ſhould be as quick to conſume him, when he was revealed, as all the fathers (o) thought, allowing but "three "years and a half for the whole reign of antichriſt," and declaring that they had this not from apocryphal (p) writings, but from the holy ſcriptures? And were it otherwiſe, thoſe Chriſtians which ſaw the diſſolution of the Roman empire, A. D. 476, might lie under the ſame doubts as did the Theſſalonians here, touching the man of ſin; for then they ſaw no Roman antichriſt appearing, nor that myſtery of iniquity yet working; for the Pope and clergy of Rome were then orthodox, free from exalting themſelves above all that is called God, or from wearing out the ſaints with perſecution, till ſome hundred years after. And if, after his appearing thus, he were to continue 1260 years before our Saviour's coming to deſtroy him, as he muſt do, according to that hypotheſis, might not the Chriſtians be tempted, in that long interval, to ſay, Where is the promiſe of his coming? This therefore ſeems to lie as a ſtrong bar againſt that, as the primary ſenſe and meaning of theſe words.

Ver. 9. ' Ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις, with all power and ſigns.] This our Lord foretold, that before his advent to deſtroy Jeruſalem, there ſhould appear falſe prophets, and falſe chriſts, who ſhould deceive many, Matth. 24. 11. who ſhould ſhew ſigns and wonders, to deceive, if it were poſſible, the very elect, ver. 24. Now, that theſe falſe prophets, ver. 11. and 24. were the ſame, we learn from St Luke, who ſums both up in one, chap. 21. 8. and from the work of both, which was to deceive many; that they were all to appear in the ſame age in which his diſciples to whom he ſpake theſe words lived, is alſo evident from Chriſt's caution to them in reſpect of both, See to it, leſt any man deceive you, Matth. 24. 4.; See to it; behold, I have foretold you all things, Mark 13. 23. Matth. 24. 25. It cannot then be doubted but that there were ſuch perſons as are here mentioned, which then aroſe among the Jews. Such were the Jews of whom St Paul ſpeaks, comparing them to Jannes and Jambres, the celebrated magicians of Egypt, becauſe of their reſiſtance of the truth of the goſpel, as thoſe magicians reſiſted Moſes, and whom he ſtyles πονηροὶ ἄνθρωποι καὶ γόητες, wicked men and jugglers, 2 Tim. 3. 8. 13. or thoſe who did ſtrange things by the invocation of devils, as the word imports, ſay Phavorinus and Suidas; the magicians were men of the ſame art and tricks. Now, to theſe Joſephus doth aſcribe the beginning of the apoſtaſy from the Roman government, and by them he informs us, that it was carried on to the laſt; the affairs of the Jews, ſaith he, became worſe daily by reaſon γόητων ἀνθρώπων οἱ τὸν ὄχλον ἠπάτων, of thoſe impoſtors who deceived the people (q), of which he immediately gives an inſtance in the Egyptian who ſet up for a prophet. He adds, that in the beginning of the reign of Nero, "impoſtors and deceivers, under a pretence of di-"vine impulſe, endeavouring innovations and "changes, made the people mad, and led them in-"to the wilderneſs, promiſing there to them ſigns "of liberty from God (r);" and that γόητες πολλοὺς εἰς ἀπόστασιν ὤπεισαν, the impoſtors prevailed with many to revolt (s). And even when their temple was in flames, he ſaith, There were many prophets who encouraged them to expect τὴν ἀπὸ Θεοῦ βοήθειαν, help from God (t), and that they gave credit to them. Accordingly of the Dragon it is ſaid, that the unclean ſpirits which went out of his mouth, were the ſpirits of devils working miracles, Rev. 16. 13. 14.; that the falſe prophet wrought ſigns before the beaſt, Rev. 19. 20.; and that the beaſt wrought great ſigns, ſo as to make fire deſcend from heaven, Rev. 13. 13. and that by theſe things they did πλανᾶν, deceive the inhabitants of the earth, Rev. 13. 13. 19. 20. and 20. 10. Ver. 10. ' Τὴν ἀγάπην τῆς ἀληθείας οὐκ ἐδέξαντο, they received not the love of the truth.] From theſe words ſome conceive, that antichriſt, or the man of ſin muſt in profeſſion be a Chriſtian, becauſe he is ſaid not to receive the love of the truth only: but all the fathers (u), and many others ſay, Not to receive the love of the truth, is, not to receive the truth which is worthy to be loved, and which would have taught them charity to thoſe they perſecuted, it being the ſame with not believing the truth, ver. 12. this emphatically belonged to thoſe unbelieving Jews, to whom St Paul ſpeaks thus, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould be firſt ſpoken to you; but ſince you thruſt it from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn unto the Gentiles, Acts 13. 46. and to whom he applieth that of the prophet, Behold, ye deſpiſers, and periſh; for I will work a work in your days, which you will in no wiſe believe, ver. 41.; ſee Acts 28. 27. Heb. 4. 2. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 7. 8. And all the fathers which ſpeak of antichriſt, and the man of ſin, not one of them excepted, declare, that this and the two following verſes belong to the unbelieving Jews, that he is thus to come with ſigns and wonders to deceive them; and that they who would not receive Chriſt, confirming his doctrine with true miracles, ſhall be deceived by the lying miracles of antichriſt (x). And if this be ſo, that theſe things are intended of the unbelieving Jews, they can agree in the primary import of them to them only.

Ver. 11. [u] Πέμψει ὁ Θεὸς, God ſhall ſend.] As he ſent a lying ſpirit into the mouth of Ahab's prophets, 1 Kings 22. 21. 22. by permitting the evil ſpirit to go forth for that end; or, as he is ſaid to deceive his people, Jer. 4. 10. becauſe he ſuffered them to be deceived by falſe prophets, Jer. 6. 14. and as he deceived the falſe prophets, by giving them up unto a ſpirit of deluſion, Ezek. 14. 9. This muſt be the true interpretation of all ſuch paſſages as theſe. For,

1. God cannot ſecretly inſpire into us any evil, or infuſe any evil principle into our hearts; for evil can never proceed immediately from him who hath an abſolute and entire freedom from it: were it his offſpring, it muſt ceaſe to bear that name, his works being all very good, and wrought in righteouſneſs. Nor,

2. Can he incline, excite, encourage, or entice to ſin; for then he muſt excite men to perform the abominable thing which his ſoul hates; to do that which is infinitely diſpleaſing to him, and muſt incline them ſecretly to that which he openly deters all perſons from; and then he cannot truly be offended with ſuch perſons, he cannot puniſh them for their iniquities, or elſe he muſt be angry with them becauſe they do obey his motions, and ſentence them to endleſs miſery becauſe they do comply with his own inclinations. Nor,

3. Can he neceſſitate any man to ſin, for then he muſt by force compel them to it, and then the action done by virtue of that force cannot be theirs, but God's; nor would our conſciences condemn us for ſin, were we aſſured we could not help it.

Ver. 14. [x] Εἰς ὃ.] Here Beza notes that many copies read εἰς ἣν, which agrees with πίστιν, ver. 13. and that many Latin copies accord with them. But it is common for this pronoun to vary in gender from the noun to which it relates; ſo σκεύη ἐλέους ἅ, Rom. 9. 23. 24. τεκνία μου ἅ, Gal. 4. 19.; ſee Philip. 2. 15. Col. 2. 19. Ver. 17. [z] Κρατεῖτε τὰς παραδόσεις, Hold the traditions which ye have been taught.] This paſſage proves not in the leaſt that in the judgment of St Paul there were any traditions wholly extraſcriptural, that is, ſuch as were neither then committed, nor after to be committed to writing, by himſelf, or any other inſpired perſon; but only that he himſelf had not writ all things to them by epiſtle, being abſent, but had preached many things to them being preſent.

Now, that the word which St Paul preached orally was after written by St Luke, his amanuenſis and companion, we learn from the tradition of the church of Chriſt, recorded by Irenæus and Euſebius (y).

2. All that the apoſtle here exhorts the Theſſalonians to do, is to retain the traditions they had immediately received from the mouth of an apoſtle, and which he perſonally had delivered to them; which traditions, when we know them to be ſuch, there is no doubt, but they ought with all reverence to be received: when therefore the church of Rome hath proved, that the traditions ſhe obtrudes upon us were immediately received from the mouth of an apoſtle, then, and not till then, will this text oblige us to receive them.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. FInally, (τὸ λοιπὸν, furthermore, I intreat you), brethren, (to) pray for us (apoſtles and miniſters of the goſpel), that the word of the Lord (preached by us) may have free courſe (τρέχῃ, may run to), and be glorified (among other Gentiles), even as (it hath been) with (or among) you;

2. And (pray alſo) that we may be delivered [a] from unreaſonable and wicked men, (ſuch as the unbelieving Jews, the great oppoſers of our preaching to the Gentiles, are, 1 Theſſ. 2. 15. 16.): for all men have not faith.

3. But (though men may prove unfaithful) the Lord is (always) faithful (to his promiſes), who (therefore) ſhall (or will do all things requiſite on his part, to) ſtabliſh you, and keep you from evil.

4. And (therefore) we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye (through his aſſiſtance) both do (at preſent), and will (ſtill) do the things which we (by his authority) command you.

5. And (that we may not be miſtaken in this confidence, we pray that) the Lord (would) direct your hearts into the love of God, (which will conſtrain you to this obedience, 2 Cor. 5. 14. and from which nothing ſhall ſeparate you, Rom. 8. 35. 39.), and into the [b] patient waiting for (of) Chriſt, (mentioned, 1 Theſſ. 1. 10. 2 Theſſ. 1. 10. Philip. 3. 20.)

6. Now we (being thus confident of your obedience) command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye withdraw yourſelves from every brother that walketh diſorderly, and not after [c] the tradition which he hath received of (i. e. from) us.

7. For you yourſelves know how you ought to follow us: for [d] we behaved not ourſelves diſorderly among you.

8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought with labour and travel (wearineſs and toil) night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

9. Not becauſe we have not power (to live of the goſpel, for the labourer is worthy of his hire, Luke 10. 7. and ſo hath the Lord appointed, that they that preach the goſpel, ſhould live of the goſpel, 1 Cor. 9. 14.), but to make ourſelves an enſample unto you to follow us (in this our induſtry; for if we, who might lawfully live upon other mens labours, chuſe rather to work for our own living, how much more ought ye to do ſo?)

10. (And this we have formerly taught); for even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that if any (being able) would not work, neither ſhould he eat.

11. (And of this we have cauſe to remind you); for we hear that there are ſome who walk among you diſorderly, working not at all, but are buſy-bodies, (meddling with that which belongs not to them.)

12. Now them that are ſuch we command, and exhort by (the authority and in the name of) the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that with quietneſs they work, and (ſo) eat their own bread.

13. (Thus I hear it is with them): but ye, brethren, [e] be not weary of well-doing, (let not their example make you neglect your induſtry.)

14. And if any man (among you) obey not our word by this epiſtle, (in which we exhort and command them thus to work), [f] note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be aſhamed.

15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother.

16. Now the [g] Lord of peace himſelf give you peace always, by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17. The ſalutation of (me) Paul with mine own hand, which is [h] the token in every epiſtle (that it comes from me): ſo I write.

18. The grace of our Lord Jeſus be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 2. NOte, It is well known, and hath been often obſerved, that the unbelieving Jews were in all places bitter enemies to the preachers of the goſpel, and ſent their emiſſaries into all places to incite the governors againſt them; and therefore, as here, ſo Rom. 15. 31. the apoſtle intreats Chriſtians to contend with him in prayer, that he might be delivered from the unbelievers in Judea; whereas Simon Magus and his followers were a deſpicable crew at the writing of this epiſtle, and could have no power to perſecute the apoſtles or preachers of the goſpel upon this account: and therefore Euſebius (a) informs us, that his hereſy prevailed little in the apoſtles days, and that his power was preſently extinguiſhed with his perſon.

Ver. 6. [c] Κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν.] The tradition here mentioned is, ſay Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, the tradition which he delivered διὰ τῶν ἔργων, by his works, in which he was an example to them of induſtry; and therefore he adds, at ver. 7.

Ver. 7. [d] Οὐκ ἠτακτήσαμεν, We behaved not ourſelves diſorderly;] that is, ſaith Theophylact, we were not idle; for God having ordered man to labour, and fitted him with members for that end, he that will not do ſo, ἐκλείπει τὴν τάξιν, deſerts the order in which God hath placed him; and ſo the apoſtle expounds himſelf, ver. 11.

Ver. 13. • Note, the fathers interpret theſe words thus, Let not their ſloth hinder your charity, in giving them what is neceſſary to preſerve life. But this expoſition ſuits not with ver. 10.

Ver. 14. [f] Σημειῦσθε.] Moſt interpreters ſay, that the apoſtle, ver. 6. and here, requires the church-governors to uſe the cenſures of the church upon theſe diſorderly walkers; but I have ſhewed it to be highly probable, that when this epiſtle was writ, there were no ſuch governors ſettled in this church: ſee note on 1 Theſſ. 5. 12.

2. Theſe exhortations plainly are directed to all the brethren in general; if therefore they relate to excommunication, and ſuch like cenſures, it will hence follow, that the power of the keys belongs to all the brethren in general.

3. The apoſtle exhorts them ſtill to own them as Chriſtian brethren, which they at preſent are not, who by excommunication are excluded from the church in the ſociety of Chriſtians.

Ver. 16. [g] Ὁ Κύριος, the Lord.] Both here and chap. 2. 16. the apoſtle prays to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt for peace, which, in the Hebrew phraſe, imports all happineſs, and for eſtabliſhment in every good word and work; which is a ſtrong argument for his divinity, eſpecially conſidering that every good work derives from God

Ver. 17. [h] Ὅ ἐστι σημεῖον ἐν πάσῃ ἐπιστολῇ, which is the token in every epiſtle.] Hence Grotius concludes, that this muſt be the firſt of his epiſtles; for had he, ſaith he, writ any epiſtle before, this admonition had been needleſs. I ſhould rather think that this ſuppoſes he had writ ſome epiſtle before, becauſe he ſaith not this ſhall be, but this is the ſign in every epiſtle. And this is evident almoſt to a demonſtration from theſe words, chap. 2. 2. Be not troubled by epiſtle as from us, as if the day of the Lord were at hand; ſee the note there; and from theſe words, ver. 15. Hold the traditions you have (formerly) received, whether by word, or our epiſtle. To which words Grotius hath nothing to anſwer. A DISCOURSE, by way of Appendix to the Firſt Chapter,

SHEWING

That the endleſs miſeries or torments of the wicked are well conſiſtent both with the juſtice and the goodneſs of God.

THE apoſtle, in this chapter, ſeems plainly to aſſert, that wicked perſons ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction, and alſo to reſolve this puniſhment into the δικαιοκρισια, or juſt judgment of God.

Whereas it is pretended, that "it is contrary to "the juſtice of God to puniſh temporary crimes "with eternal puniſhments, becauſe juſtice always "obſerves a proportion between offences and pu-"niſhments; but between temporary ſins and eter-"nal puniſhments there is no proportion. And if it "be hard to reconcile this with divine juſtice, it "will be much more ſo, to ſhew how it comports "with that great goodneſs we ſuppoſe to be in "God."

They who aſſert the eternity of future torments inflicted on the wicked abiding in a ſtate of miſery, attempt by ſeveral ways to anſwer this objection. I ſhall begin with thoſe anſwers which to me ſeem not ſatisfactory, and briefly ſhew the reaſons why I think they are not ſo; and then return that anſwer which I think fully clears the juſtice and the goodneſs of God in this diſpenſation from the ſtrength of this objection. And,

§ 1. 1*ſt*, Some make out the proportion thus, that "becauſe ſin is infinite in reſpect of the object a-"gainſt which it is committed, therefore it deſerves "an infinite puniſhment. Now, becauſe a finite "creature cannot ſuffer a puniſhment which is in-"finite as to intention, therefore he ſuffers that "which is infinite as to extenſion or duration."

But to this it is replied, that if all ſins be for this reaſon infinite as to demerit, then the demerit of all ſins muſt neceſſarily be equal, and ſo there muſt be equal reaſon for the pardon of all ſins; for the demerit of no ſin can be more than infinite. 2. Hence it will follow, that God cannot render unto every man according as his works ſhall be, becauſe though they commit innumerable ſins, he can only lay upon them the puniſhment due to one only, becauſe he cannot lay upon them a puniſhment which is more than infinite.

§ 2. 2*dly*, Others ſay, that "if wicked men lived "for ever in this world, they would ſin for ever, "and therefore they deſerve to be puniſhed for "ever." But,

1. Who can be certain of this, ſince, whilſt we live in this world we are in a ſtate of trial, and ſo may be in a poſſibility of repenting and growing better?

2. God hath expreſsly declared, that men ſhall be judged hereafter, not according to what they would have done had they lived longer, but according to what they actually have done in this preſent life, according to their works done in the body; and ſo he hath ſufficiently declared, he doth not puniſh them for what they would have done had they lived longer, but for what they actually had done whilſt they lived. So that this anſwer recoils thus, Wicked men, by God's declaration, are only to be puniſhed for what they did whilſt they lived here: now, they did not live here for ever in a ſtate of ſin, therefore they are not to live for ever hereafter in a ſtate of puniſhment.

§ 3. 3*dly*, Others ſay, that "God having ſet be-"fore the ſinner life and death, and having ſo ex-"preſsly forwarned him, this would be the certain "conſequence of his iniquity, he cannot charge "God with injuſtice in allotting to him the portion "which he choſe, and would incur, after all admo-"nitions to the contrary."

But though this may be ſufficient to ſtop the ſinner's mouth, it will do little to ſtop the mouth of infidels, becauſe it ſeemeth not to anſwer the objection ariſing from the diſproportion between the fault and the puniſhment; for it renders not the fault leſs finite, or the puniſhment leſs infinite, and ſo it doth not render it leſs inconſiſtent with divine equity and goodneſs to threaten ſo to puniſh finite crimes, and execute that puniſhment upon the ſinner.

§ 4. A very great and learned perſon hath attempted a ſolution of this objection from theſe conſiderations.

1. "That the meaſure of penalties is not to be "taken from any ſtrict proportion betwixt crimes "and puniſhments, but from one great end and de-"ſign

" ſign of government, which is, to ſecure the ob" ſervation of wholeſome and neceſſary laws; and " conſequently whatever penalties are proper and
" neceſſary to this end are not unjuſt.

2. " That whoſoever conſiders how ineffectual the " threatening, even of eternal torments, is to the " greateſt part of ſinners, will ſoon be ſatisfied that
" a leſs penalty than that of eternal ſuffering, would,
" to the far greateſt part of mankind, have been, in " all probability, of little or no force; and that if " anything more terrible could have been threatened " to the workers of iniquity, it had not been unrea-
" ſonable, becauſe it would all have been little
" enough to deter men effectually from ſin." But then he adds,

3. " That, after all, he that threateneth, hath " ſtill the power of execution in his own hands; for
" there is this remarkable difference betwixt pro-
" miſes and threatenings, that he who promiſeth,
" paſſeth over a right to another, and thereby
" ſtands obliged to him, in juſtice and faithfulneſs,
" to make good his promiſe: but in threatenings it " is quite otherwiſe; he that threatens keeps the " right of puniſhing in his own hand, and is not " obliged to execute what he hath threatened any " further than the reaſons and ends of government
" do require; and that he may, without any injury
" to the party threatened, remit and abate as much " as he pleaſeth of the puniſhment that he had threat" ened; and becauſe in ſo doing he is not worſe,
" but better than his word, no body can find fault,
" or complain of any wrong or injuſtice thereby
" done him.

" Nor is this any impeachment of God's truth
" and faithfulneſs, any more than it is eſteemed a" mong men a piece of falſehood, not to do what " they have threatened."

But here, with ſubmiſſion to better judgments, I conceive are many things propounded which are not exactly true, or reach not the objection, ſince that relates not to God's threats of puniſhment, but to his execution of the threatened puniſhment.

And, 1ſt, when it is ſaid, that " what proportion " ought to be appointed betwixt crimes and penal" ties, is not ſo properly a conſideration of juſtice
" as of prudence in the lawgiver;" and thence inferred, that " whatever the diſproportion may be " between temporary ſins and eternal puniſhments,
" juſtice cannot be ſaid to be concerned in it."

It is owned, that by the ſanctions annexed to his laws, the lawgiver deſigns the preſervation of his laws from being violated, which is an effect of prudence, but ſtill of prudence tempered with equity, not unregardleſs of it, ſince it cannot be prudence to threaten what I know I cannot juſtly execute: for this, in human laws, doth null the penalty; and could it be ſuppoſed in divine, would even fruſtrate the end of all God's threats, ſince every body would reſt aſſured, that a juſt God would never execute them.

But, 2dly, The execution of the threatened judgment, which is the only thing againſt which the objection lies, is certainly an act of diſtributive juſtice, and is ſo repreſented in the holy ſcriptures, when it is ſaid to be done according to our works, and according as our works ſhall be, Rom. 2. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Rev. 22. 12. Matth. 16. 27.; and when it is declared to be δικαιοκρισια, the juſt judgment of God; and δικαιον παρα τω Θεω, juſt with God to render this vengeance to thoſe who obey not the goſpel, which conſiſts in their everlaſting deſtruction, 2 Theſſ. 1. 6. 8. 9.: ſo that though prudence was properly concerned in promulging the penalty, becauſe it is prudence which directs us to chuſe the means moſt proper to the end we aim at, yet ſeeing the primary end of the lawgiver, i. e. the preventing the tranſgreſſing of his law, is wholly loſt, and entirely defeated before this puniſhment comes to be executed, juſtice alone can be concerned in the execution of it; and if the continuance of the ſinner under miſery for ever be the execution of the threatened puniſhment, juſtice alone can be concerned in the ſubjection of the ſinner to that puniſhment; ſo far is it from being true, that if prudence be requiſite for the proportioning penalties to crimes, juſtice cannot be concerned in the diſproportion that may be between them, and much leſs that it cannot be concerned in executing a penalty which bears ſo great a diſproportion to the crime.

I confeſs alſo, that in human governments, prudence may fitly be called in to deliberate, not whether it be lawful, but whether it be expedient to execute the threatened penalty; as when the government is feeble, and the multitude or power of offenders may render it hazardous to do juſtice on them; but nothing of this nature can happen in Theocracy, where there can neither be a want of wiſdom in appointing, or equity in proportionating the penalty to the offences, and much leſs want of power to execute what in his equity and wiſdom he ſaw fit to threaten.

2dly, When it is ſaid, That " a leſs penalty than " eternal ſufferings would not have been ſufficient
" to deter men from ſin; and therefore it could not " be unreaſonable, but rather ſuitable to divine
" prudence, to threaten eternal miſeries."

I am not willing to admit, that God ſhould threaten what he knows he cannot, with conſiſtence to his juſtice or his goodneſs, execute; this being, in effect, to threaten in this wiſe, " If you will do to me
" what you in juſtice ought not to do, I will exe" cute upon you what I in juſtice ought not to do

" to

" to you." It is alſo to inſinuate, that an all wiſe God could not ſo well provide for human government, or carry on his great deſigns, without abuſing mens credulity, and ſcaring them with dreadful expectations of what he never did intend to execute. Laſtly, This ſeemeth even to inſinuate, that prudence in God may act without regard to equity and goodneſs, and even be ſeparated from them; as it muſt be, in appointing, and even proportionating thoſe penalties to crimes, which it is not conſiſtent with his equity or goodneſs to inflict.

3*dly*, When it is added, That " God is not obliged to execute what he hath threatened, any further than the reaſons and the ends of government do require;" and that " he may, without any injury to the party threatened, remit and abate as much as he pleaſeth of the puniſhment that he hath threatened, and that without any impeachment of his truth and faithfulneſs:"

This I allow of, in the caſe of temporal puniſhments in this world, deſigned not for exciſion, but the amendment of the ſinner; becauſe there may be a juſt ground for the remiſſion of ſuch threatened penalties, even the repentance and reformation of the ſinner, by which the primary end of all God's threats, in ſome good meaſure, is obtained: and alſo becauſe theſe threats, in what expreſſions ſoever they are made, if they be only threats, are ſtill conditional; the meaning of them being only this, I will inflict this judgment, if you repent not of your evil ways: For at what inſtant I ſhall ſpeak, ſaith God, againſt a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, to pull down, and to deſtroy it; if that nation againſt which I have pronounced theſe things, turn from their evil ways, I will repent me of the evil which I thought to do unto them, Jer. 18. 7. 8. And again, When I ſay unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou ſhalt ſurely die; if he do not turn from his way, he ſhall die in his iniquity. Say therefore to them, As I live, ſaith the Lord God, I have no pleaſure in the death of him that dieth, but that the wicked turn from his way and live; wherefore, turn yourſelves, and live ye, Ezek. 18. 32. 33. 8. 9. 11. 3*dly*, Becauſe God threateneth judgments; not that he takes any pleaſure in his puniſhments, but rather to awaken and reform the ſinner: when therefore, by his comminations, he hath wrought this good effect upon him, it is not to be wondered, that he doth not proceed to execute that judgment which hath already done its work by being threatened. And all this well comports, not only with divine juſtice, but alſo with his immutability and truth, becauſe this reformation and repentance changes the ſubject of the threat; the change in every inſtance of this nature being not in God, but man. Thus, v. g. we cannot charge God with mutability, becauſe he doth not execute the threatened judgment on repenting Nineveh; becauſe it was impenitent, and not repenting Nineveh, he threatened: nor with injuſtice, becauſe it was only her impenitence which rendered her the proper object of vindictive juſtice.

But then this notion ſeems to be ſtretched too far, when it is extended to God's threats of future and eternal puniſhments to be inflicted upon thoſe who die in an impenitent and unreformed eſtate. For,

1*ſt*, In all theſe caſes, the evil threatened hath entirely loſt its firſt and ſalutary end upon them, and therefore muſt be threatened to ſuch perſons to no end, or elſe to ſhew the juſtice of God in puniſhing theſe veſſels of his wrath thus fitted for deſtruction. Thus v. g. when Chriſt ſaith, Except ye repent, ye ſhall all periſh, Luke 13. 3. 5.; that in the day of wrath, and revelation of his righteous judgment, God will give to every one according to his works; to them that obey not the truth, but obey unrighteouſneſs, indignation and wrath, Rom. 2. 5. 6. 7. 8. to them that obey not the goſpel, everlaſting deſtruction: theſe threats are plainly made to thoſe who die in their impenitence and diſobedience, by that God who will judge every man according to his works; declaring, that in the day of the revelation of his wrath and righteous judgment, they ſhall periſh everlaſtingly: becauſe, through the hardneſs and impenitency of their hearts, they have treaſured up wrath againſt the day of wrath, and rendered themſelves veſſels of his wrath fitted for deſtruction. Can it be reaſonably ſaid then, becauſe God does them no injury if he do not execute his wrath upon them, that though they do not repent, they may not periſh? that indignation and wrath may not be the portion of the diſobedient? and that this righteous judge may not give to them according to their works? May we not rather ſay unto them, as doth this very perſon in another place, (a) " If thou continueſt impenitent, however he may defer the execution of temporal evils, his truth and veracity is concerned to inflict eternal puniſhments upon thee."

2*dly*, God's threats of everlaſting miſeries have for their object the impenitent, and therefore do exclude the ſuppoſition of any change in them, which may induce God to remit, or to abate the threatened judgment: if then this puniſhment may be remitted to them, either in part or in whole, it muſt be either by a change in God, or by a ſecret intention in him not to inflict what he thus threateneth. That there was in God no ſuch ſecret intention, this learned perſon thus declares, by ſaying, (b) " When God did threaten, he ſpake what he " did really purpoſe and intend, if ſomething " did not intervene to prevent the judgment threat- " ened." And indeed, theſe threats declaring what the righteous God will do, and what they who are finally impenitent and diſobedient ſhall ſuffer, ſuch a ſecret will muſt plainly be repugnant to his revealed will, and therefore muſt ſuppoſe in God two contrary wills. Moreover, to ſay that ſuch a ſecret intention may be in God, notwithſtanding theſe declarations to the contrary, is in great meaſure to enervate even the primary intention of theſe threats, viz. the deterring the ſinner, by the greatneſs and duration of them, from a continuance in his ſin; for this intention, if it may be in God, it follows, that it may be his will not to inflict what he hath threatened to the ſinner: now, ſo much hopes as you give the impenitent ſinner, that he may eſcape eternal puniſhment, ſo much encouragement you give him to continue ſtill in his impenitence. Now, (c) " the belief of the threatenings of God, in their " utmoſt extent, is of ſo great moment to a good " life, and ſo great a diſcouragement to ſin," ſaith this Reverend perſon, " that if men were once ſet " free from the fear and belief of this, the moſt " powerful reſtraint from ſin would be taken a- " way."

That this cannot be expected, by reaſon of any change in God, this excellent perſon thus declares and evinceth. (d) " Let but the ſinner conſider " what God is, and his unchangeable nature muſt " needs terrify him; he is an holy God, who there- " fore hateth all the workers of iniquity; a juſt " God, who will by no means clear the guilty, nor " let the ſinner go unpuniſhed. He is alſo omnipo- " tent, and able to execute the vengeance threat- " ened againſt ſinners. And, which gives a ſad " accent to all this, he that is thus holy, and juſt, " and powerful, continues ever the ſame; he will " never ceaſe to hate iniquity, and to be an impla- " cable enemy to all impenitent ſinners.— Let, " then, all obſtinate ſinners hear this, and tremble; " you cannot be more obſtinately bent to conti- " nue in your ways, than God is peremptorily re- " ſolved to make you miſerable; if you be deter- " mined on a ſinful courſe, God is alſo determined " how he will deal with you; that he will not " ſpare, but that his anger and jealouſy ſhall ſmoke " againſt you; and that all the curſes which are " written in this book, ſhall light upon you. He hath " ſworn in his wrath, that unbelieving and impe- " nitent ſinners ſhall not enter into his reſt; and for " the greater aſſurance of the thing, and that we " may not think that there is any condition impli- " ed in theſe threatenings, he hath confirmed them " by an oath, that by this immutable ſign, in which " it is impoſſible for God to lye, ſinners might have " ſtrong terrors, and not be able to fly to any " hopes of refuge."

3. Either God may in juſtice inflict upon the wicked thoſe puniſhments which he hath threatened, or elſe it is unjuſt in God to execute upon them the judgment written, i. e. the puniſhment which he hath threatened to them in the word of truth. If it be ſaid, It is unjuſt in God to execute them on the ſinner dying in his impenitence, either we cannot be obliged to believe that word in which theſe threats are contained; or elſe an obligation muſt lie upon us to believe that God will act unjuſtly. If, to avoid this, it be ſaid, Theſe threats do not diſcover certainly what God will do, but only what the ſinner doth deſerve to ſuffer; read them once more, and you will find, that they expreſsly ſay of thoſe who ſhall be at the great day condemned, that they ſhall go away into eternal puniſhment, Matth. 25. 46.; that they ſhall be puniſhed with e- ternal deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, 2 Theſſ. 1. 8.; and that they ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever, Rev. 14. 10. 11. and 20. 10.

Moreover, when our Saviour argues thus, to induce men to cut off their offending hands, and pluck out their offending eyes, It is better to enter into life halt and maimed, than to be caſt into eternal fire, or into hell, where the worm dieth not, and where the fire is not quenched, Matth. 18. 8. 9.; doth he not ſufficiently inform us, there is an abſolute neceſſity of doing the one, or ſuffering the other? When he ſaith, He that blaſphemeth againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall never be forgiven in this, or in the world to come, but ſhall be obnoxious to eternal judgment, Matth. 12. 32.; Mark 3. 29. doth he not inſinuate, that he who never is forgiven, muſt be for ever ſubject to this judgment? It is therefore certain, that our judge hath expreſsly taught us, not only that the impenitent ſinner doth deſerve, but that he ſhall actually ſuffer the worm that never dies, the fire that ſhall not be quenched.

If God in juſtice may inflict upon the wicked thoſe puniſhments which he hath threatened, then the objection cannot need this anſwer; yea, what can move him not to inflict what he, by threatening, hath engaged his truth to do? What, I say, can move him not to do it, but an act of mercy exercised to them, of whom the scripture saith, They shall have judgment without mercy, Jam. 2. 13. what but remission of that sin, which, saith the scripture, shall never be remitted? What, but mercy in the day of wrath and judgment? What but remission exercised to the impenitent, without an interest in the blood of our redemption? To which imaginations I conceive the scripture gives but little countenance.

Nor are we to conclude, that the non-execution of these threats lays no impeachment on God's truth and faithfulness; because it is not esteemed among men, a piece of falsehood, not to do what they have threatened. For men may reasonably be moved to remit their threatenings; because they oft are made in passion, or may exceed the rules of justice. But these are things not incident to an all-perfect God; or, because the person threatened, repents, begs pardon, and returns unto his duty, which the damned cannot be supposed to do.

§ 5. It is further said, in answer to this objection, That macula peccati est æterna, the stain of them who die in their impenitence, will be perpetual; and he that dies thus filthy, will be filthy still: Now, it seems equitable, that is qui nunquam desinit esse malus, nunquam desineret esse miser, he who never ceases to be wicked, should never cease to be miserable. Now, this, rightly explained, affords a clear and satisfactory answer to the objection; as shewing, that the sinner becomes for ever miserable, not by any positive act of God inflicting everlasting stripes upon him, or loading him perpetually with fresh torments, but wholly from his own sin, which renders him incapable of the enjoyment of an holy God, and so perpetually excluded from his blissful presence, which, to a soul that is immortal, and can never die, must be the source of everlasting torment, and, from the natural workings of its faculties, will necessarily subject it to the worm that never dies.

I own, and really believe, that positive torments, such as the schools call pœna sensus, shall be inflicted on the body; but then I have insinuated my present notion of them to be this.

1*st*, That these positive torments on the body are not to begin until the raising of the body, when Christ shall come in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them who would not obey his gospel; the world that now is being reserved to be set on fire, for the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. At which time, I conceive the righteous shall be snatched up into the air, and be for ever with the Lord, 1 Thess. 4. 17. and the wicked shall be left to the devouring flames. See for this, the note on 2 Pet. 3. 7.

2*dly*, I also do conjecture, that this fire may be called eternal; not that the bodies of the wicked shall be for ever burning in it, and never be consumed by it, since this cannot be done without a constant miracle; but because it shall so entirely consume their bodies, as that they never shall subsist again, but shall perish, and be destroyed for ever by it. In which sense Sodom and Gomorrah were set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. See the note on Jude, ver. 7. And if so, this punishment being only temporary, the objection doth not lie against it; God being no more obliged, either in justice or in goodness, to snatch the wicked out of these flames, when they thus kindle on them, than he was to snatch the wicked of the old world out of that deluge which overwhelmed them. These I call my conjectures, or my private sentiments. But then I add, as certain matter of my faith,

1. That the soul, even from the time of its separation from the body, in its impenitency, shall find itself in such a dismal state, as shall then fill it with perpetual horror, and dreadful expectation of the punishment which God hath threatened to the wicked. And thus it shall be like those devils which believe and tremble, Jam. 2. 19. as knowing, that there is reserved for them a time of torment, Matth. 8. 29.

2. That when the final sentence shall be passed upon the wicked, and they shall be for ever separated from the presence of the Lord, their souls shall be perpetually subject to the height of misery, or to that worm which never dies; and that this misery will be the natural and the perpetual result of such a separation.

To explain this, let it be considered,

1. That there is scarce any thing in which the Heathen moralists so universally accord, as in this fixed rule, μὴ καθαρῷ καθαρῷ ἐπιπίπτειν ἀκάθαρτον, that an impure soul can have no commerce with a pure God; and that it is not congruous to his nature, to admit such souls into his presence. And this assertion is built upon a sure and incontestable foundation; for seeing God is absolute in holiness, he cannot but retain the greatest hatred to, and abhorrence of all actions and persons that are unrighteous and impure; and since his nature is immutable, his holiness unchangeable, he must for ever hate, with a most perfect hatred, whatsoever is unholy and impure; and therefore to suppose an interruption of his hatred of evil-doers, is to imagine he can cease to be a pure and holy God. Consider, mortal, muſt abide for ever if it be not annihilated; and that God neither is obliged to annihilate it, nor hath he any where declared that he will do ſo.

2. That the soul of a wicked man being immortal

I ſay, he is not obliged to annihilate the ſouls of wicked men; for then it muſt be ſo on this account, becauſe he is obliged to put them out of that miſery which they have brought upon themſelves by their own folly and rebellions; and if ſo, ſince this muſt certainly be an act, not of ſtrict juſtice, but of grace and favour, God muſt be bound to ſhew an act of grace and favour towards men, purely becauſe they have provoked and rebelled againſt him, i. e. becauſe they have done that which renders them the proper objects of his hatred and his indignation, and be obliged to ſave men from that miſery which by their ſtubborn diſobedience to all his calls and admonitions, his exhortations, and all the gracious methods his providence had uſed to preſerve them from it, they wilfully have brought upon themſelves. Whereas indeed the riches of his goodneſs being deſigned to lead men to repentance, or to encourage them in ways of holineſs and piety, hath only for its proper object ſuch as are capable of being made the better by it; it cannot therefore be the goodneſs and mercy of a God to ſhew kindneſs to perſons obſtinately and incorrigibly wicked, becauſe it cannot be the goodneſs and mercy of a being infinitely juſt and holy; for ſeeing all the divine perfections muſt agree together, that cannot be a divine perfection which contradicts any other perfection.

The original of our miſtakes in matters of this nature, ſeems to ariſe from our own imperfection, which naturally leads us to conſider of the divine attributes apart, and, as it were, in ſeparation from each other, and by ſo doing, to frame ſuch wide and large notions of the one, as to exclude the other. Whereas indeed they ought to be conſidered as really they are in God himſelf, i. e. goodneſs and mercy joined with infinite holineſs and juſtice; and as it is the goodneſs and mercy of a lawgiver, governor, and righteous judge, which never regularly can be exerciſed without ſome proſpect of reclaiming, or doing good unto the object of it. And thus it is well conſiſtent with the prayer of David, Be not thou merciful to them that offend of malicious wickedneſs, Pſal. 59. 5.

§ 6. I add, That God hath not declared in ſcripture, that he will annihilate the ſouls of wicked men, or that this is the puniſhment which he deſigneth to inflict upon them. This is generally ſaid to be the doctrine of the Socinians, though Crellius (e) expreſsly ſays, Animas impiorum Deum poſt judicium annihilaturum nec ſcriptura aſſerit, nec ratio evincit; "that neither reaſon doth evince, or ſcripture aſſert, "it will be ſo." And,

Object. 1. It is certain that this follows not from any of thoſe places of the Old Teſtament in which the dead are ſaid to be no more, or not to be; as, v. g. Let the ſinners be conſumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more, Pſal. 104. 35. Our fathers have ſinned, and are not, Lam. 5. 7. I have made Eſau bare——his ſeed is ſpoiled, and he is not, Jer. 49. 10. See chap. 10. 20. 35. 15.

For, 1. If any of theſe places ſpeak of annihilation, they muſt ſpeak of ſuch a one as was then paſt already, and ſo is inconſiſtent with the future judgment of thoſe perſons, becauſe it is not ſaid they ſhall not be, but they are not; they therefore cannot refer to any future annihilation at the day of judgment.

2. Then muſt the righteous be annihilated as well as the wicked; for of righteous Enoch it is ſaid, He walked before God, and was not, Gen. 5. 24.; of Joſeph, One is not, Gen. 42. 13.; and David prays thus for himſelf, O ſpare me a little, that I may recover my ſtrength, before I go hence and be not, Pſal. 39. 13. It is therefore evident theſe places only were intended to import, thoſe perſons were not in the land of the living.

Object. 2. But it is objected, that the wicked after the reſurrection ſhall be puniſhed with the ſecond death, wherefore they cannot in any proper ſenſe be ſaid to live, and to ſubſiſt, and to have ſenſe of pain, this being not conſiſtent with a ſtate of death.

Anſ. I anſwer, 1. That this ſecond death cannot conſiſt in the annihilation of the wicked, or in their exemption from all ſenſe of puniſhment, becauſe it is promiſed, that he who overcometh, ſhall not be hurt by the ſecond death, Rev. 2. 11.; whence it is manifeſt that they who die this ſecond death, ſhall be hurt by it; but were it to the wicked, condemned to an eternal ſeparation from God, and from all hopes of happineſs, a concluſion of their being, and of all ſenſe of miſery, it would be no more hurtful, but highly beneficial to them, as being a concluſion of that life which they muſt otherwiſe have ſpent in endleſs miſery. And therefore even Hierocles repreſents this as the choice of wicked men, by ſaying in his commentary on the verſes of Pythagoras, p. 164. ὁ βούλοιτο γὰρ ὁ κακὸς ἀθάνατον ἔτι τὴν αὐτῷ ψυχὴν, ἵνα μὴ ὑπομένῃ τιμωρούμενος, "the wicked man "would not have his ſoul to be immortal, that he "might not abide under puniſhment." Moreover, thoſe very torments which the damned ſuffer are declared to be the ſecond death, and wicked men are therefore said to die the second death, because they do endure eternal torments; for the fearful and unbelievers, &c. shall have their part in that lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death, Rev. 21. 8. This death then, when it is threatened as the final punishment of the wicked, cannot import a state of non-existence, or insensibility, but only an unhappy miserable state, a separation of the soul from him who is the fountain of our life, and all our comforts; and absolute exclusion from that felicity which only renders life a blessing, and a life of infelicity and misery. To make this still more evident, Consider, 2. That this is a Jewish phrase, used often by, and borrowed from the ancient Hebrews, with whom it doth import the punishment of damned persons in the life to come. So Deut. 33. 6. Let Reuben live, and not die the second death, saith the Targum of Onkelos i. e. let him not die the death which the wicked die in the age to come, saith the Targum of B. Uziel. Let him not die the second death which the wicked die in the age to come, saith the Jerusalem Targum. Now, that the death of the wicked, in the age to come, did really subject them to eternal torments, the Jews still thought; as is apparent not only from the plain testimony of Josephus (f), who saith, the Pharisees assigned to the wicked εἱργμὸν ἀίδιον, an eternal prison, in which they were to be tormented (g) ἀιδίῳ τιμωρίᾳ, with eternal punishment; and from Philo (h), who saith, That, "some conceive death to be the last of punishments "whereas it scarcely deserveth to be named the "beginning of them, seeing the punishment re-"served for the wicked person is, ζῆν ἀποθνήσκοντα ἀεὶ "καὶ τρόπον τινὰ θάνατον ὑπομένειν ἀτέλευτον, to live for e-"ver in a dying state, and suffer such a death as "hath no end;" but also from the Apocryphal books, which say, κλαυσονται ἐν αἰσθήσει ἕως αἰῶνος, they shall feel them, and weep for ever, Judith 16. 17. So again Is. 22. 14. This sin shall not be forgiven till the second death; that is, saith Kimchi, "till the soul "dieth in the world to come." And, chap. 65. 5. 6. 15. of the same persons it is said, God will kill them with the second death; and, he will deliver them up to the punishment of hell, where the fire burneth all the day.

Object. It further is objected, That eternal life is said to be peculiar to the saints in bliss, whereas unto the wicked it is threatened that they shall not see life, John 3. 36.

Ans. To this I answer, That life in scripture, when it is mentioned as the end of our faith, and the reward of our obedience, is not intended only to signify our permanence in being, but to assure us of our advancement to a state of happiness, and is equivalent to everlasting life. So to the lawyer asking, What good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? our Saviour answers, Do this and thou shalt live, Luke 10. 25. 28. So Christ saith, He that eateth me, shall live by me, John 6. 57. i. e. he shall live for ever, ver. 58. I came that my sheep might have life, John 10. 10. I give unto them life eternal, ver. 28. And that this is the life denied to the wicked, John 3. 36. is evident from the precedent words of the same verse, He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life. This is a phrase so known, and this use of it is so frequent, saith Maimonides, that hence our masters say, The just are styled living in their death, because they then are happy. And that the phrase, Not to see life, cannot import a state of non-existence, or insensibility, is evident, because it is said of them who do not see life, that the wrath of God abideth on them, they therefore must abide under a sense of it.

Object. 4. Lastly, it is objected, That the wicked are in scripture said to perish utterly, 2 Pet. 2. 12. and to be punished with everlasting destruction; now these expressions seem to signify a deprivation of all sense and being.

Ans. But nothing is more common, both in Greek and Latin, and in other languages, than to say, when we conceive our future life is likely to be miserable, ὄλλυμι, perii, I am undone, I perish. See the note (i) of Taubman upon those words of Plautus, Qui per virtutem periit, is non interit. That only in this moral sense the damned are in scripture said to perish, viz. by having all their hopes of future happiness destroyed, and being sentenced to those torments which are exceedingly more heavy than the loss of being, is evident; first, from the scripture, which informs us, that to cast the soul and body into hell-fire, is to destroy them, as is apparent from these two expressions, Fear him who can destroy both soul and body in hell-fire, Matth. 10. 28. who after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell, saith St Luke, chap. 12. 5.; that is, into that place where the worm dieth not, and where the fire is not quenched. Moreover, the devils put the question to our Saviour thus, ἦλθες ἀπολέσαι ἡμᾶς; art thou come to destroy us before the time? Luke 4. 34. and yet that to destroy is only βασανίσαι, to torment them, is evident from the same question recited by St Matthew thus, Art thou come to torment us before the time? chap. 8. 29. And had the devils thought, that at Christ's coming they might have been reduced into the ſtate of non-exiſtence or inſenſibility, they could have had no reaſon to dread, or deprecate ſo vehemently that perdition which would ſo long ago have freed them from that horror which they ſtill endure.

Moreover, this opinion is ſo far from being contained in the holy ſcriptures, that it is plainly contrary to many things contained in it. For, 1. The ſcripture plainly intimates, ſome in the other world ſhall ſuffer more, ſome leſs; for it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for Capernaum, Matth. 11. 21.—25.; that ſome ſhall be beaten with fewer, ſome with many ſtripes, Luke 12. 47. 48.; ſome ſhall receive greater damnation than others, Matth. 23. 14. But if annihilation only be the ſecond death, the puniſhment and perdition threatened to ſinners in the other world, they muſt all ſuffer equally; becauſe if there be no degrees of annihilation, or not-being, then all will equally not be, or loſe their being, and nothing by annihilation can loſe more. 2. It is ſaid of the wicked, that they ſhall be caſt into the place where their worm dieth not; of them that ſhall not ſee life, that the wrath of God abideth on them; of them that are caſt into utter darkneſs, that there is weeping and wailing. Now, that of the ſchools is abſolutely true, that non-entis nullæ ſunt affectiones, that which is not, cannot be in miſery; that which abides not, cannot abide under the wrath of God; that which ſo dieth, as to ceaſe to be, cannot be ſubject to a worm that dieth not, whatever be the import of that phraſe. Conſider,

§ 7. 2. That we have two paſſions of the ſoul which are ſtill converſant about good, preſent and to come, viz. deſire of the good we want, and joy in that which we at preſent have. When therefore we are in a ſtate in which we cannot poſſibly enjoy the good we above all things want, and naturally deſire, we muſt for ever lie under the torment of diſſatisfaction and deſpair; and when we fall into that ſtate in which we can enjoy no comfortable or real good, we never can have any joy. Again, we have two other paſſions, which are employed about a preſent or a future evil, fear that it may befal us, and grief when it hath actually taken hold upon us. It therefore being natural to all men to deſire to be freed from an afflictive evil, when they lie under it, without all hopes or proſpect of any end of, or deliverance from the worſt of evils, they muſt be ſwallowed up of grief; and, when their guilt hath rendered them ſtill obnoxious to the divine diſpleaſure, they muſt be ſubject to eternal fears. Conſider,

3. That the proper action of the ſoul is thought, and that whilſt ſhe continues, ſhe muſt be conſcious to herſelf of her own actions; when then the ſoul hath nothing comfortable to employ its thoughts upon, but an eternal ſcene of miſery, to which her wilful ſin and folly hath everlaſtingly confined her, to be the doleful ſubject of her continual reflections, when ſhe hath nothing to divert her from theſe rueful thoughts, ſhe muſt become an endleſs torment to herſelf. Now, from theſe three conſiderations, it will demonſtrably follow, that the ſoul which in this life hath not been purged from the dominion or the guilt of ſin, and therefore is excluded from a ſtate of happineſs, and from enjoyment of that God in whom its happineſs conſiſts, muſt be for ever miſerable.

For it muſt be perpetually tormented with the thoughts of its eternal ſeparation from God's bliſsful preſence, and its excluſion from the ſtate of happineſs which ſaints made perfect do enjoy. Now, as an Heathen Plutarch (k) puts the queſtion, Muſt it not be very ſad to be deprived of the hope of everlaſting bleſſings, and to be excluded from the completeſt happineſs? Were the damned obnoxious to no other puniſhments beſides this loſs, even this would beget in them ſuch a worm of conſcience, as would perpetually ſubject them to the worſt of miſeries; as will be evident, if we conſider,

1. That the earneſt and impetuous deſire which is in all men to be happy, is rooted in their very nature, and therefore muſt continue as long as they retain that nature; and yet it is impoſſible that this deſire ſhould, in the leaſt, be gratified, when we are once condemned to an eternal ſeparation from the place and object of our happineſs, there being no hope that they ſhould ever ſee his face, who, at the coming of their Judge, ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord. Now, the wiſe man tells us, that even hope deferred makes the heart ſick, Prov. 13. 12. Hope therefore irrecoverably diſappointed muſt create in it an exceſs of torment. A wicked Cain accounted it an inſupportable calamity to be excluded from God's gracious preſence here on earth; My puniſhment, ſaith he, is greater than I am able to bear, for from thy face ſhall I be hid, Gen. 4. 13. 14. How dreadful therefore muſt that ſentence be, which doth eternally exclude us from his bliſsful preſence, and force us to a continual deſpair of that which we moſt ardently deſire? For as it is one great ingredient of our future happineſs, that it is that which can never be loſt, ſo muſt it be a ſignal aggravation of our future miſery, and loſs of happineſs, to know it is irreparable.

2. This loſs will be enhanced from the great change the other world will make in our condition.

The terrors of an awakened and guilty conscience, even in this life, are very grievous; but here we may be able to mitigate the gripings of it by the society of others, or by the pleasures of the world; we may deceive it with false opinions, and flatter it with false hopes and promises of reformation and amendment; but when we are passed hence into another world, our vain imaginations will be all confuted, our hopes of reformation will be at an end, and we shall be eternally deprived of all those enjoyments in which we once placed our happiness, and shall have nothing to divert us from our saddest thoughts. Now, what condition can be more deplorable than this, viz. to be deprived of all those comforts in which we placed our former happiness, and find it utterly impossible to purchase the least glimpse of real happiness, or to divert our thoughts from a continual remorse for our irreparable loss?

For, 3. The sinner's memory reflecting on this punishment of loss, will create fresh and never-ceasing torments to him. It will torment him to remember what an inestimable blessing he hath lost, in losing the enjoyment of that God who is the chiefest good, and of that happiness which passeth understanding; for the greater still we apprehend the good to be, the greater will the trouble we endure be, when we have wholly lost the hopes of its enjoyment. Again, it will add still to the torment of the sinner, to consider that he hath exchanged this exceeding and eternal weight of glory, for things of no intrinsic value and duration; that for the pleasures of a moment, which are now turned into sadness, he should forego those pleasures which are at God's right hand for ever; that for a little fading earth, which he soon left behind him, he should deprive himself of an inheritance incorruptible, reserved in the heavens for him. It will also torment him to consider in what a fair capacity he was once placed of being happy; what frequent calls and invitations he hath had to be for ever so; what importunity the God of heaven used to bring him thither; and with what stiffness he resisted all these gracious motions. These, and such like considerations, will fill the miserable soul with constant matter of most sad reflections. "Now," saith the Heathen orator (l), "suppose a person subject to the "extremest miseries which can be incident to soul "and body, without all hope of the alleviation of "this misery, or expectation of any future good, and "what can be imagined farther to complete his mi-"sery?"

And now, to answer the objection by removing the foundation of it; hence it is easy to demonstrate, that all those evils which the soul suffers after death, may rather be esteemed the necessary consequents, as Irenæus hath observed, than positive and formal punishments of sin by an immediate hand of God. For being destitute of all good things, "they "are," saith Irenæus (m), "in all torment, τῷ Θεῷ μὴ προηγητικῶς μὲ κολάζοντος, ἐπικολαζόντως δὲ ἑκάστης τῆς κολάσεως διὰ τὸ ὑστερῆσθαι πάντων τῶν ἀγαθῶν, "God not internally "tormenting them, but their torment following upon "the deprivation of all good; and likewise because "the good things proceeding from God are eter-"nal and without end, therefore the want of them "is an eternal and endless punishment." Mercurius Trismegistus (n) saith in like manner, that ἀνδὸς ψυχὴ μένει ἐπὶ τῆς ἰδίας οὐσίας ὑφ' ἑαυτῆς κολαζομένη, The soul of the wicked man continues in its proper essence, being tormented from itself. Apollodorus adds, That Ἀδίκων εἶναι τὰ κολαστήρια διὰ τῶν λογισμῶν, καὶ τῆς μνήμης τῶν βεβιωμένων τὰς κολάσεις ἔχοντων, "the unjust are punish-"ed from their own reasonings, and their punish-"ment results from the remembrance of what they "had done in this life: and when the remembrance "of these things ceaseth, καὶ ἡ κόλασις τῆς ψυχῆς πέπαυ-"ται, the punishment of the soul ceaseth." For instance, That souls departed are deprived of the love of God, are objects of his wrath, and are excluded from his presence, happeneth not merely because they are souls separated from the body; for pious souls, after their separation, are entirely exempted from these evils; but this ariseth from the natural purity and holiness of God, which renders it incongruous to him to admit such souls into his presence, and the defilement and impurity which these unhappy souls lie under, and by which they are rendered unable to converse with the God of holiness. The worm of conscience, the desperation, the direful expectations which follow from this sense of loss, and the divine displeasure, are also the natural results of the soul's separation in an impure and unsanctified condition, and therefore being filthy still. Moreover, it being natural to all men, say the very Heathens (o) "to give good things to them they love, "and in whom they delight, and to inflict evil "things on those to whom they stand affected con-"trarywise;" how can it be, but that the soul that conſcious of thoſe abominable things which the Lord hates, and which moſt juſtly have incenſed this righteous judge, ſhould live under moſt dreadful expectations of his wrath? Now, true is that of the tragedian, Pœnas dat qui expectat, qui autem meruit expectat; "he ſuffers, whoſe conſcience tells him he "deſerves, and therefore cannot but expect to ſuf-"fer." Laſtly, That he is thus to be eternally a torment to himſelf, ariſeth from the immortality of the ſoul, which cannot ceaſe to be, without an immediate diſſolution from the hand of God; and whilſt it doth continue, cannot ceaſe to be deſirous of that happineſs, from which it will for ever be excluded, or ceaſe to be tormented with the thoughts of that ſtupendous folly which did ſubject it to this heavy doom.

And now what a poor comfort is it to the ſinner, to laugh at what is ſaid touching hell-fire, and a lake of brimſtone, as unphiloſophical; and ſay, that theſe are things improper to torment a ſpiritual ſoul, if undeniably it may be ſubject to the loſs of all that is deſirable to make it happy, to endleſs grief, to remedileſs remorſe, and dreadful expectations of the wrath of God, and a perpetual deſpair of being ever freed from theſe tormenting evils, which, as the Heathen hath obſerved, are πυρὸς καὶ σιδήρου βιαιότερα, more violent and inſupportable than any puniſhment by fire and ſword. What if the fire in which the bodies of the wicked are to be tormented, ſhould not be kindled till our Saviour come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them? What comfort will this yield the ſinner, if, from the day of its departure from the body, his ſoul will be obnoxious to this greater miſery? What, laſtly, if that fire of the damned, in which their bodies are to be tormented, ſhould only be eternal, in that ſenſe in which St Jude informs us, that Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities round about them, have been ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire, if this amazing torment of the ſoul, which, in propriety of ſpeech, is only capable of feeling torment, will be eternal, in the higheſt and moſt intenſive import of that word?

If it be ſtill objected, That it ſeems not conſiſtent with divine goodneſs, to have framed man ſo, as that he ſhould be miſerable from himſelf; this, at one blow, cuts off both heaven and hell: for it is to find fault with God, and repreſent him as leſs good, for making any beings capable of vice and virtue. For all our virtue, in a ſtate of trial, conſiſts in chuſing well, when we had freedom, and ſome temptations to do otherwiſe; and all our vice in chuſing to do ill, when we had laws directing us to avoid the evil, and to chuſe the good, and had the higheſt motive ſo to do. To ſay then, a good God could not create a creature capable of vice and virtue, is in effect to ſay, it is inconſiſtent with divine goodneſs to create ſuch creatures as ſhould be ſubject unto government: ſince government ſuppoſes laws, and laws muſt be attended with the ſanctions of rewards and puniſhments. Here then again the miſtake lies, in ſeparating the divine goodneſs from his holineſs and juſtice; whereas juſtice and holineſs are as eſſential to the notion of a God, as goodneſs. For it is impoſſible that juſtice ſhould belong to the idea of God, if it were irreconcileable with the divine goodneſs to make ſuch creatures as may deſerve well, or ill, i. e. to be rewarded or puniſhed. And ſeeing the holineſs of God renders it neceſſary for him to retain the greateſt hatred to, and abhorrence of incorrigible ſinners, if it be inconſiſtent with divine goodneſs to make any creature which may deſerve to be the object of his hatred, goodneſs and holineſs, cannot both belong to the idea of God.

If, laſtly, it ſtill be inquired, why divine goodneſs and mercy doth not ſtill leave condemned ſinners in a capacity of that repentance and reformation, which might, after a ſeaſon, fit them for the enjoyment of himſelf, and thereby put an happy end to all their miſery?

I anſwer, that both the Chriſtians and Heathens do accord in this, that theſe eternal puniſhments ſhall only be inflicted (p) ἐπὶ τοὺς καταλαμβανομένους ἐν τῇ ἀνιάτῳ κακίᾳ, on thoſe that are incurably wicked; and they who ſhall hereafter be found thus confirmed in wickedneſs, are, by the Heathens (q), given up to torments without end: yea, Celſus (r) dogmatically ſays, that they judge rightly who ſay, the juſt ſhall be happy, οἱ δὲ ἄδικοι πάμπαν αἰωνίοις κακοῖς συνέξονται, but the unjuſt ſhall be always ſubject to eternal evils: and that this was the opinion of the Heathens as well as of the Chriſtians, and that no man ought ever to depart from it. Now, that which haply may render their ſtate incurable may be,

1. That their day of grace is paſt, and turned into a day of wrath; their time of trial and probation is expired, and they are come to the time of retribution: for, as the Chriſtians teach, that a man cannot be truly good and holy without the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, ſo did the Heathens (s) teach, that there was an abſolute need of a divine afflatus, or good aſſiſting genius to preſerve them from ſin, and to advance them to a virtuous life. Now, why is it unjuſt with God to ſay, his Spirit ſhall not always ſtrive with them who have ſo long reſiſted all his motions, and hardened their hearts againſt him? whom all the riches of his goodneſs could not lead unto repentance, or preſerve from treaſuring up wrath againſt the day of wrath? Either the day of grace muſt never end, or there muſt be a time when they that are filthy will be filthy ſtill.

Moreover, to aſſert, it is unjuſt with God, or inconſiſtent with his goodneſs, to appoint a day in which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs, and render to men according to their works; as it ſeems plainly to border on a contradiction in the terms, ſo it cuts off all future judgment, it being certain God neither will nor can do what is inconſiſtent with his goodneſs to do; and, according to this hypotheſis, he muſt never paſs the final and decretory ſentence upon wicked men.

2. The place and company to which the damned ſhall be ſentenced, ſeems to render them incapable of growing better; for when they are once given up to the tormentor, and kept in chains of darkneſs, what expectation can there be they ſhould grow better under this enemy of God and goodneſs? And yet that this is one ingredient of their future ſtate, is not the ſentiment of Jews and Chriſtians only, from the holy ſcripture, but alſo of the Heathens, from the tradition they had received, as is evident both from their own words (t), and from their Adraſtia, Nemeſis, Alaſtores, their furies, hurtful dæmons, and their evil geniuſes.

3. The alteration of their condition and their ſtate ſeems to exclude all place for reformation, and for the exerciſe of piety and virtue: for the ſentence of condemnation and excluſion from God's bliſsful preſence being paſſed upon them, they have no hope of being happy, or of eſcaping the miſery to which they are expoſed, and ſo can have no motive to be better, nor can they be in a capacity to love that God from whom they can expect no good. There alſo ſeems to be no place for virtue in a future ſtate; no room for temperance where there is no capacity of enjoying meats or drinks, or any pleaſures of the fleſh; no place for juſtice where there is no meum and tuum; no poſſibility to kill, or maim, or to be cruel to another, when none can be defamed to their prejudice, and hurt in their concerns. Laſtly, No place for charity, where there is either none that can want any thing, or none that can receive advantage by us.

A DISCOURSE, by way of Inquiry, Whether the Apoſtles, in their Writings, ſpake as conceiving the Day of Judgment might be in their Days, and accordingly ſuited their Phraſes and Exhortations.

I Have ſhewed in the note upon 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. and in an additional note on 2 Cor. 5. 1. 9. that the apoſtles of our Lord neither did, nor could uſe any expreſſions importing that the day of judgment might happen in their days, or in that age in which they lived; but Mr Whiſton, in his excellent eſſay on the Revelation of St John, hath very largely endeavoured to prove the contrary. I ſhall therefore impartially conſider what he hath offered for the ſupport of his two corollaries, and ſhall endeavour to ſhew the weakneſs of his arguments, and the pernicious conſequences of his aſſertion, and then ſhall leave the reader to judge of this important point, and where the fatal miſtake lies. Now, his firſt aſſertion is, "That our Saviour himſelf, as man, "whilſt he was on earth, at leaſt, did not know the "duration of the days of the Meſſiah, nor the time "of the riſe, and the duration of antichriſt, which "was included in it." Now, in this propoſition I have no concern, and ſo ſhall not be long either in anſwering what he alledges for, or in the confutation of it. I therefore grant, that our Saviour, whilſt he acted as a prophet, or a revealer of his Father's will whilſt he was here on earth, did not by the revelation of the Spirit know the day or hour of the day of judgment; but I deny that hence it follows that he did not know the age in which it was to happen, or what great occurrences or previous mutations were to happen before that day. 2*dly*, I grant, that he that was the Lamb ſlain was therefore worthy to open the ſealed book; but I deny that hence it follows, that he was not able to know the contents of it before. 3*dly*, I grant that to the queſtion of his diſciples, Wilt thou at this time reſtore the kingdom unto Iſrael? our Saviour anſwers, It is not for you to know the times and the ſeaſons which the Father hath put in his own power, Acts 1. 6. 7.; but I deny that hence it follows, that he, in whom were hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, Col. 2. 3. did not know them. When Mr Whiſton proves all, or any of theſe conſequences, he will have ſomething to ſupport his corollary; but till this be done, it muſt paſs for an aſſertion which hath no foundation in the holy ſcripture. Let us now ſee what juſt ground he had to own that this is a ſtrange aſſertion. And ſurely it muſt be exceeding ſtrange to any conſidering perſon, that he in whom dwelt the fulneſs of the Godhead, and in whom were hid all the treaſures of wiſdom, ſhould be thought ignorant, whether his own kingdom, to which he was advanced, ſhould continue only for a few, or for ſome thouſand years; that he ſhould be ignorant of the reign of his own ſaints a thouſand years, and of the time when all the prophecies of the Old Teſtament concerning the glorious converſion of the Jews ſhould happen; that Daniel ſhould ſo plainly ſay, that, in the time of the fourth monarchy, the God of heaven ſhould ſet up a kingdom which ſhould never be deſtroyed, but ſhould conſume all other kingdoms, and ſhould laſt for ever, chap. 2. 44.; an everlaſting kingdom that ſhould not paſs away; and yet our great Prophet, who was the wiſdom of the Father, and the very King who was to rule over this kingdom for ever, ſhould be ſo ignorant of the import of theſe prophecies relating to his own kingdom, as not to know it was to laſt one quarter of the duration of ſome of the other kingdoms, but might be, for any thing he knew to the contrary, res unius ætatis, only the buſineſs of one age. Laſtly, Is it not very ſtrange, that theſe maſters of revelations ſhould be able ſo punctually to declare to us the very year of the fall of the Roman empire, the time of the riſe of the little horn, and the period of his duration, and the true import of the words of that prophet, a time, and times, and half a time; and yet our bleſſed Lord ſhould be ſo much an ignoramus as to the true import and extent of that whole prophecy, as to imagine that it might be fulfilled in the very firſt century; and that what they knew imports 1260 years, he ſhould imagine might only ſignify three years and an half? And ſo much for the firſt corollary.

2. He poſitively aſſerts, Chriſt's apoſtles (a) ſeem to have really imagined, "that the great day of "judgment might not be very long deferred be-"yond the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was "to be in that age, (A. D. 70.), and accordingly "to have ſuited their phraſes and exhortations."

Now, againſt this corollary, I argue as before, that either theſe inſpired apoſtles knew and underſtood the import and meaning of the prophecy of Daniel concerning the kingdom to be given to the ſaints, the fall of the Roman empire, the riſe of antichriſt; or, the little horn, the time, times, and half a time of his duration, and the Millennium that was to follow; and alſo of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, concerning the blindneſs of the Jews, and the time of their general converſion; or they did not, but were ignorant of all theſe things. If they did know theſe things, it is certain that either they muſt think that theſe things were to happen after the day of judgment; or that they could not think that the day of judgment might happen in that age, or while they lived. If they knew not theſe things which were ſpoken for their inſtruction, by their own prophets, how came theſe men to be ſo poſitive, and certain of all theſe things, of which inſpired apoſtles, led by the Spirit into all truth, ſhould know little or nothing? That the apoſtles ſhould be ignorant of that exact time of the day of judgment, which divine wiſdom ſtill conceals from all men, and never made the matter either of revelation or prediction, I very heartily believe; but that they ſhould be ſo ignorant of all the famous epochas, foretold by their own prophets, concerning the ſtate of Chriſt's church, and their own nation; that they ſhould not know whether the Roman empire was to fall in their own days, or in the 5th century; whether antichriſt was to come in their days, or only was to ariſe after that fall; whether being come, he was to continue only three years and a half, or to laſt 1260 years; or whether Daniel's time, times, and half a time, did ſignify the one or the other period; whether the myſtery of the glorious converſion of the Jews, when deliverance ſhould come to them out of Sion, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; and the new heavens and new earth they expected according to God's promiſe, was to be expected in their days, or about 1700 years after their deceaſe; whether the kingdom which was to be given to the people of the ſaints of the Moſt High, and the Millennium promiſed, was to begin and end in their days, or to commence and end ſo long after, according to the time aſſigned for theſe epochas by theſe more knowing men; theſe, I confeſs, are things I cannot eaſily believe.

In particular, who can imagine, that St Paul ſhould ſay to the firſt perſons to whom he wrote any epiſtle, (b) That the day of judgment ſhould not come till that which letted, i. e. the Roman empire, was taken away, and that then the man of ſin was to be revealed, and was only to be conſumed by the coming of our Lord to judgment; that he ſhould endeavour to remove their ſcruple, touching the nearneſs of his coming by remembering them, that when he was with them, he told them theſe things; and yet ſhould tell them the very next year, that this day might happen whilſt he was alive: for if indeed he told them truly when theſe things were to happen, it was impoſſible that he ſhould tell them the day of judgment might happen in his days or age; but if he told them, that they ought expect that all theſe things ſhould happen in his days or age; that being, as experience ſhews, manifeſtly falſe, why doth he, by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, conclude that diſcourſe thus, Wherefore, brethren, ſtand faſt, and hold the traditions which ye have received, whether by our word, or our epiſtle, ver. 15.? Again, who can think that the ſame apoſtle ſhould tell the Chriſtians of this time, that the Spirit had ſaid expreſsly, that in the latter times ſome ſhould depart from the faith, giving heed to deceivers, and to doctrines of devils, ſpeaking lies in hypocriſy, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtain from meats, 1 Tim. 4. &c. i. e. that he ſhould, as Mr Mede ſaith, uſe theſe words, (the latter times), "as a mark to inform "them to whom he wrote, when theſe things "ſhould come to paſs;" and, as he adds, "that "the Holy Ghoſt had marked out theſe times in "Daniel, by the time of the fall of the Roman "empire, and the riſe and duration of the little "horn;" and yet that St Paul himſelf, in expreſs contradiction to this declaration of the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould teach that the day of judgment might happen in his time? Could St Peter arm the believing Jews againſt the ſcoffers at the promiſe or prediction of the day of judgment, by bidding them remember the words of the holy prophets (c) (Iſaias and Daniel, ſays Mr Mede), who propheſied of things not yet come to paſs, and yet tell the ſame perſons, that God was then ready to judge the quick and the dead (d)? Could he ſay dogmatically, in Mr Wh. ſenſe, "the end of all things is at hand (e);" and yet ſoon after tell the ſame perſons, as Mr Wh. (f) ſaith he did, that the day of judgment might, through the long-ſuffering of God, be prolonged for a thouſand years, without any impeachment of his veracity?

And whereas "he abſolutely denies, that the "apoſtles, who thus conceived of the day of judg-"ment, and accordingly ſuited their phraſes and "exhortations, were herein properly deceived, or "that they ever preached, or declared as from "God, that the day of judgment was to be in that "age; or that they were deceived in any part of "their doctrine, or that they preached falſe doc-"trine:" I, on the contrary, undertake to prove, that if the places produced by Mr Whiſton bear the ſenſe which he hath put upon them, all theſe things muſt follow with the cleareſt evidence. And,

1. I ſay, That, on this ſuppoſition, they muſt have preached falſe doctrine: for if, when St Paul ſaith to the believing Jews, Chriſt hath appeared in the conſummation of ages, Heb. 9. 26. this ſignifies his poſitive aſſertion, that he appeared but "a "little time before the day of judgment," as Mr Whiſton doth interpret his words: if again, when he ſays dogmatically, "Yet a little while, and he "that ſhall come, will come, and will not tarry (g)," he ſaid this of the day of judgment; muſt he not preach falſe doctrine, in ſaying ſo dogmatically, "he would come in a little time, and would not "tarry;" when in truth he was to tarry nigh two thouſand years, and St Paul knew nothing to the contrary, but he might do ſo?

Moreover, St James, Peter, and John, according to this hypotheſis, muſt have all taught falſe doctrine. For doth not James ſay dogmatically, The coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and the judge ſtandeth at the door (h)? and if he ſaid theſe things of the day of judgment, muſt he not ſpeak what experience ſhews to be notoriouſly falſe? When he adds, ver. 5. that God was ready to judge the quick and the dead; if he meant, as Mr Whiſton ſaith he did, "that he was then ready to begin the fi-"nal judgment," muſt he not ſpeak the plaineſt falſehood? When St John ſaith as dogmatically, Little children, this is the laſt hour; and that by the coming of the many antichriſts who are no upon the ſtage, "you may know this is the laſt hour (i);" he meant "this is the time of the laſt judg-"ment," did he not manifeſtly teach falſe doctrine?

2. They muſt delude their hearers, and all thoſe Chriſtians to whom they wrote, and all thoſe Chriſtians who were obliged to believe their writings, with falſe hopes, falſe motives, and encouragements to the performance of their duty. For inſtance, when St Paul exhorts the Romans to awake out of ſleep, εἰδότες τὸν καιρὸν, knowing the ſeaſon, that now is their ſalvation nearer than when they believed, when he adviſes them to put off the works of darkneſs, and to put on the armour of light, becauſe the night was far ſpent, and the day was at hand (k). Here are not only two aſſertions notoriouſly falſe, if, according to Mr Whiſton, theſe paſſages relate to the nearneſs of the day of judgment, but alſo two motives to Chriſtian duties, both grounded on theſe falſe aſſertions? When he exhorts his Philippians to moderation becauſe the Lord is at hand (l); if he meant this of the day of judgment, there is another motive to a Chriſtian duty grounded upon a falſe aſſertion. When he exhorts the believing Jews to patient ſuffering, becauſe "after a little while Chriſt would come, and wou'd "not tarry," he again, according to this ſuppoſition, endeavours to ſupport them under their afflictions by falſe hopes. When St James ſaith to the ſame Jews, Be patient, ſtabliſh your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, chap. 5. 8. 9. Speak not evil one of another, brethren, that ye be not condemned; behold, the judge ſtandeth at the door; and when St Peter ſaith, The end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore ſober, and watch unto prayer; if all theſe paſſages ſpake of the day of judgment as near at hand, and even at the door, muſt not all theſe motives to patience, to forbear evil ſpeaking, to ſobriety, to vigilance in prayer, be built upon falſe grounds? When St John exhorts them not to love the world, becauſe the world paſſeth away, and they knew it was the laſt hour (m); if theſe words relate to the day of judgment, he muſt build his exhortation upon a manifeſt falſehood, it being impoſſible that either he or they ſhould know what was not true.

Moreover, they ſpeak of theſe things as both known to themſelves, and viſible to thoſe to whom they write, by certain tokens; as when St John ſaith, Now are there many antichriſts, by which we know this is the laſt hour; when St Paul ſaith to the Romans, that now is the hour to awake out of ſleep, and to the Jews, Exhort one another; and this ſo much the more, ὅσῳ βλέπετε ἐγγίζουσαν τὴν ἡμέραν, as you ſee the day approaching, Heb. 10. 25. Since it is certain they could not know that to be true which by experience we know to be falſe, or ſee that day was then near, or approaching, which is not yet come. How impoſſible is it that theſe things ſhould relate to their knowledge of the day of judgment?

Laſtly, The apoſtle Paul diſcourſing of the deſire that the Chriſtians had to be clothed upon with their celeſtial bodies, ſaith expreſsly, 2 Cor. 5. 5. He that hath wrought in us this very thing, is God, who alſo hath given us the earneſt of his Holy Spirit; and 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. he ſpeaks thus, This I ſay unto you by the word of the Lord, that we who are alive ſhall not prevent them that are aſleep. Now, if theſe things relate, as Mr Whiſton thinks they do, to the coming of the day of judgment whilſt the apoſtles were alive, muſt not the apoſtle deliver that as a truth taught by the word of Chriſt, and a deſire erected in them by God himſelf, which experience ſhews to have been a great miſtake, and manifeſtly falſe? And ſure theſe things muſt be ſufficient to impair the credit of theſe apoſtles in other matters. I therefore heartily wiſh, that learned, good, and ingenious men would be more careful to avoid thoſe things which do ſo plainly ſhock the very foundations of Chriſtianity, and ſtrengthen the hands of thoſe who queſtion the authority of theſe ſacred books.

And having thus vindicated my notes upon theſe two places, I have done alſo that which ſhews my arguments, to prove that the pope and church of Rome could not be the primary ſubject of St Paul's diſcourſe in 2 Theſſ. 2. were not grounded, as Mr Whiſton thinks, on a miſtake, but on thoſe ſolid grounds which I believe he never will be able to evert, and therefore wiſely waved.

But though he was not pleaſed to conſider my arguments, I can aſſure him, that in the very place I had conſidered, and even anſwered his before he produced them; for indeed the excellently good man is ſo intent upon what he conceiveth to be right, that, as it plainly appears from this, and the diſcourſe on Matth. 24. he is not at leiſure to conſider what is ſaid againſt him.

He begins with a bare citation of the apoſtle's words, and then adds, (n) "This deſcription is ſo "lively and clear, that I look upon it ſo far from "needing any large paraphraſe itſelf, that it ſerves "well for a paraphraſe to all the other prophecies "hereto relating, viz. the little horn, and the ſecond "beaſt;" where he manifeſtly begs the queſtion, ſuppoſing that it manifeſtly relates to thoſe other prophecies, one of which was not then in being, and neither of them rightly underſtood, ſaith Mr Whiſton, by the apoſtle; he thinking that the day of judgment might happen in his time, that the fall of the empire might be then, and that the time, times, and half a time might only ſignify three years and a half; whereas I verily believe, that St Paul's diſcourſe has no relation at all to them, unleſs it be by way of accommodation, and deſire him to be ſo merciful to ſuch blind creatures as I am, as to let us ſee by any good proof, that there is any affinity betwixt them, ſave in this one thing, that the man of ſin is to be deſtroyed with the Spirit, and the beaſt with the ſword of Chriſt's mouth; but with this difference, that "the man of ſin," ſaith Mr Whiſton, "is only to be deſtroyed, by his coming at "the day of judgment, and the beaſt above a "thouſand years before; the millennium of the "ſaints, the converſion of the Jews, the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and the war with the ſaints, "being all to precede the day of judgment."

I know that our revelation-men call the apocalyptical beaſt antichriſt; but that the ſcripture doth, or ever intended ſo to do, I find no reaſon to believe, but rather reaſon to believe the contrary. For,

1. An antichriſt, or a falſe Chriſt, in the ſcripture-ſenſe, is one who ſets up himſelf for a true Chriſt, ſaying to others, Lo, here is Chriſt; he is another, who ſhall come in his own name, and be received by the Jews, John 5. 43. The antichriſts of St John were ſuch as denied that Jeſus was the Chriſt, 1 John 2. 22.; or that Chriſt was come in the fleſh, 1 John 4. 3.; 2 John 5. 7. And that the church of Rome either was St John's antichriſt, or concerned in St John's deſcription of him, no ancient commentator ever ſaid.

2. The falſe Chriſts and antichriſts belonged only to the firſt age of Chriſtianity; the falſe Chriſts mentioned by our Lord, Matth. 24. 24. and who ſhould come in his name, ſaying, Ἐγώ εἰμι, I am Chriſt, Mark 13. 6. Luke 21. 8. were to come before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and as St John ſaith, they had heard that he was to come in the laſt hour, ſo ſaith he, from his being now in the world, you may know that it is the laſt hour, 1 John 2. 18. 4. 3. Let then that be granted which no authority affirms, and therefore none of us can know, that this epiſtle was written after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; why may not the words of St John refer to the then preſent age, and the falſe Chriſts among the Jews and the Samaritans, ſince he doth not ſay, that the laſt hour is near, or is yet to come, but that it was already come, and repreſents this as a thing known to them by the antichriſts that were then in the world? That he cannot be interpreted of the day of judgment, hath been fully manifeſted, and of any antichriſts that were yet to come, of which theſe come already were the forerunners, he ſaith not one word; and ſo there is no reaſon to imagine, that any ſuch thing was intended by him.

3. The church-hiſtory aſſures us, that Simon M. Doſitheus, Barchochebas, and others among the Jews, were ſuch as anſwered theſe deſcriptions; but of any antichriſt that was to be amongſt the Chriſtians of the church of Rome, neither the ſcripture nor antiquity for many ages give us any intimation.

He adds, that (o) "I allow the agreement of "this deſcription to the great antichriſt mentioned in the Revelations:" Whereas indeed I do not allow, that any antichriſt at all is mentioned in the Revelations, but only ſay, that "in a ſecondary "ſenſe this may be attributed, i. e. accommodated, "to him, who is commonly called the papal antichriſt, and may be ſignally fulfilled in him, in "the deſtruction of him by the ſpirit of Chriſt's "mouth:" and this I ſay not from any conviction of the thing, but only that I may not wholly differ from my brethren in this matter; giving in my annotations firſt what I think is the true ſenſe and intendment of the apoſtle's words, and then the ſenſe which Proteſtants do put upon the words, and introducing it thus. " Others who refer this to " the church of Rome." I proceed to ſhew that the arguments brought againſt my expoſition were anſwered in the expoſition.

Arg. 1. " What need of all this ſolicitude of St " Paul to free himſelf from the ſcandal of having " affirmed, that the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was at " hand, when the greateſt part within which our " Saviour expreſsly had aſſerted that deſtruction was " to come, was already paſt?"

Anſ. " St Paul expreſsly ſays, his ſolicitude was " to prevent the trouble of the Theſſalonians on the " imagination that the day of the Lord ἐνέστηκε, was, " or had been inſtant, for which ſolicitude he had " good reaſon; for, ſaith the note there, to con- " ceive that ſignal day of the deſtruction of their " enemies the Jews, and the deliverance of the " Chriſtians mentioned, Joel 2. 31. 32. Mal. 4. 1. " 2. come, and find themſelves deceived in that " conception, might cauſe great troubles to them, " and even ſhake the ſtedfaſtneſs of their faith." To which add,

2. That the Judaiſing Chriſtians, who could hardly think of wrath coming to the uttermoſt on this once beloved people, might perſuade the Theſſalonians, that the ſlaughter threatened to them was already executed, by the great deſolation made of them in Egypt by Flaccus in the time of Caius, of which (p) Philo ſpeaks, and the great ſlaughter made of them at the ſame time in Meſopotamia, Babylon, Syria, and Seleucia, which, ſaith Joſephus (q), was φόνος πόλλος κ ὀπόσος ὐκ ἰσορήμενος πρότερον, a greater deſtruction than ever was before recorded of them.

Arg. 2. " How abſurd is it to interpret the παρουσία, " or ſolemn coming of Chriſt in the former " epiſtle, nay in this epiſtle, and in the firſt verſe " of this very chapter, of his coming to judgment " at the laſt day, and yet in the 8th verſe to inter- " pret it of his coming to deſtroy the Jews only, " eſpecially when no example can be ſhewed, that " ever St Paul uſes that word in that acceptation?"

Anſ. To this imputation of abſurdity the anſwer is returned, note on ver. 1. in theſe words. " The " coming of Chriſt is by the Rev. Dr Hammond " referred to Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the un- " believing Jews; this is the παρουσία, coming of the " Son of man, ſo often mentioned in our Lord's " prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, " and of the temple, Matth. 24. 3. 27. Luke 17. " 24." This is moſt certainly the import of this phraſe in St James twice, when he exhorts the brethren to be patient, ἕως τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ κυρίου, till the coming of the Lord, adding, that this παρουσία, coming was at hand, chap. 5. 7. 8. And to this ſaying, that " I interpret the firſt verſe of the coming of " our Lord to judgment," and therefore do abſurdly interpret the 8th verſe, of his coming to deſtroy the wicked Jews, I have anſwered in the note on the 8th, by ſhewing that the words there are taken from Iſ. 11. 4. and that they neceſſarily refer to the ſmiting of the land of Judea, and therefore cannot be referred to Chriſt's coming to judge all men at the laſt day, to which I do not find that any good interpreter refers theſe words.

Arg. 3. " How comes the apoſtle to inform the " Theſſalonians, who were almoſt all Gentiles, of " the deſtruction of Jeruſalem in Judea at a thou- " ſand miles diſtance, which was of little more " conſequence to them, than the deſtruction of " any other church or city in a remote country?"

Anſ. To the ignorance and miſtake on which this argument is wholly founded, he hath had one anſwer in the note on ver. 1.; in which words let it be noted, " That the church of the Theſſalonians " were partly converts of the Jews and proſelytes; " for the converts made by St Paul preaching to " them were of the Jews and the devout Greeks, " Acts 17. 4. who in expectation of our Lord's pre- " diction, and their redemption by it drawing nigh, " Luke 2. 28. might long for the execution of it."

2. Had he mentioned the deſtruction of the wicked Jews by the ſpirit of Chriſt's mouth, as the apoſtle doth, there would have been no appearance of any ſtrength in that argument: to which a farther anſwer is given, note on ver. 5. in theſe words: " Of the Jews, and their oppoſing themſelves to " the doctrine of Chriſtianity, and the profeſſors of " it, the apoſtle had told them in his firſt epiſtle, " chap. 2. 15. 16. and when he was with them, the " perſecutions that both he and they ſuffered from " them, Acts 17. 15. 16. gave him a juſt occaſion to " ſpeak both of their oppoſition to the goſpel, and " of the deliverance they ſhortly might expect from " ſuch enraged perſecutors, who not only fell ſe- " verely on the converted Jews throughout all their " diſperſions, but, as Juſtin Martyr (r) aſſures us, ſtir- " red up the Heathen governors in all places where " Chriſtians were to do the like, and ſent choſen " men from Jeruſalem for that very end." Nor was the ſlaughter of them in thoſe days of vengeance confined to Judea, but, as I have fully proved from Joſephus (s), they ſuffered the like calamities in the remoteſt places from it. Though therefore the Theſſalonians might be leſs concerned for the deſtruction of the city or temple of Jeruſalem, they might be very much concerned that theſe men ſhould be diſabled from executing any more their rage upon them, or againſt the church of Chriſt.

Arg. 4. Laſtly, " How comes the church of the " Theſſalonians to be in ſuch a conſternation and " diſturbance, σαλευθηναι, at the ſuppoſal that Jeruſalem " ſhould be deſtroyed, ſince therein none but the " unbelieving Jews, and the enemies of Chriſt were " to periſh?"

Anſ. How came you to fall into this imagination? their trouble, ſaith the text, being only this, that they conceived the apoſtle had ſpoken of the deſtruction of the wicked and perſecuting Jews as inſtant, whereas, by ſad experience, they found, that they lay ſtill as much as ever under ſuch rage and cruel perſecution of theſe men, 1 Theſſ. 2. 5. 10. that the apoſtle was afraid leſt theſe temptations ſhould have rendered his labour vain among them, chap. 3. 5.

2. The opinion having obtained among the Jews that the deſtruction of their temple and the deſtruction of the old world ſhould be cotemporary, this might be among the believing Jews a farther reaſon of their trouble. And this ſhould be more conſiderable to him, who earneſtly contends, that the apoſtles ſpake in all their epiſtles as men who believed the day of judgment might happen ſoon after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem.

In the following words he attempts to anſwer an objection thus: " If it be ſtill wondered at, that St " Paul ſhould here ſay, that the myſtery of iniquity " doth already work; I ſay, it is not ſtrange, that he " that knew that the great man of ſin was to cor- " rupt and ſpoil the purity of the Chriſtian religion, " and turn the myſtery of godlineſs into a my- " ſtery of iniquity, and who found already the " beginnings of ſuch miſchiefs creeping into the " church, and that in ſome of the ſame points " which antichriſt was to corrupt, looks upon ſuch " beginning of antichriſtianiſm as preludes and " forerunners of that grand corruption to come af- " terwards."

But this evaſion is fully confuted in the note on ver. 7. by this argument. It is highly reaſonable to conceive, " that the myſtery of iniquity already work- " ing ſhould be that very myſtery which after was " to be completed by the more full appearance of " the man of ſin; as will be evident from the con- " nection of the words, Remember ye not, that when " I was with you, I told you theſe things? (viz. who " was the man of ſin to be revealed, what were the " characters of him, and what it was that did " at preſent hinder him from a full revelation of " himſelf, ver. 3. 4.); for the myſtery of iniquity is " already working, i. e. he is doing that covertly, " which, when he is revealed, he will do more open- " ly; only he that hinders his full appearance, will " do ſo, till he be taken away; and then ſhall this " wicked one be revealed, whom the Lord ſhall de- " ſtroy with the ſpirit of his mouth: whence it ſeems " clear, that the man of ſin then covertly working " his myſtery, and only hindered from appearing " openly by ſomething that then letted, muſt be " that man of ſin, who after was to be revealed, and " then deſtroyed by the ſpirit of Chriſt's mouth: All " theſe interpretations therefore muſt be falſe which " make the myſtery of iniquity to be one perſon, " or one kind of perſons, and the man of ſin or " antichriſt another, as they muſt do who make the " myſtery of iniquity to belong to Simon Magus, or " the falſe prophets or heretics in being when this " epiſtle was indited, and the man of ſin to be the " pope and his clergy." In a word, dolus verſatur in generalibus; till Mr Whiſton can name ſome falſe prophets, or falſe apoſtles, or corrupters of the goſpel, by turning it into a myſtery of iniquity, in being when this epiſtle was indited, who were not of Jewiſh extract, or appeared not then amongſt them; and in what particulars of that pernicious influence they conſpired with the preſent church of Rome, (which neither yet hath been, nor I think can be done to ſatisfaction), it is evident he hath ſaid nothing which hath the leaſt appearance of an anſwer to the objection he himſelf hath ſtarted.

A PARALLEL betwixt the Jewiſh and the Papal Antichriſt, in their Apoſtaſy from, and Corruption of the Doctrine delivered to them.

HAVING given my conjecture, that the Jewiſh church with their rulers were the antichriſt mentioned by St Paul, I proceed to ſhew how their apoſtaſy, when they were thus deſerted by God, reſembled, and ran parallel to the apoſtaſy of the Roman church, when ſhe began, in like manner, to apoſtatize from, and to corrupt the Chriſtian faith.

And here it cannot be expected that I ſhould draw the parallel betwixt them in thoſe doctrines which never were, nor could be owned by the unbelieving Jews, viz. in the doctrines of tranſubſtantiation, the adoration of the hoſt, the ſacrifice of the maſs, communion in one kind, and the number of the Chriſtian ſacraments; but yet in moſt of their other doctrines it is very eaſy to diſcern it.

1. In the doctrine of infallibility, the mother of incorrigible errors.

For, 1ſt, As Roman Catholics aſſert the infallibility of councils, which they are pleaſed to call general councils, and plead for a living and infallible judge of controverſies; ſo the Jews looked upon the judgment of their great ſanhedrim, and the concurring ſuffrage of their rulers and Phariſees, as free from error, and not to be gainſaid by any of the people. Their way of arguing, John 7. 48. ſeems plainly to inſinuate, that they thought themſelves the only fit and proper judges of the true ſenſe and meaning of the law; that the people were wholly to be guided by them; and that they who would not ſubmit to their judgment, were deceived, and would be accurſed for their obſtinacy in things in which they neither had, nor could have any certain knowledge without their guidance and aſſiſtance; for thus they ſpeak to thoſe officers whom they had ſent to apprehend our Saviour, Are ye alſo deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the Phariſees, believed on him? But this people which knoweth not the law, (and yet will take upon them to diſſent from their judgment), are accurſed; which is the very language of the church of Rome in her anathemas. They were the ſupreme judges, and the keepers of oral traditions; and the fear that when the ſanhedrim was diſſolved, theſe traditions might be loſt, produced the Miſnah, or the ſecond law, commonly called by them Thorah Schebeal Pe, the oral law, or the law given to Moſes by word of mouth, as they gather from Exod. 34. 27. They alſo took upon them to be authentic interpreters of the written law, and that by virtue of theſe traditions given, ſay ſome of them, to this end. Now this, as the excellent Mr Chillingworth (a) obſerves, is indeed to make men "apoſtates from "God, and to dethrone him from his dominion over "mens conſciences, and to ſet up themſelves;" and why elſe doth our Saviour charge theſe men with making void the commandments of God, not in one only, but in many caſes, by their traditions (b); and in oppoſition to theſe teachers of traditions, as received from their forefathers, require them to call no man father upon earth, becauſe one only was their Father in that ſenſe in which the Jewiſh doctors claimed that title, even their Father which was in heaven? And that he had great reaſon to ſpeak thus, we learn from the Jewiſh canon, cited by Dr Pocock (c), vota cadere in res mandati, "that vows "reach even to things commanded, or take place "as well in things commanded by the law as in "things indifferent; and that a man may be ſo "bound by them, as that he cannot, without great "ſin, do what God had by his law required to be "done; ſo that if he made a vow which laid upon "him a neceſſity to violate God's law that he might "obſerve it, the vow muſt ſtand, and the law be "abrogated."

2dly, The like infallibility they aſcribe to the words of their Rabbins, wiſe men, and ſcribes. Thus R. Iſaac Abuhaf ſaith (d), "that to all things which "their Rabbins have taught in their homilies, the "ſame faith is to be given as to the law of Moſes." In the Talmud (e) they ſay, "that all their words "are the word of the living God;" and that "the "righteous nation that keepeth the truth, mentioned Iſ. 26. 2. are they who receive all their wiſe "men have ſaid for undoubted truth, and ſay Amen "to it (f)." And that when two of them differ in their opinions, neither of them is to be condemned, Ki Ellou Veellou Dibre Elohim Chajim, "for the "words of them both are the words of the living "God (g)." That they are "to attend more to "the words of the ſcribes than to the words of the "law; and that they are more amiable than the "words of the prophets; the prophets being obliged to work a miracle that they might be credited, whereas they were to be believed without a

" miracle; it being ſaid, Deut. 17. 19. Thou ſhalt " obſerve to do according to all that they ſhall teach " thee (h)." See of this more in Buxtorf's recenſio operis Talmudici, from p. 221 to 228. Maimonides ſaith (i), " If a thouſand prophets, who were equal " to Elias and Eliſha, bring one interpretation, and " a thouſand and one wiſe men bring a contrary to " it, they muſt incline to the moſt, and be obliged " rather to act according to the ſentence of theſe " wiſe men than that of the thouſand prophets." In his explication of the thirteenth treatiſe of the ſanhedrim, he diſtributes men who interpreted the ſayings of their wiſe men into three ranks: 1. Thoſe who thought their ſayings were figurative and tropological. 2. Thoſe who ſaid their words were to be interpreted according to the letter, as thinking ſapientes in omnibus indubitatæ veritatis in dictis ſuis, " the wiſe men were of undoubted truth in all their " ſayings (k)." 3. Thoſe who allude the words of the wiſe, judging themſelves more wiſe, and ſaying, that they were deceived (l), theſe he pronounced fools and accurſed, for ſaying theſe things of thoſe great men of whoſe wiſdom they were well aſſured. Joſephus ſays (m), that they who were of the ſect of the Phariſees ἕπονται τῇ ἠγεμονίᾳ, followed their guidance, and thought it neceſſary to obſerve and contend for every thing their guide commanded. The Sadducees, ſaith he, held it a virtue to contend πρὸς τὰς διδασκάλους σοφίας, againſt the teachers of wiſdom; but they yielded ſuch honour τοῖς ἡλικίας προύχουσι, to their anceſtors, that they durſt not be ſo bold as to gainſay any thing that they had introduced as fit to be obſerved. Here we have in expreſs words the teachers, guides, and fathers, mentioned by our Lord, Matth. 23. 8. 9. and all of them repreſented as perſons whoſe doctrines none ought to doubt of, and whoſe ſayings none ſhould gainſay. This then was the authority the Jews of thoſe times lodged in their fathers, teachers, rabbies, their ſcribes and Phariſees, who ſat in Moſes, chair, and gloried in the name of Rabbi, Rabbi, Matth. 23. 7. And this uſurped authority is the very thing our Saviour forbids as prejudicial to his office, in theſe words, Matth. 28. 8. Be not ye called Rabbi, for one is ὑμῶν ὁ διδάσκαλος, your teacher, even Chriſt; and ver. 10. Be not ye called καθηγηταὶ, guides, for one is your guide, even Chriſt. And therefore it is obſervable, that though the apoſtles had an expreſs commiſſion from Chriſt to teach all nations all that he had commanded, and a promiſe, that in the execution of this office the Holy Spirit ſhould bring theſe things to their remembrance, and ſo were infallible revealers of the mind, and the commandments of Chriſt, which the church of Rome neither doth, nor can pretend to, without falling under St Paul's anathema for preaching another goſpel; yet none of them pretended, or ever attempted to be interpreters of the words of Chriſt, or infallible judges of the true ſenſe of what he had already taught, or commanded, which is the things the Romaniſts now challenge to themſelves, and which the Jewiſh doctors did pretend to be with reſpect to the mind of God revealed in the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament. And indeed this claim of the church of Rome to be the infallible judges, interpreters of the laws, doctrines, and commands of Chriſt, muſt give them power, without control, to alter any of the laws of Chriſt, and under pretence of interpreting, to overthrow them, and ſo to dethrone Chriſt from his dominion over mens conſciences, and inſtead of Chriſt, ſet up themſelves: for he that requires that all the interpretations of the laws of Chriſt ſhould be obeyed as the true mind of Chriſt, ſeem they to the underſtandings of many myriads never ſo diſſonant or diſcordant from it, requires indeed that his interpretations ſhould be received as Chriſt's laws, and that all men ſhould obey rather what they think he, than Chriſt hath taught them; and whoſoever is firmly prepared in his mind to believe and obey all ſuch interpretations without judging them, though to his own judgment they ſeem moſt unreaſonable, whatſoever he may pretend, he makes both the law and the lawmaker ſtales, and obeys only the interpreter; for ſeeing the true ſenſe of the law is indeed the law, he muſt be to me the only giver of the law, who alone gives me the true ſenſe of it. Thus, if any perſon ſhould pretend he would ſubmit to the laws of the king of England, but ſhould reſolve to obey them only in that ſenſe, whatſoever it were, which the French king ſhould put upon them, I preſume every underſtanding man would ſay, that he obeyed only the French king, not the king of England.

§ 2. 2. Whereas the Trent council, in her 4th ſeſſion determines, that " beſides the written word " contained in the canon of the New Teſtament, " there were alſo oral traditions, concerning both " faith and manners, received by the apoſtles from " the mouth of Chriſt, or dictated to them by the " Holy Spirit, and preſerved in the church catholic " by a continual ſucceſſion, which therefore they " received pari pietatis affectu, with the ſame pious " affection as the holy ſcriptures of the New Teſta- " ment:" in all this they plainly copied from the apoſtatizing Jewiſh church. For,

1. As the Romaniſts plead, that their traditions are of a divine original, as being derived partly from

the mouth of Chriſt, partly from his inſpired apoſtles; ſo do the Jews expreſsly teach that their (n) oral law came from the mouth of God, and (o) that God delivered it to Moſes on Mount Sinai with the written law, and that he received it by divine revelation.

2. As the Romaniſts ſay, that their unwritten traditions were preſerved by, and handed down to this preſent age, by the "catholic church in a continual "ſucceſſion;" ſo the Jews ſay, their traditions were "depoſited with the whole congregation," the great ſanhedrim, and the high prieſt, and give us the very names of the eminent perſons, through whoſe hands their traditions came down to their days, Voiſin. proem. pug. fid. p. 10.—16.

3. As the (p) Romaniſts affirm, that the ſcriptures are imperfect and obſcure without their traditions, and conſequently make their traditions neceſſary to the expounding of the ſcriptures; ſo alſo do the Jews ſay, that the (q) "oral law is the foundation "of the written law, and that they cannot come to "the knowledge of the ſcriptures, unleſs they inſiſt "al dibre, חצל, on the words of their wiſe men of "bleſſed memory, that the written law cannot be "expounded without the oral, that they cannot be "eſtabliſhed upon the written law, without the oral, "which is the explication of it; that it is rather the "oral than the written law, which is the foundation "of all their religion, there being no demonſtra-"tion to be taken from the writen law, שרמוצרה, "becauſe tradition explains the ſecret of it." Cod. Jur. chagiga, t. 10. 1.

4. As the Trent council declares concerning the unwritten traditions, "that they are to be received "and reverenced with the ſame pious affection as "the holy ſcriptures;" ſo muſt the Jews do in conſequence of that opinion, which makes them both to proceed immediately from the ſame divine authority, and both derived to them by the ſame means; for, ſay they, "as we have received the written word, "ſo have we received the oral law, min haaboth, from "the fathers:" hence, like good Roman Catholics, they are more exceedingly zealous for the traditions of their fathers, than for the law itſelf, Gal. 1. 14. They accuſe all that walk not according to the cuſtoms of their fathers, as perſons who forſook the law of Moſes, Acts 21. 21. and it was eſteemed a great crime to do any thing againſt the cuſtom of their fathers, or the traditions of the elders, Matth. 15. 2. Acts 28. 17.

5. As the Jews call them Karaim, ſcripturiſts, and Minim, heretics, who reject their oral traditions; ſo do the Romaniſts ſtyle us heretics and ſcripturarii, for rejecting their ſuppoſed apoſtolical and eccleſiaſtical traditions. Prateolus Elencho, l. 17. c. 16. And as the Karaim were, ſaith Menaſſeh Ben "Iſrael (r), excluſi communione Iſraelitarum, exclu-"ded from the communion of Iſrael;" ſo do the Romaniſts exclude us from their communion upon the ſame account.

§ 3. 3. As the church of (s) Rome hath received many apocryphal books as canonical ſcripture, pronouncing an anathema on all who deny them ſo to be; ſo did her apoſtatizing ſiſter alſo receive many ſuch books, as of equal ſtrength and authority with the ſcriptures. As,

1. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan; for their Talmudical doctors declare, that Jonathan received his Targum, or expoſition of the prophets, from the mouth of Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi, three prophets, and keepers of the oral traditions, belonging to the conſiſtory of Ezra; and ſo they make them equal to the writings of theſe three prophets. Moreover, they ſay, that "if any other per-"ſon interpreting any verſe of ſcripture in the "Chaldaic tongue, add any thing to it, he blaſ-"phemes; becauſe he may do this contrary to the "mind of the author:" but then they add, that "Onkelos and Jonathan did not offend in any of "their additions, becauſe they did this always ac-"cording to the mind of the author." So Buxtorf in voce Targum. Hence (t) Raymundus ſaith, that this tranſlation of Onkelos tantam inter Judæos authoritatem obtinet, "is of ſo great authority among "the Jews, that none of them dares preſume to "contradict it."

And Paulus Burgenſis (u) ſaith, "That the Chaldaic "tranſlation among them tantæ authoritatis eſt ſi-"cut textus, is of equal authority with the text." See N. Lyrannus, in Iſ. cap. 8. Such,

And the ſchool of Elias uſed to ſay, "That whoſoever learned the traditions of § 4. 4*thly*, As the church of Rome pretends to be the catholic church, out of whoſe communion there is no ſalvation, requiring all men to own her faith, and to receive her mark, Rev. 13. 16.; ſo alſo did the apoſtatizing church of the Jews. For when the goſpel was firſt preached, they thought that the ſalvation promiſed by it, belonged to them alone, and therefore forbade the apoſtles to preach to the Gentiles, that they might be ſaved, 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. They alſo earneſtly contended, that unleſs they who believed in Jeſus would be circumciſed and keep the law, and ſo receive the mark of, and become proſelytes to their religion, they could not be ſaved, Acts 15. 1. 24. Even thoſe Chriſtians who were diſperſed into other parts by the perſecution of their fellow Jews, preached the word only to the Jews of their own language, Acts 11. 19.; and to the Helleniſtic Jews, ver. 20. And the reſt of them thought it a great ſin in Peter to go in to the uncircumciſed, and converſe with them, though this was only done to convert them to the Chriſtian faith, Acts 11. 3.; and it was matter of great admiration to them, that God ſhould grant repentance to ſalvation to the Gentiles, ver. 18. So deeply was this Jewiſh principle then rooted even in the firſt converts of that nation to the Chriſtian faith.

§ 5. 5*thly*, As the church of Rome hath introduced the religious worſhip of ſaints and angels, ſo alſo did the apoſtatizing church of the Jews. For they had imbibed the philoſophy of the Platoniſts, who taught (z), " that dæmons were of a middle na" ture betwixt gods and mortals; that they brought " our prayers and offerings to the gods, and their " commands to us; and that it was very fit ἰυχαῖς τι-
" μᾶν, to honour them with our prayers upon theſe " accounts." And that " God had no immediate " commerce with men, but all his converſe with " them was by the mediation of thoſe dæmons."
And, ſuitably to this philoſophy, we find the angel ſaying, Tobit 12. 12. 15. that he was one of the ſeven angels, οἱ προσφέρουσι τὰς προσευχὰς τῶν ἁγίων, who offered up the prayers of the ſaints; and that when Tobit and Sarah prayed, he brought the memorial of their prayers before the Holy One. And Philo in ſeveral places declares, that as the philoſophers ſaid of their dæmons and heroes, ſo Moſes introduces the angels as meſſengers of good things from God to his ſubjects, and carrying back their needs; not that God needs their miniſtry, but that it is very needful and beneficial for us frail men to have ſuch meſſengers. See the full proof of this in the note on Col. 2. 18. Accordingly Theodoret, on that place, ſaith, " They who were zealous for the law perſuaded men
" τὰς ἀγγέλους σέβειν, to worſhip angels, becauſe the " law, ſay they, was given by them. And this they
" perſuaded men to do out of humility, ſaying,
" that the God of all things was inviſible, and inac" ceſſible, and incomprehenſible, and that it was " fit we ſhould procure the divine favour by the " means of the angels." Hence Clemens Alexandrinus (a) brings in Peter forbidding Chriſtians to worſhip God as the Jews did, becauſe pretending that they only knew God, they indeed did not know him, as worſhipping angels and archangels.

In their office for the dead, ſaith Voiſin (b), they pray thus, " Ye fathers of the world, who ſleep in " Hebron, open to him the gates of the garden of " Eden, and ſay, Let him come in peace." And again, " Ye angels of peace, come forth to meet " him, and unlock for him the gates of the garden
" of Eden, and ſay, Let him come in peace." Theolog. Judaic. lib. 1. cap. 1. p. 80. 81.

§ 6. 6*thly*, As the church of Rome gives an inferior kind of veneration to images, and by ſome nice diſtinctions eludes the prohibition of the ſecond commandment; ſo do the apoſtate Jews by the ſame arts, declaring, " That he who worſhips an idol
" taking it for God, is guilty; but if not, he is free;"
and the gloſs there adds, " That if he adore God
" in it, it is no crime, for his heart is toward God."
And again, " If a Jew ſee a ſtatue, ſuch as uſed
" to be ſet up for a king, if he adore it not under the " notion of an idol, but in honour to the king, it
" is nothing." And this corrupt nation prevailed upon the Corinthians to eat freely in the idol's temple of their ſacrifices, as thinking they did not offend becauſe they did not own the idol to be God. See for this Dr Lightfoot on 1 Cor. 8. 10.

§ 7. 7*thly*, The apoſtatizing Jews do ſo plainly ſymbolize with the Romaniſts in the doctrine of purgatory, and prayers for the dead, that Bellarmine confirms thoſe doctrines from the practice of the Jews recorded in the book of 2 Maccabees, 12. 39. 46.; from Tobit 4. 18.; and from their other writings, Bellarm. de purgatorio, l. 2. c. 3. § hinc etiam, § ſecundus, et cap. 11. § tertia ratio.

And indeed the parallel is very clear: for as the Papiſts pray for the ſouls of the dead, that they may be delivered from the pains of purgatory, and go thence to heaven; ſo do the Jews, in their liturgy, pray "for the ſouls of their friends and kindred, "grandfathers and grandmothers, that they may "be admitted to the reſt of the righteous in the "garden of Eden." See Dr Lightfoot, vol. 1. p. 1017. 1018. As the Papiſts ſay, thoſe ſouls they pray for go to purgatory, "in order to their purgation from ſome defilements they have contracted in this world, and afterwards to heaven;" ſo the Jews ſay, that anima gehennæ igne purgatur, ut pura evadat et candida, "the ſoul is purged with "hell-fire, that it may be made pure and white, "and then put into the hands of the angel Michael, "who offers up the ſouls of the juſt," Voiſin, Theolog. Jud. l. 1. c. 1. p. 78. As the Papiſts give ſo much money to have ſo many maſſes ſaid for the deliverance of ſouls out of purgatory, ſo the Jews vow "to give alms, that they may be conveyed into the "garden of Eden;" and the prieſt pronounces a bleſſing upon him "who hath vowed ſo many alms "for the ſouls of the dead." See theſe prayers and benedictions in Lightfoot, ibid. And, in relation to this opinion, the ſon of Syrach ſeems to ſay, chap. 7. 33. A gift hath grace in the ſight of every man living, and for the dead detain it not.

§ 8. 8*thly*, As the Papiſts hope to be helped, both living and dead, by the merits of the ſaints, and eſpecially of the martyrs; ſo the Jews pray that God would ſhew kindneſs to them, "for the ſake "of thoſe who are ſlain and maſſacred for his ſake," and went through fire and water for the hallowing of his name. Lightfoot, ibid. They thought in the time of the Maccabees, that the death of their good men, or martyrs, might be an expiation for their ſin; this being among them a received rule, that (c) σπουδαῖος τῶ φαύλω λύτρον, the good man is the redemption of the wicked; and hence (d) Joſephus brings in Eleazar, praying thus to God: Be thou gracious to thy nation, being ſatisfied with the puniſhment I ſuffer for them, make my blood an expiation for them, καὶ ἀντὶ ψυχῶν αὐτῶν λαβὲ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχὴν, and accept my life inſtead of theirs. Hence have we frequent mention of the merita patrum, "merits of "the fathers," in their books, and of the merits of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; from which they did expect great things, even deliverance from hell, ſaying, that "hell-fire hath no power over the ſin"ners of Iſrael; becauſe Abraham, Iſaac, and Ja"cob, deſcend thither to fetch them thence." Pocock miſcellan. p. 172. 227.

THE PREFACE TO THE First EPISTLE to TIMOTHY.

THAT this epiſtle was written after St Paul's departure from Epheſus to Macedonia, ſome gather from theſe words, When I went into Macedonia, I beſought thee to abide at Epheſus, chap. 1. 3. And that is was written when he was in expectation of returning ſhortly thither, they conclude from theſe words, I write to thee, hoping to come unto thee quickly, chap. 3. 14. It therefore, ſay they, muſt be writ before he came to Miletus, Acts 20. 17.; for then he, ſending for the biſhops of Epheſus thither, ſpeaks thus to them, And now I know, that all you among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, ſhall ſee my face no more, ver. 25. For then he muſt have laid aſide all thoughts of returning any more to Epheſus. It therefore muſt, ſay they, be written while he was in Macedonia, or thereabouts; and ſo A. D. 55, and the firſt of Nero. So Dr Lightfoot.

Biſhops Pearſon grants, that it was written after St Paul was gone into Madedonia; but then he adds, that it was writ after his enlargement from his bonds at Rome, A. 65. That it could not be writ at any time of St Paul's going to Macedonia, before his journey to Jeruſalem, he proves, becauſe before that time St Paul could not have exhorted him to abide at Epheſus; for the firſt time he went to Macedonia, by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 16. 9. 10. he had not ſeen Epheſus, for he came not thither till a long time after, Acts 19. 1. The ſecond time he came to Macedonia, was after the tumult which forced him to leave Epheſus, Acts 20. 1. when he could not exhort him to abide at Epheſus, for he had ſent him thence to Macedonia at that very time when that tumult began, Acts 19. 22. 23. This argument, I confeſs, is not very ſtrong; it being plain, from his firſt epiſtle writ to Corinth, while he was at Epheſus, 1 Cor. 16. 8. 10. 11. that he expected then his return to him: but then it appears, that Timothy was with him when he went firſt from Macedonia to Achaia, and at Corinth writ his epiſtle to the Romans, chap. 16. 21.; and alſo when he returned from Achaia to Macedonia, for then he accompanied him from Achaia to Macedonia, and ſo to Aſia, and ſo he abode not then at Epheſus, Acts 20. 4. Now from thence St Paul goes to Jeruſalem, and from thence bound to Rome, and ſo he could not after go to Macedonia till he was ſet at liberty. This therefore, ſaith he, was done afterwards, in the 10th year of Nero, A. D. 65, and ſoon after he writ this epiſtle to him.

And whereas againſt this it is objected, That in this epiſtle he ſpeaks twice of his coming to Epheſus, ſaying, I write unto thee, hoping to come to thee ſhortly, chap. 3. 14. and till I come, give thy diligence to reading, chap. 4. 13. whereas before his going up to Jeruſalem, he had expreſsly ſaid to them of Epheſus, I know, that all you ſhall ſee my face no more; whence it is gathered, that this epiſtle muſt be writ before that time:

To this I anſwer, That St Paul ſaith plainly in this epiſtle, that he purpoſed to come to him; but he ſaith not, that he purpoſed to come to him to Epheſus. If you reply, that in this epiſtle he commands him to ſtay at Epheſus, and ſo muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak of coming thither to him, chap. 1. 3. this, I confeſs, is true according to our verſion, which adds unto the words, ſo do: but if you read the words thus, As I exhorted thee to abide (ſome time) at Epheſus, when I went into Macedonia, (ſo I did it) that thou mightſt admoniſh ſome to teach no other doctrine; it will be leſt uncertain, whether he were at Epheſus at the inditing this epiſtle; for then having done the work for which he was bid to ſtay at Epheſus, he might go on to other places, doing the work of an evangeliſt, and ſettling ordinary church-governors, biſhops, preſbyters, and deacons, where they they were wanting, and doing all the other things mentioned in this epistle, as things to be performed in the church of God. For,

1. It is certain, that when the second epistle was writ to Timothy, he was not at Ephesus, as I have there proved, note on chap. 4. 12. He therefore might have been gone thence also at the writing of this epistle, to settle the affairs of other churches.

2. It is certain, that this first epistle was writ to him, that in St Paul's absence he might know how to deport himself in the church of God, especially in reference to the prescriptions here laid down, chap. 3. 15. Now, there was little need that he should stay there, to do the great work prescribed in this epistle, touching bishops and deacons, they being settled among them by St Paul himself before he left Ephesus; and they being after, in his journey to Jerusalem, summoned to Miletus, and taught how to demean themselves in the respective provinces committed to their trust; it is therefore highly probable, that these directions were given him, in reference to other churches to which this evangelist was to travel, and in some of which he might then be. If this conjecture may take place, the difficulty is fully answered; if not, I must confess myself unable to return any satisfactory answer to it, and so leave the reader to his choice, whether he will follow the opinion of Dr Lightfoot, or Bishop Pearson in this matter.

But though there be a great difference as to the time of writing this epistle, the ancient commentators all agree in this, (a) "That St Timothy was "left at Ephesus, to preserve that church from the "endeavours of the Judaizing Christians, to intro-"duce circumcision and the observance of the law, "and to amuse them with their Talmudical fables, "and with their genealogies from Abraham, and "the patriarchs." A Reverend person saith, "It "is evident, the Gnostics were now scattered in A-"sia, and so characterized by the apostle, chap. 4. "and 6. and there distinctly specified, under the "title of ψευδώνυμος γνώσις, science falsely so called, "ver. 20. they being the men who assumed to "themselves the names of Gnostics, or knowing men." And it must be confessed, that Theodoret (b) accords with him in this matter, saying, "That the apostle "styles the pretended knowledge of the Gnostics, "science falsely so called." And St Chrysostom (c) saith, "Perhaps this was spoken, by reason of some "who were then called Gnostics." And Theophylact (d) says, "I think the apostle speaks this concern-"ing some then called Gnostics." But yet there lies this strong objection against this exposition of this phrase, or the ascribing of it to the Gnostics, That according to all the accounts we receive from the ancients, these Gnostics were not then in being, at least under that name: for whether, with Irenæus, we derive their original from (e) Valentinus, or Carpocrates; or, with Clemens Alexandrinus, from Epiphanes, the author of the sect of the Carpocratians; or, as St Jerom saith, from Basilides (f); it is evident, and confessed by all these authors, that all these, and even Menander, whom Irenæus sometimes makes the father of the Gnostics, were long after the writing of this epistle. Whereas the Judaizing Christians were, saith Theodoret, μέγα φρονοῦντες ἐπὶ τῇ γνώσει, great boasters of their knowledge of the law; and yet, that their pretended knowledge was false knowledge, we learn from those words of the apostle, That these teachers of the law knew not what they said, or whereof they affirmed, 1 Tim. 1. 7. Hence is their doctrine styled ματαιολογία, vain-talking, ver. 6. and here κενοφωνία, empty babbling; as also, 2 Tim. 2. 16. ἄνοια, foolishness, 2 Tim. 3. 9.: and they are said to be ματαιολόγοι, vain-talkers, Tit. 1. 10.; men puffed up, and knowing nothing, but doting about questions, and strife of words, 1 Tim. 6. 4. See the note on chap. 6. 20. So that I can see no objection against that opinion which refers this phrase to those Judaizers, whom the apostle elsewhere styleth false apostles, and deceitful workers.

First EPISTLE to TIMOTHY.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. PAUL an [a] apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, by the [b] commandment (καὶ ἐπιταγὴν, according to the appointment) of God our Saviour, (who called me to this office by his grace, Gal. 1. 15.), and (by the appointment of the) Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is our hope (of glory, Coloſſ. 1. 27.);

2. Unto Timothy [c] my own ſon in the faith, (do I wiſh) grace, mercy and peace, from God our Father, and (from) Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

3. (Declaring that) as I beſought thee to abide ſtill at Epheſus, when I went into Macedonia, (ſo I did it to this end) that thou mightſt charge ſome (Judaizers there) that they teach no other doctrine (than that which is according to godlineſs, chap. 6. 3.);

4. Neither give heed (or incline) to (Jewiſh) fables, and endleſs genealogies, which miniſter queſtions (or diſquiſitions into pedigrees), [d] rather than godly edifying, which is in faith: ſo do.

5. Now (for) the [e] end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart, and of a good conſcience, and of faith unfeigned:

6. From which (commandment) ſome having ſwerved, have turned aſide unto vain jangling; (vain diſcourſes of Talmudical fables and endleſs genealogies);

7. [f] Deſiring to be teachers of the law, (and yet) underſtanding neither what they ſay (of it), nor whereof they affirm, (i. e. neither the ſenſe, ſcope, or true meaning of that law of which they ſpeak, nor having any certainty of the traditions of which they talk ſo confidently.)

8. But (though they are thus ignorant) we know that the law (in itſelf) is good, if a man uſe it lawfully, (not as a means of juſtification, but as a reſtraint from ſin, Gal. 3. 19. and as a ſchoolmaſter to bring him to Chriſt, the end of the law, Gal. 3. 24. Rom. 10. 4.);

9. Knowing this, that [g] the law is not made for a righteous man, (to condemn, or work wrath to him, Rom. 4. 15. as failing in the ſtrict obſervance of it); but for (reſtraining and condemning) [h] the lawleſs and diſobedient, for the ungodly and for ſinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manſlayers,

10. For whoremongers, for them that defile themſelves with mankind, for men-ſtealers, for liars, for perjured perſons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to ſound doctrine,

11. (That is, the doctrine which is) according to the glorious goſpel of the bleſſed God, which was committed to my truſt.

12. And I thank Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, who hath enabled me (by the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of power and wiſdom, who of myſelf was inſufficient for this work, 2 Cor. 3. 5. 6.), [i] for that he accounted me

(one that would be) faithful (in the diſcharge of it), putting me (therefore) into the miniſtry;

13. (Me, I ſay) who was before (this gracious call) a blaſphemer (of Chriſt, Acts 26. 11.), and a perſecutor (of his ſervants, Acts 8. 3.), and injurious (to them). But I obtained mercy (from him), becauſe [k] I did it (not againſt knowledge, for I verily thought I ought to do many things againſt the name of Jeſus, Acts 26. 9. but) ignorantly, in unbelief.

14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant (in its power, to unable me to promote the faith, Rom. 15. 19.), [l] with (through that) faith, and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

15. This (therefore) is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world [m] to ſave ſinners; of whom [n] I am (the) chief, (and ſo a great example of this truth.)

16. Howbeit, for this cauſe (even) I (the chief of ſinners) obtained mercy, that in me firſt Jeſus Chriſt might ſhew forth all long-ſuffering, for a pattern (of it) to them which ſhould hereafter believe on him to life everlaſting.

17. Now to the King eternal, immortal, inviſible, the only wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

18. This charge (of remaining ſome time at Epheſus, for the benefit of the churches there, ver. 3.) I commit unto thee, ſon Timothy, [o] according to the prophecies that went before of thee, that thou (encouraged and excited) by them [p] mightſt war a good warfare, (even that of faith, chap. 6. 12. fighting and ſuffering as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Tim. 2. 3.);

19. Holding faith, and a good conſcience; which (laſt) ſome having put away, concerning faith have made ſhipwreck.

20. Of whom is Hymeneus, (2 Tim. 2. 17.) and Alexander (2 Tim. 4. 14.); [q] whom I have delivered unto Satan (for the deſtruction of the fleſh, 1 Cor. 5. 5.), that they (by what they ſuffer) may learn not to blaſpheme (or ſpeak evil of the faith).

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἀπόστολος, An apoſtle, &c.] Thus he writes to Timothy and Titus, not to aſſert his apoſtolical authority to them who doubted not of it, but for their ſakes over whom they were to preſide, that they might not deſpiſe what they did and injoined by ſo great authority.

Ibid. [b] Καὶ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου, &c.] Some conſtrue theſe words thus, According to the commandment of Jeſus Chriſt, who is God our Saviour; but the words τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν, our hope, muſt be conſtrued with the words Jeſus Chriſt: and this ſufficiently confutes that verſion, which, as none of the ancients followed, ſo is it not ſupported by the word Saviour, added to God, that epithet being twice applied to God the Father in this epiſtle, viz. chap. 2. 3. and 4. 10. and twice in the epiſtle to Titus, viz. chap. 1. 3. and 2. 10. Moreover, ſome ancient copies read τοῦ Πατρὸς, of God our Father.

Ver. 2. [c] Γνησίῳ τέκνῳ ἐν πίστει, My own ſon in the faith.] This phraſe compared with 1 Cor. 4. 14. 15. ſeems plainly to import, that Timothy was converted to the Chriſtian faith by St Paul; as alſo he ſeems to intimate when he ſaith, He ſerved with him in the goſpel, as a ſon with the father, Phil. 2. 22. and again calls him his beloved Son, 2 Tim. 1. 2. Nor find I any thing in ſcripture to the contrary; for though it is ſaid that he had learned the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament from his youth, 2 Tim. 3. 15. yet is that true alſo of St Paul, when yet he was no convert to the Chriſtian faith, but a zealous perſecutor of it. And though he was a diſciple when Paul circumciſed him, and took him with him from Lyſtra, Acts 16. 1. that hinders not but that he might be made ſo by St Paul himſelf.

Ver. 4. [d] Μᾶλλον ἢ οἰκοδομίαν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει, rather than godly edifying, which is in faith.] Here firſt the grammarians note, that comparative particles, and eſpecially this of μᾶλλον, rather, are often in ſenſe negative, as Luke 18. 14. He went to his houſe juſtified, ἢ ἐκεῖνος, rather than the other, i. e. the publican, and not the Phariſee; 1 Pet. 3. 17. It is better to ſuffer for well-doing than for evil-doing; John 3. 19. Men loved μᾶλλον τὸ σκότος ἢ φῶς, darkneſs and not light; 2 Tim. 3. 4. Φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, i. e. Lovers of pleaſure, and not of God: ſee John 12. 43. Heb. 11. 25. The edification in the faith here mentioned, is ſtyled the edification of God, becauſe it hath God for its object and its end, as tending to the true knowledge and right worſhip of God; it is efficiently from him (on which account, juſtification by faith is ſtyled the righteouſneſs of God), and tendeth highly to his glory.

Ver. 5. [e] Τὸ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας, the ſcope of the commandment.] This ſome refer to the law, which, ſaith the apoſtle, is fulfilled by love, Rom. 13. 10. but ἀγγελία, 1 John 3. 11. παραγγελία, 1 Theſſ. 4. 2. and ver. 18. of this chapter, and ἐπαγγελία, being in the epiſtles always uſed of the goſpel, and the latter word ſpoken of it in oppoſition to the law, which, ſaith the apoſtle, was not ἐξ ἐπαγγελίας, of promiſe, Rom. 4. 13. Gal. 3. 18.; I rather think it here refers unto the goſpel, or to that diſpenſation in which nothing thing availeth but faith working by love, Gal. 5. 6. and which requires fervent and unfeigned love out of a pure heart, from all that do obey the truth, 1 Pet. 1. 22.

Ver. 7. [f] Θέλοντες εἶναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι, deſiring to be teachers of the law.] That thoſe perſons were not Gnoſtics, but ἐξ Ἰουδαίων, the Jews, is manifeſt, ſay the Greek commentators, from theſe words: for the Gnoſtics were the greateſt adverſaries of the law and the prophets, and even rejectors of that God who gave the one and inſpired the other. Simon Magus taught (a), "that the prophets received their pro-"phecies only from angels, and that therefore they "that believed in him and his Selene, ſhould not re-"gard them." Saturninus (b), "that Chriſt came "to deſtroy the God of the Jews; which God Simon "himſelf denied," ſaith the Pſeud. Ignatius (c). They taught men "not to uſe the law and the pro-"phets, nor to fear their threats (d)." Now, they who held and taught theſe things muſt be the greateſt adverſaries to, and not the teachers of the law. Hence it follows,

1. That the fables and genealogies mentioned, ver. 4. and the vain janglings, ver. 6. cannot relate to the Æones of the Gnoſtics, which ſeem not then to be hatched; but that the apoſtle rather here reſpects, as Theodoret obſerves, τὰν Ἰουδαϊκὴν ἐμμανίαν τὴν ὑπ' αὐτῶν καλυμμένην διυτίθησιν, the vain traditions, or talmudical fables of the Jews, as the apoſtle explains himſelf, when he inſtructs Titus to teach the Cretians μὴ προσέχειν Ἰουδαϊκοῖς μύθοις, not to give heed to the Jewiſh fables of men, who turn from the truth, chap. 1. 14. eſpecially thoſe traditions and fables they had received of a Meſſiah B. Joſeph that was to ſuffer, and a Meſſiah B. David that was to triumph glorioufly and abide for ever, John 12. 34. (if that diſtinction was ſo ancient); and of the golden days they were to have at the coming of this Meſſiah, of which Trypho in his dialogue with Juſtin ſpeaks, p. 249. B. ſaying, that their prophets taught them, ἐνδόξου καὶ μέγαν ἀναμένειν ---- παραλαμβάνοντα τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν, to expect a great and glorious Meſſiah, who ſhould have an endleſs kingdom; and p. 306. 307. of the halcyon-days they ſhould enjoy in Jeruſalem rebuilt at his coming. The endleſs genealogies are, ſay the fathers, γενεαλογίας τὰς ἐξ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Δαυὶδ, their genealogies from Abraham and David, which they were concerned for, that they might know they came from the promiſed ſeed, or their title to the privileges belonging to the children of Abraham; or that they might have the preference; for thoſe of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David, were held more honourable than thoſe of other tribes; ſee Campeg. Vitringa de ſyn. vet. l. 3. c. 17. p. 871. They were, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, the long and intricate pedigrees they ſtood upon to prove themſelves prieſts and Levites; for, as Joſephus (e) notes, they thought themſelves obliged to be very exact in that affair, and therefore had genealogies of them preſerved two thouſand years. To theſe we may add the genealogy and pedigree of their traditions, which they derived from Joſhua in a long line of ſucceſſion to their times. That they were genealogies belonging to the Jews, we learn from Tit. 3. 9. where they are joined with ſtrifes about the law.

Ver. 8. Ἐάν τις αὐτῷ νομίμως χρῆται, if a man uſe it lawfully;] that is, ſaith Theodoret, ἐὰν τις ἀκολούθῃ αὐτῇ τῷ σκόπῳ, if he complieth with the ſcope of it, which is, to bring him to Chriſt.

Ver. 9. [g] Δικαίῳ νόμος οὐ κεῖται·] i. e. the law was not made to condemn the juſt man, for againſt ſuch there is no law condemning them, Gal. 5. 23. ἀντίκειται δὲ, but it lies againſt the lawleſs, to condemn them.

Ibid. [h] Ἀνόμοις, &c.] From this enumeration of offenders againſt the law, we learn, that the apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the moral law contained in the ten commandments; for the ſins here mentioned reſpect them; the ungodly being ſinners againſt the firſt commandment, the ἁμαρτωλοὶ, ſinners, (as that word ſignifies the idolatrous Gentiles, Gal. 2. 15.), the tranſgreſſors, of the ſecond; the perjured perſons, of the third; the unholy and profane, of the fourth; the murderers of fathers and mothers, of the fifth; the manſlayers, of the ſixth; the fornicators and defilers of themſelves with mankind, of the ſeventh; men-ſtealers, of the eighth; liars, of the ninth; as alſo from the following words, If there be any other thing contrary to the ſound doctrine of the goſpel. Note,

3. That fornication is here reckoned among ſins committed againſt the law of nature, or the moral law; as it is alſo, Rom. 1. 29. and among the manifeſt works of the fleſh, Gal. 5. 19. yea, among the things for which the wrath of God comes upon the children of disobedience, or unbelief, that is, the Heathens, Eph. 5. 5. 6. for which men are to be excluded from the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. 10. Rev. 22. 15. and to be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, Rev. 21. 8.; whence it is to be wondered that this sin should be so generally committed by some, and pleaded for by others, who are called Christians.

Ver. 12. [i] Ὅτι πιστὸν μὲ ἡγήσατο, he accounted me faithful.] St Paul was a vessel of election to bear Christ's name before the Gentiles, Acts 9. 15.; in order thereunto he was by him to be filled with the Holy Ghost, ver. 17. and so enabled to perform this work with the power of signs and wonders, and of the Spirit of God, Rom. 15. 19. Christ also appeared to him for this very end, προχειρίζεσθαι, to constitute him first, and set him apart, as it were, by laying hands upon him, to make him a minister and witness of what he had seen and heard, Acts 26. 16. and 22. 14. 15. and accordingly he sent him to the Gentiles, Acts 26. 17. and thus he put him into the ministry. Christ did this, because he accounted him one that would be faithful in the discharge of his duty, 1 Cor. 4. 2. and 7. 25. i. e. such a one, who, by the consideration of so great a mercy and abundant grace vouchsafed to one so unworthy, would patiently suffer for, Acts 9. 16. and labour more abundantly in propagation of the gospel, when thus assisted by the grace and Spirit of Christ, 1 Cor. 15. 10.; whence it is observed by the fathers here, that "there was "not only something of God, but also something of "himself, for which he was chosen to this mini-"stry; and that he so magnifies the grace of God as "not to invalidate man's free will (f)."

Ver. 13. [k] Ὅτι ἀγνοῶν ἐποίησα ἐν ἀπιστίᾳ, I did it ignorantly,] being an unbeliever, as he might be by reason of those many prejudices the learned Jews, and zealous assertors of their traditions, laboured under. For to this St Peter doth ascribe their crucifixion of our Lord, saying, I know you did it κατ' ἄγνοιαν, through ignorance, Acts 3. 17. and St Paul saying they did it, τοῦτον ἀγνοήσαντες, not knowing him, Acts 13. 27. 1 Cor. 2. 8.; and Christ himself, when he prays thus, Father, forgive them, they know not what they do, Luke 23. 34. giving the same reason of his prayer for their forgiveness, as St Paul here doth of his own actual forgiveness; so that it is needless to endeavour, as some do, to wrest these words to another sense.

Ver. 14. [l] Μετὰ πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης, through faith and love.] Love constraining him to labour more abundantly, 2 Cor. 5. 14. and his strong faith enabling him to do it in the power of signs and wonders, and of the Holy Ghost, Rom. 15. 19.

Ibid. Μετὰ πίστεως, with faith;] or, per fidem, through faith, or by faith; so Paul and Barnabas declared what things God had done μετ' αὐτῶν, by them, Acts 14. 27.; 15. 4. which is, ver. 12. δι' αὐτῶν.

Ver. 15. [m] Ἁμαρτωλοὺς σῶσαι, to save sinners.] Hence divines have well observed, that if man had not sinned, Christ had not come into the world.

Ibid. [n] Εἰμὶ ἐγὼ, I am.] He saith not, I was, but I am, because even when sin is pardoned, we ought to have the prospect of it still before our eyes, to keep us humble and sensible of the great grace of God to us.

Ver. 17. Μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ.] Dr Mills seems very averse from the word σοφῷ, admitting it neither here nor Jude 25.; but see it defended in both places, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 18. [o] Κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας, according to the foregoing prophecies concerning thee.] So chap. 4. 14. Neglect not τὸ χάρισμα, the gift of the Holy Ghost which was given thee, διὰ προφητείας, according to prophecy. I have shewed, note on 1 Cor. 12. 10. that among the gifts of prophecy and discerning of spirits, this was one, to foretel and chuse out persons meet to do God service in the ministry. Hence St Paul charges the bishops of Ephesus to feed the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers or bishops, Acts 20. 28. And Clemens Romanus saith, the apostles chose bishops and deacons with full assurance of the Holy Ghost, πεπληροφορημένοι τελείως, Ep. ad Cor. § 42. 44. having a perfect knowledge of them, and making trial of them by the Spirit. So was it in the case of Timothy, say all the Greek scholiasts on the place. St Chrysostom saith (g), he was chosen by prophecy, that is, by the Spirit of God: Theodoret (h), that he received imposition of hands, not by mans calling, but by divine revelation: Oecumenius (i), that by the revelation of the Spirit, he was both chosen by St Paul to be a disciple, and was circumcised, and ordained a bishop; and Theophylact affirms the same. Being thus designed, and notified by the Spirit of prophecy, they were, by prayer and imposition of hands, consecrated to their office. Thus when the Spirit in the prophets had said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work of the ministry, to which I have called them, Acts 13. 2. 3. 4. they prayed, and laid their hands upon them, and ſent them away, and they are ſaid to be ſent forth by the Holy Ghoſt. And with this impoſition of hands, they who had them not before, received χαρίσματα, gifts anſwerable to their calling. Thus St Paul charges Timothy to ſtir up χάρισμα Θεοῦ, the gift of God that was in him, by the laying on his hands, 2 Tim. 1. 6.; and Irenæus ſaith, l. 4. c. 33. that "the biſhops who "ſucceeded the apoſtles, with their ſucceſſion into "their biſhoprics, received a certain χάρισμα of "truth, according to the good pleaſure of the Fa-"ther;" ſee note on 1 Cor. 2. 16. and on chap. 12. 10. Vain therefore are they, who pretending to an internal call of the Spirit, which they cannot prove to others, think impoſition of hands, and conſecration to the work of the miniſtry, unneceſſary to the performance of the miniſterial office.

Ibid. ᵖ Ἵνα στρατεύῃ τὴν καλὴν στρατείαν, that thou mayſt war a good warfare;] i. e. perform the office of an evangeliſt well, 2 Tim. 4. 5. ſo as to be a good miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 4. 6. Thus in the Old Teſtament, the Levite that entered upon the ſervice of the tabernacle of the congregation, is, in the Hebrew, one that enters into the hoſt, Numb. 4. 3. 23. 30. 35. 39. 43. chap. 8. 24. and goes צבא צבא, to war the warfare, i. e. to ſerve the ſervice, ſaith the Chaldee; and ſo the following words explain it: and to be ſuperannuated, and ſo to ceaſe from the work, is to return from the warfare, chap. 8. 25. Thus alſo in the New Teſtament the Chriſtian miniſter is a ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Tim. 2. 3. στρατιώτης, a warrior, ver. 4.; he hath the weapons of his warfare, 2 Cor. 10. 4. and ought to have his wages, becauſe no man goeth to warfare at his own charge, 1 Cor. 9. 7.

Ver. 20. ᵠ Οὓς παρέδωκα τῷ Σατανᾷ, whom I have delivered to Satan.] I have ſhewed, note on 1 Cor. 5. 5. that the ancients ſay, this phraſe ſignified, that ſome diſeaſe was to be inflicted on them by Satan. Thus Theodoret, Chryſoſtom, and Oecumenius, here ſay of theſe men, "that being ſeparated from the church, "they were cruelly chaſtiſed by the adverſary, fall-"ing into diſeaſes and grievous afflictions, and other "damages and calamities (k);" and this, in the forementioned place, is argued from the ends of this delivery to Satan, viz. for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that they might learn not to blaſpheme that doctrine which could ſo ſeverely puniſh them that did ſo. Note alſo, that Hymeneus and Alexander made ſhipwreck of the faith, not by renouncing Chriſtianity, for what have I to do, ſaith the apoſtle, to judge them that are without? 1 Cor. 5. 12. but by maintaining ſuch doctrines as overthrew the faith, i. e. by denying the reſurrection of the body, as Hymeneus did, 2 Tim. 2. 18.

CHAP. II.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verse 1. [a] Δεήσεις, προσευχὰς, ἐντεύξεις, prayers, supplications, intercessions.] Δεήσεις are deprecations for the pardon of sin, and the averting divine judgments. Προσευχαὶ, prayers for the obtaining of all spiritual and temporal blessings; and in this we have the suffrage of the Greek scholiasts and lexicographers. But as for the word ἐντεύξεις, they almost unanimously say, it is a complaint, or accusation made to God, against those who deal injuriously with them, and a desire that he would avenge their injuries; to which I cannot think the apostle would so passionately exhort them. Nor is the word capable of this sense, when the apostle saith, chap. 4. 5. The creature is sanctified to us διὰ ἐντεύξεως, by prayer.

I therefore prefer the other import of the word mentioned in Phavorinus, that it is παράκλησις ὑπό τινος προσαγομένη Θεῷ περὶ σωτηρίας ἑτέρων, an address presented to God for the salvation of others. And by this rule were the devotions of the church continually directed. "For," saith the author of the book, De vocatione gentium, (l) "the devotion of "all the priests, and all the faithful, doth so unanimously observe this rule of prayer, that there "is no part of the world, in which the Christian "people do not put up such prayers as these, praying not only for the saints, but for infidels, idolaters, the enemies of the cross, and the persecutors of Christ's members, for Jews, heretics, "and schismatics." But then as these addresses had a particular respect to men in these circumstances, so the other must have respect to men in general; all these addresses being to be made, not only for ourselves, but for all men.

Ver. 2. [b] Ὑπὲρ βασιλέων, &c. For kings, and all that are in authority.] So the Jews prayed, and offered sacrifices for the Persian kings, (m) and the welfare of their government, Ezra 6. 10. Thus Jeremy sends to them, in their captivity, "to pray for the "peace of the city whither God had caused them "to be carried captive," chap. 29. 7. And the Jews in Babylon send to those in Judea, to pray for the life of Nebuchodonosor King of Babylon, and for the life of Balthasar his son, that their days may be upon earth as the days of heaven, Baruch 1. 11. When they came under the government of the kings of Egypt, Eleazar, their high priest, writes to Ptolemy thus: "We continually offer sacrifice (n) for "thee, thy sister, thy children, and friends; and the "people pray for thy happy success in all things, and "for the peaceable state of thy kingdom." And so when they were under the Seleucidæ. And, lastly, when they came under the Roman government (o), this was their constant practice, till they begun that rebellion, under which their city, country, religion, and nation were destroyed. This being, saith Josephus, the cause of the war, that the seditious did θυσίαν τῷ Καίσαρος ἀποράπτειν, reject the sacrifice offered for Cæsar, though the priests and nobles earnestly intreated them, μὴ παραλίπειν τὸ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἡγεμόνων ἔθος, not to desert the custom concerning their rulers, which always had obtained among them.

And that the Christians, following their examples, thus prayed continually, from the beginning, for

And this it became them to do, that the Heathen emperors, finding them thus ſolicitous for the welfare and proſperity of their government, might permit them quietly and peaceably to enjoy their religion.

Ver. 5. ᶜ Μεσίτης, Mediator.] That is, ſaith Suidas, εἰρηνοποιὸς, a peace-maker. This, ſay the Socinians, is not neceſſary, that a mediator ſhould appeaſe, or reconcile parties at variance; but only, that he ſhould deliver the mind of one to the other, and ſtrike a covenant or league betwixt them, as in the caſe of Moſes, Gal. 3. 9. To this I anſwer,

1. That though this be not neceſſarily contained in the ſignification of the word, yet it is evidently implied in that which is annexed to our Mediator, where-ever he is mentioned in the New Teſtament, viz. here, and in the epiſtle to the Hebrews; for he is ſuch a Mediator as gave himſelf a ranſom to God for us, ver. 6. and there, he is a Mediator of the new covenant of his blood, the covenant made by intervention of his death, εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν, for redemption of the tranſgreſſions of the former covenant, chap. 9. 15. and 8. 6. and 12. 24.

2. This ſeemeth to have been the Jewiſh notion, both of a mediator in the general, and of our mediator, or the divine Logos in particular. Thus Philo ſaith (y) that "the Father of all things hath "granted to his moſt ancient word, an excellent "gift, viz. That ſtanding in the confines of both, "he ſhould put a difference betwixt the maker and "the thing made, as being an interceſſor for mortal man to the immortal God, and an ambaſſador "from the king to his ſubjects; in which gift he "rejoiceth, ſaying, Κἀγὼ ἱστήκειν ἀνὰ μέσον Κυρίου καὶ ὑμῶν, and I ſtood betwixt God and you, being neither unbegotten as God, οὔτε γενητὸς ὡς ἡμεῖς, nor "made as we are, but a middle of the extremes, "and a pledge to both; to the creator, engaging, "that all mankind ſhall not corrupt itſelf, and a- "poſtatiſe, chuſing diſorder before order; to the "creature, that he may have good hope, that the "merciful God will not wholly overlook his own "work; for I denounce τὰ εἰρηνικὰ, peaceable things "to the creature from the God of peace." And ſpeaking of their high prieſt, who was a type of Chriſt, he ſaith, (z) "the law will have him ra- "ſed above human nature, and coming near to the "divine; and, if I may ſay the truth, a middle be- "twixt both, that men may atone God by a me- "diator, and God may reach forth, and diſtribute "his favours to men by a certain miniſter." And again, "(a) It was neceſſary, that he who performs "the office of a prieſt to the father of a world, "ſhould have for his advocate his ſon moſt perfect "in virtue, to obtain the pardon of ſins, and the "participation of the greateſt bleſſings." So that here it is made the office of a mediator, to procure peace to the creature from God, to make atonement to God, and to be an advocate to obtain the pardon of ſins; and if Chriſt, our mediator and advocate with the Father, was, by virtue of his office, to do this; ſurely it muſt be part of his office, to appeaſe and reconcile God to us.

Ver. 6. ᵈ Ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, a ranſom for all.] And Matth. 20. 28. λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, a ranſom in the ſtead of many. Hence then it is evident, beyond contradiction, that our Lord Jeſus ſuffered in our ſtead. For when the ſcripture ſaith, Οὐ λήψεσθε λύτρα περὶ ψυχῆς παρὰ τοῦ φονεύσαντος, ye ſhall admit no ſatisfaction for the life of the murderer who is worthy of death, Numb. 35. 31. 32. but he ſhall ſurely be put to death; for ἡ ἐξιλασθήσεται ἡ γῆ ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος, the land cannot be cleanſed, or expiated from the blood that is ſhed therein, but by the blood of him that ſhed it; is not this the plain import of theſe words, That no price ſhall be admitted inſtead of his life? Again, when Ahab paſſed this judgment on the diſguiſed prophet, Ἔσται ἡ ψυχή σου ἀντὶ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῦ, Thy life shall go for his life whom thou hast let go, 1 Kings 20. 39. 40. And when the prophet thus returns upon him, Thus saith the Lord, Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I have appointed to utter destruction, ἡ ἔσαι ψυχή σε ἀντὶ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῦ, therefore thy life shall go for his life. And when Jehu saith to the men appointed to slay the priests of Baal, If any of them escape, he that letteth him go, ἡ ψυχὴ αὐτῦ ἀντὶ τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῦ, his life shall be for his life that escapeth of them, 2 Kings 10. 24. Do not all these expressions plainly signify, Thou shalt die instead of him? When therefore Christ elsewhere declares, that he would give his flesh for the life of the world; that he gave his life a ransom for many, a ransom for all: must he not signify by these expressions, that he would give up his life to the death, instead of them who had deserved death? which sure he could not do, but he must suffer in their stead. Moreover, by the Jewish law, the first born of every beast was to die; or to rescue him from it, the owner was to pay, λύτρον ἀντὶ ψυχῆς, a price to redeem his life, Numb. 18. 15. and the pushing ox, provided the owner did not pay τὸ λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῦ, a price or ransom for his life, Exod. 21. 31. Every Israelite was also to bring in yearly his half-shakel, λύτρον τῆς ψυχῆς αὐτῦ ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν, to be the ransom of his life, that he die not, Exod. 30. 12. 15. 16. And this money was appointed to buy the daily sacrifice which was to expiate, or make atonement for their lives. Moreover, among the Jews it was a received opinion, that σπουδαῖος τῦ φαύλε λύτρον, the good man was the redemption of the wicked, Philo de sacrif. Cain, p. 118. D. And hence (b) Josephus brings in Eleazar praying thus to God, "Be thou gracious to thy "nation, being satisfied with the punishment I suf- "fer for them: make my blood an expiation for "them," καὶ ἀντὶ ψυχῶν αὐτῶν λαβὲ τὴν ἐμὴν ψυχήν, and take my life instead of theirs. See the note on Matth. 20. 28. When therefore, in allusion to these things, it is said, Christ gave himself ἀντίλυτρον, or λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, a ransom for many; can we put any other sense upon these words than this, that he gave his life instead of ours, to expiate and atone for those lives which we by sin had forfeited?

Ibid. ᵉ Ὑπὲρ πάντων, for all.] These verses contain several convincing arguments, that God wills the salvation of all men in particular, and that Christ thus died for all. For,

1. The apostle here injoins us to pray for all men, because God will have all men to be saved. Now, it is unquestionably the Christian's duty, and was the constant practice of the church, to pray for all men in particular; and therefore the reason here assigned of this duty, much reach to all men in particular.

2. The apostle reasons thus: God will have all men to be saved, because he is the God of all, the common father, creator, governor, and preserver of all men: Now, thus he is the God of all men in particular; and so this argument must shew, he would have all men in particular be saved. For, as the apostle argues for God's readiness to justify the Gentiles by faith, as freely as the Jews, by asking, Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not also of the Gentiles? Rom. 3. 29. and answering, that there is no difference betwixt them, the same God being rich unto all that call upon him, Rom. 10. 12.; so may we argue in this case, by a like inquiry, Is he the God of a small remnant of the Jews and Gentiles only? Is he not the God and Saviour of them all? chap. 4. 10.

3. He would have all men to be saved, saith the apostle; for there is one mediator betwixt God and men, the man Jesus Christ, who gave himself a ransom for all. Now, if the argument from one God was, as we have proved, designed to shew he was the God of all men in particular; the argument from this one mediator must also prove Christ the mediator of all men in particular. Hence he is here emphatically styled, the Man Christ Jesus; to intimate unto us, that having taken upon him the nature common to us all, to fit him for this office, he must design it for the good of all who were partakers of that nature; for as he was a man, he surely was endued with the best of human affections, universal charity, which would excite him to promote the welfare of all. As he was a man, he was subject to the common law of humanity, which obliges us to endeavour the common benefit of men.

Ver. 7. ᶠ Ἀλήθειαν λέγω, I speak the truth in Christ.] This oath or vehement affirmation could not be necessary to confirm Timothy in the belief of this matter. But this epistle being sent to Ephesus, or some other place, where there were many Jews, who either denied that salvation was to be preached to the Gentiles, or only on the terms of being also circumcised, which this apostle did so stoutly oppose, it might be necessary for their sakes.

Ver. 8. ᵍ Ὁσίους χεῖρας, holy hands.] It is certain, that it was the custom of the Heathens to wash sometimes the heads, sometimes their whole bodies, but generally their hands, before they came to their temples to pay their homage to their gods. And to this purpose they had their χερνίβια, or χειρονίπτρα, basons, or lavers, placed before the temples, which they were to use before they sacrificed; it being thought so great a crime to come to the gods with hands unwaſhed, illotis manibus libare, that it is (c) proverbial with them, to ſignify by that phraſe, thoſe who come irreverently and unprepared to their ſervice, ſay Diogenianus and St Gregory; and to come reverently to the gods is, (d) περιῤῥαινάμενον, ἀπορυψάμενον, ἀποτριψάμενον, ὡσιώμενον προσιέναι, to come cleanſed and waſhed, and therefore holy. As for the Jews, the learned Dr Pocock ſaith, that this is a law among them, that every one muſt waſh his hands when he ariſes from his bed, that he may be pure when he offers up his prayers to God, not thinking any man נזהר (ὅσιος, Prov. 22. 11.) pure, till he hath waſhed his hands. This they were to do, ſay their Rabbins, "leſt God, ſeeing "his creature defiled, ſhould be angry;" and becauſe prayer ſucceeded to thoſe ſacrifices, which were not to be touched by the prieſt till he had waſhed his hands, Exod. 30. 27. 28. This they looked upon as a part of ſanctification, and therefore pray thus, "Bleſſed be thou, O Lord God, "שאר קדש ו, who haſt ſanctified us by thy pre-"cepts, and commandeſt us to waſh our hands." This waſhing was to ſignify three things.

1. That the hands ſhould be innocent and pure from all blood and cruelty, injuſtice and bribery, all filthineſs and impurity, before we come to this ſacred majeſty, as David ſaith, I will waſh my hands in innocency, and ſo will I compaſs thine altar, Pſal. 26. 6. and Philo, of the Eſſenes (e), that they lifted up pure hands to Heaven; that is, hands καθαραὶ λημμάτων, καὶ ὑπ' ἀδικίας προφάσεως τῶν ἐπ' πορισμὸν μιαινομένων, pure from gifts, and ſtained with no unjuſt gain; and ſo, ſaith he, muſt the perſon who lays his hand upon his offering, be able to ſay, (f) Αἱ χεῖρες αὗται οὔτε δῶρον ἐπ' ἀδίκοις ἔλαβον: "Theſe hands have recei-"ved no gift to do injuſtice, are not polluted with "innocent blood; they have maimed, wounded, "done violence to no man; they have been em-"ployed in no culpable action, but have miniſter-"ed to all good and profitable things."

2. That our hearts ſhould much more be purified from all luſts and filthineſs of ſpirit, pride, hatred, malice, covetouſneſs, &c. So clean hands and a pure heart, in the pſalmiſt, go together, Pſal. 24. 4. "He "that offers ſacrifices," ſaith Philo (g), "muſt be "καθαρὸς σώματι καὶ ψυχῇ, pure in body from whatſo-"ever defileth that; and in ſoul from all evil paſ-"ſions and vices: for it is folly to think we may "not come to the temple till we have waſhed the "body, and yet may pray and offer ſacrifice with "a ſpotted and defiled mind."

3. That we be purified from all worldly and diſtracting thoughts, that the mind may be at leiſure to attend purely to heavenly things; that we may bring to God, ſaith Philo (h), τὴν ψυχὴν τῆ τῶν αἰσθητῶν καὶ αἰσθητῶν ὄγκω παντελῶς ἐπικουφισθεῖσαν, a ſoul eaſed of all the weight of the ſenſes, and ſenſible objects. Theſe are the things which the apoſtle here injoins, when he commands us to lift up holy hands; not that we ſhould waſh them with water, which Tertullian (i) reckons among things vacuæ obſervationis, of vain obſervation, ſuperſtitious, and rather curious and affected than reaſonable devotion, when introduced by ſome Chriſtians, from the Heathen or the Jewiſh practice, as a preface to prayer.

Ibid. [b] Χωρὶς ὀργῆς, without wrath.] As being contrary to that charity and forgiveneſs, and that ſedateneſs of ſpirit we ought to have when we addreſs to God in prayer, and being the forerunner of that cruelty which defiles the hands.

Ibid. [i] Καὶ διαλογισμῶ, and doubting.] I find not that the Greek ever bears the ſenſe of doubting, but always imports in the New Teſtament, either inward reaſonings or tumultuating thoughts, διαλογισμοὶ πονηροὶ, evil thoughts in the heart, Matth. 15. 19.; Mark 7. 21.; James 2. 4. διαλογισμοὶ καρδιῶν, the thoughts of mens hearts; Luke 2. 35. and 9. 46. διαλογισμοὶ αὐτῶν, their thoughts, Luke 5. 22. and 6. 8. or their imaginations, Rom. 1. 21. Luke 24. 38. or contention and diſceptation among them, Luke 9. 46. or inward murmurings, Phil. 2. 14. all which are plainly oppoſite to that peace, concord, and ſedateneſs of ſpirit we ſhould bring to our devotions, and apt to diſtract us in them, eſpecially evil imaginations.

The ſcripture itſelf ſeems to direct us to the prime ſenſe of this word; for what is διαλογισμὸς, Luke 9. 47. is ἐνθυμήσεις, inward thoughts and reaſonings, Matth. 9. 4. and this ſenſe the word will bear in all places, where we render it either doubting or diſputing. So Philip. 2. 14. Do all things without murmuring, καὶ διαλογισμῶν, and inward reaſonings, whether you ſhould continue in the faith or not; or why ſuch commands ſhould be laid upon you; and here, without inward thoughts, or reſentments of the injuries done to you, Theodoret here interprets it agreeably to the matter in hand, ἀμφιβολίας χωρὶς, without heſitation, ſtrongly believing thou ſhalt receive what thou aſkeſt: And of this, ſaith Theophylact, thou mayſt be aſſured, if thou ſtill aſkeſt according to his will; if thou aſkeſt μηδὲν ἀνάξιον τὸ θεοπρεπὲς, nothing unworthy of God, but all things ſpiritual, and aſkeſt theſe things without wrath, and heſitation, or a mind wavering betwixt hope and fear.

Ver. 9. [k] Μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ σωφροσύνης, with shamefacedness, and sobriety, or chastity.] It seems impossible to fix a certain rule for the attire of women of all states and conditions, at all times, and in all places; but from what the apostle saith here, and 1 Pet. 3. 3. (see the note there), it seems evident, 1*st*, That περιπλοκαὶ τῶν τριχῶν ἐταιρικαὶ, all attire which suspected women used, either to provoke lust in others, or to shew any inclination to it in themselves; and all attire which hath any tendency to any thing of this nature, or to raise a suspicion of it, must be here forbidden, as being contrary to the modesty and chaste behaviour of a godly matron. And, 2*dly*, All attire, which, by the richness and the costliness of it, shews any pride, or vanity of spirit, or an ambition to excel others. And, 3*dly*, All great concernment, care, and study, to appear in such attire, as if it were indeed our truest ornament, and that which made us truly to excel, and be more honourable than others: this vanity and pride, this esteem of, and concern for these things, being not well consistent with sobriety, and much less with the profession of true godliness. And here it is worthy to be noted by the women, 1*st*, That this precept ought not to be slighted by them, as of little moment, seeing it is so carefully inculcated by the two chief apostles of the Jew and Gentile, St Peter and St Paul, and the contrary is represented as a practice opposite to godliness. 2*dly*, Let them especially mark the character here given of a Christian woman, viz. that she is one who doth not only profess and declare, that she serves and worships God, but also doth ἐπαγγέλλειν, shew forth godliness in her life and conversation. And 2*dly*, Let the men note hence that of Esthius, That if it be so unbecoming a Christian woman to be thus concerned in adorning and tricking up her body, it must be much more unbecoming a Christian man, and that which makes him truly to deserve the name of fop.

Ver. 12. [l] Οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω, &c. I suffer not a woman to teach.] i. e. publicly, 1 Cor. 14. 34. 35. See the note there. They may privately instruct, as Priscilla did Apollo, Acts 18. 26. and as a believing wife may instruct her unbelieving husband, when he requires a reason of her faith; but then she must not challenge any authority to do this, this being to usurp an authority not due unto her.

Ver. 14. [m] Οὐκ ἠπατήθη, he was not deceived.] i. e. by the serpent, who never attempted him, but was only seduced by the woman: she therefore was both guilty of her own, and of her husband's sins.

Ver. 15. [n] Διὰ τεκνογονίας, in child-bearing.] That is, some say, by bearing the Messiah, the promised seed; but there is no instance that can be produced, where this phrase is used in this sense. Say others, by education of her children; but neither is there any instance of this signification of the word, nor is it fit that her salvation should depend on the faith, and charity, and holiness of her children, these being things not in her power to produce in them. And 3. What then shall become of barren women, and those that live and die virgins? To establish therefore the sense given in the text, let it be noted,

1. That this enallage numeri, or change of the number in words that comprehend all of the same kind, is very common both in the old, and the New Testament, and in profane authors: so Gen. 33. 13. Morientur totus grex. Gen. 41. 57. Universa terra venerunt, the whole land came into Egypt. Psal. 140. Grant not the desires of the wicked, further not his wicked devices, lest they exalt themselves. Prov. 2. 12. 13. The evil man, who leave the paths of uprightness. See Numb. 10. 3. 1 Kings 1. 40. 1 Chron. 10. 6. Ezra 10. 12. Psal. 68. 11. Esd. 25. 3. and 34. 10. Mark 3. 7. 8. And here, chap. 5. 4. γήρᾳ--μανθανέτωσαν, if any widow,—let them learn. Note,

2. That the preposition διὰ doth not always signify a means, or a condition, but sometimes a term to be passed through, as when it is said διὰ πολλων θλίψεων, Through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom of God, Acts 14. 22. He shall be saved διὰ πυρὸς, as one passing through the fire, 1 Cor. 3. 15. Let us behave ourselves as the ministers of God, passing inoffensively, διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀτιμίας, διὰ δυσφημίας, καὶ εὐφημίας, through honour and dishonour, through good and evil report, 2 Cor. 6. 8. in which sense we are said ambulare per viam, per plateam. But against the interpretation given in the paraphrase, it is objected, that the following words, If they continue in the faith, &c. cannot be mentioned here as a condition of their safe deliverance in childbed, since that deliverance is common to the believer and the Pagan, the charitable and temperate, and the uncharitable and intemperate, the chaste and the unchaste women.

Ans. Now, to this I answer, That this objection seems to be of no force against the sense here given; for though health, riches, a good name, and other temporal blessings, be common to the Pagan and believer, to the good and bad; that hinders not but godliness may be the promise of this life; as health, riches, a good name, and other outward blessings, are promised to those that fear God; it being sufficient to make good this promise, that God is pleased sometimes to vouchsafe this safe deliverance from the dangers of childbirth to women, by virtue of their trust in God, their charity to others, especially in the like condition; their temperance, sobriety, and chastity, as to the observation of the matrimonial vow, and that others may sometimes miscarry through the want or neglect of these duties. In a word, seeing it cannot be be denied, that theſe things are likely to engage God's providence to be with them in that needful hour, and the neglect of them may provoke him to abandon others, they muſt be deemed fit matter of a temporal promiſe.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. [a] THIS is a true ſaying, If a man deſire the office of a biſhop, he deſireth a good work, (i. e. a work that is honourable in itſelf, and ſo requires ſuch diſpoſitions and qualifications in the perſon who deſireth it, as may render him worthy of that honour.)

2. A biſhop then muſt be [b] blameleſs (i. e. free from juſt ground of blame), the [c] huſband of one wife, (i. e. not guilty of polygamy, or of divorcing one woman, and marrying another, as many of the Jews and Greeks then were), vigilant (in his function), ſober, (governing his paſſions), of good behaviour, (in words, in habit, or in aſpect), [d] given to hoſpitality, (or the entertainment of ſtrangers), apt to teach, (not ſo much for his eloquence, as for his ſkill in divine things, and knowledge of what is fitting to be taught. So Theodoret);

3. Not given to (much) wine, (ver. 9.), no ſtriker, nor greedy of filthy lucre, but [e] patient, not a brawler (or contentious perſon), not [f] covetous;

4. One that ruleth well (in) his own houſe, having his children in (due) ſubjection (and behaving himſelf in it) with all gravity.

5. For if a man know not how to rule (well in) his own houſe, how ſhall he (be able to) take care of the church of God? (which is a larger family, and ſo requires greater ſkill in government.)

6. [g] Not a novice (in religion), leſt being lifted up with pride, (ἐκ τῆς περηφανείας, by reaſon of his high advancement), he fall [h] into the condemnation of the devil.

7. Moreover, he muſt have a good report of them that are without, (i. e. the unbelieving Jew or Gentile, with whom he formerly converſed); leſt he fall into reproach (from them), and (into) the [i] ſnare of the devil.

8. Likewiſe muſt the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, (not fraudulent and deceitful, Chryſoſtom; not ſaying one thing to one, another to another, Theodoret), not given to much wine, nor greedy of filthy lucre, (i. e. of lucre gained by ſordid and filthy arts),

9. Holding the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience, (i. e. in a life ſo pure that conſcience may not ſmite him; for when a good conſcience is once put away, the loſs of faith will follow, chap. 1. 19.)

10. [k] And let theſe alſo firſt be proved, (by the examination of the ſoundneſs of their faith, and the purity of their former lives), and then let them (be admitted to) uſe the office of a deacon, being (thus) found blameleſs.

11. Even ſo muſt their [l] wives be (γυναῖκας ὡσαύτως, the women in like manner muſt be) grave, not ſlanderers, ſober, faithful in all things.

12. Let the deacons be the huſbands of one wife, (ſee ver. 2.), ruling their children, and their own houſes well.

13. For they that have uſed the office of a deacon well, (i. e. according to theſe rules, do by ſo doing) purchaſe to themſelves [m] a good degree, (or higher office in the church), and great [n] boldneſs in (preaching) the faith (which is) in Chriſt Jeſus.

14. Theſe things write I (now) unto thee, hoping to come to thee ſhortly, (and furniſh thee with other inſtructions, chap. 4. 13.):

15. [o] But if I tarry long, (they will be the more needful), that thou mayſt know how thou oughteſt to behave thyſelf in the houſe of God, which is the church of the living God, [p] the pillar and ground of truth.

16. And without controverſy (or confeſſedly) great is the myſtery of godlineſs: (conſiſting in theſe articles), [q] God was manifeſt in the fleſh, juſtified in (or by) the Spirit, ſeen of angels, preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] NOTE, concerning the import of the word biſhop here, I find three different opinions among the ancients, viz. that of Theodoret, That the apoſtle here calls the (k) preſbyter, biſhop, which he thus proves; becauſe after the rules preſcribed concerning biſhops, he deſcends to thoſe concerning deacons, omitting preſbyters; "Becauſe," ſaith he, "anciently the ſame perſons

" gave this name of biſhop peculiarly to them, who " anciently were ſtyled apoſtles. And though," ſaith he, " theſe rules are given to the preſbyters
" by name, it is clear that they more eminently be" longed to biſhops, ἅτε δὴ καὶ μείζονος μᾶλλον ἀξίας τιμῆς,
" as being of an higher dignity." And this opinion, if true, is a full confutation of the Preſbyterian hypotheſis; for it declares, that there were three diſtinct orders from the beginning of the church, apoſtles or biſhops, preſbyters, and deacons; and that the biſhops were of an higher dignity than the preſbyters.

2. The ſecond opinion is that of Epiphanius, That the (l) " apoſtles could not order all things at " one time, there being then a neceſſity of preſbyters
" and deacons, by both which eccleſiaſtical matters

" ſons worthy of it, but, by reaſon of the paucity
" of converts, found ſcarce any fit to be preſby-
" ters, they conſtituted only biſhops and deacons.
" And this account," ſaith he, " is taken ἐκ τῶν
" τότε ἱστοριῶν from the moſt ancient hiſtories
" of the church;" I ſuppoſe, from the known paſſage of Clemens Romanus to this effect. And this alſo yields a full confutation of the Preſbyterian hypotheſis; for it declares, That it was the deſign of the apoſtles to inſtitute three ſeveral orders in the church, viz. of biſhops, preſbyters, and deacons; and where this was not done, it was only through want of perſons fit to complete theſe orders, and only during that defect; and this being writ in anſwer to Aerius his hereſy, That (m) " a biſhop differed not from a preſbyter,
" they being both one order, dignity, and honour," ſhews that opinion was then counted not only falſe and novel, but heretical.

3. The third opinion is that of Chryſoſtom (n), Oecumenius (o), and Hilary (p) the Deacon, on the place, That the apoſtle includes preſbyters under the name of biſhops, becauſe there is no great difference between them, they being appointed, as well as biſhops, to teach, and to preſide over the church; and being only inferior to the biſhops, " as to the power " of ordination, which belongs alone to biſhops, and
" not to preſbyters." Now, even according to this opinion, " the biſhop is above the preſbyter;" and all ordinations which are not performed by the biſhop are irregular, and performed by them who have no power to ordain.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἀνεπίλημπτος, blameleſs.] For " the life
" of a biſhop," ſaith Chryſoſtom, " ſhould ſhine ſo
" bright, and be ſo free from ſpot, that others may
" not only behold it, but live by his example."

Ibid. [c] Μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἀνδρα, the huſband of one wife:] For " the Jews and Greeks," ſaith Theodoret (q), " were wont to be married to two or three wives " together." The apoſtle, therefore, doth not ſay this to depreciate ſecond marriages, which he elſewhere allows, 1 Cor. 7. 8. 39. and from which it may not be in a man's power to abſtain. If then a man, τὴν προτέραν ἐκβαλών, ἑτέρᾳ συνεζύχθαι, rejecting his former wife, be joined to another, he deſerveth blame; but if death have diſjoined him from his former, and nature, urging, doth neceſſitate him to take another, it is otherwiſe. Conſidering theſe and other things, I approve of this interpretation of ſome of the ancients, which is alſo mentioned by St Jerom (r), and by Chryſoſtom, declaring, that the apoſtle doth not here oblige the biſhop to be married, but only corrects the immoderateneſs of ſome; becauſe, among the Jews, it was lawful both to marry twice, καὶ δύο ἔχειν καὶ τρεῖς γυναῖκας, and to have two wives together; and it was more common with them to divorce one, and take another. And whereas againſt this interpretation, it is objected, That the apoſtle requires alſo, that the widow ſhould be the wife of one huſband, whereas it never was permitted among any but barbarians, for women to have more than one huſband at once; this objection hath ſome ſtrength againſt the interpreting that paſſage of polygamy, but none againſt that interpretation which relates to marriage after diſmiſſion of the former

huſband; the law allowing this in Greece, and the practice having made it common among the Romans, and not unuſual among the Jews; ſee note on chap. 5. 9. Origen (s) ſeems plainly to inſinnate, that this law, in the ſtrict ſenſe, ſeems harſh and unreaſonable, ſince he that hath a wife might loſe her in his youth, and ſo have need of a ſecond; and this law allowed the biſhop to enjoy his firſt wife even to old age, εἰ ὅτι μηδὲ γυμνασάμενον εἰς ἁγνείαν, καὶ σωφροσύνην, though he never exerciſed himſelf to chaſtity and continence, and therefore he thinks fit to interpret theſe words by analogy to the bill of divorce, plainly declaring againſt the church of Rome, that neither biſhop, prieſt, nor deacon, of whom there he ſpeaks, were either by ſcripture, or the laws of the church, reſtrained from cohabiting with their wives, after their promotion to thoſe orders: ſee the confirmation of our expoſition in Suicerus, vocibus διγαμία, et δίγαμος.

Ibid. [d] Φιλόξενον, given to hoſpitality.] Not in our common ſenſe, of keeping a good table, or an open houſe, for all comers; but, τὸν ὑποδημοῦντας ὑποδεχόμενον, an entertainer of ſtrangers, as the fathers ſay, and the word φιλόξενος ſignifies.

Ver. 3. [e] Ἐπιεικῆ, patient, or gentle.] i. e. ſaith Theodoret, in reference to offences committed againſt himſelf; for it is no part of meekneſs or patience, when others are injured, to overlook the injury.

Ibid. [f] Ἀφιλάργυρον, Nor covetous, or a lover of money.] Theodoret here notes, that the apoſtle doth not ſay, he muſt be ἀκτήμονα, one who poſſeſſeth none; for a man may poſſeſs theſe things, and yet diſtribute them as he ought, ſo as not to be a ſlave to them, but a lord over them.

Ibid. Μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ.] Theſe words, ſaith Dr Mills, crept into the text, from Tit. 1. 7. whereas they are found in Chryſoſtom, and Oecumenius, Cod. Alex. and St Baſil, tom. 2. p. 416. 417. and are fully confirmed from the words following, διακόνους ὡσαύτως μὴ αἰσχροκερδεῖς; and from Tit. 1. 7. where St Paul treats of the ſame ſubject.

Ver. 6. [g] Μὴ νεόφυτον, not a novice.] This, ſay Chryſoſtom and Theodoret, is not ſpoken with reſpect to age; for Timothy himſelf, to whom he writes, was a youth, chap. 4. 12. but in reſpect to his knowledge of the faith.

Ibid. Εἰς κρῖμα τοῦ διαβόλου.] That the devil fell by pride, Theodoret here notes: but yet both he and Chryſoſtom ſay, that by condemnation here the apoſtle means not his ſin, but his puniſhment for it.

Ver. 7. [h] Καὶ παγίδα Διαβόλου, and the ſnare of the devil;] i. e. ſaith Theodoret, leſt being tempted by Satan, he relapſe into his former ſins; or, leſt being reproached by thoſe he is ſet over, for his former life, Satan tempt him to apoſtaſy, chap. 5. 15.

Ver. 10. [i] Δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον κἀν οὗτοι, and let theſe be firſt proved.] Theſe words, κἀν οὗτοι, ſhew that this trial belonged alſo to the higher orders; and ſo it ſeems to have been from the beginning, where the Holy Ghoſt did not immediately interpoſe in deſignation of the perſon. The Emperor Severus (t) takes notice of it, as of "a practice obſerved both "by Jews and Chriſtians, in order to the ordina-"tion of their prieſts, and fit to be imitated in "chuſing a rector, or procurator of the provinces "ſubject to the Roman government." The epiſtles of St Cyprian (u) make frequent mention of this practice obſerved in the church, in imitation of the Jews. "This," ſaith he, "was obſerved in the "Acts of the apoſtles, in the ordination both of bi-"ſhops, prieſts, and deacons: and therefore this," ſaith he, "is derived from a divine and apoſtolical "tradition, obſerved almoſt throughout all pro-"vinces, that the biſhops of that province where "the biſhop is to be placed, ſhould come thither and "chuſe the biſhop, the people being preſent, who "were acquainted with his life and converſation."

Ibid. ᵘ Παῤῥησίαν, boldness, or freedom.] The deacons sometimes preached, and converted men to the faith, as St Stephen, and Philip; and this they could more freely, and more successfully perform, when they lived suitably to the qualifications of their function, and to the rules of the gospel they professed and taught.

Ver. 15 ° Ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω, but if I tarry long.] Here Theodoret well notes, That neither the holy prophets, nor apostles, knew all things, the grace of the Spirit dictating to them only the things which were expedient; as appears from these expressions, Hoping to come shortly, and, but if I tarry.

Ibid. ᵖ Στῦλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, the pillar and the ground of truth.] Here, say the Romanists, the church is styled, The pillar and the ground of truth, surely from her teachers being so; they being elsewhere styled pillars, Gal. 2. 9. and foundations, Eph. 2. 20. Now, say they, may not all securely rely, in their faith, on the pillar of truth? May they not securely ground their faith upon the ground of truth? The church therefore being the pillar and the ground of truth, we may, without fear of ever erring, rely upon her.

Ans. 1. Whereas the objection represents it as certain, that the church is here styled the pillar and ground of truth, in respect of its teachers; the text seems clearly to intimate the contrary: for whether we supply the sense of the words thus, πῶς δεῖ (σε), how thou oughtest; or, with Theophylact, πῶς δεῖ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον, how a bishop ought to behave himself in the house of God, which is the church, it is evident, that the (y) church here mentioned, is put in opposition to the bishop of it, and is, according to Theodoret on the place, σύλλογος τῶν πιστευόντων, the collection of believers; and therefore not the church representative, which is only σύλλογος τῶν ἐπισκόπων, an assembly of bishops, according to the doctrine of the church of Rome; and therefore the infallibility of the church representative can never be concluded from these words, which so expressly do relate to the whole system of believers, in distinction from their bishops.

Ans. 2. The church here is the church of the living God; not as it comprehends the major part of her visible members, but only as it comprehends the true and living members of Christ's body, they being only the church of the living God; so that we must first know who they are, before we can be guided by them. Now, because this is impossible to be known with any assurance, it is impossible that we should be obliged to rely on their judgment in deciding what is truth.

Ans. 3. There is nothing more common, in the language of the writers of the church, than to style any eminent father of the church, or assertor of her faith, the pillar and the ground of faith. This title is, by St Basil (z), given to Musonius, bishop of Cæsarea, to Athanasius, and to the orthodox bishops banished for the truth; by Nazianzen (a), to Basil, to Athanasius, and to Eusebius bishop of Samosata; by Lanfranc, and Rupertus Tuitiensis, it is given to St Austin; and yet sure they were far from thinking, that any of these single fathers were infallible. Whence it must follow, that, according to the judgment of the church, this phrase did not import infallibility.

Ans. 4. The church cannot here be styled the pillar and the ground of truth, as being the foundation on which truth is built, and which giveth it authority; truth being, saith St Chrysostom (b), τῆς ἐκκλησίας καὶ στύλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα, the pillar and the ground of the church, which is, saith the apostle, built on the foundation of the apostles and the prophets, Eph. 2. 19. 20. She therefore is the church of Christ, because she holds the truth, as is demonstrative from this, That purely ceasing to do so, her members cease to be the members of the church: she therefore cannot by me be known to be the church, until I know she holds the truth, and doth not cease to make profession of it: and when I first know this, what need have I of her infallible direction to find out the truth? She therefore may be rather said to be the pillar and the ground of truth, because it is essential to her being, to maintain and teach all necessary truths; and because her living members do, and will maintain them, when concealed, denied, misrepresented by hypocritical professors; and because she doth preserve and own those oracles in which the saving truth of Christ is fully and perspicuously maintained, and doth baptize her children into that symbol, which was always held to be a perfect summary of Christian faith.

Lastly, The church of that age might well be said to be the pillar and the ground of truth, because then the apostles presided in it, who were the pillars and foundations of the Christian faith, according to the scriptures, and the ancient fathers. Thus Theodoret (c) styles St Peter and St John, τοὺς στύλους τῆς ἀληθείας, the pillars of truth; and Oecumenius (d), στύλους τῆς πίστεως, i. e. the pillars of the faith. Then also did the apostles and evangelists deliver, and the church receive, those scriptures which were to be the ſtandard of the Chriſtian faith, and which were written, ſaith Irenæus (e), "by the will of God, to be "hereafter columnam et fundamentum fidei noſtræ, "the pillar and foundation of our faith:" and which are, ſaith Athanaſius (f), τῆς πίστως ἡμῶν ἀσφαλεῖς καὶ ἐρείσματα, the anchors and ſtabiliments of our faith. Then did her members confirm the Chriſtian faith by miracles, which, by St Hilary (g) upon this place, are ſtyled, The confirmation of this truth; and by their ſufferings for it: on which account the martyrs are peculiarly ſtyled by the fathers, The ſteady pillars, and the grounds of Chriſtians. Now, ſeeing none of theſe reaſons can be applied to the preſent church, it will not follow, that ſhe can, in like manner, claim this title.

Ver. 16. Θεὸς ἐφανερώθη, God was manifeſted in the fleſh.] Here Grotius ſaith, Suſpectam nobis hanc lectionem faciunt interpretes veteres, Latinus, Syrus, Arabs, et Ambroſius, qui omnes legunt, ὃ ἐφανερώθη, i. e. "The Latin, Syriac, Arabic verſions, and St "Ambroſe, all read, The myſtery which was revealed "in the fleſh; which gives us reaſon to ſuſpect the o- "ther reading, viz. God manifeſted in the fleſh." But, 1. This is a great miſtake as to the Arabic verſion; for that reads thus, Quod Deus, that God was manifeſted in the fleſh; and ſo doth the Syriac, according to the verſion of Tremellius: in the Polyglot it runs thus, Magnum eſt arcanum juſtitiæ, quod juſtificatus eſt carne; which cannot refer to myſtery, but muſt refer to God or Chriſt: and though the vulgar Latin, and the commentator under the name of Ambroſe, read, quod manifeſtum eſt in carne; yet he adds, agreeably to the opinion of the Latins, that this myſtery is Chriſtus in carne, Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh, but concealed in the ſpirit, or as to his Godhead. See Dr Pearſon's vindication of this place againſt Grotius, Creed, p. 128. In a word, the reading which our tranſlation follows, is owned by all the Greek ſcholiaſts, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, and is found in all the manuſcripts, excepting that of Clermont and Lincoln college; and the phraſes here uſed do make it neceſſary to expound the words, not of the goſpel, but of Chriſt, the ſubject of it. For,

1. That expoſition which refers theſe words unto the goſpel, puts ſuch a ſtrained ſenſe on ſome of theſe expreſſions, of which we meet with no example in the whole New Teſtament: for where doth manifeſtation in the fleſh ſignify the manifeſtation of a thing by weak and mortal men? And where is the goſpel ſaid to be manifeſted in the fleſh? Where doth ἀνελήφθη ſignify the exaltation of the goſpel? Or where is it ſaid, That the goſpel was received into glory?

2. It turns many of thoſe expreſſions into a metaphorical ſenſe, which are literally true of Chriſt: for, according to this expoſition, fleſh ſignifies weak men; to be juſtified, to be owned and approved; to be ſeen is to be known, or revealed; to be taken up, is to be exalted in the minds of men.

3. This ſtrained expoſition reduces three of theſe articles into one; it being, in effect, the ſame, To be believed on in the world, by reaſon of thoſe glorious miracles by which it was confirmed; and, To be owned and approved, by reaſon of the operations of the Holy Spirit, which did aſſiſt the preachers of it, and, by that approbation, glorioufly exalted in the minds of men.

Theſe are the inconveniencies which attend that expoſition; whereas the other interpretation, which refers this myſtery to Chriſt, affords a very plain and literal expoſition of the words, confirmed by parallel expreſſions frequent in the holy ſcripture. For,

1. The word, ſaith St John, was made fleſh, and dwelt among us, John 1. 14. and we have ſeen his glory. Ἐφανερώθη, he was manifeſted, 1 John 3. 5. 8. 1. 4. 2. and came in the fleſh, who was the Son of God. He who was in the form of God, and thought it no robbery to be equal with God, was found in the likeneſs of a man, Phil. 2. 6. 7. He that was God bleſſed for evermore, was alſo of the ſeed of David, according to the fleſh, Rom. 9. 5.

2. He was juſtified by the ſpirit, as doing thoſe miracles on earth, by which he juſtified his miſſion againſt all the accuſations of the Jews, by the Spirit of God, Matth. 12. 28. being declared to be the Son of God with power, by the Spirit of Holineſs, Rom. 1. 3. 4.; by ſending that Spirit after his aſcenſion into heaven, Acts 2. 33. which he had promiſed to his diſciples upon earth, and by which the world was convinced, περὶ δικαιοσύνης, of his righteouſneſs, John 16. 10.

3. He was ſeen of the angels, who, at his entrance into the world, did worſhip him, Heb. 1. 6. who celebrated his birth, and gave notice of it to the world, Luke 2. 9. 13.; who miniſtered to him in the deſert, Matth. 4. 11. and in his agonies, Luke 22. 43. and 24. 4. who were preſent at his reſurrection, and attended him at his aſcenſion into heaven, Acts 1. 10.

4. The whole hiſtory of the goſpel ſhews, that he was preached to the Gentiles, and believed on in the world.

5. And laſtly, He was received up into heaven, ἀνεφέρετο, ἀνήφθη, ἀνελήφθη, he was taken, he was carried up into heaven, and ſat at the right hand of Ma-

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. NOW (but though the mystery of godliness be so fully confirmed) [a] the Spirit (in the scripture) speaketh expressly, that [b] in the latter times [c] some shall depart from the faith (once embraced by them), [d] giving heed to seducing spirits, and [e] doctrines of devils.

2. Speaking lies in [f] hypocrisy, (Gr. ἐν ὑποκρίσει ψευδολόγων, through the hypocrisy of liars, and of men) having their consciences seared with an hot iron, (i. e. of corrupt and profligated consciences);

3. (Of men) [g] forbidding (those whom they have seduced) to marry, and (commanding them) to [h] abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them that believe, and know the truth, (i. e. who are instructed aright in their Christian liberty; for though nothing be unclean of itself, yet to him who through weakness esteemeth any thing unclean, to him it is unclean, Rom. 14. 14.)

4. For every creature of God is good (for food), and nothing (is) to be refused (as polluted), if it be (Gr. being) received with thanksgiving.

5. For it is [i] sanctified by the word of God, (giving us commission to eat of all things, Gen. 9. 2. 3. or by the gospel, taking off the difference betwixt things clean and unclean, Rom. 14. 14.), and (by) prayer, (for a blessing on it, and thanksgiving for it.)

6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, (to preserve them from these impostors), thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up in the words of faith, and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained, (or which thou hast followed hitherto.)

7. But refuse (avoid) profane and old wives fables, (such as the Jewish doctors tell, chap. 1. 4. 6. Tit. 1. 14. and 3. 9.), and exercise thyself rather (in those things which tend, not as they do, to endless questions and law strifes, and the perversion of the faith, but) unto godliness.

8. For [k] bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable to all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

9. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, (a truth most worthy to be relied on, viz. That godliness hath the promise of that life which is to come.)

10. For therefore we both labour, and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, [l] who is the saviour of all men, especially of those that believe.

11. These things command (Gr. exhort), and teach (men to believe.)

12. Let no man (have occasion to) despise [m] thy youth, (or thy function by reason of it); but be thou an example of (and to) believers, in word (of doctrine), in (gravity of) conversation, in charity (to all), in (fervency of) spirit, in faith, in purity (of life.)

13. [n] Till I come (to thee) give attendance to reading (the holy scriptures, whence thou mayst learn to teach others); to exhortation (to what they ought to do, and to avoid); to doctrine, (teaching them what to believe.)

14. Neglect not (to stir up) the gift that is in thee, (see note on 2 Tim. 1. 6), which was given thee by prophecy, (according to the forgoing prophesies concerning thee; see note 1 Tim. 1. 18.) [o] with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.

15. Meditate on these things, (which thou readest in the holy scriptures, and in which thou instructest others, ver. 15.); give thyself wholly to them, (to exhortation and doctrine, ver. 11. 12.), that (so thou mayst perform them with such readiness and exactness, that) thy profiting may appear unto all.

16. Take heed to thyself, (that thou livest exemplarily, ver. 12.), and to thy doctrine, (that it be sound and edifying, ver. 6.); continue in them, (in the exercises mentioned, ver. 12. 13.), for in doing this, thou shalt both save thyself, (by doing faithfully thy duty), and them that hear thee, (by engaging them to perform theirs.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verse 1. [a] Τὸ πνεῦμα ῥητῶς λέγει, the spirit saith expressly.] Hence Mr Mede concludes, that the apostle must refer to some prophecy of these things recorded in the the scriptures; for though the Spirit in the apostles advertised them of many things, viz. The Spirit said to Peter, Behold, three men seek thee, Acts 10. 19. The Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work of the ministry, Acts 13. 2. (See Acts 16. 6. and 21. 11.); yet he did this only, ἐν ὁράματι, in a vision, Acts 10. 19. or by secret inspirations, (and so not ῥητῶς, expressly). But to this the fathers answer, That the word ῥητῶς here signifies only φανερῶς, σαφῶς, clearly, and perspicuously; to which it may be added, that in thoſe times of prophecy, when the prophets had the government of the churches, and ſpake ſtill in the public aſſemblies, it might reaſonably be ſaid, The Spirit ſpeaketh expreſsly, what they taught expreſsly in the church. And whereas hence he infers, that this prophecy muſt be found ſomewhere in the Old Teſtament; the Rev. Dr Hammond thinks that unneceſſary, this apoſtaſy being foretold by our prophet, who had the Spirit without meaſure, ſaying, Matth. 24. 11. 12. Then many ſhall be ſcandalized, and many falſe prophets ſhall ariſe, καὶ πλανήσουσι, and ſhall deceive many; and becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold. I confeſs, Mr Mede ſeems to have found this prophecy, Daniel 11. 36. 37. 38. 39. But to omit all other objections againſt his interpretation of the words, I can by no means think, that Daniel, ſo well acquainted with the import of ſtrange gods, both in the law and the prophets, ſhould give that infamous name, Heloah Nechar, a ſtrange God, to our bleſſed Saviour; or that he ſhould at the ſame time propheſy, that antichriſt ſhould acknowledge and increaſe Chriſt with honour, and yet diveſt Chriſt of his glory and honour, by ſetting up Mahuzzims in oppoſition to his offices. But conſidering that this epiſtle, according to Biſhop Pearſon, was writ in the 11th of Nero, A. D. 64, why may we not refer this prediction, either to the apoſtaſy, ῥητῶς, expreſsly mentioned, 2 Theſſ. 2. 3. 9. or to the predictions of the apoſtles mentioned by St Jude, ver. 17. 18. 19.?

Ibid. ὁ Ἐν ὑστέροις καιροῖς, in the latter times.] The Jewiſh doctors lay this down as a rule, That whereever we find this phraſe, באחרית הימים in the latter days, we are to underſtand it of the age or times of the Meſſiah: ſo Gen. 49. 1. Gather yourſelves together, ſaith Jacob to his ſons, that I may tell you what will befal you ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν ἡμερῶν, in the laſt times, i. e. the days when the ſceptre ſhall depart from Judah, and Shiloh the Meſſiah ſhall come, Numb. 24. 14. Come, ſaith Balaam, and I will tell thee what ſhall befal thy people ἐπ' ἐσχάτῳ τῶν ἡμερῶν, in the latter days, i. e. when the ſtar comes out of Jacob, and the ſceptre ariſeth out of Iſrael, i. e. when the Meſſiah comes, ſaith the Targum of Onkelos, on ver. 17. Iſ. 2. 2 In the laſt days the mountain of the Lord ſhall be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, and all nations ſhall flow into it: In the times of the Meſſiah, ſay R. Salomon, and other Jews. Jer. 23. 20. In the latter days ye ſhall underſtand this; in the days of the Meſſiah, Targum on ver. 5. Daniel 2. 28. There is a God of heaven who maketh known to the king, what ſhall come to paſs ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν ἡμερῶν, from his times till the kingdom of the Meſſiah be ſet up, ver. 44. See alſo chap. 10. 14. Hoſea 3. 5. Afterwards they ſhall return, and ſhall ſeek the Lord, and David their king; Targ. Meſſiah their king, the ſon of David, in the latter days. Micah 4. 1. In the laſt days ſhall the mountain of the Lord be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains; where Dr Pocock ſaith, "That "by the laſt days are meant, the days or times of "the Meſſiah or Chriſt, is agreed on by ſome Jews, "and moſt Chriſtians." And where-ever we meet with this phraſe in the New Teſtament, it manifeſtly refers to the beginnings of Chriſtianity, and ſignifies the laſt times of the Jewiſh ſtate or œconomy, concurring with the times of the Meſſiah, and the erecting of his kingdom, by calling the Gentiles, and ſettling a Chriſtian church, to ſucceed that of the Jews. Thus when the Holy Ghoſt fell down on the apoſtles and diſciples, This is that, ſaith St Peter, which was ſpoken of by the prophet Joel, ſaying, In the laſt days I will pour my ſpirit upon all fleſh, Acts 2. 17. So Heb. 1. 1. God who of old ſpake to our fathers by the prophets, ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν χρόνων, in theſe laſt days hath ſpoken to us by his Son, i. e. by him who, ſaith St Peter, was foreordained from the beginning of the world, but was manifeſted ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν χρόνων, in the laſt times; where the times of Chriſt's manifeſtation to the world, and of his preaching to the Jews, are manifeſtly ſtyled the laſt times. So James 5. 3. You have treaſured up your gold and ſilver, as fire which ſhall eat your fleſh, ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, in the laſt days, 2 Pet. 3. 3. This know ye, ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν, in the laſt times there ſhall come mockers, &c. and that they were then come, we learn from ver. 5. This they are ignorant of; and Jude 17. 18. Remember the words ſpoken before by the apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that they ſaid unto you, that ἐν ἐσχάτῳ χρόνῳ, in the laſt time there ſhould be mockers, walking after their own luſts: And that they were then come, is evident from the following words, Theſe are they who ſeparate themſelves, &c. ver. 19. And, 1 John 2. 18. Little children, ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστί, it is now the laſt hour; and as you have heard, that antichriſt ſhall (then) come, ſo now there are many antichriſts, whereby you may know, that this is the laſt hour; ſo, 2 Tim. 3. 1. 2. This know, that in the laſt days, ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, there ſhall be perilous times; for men ſhall be lovers of themſelves; and that thoſe times, or days, and perſons were then come, is evident from his exhortation, to turn away from them, ver. 5. and his character of them, ver. 6. ἐκ τούτων, Of theſe are they that creep into houſes, &c. And that the laſt times here mentioned, were already come, we learn from his admonition to Timothy, to put the brethren in mind of theſe things, ver. 4. Here, then, is another defect in Mr Mede's ingenious interpretation of theſe words, that he hath not made it out, that the laſt times are to be extended beyond the firſt century, or the age of the apoſtles. Mr Mede ſaith, theſe these words are " not a narration of things present, " but a prediction of what shall betide the Christian " faith in after-times. I answer, they are, indeed, a narrative of what the Spirit had foretold should happen in the latter times, by an apostasy from the faith; but the determination of the time, when what was thus foretold should be accomplished, depends on the fixed import of the latter times: for these last times, saith Mr Mede, being mentioned as the indication when this apostasy should take place, must therefore be sufficient to determine the time of this apostasy: and so they plainly do, according to my interpretation. But if, with others, you refer these last times to the whole times of antichrist; they began not till above 400 years after the writing of this epistle; and why then is the apostle so concerned, that Timothy then should put the brethren in remembrance of these things, ver. 6.? And they contain 1260 years; and so cannot inform us in what period, or precise portion of that time, this apostasy should have its rise.

Ibid. [c] Ἀποστήσονται τινες τῆς πίστεως, some shall depart from the faith.] Here seems another defect of Mr Mede's hypothesis, that he makes these words to signify only a partial declining from the faith, and that again only virtual and consequential, by setting up doctrines opposite to, or inconsistent with it, though not owned to be so by them that embrace them; whereas apostasy from the faith seems plainly to import a falling off from it wholly, or at least an actual and professed renouncing of some essential part of it.

Ibid. [d] Προσέχοντες πνεύμασι πλάνοις, καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων, giving heed to seducing spirits, and to doctrines of devils.] These words, by all the ancient commentators, seem to be taken actively for those doctrines which are introduced by men, led by the suggestions of Satan, and of evil spirits; these doctrines being, saith Theodoret, ἐκείνων κυήματα, the productions of those evil spirits; and they who vent them, are, saith Chrysostom, οἱ ὑπ' ἐκείνων ἐνεργούμενοι, men acted by them. The false prophets and false apostles, saith the author of the interpolated epistle to the Philadelphians, had λαοπλάνον πνεῦμα, (§ 5.), a spirit that deceived the people; they preached ἀπάτην καὶ πλάνην, deceit and error, and had dwelling in them, τὸν δράκοντα τὸν ἀποστάτην, the apostate dragon. These false prophets had, saith St John, πνεῦμα τῆς πλάνης, a spirit of error; as the apostles had πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας, the spirit of truth, 1 John 4. 1. 6. So far it is from being true, that the word spirit signifies doctrines, and not those deluding spirits which taught them: yet because the prince of devils, Matth. 9. 34. the spirit of the devil, Luke 4. 33.; Rev. 16. 14. the sacrifice, the table, the cup of devils, 1 Cor. 10. 20. 21. the habitation of devils, Rev. 18. 2. are phrases where δαιμόνια, devils, are still taken objectively, I admit that sense also here; and then the apostasy procured by the spirits of deceit, is that of the Judaizers, relapsing from the profession of the Christian faith, through those false Christs, and false prophets, of which our Saviour foretold they should deceive many, Matth. 24. 11. 24. whereas they who apostatized by falling back to Heathenism, are they who give heed to the doctrines of dæmons: for dii gentium dæmonia, the Gods of the Heathens are dæmons.

Ver. 2. [e] Ἐν ὑποκρίσει ψευδολόγων, Through the hypocrisy of false-speakers.] Ἐν pro διὰ, through, is very common; so ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ ἀδικίας, through all deceiveableness of unrighteousness, 2 Thess. 2. 9. 10. See Mark 9. 29.; Luke 1. 17.; Acts 17. 31.; Rom. 12. 21.; Tit. 1. 9.; 2 Pet. 3. 1. Κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν συνείδησιν, of seared consciences, i. e. of consciences which have lost the sense of good or evil, and do no longer do their office; for this expression, saith Theodoret, signifies τὴν ἐσχάτην αὐτῶν ἀναλγησίαν, the extreme stupor of their consciences; for the member seared, νεκρωθὲν τὴν προτέραν αἴσθησιν ἀπεβάλλει, being mortified, hath lost its former sensation.

Ver. 3. [f] Κωλυόντων γαμεῖν, ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats.] It is here to be noted from Theophylact, that in construing these words, ἐκ ἐφύλαξε ἀπὸ κοινοῦ λαβεῖν τὸ κωλυόντων, ἀλλ' ἔξωθεν προσθεῖναι τὸ συμβουλεύοντων ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, We must not repeat the word forbidding, but add in lieu of it, counselling to abstain from meats: So all the ancients have interpreted these words of Clemens Alexandrinus (h), when he saith, οὐ κωλυτέον γαμεῖν, οὐδὲ μὴν κρεωφαγεῖν, we must not forbid to marry, nor yet to eat flesh. The apostle, saith Tertullian (i), notes them who wholly forbade marriage, and interdicted meats. And Epiphanus (k) saith, This of the apostle is fulfilled in the Cataphrygæ, and other heretics; for most of them, τῷ γαμεῖν κωλύσει, ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων παραγγέλλουσι, forbid marriage, and command to abstain from meats. This, in effect, is the interpretation of all the ancient commentators on the place, who give us the same sense of the words, as do the fathers cited; and of all the translations, which, though they do not add the word commanding, yet they add a copulative, and change the infinitive into a participle, thus, prohibentes nubere, et abstinentes a cibis, Syr. Prohiben- tes matrimonium, et amoventes cibos. Arab. And Bochart gives us inſtances of the like nature from the Old Teſtament, viz. Gen. 31. 40. By the heat of the day was I burnt, and by the froſt of the night, (obrigeſcebam) I waxed ſtiff with cold. Pſal. 121. 6. The ſun ſhall not burn thee by day, nor the moon (refrigerate thee) by night. So, Luke 13. 9. If it bring forth fruit (it ſhall ſtand); if not, thou ſhalt cut it down.

That all theſe things happened in the apoſtles times, and many of them were to happen before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, is evident; that there was to be a great apoſtaſy before that time, carried on by falſe prophets, and falſe Chriſts, our Lord expreſsly had foretold; and that in great meaſure it had obtained, eſpecially among the Jews, we learn from the epiſtle to the Hebrews, writ purpoſely to put a ſtop to it; that the great promoters of it were deceitful workers, falſe apoſtles, and that they carried on that work in hypocriſy, eſteeming gain godlineſs, this apoſtle doth often inform us; ſee 2 Cor. ii. 17. and 11. 13. 14. 15. That they were men whoſe minds and conſciences were defiled, ſee Tit. 1. 15. That their doctrine was this, It is good for a man not to touch a woman, 1 Cor. vii. 1. Their vain philoſophy this, Taſte not (forbidden meats), handle not (an unclean thing); ſee Coloſſ. 2. 21. It remains only to conſider who they ſhould be. That they could not be the Gnoſtics, the followers of Simon Magus, I have proved againſt Dr Hammond, note on Col. 2. 21. Moreover, according to his expoſition, they were to appear before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; for he interprets theſe words, The Spirit ſpeaketh expreſsly, of our Lord's prediction, Matth. 24. Now, there were no ſuch heretics among the Gnoſtics till the ſecond century. "Saturninus," ſaith Theodoret (l), "was the firſt who named matrimony the doctrine of devils, and taught men to abſtain from living creatures." Now, this Saturninus was before Baſilides (m), who, by St Jerom (n), is often called, "The father of the Gnoſtics:" whereas, that theſe men were in the apoſtles times, we learn, ſaith Tertullian (o), from the apoſtles themſelves. I have noted on 1 Cor. 7. 1. and on Col. 2. 21. conjectured, that they were the Eſſenes among the Jews; and that with them agreed the magicians and idolaters among the Heathens, we learn from Clemens of Alexandria, who ſpeaking of thoſe heretics, who ſaid, "the reſurrection had paſſed on them already, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο ἀθετοῦσι τὸν γάμον, and therefore rejected matrimony," he ſaith this was not peculiar to theſe Menandrians (p), "but they who worſhipped idols, did alſo abſtain from meats and venery; and the magicians who worſhipped angels and dæmons, did alſo carefully abſtain from wine, from living creatures, and from venery."

And if Saturninus, who ſucceeded Menander, who flouriſhed in the time of Domitian and Trajan, did in this, as in moſt other things, τὰ αὐτὰ τῷ Μενάνδρῳ ψευδολογῆσαι, agree in ſentiments with Menander, as Euſebius (q) ſaith he did, the apoſtle may reaſonably be conceived to include him: for Epiphanius ſaith of him, in the very words of Irenæus (r), that "(s) he affirmed, that to marry and beget children was from Satan, and that hence many of them abſtained from living creatures, and by this feigned continence ſeduced many to their hereſy." And this is the more likely, becauſe it is noted of this Menander, that he proceeded εἰς ἄκρον τῆς μαγίας, to the height of that magic, which was attended with that abſtinence, Iren. l. 1. c. 21. Euſeb. h. eccl. l. 3. c. 26. It is no objection againſt this interpretation, that the Eſſenes mentioned by Philo and Joſephus were not Chriſtians, and ſo could not depart from the faith: for who can prove that none of them embraced the faith of Chriſt, or that they could not do it, and yet retain their old ſentiments concerning meats and marriage? It may be alſo true, that the Menandrians were not yet formed into a ſect when this epiſtle was indited; but that affects not my interpretation, ſince it is certain from 1 Cor. 7. 1. and Col. 2. 16. 1. ſee the notes there, that their doctrines obtained before. And that the perſons here intended muſt be Judaiſers, is fairly gathered from ver. 7. and from theſe words, commanding to abſtain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thankſgiving of them that believe and know the truth; truth; for those last words shew, that these persons were such as had no faith or knowledge of that Christian truth, that every creature of God was good (for food), and nothing was to be refused as polluted or unclean, ver. 4. Add to this, that Dr Lightfoot, note on Acts 15. 20. quotes this passage from Bava Bathra, fol. 602. viz. that "when the temple was "destroyed the second time, the Pharisees (i. e. se- "paratists) were greatly multiplied in Israel, who "taught, that it was not lawful to eat flesh, or to "drink wine;" and a little after say, "It is but just "that we should ordain among ourselves not to "marry wives, nor beget children." And if these Pharisees then espoused these tenets, they may be the persons here noted by the apostle. Thus have I given my own opinion concerning the true and primary import of these words. Others, I know, conceive, that they refer to the apostasy of the church of Rome, and therefore descant on them thus:

Ver. 1. But (in opposition to this mystery of godliness, mentioned, chap. 3. 15. 16. there is another mystery of iniquity, of which) the Spirit speaketh expressly, (Dan. 11. 36. 37. 38. 39. saying), that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to erroneous spirits, and doctrines of devils.

1. [s] Ἐν ὑστέροις, in the latter days;] that is, in the times of antichrist, 1 John 2. 18. Dan. 2. 44.; see Hos. 3. 5. Mic. 4. 1.

Ibid. [t] Ἀποστήσονται τῆς πίστεως, some shall depart from the faith.] Idolatry being represented in the Old Testament as apostasy from the law of Moses, and the God of Israel, the like idolatry in the church of Rome may well be counted an apostasy from the Christian faith.

Ibid. [u] Προσέχοντες πνεύμασι πλάνοις, giving heed to seducing spirits;] i. e. men acted by seducing spirits; for πνεύματα doth often signify the impulses or afflatuses of good or evil spirits; of good, so 1 Cor. 14. 12. You are zealous πνευμάτων, of spiritual gifts, or afflatuses, and so throughout the chapter; of evil spirits, as 1 John 4. 1. Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits. Accordingly the coming of the man of sin is to be κατ' ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Σατανᾶ, according to the energy of Satan, with all lying wonders, 2 Thess. 2. 9. So was the idolatrous worship of the Gentiles promoted, say Tertullian (t), Eusebius (u), and St Chrysostom (x); so also was the worship of saints promoted in the church of Rome; see Mr Mede, l. 3. c. 3. 4.

Ibid. [x] Καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων, and to doctrines of devils;] i. e. to the Heathen theology concerning dæmons, or giving heed to the doctrine concerning the worship of dead men, or departed saints, brought in by their pretended apparitions, and wonders wrought at their tombs after death, which were indeed, if at all done, wrought by the illusions of devils.

Ver. 2. Ἐν ὑποκρίσει, which apostasy shall be promoted] by the hypocrisy of liars, which have their conscience seared.

[1] Through the hypocrisy, &c.] Hence it is argued, that they who thus promote and carry on this apostasy, must not be open deserters, but hypocritical professors of that faith, from which they by their actions virtually depart.

Ver. 3. And the men I speak of may be discerned by these marks, that they are] of those who forbid to marry, and command to abstain from meats which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

Ibid. [y] Κωλυόντων γαμεῖν, forbidding to marry;] as is done in the Roman church to monks and nuns, see Mr Mede, l. 3. c. 7. and to the clergy; and that, saith Pope Siricius, Quoniam qui in carne sunt, Deo placere non possunt: "Because they that are in the "flesh cannot please God."

Ibid. [z] Ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, to abstain from meats.] That this is done in the Roman church by a law obliging some orders of monks to abstain from all flesh, see Mr Mede, ibid. And this may well be reckoned as a character of apostasy from the Christian faith, because it seems to be a reducing of them back from their Christian liberty to a conformity to the legal rites.

Ver. 5. [a] Ἁγιάζεται, it is sanctified.] So the Jews from these words, Psal. 134. 2. Lift up your hands, kodesh, ad sanctitatem, and bless the Lord, gather, that the benediction is the sanctification of the meat, and that it is not lawful to eat of it till it be thus sanctified. Buxt. syn. Jud. c. 12. p. 241.

Ver. 8. [b] Σωματικὴ γυμνασία, bodily exercise.] The apostle in the former verse exhorted Timothy γυμάζειν, to exercise himself unto godliness, as the athletics did, in the Olympic games, exercise themselves for their combats; adding here, that their exercises, though they were very hard and difficult, tended little to profit, they striving for mastery, only that they might obtain a corruptible crown, 1 Cor. 9. 25. whereas that piety in which he did advise him to exercise himself, was profitable for all things; or, because Philo makes mention τῶν συνεχῶν πόνων, of the continual labours of the Essenes (y), and Josephus (z), of their ἐργασίαι, or exercises morning and evening; he perhaps may oppose unto them this exercise of piety.

Ver. 10.

Ver. 10. [q] Ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, who is the ſaviour of all men.] The author of the book De vocatione Gentium expounds this very well, telling us, that by ſaying, l. 2. c. 31. "He is the ſaviour of "all men, he confirms the general goodneſs of God "towards all men;" and by adding, "eſpecially of "them that believe, he ſhews, there is one part of "mankind, which, through the benefit of divinely "inſpired faith, is, by ſpecial benefits, advanced to "the higheſt and eternal felicity." He is the ſaviour of all men, 1. Leaving none of them without ſome teſtimonies of his goodneſs, Acts 14. 17. ſufficient to engage and direct them ſo to ſeek the Lord that they might find him, Acts 17. 27. lib. 2. 5. Nulli nationi hominum bonitatis ſuæ dona ſubſtraxit, ſaith the ſame author. 2. Shewing to them ſo much of himſelf, i. e. of his eternal power and Godhead, as might render them inexcuſable, in that they did not glorify him as God, neither were they thankful, Rom. 1. 20. 21. and writing in their hearts the law of nature, which enabled them by nature to do the things of the law, and made their conſciences accuſe them when they neglected ſo to do, Rom. 2. 14. 15. they knowing ſo far the righteouſneſs of God, that they who did thoſe things which were contrary to the law of nature, were worthy of death, Rom. 1. 32. for "adhibita eſt ſemper univerſis hominibus quæ-"dam ſupernæ menſura doctrinæ, quæ etſi occultio-"ris, parcioriſque gratiæ fuit, ſuffecit tamen qui-"buſdam ad remedium, omnibus ad teſtimonium." 3. Accepting every where him that worked righteouſneſs, of what nation ſoever he might be, Acts 10. 35. and accounting him as circumciſed who kept the righteouſneſs of the law, Rom. 2. 26. And, laſtly, Rewarding the good deeds of all that diligently ſought him, Heb. 11. 6. Mr Clerc underſtands this ſalvation of deliverance from temporal dangers, in which ſenſe it is alſo true; but that cannot be the entire ſenſe of the apoſtle, who had ſaid before, ver. 8. that godlineſs had the promiſe of this life, and that which is to come, i. e. both of temporal and eternal ſalvation, and adds, ver. 9. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, i. e. that not temporal only, but eternal bleſſings are to be expected from him, and that therefore they, the apoſtles, laboured and ſuffered reproach, becauſe they truſted in the living God, who is the ſaviour of all men; whereas, doubtleſs, they did this, not only with reſpect to temporal, but eſpecially to eternal ſalvation, 2 Cor. 4. 17.

Ver. 12. [r] Τὴν νεότητα, thy youth.] The preſbyters were generally in thoſe times aged, as their name imports; but Timothy, becauſe the gift of prophecy had pointed him out for that work, ver. 14. and becauſe the gifts of the Spirit had rendered him fit, was made an evangeliſt in his younger age, and therefore the apoſtle doth exhort him to make up in the excellency of his doctrine, and in the gravity of his converſation, what was wanting in his age.

Ver. 13. [s] Here, 1. It is well noted by the fathers, and by Eſthius, that if St Timothy, who had ſpiritual gifts, was yet by St Paul commanded to be thus diligent in reading the ſcriptures, that in his exhortations he might profit others, then much more ſhould other biſhops and miniſters be ſo, quos omnes Paulus in Timotheo inſtruit; then alſo ſhould they not depend upon extemporary effuſions, without attendance unto reading.

2. That the illumination or gifts of the Holy Spirit ſhould not hinder our diligence in reading and ſtudying what we are to exhort others to, and inſtruct them in; for, ſaith Theodoret, it becomes us to bring our labour, ἵνα λαμβάνωμεν τὴν χάριν τοῦ πνεύματος, and ſo to receive the grace of the Spirit.

Ver. 14. [t] Μετὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν πρεσβυτερίου, with the impoſition of the hands of the preſbytery.] The χάρισμα or ſpiritual gift here mentioned, is expreſsly ſaid to be given διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου, by the laying on of the hands of St Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 6. the giving of the ſpiritual gifts ſeeming to be peculiar to this or ſome other act of an apoſtle, Acts 8. 17. and 19. 6.; but other ſeniors or preſbyters, as Irenæus, l. 4. c. 43. calls them, qui cum epiſcopatus ſucceſſione chariſma veritatis certum acceperunt, "who with their ſucceſſion received the certain cha-"riſma of truth," might, and did lay on their hands together with him. This ceremony of impoſition of hands in ordination is confirmed from the practice of the apoſtles, and apoſtolical men, thus ordaining deacons, Acts 6. 6.; paſtors or teachers of the word, Acts 13. 3.; elders, whether biſhops or preſbyters, in every city, Acts 14. 23. and evangeliſts here: and this practice they certainly derived from the Jews, who created governors of criminal cauſes, or ruling elders, and maſters, doctors, and rabbins, to be teachers of the law, i. e. to labour in the word and doctrine, by that impoſition of hands which they called סמיכה, as Moſes did to Joſhua, Numb. 27. 43. Deut. 34. 9. and as Maimonides (a) ſaith he did, when he aſſumed the ſeventy to aſſiſt him, and as the firſt-born laid their hands upon the Levites (b), Numb. 8. 10. who were choſen to ſerve in their ſtead, and ſo conſecrated them to God in their name. And this way of conſecration, by impoſition of hands, ſay they, came down from Joſhua (c), by a perpetual ſucceſſion to their rabbins.

Though

Though therefore I scarce find any footsteps of it in the first century, or second, yet Cyprian, in the third, speaks of it as that which de traditione divina et apostolica observatione servandum est et tenendum, "was "to be observed and held from divine tradition, and "apostolical observation, in the collation of the "episcopal office," and as that which they practised in the ordination of Sabinus to that office (d). Eusebius (e) saith, Origen also was thus advanced to the presbytery by the bishops of Cæsarea; and the apostolical constitutions give us this as an ordinance of St John the apostle (f), who, doubtless, when he returned from Patmos to Ephesus, regulating the churches, and constituting bishops, did it according to the rites of the Jews, and practice of the other apostles; whence I conclude, this is no accidental, but a necessary rite of the due ordination of bishops, presbyters, and deacons.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. [a] REbuke not [b] an elder (with severity), but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren, (in respect of thy youth, chap. 4. 12.);

2. [c] The elder women as mothers, the younger as sisters, (being careful to converse with them when necessity requires it), with all purity, (with gravity in your words and countenance, observance of your eyes and heart, at times and places, which can minister no suspicion of undue behaviour towards them.)

3. [d] Honour widows that are [e] widows indeed.

4. But if any widow have children or nephews, [f] let them (i. e. those children or grandchildren) learn first (or chiefly) to shew piety at home, (i. e. to their own family or household), and to requite their parents (who have bred them up, ver. 10.): for that is good and acceptable before God; (and then, if they be able, extend their charity to others.)

5. Now she that is a widow indeed, and [g] desolate, (being left quite alone, without any children to relieve her), [h] trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6. But [i] she that liveth in pleasure (licentiously) is dead (to God) whilst she thus liveth, (and so is not to be respected as a vital member of the church, or nourished by her.)

7. And these things give in charge, that they (i. e. the widows) may be blameless.

8. But if any (having ability) provide not for his own (kindred), and especially for those of his own house, he hath (in works) denied the faith, and is [k] worse than an infidel.

9. [l] Let not a widow be taken into the number (of widows to be maintained by the church), under [m] threescore years old, having been the wife [n] of one man, (not one that hath divorced herself from one husband, and married again),

10. (Being also) well reported of for good works; [o] if (ei, that) she hath brought up children, if (that) she hath lodged strangers, if she hath washed the saints feet, if she hath relieved the afflicted, if she hath diligently followed every good work.

11. But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to [p] wax wanton against (or grow weary of) Christ, they will marry;

12. Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13. And withal, they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tatlers also, and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

14. I will therefore that the younger women (rather) marry, bear children, guide the house, (and so) give none occasion to the adversary (of Christianity) to speak reproachfully (of it.)

15. (The necessity of which precept is too great), for some (of these young widows) are already [q] turned aside after Satan.

16. If any man or woman that believeth have widows (belonging to their family), let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged (with them); that (being freed from that charge) it may (the better be able to) relieve them that are widows indeed, (that is, are wholly destitute of help, ver. 5.)

17. Let the elders that rule well, be counted worthy of [r] double honour, (i. e. of a more liberal maintenance), [s] especially those who labour in the word and doctrine.

18. [t] For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn: and, The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19. [u] Against an elder receive not an accusation, but before (ἐπὶ, upon the testimony of) two or three witnesses.

(d) Quod et apud vos factum videmus in Sabini collegæ nostri ordinatione, ut de universæ fraternitatis suffragio, et de episcoporum qui in præsentia convenerant judicio, episcopatus ei deferretur, et manus ei in locum Basilidis imponeretur. Ed. Ox. ep. 67. p. 172.

22. [y] Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other mens ſins: keep thyſelf pure (from them.)

23. [z] Drink no longer water (only), but uſe a little wine (together with it) for thy ſtomach's ſake, and (for) thine often infirmities.

24. (And to preſerve thee from miſtake, or raſh proceeding, either in ordinations, ver. 22. or in rebuking the ſcandalous offender, conſider, that) ſome mens ſins are open (and diſcernible) beforehand, (i. e. before any witneſſes are come in againſt them), going before to (or, for) judgment, (or to bring the cenſures of the church upon them); and (in) ſome men they follow after, (i. e. their evil diſpoſitions appear afterward.)

25 [a] Likewiſe alſo the good works of ſome are manifeſt beforehand, (and ſo leſs examination is needful concerning them); and they that (i. e. whoſe works) are otherwiſe cannot be (long) hid, (their vices will, by information of others they converſe with, or by temptation, and their own evil inclinations, be at laſt diſcovered.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. [a] Μὴ ἐπιπλήξῃς, rebuke not.] The word ſignifies to chaſtiſe, or rebuke with ſeverity, and ſometimes with ſtripes.

Ibid. [b] Πρεσβυτέρῳ, an elder.] In the judgment of Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, the elder here ſignifies, ὐ τὸν ἱερέα, ἀλλὰ τὸν γηγενακότα, not a prieſt, but a grave ancient man, ſuch being, in all ages and nations, ſtyled fathers; and this ſenſe the diſtinction here of ages, and of ſexes, ſeems to plead for.

Ver. 2. [c] Πρεσβυτέρας, the elder women.] The widows of the church, ſaith Dr Hammond, very improbably, they being mentioned particularly in the ſequel of the chapter.

Ver. 3. [d] Τίμα, honour;] i. e. Yield them reverence and alimony; for that proviſion for them is included in this honour, is evident from ver. 4. and 8. Thus, not to give parents what is needful for them, is to tranſgreſs the precept which commands us to honour our father and our mother, Mark 7. 10. 11. 12.; ſo Acts 28. 10. πολλαῖς τιμαῖς ἐτίμησαν ἡμᾶς, they honoured us with many honours, giving us τὰ πρὸς τὴν χρείαν, ſuch things as were neceſſary. Hence in the Jeruſalem Targum (g), Honorare, eſt viaticum providere; "To "honour, is to make proviſions for any perſon:" ſo here, Honour widows, that is, ſaith Theophylact, τὰ ἀναγκαῖα χορήγει, Provide them neceſſaries. See note on Mark 7. 10.

Ibid. [e] Τὰς ὄντως χήρας, that are widows indeed;] anſwering that name, by being χηρεῦσαι, deſolate, and deſtitute of any other to relieve them, and being alſo exemplarily pious, ver. 5. Widows, ſaith Cotelerius, hath divers ſignifications; it ſignifies, 1. Any woman that ſurvives her huſband. 2. Poor women, who, after the death of their huſbands, need the alms of the church, as here. 3. Such as conſecrated themſelves to God, profeſſing perpetual widowhood, ver. 5. 4. Such as were choſe into the eccleſiaſtical miniſtry, or made deaconneſſes, ver. 9. That there ſhould be any ἀπαρθένοι, or perſons that were always virgins, called τὰς παρθένας, τὰς λεγομένας χήρας, widows; though the paſſage of Ignatius, according to Voſſius's reading, ſeems to make for it; yet, according to the reading of Biſhop Uſher, ἀπαρθένους ἢ χήρας, it makes againſt it; and virgo vidua, a virgin-widow, that is, admitted to the degree of a deaconneſs, is, in Tertullian's (h) language, a miracle or monſter in the church. It is certain, ſuch a one could be none of the apoſtle's widows here; for he ſuppoſeth his widows may have children, ver. 4. and expreſsly forbids any to be choſen into the number of widows that hath not nouriſhed or brought up children, ver. 9. 10.; and it is not reaſonable to conceive the church of Smyrna ſhould ſo ſoon tranſgreſs againſt this rule of the apoſtle, or that this famous martyr ſhould approve ſuch a violation of the apoſtle's precept.

Ibid. Note alſo, that the reading of Biſhop Uſher is confirmed from the like words, ὐ παρθένους, ἢ ἀ χήρας, found in the apoſtolical conſtitutions, l. 3. c. 6.

Ver. 4. [f] Μανθανέτωσαν πρῶτον τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν, Let them learn firſt to ſhew piety at home.]. The apoſtle here ſpeaks of the care the children ſhould take to nouriſh their parents which are widows, πρῶτον, before they ſuffer them to be burdenſome to the church, as it is evident from ver. 16. which ſaith, If any man or woman have widows (belonging to their family), let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged with them; and alſo from the following words words here, and to requite their parents, which only can belong unto the children, and was always reckoned an act of piety towards them, as, after God, the authors of our being (i); whence anciently they were so reverenced, saith Simplicius (k), as to be called gods.

(g) In Deut. 15. 14.

(h) Ne tale nunc miraculum, ne dixerim monſtrum, in eccleſia denotaretur virgo vidua. De virgin. veland. c. 9.

Ver. 5. ε Μεμονωμένη, solitary.] So Philo saith, the widow of the priest which has no children must return to her father's house, as ἀνδρὸς καὶ παίδων ἔρημος, ἐδιμίαν ἔχουσα καταφυγὴν, having no other refuge, when destitute of husband and children, but her father; but if she have sons or daughters, it is necessary that the mother should be placed with her children, ὡσὶ καὶ θυγατέρες τῆς τὸ γενήσαντος οἰκίας ὄντες, for sons and daughters being of the house of their parents, draw the mother to it (l): whence also we learn what it is to shew piety to their own house, ver. 4. viz. to do it to their parents.

Ibid. ϛ Ἤλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν, trusteth in God;] i. e. having no other helper, she reposeth herself on him alone, committing herself to him by constant prayer for his help. This is Cotelerius's third kind of widows, compared by the author of the apostolical constitutions, l. 3. c. 1. to the widow of Sarepta, and to Anna the daughter of Phanuel, mentioned, Luke 2. 36. who does not oblige herself by vow or promise so to do, but only remains single, δῶρον ἔχουσα χηρείας, as having the gift of widowhood. So St Jerom describes these widows in these words: "Honora viduas quæ "vere viduæ sunt; hoc est, quæ omni suorum auxi- "lio destitutæ sunt, quæ manibus suis laborare non "possunt, quas paupertas debilitat, ætasque conficit, "quibus Deus spes est, et omne opus oratio." Ep. ad Gerontiam.

Ver. 6. ζ Ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα, she that liveth in pleasure.] This word properly signifies to feed deliciously, and drink choice liquors, τῇ γαστρὶ ζῶν μόνη, to live only for the belly, saith St Chrysostom; so Ezek. 16. 49. This was the sin of thy sister Sodom, in pride, in fulness of bread, καὶ ἡ εὐθηνία ἐσπαταλῶν, and in abundance she and her daughters rioted; Amos 6. 4. They lie upon beds of ivory, καὶ καταστρωννύντες, and abounding with superfluities, they eat lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midst of the stall: and because such eating and drinking provokes to carnal pleasures, it is joined with them; as when the apostle saith, Ye have lived in pleasure, and been wanton, Gr. ἐστρηνιάσατε, Jam. 5. 5. Such a woman is dead while she liveth, according to that of the Jews (m), "The just in their "death are styled living, the wicked whilst they "live are styled dead." Maimonides.

Ver. 8. η Ἔστιν ἀπίστου χείρων, He is worse than an infidel.] For they put this among the first and most indissoluble principles of nature, requiring us, πρῶτα θεοὺς τιμᾶν, μετάπειτα τοκέας, first to honour the gods, and then our parents (n); placing among the things in which they are to be honoured, χρημάτων χορηγίαν καὶ σώματος ὑπηρεσίαν, the making provisions for them, and serving them with our bodies. So Aristotle saith (o), "We must rather make provisions for them than for "ourselves, and yield them τιμὴν καθάπερ θεοῖς, honour, "as they do unto the gods." Plutarch saith (p), "That all men, though some may think otherwise, "say, that nature, and the law of nature, requires, "that parents should have the highest honour next "the gods: that men can do nothing more accept- "able to the gods, than by readily heaping favours "upon their parents; and that nothing is a greater "evidence of atheism or impiety than to despise "them." Some here are guilty of a great mistake, scraping together great fortunes, and hoarding them up for their children, with a scandalous neglect of that charity to their Christian brethren, which alone can sanctify those enjoyments to them, and enable them to lay up a good foundation against the time to come; pleading these words to justify, or to excuse their sordid parsimony, and want of charity, that he that provideth not for his own household, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel; whereas these words plainly respect the provision which children should make for their parents, and not those which parents should make for their children.

Ver. 9. ι Χήρα καταλεγέσθω μὴ, let not a widow be taken into the number.] The apostle now comes to speak of such widows as were not only to be maintained by the church, (for they were, doubtless, to receive her alms, if really they were poor, without these qualifications), but of such as were to be admitted into the number of deaconnesses, whose office it was to instruct the younger women, to attend the women when ſick, and in labour, and to aſſiſt at the baptiſm of the female ſex.

Ibid. [n] Μὴ ἔλαττον ἐξήκοντα, not leſs than ſixty years old.] It is the miſtake of Zonaras, Balſamon, and Blaſtares, to think to reconcile this with the 15th canon of the council of Chalcedon, and the 14th of Trullo, by ſaying, That widows might only be admitted deaconneſſes at ſixty, but virgins at forty. This laſt was done in after-ages, and after that apoſtolical conſtitution, which, agreeably to St Paul, ſaith, l. 3. c. 1. Χήρας δὲ καθιστᾶτε μὴ ἔλαττον ἐτῶν τῶν ἑξήκοντα, Let not the widows be conſtituted under ſixty years; and they who firſt began to alter the time, did at laſt take away the office.

Ibid. [n] Γεγονυῖα ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνὴ, being the wife of one huſband;] i. e. One who had not divorced herſelf from one, and married another huſband; for otherwiſe the younger widows, whom St Paul bids to marry, could never be admitted deaconneſſes, though they had all the other qualifications. That ſuch divorces were then common on the wives ſide, both among Jews and Gentiles, we learn, concerning the Romans, from the complaint of Seneca (q), "That "none in his time bluſhed at it, their noblewomen "marrying, that they might divorce themſelves, "and there being ſcarce any marriages without di-"vorces." Cicero (r) complains of many things of this kind, which happened in his time. Plutarch (s) mentions it as a thing common, and cuſtomarily done by any women that were jealous; and the law among the (t) Athenians allowed it; inſtances we have of it in Juſtin Martyr (u), and Tertullian (x). And that this alſo was frequent in the practice of the Jews, and allowed by their Rabbins, ſee note on 1 Cor. 7. 11. I confeſs that univira, the wife of one huſband, in Livy, l. 10. c. 23. is one, quæ uni viro nupta fuiſſet, ad quem virgo deducta ſit, who from her virginity had been married only to one man; and that univira ſacerdos bears the ſame ſenſe in Trebellius Pollio, c. de Tito, p. 795. and that this monogamy was counted honourable even among the Heathens; and they who were content with it, wore pudicitiæ coronam, the crown of chaſtity, Val. Max. l. 2. c. 1. whereas they who proceeded to a ſecond marriage, ſacerdotio arcebantur, were thought unworthy of the prieſthood, as Servius notes upon thoſe words of Virgil, Æn. 4. ver. 19. Huic uni forſan potui ſuccumbere culpæ: and the flamines, among the Romans, were to be the huſbands of one wife, and the flaminicæ the wives of one huſband, Rhodig. lect. antiq. l. 28. c. 22. That therefore the ſacred miniſters in the church of Chriſt might be nothing inferior to thoſe of Heathens, the apoſtle may require that, in this ſenſe, the biſhop ſhould be the huſband of one wife, and the deaconneſs the wife of one huſband.

Ver. 10. [o] Εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν, if ſhe hath brought up children.] That εἰ ſignifies that, as well as if, ſee note on Acts 26. 23. Εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστὸς, εἰ πρῶτος, &c. that Chriſt hath ſuffered, and that he was the firſt that roſe from the dead; and that ſo it ſhould be rendered here, the word μαρτυρεῖται, teſtified, ſeems to require: for a teſtimony of the good works of others is, that they have done ſuch and ſuch laudable actions.

Ver. 11. [p] Ὅταν καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, when they have waxed wanton againſt Chriſt.] That is, ſay Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius, ὅταν ἀκκιζῶνται, "when they have caſt off, or faſtidiouſly re-"fuſed and rejected Chriſt;" ὅταν καταφρονῶσιν, "when they have contemned, and made light of "him; when they do βαρέως φέρειν, καὶ ἀποσκιρτᾶν τὸν ζυγὸν, "bear Chriſt's yoke grievouſly, and caſt off his reins:" ſo Heſychius and Phavorinus. So that this phraſe ſignifies to caſt off Chriſt, and Chriſtianity; and, as the apoſtle afterwards explains it, ἐκτρέπεσθαι, to turn from him after Satan, or to fall off from him to Heatheniſm, or Judaiſm; and then πρώτην πίστιν ἀθετεῖν, to violate their firſt faith, cannot be to violate the promiſe made, when choſen into the order of widows, not to marry, but their faith given unto Chriſt at baptiſm; the other, if any ſuch promiſe were then made, being not their firſt, but ſecond faith. So Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius expound it, from thoſe words of the apoſtle to the Corinthians, I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, that I may preſent you as a chaſte virgin unto Chriſt.

power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18.; the rescuing men from the snare of the devil, who were taken captive by him at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26.; and who walked according to the prince of the power of the air, Eph. 2. 2.; the casting off the faith may well be styled the turning aside after Satan.

Ver. 17. [r] Διπλῆς τιμῆς.] The double honour, that is, τῆς ἰκανοτερᾶς τροφῆς, of a liberal maintenance out of the public stock; it signifies, saith Chrysostom, τὴν τῶν ἀναγκαίων χορηγίαν, provision of things necessary, as is evident from the reason following, ver. 18. The labourer is worthy of his hire.

Ibid. [s] Μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ, especially those who labour in the word and doctrine.] οἱ πρεσβύτεροι, the elders among the Jews were of two sorts: 1*st*, Such as governed in the synagogue; and, 2*dly*, Such as ministered in reading and expounding the scriptures and traditions, and from them pronounced what did bind or loose, or what was forbidden, and what was lawful to be done: (y) for when, partly by their captivity, and partly through increase and traffic, they were dispersed in considerable bodies through divers regions of the world, it was necessary they should have governors or magistrates, to keep them in their duty, and judge of criminal causes; and also Rabbins, to teach them the law, and the traditions of their fathers: the first were ordained ad judicandum, sed non ad docendum de licitis et vetitis; "to judge and govern, but not to teach:" the second, ad docendum, sed non ad judicandum; "to "teach, but not to judge or govern;" and these the apostle here declares to be the most honourable, and worthy of the chiefest reward: accordingly the apostle, reckoning up the offices God had appointed in the church, places teachers before governments, 1 Cor. 12.

Ver. 18. [t] Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ, for the scripture saith.] The former words, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, being expressly found in Deut. 25. 4. and the latter, expressly in the gospel of St Luke, chap. 10. 7. and with a little variation, Matth. 10. 10. and in no other place in scripture, (for in Lev. 19. 13. and Deut. 24. 14. there is nothing to this purpose); it follows, that St Paul must here reckon the gospel of St Luke among the holy scriptures; from which such doctrines as he is now teaching, may be infallibly confirmed. Note,

2. That the apostle, both here and 1 Cor. 9. 9. proves this from what was written in the law of Moses, applying in both places that which primarily must belong to the Jewish priesthood, to the preachers of the gospel: and hence, allowing us to argue for the maintenance of the latter, by analogy to what was appointed for the former, as the apostle himself doth in this very case, in these words, Do you not know, that they who minister about (legally) holy things, eat of the things of the temple, and that they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar? i. e. are fed, and liberally maintained, by the portions God allowed them of what was offered at his altar; even so hath the Lord Christ appointed, that they who preach the gospel, should live of the gospel, 1 Cor. 9. 12. 13. Whence note,

3. That this is a standing ordinance of Christ, to continue as long as the preaching of the gospel doth, built upon reasons of equal obligations at all times; the labourer being always worthy of his hire; the shepherd to eat of the milk of the flock, and he that soweth spirituals, to reap carnals, 1 Cor. 2. 7. 10. 11. Note,

4. From whom this reward is to be received; from them amongst whom these pastors labour, to whom they sow spiritual things, and who are taught by them: for let him, saith the apostle, who is taught in the word, communicate to him that teacheth in all good things, Gal. 6. 7. So that he is to have a supply of all things needful for the discharge of his function here, double honour, i. e. a liberal maintenance. Note,

5. That as the command of being charitable to the poor, gives just occasion to those laws which are made in all communities to oblige men, according to their abilities, to distribute to the necessities of the poor; because, otherwise, the general rules of scripture would not be obeyed, nor the poor provided for: so the standing ordinance of Christ, and his apostles, concerning the double honour due to them who labour in the word and doctrine, and the communicating to them in all good things, justifies those laws which ascertain what shall be communicated to them; since otherwise, it is much to be feared, the general rules of scripture, concerning this matter, would not be obeyed, nor the clergy sufficiently provided for.

Ver. 19. [u] Κατὰ πρεσβυτέρου.] The elder here seems to relate, not to one who was such by age, but by office, because the apostle was before speaking, ver. 17. of elders which rule well, or laboured in the word and doctrine. And whereas the law had taken care that no man should be condemned, but by the mouth of two or three witnesses, the apostle knowing how much the church would suffer by the rash accusations of her governors, bishops and presbyters, seems to rise higher, not suffering an accusation to be admitted against them, without the like number of witnesses.

Ver. 20. [x] Τοὺς ἁμαρτάνοντας, i. e. them that sin] Grievously and scandalously, and are convinced of their offences before two or three witnesses, were to be rebuked;

rebuked, ſaith Theodoret, πάντων παρόντων, in the preſence of all; ſuch public cenſures being, according to the cuſtom of the church; done by the preſidents or rulers of the church, ὑπὸ πλειόνων, before and with the conſent of all, as Tertullian ſaith (z); ſee note on 2 Cor. 2. 6.

Ver. 21. And our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect angels.] He joins the angels with Jeſus Chriſt, ſaith Theodoret, ἐκ ὡς ὁμοίμους, ἀλλ' ὡς δούλους, not as equal in honour, but as ſervants to him, and thoſe who are to attend him at the great day of judgment.

Ver. 22. ᵃ Χεῖρας ταχέως μηδενὶ ἐπιτίθει, Lay hands ſuddenly on no man.] This, ſaith the Reverend Dr Hammond, belongs to the laying one of the biſhop's hand in abſolving penitents: ſaith the Reverend Biſhop of Worceſter, to the laying "of hands on biſhops, "prieſts, and deacons:" 1. Becauſe St Paul had not mentioned laying on of hands, in relation to penitents, in this epiſtle; but he had done it with reſpect to ordination, and that in Timothy's own caſe, chap. 4. 14. 2. Becauſe the apoſtle, in this epiſtle, gives no rules concerning the qualifications of penitents, ſaying nothing what penitents were to be reconciled, and after what time, and under what conditions they were to have hands laid on them, in token of reconciliation; nor is there a concurrent evidence of ſuch a practice ſo early in the church; but he had given rules touching biſhops and deacons, and their qualification; and therefore we have more cauſe to apply it according to the chief intention and deſign of this epiſtle. 3. Becauſe the great uſe of laying on of hands, in the New Teſtament, is for the ſetting perſons apart for the diſcharge of a ſacred office; ſo was it in the firſt inſtitution of deacons, Acts 6. 6. and of Paul and Barnabas, to a particular charge, Acts 13. 2. 3. This was an ancient ceremony among the Jews, in the ſolemn deſignation of perſons to ſacred offices, Numb. 27. 18. 23. Deut. 34. 9. either to be rulers or teachers in their ſynagogues; and from thence it was brought into the church, in the ſolemn deſignation of perſons to the miniſtry. And, 4. If theſe words do not relate to ordination, St Paul would have given Timothy no particular direction about that which was one main part of his office; wherefore, as he left Titus at Crete, to ordain elders in every city, ſo, doubtleſs, Timothy had the ſame commiſſion, which yet is no where intimated but in theſe words: and, according to this ſenſe, the following words are capable of a very good meaning, thus: Be not partaker of the ſins of them, who raſhly, and without due qualifications, ruſh upon ſacred offices; for by want of due examination, and trial of them, thou wilt become partaker of their guilt.

Ver. 23. ᵃ So Juſtin Martyr ſaith, That wine is to be uſed for (a) "the help of the body, and the "cure of inward diſtempers." And Plato (b) ſaith, It was given for the health and ſtrength of the body: the Eſſenes abſtained wholly from wine; ſee note on Col. 2. 21.; but the Gnoſtics (c) freely uſed it, when they went to the Heathen feaſts, and otherwiſe.

Ver. 25.ᵃᵃ I find three expoſitions of theſe words. The firſt is that of St Baſil and St Auſtin, which refers them to the judgment of God, thus: The good and evil works of ſome men are ſo manifeſt, that they may be diſcerned of all men before the day of judgment, and ſo, in diſcerning them, thou canſt not err; but, if they be latent here, and ſo eſcape thy examination and cenſure, they will be manifeſted at the great day of their accounts.

2. Others, referring this to the cenſures of the church, the ἐπιτιμία, mentioned ver. 20. make the ſenſe run thus: Some mens ſins are ſo open and notorious, as to bring them under the cenſures of the church, by way of precedent merit; others appear more criminal after the cenſures paſſed upon them, and ſo leſs fit to be abſolved; and ſome mens reformation, or good works, are ſo manifeſt after cenſure, as to evidence they deſerve abſolution; and if they continue evil, or do but few goods works, that alſo will be in time diſcernible: ſo that thou mayſt know who are fit to be abſolved, who not. But againſt this expoſition there lies this objection, That no man ſhould incur the cenſures of the church, but by way of precedent merit; and ſo no man's evil works, for which he is to be cenſured, ſhould follow after that act of diſcipline. And, 2. The laſt clauſe of the laſt verſe ſeems, by the antitheſis, to refer not to evil, but to good works, though done as the works of charity ought to be, ſo as not to be obſerved by men.

3. The ancient Greek expoſitors, with Grotius, refer theſe words to ordination, thus: When I ſaid, Lay hands ſuddenly on no man, I ſpake not of men whoſe good or bad works are manifeſt beforehand; for they, without further diſcuſſion or examination, may be admitted, or are to be rejected; but of thoſe whoſe vices, or good works, are latent; for they, after examination and inquiry, cannot be long hid:

and so, if thou be not hasty in laying on of hands, thou timely mayst discover them; or if by this means thou canst not do it, thou wilt not be partaker with the sinner, as having done as much as was in thy power to discover them.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. LET as many servants as are under the yoke (of bondage to the Heathens), count their own masters worthy of all (due) honour, that the name of God, and his doctrine be not blasphemed, (or evil spoken of, as tending to dissolve those civil obligations, but rather honoured in all estates of men, as tending to make them better in their several relations, Tit. 2. 10. and more subject even to hard and froward masters, 1 Pet. 2. 18.)

2. And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are (advanced to be) brethren, (and so equal to them in Christ); but rather (let them) do them service, because they are faithful, (of the household of faith), and beloved (of God), [a] partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

3. If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the [b] words of our Lord Jesus Christ, (Matth. 20. 27. He that would be first among you, let him be your servant; or, servant of all, Mark 10. 44.), and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

4. He is proud, (Gr. puffed up), knowing nothing, but doting (sick) about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmises,

5. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: [c] from such withdraw thyself.

6. But (whatsoever they esteem so, we know that) godliness with (that) [d] contentment (which attends it) is great gain.

7. (I say, with contentment, which it becometh us to have.) For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out (of it.)

8. And having (ἔχοντες δὲ, having therefore) food and raiment, let us be therewith content.

9. But (For) [e] they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.

10. For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

11. But thou, (thou therefore), O man of God, flee these things: and follow after righteousness, [f] godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12. [g] Fight the good fight of faith, (and so) lay hold of eternal life, whereunto thou art also (both) called, and (according to that calling) hast professed a good profession (by enduring persecutions for it) before many witnesses.

13. I give thee charge in the sight of (that) God who quickeneth all things, (and therefore is able to raise them that suffer for him, from the dead), and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession, (confirming truth to the death, John 18. 37.);

14. That thou keep this commandment (given to thee, ver. 11. 12.) without spot, unrebukeable, [h] until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ:

15. Which (appearance) in his times (or, in the proper season) he shall shew (forth), who is the blessed and only (absolute) Potentate, the [i] King of kings, and Lord of lords; (who therefore is more to be feared than all earthly potentates, and will more assuredly punish those who submit not to his laws and government);

16. Who only hath (of himself) immortality, (and so only can confer it upon others, and only lives for ever, to reward and punish), dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, (and live; and so, whom no man fully can enjoy in this life), whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom (be ascribed) honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, (the two diseases of rich men; for the rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as an high wall in his own conceit, Prov. 10. 15. and 18. 11. And riches and strength lift up the heart, Ecclus 40. 26.), but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy, (and in whom therefore we may safely trust):

18. [k] That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate (to others of their wealth);

19. Laying up in store for themselves [l] a good foundation against the time to come, that (when these things fail) they may lay hold on eternal life.

20. O Timothy, keep that (truth) which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

21. Which some professing, [m] have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

ANNO

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Verſe 2. [a] Οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας ἀντιλαμβάνομενοι.] Theſe words being not connected to the preceding by ᾧ, and the article οἱ ſhewing that they relate not to the predicate, but to the ſubject, will be beſt rendered thus: becauſe they who partake of the benefit of the ſervice, are faithful and beloved; and therefore more worthy of their ſervice, the more they are honoured of God, and of the number of them whom we ſtand bound to ſerve in love.

That the Gnoſtics taught any ſuch doctrine, that Chriſtian ſervants were not obliged to obey their Heathen, or their Chriſtian maſters, there is not the leaſt hint in any of the commentators on this place, or in any of the fathers, who have given us the largeſt account of their doctrines. I find, in the epiſtle of Ignatius to Polycarp, theſe words; (d) "Deſpiſe not men and maid ſervants, nor let "them be puffed up, but let them ſerve the more "for the glory of God, that they may obtain a bet-"ter liberty; let them not covet to be free from "their maſters." But neither doth the martyr, nor any of his commentators, intimate that this relates to any doctrine of the Gnoſtics; and conſidering how much he endeavoured to imitate St Paul, we may more probably conjecture it hath relation to this very place: moreover, though I have given you the words, as Dr Hammond tranſlates them, yet I think the true meaning of theſe words, Μὴ ἐράτωσαν ἀπὸ τῆς κοινῆς ἐλευθερῶθαι, is this, Let them not be importunate to be delivered, and made free by the church, or by her common ſtock; for τὸ κοινὸν ſignifies the community; and ſo τὸ κοινὸν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, in Euſebius (e), is the community, or body of the church; and alſo in Lucian (f), where he ſpeaks of the Chriſtians; and τὰ κοινὰ in Ariſtophanes, Demoſthenes, and Lucian, ſignifies the common ſtock. Now, it is evident from Juſtin Martyr, and Tertullian, that the common ſtock of Chriſtians was employed to buy their brethren out of bonds and ſervitude. See note on 1 Cor. 7. 23. and Lucian. de Pereg. ed. Gr. p. 594. 595.

But that many of the Jews were of this opinion, and might be apt to introduce it into Chriſtianity, we find juſt reaſon to believe; for they thought themſelves privileged, by their relation to God, from being the ſervants of men. Some of them, ſaith Joſephus, thought it a wicked thing, μεθ' τὸν Θεὸν φύσιν θνητὸς δεσπότας, to own, beſides God, any mortal lords or maſters. Their Rabbins thought it unbecoming any Jew to be a bond-ſlave to an Heathen, or idolater; for that was, ſay they, to be ſervi ſervorum, ſervants of ſervants, which the ſervants of the Lord muſt not be. See Dr Lightfoot on 1 Cor. 7. 23.

Ver. 3. [b] Λόγοις τοῖς τῦ Κυρίε ἡμῶν, the words of our Lord Jeſus.] This phraſe being often uſed of the very words which Chriſt ſpake, as Matth. 26. 75; Acts 10. 16. 20. 35. I thought fit to refer it to thoſe words which might moſt likely be aimed at by the apoſtle; though ſeeing they alſo may refer to the doctrine of Chriſt preached by the apoſtle, this phraſe being ſo uſed, Acts 19. 10. and the doctrine of the Lord very often, 1 Theſſ. 1. 8. 2 Theſſ. 3. 1. in this ſenſe it affords this uſeful obſervation, that the words written by St Paul, in theſe epiſtles, are the words of the Lord Jeſus.

Ver. 5. [c] Ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιύτων, From ſuch withdraw thyſelf.] From theſe words it is plain, that the apoſtle ſpeaketh here of perſons then in being: that they were Jews, ſeems evident from the foregoing note, ſhewing, that they were in this matter ἑτεροδιδάσκαλοι, men that taught otherwiſe; that theſe νομοδιδάσκαλοι, were men knowing nothing, or not knowing what they ſaid, or whereof they affirmed, ſee 1 Tim. 1. 9.; that they did ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, teach otherwiſe than the doctrine which is after godlineſs, ver. 3.; that they had their fables which miniſtered ζητήσεις, queſtions, ver. 4.; that they had their ματαιολογίας, vain wranglings about words, ver. 6.; that they had their fooliſh queſtions, which begat ſtrifes and contentions about the law, ſee Tit. 3. 9.; that they of the circumciſion were vain talkers, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake, ſee Tit. 1. 10. 11. and ſo accounted gain for godlineſs; that their minds and conſciences were defiled and perverted, ſee Tit. 1. 14.; that they turned aſide from the faith, to vain janglings, ſee 1 Tim. 1. 6. How they were puffed up, ſee note on 2 Tim. 3. 4. See the defence of theſe words, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 6. [d] Αὐτάρκεια, contentment.] This the apoſtle well explains, by being ſatisfied ἐν οἷς εἰμι, in the condition we are in, Phil. 4. 4. and τοῖς παροῦσιν, with the things we have at preſent, with food and raiment, ver. 8. i. e. with thoſe things which are needful for this preſent life, Matth. 6. 31. 32. in oppoſition to anxiety, distrust, or murmuring: and it is never separable from true piety, but is the natural result of that love to, and that value the good man hath for God, and the things of God; that trust he hath in God, and the entire resignation of his will, in all affairs, to the conduct of his providence.

Ver. 9. [e] Οἱ βουλόμενοι πλουτεῖν, they that will be rich.] i. e. On whom the love of money so prevails, that they are resolved they will be rich, if by any means they can compass wealth, are in the ready way to yield to any lust which will gratify their greedy humours; μηδὲν κερδαίνειν συνειδότος αἰσχροῦ μηδ' ἀνιαροῦ φυλάττειν, abstaining, saith Plutarch (e), from nothing that is base or impious, that tends to enrich them: whence the ancients, agreeably to the apostle here, Avaritiam omnia vitia habere putabant, "thought co-"vetousness to comprehend all vices:" as A. Gellius, l. 11. c. 2. from Cato, and Cicero, N. 45. in his oration, Pro Roscio Amerino, have observed. It also causeth us to make shipwreck of faith, and a good conscience, and whatsoever else is sacred, when they cannot be held without the loss of that wealth we so love and admire: whence Cicero notes (f), Nullum esse officium tam sanctum atque solenne, quod non avaritia comminuere atque violare soleat; "That "there is no duty so holy or solemn, which cove-"tousness is not wont to impair and violate."

Ver. 11. [f] Εὐσέβειαν, πίστιν, &c.] That godliness which gives contentment, with food and raiment, and what at present we enjoy: that faith which assures us of a better, and a more enduring substance, reserved in the heavens for us, Heb. 10. 34.: that justice which requires us to injure no man, but to let every man enjoy his own: that love, or charity which makes us ready to distribute, and willing to communicate of these things to others, ver. 11.: that patience which makes us, with tranquillity and equanimity, submit to a low fortune, and adversity: that meekness which suppresses our wrath and indignation against them who are injurious to us in temporals, and take away that which is ours: all these are proper preservatives against, or indications of a mind free from covetousness.

Ver. 12. [g] Ἀγωνίζῃ τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα, Fight the good fight.] These words are plainly agonistical, relating to the Olympic games, and particularly to that of racing, to which the apostle doth so oft allude, where the crown being hung up at the end of the goal, he that came first did ἐπιλαμβάνειν, lay hold of it, and take it to himself: and because these games were performed in the presence of many spectators, the apostle continues the allusion, saying, that Timothy had, in the presence of many witnesses, shewed his readiness to suffer for the faith.

Ver. 14. [h] Μέχρι τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, till the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.] Here, saith Grotius, it appears, that Paul speaks to Timothy, as one who might live to the last judgment: but this vain conceit hath been sufficiently confuted, note on 1 Thess. 4. 15. Nor doth this exhortation prove it; it being used, rather than that, until death, saith Theophylact, to mind us of that glorious appearance. And because, saith St Austin (g), the day of our death is, to us, as that day: "Tunc "enim unicuique veniet dies ille, cum venerit ei "dies, ut talis hinc exeat, qualis judicandus est illo "die: in quo enim quemque invenerit suus novis-"simus dies, in hoc eum comprehendet mundi "novissimus dies."

Ver. 15. [i] Ὁ Βασιλεύς, King of kings, and Lord of lords.] This title the great empires took to themselves: the King of Babylon is so styled by Daniel, chap. 2. 37. by Jeremiah, chap. 27. 6. Of Persia, Ezra 7. 12. See Brisson. de regno Pers. l. 1. p. 3. 4. And therefore the apostle saith here, that it truly belongs to God only, and to our Lord Jesus Christ, Rev. 17. 14. and 19. 16.

Ver. 18. [k] That they do good.] See note on Tit. 3. 8.

Ver. 19. [l] Θεμέλιον καλὸν, a good foundation.] Τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν ἀπόλαυσιν θεμέλιον κέκληκεν ἀκίνητον, The enjoyment of good things to come, he calls an immoveable foundation, say the Greek commentators. So the doctrine of the resurrection is styled the foundation of God, 2 Tim. 2. 19.; and the heavenly Jerusalem, a city that hath foundations, Heb. 11. 10. And the good foundation here, being, in the words following, eternal life, confirms their interpretation. They who think the word θεμέλιος signifies here a treasure, or an obligation on the part of God to give them life eternal, mean the same thing, though they give us no just evidence that the word hath any such signification.

Ver. 21. [m] Περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἠστόχησαν, have erred from the faith.] These, in all reason, must be the same with the τῆς πίστεως ἀστοχήσαντες, those who erred from the faith, chap. 1. 5. 6. And that they were the νομοδιδάσκαλοι, the assertors and teachers of the law, and and so the opposites to the Gnostics, who were, saith Irenæus, legis adversarii, adversaries of the law, the 7th verse demonstrates, as Theodoret (h) well observes upon the place: of them it is also certain, that they pretended, above all men, to be γνώσεως τὸ θέλημα, skilled in the knowledge of the will of God, and ἔχοντες τὴν μόρφωσιν τῆς γνώσεως, men that had the ſcheme or form of knowledge, Rom. 2. 18. 19. 20. They were the great aſſertors and promoters of the cabbala, or cabbaliſtical doctrine, which was, in their account, ſcientia arcana divinitus accepta (i), a ſecret myſtical knowledge of divine things received from God, and equal, in their opinion, to the ſcriptures, according to their rule, "Verba cabbalæ "æquiparantur verbis legis." And they, doubtleſs, oppoſed this their knowledge of the law, and of theſe cabbaliſtical traditions, to the goſpel taught by St Paul, which oppoſed and ſlighted them; and their ſtiff adherence to them, cauſed them ἀποχῶν, to ſhoot off from the earth their Meſſiah, which was the mark they aimed at: that therefore the ψευδώνυμος γνῶσις, the falſely-named knowledge, mentioned here (k), may agree to them as well as to the Gnoſtics, is manifeſt from theſe things, that it cannot agree to the Gnoſtics, if theſe perſons were teachers of the law, as it is very probable they were, ſee note on chap. 1. 7. And that it cannot be attributed to Simon Magus the father of the Gnoſtics, of whom alone the apoſtle can be ſuppoſed here to ſpeak, appears from this, that he cannot properly be ſaid to err concerning the faith, who was ſo far from being then of it, that he himſelf ſet up for the Chriſt, and oppoſed the profeſſion of the goſpel with all his might. As for the Gnoſtics, it is agreed among the learned, that though they conſpired with former heretics; yet were they not known by that name, nor had they taken it upon them, till the time of Anicetus Biſhop of Rome, and the reign of M. Aurelius Antoninus, and L. Verus, that is, not till the year 129. Hence Dr Cave makes them an hereſy of the ſecond century. Euſebius ſays, That Carpocrates (l), who flouriſhed in the time of Hadrian, gave the riſe to the ſect of the Gnoſtics. But Clemens Alexandrinus ſems to affirm, that one Epiphanes (m) the author of the ſect of the Carpocratians, gave birth to this name and ſect. And if it were ſo, it is improbable that the knowledge falſely ſo called, here mentioned, ſhould have relation to the Gnoſtics.

THE PREFACE TO THE Second EPISTLE to TIMOTHY.

THE ancients (a) from these words of this epistle, I am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, chap. 4. 6. do generally conclude this was the last of St Paul's epistles, he being πρὸς τῷ τέλει, near the end of his life, when he writ it. And truly, the words of the apostle are not well capable of any other sense; for he says expressly, ἤδη σπένδομαι, I am now offered, and the time of my dissolution ἐφέστηκε, is instant, ver. 6. I have finished my course, ver. 7.; and ver. 8. λοιπὸν, From henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of glory. Whereas he not only expected to be delivered from his first bonds, but saith expressly, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith, that your rejoicing may be more abundant in Christ Jesus, for my coming to you again, Phil. 1. 25. 26. see chap. 2. 24.; Philem. ver. 22. Yea he was actually delivered, and ready to go to Judea, when he writ the epistle to the Hebrews, chap. 13. 23. 2*dly*, This epistle, saith Bishop Pearson, was writ from Rome, chap. 1. 17. by St Paul in bonds, chap. 1. 8. and 2. 9. Now, these bonds could not be his first bonds; for then he was in libera custodia, in his own hired house, receiving all that came to him, none forbidding it, Acts 28. 30. 31. Yea, his bonds were known throughout Cæsar's palace, and to all others, Phil. 1. 13. Here he is in arcta custodia: so that Onesiphorus was forced to inquire more diligently after him, that he might find him out, chap. 1. 17. Again, in his first bonds, saith he, Many of the brethren of the Lord, being encouraged by my bonds, were bold to speak the word more abundantly without fear, Phil. 1. 14. Here, all men forsake him, chap. 4. 16. See a third argument for this opinion, chap. 4. 13. A fourth, ver. 16. A fifth and sixth, ver. 20. So that I conclude, with the postscript, that this epistle ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, ὅτε ἐκ δευτέρου παρέστη Παῦλος τῷ Καίσαρι Νέρωνι, was writ from Rome, when St Paul stood the second time before Nero.

That this epistle was writ to stir up Timothy to caution, diligence, and discharge of his office, on occasion of the creeping heresy of the Gnostics, chap. 2. 17. stolen in among them, which had much debauched the Asiatics, chap. 1. 15. and made use of magic, to oppose the truth of the gospel, chap. 3. 8. is said by a reverend and learned person: but there is nothing in any of the ancient commentators of this nature, which speak here only of the heresies arising from the Jewish doctors (b), as that which gave occasion to the writing of this epistle. And, 2*dly*, The places cited by this reverend person, do not prove that the apostle speaketh of the Gnostics; for, chap. 1. 15. he only says, all those that were in Asia had forsaken him; which they might do, by cleaving to the Cerinthians and Ebionites, rather than to the Gnostics. See the note there. That they who taught the resurrection was past already, were not Gnostics, is proved, note on chap. 2. 17. and that the words, chap. 3. 8. 9. agree not to the Gnostic heretics, but to the Jewish false teachers, who were also great magicians, is there shewed. See note on 2 Thess. 2. 10.

Second EPISTLE to TIMOTHY.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. PAUL an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt by the will of God, [a] according to the promiſe (for declaration of the promiſe) of (eternal) [b] life, which is (made to us) in Chriſt Jeſus;

2. (Writeth) to Timothy my dearly beloved ſon, (wiſhing to him) grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, (by whom all mercies are derived to us from the Father through the Spirit.)

3. I thank God, whom I ſerve from my foreſathers [c] with a pure conſcience, that [d] without ceaſing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day:

4. Greatly deſiring to ſee thee, being mindful of thy tears, (ſhed when thou departedſt from me), that (as then I was filled with ſorrow, ſo, by ſeeing thee again) I may be filled with joy:

5. (I thank God, I ſay), when I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith which is in thee, which dwelt firſt in thy grandmother Lois, and (in) thy mother Eunice, (converted to the faith before thee, Acts 16. 1.); and I am perſuaded that (it dwells) in thee alſo.

6. Wherefore I put thee in remembrance, that thou [e] ſtir up the gift of God, which is in thee [f] by the putting on of my hands.

7. For God hath not given us the ſpirit of fear, (as under the Moſaical diſpenſation, Rom. 8. 15.); [g] but (the ſpirit) of power, and of love, and of a ſound mind.

8. Be not thou therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord, (i. e. of giving teſtimony to the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, 1 Cor. 6. which were the great things they chiefly were to teſtify, Acts 1. 8. 22. and 4. 33.; and 5. 32.), nor of me (though I am now) his priſoner (for that teſtimony): but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the goſpel, (Gr. συγκακοπάθησον, ſuffer thou evil with the preachers of it), according to the power of God (given thee for this end, ver. 7.);

9. (Even that God) who hath ſaved us, (i. e. deſigned us for ſalvation, 1 Theſſ. 5. 9. See note on Eph. 2. 7. 8.), and (in purſuance of that deſign, hath) called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace (ſee note on Tit. 3. 5. 6.) which was given (i. e. determined to be given) us in Chriſt Jeſus, before [h] the world began,

10. But is now made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, (the Lord and giver of life), who (by his death) hath aboliſhed death, and hath brought (this) [i] life and immortality to light, through the goſpel.

11. Whereunto

11. Whereunto (εἰς ὃ, for which thing) I am appointed a preacher, and an apoſtle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

12. For the which cauſe alſo I ſuffer theſe things; nevertheleſs (though I ſuffer thus) I am not aſhamed (of my hope), for I know (in) whom I have believed; and I am perſuaded that he is able to keep [k] that which I have committed to him (i. e. my ſoul and life, 1 Pet. 4. 19.) againſt (or to) that day (of recompenſe.)

13. Hold faſt the form of ſound words, which thou haſt heard of me, in faith and love which is in Chriſt Jeſus (i. e. with a firm faith, and true Chriſtian love; ſee note on chap. 2. ver. 2.)

14. That good thing which was committed to thee (i. e. the doctrine of the goſpel, 1 Tim. 6. 20.), keep by the Holy Ghoſt which dwelleth in us, (and confirms it to us, 1 John 2. 20. 27.)

15. This thou knoweſt (by meſſengers from Rome, or thoſe who travel from thence to Rome), that all they [l] which are in Aſia be turned away from (Gr. have forſaken) me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

16. The Lord give (i. e. ſhew) mercy to the [m] houſe of Oneſiphorus, (the Epheſian, chap. 4. 19.); for he oft refreſhed me (with his preſence and relief), and was not aſhamed of my chain (as the reſt of the Aſiatics were.)

17. But when he was (Gr. being) in Rome, he ſought me out very diligently, and found me.

18. The Lord (therefore) grant unto him (who ſhewed ſuch mercy to me) that he may find mercy with the Lord in that day (of recompenſe we Chriſtians expect): And in how many things he miniſtered to me at Epheſus, thou knoweſt very well.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν.] Ὥστε μὲ τὴν ἐπαγγελθεῖσαν, αἰωνίαν ζωὴν τοῖς ἀνθρώποις κηρύξαι, That I might delare that eternal life which is promiſed to men; ſo Theodoret. So Tit. 1. 1. Paul an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, κατὰ πίστιν, for the promotion, or declaration of the faith of God's elect; ſo κατὰ πᾶσαν αἰτίαν, for every cauſe, Matth. 19. 3.; Philip. 4. 11. I ſpeak not καθ' ὑστέρησιν, for want of any thing.

Ibid. [b] Ζωῆς ἐν Χριστῷ, life which is in Chriſt Jeſus.] Adam brought the ſentence of death upon us all, and the promiſe of deliverance from that death is only made to us in and through Chriſt Jeſus, by virtue of that death he ſuffered in our ſtead.

Ver. 3. [c] Ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει, with a pure conſcience.] So Acts 23. 1. I have lived in all good conſcience to this day before God; i. e. a conſcience free from inſincerity, or wilful diſobedience to the dictates of his mind, or the rule by which he thought himſelf obliged to walk; for, as touching the righteouſneſs which was required by the law, he was blameleſs; and as for his blaſphemies againſt Chriſt, and his perſecutions of his church, that he did ignorantly, in unbelief, 1 Tim. 1. 13. thinking he ought to do many things againſt the name of Jeſus, Acts 26. 9.; but yet he was not free from ſin; for he confeſſes, that upon this account he was the chief of ſinners, 1 Tim. 1. 15.

Ibid. [d] Ἀδιάλειπτον, without ceaſing, day and night.] To pray morning and evening, is to pray continually, or without ceaſing: thus Zadok and his brethren offered burnt-offerings before the Lord continually, διαπαντὸς, morning and evening, 1 Chron. 16. 42. 43. See note on 1 Theſſ. 5. 17. 18.

Ver. 6. [e] Ἀναζωπυρεῖν.] Philo ſaith (a), "That "where there is any ſpark of true probity, being "ventilated, it will ſhine and break forth into a "flame." And this is alſo true, as well of ſpiritual gifts as graces; even the gifts of miracles, of healing, and caſting out of devils, were ſtrengthened and increaſed by prayer, Matth. 17. 21. and by faith, ver. 20. and the internal gifts of wiſdom and knowledge, by reading and meditating on the word; the illumination of the Holy Spirit coming then upon gifted perſons when they were ſo employed, 1 Cor. 14. 23. 24. 25. 26. 1 Tim. 4. 13. 14. 15.; how they may be extinguiſhed, ſee Eph. 4. 30. 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. Thus Pythagoras, ſaith Jamblichus (b), purged the ſouls of the ſcholars from ignorance and ſenſual paſſions, and then ἀναζωπύρει τὸ θεῖον ἐν ἑαυτῷ, cap. 16.

Ibid. [f] Διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως, by the laying on of my hands.] The preſbytery alſo laid their hands upon him, 1 Tim. 4. 14.; but the χάρισμα, or gift here mentioned, being the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, was uſually conferred by laying on of the hands of an apoſtle, Acts 8. 17. and 19. 6. Vain therefore is the inference of Eſthius from theſe places, that ordination is a ſacrament, ſeeing the grace here mentioned is no ordinary grace, but an extraordinary gift, conferred only in thoſe times by the hands of an apoſtle, and now wholly ceaſed.

preaching of the goſpel, ἐν δυνάμει, in the power of miracles, and in the power of the Spirit of God, Rom. 15.19. and to render it effectual to the hearers, it being the power of God through faith to their ſalvation, Rom. 1. 16. and preached by the apoſtles with great power, Acts 4. 33. 1 Theſſ. 1. 5. Col. 2. 9. and partly to enable us to endure afflictions for the ſake of Chriſt, τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς δυνάμεως, the Spirit of power reſting upon us for that end, 1 Pet. 4. 14. and here, ver. 8. And the Spirit of love to Chriſt, which conſtrains us to our duty, 2 Cor. 5. 14. and caſteth out the fear of any thing we may ſuffer for the performance of it, 1 John 4. 18. And of a ſound mind, Gr. σωφρονισμοῦ, of wiſdom to diſcharge that duty, ſo as either to avoid dangers, Eph. 5. 15. 16. Col. 4. 5. by giving no offence to the Heathens, or elſe to ſpeak the word with convincing power, Luke 21. 15. and to walk ſo exactly, that they may be aſhamed to ſpeak evil of us, or do evil to us, who behold our good converſation in Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 16. All theſe were ſpiritual gifts, not now conferred in ordination, as Eſthius vainly conceives.

Ver. 9. [h] Πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before any age hath paſſed.] The promiſe that the ſeed of the woman ſhould break the ſerpent's head, being made at the beginning of the world, the promiſe of that life to which we were to be reſtored by this ſeed, and had loſt by the ſubtlety and malice of the ſerpent, is ſaid to be given πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, Tit. 1. 3. See the note there.

Note alſo, That theſe words may be connected thus, According to his purpoſe before all ages, and the grace given us in Chriſt Jeſus. And this import of the words may be confirmed from the like paſſages of the apoſtle, ſaying, God hath elected us in him before the foundations of the world, Eph. 1. 4. and promiſed us eternal life before the world began, Tit. 1. 2.

Ver. 10. [i] Φωτίσαντος ζωὴν, hath brought life and immortality to light.] It is to be acknowledged that the Heathens had, by tradition, and the light of nature, conceived ſome hope of ſome future good things to be received after this life was ended; that being abſolutely neceſſary, ſaith the apoſtle, that they might come to God, or do him any acceptable ſervice: for he that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6.: but yet this hope was very weak and feeble in them, and ſcarce credited by their philoſophers. It is ſtyled by Cicero, Tuſc. Q. 1. futurorum quoddam augurium ſeculorum, "a "ſurmiſe of future ages." It is, ſaith Seneca (c), "that which our wiſe men do promiſe, but they do "not prove." Socrates (d), even at his death, ſpeaks thus, "I hope to go hence to good men, but of "that I am not very confident; nor doth it become "any wiſe man to be poſitive that ſo it will be. I," ſaith he, "muſt now die, and you ſhall live; but "which of us is in the better ſtate, the living or "the dead, God only knows." Both he and Cebes (e) do ingenuouſly confeſs, that theſe things relating to the ſoul "were diſbelieved by the greateſt "part of mankind."

Ariſtotle (f) held, "That death was therefore "φοβερώτατον, the moſt terrible, as putting an end to "all things; neither good nor evil happening to "any man after his death: yea," he ſays, "it is "abſurd to ſay that any man can be happy af"ter death, ſince happineſs conſiſts in operation." Hence Atticus (g) reckons him among thoſe who held that ſouls could not remain after their bodies; and Origen (h) ſaith, that he did τῷ περὶ τῆς ἀθανασίας τῆς ψυχῆς λόγῳ καθηγορεῖσθαι, condemn the doctrine of the ſoul's immortality. The poets Sophocles, Euripides, Aſtydamas, agree in this, that ἄλγος δ' οὐδὲν ἀπίστου νεκροῖς, the dead are ſenſible of no grief or evil. Vide Stob. ſerm. 119. p. 602.

Lipſius (i) confeſſeth, that amongſt the Stoics this was a controverted point, and was not received by them with any full conſent; and whoſoever reads, will find them ſtill at their ifs and ands (k), not knowing whether there were any thing after death, ἢ οὐδὲν ἐστὶ τελευτήσαντι, or nothing, as Socrates in Phædo ſpeaks. Whether their ſouls ſhould be extinguiſhed, or only change their place; whether they were in a ſtate of ſenſe, or ἐν ἀναισθησίᾳ, without ſenſe; whether ſoul and body were extinguiſhed together, or not, as Cicero, Seneca, and others; or elſe were ſtill at their diſ-

Cæſar (m) declares, "That death removes all our "evils, and our torments, as leaving no further "place for joy or fear." And Pliny (n), "That "neither ſoul nor body hath any more ſenſe after "death than before it was born."

Cicero (o) begins his diſcourſe upon this ſubject, with a profeſſion, That he intended to deliver nothing as fixed and certain, but only as probable, and having ſome likelihood of truth. And having reckoned up the different ſentiments of the philoſophers about it, he concludes thus, "Which of theſe "opinions is true, ſome god muſt tell us; which is "moſt like to truth, is a great queſtion (p)." And when he had confirmed, as much as he was able, the doctrine of the ſoul's immortality, he ingenuouſly confeſſes, Catervæ veniunt contradicentium, "that "his opinion was contradicted, not only by whole "troops of the ſect of Epicurus, but alſo by the "moſt learned of the other ſects (q)."

Plutarch (r) ſaith, "That if men will be reſtrained "from their evil courſes by fear, they muſt be kept "under the ſuperſtition of the dread of hades; but "to them who have caſt off thoſe fears, muſt be "propounded ἡ περὶ τὸ μυθῶδες τῆς ἀϊδιότητος ἐλπὶς, the "fabulous hope of immortality. And this," ſaith he, "is one great benefit of philoſophy, that it hath "taught us to look upon that death which others "fear ὡς μηδὲν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, as nothing to us." Now, the philoſophers themſelves ſaw the evil effects that this denial or doubting of theſe things would have upon the lives of men, viz.

1. That it would yield a great encouragement to men to go on in their evil ways: "For if death," ſaith Socrates, in Phæd. p. 80. A. "be the extinc-"tion of the whole, or a freedom from all evils, "ἰσιαῖον ἂν αὖ τοῖς κακοῖς ἀποθανοῦσι, this will be good "news to the wicked, that they have nothing to "ſuffer."

2. That it tended to diſcourage men from leading virtuous and pious lives, as cramping all their hopes of happineſs: for, as Dionyſius Halicarnaſſæus well obſerves, "If the ſoul, when ſeparated from the "body, periſheth, it is not eaſy to diſcern how good "men can be happy, who receive no fruit of their "virtue here, but often periſh by it (s)."

3. That it very much ſtaggers our patience and perſeverance in virtue, and our concern for fidelity and equity, when we muſt ſuffer for them in this world: for it is truly ſaid by Cicero (t), "that it is "not poſſible for any one to have that eſteem for "faith and equity, as to endure the moſt dreadful "puniſhments to preſerve them, unleſs he be aſſured "that the things he hath aſſented to cannot be "falſe." See the note on Heb. 11. 6. And yet, after all this uncertainty, it is worthy of our Deiſts to reflect on Plato's inference from his diſcourſe upon this ſubject, viz. that though no wiſe man could be poſitive in theſe things, yet it became him to do his utmoſt to obtain virtue and wiſdom, καλὸν γὰρ τὸ ἄθλον, καὶ ἡ ἐλπὶς μεγάλη, becauſe great was the hope, and the prize excellent, and that it was worthy of them κινδυνῆσαι, to make a trial, though with hazard, as if we did believe them; καλὸς γὰρ ὁ κίνδυνος, for it is, ſaith he, a noble trial, and it behoves us to have theſe things impreſſed upon our ſouls.

As for that immortality the body ſhall obtain at the reſurrection, the Heathens knew and believed nothing of it; they laughed at it, and looked upon it as a thing impoſſible, and unworthy of God to do, and without any example to convince them that it might be done. Hence then we ſee the neceſſity that this life and immortality ſhould be brought to light by the goſpel; and what continual thanks we owe to the bleſſed Jeſus, who hath, by his death, not only removed the fear and ſting, but even the being of death, and hath procured a bleſſed immortality, not only for the ſoul, but the body alſo.

" tal ſoul, which hath its original from God, dwells " in the body; now, if any one embezzles, or evil- " ly intreats that which is committed to him by " man, he is accounted a wicked and perfidious man, " εἰ δὲ τις τὸ σφετέρου σώματος ἐκδύλλει τὴν παρακαταθήκην τοῦ " Θεοῦ λελῆθέναι δοκεῖ τὸν ἀδικούμενον; if therefore any one " caſts the depoſitum of God out of his body by ſelf- " murder, can he hope to conceal himſelf from him " that is injured?" And Philo (u), in like manner, ſaith, " That God hath given to man a ſoul, ſpeech, " and ſenſe, which he muſt endeavour ſo to keep, " that he who committed them to him may find " no cauſe to blame him for his cuſtody." And again (x), " This is the praiſe of the wiſe man, that " he keeps the ſacred depoſitum of the ſoul, ſpeech, " ſenſe, the divine wiſdom, and human underſtand- " ing, purely, and without deceit, not to himſelf, " but only to him who committed them to him." And again, lib. de Abr. p. 302. " No wiſe man," ſaith he, " is offended that any one calls for τὴν πα- " ρακαταθήκην, his depoſitum; why therefore ſhould " he be offended that God, or nature, call for that " which they have intruſted with us?" And Hermas ſaith, lib. 2. mandat. 2. " They that lie, defraud the " Lord, not rendering to him τὴν παρακαταθήκην ἣν ἔλαβον, " the depoſitum they received from him; for they " received a ſpirit free from falſehood, and there- " fore by lying ἐμίαναν τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ παρακαταθήκην, they " have defiled God's depoſitum." The Jews (y) make mention of two depoſitums of God; the lamp which is in us, or the ſoul; and the lamp without us, which is the law; or, according to Philo (z), θείων παρακαταθήκη ἐφίων, the depoſitum of the divine myſteries; and they introduce God ſpeaking thus: " My light or lamp is in thy hand, and thy lamp, " which is thy ſoul, is in mine: if thou ſhalt dili- " gently keep my lamp, I will keep thine; if thou " extinguiſheſt mine, I will put out thine." This depoſitum they, dying, did commit into the hands of God; as you may ſee Sepher Tephiloth Luſitanorum (a). The apoſtle ſeems to have reſpect to both theſe depoſitums in his epiſtles to Timothy; to the light of the goſpel, when he ſaith, τὴν παρακαταθήκην φύλαξον, Keep that which is committed to thee, 1 Tim. 6 20. and here, ver. 14.; to the lamp within us, ver. 13.

Ver. 15. [1] Ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, which are in Aſia.] This Oecumenius and Theophylact expound thus, οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, τέλεσιν, ἐκ τῆς Ἀσίας, " thoſe of Aſia, that either " went with him to Rome, or came to him there, " or were found there at his coming," in the time of his diſtreſs forſook all converſe with him for fear of Nero. But this expoſition ſeems not conſiſtent with the words. For, 1. He ſaith, οἶδας τοῦτο, this thou knoweſt: now, Timothy, being not at Rome, could not well know what was done there, and therefore the apoſtle gives him an account how all men had deſerted him in his firſt defence, chap. 4. 16.; but being then in Aſia, or Achaia, he might know what happened there. 2. The words, ἀπεστράφησάν με, have been averſe from me, ſeem to import a departure from St Paul and his doctrine, and may be rendered, they have turned me off. He having therefore told them long before, that after his departure grievous wolves ſhould enter in, not ſparing the flock; and that from themſelves ſhould ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things, to draw away diſciples after them, Acts 20. 29. 30. and charging Timothy to ſtay ſome time at Epheſus to oppoſe himſelf to the falſe teachers of the Jewiſh nation, and to exhort the Epheſians not to give heed to theſe teachers of the law, 1 Tim. 1. 7. it ſeems moſt proper to refer theſe words to the rejecting St Paul as an adverſary to the law, by the perſuaſions of the Cerinthians and Ebionites, who laid this charge againſt him.

Ver. 16. [m] Ὀνησιφόρου οἶκον, the houſehold of Oneſiphorus.] Oneſiphorus ſeemed to be dead when Paul writ this, ſaith Grotius, on the place: and if ſo, ſaith Eſthius, here is a ſtrong confirmation of the practice of praying for the ſaints deceaſed. I anſwer, 1. That it follows not that Oneſiphorus was dead, becauſe St Paul here mentions, and in the cloſe of this epiſtle ſalutes his family, without mention of him: the reaſon of that being this, becauſe Oneſiphorus was not yet returned from Rome to Epheſus, where his family was; but, as Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, ſay on 2 Tim. 4. 19. was then ἐν Ῥώμῃ, at Rome, ſerving St Paul. 2. The apoſtle here only prays that he might find mercy at the great day of recompenſe, as doth our liturgy, and all the ancient liturgies, for " deliverance in the " hour of death, and at the day of judgment;" which is perfectly excluſive of prayers ſuppoſed to be made for ſouls in purgatory, which, if they do them any good, muſt be ſuppoſed to do it before that day.

Ver. 18. Δῴη αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος εὑρεῖν ἔλεος παρὰ Κυρίου, The Lord grant he may find mercy from the Lord.] Here is a plain example of the known rule of the grammarians, that the noun is frequently repeated for the pronoun; ſo Gen. 19. 24. Jehovah rained fire and brimſtone, Meet Jehovah, Κύριος παρὰ Κυρίῳ, from Jehovah. So Exodus 24. 1. 2. 3. He, i. e. Jehovah, ver. 3. ſaid to Moſes, Aſcend, el Jehovah, i. e. to me; and 1 Sam. 3. 21. Jehovah appeared to Samuel in Shilo, bidevar Jehovah, by the word of the Lord. So Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact ſay here, τυτέστι, παρ' ἑαυτῷ; and that it is the cuſtom of the ſcriptures ſo to ſpeak, they prove from Gen. 19. 24. not fearing the anathema, which the great council of Sirmium, through ignorance of the Hebrew tongue, pronounced againſt them who did ſo interpret it.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. THOU therefore, my ſon, (follow not the example of thoſe that turn from me, but) be (thou) ſtrong in) and through) the grace that is (given thee) in Chriſt Jeſus. (See chap. 1. ver. 6. 7. 8.)

2. And [a] the things which thou haſt heard of (from) me (eſtabliſhed) by many witneſſes, the ſame commit thou to faithful men, who ſhall be able to teach others alſo.

3. Thou therefore (aſſiſted by this grace) endure hardſhip, as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt.

4. (Not loving this preſent world, or intangling thyſelf with the affairs of it;) for no man that warreth, [b] intangleth himſelf with (any other of) the affairs of this life, (but quits all theſe concerns) that he may (be more at leiſure to) pleaſe him who hath choſen him to be a ſoldier.

5. And (it is in this militia, as in the wreſtling at the Olympic games, where) if a man alſo ſtrive (with another) for maſtery, yet is he not crowned, unleſs he ſtrives lawfully, (according to the rules of wreſtling, i. e. unleſs he wreſtle naked, and have put off all the cloaths which might hinder him in wreſtling, or give another advantage to take hold of him.)

6. (Nor let it diſcourage thee, that thou doſt not receive thy wages preſently, as other ſoldiers do; for) the huſbandman that laboureth, firſt (Gr. firſt labouring) muſt be (afterwards) partaker of the fruits (of his labour.)

7. Conſider what I ſay; and the [c] Lord give thee underſtanding in all things (belonging to thy duty.)

8. (And to fortify thee under thy ſufferings) [d] remember, that Jeſus Chriſt, [e] of the ſeed of David, (after all his ſufferings), was raiſed from the dead, according to the teſtimony of) my goſpel:

9. [f] Wherein (for which goſpel) I ſuffer trouble (from the Jews, Acts 25. 19. 26. and 6. 7. and others) as an evil doer, even unto bonds; but (though I am bound) the word of God (which I preach) is not bound, (but hath its free courſe.)

10. (And) therefore (for this cauſe) I endure all (theſe) things (chearfully) [g] for the elects ſake, (Col. 1. 24.), that they (being confirmed by my example in ſuffering, 2 Cor. 1. 6. and 14. 15.) may alſo obtain the ſalvation which is (tendered) in (and through) Chriſt Jeſus, with eternal glory.

11. It is a faithful ſaying, (that by Chriſt Jeſus we ſhall obtain this ſalvation.) For if we be dead (Gr. have died) with him (in baptiſm, by dying unto ſin), we ſhall alſo live with him, (in conformity to his reſurrection, Rom. 6. 8.)

12. If we ſuffer (as he did), we ſhall alſo reign with him: (but) if (through perſecutions) we deny him, he alſo will deny us, (Matth. 10. 33.)

13. If we believe not (theſe promiſes of ſalvation to his faithful ſufferers), yet he abideth faithful; he cannot deny (what he) himſelf (hath promiſed.)

14. Of theſe things put them in remembrance, (in the churches of Chriſt), charging them before the Lord, that they [h] ſtrive not about words (which tend) to no profit, (but rather) to the ſubverting of the hearers.

15. Study to ſhew thyſelf approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, [i] rightly dividing the word of truth.

16. But ſhun profane and vain babblings; for they will increaſe to more ungodlineſs, (rendering men more and more profane.)

17. And their word will eat as doth a canker. (or gangrene, infecting the whole body): of whom (i. e. of the number of which profane talkers) are [k] Hymeneus and Philetus;

18. Who concerning the truth have erred, ſaying that the reſurrection is paſt already; and (by that doctrine) overthrow the faith of ſome.

19. Nevertheleſs, [l] the foundation of God (the hope and promiſe of the reſurrection) ſtandeth ſure, [m] having this (as the) ſeal (of it), [n] The Lord knoweth them that are his. And (therefore), Let every one [o] that nameth the name of Chriſt, depart [p] from iniquity.

20. (And be not diſturbed, that ſuch heretics as theſe ariſe out of the members of the church:) but (ἐν, ſo) in a great houſe (ſuch as the church is) there are not only veſſels of gold and ſilver, but alſo of wood and of earth; and ſome (viz. thoſe veſſels of gold and ſilver, repreſenting the orthodox Chriſtian, 1 Cor. 3. 12. are εἰς τιμὴν) to honour, and ſome (viz. thoſe of wood and earth, repreſenting the heterodox) to (uſes of) diſhonour.

21. If a man therefore purge himſelf from thoſe (falſe doctrines, and the teachers of them), he ſhall be a veſſel unto honour, [q] ſanctified and meet for the maſter's uſe, (ſerviceable to Chriſt, the maſter of the family), and prepared unto every good work.

22. (Avoid theſe therefore, and) [c] flee alſo youthful luſts: but follow righteouſneſs, faith, charity, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23. But (the) fooliſh and unlearned queſtions (of the Jews; ſee note on 1 Tim. 4. 7. Tit. 3. 9.) avoid, knowing that they do gender ſtrifes.

24. And (for) the ſervant of the Lord muſt not ſtrive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient,

25. In meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves (to the goſpel), if God [c] peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgment of the truth (they contend now againſt);

26. And that they may recover themſelves (or awake) out of the ſnare of the devil, who are (now) taken captive by him at his will (Gr. εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα, to the performance of the will of God; penitents being turned from the power of Satan unto God, Acts 26. 18. Col. 1. 13.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 2. [a] Ἤκουσας παρ' ἐμοῦ, The things which thou haſt heard from me.] "That Depoſitum, "c. 1. 14. which I committed to thee, in the pu-"blic aſſembly, at thine ordination, do thou alſo, "in like manner, depoſit with other faithful men, "that the truth may be continued in an uninterrup-"ted ſucceſſion of ſuch perſons:" ſo Mr Walker. "The things agreed on, and conſented to by all the "other apoſtles, do thou commit to able men, and "appoint them as biſhops of the ſeveral churches "under thee:" ſo Dr Hammond. I think there is no foundation for all this in the text, no intimation that theſe things were taught him at his ordination, or that they were things agreed on, and conſented to by all the apoſtles; as if they had met and conſulted about a ſyſtem of articles of faith, and good life, to be held by all that taught the Chriſtian faith; or that God choſe this way to continue down the faith, in an uninterrupted ſucceſſion, from age to age, of ſuch perſons; or, that this was a commiſſion to St Timothy to appoint biſhops under him in the ſeveral churches of Aſia; for he doth not appoint him, as he did Titus, to ordain elders in every city, chap. 1. 5. the biſhops of Epheſus, and the adjacent cities, being before not only appointed, but convened by himſelf, Acts 20. 27. 28. The things which Timothy had heard confirmed by many witneſſes, ſeem to refer to Chriſt's death, his reſurrection and aſcenſion; which were matters of teſtimony, and contained the prime doctrines which St Paul delivered to the churches, 1 Cor. 15. 3. 4. and which were confirmed by the teſtimony of St Paul, the twelve apoſtles, and five hundred brethren, ibid. ver. 5. 6. 7. 8. Luke 24. 50. 51. 52. Or to the myſtery of godlineſs, mentioned 1 Tim. 3. 16. and teſtified, in every part of it, by men and angels. I grant alſo, that the apoſtle ſeems to refer to ſome form of doctrine delivered to them who received the Chriſtian faith, when he ſpeaks of the myſtery of faith, and the myſtery of godlineſs, 1 Tim. 3. 9. 15. 16.; of the firſt principles of the oracles of God, Heb. 5. 12. and of the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, chap. 6. 1. 2. 3. 4. enumerating them in the epiſtle to the Hebrews; there being a faith once, and at once delivered to the ſaints, Jude 2. in which they were to ſtand faſt, and for which they were to contend, Phil. 1. 27. And that there was alſo a παραθήκη, or depoſitum of Chriſtian doctrine delivered to them who were to preach, and inſtruct others in the faith; and which he commands Timothy to keep, 1 Tim. 6. 20. 21. as being intruſted with it, in oppoſition to thoſe who had erred from the faith, which he calls the form of ſound words, which he had been taught, and which he was to keep in faith, and love of the truth, 2 Tim. 1. 13. and that good thing committed to him, ver. 14. which he was to keep by the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit which leadeth into all truth, the unction which taught them all things belonging to their office, 1 John 2. 20. 27. the things in which he was to continue, knowing of whom he had learned them, 2 Tim. 3. 14. I laſtly grant, That all the fathers, from Irenæus downwards, ſpeak of ſuch a ſymbol of faith delivered to the church by the apoſtles, and their diſciples, which the church received from them, and diſtributed to her ſons, being the one and the ſame faith which the church retained throughout the world, than which they believed neither leſs nor more, and which, for ſubſtance, was the ſame with the apoſtles creed. This I have (b) elſewhere largely proved, and thence demonſtrated the falſehood of the whole doctrine of the church of Rome, and of her new creed delivered as neceſſary to be believed unto ſalvation: and if Obadiah Walker means no more, I ſhall not contend with him.

Ver. 4. [b] Ἐμπλέκεται ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματείαις, intangleth himſelf with the affairs of this world.] The apoſtle here, by two plain ſimilitudes, requires Timothy, as a good ſoldier, and biſhop of the church of Chriſt, and an evangeliſt, not to engage himſelf in any temporal affairs, or ſecular negotiations; of which the firſt is taken from the compariſon of a ſoldier, who was, by the (c) Roman laws, Armis, non privatis negotiis occupari: "To be employed wholly at his "arms, and not in any private buſineſs." The ſecond is taken from the ſimilitude of wreſtlers (d), who did not ſtrive, according to the laws, unleſs they wreſtled naked, and put off all their garments, and therefore could not win the crown of laurel: hence is that inquiry of St Baſil, τίς στέφανοῖ πότε τον μὴ ἀπδύοντα πρὸς τὸν ἀντίπαλον, Who crowns him who comes not naked to his adverſary? And thoſe words of St Chryſoſtom (e), "If thou art a wreſtler, thou "muſt come naked to the combat; thou muſt put "off the affairs of this life, and be made a wreſtler; "diveſt thyſelf of worldly cares, for it is the time of "conflict." Hence the apoſtolical canons declare, can. 4. thoſe biſhops, prieſts, or deacons, ought to be depoſed, who do κοσμικὰς φροντίδας ἀναλαμβάνειν, immerſe themſelves in worldly affairs. Cyprian (f) repreſents it as a thing worthy of the divine judgments, that biſhops, contemning the office, "became procu"tors for ſecular affairs." And this practice was condemned by the general council (g) of Chalcedon, can. 2. 12. and by a council of Carthage, as repugnant to theſe words of the apoſtle; and by the council of Sardica, can. 8. And even before St Cyprian was biſhop, this was eſtabliſhed in (h) Africa by council, from this very text, No man that warreth, intangleth himſelf with the affairs of this life.

Ver. 7. ᵉ Δώη.] Other manuſcripts read, δώσει γὰρ, For the Lord will give thee underſtanding, &c. And δώη is oft put for δώσει; ſo Gen. 27. 28. Δώη σοι ὁ Θεὸς, The Lord ſhall give thee of the dew of heaven.

Ver. 8. ᵈ Μνημόνευε, Remember,] To maintain this againſt the unbelieving Jews, That Jeſus Chriſt, the promiſed Meſſiah, of the ſeed of David, not of Joſeph, was raiſed from the dead, according to the goſpel that I preach, 1 Cor. 15.

Ibid. ᵉ Of the ſeed of David.] It is certain, that the Jews, before our Saviour's time, thought the Meſſiah the Son of David, was not to die; and therefore, when Chriſt had told them, he was to be lifted up, they anſwer, We have heard out of the law, that the Meſſiah abideth for ever; and how ſayeſt thou, that he muſt be lifted up? John 12. 34. And when firſt he tells his diſciples of it, Peter began to rebuke him, with an Abſit, This ſhall not be unto thee, Matth. 16. 22. When he tells them again of it, They underſtood not the word, ſaith St Mark, chap. 9. 32. It was hid from them that they perceived it not, ſaith St Luke, chap. 9. 45. And again, They underſtood none of theſe things, and this ſaying was hid from them; neither knew they the things which were ſpoken, chap. 18. 34. Surely Chriſt's words were plain, They ſhall put him to death; but they knew not how to reconcile them with their received doctrine, that he was to abide for ever, John 12. 34. and therefore, becauſe Iſaiah ſpeaks ſo plainly of a Meſſiah who was to ſuffer death, they invented, afterward, (i) a diſtinction betwixt Meſſiah of the tribe of Ephraim, the ſon of Joſeph, who was to die, and Meſſiah of the tribe of Judah, the ſon of David, who was to reign, and conquer, and never die. This diſtinction is to be found in their Talmud, in the Targum upon the Canticles, chap 4. 5. chap. 7. 3. in Bereſchith Rabba, in Gen. xlix. 14. in R. Salomon, and Kimchi, on Zech. 12. 10. Now, if this invention obtained in the times of St Paul, he might here have reſpect unto it; if not, becauſe in the dialogue of Juſtin with Trypho, we read nothing of it, their notion, that the Meſſiah of the ſeed of David could not die, muſt be confuted by his reſurrection from the dead.

Ibid. Remember that Jeſus Chriſt, of the ſeed of David, was raiſed from the dead.] Theodoret here obſerves, that Simon Magus (k) began to broach his hereſies about this time; and he, and all his followers, denied that Chriſt had taken fleſh upon him, ſaying, that his incarnation, or anthropiſm, was only in appearance, or ἐν φαντασίᾳ; and, in oppoſition to this hereſy, he is here ſtyled Jeſus Chriſt of the ſeed of David; and becauſe from that hereſy it muſt follow, that he could not truly die, or ſuffer in the fleſh, and ſo could not be truly raiſed from the dead; therefore the apoſtle bids Timothy remember, that

Ver. 10. [g] Διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς, for the elects ſake;] i. e. For the ſake of Chriſtians, who are all γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, a choſen generation; ſee the note on 1 Pet. 2. 9.; and who may be confirmed in the faith by the example of my patient ſufferings, and continuing in it, may obtain that ſalvation to which they are called. Vain therefore are theſe following notes of Eſthius; 1. That there is a certain election of God, which hath infallibly choſen us to ſalvation, unleſs he means this of a conditional election, God having infallibly determined to ſave them who make their calling and election ſure, by perſeverance in good works, 2 Pet. 1. 10. 2. That as Paul ſuffered thoſe things only for the elect, ſo Chriſt died only for them: for he taſted death for every man, Heb. 1. 9. He died for all, 1 Tim. 2. 6.; not for our ſins only, but for the ſins of the whole world, 1 John 2. 2. For them that periſh, Rom. 14. 15. 3. That neither Chriſt did, nor ought we to do, any thing that the reprobates may obtain ſalvation: which is horribly falſe; Chriſt's preaching to the unbelieving Jews being intended for their ſalvation, John 3. 17. and 12. 47. and 5. 34. 40. For the blinded Jews the apoſtle prays, and labours that they might be ſaved, Rom. 9. 1. 11. 14.

Ver. 14. [h] Μὴ λογομαχεῖν, that they ſtrive not about words.] Here we learn, 1. What are the things which ought not to be matters of contention among Chriſtians. 1. Such things in which we differ from each other rather in words than ſenſe, mean the ſame thing, but differ only in the expreſſing of our ſentiments: which rule obſerved, would put an end to many of our controverſies. 2. Such things as tend to little or no profit, either as to edification in the faith, or edifying of the body in love, Eph. 4. 16. See note on 1 Tim. 1. 4. and chap. 6. 3. Tit. 3. 9. Or, by knowing which, we may be the more learned, but not the better Chriſtians. Again, hence we learn why we ſhould not contend about ſuch things, viz. 1. Becauſe they tend to beget ſtrife and contentions, ver. 23. 1 Tim. 1. 4. which divide Chriſtians into parties, and diſſolve or obſtruct Chriſtian charity. 2. Becauſe they tend to the diſturbance of the hearers, they not knowing to which party to adhere; and alſo to their ſubverſion, cauſing them to doubt of the truth of that faith about which the contending parties cannot agree.

Ver. 15. [i] Ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον, rightly dividing, or handling the word of truth.] This word ὀρθοτομεῖν, is a ſacrificial word, relating to the right dividing of the ſacrifice, which was to be laid upon the altar, by cutting off, and laying aſide thoſe parts which were not to be offered, and ſevering them from thoſe that were: and to this ſenſe St Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, refer the word here, ſaying, That he requires Timothy to ſeparate from the preaching of the word, all noxious and idle queſtions, πάντα τὰ περιττὰ, all ſuperfluous things, and give his hearers only the ſincere milk of the word. And this ſenſe agrees well with the preceding, and the following words. Others think it refers to the cutting out a ſtrait path to walk in; and ſo it is an admonition, ſaith Theodoret, to keep cloſe to the truth of the goſpel, in all his exhortations, τὸν κανόνα τῶν θείων λόγων ἀκριβοῦντα, following the canon of the holy ſcriptures.

Ver. 17. [k] Ὑμέναιος, &c. Hymeneus and Philetus.] That theſe two were Gnoſtic teachers, none of the ancients do inſinuate; nor did the Gnoſtics teach, that the reſurrection was paſt already, but that the fleſh was not fit to riſe, and that it was incapable of ſalvation and of incorruption. So Irænus (l) often doth inform us, by ſaying, They deny the ſalvation of the fleſh, denying it to be capable of incorruption; and with him agree Pſeud. Ignatius (m), the apoſtolical conſtitutions, and others. Valentinus (n), who flouriſhed only A. D. 145, and ſo could not be touched at in theſe words, was of the ſame opinion, ſay all the ancients. So that Tertullian muſt either be miſtaken, when, ſpeaking of them who held the reſurrection was paſt already, he adds, Id de ſe Valentiniani adſeverant, or means this not of Valentinus himſelf, whom he there numbers with thoſe qui reſurrectionem carnis infringunt, "who deny the "reſurrection of the fleſh," but of ſome of his followers.

But then Irenæus (o) informs us, that this was part of the hereſy of Menander, who taught reſurrectionem per id quod eſt in eum baptiſma accipere ejus diſcipulos; "That his diſciples obtained "the reſurrection by his baptiſm, and ſo could die "no more, but were to perſevere immortal." Juſtin Martyr (p) alſo ſaith, he perſuaded his diſciples, ὡς μὴ ἀποθνήσκειν, that they ſhould not die. He taught, ſaith Timothy (q) prieſt of Conſtantinople, That "they who received his baptiſm ſhould "be immortal, ὡς μηκέτι ἀποθνήσκειν, and ſhould never "die." Now, he was cotemporary to Simon Magus, and ſo might be alſo with St Paul. See note on 1 Cor. 15. 12. 44. and Euſeb. h. eccl. l. 3. c. 26. Tertul. de anima, c. 50.

Eph. 1. 13. 4. 30. and were eſtabliſhed in the truth of the goſpel; the gifts of the Spirit they had already received, according to Chriſt's promiſe, being a confirmation of that glorious redemption he had farther promiſed.

Ibid. [n] Ἔγνω Κύριος τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ, the Lord knoweth who are his.] i. e. He owns and approves thoſe he hath commiſſioned to reveal his mind to others; for this expreſſion is taken from Numb. 16. 5. where Corah, Dathan, and Abiram riſe up againſt Moſes and Aaron, declaring they took too much upon them, in pretending the one to be their prophet, and the mouth of God to them; the other to be the high prieſt, whom God had conſecrated to his peculiar ſervice above all others of the tribe of Levi. Now, to this imputation Moſes replies, according to the Septuagint, Ἔγνω ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ, God knoweth who are his, and by him ſeparated to his ſervice, and will maintain their cauſe and calling, againſt all oppoſers; as in that inſtance he did in a wonderful manner, cauſing the earth to open, and ſwallow them up; ſo alſo will God own us his apoſtles againſt Hymeneus and Philetus, and all that ſet up againſt us and our doctrine. As therefore Moſes ſaid then to the Iſraelites, Depart you from the tents of thoſe men, καὶ ἀπέστησαν, and they departed; ſo ſay I now to all Chriſtians, Let them depart from this impiety, i. e. from theſe pernicious doctrines which increaſe to ungodlineſs, and cauſe men to make ſhipwreck of faith and a good conſcience.

Ibid. [o] That nameth the name of Chriſt.] i. e. That profeſſeth to own him, or to be his diſciples; ſo Iſaiah 26. 33. τὸ ὄνομα σοῦ ὀνομάζομεν, we have no other God but thee, we name thy name: ſee Iſaiah 43. 7. 63. 19. Pſal. 80. 19. Gen. 4. 26. 2 Chron. 12. 13.

So that theſe words may thus be rendered, "Let every one that names the "name of Chriſt depart from falſehood;" i. e. let him preſerve himſelf from the pernicious errors of theſe apoſtates from the truth.

Ver. 21. [q] Ἡγιασμένον, ſanctified.] The veſſels of the ſanctuary were conſecrated to the ſervice of God, and were alſo, ſaith the apoſtle, purified by the ſprinkling of the blood upon them, Heb. 9. 21. And ſo are Chriſtians ſprinkled by the blood of Jeſus from their ſins, and conſecrated, by baptiſm, to his ſervice, and ſo made meet for the ſervice of God. (See the reading of the text juſtified, Examen Millii, in locum.)

Ibid. Ἐζωγρωμένοι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα, who are taken captive by him at his will.] Some refer this to the devil, as being the neareſt ſubſtantive to the relative, ἐκεῖνος. But, 1. This ſeems not agreeable to the uſe of the two relatives, which, when they come together, ſeldom relate to the ſame perſon. 2. Satan is the neareſt ſubſtantive rather in place than in ſenſe; the words being capable of this conſtruction, " If peradventure God will give them repentance " to do his will, that they who are taken captive " by the devil, may awake out of his ſnare. This is the ſenſe which beſt accordeth with the work of converſion, and repentance, which is a recovering men from the ſervice of Satan, to the ſervice of God, Acts 26. 18. a freeing them from ſin, that they may be ſervants of God, Rom. 6. 17.; a delivering men from the power of darkneſs, and tranſlating them into the kingdom of his Son, Col. 1. 13.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. THIS know alſo, that in the laſt days (of the Jewiſh œconomy, and the erecting of Chriſt's kingdom; ſee note on 1 Tim. 4. 1.) perilous times ſhall come.

2. [a] For men ſhall be lovers of their own ſelves, (i. e. their own temporal pleaſures and profits), covetous, boaſters, proud, blaſphemers, (evil ſpeakers), diſobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, (or profane),

3. Without natural affection, truce-breakers, falſe accuſers, incontinent, fierce, (or cruel), deſpiſers of thoſe that are good,

4. Traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God;

5. Having a form of godlineſs, but denying the power thereof: from ſuch turn away.

6. For of this ſort are they which [b] creep into houſes, and lead captive ſilly women laden with ſins, led away with divers luſts,

7. Ever learning (of new teachers), and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

8. Now as [c] Jannnes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, (when working his miracles in Egypt before Pharaoh), ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth; (being) men of corrupt minds, [d] reprobate concerning the faith, (Tit. 1. 14. 15. 16.)

9. But [e] they ſhall proceed no farther, (Gr. not much farther): for their folly ſhall be manifeſt to all men, as theirs alſo was, (i. e. the folly of Jannes and Jambres.)

10. But (be not troubled at ſuch times, or perſons, having in me good experience of the power and readineſs of God to deliver them who ſuffer for his ſake, for) [f] thou haſt fully known my doctrine, (my) manner of life, (my) purpoſe (to adhere to Chriſt, ſeeking his glory, not my own, and to promote his goſpel to the utmoſt, my) faith, long-ſuffering, (2 Cor. 6. 6.) charity, (1 Cor. 8. 13. and 9. 22. 2 Cor. 11. 29. my) patience,

11. (The) perſecutions, afflictions which came unto me at Antioch, (Acts 13. 50.), at Iconium, (chap. 14. 2.), at Lyſtra, (where I was ſtoned, ver 19.); what perſecutions I endured (from the Jews): but out of them all the Lord delivered me.

12. Yea, and all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer perſecution, (eſpecially in ſuch perilous times; and at all times, either openly or ſecretly, from the hatred and malice of wicked men, or from their taunts and calumnies, which are ſtyled perſecutions, Gal. 4. 29. Nor is it to be expected that it ſhould be otherwiſe.)

13. But (δέ, for) evil men and [g] ſeducers (impoſtors) will (till the wrath of God takes hold upon them) wax worſe and worſe, deceiving, and being deceived.

14. But continue thou in the things which thou haſt learned (from me), and haſt been aſſured of, knowing of whom thou haſt learned them;

15. And that from a child thou haſt known the holy ſcriptures, which are able to make thee wiſe to ſalvation, through faith which is in Chriſt Jeſus.

16. [h] All ſcripture is given by inſpiration of God, and is (Gr. being inſpired by God, is alſo) profitable for doctrine, (to teach us what we are to believe), for reproof, (or conviction of error), for correction (and reformation of vice, and) for inſtruction in (the way of) righteouſneſs:

17. That the man of God (or teacher of it) may be perfect, (both as to his own practice and his teaching others, and ſo) thoroughly furniſhed (not to this, or that only, but) to all good works (belonging to his office.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 2. [a] Ἔσονται γὰρ ἄνθρωποι.] That the apoſtle here ſpeaks of ſuch perſons as were in being when this epiſtle was indited, is evident from his command to Timothy, to turn away from them, and from the deſcription of them.

That they were not the Gnoſtics, or the followers of of Simon Magus, ſeems apparent: 1. Becauſe Simon Magus could not make the times perilous by any oppoſition he could make to Chriſtianity, he being a deſpicable and beggarly magician, of whoſe power, or endeavour to perſecute the Chriſtians, I remember not one word in church-hiſtory applicable to the times of this epiſtle; but that the Jews were zealous perſecutors of them, not only in Judea, but through all parts of the world, where they were diſperſed, both ſcripture and Juſtin Martyr fully teſtify; and the ſuppoſed combination betwixt the Jews and Gnoſtics is not only groundleſs, but incredible: for what accord could there be betwixt him who ſet up for a god, yea, for a father over all, and them who were zealous for the true God, and hated idolatry with a perfect hatred? or between them who had the higheſt veneration for the law and the prophets, and him who taught they were not at all to be regarded? 2. Becauſe the Jews had a form of knowledge, Rom. 2. 20. and a zeal for God, Rom. 9. 1. and a ſettled form of worſhipping the true God; they were great zealots for the obſervation of the ſabbath, and all the ſacrifices and inſtitutions required by the law of Moſes, and ſerved God frequently day and night, Acts 26. 7. and ſo they had a form of godlineſs, though not worſhipping God in the ſpirit, Philip. 3. 3. but only with theſe carnal ordinances they denied the power thereof: but what form of godlineſs do we find in Simon Magus and his follows in the times of the apoſtles? What profeſſion of Chriſtianity could he make, who ſet himſelf to oppoſe the apoſtles, and the doctrine which they taught? See a third argument againſt this expoſition, ver. 9.

But that theſe characters agree to the Jews, and particularly to the Judaizing Chriſtians, and falſe teachers, is evident from ſcripture and church-hiſtory, and from the writings of Joſephus. For Rom. 1. 29. 30. 31. we have mention of Gentiles that were covetous, proud, boaſters, diſobedient to parents, without natural affection, truce-breakers, cruel, unclean, unthankful; and chap. 2. ver. 21. the Jew is condemned as doing the ſame things; and ver. 22. 24. as guilty of adultery and blaſphemy. They were blaſphemers, and falſe accuſers of the apoſtles, as if they walked after the fleſh, 2 Cor. 10. 2. contradicting and blaſpheming Chriſtianity, Acts 13. 45; they repreſented it to all the world when it was firſt preached, as an atheiſtical ſect (t), and were the authors of all the vile ſtories which the Heathens objected againſt it: and in deſpiſing of the apoſtles and Chriſtians, they were deſpiſers of thoſe that were good. They were great lovers and admirers of themſelves, proud, boaſters, and high-minded, boaſting of God as their father, and of their knowledge of the law, Rom. 2. 17. 23. magnifying themſelves above others; ſee note on 2 Cor. 11. 12. 20.; glorying in their circumciſion, ver. 18.; and in their being of the ſeed of Abraham, ver. 22. Philip. 3. 5.; and exalting themſelves upon theſe accounts above the Gentiles, whom they ſtyled dogs, and ſons of the earth, and uncircumciſed, whilſt they were the noble, the ſons of God, and his beloved people. They were διάβολοι, contentious, and obeyed not the truth, Rom. 2. 8. Philip. 1. 15. 16.: they were covetous, perverting others for filthy lucre's ſake, Tit. 1. 11.; counting gain godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 5.; minding earthly things, Philip. 3. 19.: they were fierce, heady, cruel in their perſecutions of the Chriſtians, 1 Theſſ. 2. 15. 16.: they were traitors and truce-breakers in their revoltings from the Roman government: they were diſobedient to their parents in their corban, Matth. 15. 5.; and without natural affection, not in that only, but in their perſecution of Chriſtians of their own family and blood, Luke 21. 16.: they were unholy and incontinent, defiled and abominable, Tit. 1. 14. 15. in their adulteries, and continual divorces: lovers of pleaſure, making their belly their god, Philip. 3. 19.; feaſting luxuriouſly on their ſabbaths, and to drunkenneſs in their feaſts of Purim. See the reading, ver. 3. juſtified, Examen Millii, ibid.

Ver. 6. [b] That theſe perverters of men from the truth, and creepers into houſes, were of the circumciſion, and addicted to Jewiſh fables, ſee Tit. 1. 10. 11. 14.

Ver. 8. [c] Jannes and Jambres.] Though we have no mention of the names of theſe magicians in the Old Teſtament, yet were their names celebrated both among the Heathens, as Pliny (u), and Numenius (x) inform us, who repreſent them as Egyptians ſkilled in the art of magic; and in the Jewiſh writings (y), who do not only ſay that they were principes præſtigiatorum, the chief of the magicians, but alſo that they were the two ſons of Balaam. Origen (z) informs us, that there was a book writ of them, bearing this title, Jannes et Mambres liber.

the faith.] So they are ſtyled in ſcripture, who, through their reſiſtance of, and contentions againſt the truth, are unworthy to have the faith made known to them, or indiſpoſed to receive it. Thus the Heathens, who, when they knew God, did not glorify him as God, neither were thankful, Rom. 1. 22. 25. are therefore delivered up εἰς νοῦν ἀδόκιμον, to a reprobate mind: and they here who reſiſt the truth being men of corrupt minds, are therefore reprobate concerning the faith; ſee note on 2 Cor. 13. 5.

Ver. 9. [e] Οὐ προκόψουσιν, they ſhall proceed no further.] This agrees well with the Jewiſh falſe doctors, who were ſoon diſabled from carrying on their falſe doctrines, by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; but not ſo well with the Gnoſtic heretics, who ſpread themſelves wide in the ſecond century. The fancy of a reverend perſon that St Paul here propheſies, that as Jannes and Jambres periſhed in the Red ſea, ſo ſhould Simon Magus at Rome, falling down headlong, when he was flying in the air, periſh at the prayers of St Peter and St Paul, is in every part of it uncertain. For,

1. Though the Jews tell us Jannes and Jambres were with Pharaoh at the Red ſea, they ſay not that they periſhed there, but ſay they rode with Balaam to meet Balak, and lived to the making of the golden calf, and then periſhed. Targ. Jon. in Numb. 22. 22.

2. I have ſhewn in the preface to the epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, § 6. that the ſtory of Simon Magus's flying in the air in a fiery chariot, and being thrown down by the prayers of thoſe two apoſtles, in the ſight of the people at Rome, is of no credit among learned men.

Ver. 10. [f] Παρηκολούθησας, thou haſt fully known.] Παρακολουθεῖν, relatum ad animum eſt ουνίναι, ſaith Conſtantine. So the Greek commentators thought it here ſignified, rendering it οἶδας, μεμάθηκας ἀκριβῶς, thou haſt known, thou haſt learned exactly, as the word imports, Luke 1. 4. The primary ſenſe of it, thou haſt followed, or reſembled me in my perſecutions, may alſo be applied to Timothy, who was in bonds at Rome alſo, Heb. 13. 23. See the note on 1 Tim. 6. 12.

Ver. 13. [g] Καὶ γόητες, impoſtors.] That the impoſtors among the Jews continued till the very time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, more and more deceiving the people, and that the whole nation of the unbelieving Jews grew then to the higheſt pitch of wickedneſs, Joſephus fully teſtifies. See notes on Rom. 2. 2. and 2 Theſſ. 2. 10.

Ver. 15. From a child thou haſt learned the ſcriptures.] Note here, the care of the Jews to teach their children the ſcriptures even from their childhood. From five years old, ſay the Talmudiſts, we put our children to read the Bible. Joſephus (a) informs us, that their children learning their laws, ἀπὸ τῆς πρώτης ἡυδὺς αἰσθήσεως, from the firſt dawnings of ſenſe and reaſon in them, had them ingraven in their ſouls: which, as it condemns the practice of the church of Rome, in with-holding thoſe ſacred oracles from old and young, ſo alſo does it reprehend the generality of Chriſtians, who are more concerned to teach their children things unneceſſary, or, at the beſt, things only needful for this preſent life, than to inſtruct them in that word of God, which is able to make them wiſe to ſalvation.

Ver. 16. [h] Πᾶσα γραφὴ, all ſcripture.] Here note,

1. That the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, not of the New, muſt be the ſcriptures here intended, they only being the ſcriptures which Timothy had known from a youth, that is, before the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament were written, and ſo he could not ſpeak of the ſcriptures, as interpreted by them who were then the guides of the church, viz. the Jewiſh ſanhedrim, or the ſcribes and Phariſees, ſeeing they ſo interpreted them as to make void the commandments of God, and to deny our Saviour to be the promiſed Meſſiah.

2. Obſerve, that the apoſtle doth not ſay that theſe ſcriptures were of themſelves ſufficient to make Timothy wiſe to ſalvation, but only that with faith in Chriſt Jeſus they were ſufficient for that end. Now, faith in Chriſt Jeſus doth only ſignify a firm belief that Jeſus was the Chriſt, the true Meſſiah, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world; as is evident from theſe words, This is the victory over the world, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4. i. e. our belief that Jeſus is the Son of God, ver. 5. See the preface to the epiſtle to the Galatians, § 2. Hence then I argue for the perfection of the ſcriptures thus: If the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament were ſufficient to make a man wiſe unto ſalvation, provided only that he believed that Jeſus was the Chriſt, the ſcriptures of the Old and the New Teſtament muſt much more be ſo, becauſe the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament muſt needs more plainly and fully contain the faith and duty of all Chriſtians, than the ſcriptures of the Old only can be ſuppoſed to do.

Obj. "But," ſaith Eſthius, "if the ſcriptures of "the Old Teſtament were ſufficient to make men "wiſe unto ſalvation, then there is no need of the "goſpels, or of the epiſtles of the New Teſta"ment."

Anſ. I anſwer, Yes: there was need of them, both to beget in men, and to confirm this faith in Chriſt, they being written that we might believe, and believing might have life through his name, John 20. 31. and alſo to give the Chriſtians of ſucceeding

ages a more full, plain, and perſpicuous knowledge of thoſe things which were not ſo fully and plainly to the capacity of the meaneſt, to be learned in the Old Teſtament. Thus, though the five books of Moſes ſufficiently contained the whole Jewiſh law, it follows not that the hiſtorical and prophetic books, or the hagiographa, were ſuperfluous.

3. Obſerve, that the apoſtle ſaith, theſe ſcriptures were therefore able to make Timothy a Chriſtian biſhop, wiſe to ſalvation, becauſe they were profitable for doctrine, to teach the Chriſtian all that he was to believe πρὸς ἔλεγχον, for the correction of every error in the faith, for the conviction of every vice they were obliged to eſchew, and for their inſtruction in every way of righteouſneſs; even ſo profitable for theſe ends, as to make the man of God perfect, i. e. wanting in nothing he ought to practiſe or believe himſelf, or teach others, for the edification of a Chriſtian into a perfect man in Chriſt Jeſus, and to make him thoroughly furniſhed to every good work. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact upon the place.

Falſe therefore here is the note of Eſthius, that the ſcriptures are here ſaid to be profitable, but not ſufficient to theſe ends; vain is his ſubterfuge, that the apoſtle, by every good work, underſtands only ſingula generum, every kind of good works, but not every good work of that kind, i. e. every work of faith, and inſtruction in righteouſneſs: for if theſe good works be requiſite to make the man of God perfect, and thoroughly furniſhed for his office, they muſt be here included; if they be not, they muſt be needleſs in order to the diſcharge of it.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. I charge thee therefore before God (the Father), and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the quick and the dead ◦ at his appearing, and his kingdom:

2. ▸ Preach the word, be inſtant (in that work) in ſeaſon, (and) out of ſeaſon (publicly and privately, by day and night, in times of peace, and of danger); reprove, (ἔλεγξον, repel falſe teachers), rebuke (evil livers), exhort with all long-ſuffering, (though they long ſeem not to regard thy exhortations), and doctrine, (i. e. all manner of inſtructions.)

3. (Thus it becomes thee to be inſtant now), for the time will (ſhortly) come when they will not endure ſound doctrine, but after their own luſts ſhall they heap to themſelves teachers, having itching ears.

4. And they ſhall turn away their ears from the truth, and ſhall be turned unto ◦ fables.

5. But watch thou in all things (which reſpect thy office); endure affliction (patiently); do the work of an evangeliſt; (ſee the note on Eph. 4. 11.), make full proof of (Gr. fulfil) thy miniſtry.

6. For I am now ready to be offered, (Gr. I am already poured out), and the time of my departure (or diſſolution) is at hand. (See the preface.)

7. (But be it ſo, this is my comfort, that) I have fought a good fight, (ſuffering hardſhip as a good ſoldier of Jeſus Chriſt), I have finiſhed (or ran) my courſe, I have kept the faith.

8. (So that) henceforth (I may be confident) there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord (Jeſus) the righteous judge ſhall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them alſo, that love (Gr. have loved) his appearing, (and ſhewed that love by patient ſuffering for his ſake.)

9. Do thy diligence to come to me ſhortly.

10. For Demas hath forſaken me, ◦ having loved this preſent world (i. e. the ſafety of his life), and is departed unto Theſſalonica; Creſcens to Galatia, Titus to Dalmatia, (theſe two not deſerting St Paul as Demas did, but going thither for the promotion of the goſpel.)

11. Only ◦ Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for ◦ he is profitable for the miniſtry: (Mark therefore was not then in Egypt.)

12. (I ſay, only Luke is with me), and (Gr. for) Tychicus have I ſent to ▸ Epheſus.

13. ◦ The cloak that ▸ I left at Troas with Carpus, ◦ when thou comeſt, bring with thee, and the books, but eſpecially the parchments.

14. Alexander the copperſmith did me much evil: the Lord (ſhall) ▪ reward him according to his works.

15. Of whom be thou aware alſo; for he hath greatly withſtood our words.

16. ▪ At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, but all men (of my acquaintance at Rome) forſook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17. Notwithſtanding, the Lord (Jeſus) ◦ ſtood with me, and ſtrengthened me; that by me (thus ſtanding up in defence of the goſpel) the preaching (of it) might be fully known (Gr. fulfilled), and that all the Gentiles might hear (my defence of it): and I was (then) delivered out of the ▫ mouth of the lion.

18. And the Lord ▫ ſhall (will) deliver me from every evil work, and will preſerve me to his heavenly kingdom: to whom (therefore) be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

19. Salute Priſcilla and Aquila, and the houſehold of Oneſiphorus. (See note on chap. 18.)

20. [r] Eraſtus abode at Corinth, but Trophimus have I left at Miletum, ſick.

21. Do thy diligence to come before winter: Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with thy ſpirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Κατὰ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ, at his appearance, and his kingdom.] "This appearance," ſaith Mr Mr Mede, "is "the appearance of Chriſt, the word, ἐπιφάνεια, "always importing Chriſt's advent, who, after the "reſurrection, and the judgment of the quick and "dead, muſt give up his mediatory kingdom to "the Father: it therefore muſt ſignify ſome other "kingdom, proper to Chriſt's ſecond coming; and "what can that be, but the kingdom of the Mil-"lennium?" It is the ſame with the revelation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt from heaven, 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. His glorious revelation, 1 Pet. 4. 13. And with his παρουσία, ſecond coming, which is, a coming with all his ſaints, 2 Theſſ. 3. 13. a coming of our Lord from heaven, 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. 16. Now, Mr Mede himſelf confeſſes, that he dares not ſo much as imagine that the preſence of Chriſt in the millenary kingdom, would be viſible upon earth: for the kingdom of Chriſt, ſaith he, p. 603. ever hath, and ſhall be regnum cœlorum, a kingdom whoſe throne and kingly reſidence is in heaven. And thirdly, at this appearance, and this kingdom, ſaith the apoſtle, he ſhall judge the quick and the dead; not the dead only, but the quick and dead; not ſome of them only, but all of them without exception. Now, the judgment of the dead is to be after the concluſion of the ſuppoſed Millennium, Rev. 20. 12.

2. Though Chriſt will, after the judgment of the quick and dead is completed, give up his mediatory kingdom; yet ſince that very judgment conſiſts in retribution of his final puniſhments upon his enemies, and crowning of his loyal ſubjects with eternal glory, which are the two chief acts of kingly government, and the very end for which all power was committed to him, John 17. 2. it very properly is ſtyled his kingdom: and though he ſhall then deliver up this kingdom, as it is a kingdom which reſpects the rewarding of his ſervants, and the puniſhment of his enemies, when the firſt ſhall be crowned with eternal glory, and the laſt doomed to endleſs puniſhments; yet ſhall he ſtill continue to be king of ſaints, highly exalted above them in honour and dignity, and honoured ſtill by them with religious reſpect and veneration.

Ver. 2. [b] Κήρυξον, preach, &c.] In Timotheo omnes paſtores officii ſui commonitos eſſe voluit Spiritus Sanctus, Eſthius.

Ibid. Εὐκαίρως, καὶ ἀκαίρως, in ſeaſon and out of ſeaſon.] That is, ſaith Chryſoſtom, not only when thou art in the church, but alſo in thine houſe; not only in times of peace and ſafety, but alſo when thou art in priſon; not only in time of health, but even when thou art about to die.

Ver. 4. [c] Ἐπὶ τοὺς μύθους, to fables.] To the fabulous divinity of the Gnoſtics, made up of Gentiliſm and Judaiſm, ſay ſome; but it doth not appear that the fabulous divinity of the Gnoſtics mentioned by Irenæus, was then hatched: it is far more probable, that he here ſpeaks of the Jewiſh doctors, and their fabulous traditions: for in his firſt epiſtle he ſaith, he left Timothy at Epheſus, that he might charge ſome among them, not to teach other doctrines, nor to give heed to fables, and endleſs genealogies, 1 Tim. 1. 3. 4. which, as it relates to the genealogies of the Jews, touching their tribes, their relation to the houſe of David, and their traditionary men, ſee the note there; ſo, ver. 7. the apoſtle plainly tells us, they were teachers of the law; which, Simon and his followers ſaid, "was not to be regard-"ed." And in his epiſtle to Titus, he ſends a like exhortation to him, to preſerve the Cretians from giving heed to Jewiſh fables, Tit. 1. 14. and doctrines of men that turn from the truth; which the Gnoſtics, who never ſincerely embraced the truth, could not do; and to avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, καὶ μάχας νομικὰς, and quarrels about the law, as being unprofitable and vain, chap. 3. 9.

Ver. 8. [d] Ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, at that day.] The council of Florence hath defined, "That pure and clean-"ſed ſouls, when they quit the body, are preſently "received into heaven, and there have a clear vi-"ſion of the Holy Trinity." And the Trent council, ſeſſ. 25. hath laid this as the foundation of the invocation of ſaints departed, that they do now cum Chriſto regnare, et æterna felicitate in cœlo frui; "reign with Chriſt, and enjoy eternal felli-"city

" city in heaven." But in this they ſeem to deviate from ſcripture, and the primitive antiquity: I ſay, from ſcripture; for,

1. Charity is repreſented by St Paul as the moſt excellent of Chriſtian virtues, and therefore that which will obtain the higheſt recompenſe; and yet the motive by which our Lord excites us to perform it, runneth thus, Thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt, Luke 14. 14.

2. To thoſe who ſuffer death and perſecution for the name of Chriſt, our Lord hath promiſed a great reward in heaven, Matth. 5. 12. but this reward will only be conferred upon them, at the revelation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt from heaven with his mighty angels, 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. The trial of their faith ſhall be found to praiſe, glory, and honour, ὐ ἀποκαλύψει, at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 17. Then they who communicate with him in ſufferings, ſhall rejoice with him, ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει, at the revelation of his glory, 1 Pet. 4. 13. Till then the ſouls of them who were ſlain for the word of God, are repreſented as under the altar, Rev. 6. 9.

3. To thoſe who feed the flock of Chriſt, a great reward is promiſed, even a never-fading crown of glory; but it is to be received then only, when the great ſhepherd doth appear, 1 Pet. 5. 4. A reward is to be rendered to the ſervants of God, the ſaints, and prophets; but it is to be rendered, when the time comes that the dead ſhall be judged, Rev. 11. 18. The apoſtles are to have their manſions in heaven with Chriſt, but not till he comes again from heaven; for then, ſaith he, I will receive you to myſelf; that where I am, you may be alſo, John 14. 2. 3.

4. The retribution to every man according to his works, is alſo to be made at the ſame time; for the Son of man will come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels; and then will he render to every man according to his works, Matth. 16. 27. At the end of the world ſhall the righteous ſhine as the ſun, in the kingdom of their Father, Matth. 13. 40. 43. This ſhall be done in the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of mens hearts, Rom. 2. 15. and when we ſhall appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 5. 12. Rev. 22. 10.

5. Hence in the ſcripture, the time of recompenſe and the time of judgment are repreſented as the ſame; as in theſe words, The time is come that the dead ſhall be judged, and that thou ſhouldſt give rewards to thy ſervants the prophets, and to the ſaints, Rev. 11. 18. The time of glory, and of the apparition of our Lord; as in theſe words, When Chriſt, who is our life, ſhall appear, then ſhall you appear with him in glory, Col. 3. 4. The time of Chriſt's appearance, and of our ſalvation; for he ſhall appear a ſecond time, without ſin, unto ſalvation, Heb. 9. 28. The time of his appearing and of our beatific viſion; for when he doth appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is, 1 John 3. 2.

6. Hence Chriſtians are ſo often ſaid to expect the adoption of the ſons of God, viz. the redemption of the body from corruption, Rom. 8. 23.; to expect the revelation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. 1. 7.; to expect the Son of God from heaven, 1 1 Theſſ. 1. 10.; to expect the bleſſed hope, and glorious appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Tit. 2. 14.; to hope for the grace that ſhall be given them at the revelation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. 13.

Now, let it be obſerved, that the body, compared to the ſoul, is the vileſt and leaſt conſiderable part of man; and therefore the hope, the glory, the reward, inheritance, adoption, bliſs, and happineſs reſerved to the time of the reſurrection, cannot reſpect the body only. Moreover, the apoſtle ſaith of the inceſtuous perſon, that his body was delivered up to Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that his ſoul might be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus, 1 Cor. 5. 5. Which ſhews, that the complete ſalvation of the ſoul is then to be expected.

As for the judgment of primitive antiquity in this matter, it may be learned from theſe conſiderations:

1. That they aſcribe this opinion of the ſoul's immediate aſcent to heaven, and its enjoyment of God's immediate preſence after death, to the heretics of thoſe times; repreſenting it as proper to the followers of Valentinus, Baſilides, and Marcion; and after them, as a part of the hereſy of the Manichees. Thus Juſtin Martyr, ſpeaking of thoſe who were called Chriſtians, but blaſphemed the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, ſaith, in his dialogue with Trypho, p. 307. 353. They denied the reſurrection, and held ἅμα τῷ ἀποθνήσκειν τὰς ψυχὰς αὐτῶν ἀναλαμβάνεσθαι εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, that as ſoon as they died, their ſouls were received into heaven: Irenæus ſaith in like manner (b), That " the heretics deſpi-
" ſed the formation of God," i. e. the body formed by him, " and not receiving (the doctrine of)
" the ſalvation of the fleſh; ſimul atque mortui
" fuerint, dicunt ſe ſupergredi cœlos et demiur-
" gum, et ire ad matrem, vel ad eum qui ipſis af- " fingitur patrem, ſay, That as ſoon as they " are dead, they aſcend above the heavens, and " go to him whom they call their father." And having ſaid, that " our Lord's ſoul went not to " heaven, but continued in the place of the dead " till the reſurrection;" he ſaith, " This is ſuffi- " cient to confound thoſe men, qui dicunt inte- " riorem hominem ipſorum derelinquentem hoc " corpus in ſupercœleſtem aſcendere locum," who ſay, " that their inward man, leaving the body " here, aſcends to the ſuper-celeſtial manſions." And then he gives the orthodox opinion thus: (c) " It is manifeſt, that the ſouls of the diſciples of " our Lord ſhall go into the inviſible place ap- " pointed for them by God, expecting the reſur- " rection: and then receiving their bodies, and " riſing with them, as our Lord did, ſhall come " into the preſence of God." Tertullian having produced the ſame inſtance of the death of Chriſt, and the continuance of his ſoul apud inferos, till the reſurrection of the body; he poſitively concludes, that (d) nulli patet cœlum, terra adhuc ſalva, cum tranſactione enim mundi reſerabuntur regna cœlorum: " Heaven is opened to none whilſt the " earth remains; the kingdom of heaven being " only to be opened at the diſſolution of the " world." And in his 4th book againſt Marcion, he ſaith, (e) " The boſom of Abraham, which is " higher than the inferi, but not ſo high as heaven, " is that which gives refreſhment to the ſouls of the " juſt, till the conſummation of all things produce " the reſurrection of all, with a full reward.

The Manichees, who alſo denied the reſurrection of the body, contended, that good ſouls had their whole reward immediately after death; becauſe Chriſt promiſed to the thief, that he ſhould be that day with him in paradiſe. To which objection, St Chryſoſtom anſwers, by conceſſion, that the thief was indeed admitted to Paradiſe; but then he adds, that Paradiſe was not the ſame with heaven, μὴ γὰρ ταυτά ἐστι τὰ ἀγαθά, ἅπερ ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῖν ἐπαγγέλλεται, for it contains not the good things which God hath promiſed to us; and then concludes, that if God promiſed the kingdom of heaven, and only brought the thief into paradiſe, οὐδέπω ἀπέδωκεν αὐτῷ τὰ ἀγαθά, he hath not yet given to him the good things promiſed.

2. That they expreſsly teach, that the ſouls of good men remain till the day of judgment, in a certain place, extra cœlum beatorum, out of heaven, expecting the day of judgment and of retribution. Thus Juſtin Martyr ſaith (f), that no ſouls die; but τὰς μὲν τῶν ἐνστάντων ἐν χριστιανί τινι χώρᾳ μένειν, τὰς δὲ ἀδίκους καὶ πονηρὰς ἐν χείρονι, τὸν τῆς κρίσεως ἐκδεχομένας χρόνον, that the ſouls of good men remain in a better place, the ſouls of bad men in a worſe, expecting the day of judgment. Irenæus (g) gives us the tradition of the church, touching this matter, thus: " The " preſbyters, who were the diſciples of the apoſtles, " ſay, thoſe that were tranſlated, were carried in- " to paradiſe; for that place is prepared for juſt " men, and ſuch as have the Spirit, and there they " remain till the conſummation, expecting, or be- " ginning immortality;" and that there ſhall be " new heavens, and new earth; and then Οἱ μὲν καταξιωθέντες τῆς ἐν ἐκείνῃ διαιρέσεως ἐκεῖσε χωρήσουσιν, They that are worthy of the celeſtial manſions ſhall go thither. Tertullian (h) having cited thoſe words of the apoſtle, And the God of peace ſanctify you throughout, in body, ſoul, and ſpirit, and keep you unblameable to the coming of the Lord, 1 Theſſ. 5. 23. ſaith thus, " Habes omnem ſubſtantiam hominis ſaluti deſti- " natam, nec alio tempore quam in adventu Do- " mini, qui clavis eſt reſurrectionis." " Here you " ſee the whole ſubſtance of man deſigned for ſal- " vation, nor at any other time but the appearance " of our Lord, who is the key of the reſurrection." " There is a place," ſaith Novatian (i), quo pio- " rum animæ, impiorumque dicuntur futuri judiciis " præjudicia ſentientes; whither the ſouls of good " and wicked men are carried, having ſome fore- " taſtes of their future judgment." And Caius (k), a preſbyter of the church of Rome, ſaith, That juſt ſouls being celebrated by the angels placed over them, ἄγονται εἰς χωρίον φωτεινὸν ἐν ᾧ οἱ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς δίκαιοι πολιτεύονται, are led by them into a place of light, called the boſom of Abraham, " where the juſt " from the beginning have been; where they are " delighted with the viſion of the juſt fathers, ex- " pecting τὸν μετὰ τοῦτο χωρίον ἀνάπαυσιν, καὶ αἰωνίαν ἀνα- " ζίωσιν ἐν ἐκείνῃ, after this place, their reſt and ever-

Ver. 10. [e] Ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, having loved this preſent world.] He doth not ſay, that Demas had forſaken the Chriſtian religion, or that he betook himſelf to his own ſecular affairs, forſaking his attendance on the ſervice of God in the church, or preferred the things of this life before thoſe of a future; but as the ancients do expound the words, he left the apoſtle in this time of danger, conſulting the ſafety of his own life; for ὁ νῦν αἰών, in the ſcripture-phraſe, ſtill ſignifies this preſent life; ſo, οἱ πλούσιοι ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, are thoſe that are rich in this life, 1 Tim. 6. 17. To live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godlily, ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, is to do it in this preſent life: See Mark 10. 30. 1 Tim. 4. 8. He ſeems therefore only to ſay of him here, what he ſays of others, ver. 16. In my firſt apology no man ſtood by me, but all left me.

Ver. 11. [f] Luke.] Hence it appears, that Luke muſt be alive at the twelfth or thirteenth of Nero, when this epiſtle was endited.

Ibid. [g] Εὔχρηστος εἰς διακονίαν, he is profitable for the miniſtry.] i. e. For the work of an evangeliſt, ver. 5. As St Peter, being ſhortly to put off his tabernacle, was the more diligent in giving inſtruction to the churches of the Jews, 2 Pet. 1. 13. 14.; ſo was St Paul, now in bonds, in ſending his meſſengers to the churches of the Gentiles, ver. 10. 12.

Ver. 12. [h] To Epheſus.] Hence it is evident, that Timothy, at the writing of this epiſtle, was not at Epheſus: for if ſo, why ſhould the apoſtle advertiſe him, that he had ſent Tychicus thither?

Ver. 13. [i] Τὸν φαιλόνην, the cloak.] Or rather, the roll; for, φαιλόνη, ſaith Phavorinus, is εἰλητάριον μίμημα, a parchment rolled up; φαιλόνη εἴλητον τομάριον μίμημα, a folded vellum or parchment: and Heſychius ſaith the ſame.

Ibid. [k] Ὃν ἀπέλιπον ἐν Τρωάδι, which I left at Troas.] Not when he went from Troas to Aſſos, in his journey to Jeruſalem; for then, ſaith Biſhop Pearſon, he could have no cauſe to leave any thing of moment with him, having ſo many that accompanied him in that journey, Acts 20. 4. 6. and a ſhip ſtill attending on them, ver. 13. but in his travels, after he was ſet at liberty, and had left Rome.

Ibid. [l] Ἐρχόμενος, coming.] Probably from thence; for he does not bid him ſend thither for them, or go thither to fetch them: whence it follows, that St Timothy was then at Troas, when this epiſtle was directed to him.

Ver. 14. [m] Ἀποδώη.] The king's manuſcript reads, ἀποδώσει, will, or ſhall reward him. And all the ancients note, that this is not an imprecation, but προφήτησις πρέπουσα ἀνδρὶ ἀποστόλῳ, a prediction becoming an apoſtle. So Pſeudo Juſtin, qu. et reſp. 125. So Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, on the place. Who this Alexander was, or where he lived, is uncertain; as alſo whether he were a Chriſtian, but zealous for the Jewiſh rites, as he muſt be, if he were the Alexander delivered up to Satan, 1 Tim. 1. 20. or an Heathen, zealous, as Demetrius was, for his trade, and on that account oppoſing the apoſtle.

Ver. 16. [n] Ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ μου ἀπολογίᾳ, in my firſt apology.] If the date of this epiſtle, contended for in the preface, ſtand good, this could not be his firſt defence of the goſpel, of which he ſpeaks, Phil. 1. 17. For after that, he was ſet at liberty; whereas, after this, he is ſtill a priſoner, chap. 1. 8. and 2. 9.; moreover, Timothy was then with him at Rome, as appears from the ſalutations then ſent to the churches of Philippi, chap. 1. 1. and Col. 1. 1. from St Paul and Timothy; yea, he was a priſoner there even after that St Paul was ſet at liberty, and ſo needed not to be taught how things went with the apoſtle then. He therefore calls this his firſt apology, or defence, becauſe, after he had made it he was ſtill kept in bonds, chap. 1. 8. and 2. 9. and ſo reſerved for another hearing. He eſcaped then, ſay Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius (m), " But " when he inſtructed Nero's butler or cupbearer " in the faith, he was cut off."

Ver. 17. [o] Παρέστη, ſtood by me,] in a viſion to comfort and ſupport me, as Acts 18. 9. So ἐπιστὰς is uſed, Acts 23. 11. and παρέστη, Acts 27. 23. or, to give me a mouth and wiſdom, according to his promiſe, Luke 12. 12. and 21. 14. 15.

Ibid. [p] Ἐκ στόματος λέοντος, from the mouth of the lion.] i. e. of Nero, or of Helius Cæſareanus. So when Tiberius died (n), Marſyas ſaid to Agrippa, Τέθνηκεν ὁ λέων, The lion is dead. And ſo ſpeaks Eſther touching Arterxerxes, Put a word into my mouth, ἐνώπιον τοῦ λέοντος, before the lion, Eſther 14. 13.

Ver. 18. [q] Καὶ ῥύσεταί με, and will deliver me.] If he will deliver him, ſaith Chryſoſtom, why ſaith he, I am now offered? Mark therefore his words, Ver. 20. That St Paul was in bonds when he writ this epiſtle, and that at Rome, he himſelf ſaith, chap. 1. 8. 17. Now, this verſe affords two arguments to prove he could not be then in his firſt bonds. 1. From theſe words, Eraſtus abode at Corinth; when was it, when St Paul went from Corinth to go to Jeruſalem? Then Timothy accompanied him, at leaſt as far as Aſia, and ſo needed not to be told that, from Rome, ſo long after: It therefore muſt refer to the time when, ſaith the Rev. Biſhop Pearſon, St Paul went from Nicopolis to Corinth, A. D. 65, and the 12th of Nero. 2. From theſe words Trophimus have I left at Miletum, ſick: now, this cannot relate to the time when St Paul went to Miletus, near Epheſus, Acts 20. 17. for as Timothy was then with him, Acts 20. 4. 15.; ſo was not Trophimus then left at Miletum, but carried up thence with St Paul to Jeruſalem, Acts 21. 29. Nor did St Paul ever return thither, Acts 20. 25. He muſt be therefore left at Miletus in Crete, where St Paul was, ſaith Bp Pearſon, after his firſt bonds, A. D. 64. Ner. 10.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to TITUS.

Sect. 1. THAT St Paul was at Crete, we learn from these words of this epistle to Titus, I left thee in Crete: when he went thither, is uncertain. Dr Lightfoot conjectures that he touched there when he went from Macedonia to Greece, Acts 20. 2. "For," saith he, "if "we consider that after their parting at Ephesus, "when Titus was sent to Corinth with his first e- "pistle to them, they never met till Titus cometh "up to him, when he was come from Ephesus to "Macedonia," 2 Cor. 7. 5. 6. We may thence learn, that in that first journey to Macedonia, he left him not at Crete, because Titus and he were not yet met again after their parting at Ephesus; and yet, at his second return thither, he had not only left him there, but writes to him to come thence to Nicopolis, bordering on Macedonia, chap. 3. 12. "So that this epistle," saith he, "must be writ in "his return, or at his coming thither, A. D. 55, and "not from Nicopolis, as the postscript dates it; for "he saith not, I have determined to winter ἐνταῦθα, "here, but ἐκεῖ, there; which shews he was not yet "come thither."

Sect. 2. But that it could not be written at that time, the learned Bishop Pearson proves, not only from the silence of St Luke in that very chapter, where he so particularly enumerates all St Paul's journeys, after he came from Ephesus, till his arrival at Jerusalem, without the least mention of his being at Crete; but saith expressly, that διελθὼν, passing through those parts (viz. of Macedonia), and exhorting them with many words, he came to Achaia, representing him still in transitu, and as passing immediately from Macedonia to Greece, not going from Macedonia farther beyond it than was to it, and then returning back to Greece, as he must have done had he gone from Macedonia to Crete, and so to Achaia. 2. This opinion he more demonstratively confutes from these words, chap. 3. 12. When I send to thee Artemas, or Tychicus, make haste to come unto me to Nicopolis, for I have determined there to winter; for, besides that Artemas, before his going to Jerusalem, seems not to have joined St Paul, and Tychicus then was part of his retinue, there is not any mention of St Paul's going to Nicopolis, in the whole history of his journey to Jerusalem; nor is it possible he should then determine to winter at Nicopolis, who, being at Philippi in the days of unleavened bread, made all the haste he could to be at Jerusalem before Pentecost, Acts 20. 6. 16. See more to this purpose, Dissert. 1. De succeff. prim. Romæ episc. c. 9. § 7. He therefore places St Paul's journey to Crete after his freedom from his bonds at Rome, A. D. 63, and the 10th of Nero, and saith, that this epistle was written the year following: that it was writ after his freedom from the bonds in which he was, from his going to Jerusalem till his freedom at Rome, he gathers from this note of Chrysostom (a) and Theophylact, that the apostle seemeth to have been then at ease, as making no mention in it of his bonds, or his temptations, as he doth in his epistle to the Ephesians, chap. 3. 1. and 4. 1.; to the Philippians, chap. 1. 7. 13. 14.; to the Colossians, chap. 4. 18.; to Philemon, ver. 1. 9. and in his second epistle to Timothy, chap. 1. 8. and 2. 9. That after his freedom, he determined to go to Philippi in Macedonia, he himself intimates, Phil. 1. 26. and 2. 24. "And this," saith Bishop Pearson, "he "did in the 12th of Nero, in which year he wrote "this epistle." And that he writ it a little after he had been at Crete, may be gathered from those words, 2 Tim. 4. 20. Trophimus have I left at Mi- letum ſick; which cannot be underſtood of Miletus near Epheſus, mentioned Acts 20. 17.; for from thence he carried him to Jeruſalem, Acts 21. 29. never returning thither, Acts 20. 25. He muſt be therefore left ſick at Miletus in Crete, mentioned by Homer (a), and by Strabo (c).

Sect. 3. It is the opinion of all the ancient commentators upon this epiſtle, that Titus was left in Crete, not only to ordain biſhops in every city, and deacons to miniſter to them, but alſo to rebuke ſharply, and with authority, unruly walkers; and this epiſtle was writ to him, ſay the ancients (d), "to make him watchful over, and to oppoſe him-"ſelf againſt the Jews and Judaizers in that iſland," as many paſſages in this epiſtle do ſufficiently demonſtrate.

Sect. 4. But the great controverſy concerning this, and the epiſtle to Timothy, is, whether Timothy and Titus were indeed made biſhops, the one of Epheſus and the Proconſular Aſia, the other of Crete, having authority to make, (e) κ) τοσούτων ἐπισκόπων κρίσιν, and juriſdiction over ſo many biſhops as were in thoſe precincts. Now, of this matter, I confeſs, I can find nothing in any writer of the firſt three centuries, nor any intimation that they bore that name: but this defect is abundantly ſupplied by the concurrent ſuffrage of the fourth and fifth centuries. For,

1. As for St Timothy, he is ſtyled Biſhop of Epheſus by Euſebius (f), and that with reſpect to former hiſtories; and the ſame he ſaith of Titus. And the council of Chalcedon (g) reckons from Timothy to their time twenty-ſeven biſhops. The (h) anonymous author of his life in Photius, makes him "biſhop of the metropolis of Epheſus, with ſeven "aſſiſtants;" and either he or Photius ſay, "That "he was conſtituted biſhop by St Paul;" and the apoſtolical conſtitutions (i) ſay the ſame, as do alſo St Jerom (k), and all the ancient commentators on his epiſtles.

2. That Titus had τὴν νῆσον ὁλόκληρον, the whole iſland of Crete committed to his care, is teſtified not only by Euſebius, but alſo by St Jerom in his catalogue, by St Ambroſe, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, in the preface to this epiſtle, to omit many others cited by Dr Cave in the life of Titus, p. 58. 59. Now, to paſs my judgment in this caſe,

1. I aſſert, That if by ſaying Timothy and Titus were biſhops, the one of Epheſus, the other of Crete, we underſtand that they took upon them thoſe churches or dioceſes, as their fixed and peculiar charge, in which they were to preſide for term of life; I believe that Timothy and Titus were not thus biſhops. For,

1. Both Timothy and Titus were evangeliſts, and therefore were to do the work of an evangeliſt: now, the work of an evangeliſt, ſaith Euſebius (l), was this, "To lay the foundations of the faith in "barbarous nations, to conſtitute them paſtors; and, "having committed to them the cultivating of thoſe "new plantations, they paſſed on to other countries "and nations."

2. As for Titus, he was only left at Crete to ordain elders in every city, and to ſet in order the things that were wanting: having therefore done that work, he had done all that was aſſigned him in that ſtation; and therefore St Paul ſends for him the very next year to Nicopolis, Tit. 3. 12. And ſo, according to Biſhop Pearſon's chronology, he was left at Crete only A. D. 64, and ſent for thence A. D. 65; and returned thither, as the ancients conjecture, after the death of St Paul: for they ſay (m), he died in the 94th year of his age, and was buried in Crete.

As for Timothy, St Paul ſaith, he exhorted him to abide at Epheſus when he went into Macedonia: now, as he writes to the church of Philippi in Macedonia, A. D. 62, and the 9th of Nero, that he hoped to be ſhortly with them, Phil. 1. 25. 26. and 2. 24.; ſo, ſaith Biſhop Pearſon, he went thither A. D. 64, and the 11th of Nero, and writ his firſt epiſtle to him A. D. 65. Two years after this he ſends for him to Rome, 2 Tim. 4. 9. 21. and there he continued, as the ancients conjecture, till the martyrdom of St Paul; after which time he muſt, as they ſuppoſe, return to Epheſus: for they tell us, that, in the reign of Domitian, he was martyred in that city, and lay buried there. But ſince we read not any thing in ſcripture of their return to either of theſe places afterwards, and the authorities on which this return dependeth, are not very ancient, we cannot much rely upon them.

Prop. 2. But if by biſhops we only underſtand perſons who had authority to ordain, and to govern the clergy of their province, and to exerciſe acts of diſcipline and cenſure, over more than one ſingle congregation, I believe both Timothy and Titus had this epiſcopal juriſdiction, and ſo might properly be ſtyled biſhops. For,

1. That the juriſdiction of Titus extended to all the Chriſtians in the whole iſland of Crete, is apparent from theſe words, For this cauſe left I thee in Crete, that thou mightſt ſet in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, Tit. 1. 5. Hence is he ſaid to have received the epiſcopal care τῶν ἐπὶ Κρήτης ἐκκλησιῶν, of the churches in Crete, and to have had the whole iſland committed to him.

And if the church of Epheſus, committed to the care of Timothy, did not exceed the compaſs of one particular congregation, St Paul had very little ſucceſs in the great pains he took for three whole years to teach them publicly, and from houſe to houſe, exhorting every one of them night and day, Acts 20. 30. 31. Whereas St Paul himſelf informs us, that, at Epheſus, a great door, and effectual, was opened to him, 1 Cor. 16. 8. 9.: St Luke, that all that dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews and Gentiles; that the word of God prevailed and grew mightily, and that fear fell upon them all, and the name of the Lord Jeſus was magnified, Acts 19. 10. 17. 20. But that which puts this matter beyond doubt, is the obſervation of the learned Biſhop Stillingfleet, That the elders St Paul ſends for to Miletus, were all of Epheſus, and to them he commits not only the church of Epheſus, but all the flock over which the Holy Ghoſt had made them overſeers, i. e. all that had been converted in Aſia, through his means, during his abode there three years. Irenæus indeed ſaith, He ſummoned them "from the neighbouring cities," as well as Epheſus: "but," ſaith he, "St Paul was in ſo great haſte, that he would "not ſo much as go to Epheſus, nor ſend any whither "but to that city; and yet thoſe to whom he com"mitted the whole flock, then in Aſia, came from "Epheſus to Miletus:" which makes it probable, that there St Paul had raiſed a nurſery for the churches thereabout; as Clement obſerves the apoſtles were wont to do in fruitful ſoils, with a proſpect of ſuch churches as were to be formed, τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν, of thoſe that ſhould after believe: and the ſame St Clement obſerving that they did this, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ πνεύματι, making trial of them by their ſpiritual gifts, he very probably conjectures, that the twelve perſons who, when he laid his hands upon them, received the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpake with tongues, and propheſied, Acts 19. 6. 7. being thus qualified, in an extraordinary manner, to be teachers of others, might be in the number of thoſe elders whom St Paul charges to take heed to themſelves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghoſt had made them overſeers, ver. 28.

As to the juriſdiction belonging to them in their ſeveral diſtricts, it is alſo manifeſt concerning Timothy, that he was ſet over the houſe of God, 1 Tim. 3. 14. 15. That in that houſe he was to ordain, and to lay hands on the elders to be choſen to that office, chap. 5. 22. to chuſe ſuch to the epiſcopal office, or to the office of elders, who were duly qualified for that work, chap. 3. 2. 7.; to admit and conſecrate others to the office of deacons, ver. 8.; to take widows into the number of deaconneſſes, under ſuch qualifications, and to refuſe others, chap. 5. 9. 11.; to receive accuſations againſt the elders, chap. 5. 19. and to rebuke them, ver. 20. Which plainly ſhews there was a right of judging and cenſuring offenders in Timothy, by virtue of his office. He had power alſo to order the maintenance of the elders, ver. 17.; to take care that the public offices of divine worſhip were performed regularly, chap. 2. 1. 8.; to charge others not to teach any other doctrine than what they had received, chap. 1. 3.; to command and teach with authority, chap. 4. 11. and not to ſuffer others to deſpiſe his authority, ver. 12. And all theſe things ſeem plainly to belong to the truſt committed to him, chap. 6. 20.

And as for Titus, it is certain he was left in Crete by St Paul, to ſet in order the things which were wanting, chap. 1. 5.; and in order to this end, to inſpect the qualifications of them who were to be admitted to the Epiſcopal office, ver. 7. and ſo to ordain elders in every city. And he was alſo to admoniſh and reject heretics, chap. 3. 10.

Now, I confeſs, that theſe two inſtances, abſolutely taken, afford us no convincing arguments for a ſettled dioceſan epiſcopacy, becauſe there is nothing which proves they did, or were to exerciſe theſe acts of government, rather as biſhops than evangeliſts: for it is certain that the order of evangeliſts was ſuperior to that of governments, and ſo included an authority to do thoſe acts of government which belonged to biſhops. Accordingly, in thoſe places where theſe evangeliſts preached they did (n) κατασταθῆναι, conſtitute paſtors, and then went on to preach in other places. Yet theſe things evidently follow hence:

1. That ſuch ſuperiority over other paſtors cannot be contrary to the goſpel-rule; or that the nature of church-government doth not imply an equality among the governors of it: and that the apoſtles, if they pleaſed, might have fixed perſons in any other churches, to exerciſe theſe acts of eccleſiaſtical authority and juriſdiction, as well as St Paul placed theſe two perſons, the one at Epheſus, the other at Crete, for theſe ends.

2. That it is not repugnant to the conſtitutions of churches in the apoſtolical times, for men to have juriſdiction over more than one particular congregation; for ſuch a power Titus had over all Crete, and Timothy over many elders: which, had it been contrary to the nature of church-government, would not have been permitted, and much leſs ordained by St Paul in any of the churches planted by him.

3. Hence alſo it appears, that the apoſtolical power of governing churches, and ordaining elders in them, was not ſo limited to the perſons of the apoſtles, but that it might be communicated to others whom the apoſtles would intruſt with it; and therefore might be continued in the church after their deceaſe: and if it be granted, that ſuch an apoſtolical power of governing churches, might be committed to others, and was actually ſo by the apoſtles; it remains only to inquire, Whether, upon their remove, or departure, they did intruſt any perſons in ſuch a manner, as it is certain, from ſcripture, St Paul did Timothy, as to the churches of Aſia: of which we ſhall diſcourſe hereafter.

4. From theſe words, The things which thou haſt heard from me, confirmed by many witneſſes, commit thou to faithful men, who ſhall be able to teach others alſo; it may be fairly argued, that the apoſtle here appoints St Timothy to (o) conſtitute a ſucceſſion of men veſted with eccleſiaſtical authority, to teach them and command others to obſerve them. And from thoſe words to Titus, I left thee in Crete, to ordain elders, κατὰ πόλιν, ὡς ἐγώ σοι διεταξάμην, in every city, as I ordered thee, Tit. 1. 5. For a biſhop muſt be blameleſs, as the ſteward of God, ver. 7. It is alſo fairly gathered, that a ſucceſſion of biſhops was to be conſtituted in every city, as perſons that were to take care of the church of God there, 1 Tim. 3. 5. And my conjecture is, that St Paul, after his liberty from his firſt bonds, having travelled into Spain and Judea, and from thence to Macedonia, began to ſettle this church-government in all the churches where they before were wanting; that ſo, after his death, they might be all provided with them: that, upon this account, Titus was ſent by him to Crete, chap. 1. 5. and afterwards to Dalmatia, 2 Tim. 4. 11. And that the firſt epiſtle to Timothy was not writ to him to require him to ſtay at Epheſus, where biſhops had been ſettled long before; but to inſtruct him how to behave himſelf in the church of God in general, chap. 3. 15. doing the office of an evangeliſt, by ordaining church-governors where he found them wanting, and ordering other matters, as he ſaw them needful, in any of thoſe places to which he reſorted. But then, if we take in the ſuffrage of antiquity, and conſult them who were neareſt to the fountain of church-government, we ſhall find ſtill greater reaſon to believe, that it was διάταξις ἀποστολική, an apoſtolical ordinance, to appoint biſhops with the chief juriſdiction over cities: for we find plainly, by the forementioned inſtances, that the apoſtles had this power in themſelves, and did convey it to ſome others; but whether they did this univerſaliy, and with a deſign to continue this order, being an inquiry about matter of fact, muſt be proved by the beſt means we can uſe in a matter of fact of ſo great antiquity. Now, there can be no ſtronger proof of ſuch a matter of fact, than the general ſenſe and concurrent practice of the Chriſtian church in the ages next ſucceeding the apoſtles. And this general ſenſe of the Chriſtian church may be demonſtrated,

1. From undoubted teſtimonies affording a clear evidence of this ſucceſſion in the moſt conſpicuous churches. And as for the undoubted teſtimonies of this ſucceſſion in the moſt conſpicuous churches, "I ſhall firſt appeal," ſaith the learned Biſhop of Worceſter, "to Irenæus and Tertullian, as leaſt "liable to exception." The former not only mentions a ſucceſſion of perſons to the apoſtles, but he ſaith, "The apoſtles committed the care of the "churches to them, and left them to ſucceed in "their places (p):" which implies, that as the apoſtles had themſelves the care of miniſtering to the church, and the power of governing and preſiding over it; ſo they committed it to the biſhops whom they choſe to ſucceed them. Tertullian not only mentions them in general who ſucceeded the apoſtles ſtles (q), but particularly inſtances in Polycarp, placed by St John at Smyrna; and Clemens by St Peter at Rome; and then adds, "That the other churches "had biſhops placed in them like to theſe." So that what authority St Clemens had at Rome, and Polycarp at Smyrna, that, Tertullian affirms, the biſhops had in other churches. Now Irenæus ſaith, that Linus and Clemens had the epiſcopal power of governing the church. And as for Polycarp (r), he, even by the Jews and Gentiles, was ſtyled ὁ τῆς Ἀσίας διδάσκαλος, the maſter or teacher of Aſia; by St Jerom (s), πάσης τῆς Ἀσίας ἀρχηγὸς, the governor of all Aſia; and by Ignatius (t), κυβερνήτης, the governor of the church of Smyrna.

Add to this thoſe words of Mr Dodwell, to thoſe who denied the preſidency of biſhops over the church in thoſe ages: "What can they ſay to the angels "in the Revelation? what to the teſtimony of Ire- "næus concerning St Polycarp? what to the teſti- "mony of Clemens Alexandrinus (u), who mentions "biſhops among other officers of the church ſettled "by St John? what to the teſtimony of Hegeſip- "pus (x), who makes the kinſmen of our Saviour "ἡγήσασθαι τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν, to have been governors of the "churches, from Domitian's time to that of Trajan? "what to thoſe who mention St James (y) as made "biſhop of Jeruſalem by the apoſtles themſelves? "what of the ſeven Polycrates mentions as biſhops "in his own ſee, before himſelf? nay, what to all "thoſe catalogues of biſhops ſucceeding in the four "patriarchal ſees, particularly the fifteen in Jeru- "ſalem, from St James to the deſtruction of the "Jews under Hadrian? nay, what to the ſucceſſion "of all the apoſtolical ſees, to which the fathers of "the ſecond century do ſo ſolemnly appeal, to "prove their own doctrine apoſtolical, in oppoſition "to the contrary pretences of the heretics? Can "they think them all to have been either wilful "forgeries, or general miſtakes, in a matter of fact "ſo near their own time, without ſo much as any "likely ground in hiſtory? How will they then aſ- "ſure us that they were not miſtaken in delivering "to us the books of the apoſtles, which were not "more notorious to them than their government?"

2. This general ſenſe of the church may be demonſtrated from the unreaſonableneſs of the ſuppoſition, that the form of government left to the churches by the apoſtles ſhould be ſo quickly changed, as they ſuppoſe, who do conceive that the apoſtles left no governors ſuperior to preſbyters, or paſtors of one congregation in the church: for it is clearly proved by the learned Biſhop of Cheſter, that the writers of the ſecond century diſtinctly mentioned the ſeveral orders of biſhops, and their inferior preſbyters in the ſame church, and thereby give us reaſon to conclude, that diſparity was ſettled in that age, and therefore it is very improbable it ſhould be otherwiſe in the preceding age of the apoſtles; for that in the frame and ſubſtance of the eſtabliſhed government of the church, a thing always in uſe and practice, there ſhould be ſo ſudden a change, ſo univerſal a corruption in ſo ſhort a time; and that all Chriſtians, all the degraded clergy, without the leaſt degree of oppoſition that we meet with, or we read of, ſhould conſpire in, or conſent to this innovation and corruption, is a thing morally impoſſible: for, as Tertullian (z) argues in a like caſe, "What "all Chriſtian churches did ſo early agree in prac- "tiſing uniformly, came not by error, but by tra- "dition." The improbability of this ſudden and general innovation will be further evident, if we conſider,

1. The ſubjects of this conſtitution, viz. the perſons appointed by the apoſtles, or apoſtolical men, to govern and preſide in every church, they being conſtant objects of every perſon's common ſenſe, ſeen in every aſſembly, employed in every eccleſiaſtical affair, public or private, in which Chriſtians, ſick or well, living or dying, were concerned. Now, in a matter of this kind, which was the daily object of the ſenſes of all Chriſtians, we cannot eaſily conceive how they could poſſibly miſtake, and not perceive that ſuch a change was made, if really it was done.

Again, we ſhall be more convinced that this was not performed by conſpiracy, or by a joint conſent of Chriſtians, to make this alteration in the form of government which the apoſtles had eſtabliſhed, if we conſider,

1. The general agreement of all churches in this matter, ſince not one ſingle church can be produced in which this government did not obtain. For how can we imagine, that in a time when no general council could meet to appoint it, and when there were no Chriſtian princes to ſet it forward on a political account; and when, by reaſon of the heat of perſecution, and the diſtance of Chriſtian churches, there was ſo little commerce and intercourſe between them, from the churches of Armenia and Perſia in the eaſt to thoſe of Spain in the weſt, from the African churches in the ſouth to our Britiſh churches in the north, this conſtitution ſhould univerſally be received and ſubmitted to, if it had not been eſtabliſhed by the apoſtles, or the firſt founders of thoſe churches?

2. If we conſider how much it did concern all churches, that ſuch an innovation ſhould not obtain amongſt them, and tamely be ſubmitted to; for all the people were obliged to know their governors, to which they were by ſcripture obliged to ſubmit, and ſo they could not yield to this innovation, without the greateſt danger to their ſouls. The preſbyters, if they had by the apoſtles been advanced to the higheſt power, would not ſo weakly have ſubmitted to an authority uſurped over them; but either out of a juſt zeal to aſſert their freedom, or out of indignation at the inſolence of the uſurping biſhops, or out of that unwillingneſs to ſubmit and obey, which is natural to all men, would have aſſerted their equality.

3. This will be farther evident, if we conſider, that even the perſons then exalted could have no motive or temptation to accept of this advancement; for men do not eaſily deſire a change but upon proſpect of ſome eaſe or temporal advantage, much leſs when they perceive the change is like to add to their trouble, and increaſe their danger: now, this was really the caſe of the firſt Chriſtian biſhops, they being ſtill expoſed to the ſharpeſt fury of their perſecutors, and commonly begun with firſt, when any ſtorm was raiſed againſt the church; their labours alſo were very great; for the care of the flock lay on them, and they were unwearied in the diſcharge of the paſtoral care. Can we then reaſonably think that they could be ſo fond of ſo much toil, and peril, as to violate the inſtitution of the bleſſed Jeſus, or his apoſtles, to obtain it?

EPISTLE to TITUS.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. PAUL [a] a ſervant of God, and an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, [b] according to (κατὰ, for the promotion of) the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of [c] the truth which is after godlineſs:

2. [d] In (ἐπ', with that) hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, (hath) promiſed before the world began, (i. e. from the beginning of ages);

3. But hath in due time manifeſted (ἐφανέρωσε δὲ καιροῖς ἰδίοις, and hath in its proper ſeaſon manifeſted this) his word (of promiſe) through preaching (of it to the Gentiles), which (office) is committed to me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour:

4. (I Paul write this) to (thee, O) Titus, mine own ſon after the common faith: (wiſhing to thee) grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and (from) the Lord Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour.

5. Adverti ſing thee, that) for this cauſe left I thee in Crete, that thou ſhouldſt ſet in order the things that (as yet) are wanting, and ordain [e] elders in every city, as I had appointed thee.

6. If any be blameleſs, [f] the huſband of one wife, (neither guilty of polygamy, nor married again after divorce from his former wife; ſee note on 1 Tim. 3. 2.), having faithful children, not accuſed of riot, or unruly.

7. [g] For a biſhop muſt be blameleſs, as (being) the ſteward of God; not ſelf-willed, not ſoon angry, not given to wine, no ſtriker, not given to filthy lucre;

8. [h] But a lover of hoſpitality, a lover of good men (or things), ſober, (or prudent), juſt, holy, temperate;

9. Holding faſt the faithful word, as he hath been taught, (κατὰ τὴν διδαχὴν, according to the doctrine of Chriſt and his apoſtles), that he may be able, by ſound doctrine, [i] both to exhort (both to admoniſh or inſtruct in ſound doctrine) and to convince the gainſayers.

10. For there are many unruly [k] and vain talkers (in Crete), and deceivers (of mens minds), [l] eſpecially thoſe of the circumciſion:

11. Whoſe mouths muſt be ſtopped, who ſubvert whole houſes, teaching things which they ought not (to teach), for filthy lucre's ſake.

12. One of themſelves, (even Epimenides), [m] a prophet of their own, ſaid, The Cretians are always liars, evil beaſts, [n] ſlow bellies, (i. e. gluttons.)

13. This witneſs is true (of them who inhabit Crete, whether natives or Jews): wherefore [o] rebuke them ſharply, (ἔλεγχε αὐτὰς ἀποτόμως, convince them powerfully), that they be ſound in the faith;

14. Not giving heed to [p] Jewiſh fables, and commandments of men, who turn from the truth.

15. (For whatſoever they may ſay or think concerning unclean meats, perſons, or things), to the pure pure (the Gentile, whoſe heart is purified by faith) all things are pure (in their uſe): but unto them that (though they count themſelves the only pure perſons) are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing (truly) pure; but even their mind and conſcience is defiled, (and by that their actions.)

16. [q] They profeſs that they know God (above others, Rom. 2. 17.), but in works they (practically) deny him, being abominable (now to him of whom they were once beloved), and diſobedient, and to every good work reprobate.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Δοῦλος Θεοῦ, a ſervant of God.] He writes not this to confirm his authority to Titus, who doubted not at all of it; but to confirm it to others with whom he did converſe, or to whom this epiſtle might come, it being of uſe not only to direct Titus then, but all biſhops and rulers of the church for ever.

Ibid. [b] Κατὰ πίστιν, for the promotion of the faith of God's elect;] i. e. the faith of Chriſtians in the general, they being all γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, an elect generation, 1 Pet. 2. 9. and St Paul being an apoſtle, in reference to them all, to them to whom he was a ſavour of death, as well as to them to whom he was a ſavour of life, 2 Cor. 2. 16.

Ibid. [c] Τῆς κατ' εὐσέβειαν ἀληθείας, the truth which is after godlineſs;] the myſtery of godlineſs, 1 Tim. 3. 16. the doctrine which is after godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 3. This is therefore only neceſſary to be believed, ſo far as that belief is neceſſary to an holy life. To confirm this inference, let theſe following arguments be conſidered:

1. That which hath the promiſe of this life, and that which is to come, muſt be ſufficient to ſecure us of the enjoyment of the life to come; but godlineſs, ſaith the apoſtle, hath the promiſe of this life, and that which is to come, 1 Tim. 4. 18. Ergo, again, that which hath contentment is great gain, and muſt ſure avail us to ſalvation, ſeeing without ſalvation we can gain nothing which is truly good; but godlineſs with contentment is great gain, 1 Tim. 6. 6. Ergo,

2. If this be the great end for which ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος, the ſaving grace of God hath appeared to us, viz. to teach us, that denying all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world, and if by doing ſo, we may expect the bleſſed hope, and glorious appearance of our Lord with comfort; then muſt this holineſs adminiſter to us an aſſurance of our future happineſs. Now, all this is the expreſs ſaying of St Paul, Tit. 2. 11. 12. 14. Ergo,

3. By what we do entirely attain the end for which our Saviour died, or ſuffered on the croſs, by that we muſt attain aſſurance of the benefits of his death and paſſion, viz. remiſſion of ſins, juſtification, and ſalvation; but this we do by dying to ſin, and living unto righteouſneſs; that is, by being holy in our lives and converſations; for Chriſt bore our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, might live to righteouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 24. And to as many as are thus conformed to his death, by dying unto ſin, he hath promiſed that they ſhall be conformed to him in the likeneſs of his reſurrection, Rom. 8. 11. Faith therefore can be no farther neceſſary, than it is requiſite to engage us to die unto ſin, and to live unto righteouſneſs.

4. This will be farther evident, even from the nature of true holineſs; for ſeeing that conſiſteth in a participation of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4.; in putting on the new man, which is created after God in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, Eph. 4. 24.; in being holy in all manner of converſation, as he that has called us is holy, 1 Pet. 6. 11. it plainly follows, either that they who live to God, who are like him in holineſs, who have the image of God inſtamped upon them, and who are made partakers of the divine nature, may, notwithſtanding, periſh everlaſtingly, or that true holineſs may render us ſecure of happineſs.

5. It ſeems evident, that a good and a wiſe God cannot reveal things only to ſtuff our heads with notions, when they have no influence upon our hearts to make us better: ſince then to diſbelieve them would be pernicious, and yet the believing them would do us no good, and a wiſe God muſt require this faith to no end, his deſign in requiring us to believe in Jeſus Chriſt being this, that believing we may have life through his name, John 20. 31. and the very end of our faith is the ſalvation of our ſouls, 1 Pet. 1. 9. he therefore can require us to believe nothing but what hath a real tendency to the obtainment of that life, and that ſalvation which is the end of our whole faith.

Ver. 2. 3. [d] Note, By comparing theſe two verſes with thoſe words in Timothy, He hath ſaved us and called us with an holy calling; not according to our works, but according to his own purpoſe and grace, which was given us in Chriſt Jeſus πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before the world began, but is now made manifeſt by the appearing of our Saviour Chriſt, who hath aboliſhed death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the goſpel; whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apoſtle, and a teacher of the Gentiles, 2 Tim. 1. 9. 10. 11.: I ſay, from theſe words words compared together it may be inferred,

1. That the promiſe of eternal life, mentioned in both places, is the promiſe of calling thoſe Gentiles, to whom St Paul was an apoſtle, to that faith which had the promiſe of eternal life annexed to it: for this promiſe God is ſaid to have performed by St Paul's preaching this word of life to the Gentiles.

2. That this hope of eternal life was not made manifeſt till the appearing of our Saviour, and the preaching of his goſpel to the world, he having brought life and immortality to light by the goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 10. and manifeſted the hope of it by the preaching of the word of faith.

3. Seeing no ſuch promiſe could be made to men, no ſuch grace given to them, before there were any men in the world, theſe words, πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, cannot properly be rendered, before the world began, but as Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and Oecumenius render them, ἄνωθεν ἐξ ἀρχῆς, of old time, or from the beginning; ſo the revelation of the calling of the Gentiles is ſtyled, the revelation of the myſtery χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένου, kept ſecret from men ſince the world began, Rom. 16. 25. but now manifeſted by the ſcriptures of the prophets. This promiſe therefore was contained in the writings of the prophets, and either muſt relate to the promiſe made to Adam immediately after the fall, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould break the ſerpent's head, which was a promiſe made from the beginning, and πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, before any of the three ages of the world were paſſed, or to the promiſe made to Abraham, that in his ſeed ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed; which was a promiſe made a long time ago, and before the firſt age of the world expired. So Zacharias ſpeaks of the promiſe of the Meſſiah, made διὰ τῶν ἀπ' αἰῶνος προφητῶν, by the holy prophets from the beginning, Luke 1. 70.; and Jeruſalem is mentioned as an apoſtatizing city, ἀφ' ἡμερῶν αἰῶνος, from the days of old, Ezra 4. 15. 19. and ἀπ' αἰῶνος, of old, Eſdr. 2. 23. 26.: if it refer to the promiſe or declaration made to Adam, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, that muſt be a declaration, that the Meſſiah ſhould exempt us from that mortality the ſerpent had brought upon the ſeed of Adam, and conſequently a promiſe that he ſhould procure for us an happy reſurrection to eternal life: if we refer it to the promiſe made to Abraham, In thee ſhall all the families of the earth be bleſſed, we, by that bleſſing, being made the adopted ſons of God, and heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 29. muſt have a title by it to the redemption of our bodies, and muſt become ſons of the reſurrection to eternal life, and by it receiving the promiſe of that Spirit, which is the earneſt of that inheritance, Gal. 3. 14. muſt thereby be aſſured of it.

Ver. 5. • πρεσβυτέρους.] Hence it appears, that at the firſt converſion of the Cretians to the faith they had no biſhops or preſbyters ſet over them, but had all their church-offices performed by men aſſiſted by that Holy Spirit which God ſhed on them abundantly through faith in Chriſt, chap. 3. 6. though out of theſe biſhops and deacons uſually were choſen; but then it is obſervable that things were then wanting, or that this was a deficiency in that church.

Ver. 6. ' Μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἀνὴρ, the huſband of one wife.] Here Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact have well obſerved againſt the heretics and Papiſts, that marriage is ſo honourable, that any clergyman may aſcend to the epiſcopal throne with it, ὅτι μετ' αὐτῆς καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν ἅγιον θρόνον δύναται ἀναβαίνειν, Chryſoſt. Theoph.; yea, that he may do the office of a biſhop, and retain the nuptial bed, ὡς δυναμένου καὶ μετὰ γάμου ἐπισκοπῆς πρόεδρός τινος. Oecum.

To ſhew the antiquity of that interpretation of thoſe words, The huſband of one wife, which I incline to, St Jerom ſaith, that "quidam de hoc loco "ita ſentiunt, Judaicæ, inquiunt, conſuetudinis fuit "vel binas uxores habere, vel plures, quod etiam "in veteri lege de Abraham, et Jacob, legimus; "et hoc nunc volunt eſſe præceptum, ne is qui "epiſcopus eſt eligendus, uno tempore duas pariter "habeat uxores." He alſo ſeems to ſhew his diſlike of the other opinion, in theſe words, "Multi ſuper-"ſtitioſius magis quam verius, etiam eos, qui cum "Gentiles fuerint, et unam uxorem habuerint, qua "amiſſa poſt baptiſmum Chriſti alteram duxerint, "putant in ſacerdotio non eligendos."

Ver. 7. ε Ἀνέγκλητον εἶναι, I left thee in Crete to ordain elders; if any be blameleſs; for a biſhop muſt be blameleſs.] Hence, ſay the Greek and Latin commentators, it is manifeſt that the ſame perſon is called a preſbyter in the 5th, and a biſhop in the 7th verſe, Καὶ ἐντεῦθεν δῆλον ὡς τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους ἐπισκόπους ὠνόμαζον, ἱερεὺς γὰρ ὢν καθιστᾷ κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, ἐπάγων, δεῖ γὰρ ἐπίσκοπον ἀνέγκλητον εἶναι· ὁ δὲ ἑκάστῃ δὲ πόλει οὐκ ἐπισκόπους, ἀλλὰ πρεσβυτέρους ἔᾠ εἶναι πόλλους. Theodoret. When he had ſaid, I left thee in Crete, that thou mightſt ordain preſbyters in every city, poſtea intulit; oportet enim epiſcopum ſine crimine eſſe, tanquam Dei diſpenſatorem, idem eſt ergo preſbyter qui epiſcopus; He after makes this inference, For a biſhop muſt be blameleſs; the biſhop therefore and preſbyter is here the ſame (a). The reverend and learned Biſhop Pearſon proves, from St Clemens of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen, that, in their judgment, the apoſtle ſpeaks of preſbyters properly ſo called; as doth alſo Theodoret, from this argument, that the

apoſtle requires preſbyters in the plural to be ordained in every city, whereas there was to be only one ſingle biſhop in a city: but I find no anſwer to the argument, that the ſame perſon is a preſbyter in the 5th, who is a biſhop in the 7th verſe; and therefore I ſtill incline to the opinion of Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, St Jerom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, that the names were then common.

Ver. 7. A biſhop muſt be blameleſs.] St Jerom underſtanding this of preſbyters, ſpeaks to the biſhops thus, Audiant epiſcopi, qui habent conſtituendi preſbyteros per urbes ſingulas poteſtatem, ſub quali lege eccleſiaſticæ conſtitutionis ordo teneatur: and then proceeds thus, At nunc cernimus plurimos hanc rem beneficium facere, ut non quærant eos qui poſſunt eccleſiæ plus prodeſſe et in eccleſia erigere columnas; ſed quos vel ipſi amant, vel quorum obſequiis ſunt deliniti, vel pro quibus majorum quiſquam rogaverit, et ut deteriora taceam, qui ut clerici fierent muneribus impetrarunt.

Ver. 8. [k] Φιλόξενον, a lover of hoſpitality.] Not in the modern ſenſe of keeping hoſpitality, that is, a great table for perſons of quality to come to; but, ſay St Chryſoſtom, and Theophylact, τὰ αὐτῆ τοῖς ξένοις προϊέμενον καὶ τοῖς δεομένοις, "one ſo far from filthy lucre, that he ſpends what he has upon the ſtranger and the poor. Σώφρονα δὲ τὸν νηφοντὰ φησιν ἐνταῦθα, ἀλλὰ τὸν παῖδας κρατοῦντα, He ſaith, ſober, i. e. not one that is much in faſting, but an exact governor of his paſſions, his tongue, hands, and eyes.

Ver. 9. [l] Παρακαλεῖν.] i. e. Νουθετεῖν, Theoph. See Rom. 12. 8. Τὸ δὲ μάλιστα χαρακτηρίζον τὸν ἐπίσκοπον, τὸ διδάσκαλον εἶναι, "the chief character of a biſhop is τὸ διδασκαλικὸν, his ability to teach," ſay Chryſoſtom and Theophylact.

Ver. 10. [k] Ματαιολόγοι, vain talkers.] That the Jews were ματαιολόγοι, vain talkers, and ἱεροδιδασκαλοῦντες, teachers of things which they ought not, we learn, 1 Tim. 1. 3. 4. 6; and that they were deſirous of filthy lucre, robbing and devouring thoſe they taught, ſee 2 Cor. 11. 20. Of the covetouſneſs of the Phariſees, the great ſticklers for the neceſſity of circumciſion, and of the obſervation of the law of Moſes by all Chriſtians, Acts 15. 5. our Saviour gives a large account, Matth. 23. 14. 25. Luke 16. 14. Their mouths muſt be ſtopped, not with force, but with conviction, ver. 2.: by ſuch ſtrength of conviction, ſay the fathers, as will not ſuffer them to ſpeak any thing by way of anſwer, or gainſaying the truth.

Ver. 11. [l] Μάλιστα δὲ οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, eſpecially they of the circumciſion.] He doth not ſay, eſpecially thoſe Gentiles or Samaritans, who are advocates for the obſervation of the Jewiſh law, but οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, they of the circumciſion, which, throughout the New Teſtament, ſignifies the Jews, men of that nation and religion; ſo Acts 10. 45. And οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, the Jews which came with Peter were amazed, when they ſaw the gift of the Holy Ghoſt poured out upon the Gentiles, Acts 11. 2. Οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς, the Jews contended with Peter, ſaying, Thou wenteſt in to men uncircumciſed, and didſt eat with them. See Rom. 4. 12. and 15. 8. Gal. 2. 7. 8. 9. Eph. 2. 11. Col. 4. 11. Moreover, the Gnoſtics and Simonians were ſo far from being advocates for the obſervation of the Jewiſh law, that it was one part of their doctrine (b) νόμῳ καὶ προφήταις μὴ χρᾶσθαι, that no man ſhould obſerve the law or the prophets. See note on 1 Tim. 1. 7. They therefore cannot be the men here intended.

Ver. 12. [m] Προφήτης, a prophet of their own.] Theodoret expreſsly ſays, this poet was Callimachus; Oecumenius, and Theophylact cite the words of Callimachus, and ſo doth Chryſoſtom, though he confeſſes the poet was Epimenides. Callimachus it could not be, for he was no Cretian, but a Syrenian, nor hath he this whole verſe, but only the beginning of it, Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, which, ſaith St Jerom, he borrowed from Epimenides; who by Plato (c) is ſtyled ἀνὴρ θεῖος; by Diodorus Siculus (d), ὁ θεολόγος, the divine; by Diogenes Laertius (e), θεοφιλέστατος, and γνωσικώτατος, one ſkilful in divination; by Cicero (f), futura præſentiens, et vaticinans per furorem, "one that foretold things future by ecſtaſy;" by Plutarch (g), σοφὸς περὶ τὰ θεῖα, a wiſe man concerning divine things; by Apuleius (h), fatidicus, a ſoothſayer; by Maximus Tyrius (i), θεῖος τὰ θεῖα, one ſkilled in divine things; by Dion Pruſienſis, and the apoſtle here, one of their prophets.

Ver. 13. [o] Ἔλεγχε αὐτοὺς ἀποτόμως, Rebuke them ſharply.] If theſe words relate to the Cretians deceived by the Jews, as the verſe following ſeems to hint, they are fitly tranſlated, Rebuke them ſharply. To be ſound in faith, is, ſay Oecumenius and Theophylact, to retain it ſo as it was delivered by the apoſtles, without adding any thing to it from Judaiſm or Gentiliſm, and eſpecially without adding to it the neceſſity of obſerving the Jewiſh law or rites, by the Gentiles.

tions of the Old Teſtament; but, 1. If we look into Irenæus, we ſhall find their ſenſeleſs interpretations chiefly related to the New Teſtament. Their thirty æones they gathered from the thirty years our Saviour ſpent in ſilence, before he preached, and from the parable of thoſe who wrought in the vineyard, and from St Paul; from whom he ſhews, l. 1. c. 1. p. 16. 18. they gathered moſt of their wild fancies, and ſo they muſt, in time, be after the writing of his epiſtles. 2. It does not appear that the cabbaliſtical Jews had any ſuch interpretations as favoured the mad doctrine of the Gnoſtics. The fathers therefore generally interpret theſe words of the vain traditions of the Jews, eſpecially concerning meats, and other things, to be abſtained from as unclean, which our Lord alſo ſtyles the doctrines of men, Matth. 15. 9.; and of the teachers of them, St Paul, in his epiſtle to Timothy, ſaith, that they were turned from the faith, 1 Tim. 1. 5. 6. And this, ſaith Oecumenius, is evident from the enſuing words.

Ver. 15. To the clean all things are clean.] Here, ſaith Jerom, conſiderandum ne iſta tractantes, occaſionem illi hæreſi demus, quæ juxta Apocalypſin, et ipſum quoque apoſtolum Paulum ſcribentem ad Corinthios, putant de idolothytis eſſe veſcendum, quia omnia munda ſunt mundis.

Ver. 16. ‹ It is the opinion of all the ancient commentators upon the place, that the apoſtle ſpeaks this adverſus Judæos, "againſt the Jews;" nor is there any thing ſaid in theſe two verſes, which may not be applied to them. For,

1. We have obſerved already how the ſcripture gives thoſe very names to the unbelieving Jews, which they were wont to give unto the Gentiles, ſtyling them dogs, Phil. 3. 2. as they ſtyled the Gentiles; and veſſels of wrath, Rom. 9. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 16. who thought themſelves the only veſſels of mercy; and here defiled, who counted themſelves the only pure ſervants of God, Neh. 2. 20.

2. Of their profeſſion to know God, when in works they denied him, the apoſtle gives a large account, Rom. 2. 17.—25. and again, chap. 3. 10.—19. That they were abominable in the ſight of God, our Lord not only ſaith of the Phariſees, Luke 16. 15. but St Paul of the Jews in general, declaring that they pleaſed not God; yea, they were ſo diſpleaſing to him, that wrath was come upon them to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. 2. 15. 16. Of their diſobedience to the law, we read in the forecited places of the Romans, and of their evil works, Phil. 3. 2. 2 Cor. 11. 13. 15. And laſtly, that a defiled mind and conſcience polluted all their actions, even thoſe that were done according to the will and the command of God. See Iſ. 1. 11. 16.; 66. 3. Jer. 6. 20. Amos 5. 21. 22.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. BUT (howſoever they live and teach) ſpeak thou the things which become ſound doctrine:

2. (To wit,) That the ‹ aged men be ſober, grave, temperate, ſound in faith, (ſincere) in charity, and (conſtant in) patience:

3. The ‹ aged women likewiſe, that they be in behaviour (in habit and geſture) as becometh holineſs, not falſe accuſers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things, (of piety, charity, chaſtity, to thoſe with whom they do converſe);

4. That they may teach the young women to be ſober, to love their huſbands, to love their children,

5. To be diſcreet, chaſte, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own huſbands, that the word of God be not blaſphemed, (by reaſon of their crimes.)

6. Young men likewiſe exhort to be ſober-minded, (Gr. σωφρονεῖν, to govern not only their concupiſcible, but their iraſcible paſſions.)

7. In all things ſhewing thyſelf a pattern of good works: in doctrine ſhewing uncorruptedneſs, gravity, ‹ ſincerity,

8. ‹ Sound ſpeech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part (whether Jew or Gentile), may be aſhamed (of their oppoſition to you), having no evil thing to ſay of you.

9. Exhort ſervants to be obedient to their own maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all (lawful) things, ‹ not anſwering again,

10. Not purloining (or filching from their maſters), but ſhewing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things (belonging to their ſtation.)

11. For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men, (as well ſervants as maſters, yea to men of all nations);

12. ‹ Teaching us, that denying (all) ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world;

13. Looking for that bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearance of the ‹ great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt:

14. Who gave himſelf for us, that he might ‹ redeem us from all iniquity, and (ſo might) purify to himſelf ‹ a peculiar people, zealous of good works.

15. Theſe things ſpeak and exhort, and rebuke (the oppoſers of this doctrine) with all authority. Let no man deſpiſe thee, (but uſe the cenſures of the church, and deliver up to Satan thoſe Jews who gainſay this doctrine.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 2. [a] Πρεσβύτας, the aged.] See the note on Philem. 9. So the word ſignifies in all the other places of the New Teſtament where it is found; ſo ἐγὼ γὰρ εἰμι πρεσβύτης, I am aged, ſaith Zacharias, Luke 1. 18.; and Παῦλος πρεσβύτης is Paul the aged, Philem. 9. And in this ſenſe the true St Jerom, and all the Greek commentators on the place, expound it. The Reverend Dr Hammond thinks it here ſignifies church-officers, and in particular the deacons, mentioned by Timothy, after the biſhops, 1 Tim. 3. But, of five qualifications there required of the deacons, ver. 8. the apoſtle here mentions only one, that of gravity; nor is it neceſſary that theſe πρεσβύται ſhould be church-officers, becauſe the apoſtle here enumerates their qualifications: for, as St Jerom on the place obſerves, he reckons up the qualifications of the younger women, ver. 4. 5. and of the younger men, ver. 6. and of the ſervants, ver. 9. 10. But hence it will not follow that they were church-officers. Nor, 2. Becauſe Titus was ſent to ordain ſuch; for we find not that he was ſent to ordain any, but preſbyters or biſhops, chap. 2. 5. 7. though, doubtleſs, he did ordain deacons to attend them.

Ver. 3. [b] πρεσβύτιδας.] That the aged women here import the deaconneſſes of the church, ſome of the commentators ſay, was the opinion of ſome ancients; and indeed they were ſo neceſſary, 1. For the baptiſm of women, when that was performed by dipping, as in the apoſtles days it was; and, 2. For the converting ſome young women to, and the inſtructing others, in the faith they had already owned; which aged women, though not permitted to ſpeak in the church, might do in private houſes, without ſcandal; but the apoſtles, and a young Timothy, could ſcarcely do without ſuſpicion; that for theſe reaſons I doubt not but this office obtained in the firſt preaching of the goſpel.

Ver. 4. Ἵνα σωφρονίζωσι τὰς νέας, that they may teach, or admoniſh the young women.] Stephanus renders the words thus, "that they may teach them by "chaſtiſement;" but women who had huſbands and children, as theſe in the next verſe are ſuppoſed to have, were not to be chaſtiſed by others. Obſerve then, that young men and women become wiſe by hearkening to the admonitions and inſtructions of perſons aged, and experienced in the practice of it, and they who were ſet over the youth, and the young women, for this end, were called by the Greeks σωφρονισταὶ, that is, directors of their manners, becauſe they admoniſhed them how to behave themſelves in their ſtations; hence σωφρονιστὴς is by Heſychius rendered νουθέτης, an admoniſher, and in Julius Pollux, σωφρονίζειν is νουθετεῖν, to admoniſh, and σωφρονισμὸς is the ſame with νουθεσία, admonition, l. 3. c. 17. p. 153. l. 41. &c.

Ver. 5. That the word of God be not blaſphemed.] For, ſay Theodoret and Theophylact, when wives leave their huſbands, or ſervants their maſters, πρόφασει τῆς εὐσεβείας, from a pretence of religion, they cauſe men to ſpeak evil of the goſpel.

Ver. 7. [c] Ἀφθαρσίαν, ſincerity.] This word is not to be found in Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, nor in many copies; but it is in Theodoret, Oecumenius, Cod. Alex. Arab.

Ver. 8. [d] The doctrine to be preached muſt be pure and free from all corrupt mixtures; it muſt be entire, ſo as to want nothing neceſſary to be known; it muſt be ſuch as is ὑγιὴς, wholeſome and beneficial to the hearer; it muſt be delivered with gravity, and with care, that there be nothing ſpoken which may be ſubject to reprehenſion. And he that teacheth it muſt in his converſation practiſe ſuitable to what he teacheth, leſt his own heart ſhould inwardly condemn him, and he ſhould be condemned both by God and man, from his own mouth.

Ver. 9. [e] Μὴ ἀντιλέγοντας, not anſwering again.] Not murmuring againſt their commanders, nor contradicting them, but only, with ſubmiſſion, pleading their own cauſe; for that even nature doth allow.

Ver. 12. [f] The firſt thing Chriſtianity requires of them who would enjoy this ſaving grace, is to deny all practical ungodlineſs, by carefully abſtaining from all idolatry, ſuperſtition, and falſe worſhip; and to diſcard all thoſe principles which tend to cheriſh in us a profane and irreligious converſation, viz. all principles of atheiſm and infidelity, all denial of providence, and of a future recompenſe; for as our falſe worſhip will render our whole ſervice vain, and our pretended piety a provocation; ſo theſe pernicious principles will render our religion none at all: for how can he be ſeriouſly employed in religious actions, who queſtions the very object of religion, denies the motives to it, and reckons it a vain thing to ſerve the Lord?

2. To deny all worldly luſts; i. e. all inordinate affections to the enjoyments of this preſent world, as knowing that the friendſhip of this world is enmity to God; all the pollutions which are in the world through luſt, 2 Pet. 2. 20. walking not in riot and drunkenneſs, in banquettings and revelling, in laſciviouſneſs and uncleanneſs, in ſtriſe and envy; but putting on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and making no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof, Rom. 13. 13. 14. 1 Pet. 4. 2. 3.

3. To live ſoberly in the due moderation of all our our appetites, the exact government of all our paſſions, and in the regular exerciſe of our affections and deſires; i. e. We muſt ſo far reſtrain our angry paſſions, that they do never indecently boil up within us, or break forth into opprobrious words, or rancorous expreſſions, or proceed to malicious and ſpiteful actions; and that we never do exert them, but upon occaſion of ſomething which is truly evil, and diſpleaſing to God, or when it may be for the benefit of others: we muſt ſo moderate our affections to, and our deſires of all worldly things, as to ſit down contented with our preſent portion, not being anxiouſly ſollicitous about them, not purſuing them by unlawful means, not much caſt down when we loſe them, nor much delighted with them when we do enjoy them; but living ſtill as men whoſe converſation is in heaven, and whoſe hearts are chiefly ſet on things above. We muſt ſo temper our deſires of applauſe and reputation in this world, as only to purſue it by exact regards to what is virtuous and praiſe-worthy, and for virtuous ends, the doing good to others; never endeavouring to obtain or to preſerve it by any ſiniſter attempts, ſinful compliances, or by neglect of duty. We muſt ſo regulate the cravings of the throat, and the gratifications of the palate, as not to eat or drink, to the impairing of our health or reaſon; to the inflaming of our luſts or paſſions; or to the rendering ourſelves unfit for the performance of that duty which we owe to God. We muſt be ſo moderate, in reference to the pleaſures of the world, that all the pleaſures in which we do allow ourſelves, may be ſtill ἡδοναὶ ἀμεταμέλητοι, ſuch as call for no repentance; we muſt purſue them with ſuch indifference, as that we can freely deny ourſelves in the enjoyment of them, when the concernments of God's glory, or the welfare of our own or other mens ſouls is prejudiced by them; preferring ſtill the pleaſures of religion much above them.

4. We muſt live righteouſly, i. e. in all the offices of exact truth and juſtice betwixt man and man, being true in our words, exact to the performance of our promiſes; doing no injury to any, in his good name, eſtate, or perſon, much leſs in the concernments of his ſoul, but dealing ſtill with others as we would be dealt with.

We muſt live δικαίως, charitably; preſerving an unfeigned good will, an affectionate kindneſs to, and having a ſincere concernment for the good of all men: and this affection muſt reſtrain us not only from biting them with the tongue, ſuſpecting evil of them, or doing evil to them; but muſt engage us to hope well, and believe well of them, where we know nothing to the contrary; to rejoice in their proſperity, to be ready to promote it, to ſympathize with them in their afflictions; and, as far as we are able, to ſupply their wants, relieve their miſeries, and contribute to the eaſe and comfort of their lives; and more eſpecially to labour to prevent their ruin, and further the eternal intereſts of their precious ſouls; to conceal the evil that we know of others, where no neceſſity, i. e. no duty to ourſelves, our brother, or the public, requires us to divulge it; to endure all things, without returning evil for evil; to be long-ſuffering, and bear with patience the infirmities of others: that, laſtly, upon any reaſonable ſubmiſſion, any fair acknowledgment of the offence, any deſire of reconciliation, we be eaſy to be intreated, and ready to forgive: in a word, that, in all caſes of the ſame kind, we prefer the public before our private intereſt.

5. To teach us to live godly: 1. By keeping up an high eſteem, an admiration of God in our minds, acknowledging his excellencies, by our repairing to, and our continual dependence on his wiſdom, power, and goodneſs, in our addreſſes to the throne of grace, by aſcribing all the mercies we enjoy, to his ſole, free, and undeſerved goodneſs, and therefore highly eſteeming them, paying the tribute of our praiſes, and ſuitable returns of duty for them, and by performing that public and external homage to the author of them, which may beſt teſtify to others the inward veneration we have for him. 2. By yielding a firm aſſent to all his revelations, depending on his all-ſufficiency and goodneſs, to order all things for us to the beſt, and hoping in his mercy, for preſervation from, or ſupport under, and a good iſſue from, the troubles of this preſent life, and a ſupply of all thoſe bleſſings which he ſees needful for us, or moſt conducing to our good. 3. By valuing him as our chief and all-ſufficient good, the only proper object of our happineſs, and upon that account preferring him before whatever ſtands in competition with him; having none in heaven but him, and none on earth that we deſire in compariſon with him; doing all things to his glory, and for promotion of his honour, and being zealous to remove whatſoever doth obſtruct or oppoſe it. 4. By being in the fear of the Lord all the day long, and herein exerciſing ourſelves to have always conſciences void of offence towards God, ſo that we never wilfully do any thing which argues a contempt of him, or is a provocation to the pure eyes of his glory. 5. By acquainting ourſelves with his ſacred will, that we may do it; eſteeming all his commandments concerning all things to be right; yielding a chearful, conſtant, and ſincere obedience to them, labouring to walk before him to all well-pleaſing; and when we are convinced that we have deviated from his good and holy laws, returning by a ſpeedy and ſincere repentance, and reformation of our evil ways. 6. By an humble ſubmiſſion to his chaſtiſements, and a contented acqui-eſcence in all the diſpenſations of his providence, and an entire reſignation of ourſelves and our concernments to the pleaſure of his good and holy will.

Thus Philo doth inform us, that he that would be truly virtuous, muſt, in the firſt place, μεταναστῆναι τῷ σώματι, become an exile from the enjoyments of the body, ſo far as not to be inſlaved ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ ἡδοναῖς, to the importunate deſires of worldly things, or to the pleaſures of the world, ἔτι φόβοις ἔτι λύπαις, nor to the fears of loſing them; nor to exceſs of grief, that he doth not enjoy them: that being thus prepared, he muſt govern his whole life by theſe three rules, or canons, τῷ φιλοθέῳ, καὶ φιλαρέτῳ, καὶ φιλανθρώπῳ, the love of God, the love of virtue, and the love of man. Lib. quod omnis probus liber, p. 676. C.

Ver. 10. Κατὰ μίαν, καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν.] See this reading confirmed by full authority, and the miſtakes of Dr Mills diſcovered, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 13. ε Τῦ μεγάλυ Θεῦ, the great God.] Here it deſerveth to be noted, that it is highly probable that Jeſus Chriſt is here ſtyled the Great God: 1. Becauſe in the original the article is prefixed only before the Great God, and therefore ſeems to require this conſtruction, the appearance of Jeſus Chriſt the Great God, and our Saviour. 2. Becauſe as God the Father is not ſaid properly to appear, ſo the word ἐπιφανεια never occurs in the New Teſtament, but when it is applied to Jeſus Chriſt, and to ſome coming of his; the places in which it is to be found, being only theſe, 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. 1 Tim. 6. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 10. and 4. 1. 8. 3. Becauſe Chriſt is emphatically ſtyled our hope, the hope of glory, Col. 1. 23. 1 Tim. 1. 1. And, laſtly, Becauſe not only all the ancient commentators on the place, do ſo interpret this text, but the Ante-Nicene fathers alſo: Hyppolytus (k), ſpeaking of the appearance of our God and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and Clemens of Alexandria (l), proving Chriſt to be both God and man, our creator, and the author of all our good things, from theſe very words of St Paul. Vid. tract. de vera Chriſti deitate, p. 44. 45.

Ver. 14. ᵇ Ἵνα λυτρώσηται, that he might redeem and purify.] The words λυτρώσηται, and καθαρίσῃ, here uſed being ſacrificial; the firſt ſignifying redemption, by paying a price, here ſaid to be the giving himſelf; the ſecond, to purify from the guilt of ſin, by an atonement offered for it, Heb. 9. 22. 1 John 1. 7. 9.: I conceive the import of them to be this, that Chriſt our Saviour gave himſelf a ranſom for us, to redem us from the guilt and puniſhment of our ſins; that being, by this atonement, thus purified and reconciled to God, we might become, as the Jews were before, a peculiar people to him, and upon that account zealous of good works.

Ibid. Λαὸν περιούσιον, a peculiar people.] So Segullah is rendered by the Septuagint, Exod. 19. 5. You ſhall be to me λαὸς περιούσιος, a peculiar people above all people; Deut. 7. 6. Jehovah thy God hath choſen thee to be unto him λαὸν περιούσιον, a peculiar people above all the people of the earth; ſo, chap. 14. 2. and 26. 18. This, by the Chaldee, is always rendered—a beloved people. This title belonged to all Iſrael in general, Pſal. 135. 4. Jehovah hath choſen Jacob for himſelf, and Iſrael for his peculiar people. As therefore all Iſrael being ſanctified to the Lord, became to him a peculiar treaſure, and a beloved people, above all other nations or religions in the world; ſo are now all Chriſtians, God having purified their hearts by faith, Acts 15. 9. 2. As then ſalvation was of the Jews, John 4. 22. and belonged to others, only by being proſelytes ſo far as to own their God, or their religion; ſo now that ſalvation which is promiſed in the goſpel, and which conſiſts in life eternal, is promiſed only to them who own the God and Saviour of the Chriſtians, or embrace their religion: for this is the teſtimony that God hath given us eternal life; and that life is in his Son. He that hath the Son, hath life; he that hath not the Son, hath not life, 1 John 5. 11. 12.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. PUT them in mind to be ᵃ ſubject to principalities and powers, to obey magiſtrates, to be ready (Gr. for) every good work,

2. To ſpeak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, (Gr. no fighters), but gentle, ſhewing all ᵇ meekneſs to all men, (with whom they do converſe.)

3. ᶜ For we ᵈ ourſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful (to) and hating one another. (See chap. 1. 10. 11. 12.)

4. ᵉ But after that the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour towards man appeared,

5. Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration (in baptiſm), and (by the) renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, (given then to the baptized);

6. Which he ſhed on us abundantly through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour:

7. That being (thus) juſtified by his (free) grace,

we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

8. This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they who have believed in God, might be careful [r] to maintain good works: theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

9. [s] But avoid fooliſh queſtions, and genealogies, and contentions, and ſtrivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

10. [t] A man that is an heretic, after the firſt and ſecond admonition, reject:

11. Knowing that he who is ſuch, is ſubverted, and ſinneth, being condemned of himſelf.

12. When I ſhall ſend Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, (to ſupply thy abſence, ſay the ancients), be diligent to come unto me to [u] Nicopolis; for I have determined there to winter.

13. Bring Zenas the lawyer, and Apollos, on their journey diligently, (and ſee) that nothing be wanting to them.

14. And let ours (i. e. Chriſtians) alſo learn to maintain good works for neceſſary uſes, that they be not unfruitful. (See note on ver. 8.)

15. All that are with me ſalute thee. Greet them that love us in (and for) the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἀρχαῖς καὶ ἐξουσίαις ὑποτάσσεσθαι, to be ſubject to principalities.] Beſides the turbulent ſpirit of the Jews then in Crete, (m) Suidas hath left upon record concerning them, that the Cretians, fearing they ſhould ſuffer puniſhment from their ſuperiors, ſtirred up the people, "exhorting "them to maintain the liberty which they always "had enjoyed." By which we ſee how needful this inſtruction was.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἐπιείκειαν, meekneſs.] This is that virtue which inclines us to be eaſy and merciful to offenders, kind in interpreting the actions of others, and yielding, in matters of our own concern, for peace ſake: and we ſhew all meekneſs, not by being never ſevere, (for ſeverity, at ſome times, towards ſome perſons, is neceſſary), but by being mild in all caſes, in which the circumſtances of time, place, and perſons, will admit of it.

Verſe 3. [c] Ἦμεν γάρ ποτε, for we ourſelves were ſometimes.] That theſe were the vices that reigned in the Heathen world, ſee Rom. 1. 26. 31. and 13. 13. Col. 3. 5. 8. That the Cretians were prone to diſobedience, we have proved from Suidas: that they were fooliſh and deceived, is evident from their multitude of falſe gods, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, l. 5. and their vain imagination, in thinking that their gods were mortal, with which Callimachus charges them. The luſts and pleaſures they ſerved, were unnatural luſts, ſay Oecumenius and Theophylact: of which the Athenian, in Plato (n), ſpeaketh thus to Clinias of Crete: "Of un-"natural luſts your cities are chiefly guilty; for, "taking up your laws from Jupiter, and retaining "the fable of his Ganymede, they committed this "unnatural luſt, in imitation of their Jupiter."

Ibid. [d] Καὶ ἡμεῖς, we ourſelves.] I cannot think, as St Jerom doth, that St Paul here condemns himſelf as one formerly guilty of all theſe vices; for then he could not have ſaid, that he had lived, before his converſion, in all good conſcience towards God, Acts 23. 1.; that he had ſerved God, from his progenitors, with a pure conſcience, 2 Tim. 1. 3.; and that, as to the righteouſneſs which was by the law, he was blameleſs, Phil. 3. 6. Nor is any thing more common with St Paul, than to ſpeak thus, in the perſon of thoſe to whom he writes. See the note on Eph. 2. 3.

Verſe 4.—7. [e] For the explication of theſe four verſes, let it be obſerved,

1. That the apoſtle, in the very next verſe, ſaith, This is a faithful ſaying; and of this I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they who have believed in God, ſhould be careful to maintain good works: and as he ſaith, that we are juſtified by grace, ſo doth he teach us, that this grace hath appeared, for this very end, to teach us, denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, to live righteouſly, ſoberly, and godly, in this preſent world, looking for this bleſſed hope; clearly inſinuating, that without living godly, righteouſly, and ſoberly, we cannot reaſonably hope for happineſs at our Lord's ſecond coming. Wherefore theſe words could never be intended to excuſe Chriſtians from a neceſſity of being holy, in order to their being happy.

(m) Οἱ δὲ Κρῆτες φοβούμενοι μή τι τιμωρίας τύχωσιν, ἀνίστασι τὰ πλήθη, παρακαλοῦντες ἐξ αἰῶνος παραδίδομεν ἐλευθερίαν ἀσφαλῆ. Voce ἀνίστασι.

2. That

2. That the apoſtle only ſaith, We are not ſaved by works of righteouſneſs which we have done, before faith, before the laver of regeneration; but doth not in the leaſt exclude the works of righteouſneſs they ſhould hereafter do, by virtue of the new nature given to them, and the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt, from being conditions of their future happineſs; and therefore hence it doth not follow, as Eſthius ſuggeſts, that God hath predeſtinated us to ſalvation, of his mere mercy, without any reſpect to our works; but only, that he hath thus freely called any nation to the knowledge of that faith, that will, in the end, bring ſalvation to them that obey the preſcripts of it.

3. That when the apoſtle ſaith, By his mercy he ſaved us, his meaning is, that by his free mercy he brought us from a ſtate of wrath and condemnation, into the way of ſalvation: in which if we walk, and continue, we ſhall aſſuredly obtain ſalvation. See note on Eph. 2. 8. 9.

4. Some, by the laver of regeneration, underſtand that inward renovation which cleanſeth the ſoul, as waſhing doth the body; but that the apoſtle, by the laver of regeneration, underſtands that baptiſm by which Chriſtians, coming then from Heatheniſm, engaged to renounce idolatry, the works of the fleſh, and of the world, and dedicated themſelves to the ſervice of the ſacred Trinity, and teſtified their faith in Chriſt, cannot reaſonably be doubted, if we conſider,

1*ſt*, How expreſsly our Saviour ſaith, We muſt be born again of water, and of the Holy Ghoſt, that we may enter into the kingdom of God, John 3. 5.; how he commiſſionated his apoſtles, to make diſciples in all nations, by baptizing them, Matth. 28. 16.; and how, from the beginning, the word παλιγγενεσία, regeneration, uſed here, was uſed to denote baptiſm, as Juſtin Martyr (o), Irenæus (p), and Clemens of Alexandria (q), do inform us.

2*dly*, That the ſame apoſtle elſewhere aſcribes this virtue to baptiſm, ſaying, that Chriſt doth purify and cleanſe his body, by the waſhing of water, Eph. 5. 26.; and that St Peter ſaith, that baptiſm now ſaves us, 1 Pet. 3. 21.; and that baptiſm, at the firſt, was ſtill attended with the vouchſafement of the Holy Ghoſt, here joined unto this laver of regeneration, John 3. 5. So that all Chriſtians are ſaid to be baptized into one Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 13. who is here ſaid to be plentifully poured out upon believers.

3*dly*, That being juſtified by faith, we become the ſons of God, John 1. 12. and being ſons of God, are heirs of glory, Rom. 8. 17. and ſons of the reſurrection, or ſuch as, if we do continue in the faith, and our baptiſmal covenant, ſhall enjoy an happy reſurrection, Luke 20. 36. See note upon that place, and upon Rom. 8. 17.

Ver. 8. [r] Καλῶν ἔργων προίστασθαι, to maintain good works;] that is, ſay ſome, to employ themſelves in honeſt trades and profeſſions: but all the ancient commentators on this and the 14th verſe interpret theſe words of alms-deeds or charity, to ſupply the neceſſary wants of orphans, widows, &c.; and they are followed by the learned Dr Barrow, who obſerves, "That as, in every kind, that which is moſt "excellent doth commonly aſſume the name of "the whole kind; ſo are theſe works of charity, "by way of excellency, ſtyled good works." Thus Dorcas was full of good works, i. e. of alms-deeds which ſhe did, Acts 9. 36.; See you abound in every good work, i. e. in all charitable offices, 2 Cor. 9. 8.; Let a widow be well reported of for good works, 1 Tim. 5. 10. i. e. for bringing up children, lodging ſtrangers, waſhing the ſaints feet, relieving the afflicted, and following every good work. Charge them who are rich in this world, that they be rich in good works, 1 Tim. 6. 18.; ſee Heb. 10. 24. And this ſenſe may be confirmed, 1. From the phraſe itſelf; for it is not ἐργάζεσθαι τὰ καλὰ ἔργα, but προίστασθαι καλῶν ἔργων. Now, προίστασθαι ſignifies to excel and outſtrip others in good works, which, as to works of charity, is certainly the Chriſtian's duty, and was the thing by which the primitive ages gained great credit to Chriſtianity; but it is not the Chriſtian's duty to labour more than others at their trades or callings. 2. From the reaſon here aſſigned, why they muſt excel in good works, becauſe they were not only profitable, but καλὰ, creditable in the ſight of men, as are ſuch works of charity more conſpicuouſly than labouring in our profeſſions; and ver. 15. That they be not unfruitful, i. e. ſaith Dr Hammond, that they may have to give to others; theſe acts of charity being ſtyled fruit abounding to their account, Philip. 4. 17.; good fruits, James 3. 17.; the fruits of righteouſneſs, ver. 18.

Ver. 9. [s] See note on 1 Tim. 1. 4. And note here, and from that place, this excellent rule, That diſputes about matters which only ſerve to beget ſtrife and contention, but tend little to edification in the faith, or to the edifying of the body in love, Eph. 4. 16. or the promoting that doctrine which is after godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 3. are vain talking, and unprofitable diſputes.

Ver. 10. [t] Hence we may learn who is an heretic in the apoſtle's ſenſe.

1. He

1. He is one who ἐξέστραπται, is perverted from the true faith, holding ſome doctrine or opinion, which ſubverteth the foundation of it, 2 Tim. 2. 18. and 1 Tim. 1. 19. 20. 2. He is αὐτοκαλάκριτος, a man condemned by his own conſcience, and who, in what he doth maintain or practiſe, ſins againſt his own convictions: for, 1*ſt*, The apoſtle ſaith not to Titus, Do thou convince or inform him of his error, but do thou admoniſh him of his fault; which ſhews the crime lay not in his head, or his miſtaken judgment, for that can never be corrected by admonition, but only by inſtruction; but that it lay in the irregularity of his affections, and the perverſeneſs of his will. And, 2*dly*, Becauſe otherwiſe he could not condemn himſelf by maintaining his hereſy; for no man who acts according to his judgment, how erroneous ſoever it may be, is ſelf-condemned in that action.

Object. 1. Againſt this expoſition it is objected, 1*ſt*, That he who oppugns a doctrine which he knows to be true, is indeed perverſe, but he is no heretic.

Anſ. 1. Yes, he is properly an heretic, according to St Auſtin, becauſe he follows, or ſtarts a new opinion, not from regard to truth, but to vain-glory, or temporal advantage: whence ſaith he, Errare poſſum, hæreticus eſſe nolo, "I may err, but I will not be an "heretic;" placing hereſy not in the judgment, but the will.

2. He is ſo alſo, according to the proper import of the word, becauſe he properly doth chuſe to be of his opinion; whereas the judgment of the erroneous perſon doth oblige him to hold his error, it being not in our power to believe otherwiſe than our mind and judgment doth inform us; ſo that, in this caſe, we do not properly αἱρετίζειν, chuſe what opinion we will hold. And, 3. He is moſt properly an heretic in the ſcripture-ſenſe, which ſtill aſcribeth to ſuch men ſomething relating, not to the error of their judgments, but to the perverſeneſs of their wills, or the corruption of their affections; as that they deſigned not to ſerve the Lord, but their own bellies, Rom. 16. 18.; that they turned away from the truth, ſuppoſing that gain was godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 5.; that they taught things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake, Tit. 1. 11.; that through covetouſneſs, with feigned words, they made merchandiſe of them whom they deceived, 2 Pet. 2. 3. 14.; Having hearts exerciſed with covetous practices, and that they went greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, Jude, ver. 11.; Matth. 24. 11. 1 John 4. 1. 2 Cor. 11. 13. 2 Pet. 2. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 2.

Hence they are often ſtyled, falſe prophets, falſe chriſts, falſe apoſtles, falſe teachers, deceitful workers, transforming themſelves into the apoſtles of Chriſt; men who inſinuated their doctrines ὑποκρισει ψευδολόγων, by hypocritical falſehoods, who preached up the neceſſity of circumciſion, not that they themſelves obſerved the law, or thought it neceſſary ſo to do, but that they might avoid perſecution, Gal. 6. 12. 13.; that they were men riſen up among Chriſtians, ſpeaking perverſe things to draw away diſciples after them, Acts 20. 30.; wolves in ſheeps clothing, Matth. 7. 15.; men that went out from them, when indeed they were not of them, 1 John 2. 19.

Object. 2. 2*dly*, It is objected, that there be few who oppoſe the truth wittingly, and they are only known to God, not to the church; which therefore cannot admoniſh, avoid, or excommunicate them. He therefore muſt be ſelf-condemned, not becauſe he maintains what himſelf thinks to be falſe, but becauſe he inflicts upon himſelf that puniſhment and condemnation which the biſhop and church uſeth to do upon malefactors, by ſeparating himſelf from the communion of the faithful.

Anſ. To this I anſwer, 1*ſt*, That I do not find that the word αὐτοκαλάκριτος bears any other ſenſe but this, viz. one condemned by his own mind, or inward ſentence, ὑφ' ἑαυτῦ, ἢ τῆς οἰκείας συνειδήσεως καλαχρινόμενος, ſaith Oecumenius. 2*dly*, Nor is it true, that heretics did always cut themſelves off from the church; for then what need was there of their excommunication? The ſcripture ſhews the contrary, declaring, that theſe falſe teachers that brought in damnable doctrines were ἐν ὑμῖν, lurking among Chriſtians, 2 Pet. 2. 1. 1 John 2. 19. 2 Pet. 2. 13. Jude, ver. 12.; yea, ſaith the apoſtle, there muſt be hereſies ἐν ὑμῖν, among you, 1 Cor. 11. 9.; they kept their love-feaſts with them till for fear of perſecution they departed from them, Gal. 6. 12.; they were inwardly wolves but in ſheeps clothing, ὑποκρινόμενοι ἐν αὐτοῖς, making a fair ſhew among them. Moreover, what need was there of avoiding men already ſeparated, and gone out from them? or to what end ſhould the apoſtle give them any admonitions, or excommunicate them who had already excluded themſelves from the church's communion? This expoſition therefore agrees not with the words of the apoſtle.

And whereas it is ſaid, ſuch heretics are only known to God, I hope they might be known alſo to Titus, the only perſon here bid either to admoniſh or avoid them, eſpecially if we conſider, that to him belonged in thoſe times διάκρισις πνευμάτων, the diſcerning of ſpirits. Moreover, the church of thoſe times, in which the apoſtles were ſtill preaching, could eaſily know whether the doctrines which others taught in oppoſition to them were indeed doctrines received from the apoſtles or not; if they were not, they who taught them muſt know they received no ſuch doctrine from them, and ſo muſt be ſelf-condemned in in teaching it as received from them, or as the faith once delivered to the ſaints; and they who heard them muſt know they wilfully oppoſed the doctrine of thoſe apoſtles, who had confirmed the faith with ſuch authentic teſtimonies as their oppoſers could not queſtion. Moreover, they being then bid to try the ſpirits whether they were of God, 1 John 4. 1. and the gift of diſcerning ſpirits being then given to the prophets who managed the church-affairs, they might then very well be able to judge of theſe deceivers and falſe teachers.

Ver. 12. Theſe words made the author of the poſtſcript date this epiſtle from Nicopolis of Macedonia, whereas they rather prove the contrary; for he ſaith not I have determined to winter here, but there, which ſhews he was not yet come thither.

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to PHILEMON.

SOME have thought this epiſtle was not worthy to be ranked among the epiſtles of St Paul, as being writ upon an occaſion of no great moment; but it contains inſtructions ſufficient for ſo ſhort an epiſtle, as, v. g.

1. That no Chriſtian, though of the meaneſt ſort, is to be contemned: that Chriſtianity makes the vileſt ſervant both profitable and worthy to be highly loved, and honoured by perſons in the higheſt dignity, Oneſimus being by the apoſtle ſtyled his ſon, and his bowels.

2. That Chriſtianity doth not impair the power of maſters over their ſervants, or give any authority to them who convert them, to uſe them as their ſervants, without leave granted from their maſters.

3. That ſervants ought to make ſatisfaction for any wrong or injury they have done to their maſters.

4. That there is an affection due from the maſter to a profitable ſervant.

Who then, ſay the Greek interpreters (a), would refuſe to number an epiſtle ſo profitable with the reſt?

The apoſtolical conſtitutions (b) have made this Philemon biſhop of Coloſſe, and St Jerom ſeems to incline to that opinion; but Hilary the Deacon (c) ſaith expreſsly, that he was of no eccleſiaſtical dignity, but one of the laity. Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact ſeem alſo of the ſame opinion.

This epiſtle was writ in the ſame year with that to the Philippians, viz. the 8th of Nero, A. D. 62, when St Paul expected to be delivered from his bonds, ver. 22.

PARAPHRASE

EPISTLE to PHILEMON.

Verſe 1. (I) PAUL a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, and Timothy our brother, (write) to Philemon our dearly beloved, and [a] fellow-labourer,

2. And to our [b] beloved Apphia, and Archippus [c] our fellow-ſoldier, and [d] to the church in thy houſe:

3. (And I wiſh) grace to you, and peace from [e] God our Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

4. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, (or, I thank my God always when I mention thee in my prayers),

5. Hearing [f] of thy love and faith, which (faith) thou haſt towards the Lord Jeſus, and (love) toward all ſaints;

6. (And my prayer is), that [g] the communication of thy faith (or, thy liberality to the ſaints, which is the fruit of thy faith) may become effectual (to bring others to it) by the acknowledgment of every good thing which is in you in Chriſt Jeſus, (or may become effectual to the acknowledgment of thy good works by other Chriſtians who have ſuch inſtances of thy charity.)

7. (And I have reaſon thus to give thanks to God for thee), for we have great joy and conſolation in thy love (to the ſaints), becauſe (hereby) the bowels of the ſaints (yearning for relief) are refreſhed by thee, brother.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold (or having great power) in Chriſt, to injoin thee that which is convenient,

9. Yet for love's ſake I rather beſeech thee, (or I rather beſeech thee for love's ſake), being ſuch an one as Paul (the apoſtle of Chriſt) [h] the aged, (and upon that account worthy of reverence), and now alſo a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, (and therefore worthy of reſpect, Gal. 6. 17. Eph. 4. 1. Col. 4. 18.)

10. I beſeech thee (I ſay) for my ſon Oneſimus, whom I have begotten (i. e. converted to the faith when I was) in my bonds:

11. Who in times paſt was to thee (an) [i] unprofitable (ſervant, ver. 18. 19), but now (if received, will be) profitable to thee and (if ſent back) to me:

12. Whom I have ſent again (unto thee, he being in duty thine, and not to be employed by others, or detained without thy leave): thou therefore receive him (him, I ſay) that is mine own bowels, (he being as dear to me as if he had proceeded from mine own bowels.)

13. Whom I would (willingly) have retained with me, that [k] in thy ſtead he might have miniſtered to me (being) in the bonds of the goſpel.

14. But without thy mind would I do nothing (of this nature); that thy benefit (or the advantage I receive from him who is thy ſervant) ſhould not be (on thy part) [l] as it were (a matter) of neceſſity, (becauſe thou couldſt not have him returned to thee), but willingly, (by thy own grant.)

15. For

15. For perhaps he therefore departed (from thee) for a ſeaſon, [m] that thou ſhouldſt receive him again for ever, (i. e. to ſerve thee during life);

16. (That thou ſhouldſt receive him, I ſay), not now as a ſervant (only), but above a ſervant, (as being alſo in Chriſt) a brother [n] beloved, eſpecially (or particularly) to me; but how much more to thee, both in the fleſh, and in the Lord? (i. e. as being of thy family, and of thy faith.)

17. If thou count me therefore a partner (in thy friendſhip), receive him as myſelf.

18. If he hath wronged thee (in any thing), or oweth thee ought, put that on my account.

19. I Paul have written it with my own hand, (and ſo have entered into a ſolemn obligation that) I will repay it: albeit I do not ſay unto thee (i. e. I inſiſt upon it) how thou oweſt to me (by whom thou waſt converted) even thy own ſelf (or the well-being of thy ſoul) beſides.

20. [o] Yea, brother, (Gr. ναὶ, I pray thee therefore) let me (for thy compliance with me in this matter) have joy of thee in the Lord: [p] refreſh my bowels in the Lord.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote (thus) to thee, knowing thou wilt alſo do more than I ſay.

22. But withal prepare me alſo a lodging, (wherefore prepare me a lodging alſo): for I truſt that [q] through your prayers I ſhall be given to you.

23. There ſalute thee Epaphras, my fellow-priſoner in Chriſt Jeſus;

24. Marcus, Ariſtarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

25. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on the Epiſtle to PHILEMON.

Verſe 1. [a] Καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ συνεργὸς ἡμῶν, Our fellow-labourer.] Hence Chryſoſtom conjectures, that he muſt be one of the clergy: but this is no good argument, ſeeing Chriſtians in general, that promoted the intereſts of Chriſtianity, and even women, are by the apoſtle ſtyled συνεργοὶ, his fellow-labourers. For the firſt, ſee John 3. ver. 8.; for the ſecond, Rom. 16. 3.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἀπφίᾳ τῇ ἀγαπητῇ.] He ſalutes alſo Apphia the wife of Philemon; as Oecumenius and Theophylact conjecture, and Theodoret poſitively aſſerts, and that very probably, ſhe being here ranked before Archippus: and this he doth, that he might obtain her good-will alſo in behalf of Oneſimus.

Ibid. [c] Συστρατιώτῃ, our fellow-ſoldier.] So alſo he calls Epaphroditus fellow-priſoner with him at Rome, Philip. 2. 23. 25. either becauſe they ſuffered with him as good ſoldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Tim. 2. 3.; or, as St Jerom (a) ſaith, becauſe, being miniſters with him in the work of the goſpel, Phil. 2. 25. Col. 4. 17. they were more particularly engaged in fighting the good fight of faith. See note on 1 Tim. 1. 18.

Ibid. [d] Καὶ τῇ κατ' οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησίᾳ, and to the church in thy houſe.] He calls his houſe a church, ſaith Theodoret, ὡς ἐντιθεὶς λαμπρυνομένην, as being illuſtrious for the piety of all its members. See note on 1 Cor. 16. 19.

Ver. 3. [e] Ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, from God the Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Ex quo oſtenditur unam Filii Patriſque eſſe naturam, cum id poteſt Filius præſtare quod Pater, et dicitur id Pater præſtare quod Filius. Hieronymus in locum.

Ver. 5. [f] Τὴν ἀγάπην καὶ τὴν πίστιν, thy love and faith.] Here the apoſtle uſeth the figure Syntheſis; for faith is to be referred to Chriſt, and love to the ſaints, according to thoſe words of the ſame apoſtle, We give thanks for you, ſince we heard of your faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and of the love which you have to all the ſaints, Col. 1. 4. So Matth. 12. 22. The blind and dumb both ſpake and ſaw; i. e. the blind ſaw, and the dumb ſpake: 1 Cor. 6. 11. But ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God; i. e. ye are ſanctified by the Spirit, and juſtified by the name of Jeſus. And ſo Theodoret interprets theſe words: hence therefore Papiſts vainly gather, that we may place our faith in ſaints departed; for even their own (b) Eſthius declares, That, "in the eccleſiaſtical phraſe, to "believe in any one, is a profeſſion of divinity."

It is alſo farther to be noted from theſe words, That we ought to render thanks to God, not only for the bleſſings vouchſafed to ourſelves, but to others alſo, Rom. 1. 8. 1 Cor. 1. 4. Eph. 1. 16.

Ver. 6. [g] Ἡ κοινωνία, the communication.] Κοινωνίαν πίστεως τὴν ἱλεημοσύνην καλεῖ, ὡς διὰ πολλῆς πίστεως γινομένην. Theodoret, Oecumenius, and Theophylact, expound theſe words thus: "I pray that the faith in Chriſt, "which thou haſt common with us, may be opera-"tive in thee, to make thee know how to perform "every good work."

Ver. 9. [h] Πρεσβύτης, the aged.] This epiſtle being writ, at the fartheſt, but twenty-eight years from his converſion, when he is ſtyled νεανίας, a young man, Acts 7. 58. it is inquired how he could be now πρεσβύτης, Paul the aged?

I anſwer, That both the words, νεανίσκος, young, and πρεσβύτης, aged, are of that large ſignification, as is ſufficient to remove this ſeeming difficulty. Phavorinus (c), from Hippocrates, ſaith, a man is ſtyled νεανίσκος, a young man, till twenty-eight; and πρεσβύτης, aged, from forty-nine to fifty-ſix; making but twenty-one years difference betwixt them: elſewhere he ſaith, that "old age begins ἀπ' ἐτῶν ἑξήκοντα ἐνέα, from ſixty-nine years;" but then he ſaith, a man is νεανίσκος, young, from twenty-three, ἕως ἐτῶν τεσσαράκοντα ἑνὸς, till forty-one years; making the difference between them twenty-eight years. Varro, in Cœlius Rhodiginus, lib. 29. cap. 21. ſays, a man is juvenis, young, till forty-five, and aged at ſixty. And thus St Paul, according to the computation of St Chryſoſtom (d), might be a young man of thirty-five years at his converſion; an old man at the writing this epiſtle, as being then ſixty-three, and ſuffering martyrdom in the fourteenth year of Nero.

Ver. 11. [i] Ἄχρηστον.] Not only an unprofitable, but an injurious ſervant, having not only run away from his maſter, but purloined ſome of his goods, and ſpent what he had thus purloined: for had it not been thus, ſaith St Jerom (e), the apoſtle needed not to have ſtipulated for ſatisfaction of the injury, ver. 18. 19.

Ver. 13. [k] Ὑπὲρ σοῦ, in thy ſtead.] A miniſtry ſeems due, from all that are able, towards thoſe that ſuffer, and are in bonds for Chriſt's ſake; and when it is not performed, there ſeems to be a lack of ſervice due to them, eſpecially to the ambaſſadors of Chriſt, Phil. 2. 30.

Ver. 14. [l] Ὡς κατ' ἀνάγκην, As of neceſſity.] Here again, freedom of will is put in oppoſition to neceſſity. See note on 2 Cor. 9. 7. according to thoſe words of Seneca, De benef. lib. 2. cap. 4. "Si vis ſcire an velim, effice ut poſſim nolle."

Ver. 15. [m] Ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃς, that thou mighteſt have him during life.] Δουλεύσει αὐτῷ εἰς αἰῶνα, He ſhall ſerve him during life, Exod. 21. 6. Ἔσται σοι οἰκέτης εἰς αἰῶνα, He ſhall be thy ſervant whilſt he lives, Deut. 15. 17. Καθήσεται εἰς αἰῶνα, He ſhall abide for ever there, 1 Sam. 1. 22. that is, ἕως ἡμέρας θανάτου αὐτῆς, till the day of his death, ver. 11. all the days of his life, ver. 28.

Ver. 16. [n] Ἀγαπητὸν, beloved.] Note here, That love is due even to bond-ſervants from their maſters, when they are uſeful and profitable to them; for where advantage is received from the labours of another, there love is due.

Ver. 20. [o] Ναὶ.] As the Hebrew נָא is verbum obſecrandi, a word of intreating; ſo is the Greek ναὶ very frequently. See note on Matth. 15. 27.

Ibid. [p] Μοῦ τὰ σπλάγχνα, refreſh my bowels.] Either meaning Oneſimus, whom he calls his bowels, ver. 12. or rather himſelf, whoſe bowels would be refreſhed by Philemon's receiving Oneſimus kindly, for the Lord's ſake.

Ver. 22. [q] Διὰ τῶν προσευχῶν ὑμῶν, by your prayers.] The apoſtle knew the efficacy of the prayers of the church, for preſervation of Chriſt's eminent ſervants from impendent dangers; as in the caſe of Peter, Acts 12. and therefore, in moſt of his epiſtles, he doth moſt earneſtly intreat them, that he might be enabled to preach the goſpel with freedom and ſucceſs, Eph. 6. 19. Coloſſ. 4. 3. 2 Theſſ. 3. 1.; and for deliverance from the malice of his perſecutors, Rom. 15. 30. 31. 2 Theſſ. 3. 2. or elſe expreſs his confidence that their prayers will be effectual to that end, as here; and 2 Cor. 1. 10. 11. and 4. 14. 15. Phil. 1. 19. And had he thus conceived of prayers directed to angels and departed ſaints, why doth he not afford one inſtance of them in all his epiſtles?

THE PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE to the HEBREWS.

BY way of preface to this excellent epiſtle, I ſhall inquire,

1. Concerning the author of it.

2. Touching the canonical authority of this epiſtle.

3. Concerning the language in which it was originally written.

4. To whom it was indited, and ſent; and when.

5. Concerning the occaſion and deſign of writing this epiſtle. And,

I. That St Paul was the author of this epiſtle, I prove,

1. From theſe words of St Peter, As our dear brother Paul, according to the wiſdom given to him, hath written unto you, as in all his epiſtles, 2 Pet. 3. 15. 16. Whence it is evident, 1. That the apoſtle Paul had writ to them to whom St Peter was then writing, i. e. to the believing Jews in general, 2 Pet. 1. 1. to thoſe of the diſperſion, mentioned 1 Pet. 1. 1. 2. That he writ to them ſome certain letter, diſtinct from all his other epiſtolary writings; as appears from thoſe words, As alſo in all his epiſtles, i. e. his other epiſtles. Since then none of the ancients ſay that this epiſtle was loſt, it muſt be that which bears the name of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

Obj. To this it is anſwered, That the epiſtle intended by St Peter may be that written to the Romans, in which he ſpeaketh to the Jews by name, chap. 2. 17.; and in which is an exhortation found, to count the long-ſuffering of God ſalvation, or that which leadeth to repentance, ver. 4.

Anſ. But, 1. That which is written there, is plainly written to the unbelieving Jews, and concerns them only: whereas St Peter writes to the brethren, chap. 3. 12. the beloved, ver. 1. 14. 17. to them who had received like precious faith, chap. 1. 1. He therefore could not mean the Jews of whom St Paul ſpeaks in the epiſtle to the Romans. Nor, 2. Can that epiſtle be properly ſaid to be writ to the diſperſed Jews, it being writ to thoſe at Rome only, chap. 1. 7. and chiefly to the Gentiles there, chap. 1. 13. and 11. 13. and 15. 15. 16. 3. The words, chap. 2. 4. are not an exhortation, to count the long-ſuffering of God ſalvation, but a reproof, for deſpiſing this long-ſuffering: whereas, in the epiſtle to the Hebrews, chap. 10. he commends their patience under ſufferings, and aſſures them, it would find ſalvation; and that, if they lived by faith, their Lord would come, and would not tarry.

Arg. 2. A ſecond argument to prove St Paul the author of this epiſtle, is taken from theſe words, Know ye, that our brother Timothy is ſet at liberty; with whom, if he come ſhortly, I will ſee you. They of Italy ſalute you, chap. 13. 23. 24.: and from thoſe alſo, Pray for us; and do this now the rather, that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner, ver. 18. 19. For, 1. It is cuſtomary with St Paul, when he writes to others, to call St Timothy his brother: ſo, Paul the apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, and Timothy our brother, 2 Cor. 1. 1.; and again, Coloſſ. 1. 1. in the ſame words; We ſent Timothy our brother, 1 Theſſ. 3. 2.; and, Paul a priſoner of Jeſus Chriſt, and Timothy our brother, Philem. ver. 1. This Timothy was a priſoner at Rome, in the 7th year of Nero; and ſet at liberty the 8th, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, Harm. p. 139. 140. Of which here the author of this epiſtle gives notice, and ſaith, he would come with him to them; i. e. to the Jews in Judea, to whom, I ſhall prove anon, that this epiſtle was indited. Now, Timothy, we know, was ſtill the companion of St Paul. Laſtly, he deſires them to pray for him; which is frequently done by St Paul, in moſt of his epiſtles, viz. in that directed to the Romans, Rom. 15. 30.; to the Epheſians, Eph. 6. 19.; to the Philippians, Phil. 1. 19.; to the Coloſſians, Col. 4.

3. and to the Theſſalonians, 2 Theſſ. 3. 1.; and is never done in any of the catholic epiſtles. Pray for me, ſaith he, that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner. Now, Paul was ſent bound from Judea to Rome, and therefore his return from Rome to Judea was properly a reſtoring of him to them. And that he was thus reſtored to them, we learn from St Chryſoſtom (a), declaring, that being at liberty, he went to Spain, thence to Judea, and ſo back to Rome.

Arg. 3. That this epiſtle was written or compoſed by St Paul, may yet more ſtrongly be concluded from the authority of the ancients: for that they did deliver this as the epiſtle of St Paul, and that they were not raſh in ſo doing, we learn from the words of Origen (b). Now, among theſe ancients, we may reckon,

1. Clemens Romanus, the companion of, and coworker with St Paul; who, as Euſebius (c) and St Jerom (d) note, hath many notions, which are in this epiſtle, and uſed many expreſſions, word for word, taken thence: which ſhew this epiſtle not to be new, and to be duly reckoned among the writings of this apoſtle.

2. Irenæus, in the ſecond century, by whom this epiſtle is ſuppoſed to be cited as a book written by the Spirit, adv. hær. l. 3. c. 6. But not to inſiſt on that, as being uncertain,

3. Clemens Alexandrinus (e) cites thoſe words of St Paul, Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, Heb. 11. 6. adding, that faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen, ibid. ver. 1. κατὰ τὸν θεῖον ἀπόστολον, according to the divine apoſtle. And again, he ſaith, (f) Ὁ θεῖος ἀπόστολος, The divine apoſtle fears not to ſay, Remember the former days, in which ye being enlightened, ſuffered a great fight of affliction, Heb. 10. 32. And ſo he cites him on to the end of that chapter; then gives the ſubſtance of the eleventh chapter, and the exhortation in the beginning of chap. 12. 1. 2. And that this divine apoſtle was St Paul, we are aſſured from theſe words, (g) Ἐπεὶ καὶ Παῦλος τοῖς Ἑβραίοις γράφων τοῖς ἀναπαμπλησιν εἰς νόμον ἐκ πίστως. Paul alſo writing to the Hebrews, relapſing from faith unto the law, ſaith, Ye have need that one teach you again which be the firſt principles of the oracles of God, and are become ſuch as have need of milk, and not of ſtrong meat, Heb. 5. 12.

4. In the third century, Origen (h) citing the very words now mentioned, and the following words, ver. 13. 14. For every one that uſeth milk, is unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs, ſaith, "He that "writ this was the ſame Paul who ſaid to the Co- "rinthians, I have fed you with milk, and not with "meat," &c. 1 Cor. 3. 2. In his Philocalia (i) he ſaith, "The apoſtle Paul, who ſaid to the Corin- "thians, Theſe things happened in a figure, and "they were written for us on whom the ends of the "ages are come, 1 Cor. 10. 11. doth alſo, in ano- "ther epiſtle, uſe theſe words, relating to the ta- "bernacle, Thou ſhalt make all things according to "the pattern ſhewed thee in the mount," Heb. 8. 5. And that "the apoſtle (k), who ſaid, Jeruſalem, "which is above, is free, and is the mother of us all, "Gal. 4. 6. ſaid alſo in another epiſtle, Ye are come "to Mount Sion, the city of the living God, the hea- "venly Jeruſalem, and to myriads of angels," &c. Heb. 12. 22. 23. In his (l) Exhortation to martyrdom, he hath theſe words, Φησί που ὁ Παῦλος, "St "Paul, ſpeaking ſomewhere to them who ſuffered "from the beginning, and exhorting them to ſuffer "patiently the trials which afterwards fell upon them "for the word, ſaith, Call to remembrance the for- "mer days, in which ye being enlightened, ſuffered "a great fight of afflictions—Caſt not away therefore "your confidence, which hath great recompenſe of re- "ward; for ye have need of patience," Heb. 10. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. And in his anſwer to Africanus, having cited theſe words from this epiſtle, They were ſtoned, they were ſawn aſunder, they were ſlain with the ſword, Heb. 11. 37. he ſaith, (m) "If any "perſon, being preſſed with theſe words, ſhould "fall into the opinion of them who reject this epiſtle, "as none of St Paul's, he would uſe other words to

" demonſtrate to him that it was the epiſtle of St " Paul." He alſo adds, That (n) " the ſentences con- " tained in it are admirable, and no whit inferior " to the writings of the apoſtles; as he who dili- " gently reads them muſt confeſs."

In a word, when this epiſtle was denied by the Arians in the fourth century, becauſe they were not able to reſiſt the conviction it affords us of our Lord's divinity, Theodoret (o) ſaith, " They ought, at leaſt, " to revere the length of time, in which the chil- " dren of the church have read this epiſtle in the " churches, viz. as long as they have read the apo- " ſtolic writings: or, if this be not ſufficient to per- " ſuade them, they ſhould hearken to Euſebius (p), " of whom they boaſt as of the patron of their doc- " trine; for he confeſſes this was St Paul's epiſtle, " and he declares, that all the ancients had this o- " pinion of it."

That they of Rome, and other Latins, did, for a while, reject this epiſtle, will not much weaken this tradition; if we conſider,

1. That this epiſtle was not writ to them, but to the Hebrews, who, as Euſebius (q) teſtifies, " de- " lighted much in it."

2. That it was rejected by them, not that they had any thing to ſay againſt it, but becauſe they could not anſwer the arguments which the Novatian ſchiſ- matics among them produced, from the 6th and 10th chapters of this epiſtle, againſt receiving lapſed penitents into the church, whence, as Philaſtrius informs us, they rejected it, as thinking it was de- praved by heretics. Or,

3. Becauſe it wants his name, which he concealed, not as St Jerom conjectures, διὰ φθόνον, to avoid the offence of thoſe who liked not his perſon, by reaſon of his doctrine concerning the non-obſervation of their law, for it is evident from his deſire of their prayers, and from his intimation that he deſigned ſhortly to be with them, that he muſt be well known unto them; but, as Theodoret obſerves, becauſe " he was made an apoſtle, not of the circumciſion, " but of the Gentiles." Laſtly, the difference in ſtyle ſome mention, is ſo nice a thing, and may happen upon ſo many accounts, that it deſerves not to be looked on as an argument of any force againſt plain teſtimonies of the ancients, that St Paul was the author of this work.

II. That this epiſtle was written and directed to the Jews dwelling in Judea and Paleſtine, is the opinion of the ancients (r), though not ſo as to ex- clude the believing Jews of the diſperſion. This may be argued from the indorſement of it, To the He- brews, rather than to the Jews. It cannot be ima- gined but that he ſends it to be delivered at a cer- tain place, within ſome reaſonable compaſs, ſeeing the bearer of it, whoever he was, could not deliver it to all the Jews diſperſed through the whole world; and becauſe he directs them to pray, that he might be reſtored to them, and promiſeth to come and ſee them. The title therefore, To the Hebrews, muſt determine the place, and point out the Jews that dwelt in Judea, or the land of Iſrael: and this ſenſe doth the Holy Ghoſt put upon the title, the Hebrews, when it is ſaid, There was a murmuring of the Hel- leniſts againſt the Hebrews, Acts 6. 1.; by the Hel- leniſts, meaning the Jews that dwelt in foreign countries, among the Greeks; and by the Hebrews thoſe that dwelt in Judea. So again, 2 Cor. 11. 22. Are they Hebrews? ſo am I. Are they Iſraelites? ſo am I. And Phil. 3. 5. Of the ſtock of Iſrael, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; i. e. an Hebrew not only by deſcent, as were all of the ſtock of Iſrael, but by language, which ſome of them had loſt; and by habitation in the Holy Land, and not among the uncircumciſed Gentiles, he being bred up at the feet of Gamaliel. And ſo it is moſt proper to un- derſtand the inſcription of this epiſtle, namely, that St Paul directs and ſends it to the believing Jews of Judea, which he ſtyles his own nation, Acts 24. 17. For though he, doubtleſs, did intend it alſo for the benefit of the believing Jews diſperſed, yet might he ſend it firſt and chiefly to thoſe in Judea, the principal ſeat of the circumciſion, from whence it might, in time, diffuſe itſelf through the whole cir- cumference of the circumciſion.

But hence it cannot reaſonably be concluded that this epiſtle was writ in Hebrew, or in Syriac: for the goſpel of St John, and his firſt epiſtle, the ca- tholic epiſtles of St James, Peter, and St Jude, were alſo written to the Jews, and yet were writ in Greek, that being a tongue ſo well known to the Jews, that they call it the vulgar tongue; therefore in all the diſcourſes of the Jews with the Roman governors, who underſtood the Greek tongue, we never read, either in ſcripture, or Joſephus, that the Jews ſpake to them, or they unto the Jews, by an interpreter;

nor is there any of the ancients who pretends to have ſeen any Hebrew copy of this epiſtle. That it was writ in Greek, appears not only from the paſſages of ſcripture, ſo often cited in it from the Septuagint, even where they differ from the Hebrew, chap. 1. 6. 3. 8. 9. 10. 8. 8. 9. 10. 5. 37. 38. but alſo from chap. 7. 2. where we read thus, πρῶτον μὲν ἑρμηνευόμενος βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης, firſt being interpreted king of righteouſneſs, and afterwards king of Salem, which is king of peace; for both the word Melchiſedec, and King of Salem, being in the firſt verſe, ſhould have been there interpreted, had this been the addition of the interpreter; for ſo we find it is throughout the New Teſtament, where the interpretation immediately follows the Hebrew word or phraſe, as Mark 5. 41. Talitha, cumi, which is by interpretation, Daughter, ariſe: Golgotha, which is by interpretation the place of a ſcull, Mark 15. 22. So Matth. 27. 46. Mark 15. 34. John 1. 38. Rabbi, which is, being interpreted, Maſter; and ver. 41. Meſſiah, which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt. So chap. 9. 7. 19. 37. Acts 4. 36. 9. 36. 13. 8. Whereas here the word Melchiſedec is in the beginning of the firſt verſe, and the ſuppoſed addition of the interpreter is added where the word is not; ſo King of Salem is in the firſt verſe not interpreted, and when it is repeated, then comes the interpretation; which plainly ſhews, that it is not made to give the ſenſe, but the myſtery contained in the words, viz. That Chriſt was our peace, Eph. 2. 14. and his ſceptre was a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, chap. 1. 8.

IV. As for the time when this epiſtle was indited, 1. It ſeems evident, that it was written after that to the Coloſſians and to Philemon; for there he is Paul the priſoner, here he is ſet at liberty, and hoping to come quickly to them to whom he writes: thoſe epiſtles therefore being writ in the 62d year of Chriſt, and the 8th of Nero, this muſt at leaſt be written in the following year. Again, in the epiſtle to the Coloſſians, we have mention of St Timothy, but nothing of his bonds; here we have mention both of his impriſonment and his enſuing liberty, which may well caſt this epiſtle into the 9th of Nero, where it is placed by Biſhop Pearſon.

Laſtly, To ſpeak a little of the occaſion of it: I have ſhewed in the preface to the ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and in the preface to the epiſtle of St James, that it was written chiefly to prevent that epidemical apoſtaſy from Chriſt to Moſes, which the believing Jews were then too prone to. But we learn alſo from the matter of the epiſtle, that it was written to prove that Jeſus was the Son of God: now, in what ſenſe this chiefly was denied by the Jews, we learn from the goſpel of St John, where, when our Lord had ſaid, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, John 5. 17. the Jews ſeek to kill him, becauſe πατέρα ἴδιον ἔλεγε τὸν Θεὸν, he ſaid God was his own Father, making himſelf equal to God, ver. 18. And again, We ſtone thee, ſay they, for blaſphemy, becauſe thou, being a man, makeſt thyſelf God, John 10. 33. What was this blaſphemy of which they thus accuſe him? It was only this, that he ſaid, I am the Son of God, ver. 36. It is therefore plain, they judged it the ſame thing to ſay he was the Son of God, and to ſay, that he was God; whence we may rationally conclude, it was alſo in this ſenſe that the apoſtle here aſſerts, and doth endeavour to confirm this truth.

And, laſtly, This epiſtle being written to perſons now relapſing from Chriſt to Moſes, and to the law given, ſaid they, by angels; this ſeems to be the reaſon why the apoſtle is ſo large in ſhewing that Chriſt was greater than the angels, a greater lawgiver than Moſes, a greater prieſt than Aaron, and that the levitical prieſthood, covenant, and law, were to give place to Chriſt our great High Prieſt, to his new law of liberty, and that new covenant he had eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes.

ON THE

EPISTLE to the HEBREWS.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. GOD, who [a] at ſundry times, and [b] in divers manners, ſpake in time paſt unto the fathers by the prophets,

2. Hath in theſe laſt days (the times of the Meſſiah, ſee note on 2 Tim. 3. 1.) ſpoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed (ἔθηκε, conſtituted) [c] heir of all things, [d] by whom alſo he made the worlds.

3. Who being the [e] brightneſs of his glory, and the [f] expreſs image of his perſon, (or character of his ſubſiſtence), and [g] upholding all things by the word of his power, [h] when he had (Gr. having) by himſelf purged our ſins, ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high:

4. Being made (Gr. being) ſo much better than the angels, (and ſuperior to them by this exaltation to the right hand of Majeſty), as he hath by inheritance obtained [i] a more excellent name (title and authority) than they.

5. For to which of the angels ſaid he at any time (as he did to Chriſt), [k] Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again (to Solomon the ſon of David, what did more eminently belong to this Son and Lord of David), [l] I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son, (2 Sam. 7. 14. 1 Chron. 22. 10.)

6. And again, when he bringeth in (ὅταν δὲ πάλιν, and when he brings again) the firſt begotten (from the dead, Col. 1. 18) into the world, he ſaith, And [m] let all the angels of God worſhip him, (eſtabliſhing thus his dominion over them, and their ſubjection to him, and alſo the divine excellence of him who was thus to be worſhipped by the higheſt of created beings.)

7. And (moreover, ſpeaking) [n] of the angels, he (i. e. David only) ſaith, (He is that God) who maketh his angels ſpirits, (or winds), and his miniſters a flame of fire; (giving them no higher titles than thoſe of his meſſengers and miniſters, and ſhewing their efficacy and ſwiftneſs in doing his commandments, and hearkening to the voice of his words, by comparing them to the winds and fire, Pſal. 104. 4.)

8. But (ſpeaking) to (of) the Son he (i. e. David, moved by the Holy Ghoſt) ſaith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, a ſceptre of righteouſneſs is the ſceptre of thy kingdom (Pſal. 45. 7.):

9. Thou haſt loved righteouſneſs, and hated iniquity; therefore [o] God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs (i. e. advanced thee in eminence and dignity) above thy fellows, (ſtyling him, in theſe words, God, and an eternal King; aſcribing to him a throne and kingdom, and a righteous government, to reward his righteous ſervants, whom he loves, and to puniſh his obdurate enemies, enemies, whoſe iniquities render them hateful to him. So that theſe words again prove both his divine nature, and his exaltation to the government of the whole world.)

10. And (that alſo by him he made the heavens, is teſtified in theſe words ſpoken of him), [p] Thou, Lord, in the beginning, haſt laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thy hands.

11. They ſhall periſh, but thou remaineſt: and they ſhall all wax old, as doth a garment;

12. And as a veſture ſhalt thou fold them up, and they ſhall be changed: but thou art the ſame, and thy years ſhall not fail, (Pſal. 102.)

13. But, (yea) to which of the angels ſaid he at any time (as he did to Chriſt, Pſal. 110. 1.) [q] Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy foot-ſtool?

14. Are they not all (declared, Pſal. 103. 20. 21. and 104. 4. to be) miniſtering ſpirits, ſent forth (not for government and dominion, but) to miniſter for them who (being ſons by adoption) ſhall be (alſo) [r] heirs of ſalvation?

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Πολυμερῶς, at ſundry times.] Before the flood by Enoch, Jude 14. and Noah, 2 Pet. 2. 5.; after the flood by Abraham the prophet, Gen. 20. 7. who gave to his children, and houſehold after him, the commandments of the Lord, Gen. 18. 19.; by Jacob, propheſying to his ſons of things to come in the laſt days, Gen. 49. 1.; by Moſes during their abode in the wilderneſs; by Deborah, Samuel, and other prophets, in the time of the judges, Judg. 6. 8.; by Nathan, in the time of David and Solomon; by Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, in the time of the kings; by Daniel, Haggai, Zechariah, Malachi, in and after the captivity.

Ibid. [b] Πολυτρόπως, in divers manners.] In a cloud, fire, a ſtill breath; by viſions, dreams, a voice from heaven, and by the Holy Spirit ſpeaking in the prophets, 2 Pet. 2. 21.

Ver. 2. [c] Κληρονόμον πάντων, heir of all things.] As it were by ſucceſſion to his Father, who now judgeth no man, but hath given all judgment to his Son, John 5. 22. Heb. 3. 6. We cannot deſire a fairer comment on theſe words, than that of the Socinians on the place, that (a) "Chriſt is made heir of all "things in heaven and earth, yea of heaven and "earth itſelf; that he is heir and Lord of all an-"gels and of all men living and dead, Rom. 14. "8. 9. That he is abſolutely the heir of all things, "and hath the higheſt empire and dominion over "all angels and men; by which words is ſigni-"fied the higheſt execellency and divinity, and, as it "were, the unity of Chriſt with God, though with "diverſity," in that he is his ſon and heir, and received this dominion from another. And I believe it is as impoſſible to underſtand how a man ſhould have this empire over all things in heaven and earth, and over death itſelf, and yet be a mere man, as it is to underſtand any myſtery of the ſacred Trinity. The word heir doth alſo ſignify Lord of all things. See the note on Col. 1. 15.

Ibid. [c] Δι' οὗ καὶ τοὺς αἰῶνας ἐποίησεν, by whom alſo he made the worlds.] That is, ſaith Grotius, propter quem, for whom he made them, according to the doctrine of the Rabbins, that the world was made for the Meſſiah. But this expoſition is contrary to the rule of all grammarians (b), that τὸ διὰ, ὅτε μὲν συντάσσεται γενικῇ μεσιτεύει, ὅτε δὲ αἰτιατικῇ αἰτίαν δηλοῖ, that the preposition διὰ, when it is joined with a genitive caſe, ſignifies the means by which, and the final cauſe only, when it is joined with an accuſative caſe. It is contrary to the expoſition of all the Greek fathers, who unanimouſly ſay, τοῦτο δηλωτικὸν τῆς θεότητος, this ſhews the divinity of Chriſt. It is alſo without example in the New Teſtament; for διὰ τῆς δόξης τοῦ Πατρός, Rom. 6. 4. which is the only place he cites, ſignifies by the glory, or power of the Father, by which Chriſt was raiſed from the dead, Eph. 1. 19. Col. 2. 12. The Socinians, by the worlds here, underſtand the new creation, or the church begun by Chriſt's miniſtry upon earth, begotten and renewed by the evangelical diſpenſation. But neither can this expoſition ſtand: For, 1. Though Chriſt be ſtyled in ſome of the Greek verſions, πατὴρ τοῦ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, Iſ. 9. 6. The father of the age to come; yet οἱ αἰῶνες abſolutely put, doth never ſignify the church or evangelical ſtate; nor doth the ſcripture ever ſpeak of the world to come in the plural, but in the ſingular number only, preſerving the phraſe Holam Habba, as they received it from the Jews. 2. Were this the import of the words, the worlds might as well have been ſaid to have been created, or made by Chriſt's apoſtles, they being the great converters of the world; or at leaſt, this being done by them aſſiſted by the power of Chriſt, after he had been thus made heir of all things, it muſt have properly been ſaid that Chriſt made the worlds by his apoſtles, which yet the Holy Ghoſt never thinks fit to intimate. Moreover, whereas this making of the world by Jeſus Chriſt is done by his prophetic office, i. e. his ſpeaking to us in the laſt days, the apoſtle had mentioned this already, and makes a plain gradation from it to his kingly office, in ſaying he was conſtituted Lord of all things, not ſpeaking of making the world by way of conſecution, thus, καὶ δι' ὃν, and by whom; but by way of farther gradation, δι' ὃν καὶ, by whom alſo he made the world; as if he ſhould have ſaid, Nor is it to be wondered that he ſhould be conſtituted Lord of the whole world, ſeeing he made the whole. And that the apoſtle here doth ſpeak, not of the reforming of the new, but of the forming of the old world, he himſelf ſufficiently inſtructs us, by ſaying in this ſame epiſtle, By faith we underſtand, κατηρτίσθαι τοὺς αἰῶνας ῥήματι Θεοῦ, that the worlds were formed by the word of God, chap. 11. 3. For that by τοὺς αἰῶνας we are to underſtand the material world, the Socinian commentators grant, and the parallel place in St Peter doth enforce, when he ſaith, that the heavens were of old, and the earth, ἐξ ὕδατος συνεστῶσα τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγῳ, conſiſting out of water by the word of God, 2 Pet. 3. 3. and this world is mentioned in both places in the plural number, agreeably to the phraſe and doctrine of the Jews (c), who ſpeak of עולמים, i. e. the worlds, in the plural, and divide them into הזה עולם, or עולם השפל, i. e. this inferior and habitable world, called by St Peter, ὁ τότε κόσμος, the then world which periſhed by water, ver. 6. and the עולם העליון; ſuperior world, that is, the heavens. And it is no improbable conjecture, that when St Peter ſaith, the heavens and earth conſiſted by the word of God; and St Paul, that by faith we learn that the worlds were framed ῥήματι Θεοῦ, by the word of God, they mean this ſubſtantial word of which the apoſtle is here ſpeaking; for the word דבר ſeems plainly to be uſed in this ſenſe, when we read in the Targum of Jeruſalem, on Gen. 28. 11. רחמוי דנה ית, for his word, i. e. the word of God, deſired to ſpeak with Jacob; and in that of Jonathan, וימר, the word would ſpeak with him; which in Bereſchith Rabba, § 68. runs thus, God would ſpeak with him; and the word ῥῆμα ſeems alſo to be either uſed in this ſenſe, or applied to the λόγος, oft by Philo (d), as when he ſaith, that Moſes was tranſlated διὰ ῥήματος τοῦ αἰτίου, δι' ὃν καὶ συμπὰς κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο, by the word of the firſt cauſe, by which the world was made; and that God made both the heavens and the earth by a word, by his moſt illuſtrious and reſplendent λόγος (e). And to be ſure Philo was of the ſame opinion with St Paul, that the Word made and faſhioned the world, whence he ſo often mentions the divine Word (f) "adorning "all things, the word of God that maketh the "world, the Word by which the world is faſhion-"ed and made, and by which, as his organ, God "gave being to it;" and ſaith in words like thoſe of the apoſtle (g), "That God poſſeſſeth all things, "uſing that word as the diſpenſer of his gifts, by "which alſo he made the world." And this was alſo the doctrine of all the primitive fathers from the beginning, as well as of all the commentators on this text. (h) St Barnabas declares, that he is "the Lord of the world, the maker of the ſun, the "perſon by whom, and to whom are all things." "Heis," ſaith Juſtin Martyr (i), "the Word by which "the heaven, the earth, and every creature was "made, by whom God at the beginning made and "ordained all things, viz. the heavens and the "earth, and by whom he will renew them." the ſcripture, " which they who hold to, may eaſily " prove that the heretics had deviated from the " truth." He adds, that " the Barbarians who held " the ancient tradition, did believe in one God, the " maker of heaven and earth, and of all things " therein, by Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God;" and this doctrine he repeats almoſt an hundred times elſewhere. " Our doctrine," ſaith Athenagoras (l), " celebrates one God the creator of all things, who " made all things by Jeſus Chriſt, from whom, and " by whom all things were made." " God," ſaith Theophilus (m), " made all things by him, and he " is called the beginning, becauſe he is the prin- " ciple and ruler of all things made by him." He adds, that " by this principle God made the hea- " vens: that God ſaid to him, Let us make man; " he being his Word, by which he made all things." " Him," ſaith Tatian (n), " we know to have been " the author of the world; for that which was be- " gotten in the beginning, gave beginning to the " things made. He made man the image of his " immortality, and before man he made the an- " gels." " We rational creatures," ſaith Clemens of Alexandria (o), " are the work of God the " Word; for he was and is the divine principle of " all things, by whom all things were made, and " who, as the framer of all things, in the begin- " ning, gave alſo life to us; by whom are all things; " who made man, our God and maker, the cauſe " of the creation." In the third century we learn the ſame from Origen (p), Tertullian (q), Novatian (r), St Cyprian (s), and others cited by the learned Dr Bull. So that in theſe two verſes there be viſible theſe gradations; one, from Chriſt's prophetic office to his kingly office conferred on him as heir of all things; the other, from his kingly office to the foundation of it, laid in his divine nature, and in the work of the creation; it being, ſay Irenæus, and the ancient fathers, fit that he ſhould reform, and govern the world, by whom it was formed; that he ſhould give new life to man, who gave him his being, and firſt breath.

Ver. 3. ὁ Ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης, i. e. the reſplendence, or ſhining forth of his glory.] This metaphor ſome of the fathers think is taken from the ſun, whence Juſtin Martyr (t) ſaith, he proceedeth from the Father, as τὸ τοῦ ἡλίου φῶς, the light of the ſun, without diviſion or ſeparation from him. Others with him, παραδείγματος χάριν, for example's ſake, ſay (u), he proceedeth ὡς ἀπὸ πυρὸς ἀναπτόμενα πυρὰ, as fire is kindled from fire, without the diminution of the fire that kindles it, or as ἀπὸ λαμπάδος λαμπὰς, as one torch is lighted from another, which is the metaphor of Tatian, p. 145.; which metaphors they have borrowed from Philo (x), who ſpeaking of the ſpirit in Moſes derived upon the ſeventy elders, cautions us not to underſtand this to be done, κατὰ ἀποκοπὴν, ἢ διαζυξιν, by abſciſſion, or disjunction, ἀλλ' ὅια γίνεται ἐν ἀπὸ πυρὸς, but as light from fire, at which if you light a thouſand torches, it is not diminiſhed. Accordingly the Nicene council ſtyle him light of light, and hence they argue his conſubſtantiality with the Father, who produces not another eſſence or ſubſtance in the Son, but communicates the ſame eſſence to him. The like notions the Jews ſeem to have had of their λόγος, or wiſdom, which is with them the ſame: for the book of Wiſdom ſaith of her, that ſhe is ἀπόῤῥοια τῆς τοῦ παντοκράτορος δόξης εἰλικρινὴς, ἢ ἀπαύγασμα φωτὸς ἀϊδίου, an efflux of the ſincere glory of the Almighty, and the ſplendor of eternal light, chap. 7. 25. 26.; and Philo (y) ſaith of the Λόγος, that he is τὸ τοῦ ἀοράτου ἢ μεγίστου Θεοῦ περιφανέστατον ἢ περιαυγέστατον φῶς, the moſt illuſtrious and ſplendid light of the inviſible and higheſt God. And this the Jews might better underſtand, if it were taken, as probably it was, from the glory that conducted them out of Egypt, and led them through the wilderneſs, and dwelt among them, firſt in the ark and tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple. For it is obſervable,

mentioned in the Old Teſtament, and in the writings of the Jews, was not the cloud itſelf, that being only the cover of it, but the light, fire, or ſplendor that iſſued from it. So Exod. 24. 16. And the glory of the Lord dwelt upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it (viz. the glory of the Lord) ſix days, and the ſight of the glory of the Lord (when it broke out of the cloud after ſix days) was as burning fire on the top of the mount, in the ſight of the people of Iſrael. And Exod. 40. 34. Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. And ver. 35. Moſes was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, becauſe the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the houſe, 1 Kings 8. 10. 11. When the prieſts were come out of the holy place, the cloud filled the houſe of the Lord, ſo that the prieſts could not ſtand to miniſter, becauſe of the cloud; for the glory of the Lord had filled the houſe of the Lord, Ezek. 10. 4. And the houſe was filled with the cloud, and the court was full of the brightneſs of the glory of the Lord. Note,

2. That this glory is ſtyled the glory of the Lord, not as being itſelf a divine thing, or a ray of divinity, but as being the ſymbol of God's glorious preſence and abode where it appeared and reſided. Thus the cloud, which conſiſteth of a dark part to cover the fire, or light, and a bright ſide by the appearance of the light, is called the cloud of Jehovah, Exod. 4. 38. Numb. 10. 34. becauſe God was gloriouſly preſent in it; or, as Rabbi Moſes Ben Nachman on Exod. 40. 34. ſaith ביהכבוד שוכן בתוך הענן, becauſe the glory dwelt in the midſt of it; whence God ſaid, Lo, I come to thee in a thick cloud, Exod. 19. 9.; I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-ſeat, Lev. 16. 2.; He ſpake to Moſes out of the cloud, Numb. 7. 89. And when he went to receive his commands, it is ſaid, And Moſes drew near to the thick darkneſs where God was, Exod. 20. 21. And, laſtly, God is ſaid to go before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, and by night in the pillar of fire, Exod. 13. 21. Numb. 14. 14.

Again, the ark in which this glory dwelt between the cherubims is called כבוד יי, the glory of the Lord, i. e. of that glorious Majeſty who dwelt in it; whence the God of Iſrael is often ſtyled the God that ſitteth between the cherubims; becauſe here, ſay the Jews (z), he fixed his reſidence and preſence, notwithſtanding that he fills heaven and earth, and his Majeſty is in heaven, and in all the earth. And when the ark was to be taken up and carried any whither, they ſung thus, Ariſe, Jehovah, and let thine enemies be ſcattered, Numb. 10. 35. Pſal. 68. 2. and when it reſted, thus, Give reſt, Jehovah, to the many thouſands of Iſrael; not ſtyling the ark, Jehovah, but the glorious Majeſty that dwelt in it, or him, and the ark of his ſtrength, Pſal. 132. 8.; where alſo it may be noted, that the Targum of Jeruſalem and Jonathan read thus, Riſe up, O Word of the Lord, and, return, O Word of the Lord. And Pſal. 24. when the ark was brought from the houſe of Obed-edom, and ſettled in Mount Zion, and placed in the holy of holies, they ſung thus, Lift up your heads, O ye gates, that the King of glory may come in, i. e. the Lord of hoſts, who dwelt in the ark.

Accordingly our Lord Jeſus, after his aſcenſion, appeared ſtill in, or with the glory of the Lord. When he was transfigured on Mount Tabor, he was in this ſplendor, Matth. 17. 2. ſtyled by St Peter, μεγαλοπρεπὴς δόξα, the magnificent glory, 2 Pet. 1. 17.; ſo he appeared to Stephen, who ſaw the glory of the Lord, and Jeſus ſtanding at the right hand of God, Acts 7. 55.; ſo to Saul, when a light brighter than the ſun ſhone round about him, and he heard a voice out of it, ſaying to him, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt, Acts 9. 5. and 26. 13. he being ὁ Κύριος τῆς δόξης, the Lord of glory, 1 Cor. 2. 8.; ſee Rev. 1. 14. 15. and 2. 18. and 18. 1. and 19. 12. And becauſe of God's reſidence in this glory, the word glory doth often ſignify God himſelf; as when we read of the throne, and the houſe of glory, i. e. of the glorious God: ſo Rabbi Joſeph Abbo (a), "It is the "manner of the ſcripture, to call the viſible glory "and ſplendor of the divine Majeſty by the name "of God." So Pſal. 106. 20. They turned their glory into the ſimilitude of a calf; Jer. 2. 12. My people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. And ſo the fathers ſeem to take the word glory here for the divine glory. Note,

3. That from this glory, when God did any wondrous works of power, mercy, and judgment, there is ſaid to be an emanation or ſhining-forth of glory; as when fire went forth from the glory of the Lord to conſume their ſacrifices, in token of his favourable acceptance of them; ſo Lev. 9. 23. 24. The glory of the Lord appeared, and there came a fire out from before the Lord, and conſumed upon the altar the burnt-offering, and the fat. So 2 Chron. 7. 1. 2. 3. accordingly they begged his favour in theſe words, Thou that dwelleſt between the cherubims, ſhine forth, Pſal. 80. 1.; ſee Pſal. 50. 2. Deut. 33. 2. and to conſume tranſgreſſors, viz. Nadab and Abihu, Lev. 10. 2. and the two hundred and fifty men that offered incenſe, Numb. 16. 35.; ſee Exod. 14. 24. 25. And in like manner may the Son be ſaid to be ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης, an emanation or ſhining forth from the glory of the Father, as being before all things, prolatus a Patre, ſive generatus, "begotten or brought forth by the " Father," ſaith Irenæus, l. 2. c. 48. 4. 28. being always in him, but τῶν ὑλικῶν ξυμπάντων ἰδέα καὶ ἐνέργεια ἦναι προελθών, coming forth before all things, to be the idea and active power of all material beings: ſo Athenagoras, p. 10. The Word, whom the Father begat, ἐξερευξάμενος πρὸ πάντων, ſending him forth before all things, who was always in God, and became λόγος προφορικὸς, when he would create the world. So Theophilus (b), whom he made πρόπαιδα, to leap from him, ſay Juſtin Martyr and Tatian (c), he being in him before all ages; προελθὼν ὁ λόγος δημιουργίας, the Word coming forth, which is the cauſe of the creation, προγεννηθεὶς, διὸ ὃ τὰ πάντα, and fore-begotten, by which all things were made, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus (d). The Word brought forth by the Father, and by that prolation generated, and therefore the Son of God, ſaith Tertullian (e).

Ibid. ᾿ Καὶ χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, the impreſſion or repreſentation of his ſubſiſtence.] The phraſe ſignifies, ſaith Theodoret, that he ſubſiſts by himſelf, ὃς ἐν ἑαυτῷ διάκυπτει τὰς πατρικὰς χαρακτῆρας, and in himſelf repreſents the characters of his Father. Χαρακτὴρ, ſaith Phavorinus, is διαλύπωσις δηλοῦσα τὴν ὑπόστασιν, a form or draught manifeſting the ſubſtance whence it was taken. Ὑπόστασις, ſaith he, is the ſubſtance with the properties; οὐσία μετὰ τῶν ἰδιωμάτων, or, συνδρομὴ τῶν περὶ ἑκαστον ἰδιωμάτων, a concourſe of all the properties of any being; ſo that the character of his ſubſiſtence here, is, according to him, a draught manifeſting or exhibiting the ſubſtance and properties of God. According to the Greek commentators on the place, it is the ſame with our Lord's being in the form of God, before he took our nature on him, Philip. 2. 5. Accordingly, Wiſdom is, by the author of the book that bears that name, ſtyled, ἔσοπτρον ἀκηλίδωτον τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐνεργείας, καὶ εἰκὼν τῆς ἀγαθότητος αὐτοῦ, the unſpotted mirror of the power or activity of God, and the image of his goodneſs, chap. 7. 26. The Λόγος is, ſaith Philo (f), ἀΐδιος εἰκὼν αὐτοῦ, the eternal image of God. The image of God δι᾽ ὃ σύμπας ὁ κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο, by which the whole world was made (g). And of the angel which God ſent before Iſrael, in whom God's name was, Exod. 23. 22. the Jews ſay he was, פְּנֵי מַלְאָךְ, i. e. the angel of his face; becauſe, ſaith R. M. Cerundenſis (h), God's face or glory might be ſeen in him, or be exactly repreſented by him; yea, the government of the whole world was committed to him, and God had made him Lord over his whole houſe, and had made all things ſubject to him. Now, theſe things ſo exactly agree with what the apoſtle here aſcribes to Chriſt, that I could not think them unworthy to be noted here.

Ibid. ᾿ Φέρων τε τὰ πάντα τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, and upholding all things by the word of his power.] The Hebrew word נשׂא, is ſometimes rendered φέρω, ſuſtineo; as when it is ſaid of Moſes, Numb. 11. 14. 17. I cannot φέρειν, ſuſtain, or bear all this people; and Deut. 1. 9. 12. How can I alone φέρειν τὸν κόπον, bear the labour of all this people? and of Chriſt, that φέρει, he bears the burden of our ſin, Iſ. 53. 4. Sometimes it ſignifies to govern; whence נשׂיא is ſometimes rendered βασιλεὺς, a king, Gen. 23. 6.; ſometimes ἄρχων, a prince, as it is rendered above ſixty times; ſometimes ἀρχηγὸς in the ſame ſenſe, Numb. 13. 3. and 16. 2.; and ſometimes ἡγούμενος, a governor, Joſh. 13. 22. 2 Chron. 5. 1. and the Greek φέρειν ſignifies not only to ſuſtain, but alſo ſuo arbitratu moderari, to govern at his will. Now, which of theſe two ſenſes you put upon the words, it is not much material, ſince it is equally the effect of a divine power to ſuſtain and govern all things; whence this is, by the Jews, made the deſcription of God himſelf, that he is a God סבל נלאה, ſuſtaining all things (i), the heavens, the earth, and the abyſs, and bearing all people טימרוח ברוח, by the ſpirit of his word. Accordingly of the Λόγος, Philo (k) often ſaith, that he is πηδαλιοῦχος καὶ κυβερνήτης πάντων, he that ſits at the helm, and governs all things; that he is ὁ συνέχων καὶ διοικῶν τὰ πάντα, he that containeth and diſpenſeth all things (l); that God, as a king and ſhepherd, rules according to law and right, and placing over us his firſt-begotten Son, ὃς τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν τῆς ἱερᾶς ταύτης ἀγέλης ἅτε τι μεγάλου βασιλέως ὕπαρχος διαδέχεται, who, as the prorex of the great King, takes care of the ſacred flock (m).

It remains yet to be inquired, whether theſe things are ſpoken of our Lord, as acting here on earth, or purely of the divine nature he had before the world was made. The Socinians, and ſome others, think all this relates to our Saviour, as acting here on earth, that he was the ſplendor of his Father's glory; becauſe God who commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſs, hath ſhined into our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Cor. 4. 6.; on which account the apoſtle ſaith, We have ſeen his glory, the glory as of the only begotten Son of God, John 1. 14.; that he was the character of his ſubſtance, or his attributes, as he was the image of the inviſible God, Col. 1. 15. in which his power, wiſdom, holineſs, love, and mercy, ſhined forth conſpicuouſly; that he did φέρειν, præſtare, perform all things by the word of his power; as he made the winds and ſeas calm, rebuked diſeaſes, and caſt out devils by his word. And Mr Clerc is poſitive, that it muſt be the human nature which this ſacred writer ſpake of, that the Jews might underſtand what he ſaid was true; for that alone is viſible, and nothing but what is ſuch can be called the image or brightneſs of any thing among men. On the other hand, it is certain that all the fathers were of another mind; that when Philo and the ancient Jews ſpake thus of wiſdom, the logos, the angel of God's face, they underſtood all that they ſaid of the logos and wiſdom ſubſiſting long before our Saviour's incarnation, and ſo thought this logos the ſplendor and image of the Father, when he was not viſible among men, as the apoſtle ſaith he was, when he was taken from them into heaven. It is certain alſo, that the preceding words, by whom alſo he made the worlds, cannot be ſpoken of Chriſt incarnate, and the words, upholding all things by the word of his power, ſeem to import the ſame with that expreſſion of the apoſtle, Col. 1. 17. By him all things conſiſt. Moreover, could theſe things be attributed to our Lord Chriſt as acting in the fleſh, yet have I proved, note on Col. 1. 15. that they muſt be aſcribed to a divine nature reſiding in him, or to God manifeſted in the fleſh; and ſo what Mr Clerc ſays muſt be the human nature, muſt, ſay I, be the divine nature.

Ibid. ᾽Αι ἑαυτῆ καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν, when he had by himſelf purged our ſins.] i. e. When he had made himſelf an expiatory ſacrifice, to purge us from the guilt and puniſhment of our tranſgreſſions. To confirm this, let it be noted, Firſt, That this was the opinion of all nations, that their expiatory ſacrifices were deſigned to take away the guilt of ſin, and make atonement for it to an offended Majeſty. For why are they ſtill ſaid, ἁγνίζειν, καθαρίζειν, purgare, luſtrare, to purge, and to make clean, but from their ſuppoſed virtue to purify them from the guilt of ſin? And becauſe ſin is often repreſented in the law of Moſes, and in the prophets, under the metaphors of uncleanneſs, filthineſs, defilement, and pollution; therefore their ſacrifices alſo are ſtill repreſented as cleanſing them from the guilt and the defilement of ſin, and ſo making the pollution to paſs from them. Hence the blood which made the atonement, is ſtyled αἷμα καθαρισμοῦ, the blood of cleanſing, or purgation So Exod. 30. 10. And Aaron ſhall make an atonement upon the horns of the incenſe-offering once a-year, ἀπὸ τοῦ αἵματος καθαρισμοῦ καθαρισμοῦ αὐτό, with the blood of the ſin-offering ſhall he make atonement upon it. And the ſacrifice offered for ſin is ſaid to be offered καθαίρεται, to purify them from it by an atonement. So Lev. 9. 15. And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat which was the ſin-offering, and ſlew it, καὶ ἐκαθάρισεν αὐτὸν, and offered it for ſin. And Lev. 16. 30. In the great day of atonement, the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for you, καθαρίσαι ὑμᾶς, to cleanſe you, that you may be clean from all your ſins before the Lord, καθαρισθήσεσθε, and you ſhall be cleanſed. So Job is ſaid καθαρίζειν, to cleanſe his ſons from their ſuppoſed ſins by a burnt-offering, chap. 1. 5. and ſo he inquires, chap. 7. 21. Why doſt thou not make καθαρισμὸν τῆς ἁμαρτίας μου; i. e. Why doſt thou not forgive my ſin? Since therefore it is very reaſonable to conceive that the word καθαρίζειν uſed in an epiſtle written to the Jews touching the expiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, is uſed in the ſenſe in which they always took it when applied in the Old Teſtament to ſacrifices which made atonement for their ſins; it follows, that when the apoſtle here ſaith, Chriſt made καθαρισμὸν, a purgation of our ſins by himſef; and when he adds, that whereas the blood of the legal ſacrifices did expiate εἰς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα, to the purification of the fleſh, the blood of Chriſt καθαριεῖ, ſhall much more expiate to the purification of the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, c. 9. 13. When he proceeds to ſay, that whereas under the law almoſt all things ἐν αἵματι καθαρίζεται, were purified by blood, and without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion, ver. 22. 23. and thence argues, that "the heavenly things muſt "be purged with better ſacrifices:" He, in theſe caſes, muſt ſpeak of the blood of Chriſt as making atonement for our ſins, by purging away the guilt of them, and averting the puniſhment due to us for them. (See the reading vindicated, Examen Millii.)

Verſe 4. ᾽Διαφορώτερον ὄνομα, a more excellent name.] i. e. Not only title, but authority, and ſuperior excellency. So Phil. 2. 9. God hath highly exalted him, and given him ὄνομα τὸ ὑπὲρ πᾶν ὄνομα, a name above every name, i. e. the higheſt dignity and power, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow; i. e. that all creatures in heaven or earth, or under it, ſhould own his power and dominion, ver. 10. Eph. 1. 21. He hath ſet him at his right hand, above all principality, power, might, and dominion, καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος, and every name. In both theſe ſenſes Chriſt hath a more excellent name, viz. the name of his only Son, ver. 5. the name of God, ver. 8. and a more excellent authority and dignity, viz. that of ſitting at the right hand of Majeſty, ver. 13. and ruling all things by the word of his power; and this excellency he hath upon a better foundation, as being the maker of the world, &c. ver. 2. 3.

Ver. 5. ᾽Υἱός μου εἶ σὺ, thou art my Son.] (n) R. Solomon here ſaith, Our "maſters have interpreted "all that is written in this pſalm of the King Meſ-

(n) In Dan. 7. 13.

" ſiah." And Saadias Gaon (o) doth, from theſe very words, prove the dominion and kingdom of the Meſſiah, becauſe it is here ſaid, I have ſet thee, my king, upon the holy hill of Zion: I will declare the command, Jehovah hath ſaid unto me, Thou art my Son, &c.; which alſo is apparent from the following words, I will give the Heathen for thine inheritance, &c. ver. 8. and from the exhortation to all kings to ſubmit to him. And that this was the ancient and received expoſition of theſe words, confirmed by the Holy Ghoſt, we learn from this apoſtle, who, diſputing with the Jews touching our Saviour's reſurrection, when all power in heaven and earth was given to him, Matth. 28. 18. he proves it from theſe very words, Acts 13. 33. And again, ſpeaking of his prieſthood which he was to exerciſe in heaven after his reſurrection and aſcenſion, he proves it to the ſame Jews from the ſame words, Heb. 5. 5.

Ibid. [1] Ἐσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, I will be to him a Father, &c.] Theſe words are cited from 2 Sam. 7. 14. and they do promiſe to Solomon, the type of Chriſt, a kingdom to be eſtabliſhed for ever, ver. 13. 16. and ſo to Chriſt the antitype, and eminently the Son of God, an everlaſting kingdom and dominion. See the judgment of the Jewiſh church, p. 61.

Note alſo, That though the angels be ſometimes in ſcripture called the ſons of God, Job 1. 6. 2. 1. 38. 7. God never ſaid to any of them, I will be to him a Father, to protect him in his kingdom; much leſs, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, to a kingdom: and ſo theſe paſſages, in the true and full extent of them, cannot agree to any of the angels.

Ver. 6. [m] Προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ, Let all the angels of God worſhip him.] It is generally thought theſe words are cited from Pſalm 97. 7. where in the Septuagint we have words very like them, viz. προσκυνήσατε αὐτῷ, πάντες ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ, worſhip him, all his angels; in the Hebrew it is indeed כל אלהים all ye Elohim: but then Aben Ezra's note is, that ſome think בל אלהים ה"ס המלאכים the word Elohim always denotes the angels: and (p) Kimchi ſaith, the Hebrews did expound this pſalm, " of what was to come to paſs in the days of the " Meſſiah." In the Septuagint it is ſtyled a pſalm of David, ὅτε ἡ γῆ αὐτῷ καθίσατο, when the land was eſtabliſhed to him, or when he was made maſter of all thoſe countries which God deſigned to be the inheritance of Iſrael, and therefore may very properly be referred to the ſon of David, at his reſurrection, or his coming again into the world, that being the time when all power in heaven and earth was given to him, when he was ſolemnly inaugurated, and inſtated in his ſpiritual and heavenly kingdom, and the government was upon his ſhoulders, and he ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high, ver. 3.

But it is obſervable, that theſe words are expreſsly to be found, Deut. 32. 43. as here they are cited: and it is certain from St Paul, that God there ſpeaks of the times when the Meſſiah was to be preached unto the Gentiles; for that the Gentiles ſhould glorify God for his mercy, he proves from theſe words of the ſame verſe, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people, Rom. 15. 9. 10. Accordingly the Jews expound many of the words of Moſes here recorded. Thus Jonathan on ver. 39. ſaith thus, " When Memra " Jehovah, the Word of the Lord ſhall reveal himſelf to redeem his people, he ſhall ſay to all " people, See, I am he that am, and have been, " and ſhall be;" (See Heb. 13. 8.) " I by my word " kill and make alive, I ſmite the people Iſrael, " and I will heal them in the end of the days." On verſe 40. the Targum of Jeruſalem ſaith thus, " I " live במימרי by my word for ever:" that of Jonathan, I have prepared in the heavens, בית שכנתי the houſe of my majeſty; that is, ſaith R. Solomon, סקם שכינתי the place of my majeſty; expreſſions often uſed by Philo (q) to ſignify the λόγος, as when he ſaith, οἶκον ἔχων τὸν ἑαυτοῦ λόγον, God hath his houſe, viz. his own word, and that (r) ὁ θεῖος λόγος, the divine word in his place; and upon ver. 43. Jonathan Ben Uziel paraphraſeth thus, " He with his Word will " expiate for the land, and for his people," viz. As the high prieſt did on the great day of expiation. The other words, " He will render vengeance to " his enemies, and make his arrows drunk with the " blood of the ſlain," are fit expreſſions of Chriſt's exerciſe of his kingly government over his enemies, by which he was to break them with a rod of iron, and daſh them in pieces as a potter's veſſel, Pſal. 2. 9. The import of theſe words therefore may be this, " When God was to introduce his firſt-born " again into the world by the reſurrection, and give " him power and dominion over all things in heaven and earth, he ſaid, Let all the angels of God " worſhip him, and own him as their Lord and maker." Dr Owen ſaith, this cannot be applied to the reſurrection, becauſe Chriſt did not leave the world, or go out of it at his death; but to this it may be anſwered, that going hence, Pſal. 29. 13. and going out of the world, 1 Cor. 5. 10. are common expreſſions to ſignify death. And, 2*dly*, God being ſaid to beget Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead, Pſal. 2. 7. Acts 13. 33. Heb. 5. 5. And gave him power over all things in heaven and earth, i. e. over all the world, this may be fitly called a ſecond introduction of him into the world. 3*dly*, Whereas he ſaith, that theſe words προσκυνήσατω αὐτῷ, &c. cannot be taken from Deut. 32. 42. becauſe there are no ſuch words in the original, and it is abſurd to think the apoſtle ſhould cite that from the ſcripture as the word and teſtimony of God, which indeed is not in it, nor was ever ſpoken by God, for this, and for two other reaſons offered by the Rev. Dr Hammond, note on Pſal. 97. 7.; I think it more reaſonable to conceive theſe words were taken from the Pſalms.

Ver. 7. ᵃ Πρὸς τοὺς ἀγγέλους.] The pſalmiſt ſpeaking, Pſal. 104. 4. not to, but of the angels, it is neceſſary to tranſlate theſe words as our verſion doth: Of the angels he ſaith, and as the Hebrew לְ, ſo the Greek πρὸς, is oft of the ſame import with de and περὶ. He ſpake this parable πρὸς αὐτοὺς, concerning them, Luke 19. 20. Mark 12. 12. πρὸς δὲ τὸν Ἰσραὴλ, but of Iſrael he ſaith, Rom. 10. 21. πρὸς ὃν, of whom we ſpeak, Heb. 4. 13. So Neh. 2. 18. He ſpake to you of the good hand of God upon him, καὶ πρὸς τοὺς λόγους τοῦ βασιλέως, and of the words of the king. Of the particle לְ, ſee Noldius, p. 458.

Ver. 9. ᵇ Ὁ Θεὸς ὁ Θεός σου, God even thy God.] For Chriſt is God of God, according to the Nicene ſymbol. Hence do the primitive fathers thus diſtinguiſh betwixt him and the Father; that "God the "Father is that God above whom there is no other "God:" whereas Chriſt is God of God; and as to that, inferior to God the Father: So Juſtin Martyr and Irenæus (s). That this pſalm was ſpoken of the Meſſiah, is evident from the Targum on the place, which ſaith, Becauſe thou, O King Meſſiah, haſt loved juſtice, &c. And on verſe 3. Thy fairneſs, O King Meſſiah, exceeds the ſons of men. To this purpoſe ſee Rabbi Solomon, and Aben Ezra, on this pſalm.

Ver. 10. ᶜ That this pſalm hath relation to the times of the Meſſiah, we learn from the Chaldee paraphraſt, which ſaith on ver. 16. Zion is builded by the word of the Lord: and from the creation of a new people, to praiſe the Lord, ver. 18. which the Jews themſelves expound of the world to come, or the ſtate of the church under the Meſſiah. And, 3. From the calling of the Gentiles, mentioned, ver. 15. So the Heathens ſhall fear the name of the Lord, and all the kings of the earth thy glory. And ver. 22. When the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to ſerve the Lord. See the judgment of the Jewiſh church, p. 38. That theſe things are here ſpoken of, and applied to Chriſt, is alſo evident, 1. From the connective particle καὶ, which knits this to the former citation, and makes it to run thus, "Of the Son it is ſaid, Thy throne, O "God, is for ever, καὶ, and of him it is alſo ſaid, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning haſt laid the foun-"dations of the earth." 2. From the ſcope of the apoſtle, which, both before and after, is, to bring teſtimonies to prove the excellency of the Meſſiah, and the truth of what he had aſſerted of him, ver. 2. 3. and therefore he muſt purſue the ſame deſign here. And, 3. From the conceſſion of the Socinians upon the place, that the latter words, which ſpeak of the deſtruction of the heavens and the earth, belong to Chriſt. Now, theſe words, They ſhall periſh, but thou remaineſt, are plainly ſpoken of the ſame perſon, who founded the earth in the beginning; and therefore muſt equally belong to Chriſt. But here it is objected, Obj. That if the author of this epiſtle had indeed believed that Chriſt was the creator of the world, to what purpoſe doth he ſpend ſo much time to prove him more excellent than the angels? For who can doubt that the creator is more excellent than his creatures?

Anſ. 1. He doth not abſolutely go about to prove him more excellent than the angels, but comparatively, ſo far more excellent, as the titles given him in ſcripture ſhewed that he exceeded them: and that was as much as the creator doth exceed his creatures.

2. I have ſhewed, note on the 2d and 3d verſes, that the apoſtle had aſſerted not only Chriſt's dignity, as heir of all things; and ſo ſucceeding in his Father's kingdom; but alſo that he was therefore Lord of all things, becauſe he made the world, and therefore was obliged, in his teſtimonies, to prove both theſe things; as he doth in moſt of the teſtimonies produced.

3. As there were then divers heretics, who aſcribed the creation of this viſible world to angels, and not to Chriſt; ſo alſo were there divers Jews who held that they were God's miniſters, or συνεργοὶ, coworkers, in the creation of the world; and that God ſaid to them, Let us make man, Gen. 1. 26. Now, againſt theſe Jews and heretics, the apoſtle very appoſitely proves, that the creation of the world was not to be aſcribed to thoſe angels, who, they ſay, gave the law, ch. 2. 2. but to that Jeſus from whom we have received the goſpel. Of the ſayings of the Jews, concerning the aſſiſtance of the angels in framing man, ſee note on chap. 2. 5. and Maimonides More Nevochim, part 2. chap. 6. Of Simon Magus Irenæus doth inform us, l. 1. c. 20. That " he held, that his Ennoia produced angelos et poteſtates, a quibus et mundum hunc factum eſſe dixit; angels and powers by whom this world was made; that Menander alſo held, mundum factum ab angelis; that the world was made by angels, cap. 21. l. 2. c. 9." That Cerinthus held that " the world was made by ſome ſeparate virtues inferior to God," l. 1. c. 22. 23. and that " the world was not made by Chriſt," but that " he rather came ad diſſolvenda omnia opera ejus Dei qui mundum fecit, to diſſolve all the works of that God who made the world:" And laſtly, Χριστῷ ὁμογενεις ἀγγελους συνπροβεβλῆσθαι, that the angels were of the ſame rank with Chriſt, and produced together with him. All which vain fancies gave juſt occaſion to the apoſtle to aſſert, that Chriſt was thus ſuperior to the angels, and the creator both of them and of the world. Accordingly, the Targum of Jeruſalem gives this deſcription " of the Word of " the Lord, that it is he who ſaid to the world, Be, " and it was; and who will ſay unto it, Be, and " it ſhall be." Which words the Targum of B. Uziel (in Exod 3. 14.) applies to the Lord himſelf.

Ver. 13. ὁ Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, Sit thou on my right hand.] That theſe words were ſpoken of the Meſſiah, appears, 1. From the two Targums on this pſalm, who both declare that this was ſpoken Bememreh, in, or to his Word. This is, ſaith R. Saadias Gaon, on Dan. 7. 13. " the Meſſiah our righteouſneſs;" as it is written, Pſal. 110. 1. The Lord ſaid to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand. R. Moſes Haddarſan ſays, (Bereſch. Rabba, in Gen. 18. 1.), " Here- " after God will cauſe the Meſſiah to ſit on his " right hand; as it is ſaid," Pſal. 110. 1. The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, &c. Midraſh Tehillim, in Pſal. 2. 7. ſaith, " The affairs of the Meſſiah are ſet " forth in the Hagiography in theſe words," Pſalm 110. The Lord ſaid. And again, R. Joden in Pſalm 18. 35. in the name of R. Chija, ſaid, " That, in " the age of the Meſſiah, the bleſſed God will ſet " the King Meſſiah on his right hand; as it is " written, The Lord ſaid to my Lord." And though on this pſalm he expounds the words, firſt of Abraham, whom they introduce complaining that God has " placed his Son on his right hand, and him " only on his left;" yet preſently follow theſe words, " And ſo he ſaith to the Meſſiah." And R. Obadiah not only ſaith, " the pſalmiſt compoſed this " pſalm of the Meſſiah," but adds what illuſtrates ver. 14. " That God further ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſit " on my right hand, and the miniſtering angels on " my left." See more in Cartw. Mellificium, p. 2969. And ſince our bleſſed Saviour confounded the Scribes and Phariſees with this inquiry, How the Meſſiah could be the ſon of David, ſince David here in Spirit calls him Lord? Matth. 22. 42. it is evident this was then the received expoſition of theſe words.

Ver. 14. ' Μέλλοντας κληρονομεῖν σωτηρίαν, Who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation,] i. e. by right of ſonſhip; for if ſons, then heirs, Rom. 8. 17. If a ſon, then κληρονόμος Θεοῦ, an heir of God through Chriſt, Gal. 4. 7. Heirs according to the promiſe, Gal. 3. 29. For to as many as believed, he gave power to be the ſons of God, John 1. 12.

Verſe 1. THerefore we (knowing the excellency of the perſon ſpeaking now to us in the goſpel above all other prophets, and above thoſe angels which were employed in delivering the law of Moſes) ought to give the more earneſt heed to the things which we have heard (from the Son of God), ᵃ leſt at any time we ſhould let them ſlip (out of our memory.)

2. For if the word ᵇ ſpoken by angels (from Sinai) was ſtedfaſt, (and by God's dealing with the Jews confirmed), and every (wilful) tranſgreſſion and diſobedience (of it) received a juſt recompenſe of reward: (the atonements of the law being only for ſins of ignorance and error, chap. 5. 2. and cutting off being the puniſhment for wilful ſins, as being acts of rebellion againſt God their governor);

3. How ſhall we eſcape (the divine wrath), if we (Chriſtians) neglect ᶜ ſo great ſalvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord (Chriſt himſelf), and (after) was ᵈ confirmed to us by them that heard him;

4. God alſo bearing them witneſs both with ſigns and wonders, (as he did to Moſes delivering the law to the Jews), and ᵉ with divers miracles, and gifts (or diſtributions) of the Holy Ghoſt, (performed) according to his own will?

5. ᶠ For unto the angels hath he not put in ſubjection the world to come, whereof we ſpeak, (but unto Chriſt now crowned with honour and glory, ver. 9. to whom all power both in heaven and earth is given.)

6. ᵍ But one in a certain place (viz. David, Pſal. 8. 4.) teſtified, ſaying, Lord, what is man that thou art (ſo) mindful of him? or the ſon of man, that thou (ſo) viſiteſt him?

7. Thou madeſt him (but) a little lower than the angels; thou crowneſt him with glory and honour, and and didſt ſet him over the works of thine hands, (Pſal. 8.).

8. Thou haſt put all things (and ſo the world to come) in ſubjection under his feet. For in (ſaying) that he (hath) put all (things) in ſubjection under him, (it is manifeſt that) he left nothing (beſides himſelf, 1 Cor. 15. 27.) that is not put under him: But now (as for Adam, and his poſterity, of whom theſe things were primarily ſpoken) we ſee not yet all things put under him.

9. But we ſee Jeſus (the ſecond Adam), who was made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, that he by the grace of God might taſte death for every man, (already) [b] crowned with glory and honour, (and therefore know that all things are, and ſhall be ſubjected to him.)

10. To this Jeſus, I ſay, who by the grace of God taſted death for every man); [i] for it became him for whom are (were) all things, and by whom are (were) all things (ordered), in (his deſign of) bringing many ſons to glory, to (effect this, by) make (ing) the captain of their ſalvation [k] perfect through ſufferings; (τελειῶσαι, to conſecrate him to that work, by ſufferings.)

11. For [l] both he (our prieſt) who ſanctifieth, (i. e. by his oblation purgeth us from ſin), and they who are ſanctified (or purged from it), are all of one (original, and nature): for which cauſe he is not aſhamed to call them brethren,

12. Saying, [m] (Pſal. 22. 22.), I will declare thy name unto (among) my brethren: in the midſt of the church (or congregation) will I ſing praiſe to thee.

13. And again, (Iſ. 8. 17.) [n] I will put my truſt in him. And again, (ver. 18.) Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me.

14. Foraſmuch then as the children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf likewiſe took part of the ſame; that through (the) death (they had deſerved, and he ſuffered in their ſtead) he might deſtroy (evacuate, and fruſtrate) him [o] who had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15. And (might) deliver them (from the ſting of it) who [p] through fear of (the) death (threatened to the poſterity of Adam, without any promiſe of a reſurrection) were all their lives-time ſubject unto bondage.

16. For verily he [q] took not on him the nature of (ἐπιλαμβάνεται, laid not hold of, he helped not the fallen) angels; but he took on him (Gr. he laid hold of) [r] the ſeed of Abraham.

17. Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like to (theſe) his brethren, that he might be a merciful (high prieſt to them, under all their ſufferings) and (a) faithful high prieſt (exactly performing his prieſtly office), in things pertaining to God, (ſo as) to make reconciliation [s] for the ſins of the people:

18. For in that he himſelf hath (actually) ſuffered, [t] being tempted, he is (become) [u] able (and willing) to ſuccour them who (at any time) are tempted, (i. e. expoſed to ſufferings.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. [a] Μήποτε παραῤῥυῶμεν.] Τυτέστι, μὴ ἐκπέσωμεν, leſt we fall off from them. So Oecumenius, Theophylact, and Phavorinus, which ſenſe agrees well with the ſcope of this epiſtle: but the ſenſe given by our tranſlation is alſo very good and proper; for in this ſenſe παραῤῥυῆναι is uſed, in thoſe words of Solomon; My ſon, μὴ παραῤῥυῇς, παρὰ δὲ ἐμὴν βουλὴν, be not forgetful of, but keep in mind, or, lay up in thy heart my counſel, Prov. 3. 21. So the wiſe man interprets himſelf, in the beginning of that chapter, My ſon, forget not my precepts, but let thy heart keep my words, ver. 1. So Origen (t), ſpeaking of the feſtivals of the church, the Lord's day, Eaſter, Pentecoſt, ſaith, "The common peo-"ple had need of thoſe ſenſible admonitions, or "memorials, of the bleſſings then celebrated, ἵνα "μὴ τέλεον παῤῥυῇ, that they may not entirely ſlip "out of their memories:" and this tranſlation and interpretation is confirmed from the word ἀμελῶν, ver. 3. which ſignifies, to be unmindful of this great ſalvation.

Ver. 2. [b] Ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαληθεὶς λόγος, the word ſpoken by angels.] Maimonides (u) ſaith expreſsly, "Non "invenies Deum ullum opus feciſſe, niſi per manum "alicujus angeli;" God doth no work but by the hand of ſome angel. To confirm this, he cites that paſſage of their wiſe men, That God doth nothing without conſulting before the family above; and that in Bereſchith Rabba (x) whereſoever it is ſaid in ſcripture, יהוה, and Jehovah did this, or that; "Ibi "intelligitur ipſe, et domus judicii ejus;" there we muſt underſtand, that all things are done by him, mediantibus angelis, "by the mediation of angels," Joſephus (y) ſaith, the law was given, τῷ Θεῷ διαλεγομένου πρὸς αὐτὸς περὶ τῶν πρακτέων, by God declaring to them what they ought to do. And yet he introduces Herod, proving that legates, or ambaſſadors, were ſacred, from this, That "the Jews (z) had received the "choiceſt of their laws from God by angels," i. e. by meſſengers, or legates, as that name imports. Philo (a) is expreſs, that God ſpake the law δι' αὐτοῦ μόνου, ὐ προσχρησάμενος ἀλλῳ, by himſelf, uſing no other; but yet, ſaith the ſame Philo (b), he did this, κελεύσας ὀχλον ἀόρατον ἐν ἀέρι δημιουργηθῆναι, commanding an inviſible found to be formed in the air. And to whom could this command be directed, but to ſome of the angels then attending on him? He therefore ſeems only to mean, that the decalogue was adminiſtered by God himſelf ſpeaking to the people; and not by Moſes, the mediator betwixt God and them, as the reſidue of his laws were. For in his book De ſomniis, he obſerves, that the holy ſcripture ſpeaks of thoſe dreams, as θεόπεμπτοι, ſent from God, which proceed διὰ τῶν ὑποφητῶν αὐτοῦ ἢ ὑπηρετῶν ἀγγέλων, from his miniſters and attendants the angels, p. 461. He adds, That theſe meſſengers are employed in bringing τὰς τοῦ πατρὸς ἐπιτελίους τοῖς ἐκγόνοις the commands of the Father to his ſons; and that this is done, becauſe we cannot bear his immediate chaſtiſements, nor yet his excellent benefits, p. 455. F.

As for the fathers, they ſeem univerſally to conſpire in this doctrine, that the apoſtle ſpeaks here, and Gal. 3. 19. περὶ τῶν διακονουμένων τῷ λόγῳ ἀγγέλων, of the angels miniſtering to the delivery of the law. So Origen (c); ſo Chryſoſtom on this place; Theodoret on Gal. 3. 19.; Oecumenius and Teophylact. Origen (d), ſpeaking of Jeruſalem, ſaith, "The "angels have now deſerted her, who before were "always helpful to her: δι' ὧν διετάγη ἢ ὁ Μώσεως νόμος, "by whom alſo the law of Moſes was ordained;" it being, ſaith the apoſtle, ordained by angels. The ſame is the opinion of St Jerom on Gal. 3. 19.

And though Jehovah ſpeaks to Moſes in and from Mount Sinai, and from him the Jews received the law; yet that he uſed the miniſtry of angels in the diſpenſing of it, is evident from many paſſages of the New Teſtament. For,

1. St Stephen ſpeaketh thus unto the Jews, You have received the law, εἰς διαταγὰς [κατὰ διαταγὰς, Oecum.] ἀγγέλων, by the diſpoſition of angels, and have not kept it, Acts 7. 53. Now, when he was aggravating their guilt, in violating this law, from the conſideration of the dignity of the perſons who were by God employed in giving it to them, he would not have omitted the Son of God, or the Λόγος, the principal actor, and ſpoken of theſe inferior miniſtering ſpirits, could he both truly, and according to the then preſent notion of the Jews, have ſaid it was the Λόγος, who by his Father was employed in giving the law. For though moſt of the fathers ſay, the Λόγος, or the Son of God, appeared to Moſes, and the patriarchs, and others under the Old Teſtament, they (e) all agree in this, that he appeared then as ἄλλος, one that ſuſtained another perſon; or as the legate, the ambaſſador; or as ὑπηρέτης, i. e. the miniſter of God the Father, as alſo Philo ſtill ſaith.

2. When the apoſtle Paul affirms, after St Stephen, That the law was διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων, adminiſtered by angels, Gal. 3. 19. he cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed to mean only, that it was delivered inter angelos, between angels; or, by God attended with his angels. For, 1. As by is the proper import of the word διὰ, ſo it is very rarely, if at all, that it is rendered inter, between, or among; it is ſo rendered, indeed, by our tranſlators, 2 Tim. 2. 2. but with the note on the margin, by, to ſhew they thought it might there bear that ſenſe, as it doth thus; The things which thou haſt heard from me, (and which have been confirmed) διὰ πολλῶν μαρτύρων, by many witneſſes, commit to faithful men. 2. Seeing here the word ſpoken δι' ἀγγέλων being put in oppoſition to the word ſpoken διὰ Χριστοῦ, by Chriſt, ſhews that διὰ retains its proper ſenſe, and muſt be rendered, by angels; why ſhould we put another ſenſe on the ſame particle uſed, Gal. 3. 19. by the ſame apoſtle, with reſpect to the ſame ſubject?

3. That the word ſpoken by angels here, reſpects the law in general, and not only the threatenings made by the prophets, to whom the Λόγος ſent his angels, to bring back the people of Iſrael from their wickedneſs, is alſo evident from the words: For, 1. The word ſpoken by angels here, ſeems to be the ſame with the word adminiſtered by angels, Acts 7. 53. Gal. 3. 19. Now, that was the law, ſay both St Stephen and St Paul. 2. It was ὁ λόγος βέβαιος, the word made firm, by the miracles done by Moſes to eſtabliſh it, as was the goſpel by more glorious miracles: the miracles done by Moſes being only σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, ſigns and wonders; whereas the goſpel was confirmed alſo by divers powers, and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 4. 3. As the apoſtle faith here, Every tranſgreſſion of this word received a juſt recompenſe of reward; ſo he ſaith, chap. 10. 28. He that deſpiſed Moſes his law, died without mercy; where the argument being, in ſenſe, the ſame, demonſtrates that the word ſpoken here, muſt be the law of Moſes. 4. We are properly ſaid to tranſgreſs, and diſobey a law; but as for threatenings, though we may diſregard, we are not properly ſaid to tranſgreſs them. In fine, I can anſwer the argument of Slichtingius on the place; "That God, in "perſon, could not give the law from Mount Sinai; "ſince, were it given by God himſelf, it muſt, on "that account, be preferred before the goſpel;" by ſaying, the compariſon is here made only betwixt God ſpeaking to the Jews by the miniſtry of angels, and the ſame God ſpeaking to us by his Son, which ſuppoſes God the Father to be the ſupreme author both of the law and the goſpel; aſſerting only, that his ambaſſadors, or miniſters in the one, were much inferior to his ambaſſador, and his great prophet, by whom the other was revealed: but I am not able to reſiſt the evidence of his ſecond argument, That "the oppoſition put between the word ſpoken by "angels (f) to them, and the goſpel delivered to us "by the Son of God, will not permit us to own that "the law was given to the Jews by the ſame Son "of God, ſeeing that ſuppoſition wholly deſtroys the "force of the apoſtle's argument in this place." But then I do not think that any angel was ſo employed in the delivery of the law, as to take upon him the perſon of God; or that any creature ſaid, I am the Lord thy God, &c. but only, that the Divine Majeſty there preſent with his thouſands of angels, Deut. 33. 2. Pſal. 68. 17. made ſome of them his miniſters to form the voice, by which he ſaid, I am the Lord thy God, &c. And it may probably be conjectured, that where-ever there is mention of an angel and Jehovah together, or any worſhip or excellency ſpecified which is proper to God, there was an appearance of the Schechinah, or Divine Majeſty, conjunct with the angel. Dr Leight, in his note on Acts 7. 53. and in his ſermon on the text, ſolves this objection, by ſaying, that by angels there, and here, and Gal. 3. 19. we are not to underſtand angels, properly ſo called, but God's meſſengers, i. e. the prophets and teachers, who are ſtyled angels, Mal. 2. 7. 3. 1. But this ſeems a very forced expoſition of theſe words: for, 1. After St Stephen had ſaid, Acts 7. 53. that the Jews had ſlain thoſe prophets, which had told them of the coming of that juſt One, he adds this farther aggravation of their guilt, ver. 53. that they had received the law by the diſpoſition of angels, and had not kept it, plainly diſtinguiſhing theſe angels from the prophets. St Paul alſo ſaith, the law was given by angels, in, or through, or by the hand of a mediator, that is, of their great prophet Moſes, plainly again diſtinguiſhing thoſe angels from that prophet: when therefore the ſame St Paul ſaith, the law was ſpoken not by an angel, to wit, Moſes, but by angels, in the plural number, it is moſt reaſonable to interpret his words to the ſame ſenſe, eſpecially conſidering his inference from theſe words, ver. 5. For God hath not ſubjected to angels the world to come, of which we now ſpeak.

Ver. 3. • Τηλικαύτης σωτηρίας, ſo great ſalvation.] That under the diſpenſation of the goſpel, the deliverance of the faithful from perſecutions, at, or after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſhould here be repreſented as that great ſalvation, which began to be ſpoken by the Lord, was teſtified to by the apoſtles, and even by God himſelf, by ſo great miracles, is incredible. No, ſure, our Saviour brought life and immortality to light by the goſpel, 2 Tim. 2. 11. His apoſtles teſtified to us eternal life, 1 John 1. 2. And this is the teſtimony of God himſelf, That he hath given us eternal life, and that life is in his Son, 1 John 5. 11. See note on chap. 4. 3.

Ibid. • Ἐβεβαιώθη εἰς ἡμᾶς, was confirmed to us,] Jews, not to us apoſtles, by whom it was confirmed. Vain, therefore, is the argument taken from theſe words, to prove St Paul was not the author of this epiſtle; becauſe the goſpel was not confirmed to him by them that heard Chriſt, he receiving it by immediate revelation from him, Gal. 1. 12. And uſual is it with St Paul, in this and other epiſtles, to ſay We, when not he himſelf, but only they he ſpeaks to or of, muſt be underſtood. So chap. 6. 1. Let us go on to perfection: ſee chap. 10. 25. and 12. 1. Rom. 3. 5. 7. 1 Cor. 10. 8. 9. 2 Cor. 7. 1. Eph. 2. 3. 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. Tit. 3. 3.

Ver. 4. • Ποικίλαις δυνάμεσι, with divers miracles.] "Becauſe," ſaith Theodoret, "the law was con-"firmed by miracles, the apoſtle thought it neceſ-"ſary to ſhew the goſpel was in this ſuperior to it;" as it was in theſe two reſpects:

1. That the apoſtles and diſciples of our Lord abounded in theſe miraculous diſpenſations which confirmed the goſpel as well as Chriſt himſelf.

2. That Moſes chiefly wrought σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, ſigns and wonders; whereas the δυνάμεις, powers and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, here mentioned, were the proper confirmations of the goſpel-diſpenſation. For here are four things mentioned, which will admit of a diſtinct conſideration; the firſt and ſecond are σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, ſigns and wonders, which refer to portentous actions done in the heavens, as when the ſun ſtood ſtill; in the earth, as when it opened to ſwallow up Dathan and Abiram; in the air, as when it was turned into darkneſs; in the waters, as when they were turned into blood: and theſe were often wrought by Moſes and others, under the Old Teſtament, and ſtill are ſtyled σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα. So Exod. 7. 3. πληθυνῶ τὰ σημεῖα μου καὶ τέρατα, I will multiply my ſigns and wonders in the land of Egypt; and again, ver. 9.; Deut. 4. 32. He took his people out of that nation ἐν σημείοις καὶ τέρασι, by ſigns and wonders; ſhewing σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα μεγάλα, ſigns and great wonders upon Pharaoh and all his houſe, chap. 6. 22. and 7. 19. and 11. 3. 26. 8. 29. 3. And there aroſe not a prophet like unto Moſes, ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς σημείοις καὶ τέρασιν, in all the ſigns and wonders which God ſent him to do in the land of Egypt, Deut. 34. 11. See Neh. 9. 10. Pſal. 134. 9. Jer. 32. 42. Thus Nebuchadonoſor declares σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα, the ſigns and wonders which the moſt high God had ſhewed to him, Dan. 4. 2.; and Darius ſaith of him, chap. 6. 27. ποιῶν σημεῖα καὶ τέρατα ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, He doth ſigns and wonders in the heavens, and on the earth.

Moreover, σημεῖα and δυνάμεις are uſed in the New Teſtament with relation to the miracles wrought by the apoſtles upon others, in caſting out devils, making the blind to ſee, and the lame to walk, and healing all manner of diſeaſes; now, none of theſe things were done by Moſes, and very rarely by any of the prophets. And, laſtly, as for the diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt, conſiſting in the internal gifts of wiſdom, knowledge, faith, the gifts of tongues, and the interpretation of them; theſe were peculiar to the latter days, that is, the times of the Meſſiah.

Ver. 5. For explication of theſe words, let it be obſerved,

1. That both the ſcriptures, the Jewiſh records, and the primitive fathers, do repreſent the ſtate preceding our Lord's advent, and his advancement to the right hand of Majeſty in the heavens, as a ſtate ſubject to angels, or in which God dealt with them by the miniſtry of his angels; this of the Jews hath partly been confirmed already, by ſhewing, that their law was the word ſpoken by angels. That they were brought out of Egypt by the miniſtry of an angel, Moſes himſelf declares, in his meſſage to the king of Edom, When we cried to the Lord, he heard our voice, and ſent an angel, and has brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, Numb. 20. 16. This angel, ſaith the Targum of Jonathan, was a miniſtering angel. Nor is it to be thought the king of Edom, who had no notion of the Logos, could underſtand him otherwiſe. And hence the note of Paulus Fagius runs thus, Omnis Iſraelitici populi ſalus et ductio per angelos adminiſtrata eſt, "the whole conduct and "preſervation of the people of Iſrael was adminiſtered by angels." That they were led through the wilderneſs by an angel, and that an angel drove out the inhabitants of the land of Canaan before them, we learn from theſe words of God himſelf, Behold, I ſend an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and bring thee into the land I have prepared for thee, Exod. 23. 20. He ſhall go, ſaith the Greek, ἡγούμενος σου, as thy guide and captain. And ver. 23. My angel ſhall go before thee, and bring thee to the Amorites and Hittites, &c. and I will cut them off. Now, that here he ſpeaks of a miniſtering angel, may be argued from theſe words, My name is in him, that is, as the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan well expound the phraſe, His word is in my name, by him I do declare my will and pleaſure, So Maimon. in More Nevoch, part 1. c. 64. "Some think "this angel was the eternal Son of God, but this I "am afraid to aſſert," ſaith the Biſhop of Ely, "becauſe it ſeems dangerous to me to call him ſimply an angel, i. e. a miniſter or meſſenger, without any ſuch addition as that in Mal. 3. 3. The "angel of the covenant; for ſo he was at his incarnation, of which he there ſpeaks, before which I "dare not aſcribe to him ſuch miniſterial works as "theſe, of bringing the children of Iſrael out of "Egypt, and going before them to lead them in "the way to Canaan; this was properly the work "of an angel, to whom Moſes aſcribes it." But though we thus underſtand it, this excludes not the preſence of God himſelf, but rather proves it; for this angel was ſent from the Schechinah, or majeſtic preſence of God which was in the cloud, and is therefore ſtyled the angel of his preſence, Iſ. 63. 9. becauſe, ſaith the Targum, he was an angel ſent מן קדמוהי, from before him, or, from before his face: and thus it was true which the Lord ſaid to Moſes, My preſence ſhall go with thee, Exod. 33. 14. in the cloud, and my angel ſhall go before thee, Exod. 23. 23. as being ſent from before me to conduct thee. And again, Exod. 33. 2. I will ſend an angel before thee, and will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, &c. for I will not go up in the midſt of thee, for thou art a ſtiff-necked people, leſt I conſume thee in the way. He therefore who was to be ſent could not be God himſelf, or the divine Logos equal to him, for then he would have had the ſame reaſon to conſume them for their diſobedience. Accordingly we find Maſius on Joſh. 5. 14. confeſſing, that the Jews generally thought this was the angel Michael. And partly from them, and partly from Daniel, who ſtyles him Michael their prince, chap. 10. 21. And Michael the prince which ſtandeth for the children of thy people, chap. 12. 1. it ſeems to be, that many Chriſtian ſtian fathers and ancient commentators (g) have ſo expreſsly ſaid, that "God over all placed over them "the angel Michael, as Daniel hath taught us; and "God alſo promiſed Moſes, he would ſend an angel "with his people." And both Theodoret and St Jerom, in their comments on Dan. 11. 21. ſay, that Michael eſt archangelus cui creditus eſt populus Judæorum, "is that archangel to whom was committed "the care of the people of the Jews." And the author of the Recognitions, ſpeaking of God's dividing the nations to angels, adds, "that the govern-"ment of the Jews themſelves, and the diſpoſal of "their affairs, were by God committed to an arch-"angel (h)." Certain it is from the ſcripture, that the law, which was the foundation of the Judaical church-ſtate, was given by the diſpoſition of angels, Acts 7. 53. Gal. 3. 19. whence the apoſtle here ſtyles it the law ſpoken by angels, ver. 2.; they being therefore ſo far intereſted in the promulgation of the law, as that it was given to the Jews by their miniſtry, (though they did this in the name and by the authority of God), the Moſaical church-ſtate was ſo far put in ſubjection to them.

Now, if this ſuppoſition be admitted, and the world to come, according to the Jewiſh import of that phraſe, be taken for the goſpel-ſtate, then the apoſtle's argument runs thus: "You have greater rea-"ſon to take heed to the things taught by Chriſt "under the goſpel-diſpenſation, than had the Jews "to take heed to the things taught by the Moſaical "diſpenſation; for unto the angels God hath not "ſubjected the goſpel-ſtate, but unto Chriſt, i. e. to "him who is more able to reward his obedient ſer-"vants, and bring them into the celeſtial Canaan, "and more able to conſume and puniſh them, who "do neglect the great ſalvation tendered in this "diſpenſation."

As to the Gentile world, the doctrine of the Jews in relation to them is evident from theſe words of the Septuagint, When the Almighty divided the nations, he ſet the borders of them κατ' ἀριθμὸν ἀγγέλων Θεοῦ, according to the number of the angels of God, Deut. 32. 8. that is, ſaith R. Menachem, "he placed ſe-"venty angels over the ſeventy nations." For, ſaith the ſon of Syrach, Ἐκάστῳ ἔθνει κατέστησεν ἡγούμενον, "In the diviſion of the nations of the whole earth, "he ſet a ruler over every people," Ecclus 17. 17. Accordingly in Daniel we find mention of the prince of Perſia, and of Greece, i. e. of the angels which preſided over thoſe places. Euſebius (i) doth frequently inform us, "that all the nations of the earth "were formerly by lot divided to many angels:" and this was the doctrine of Juſtin Martyr (k), and of Irenæus (l), Athenagoras (m), and the two Clements (n). So that, in the judgment of the Jews and of the primitive fathers, all the whole Heathen world were ſubject to the government of angels.

And then the argument of the apoſtle is to this effect, "That now the world of believers gathered "from the Heathens is put under Chriſt's immediate "power, and ſubject, not to angels, but to him who "will come in flaming fire, to execute vengeance "upon all that obey not his goſpel; and that there-"fore it concerns them to give more diligent heed "to the words ſpoken by him, and not to neglect "that great ſalvation which he tenders."

Οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, the world to come.] This, I conceive, imports primarily the Chriſtian ſtate; and in order to the government of that, the whole world ſubjected to Chriſt, from the time of his reſurrection and aſcenſion, (when he ſat down on the right hand of the Majeſty on high, and had all power in heaven and earth committed to him: for when God brought him by his reſurrection again εἰς οἰκουμένην, into the earth, he ſaid, Let all the angels of God worſhip him, i. e. let them all bow, and be ſubject to his authority, chap. 1. 6.), to the time when he ſhall aboliſh death, the laſt enemy of his ſubjects, and put the crown upon their heads, and condemn all his enemies to endleſs puniſhments, and ſo give up his mediatory kingdom to the Father, 1 Cor. 15. 28. And this I gather from the following proof of this ſubjection of the world to Chriſt, taken from the 8th pſalm: for the apoſtle plainly doth inſinuate, that it is begun already, in that Jeſus is already crowned with glory and honour, ver. 9. and he as plainly teſtifies, that it muſt continue till the day of judgment, and only will be then completed, by ſaying, that he muſt reign till all his enemies be put under his feet, 1 Cor. 15. 25. and proving this from thoſe words of the pſalmiſt, For he hath put all things under his feet, ver. 27. So then the argument runs thus: "How ſhall they eſcape who neglect that great ſal-"vation, tendered by him who hath all the world, "and all things in it, ſo ſubject to him, as to con-"tinue ſo, till he hath put all his enemies under his "feet?"

It may be alſo noted, that when this world to come doth reſpect only the Chriſtian ſtate, from the reſurrection of Chriſt to the final judgment, then it is ſtyled holam habba, the age to come; which is the frequent import of the world to come in the Jewiſh writers; and in this ſenſe is Chriſt ſtyled, ὁ πατὴρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the Father of the world to come, Iſ. 9. 6. and the gifts vouchſafed to believers, and exerciſed by them in the firſt ages of the church, are ſtyled in this epiſtle δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the powers of the world to come; but when it alſo doth include that earth in which they dwell, and in which they are to continue to the day of judgment, then is it ſtyled οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, the world to come, after the other four kingdoms, which are ſtyled οἰκουμένη, the earth, and are ſaid to have dominion over all the earth. Thus of the kingdom of Aſſyria and Babylon, Daniel ſaith to Nebuchadonoſor, that God had made him lord of all things, and ſettled his kingdom where-ever the ſons of men dwell, Dan. 2. 37. 38. And this kingdom is by Iſaiah often ſtyled οἰκουμένη, and the fall of it is repreſented as the deſolation of the whole earth. Thus in his viſion againſt Babylon, he ſaith, The Lord cometh καταφθεῖραι πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην, to lay waſte the whole earth, ver. 6.; Behold, the day of the Lord comes cruel, and with fierce anger, θεῖναι τὴν οἰκουμένην ἔρημον, to lay the land (of Babylon) deſolate, chap. 13. 9.; and ver. 11. ἐντελοῦμαι τῇ οἰκουμένῃ ὅλῃ κακὰ, I will pronounce evil to the whole earth; ſee alſo chap. 14. 26. Cyrus the king of Perſia ſpeaks thus, The Lord hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, Ezra 1. 2. and he is ſtyled τῆς οἰκουμένης ὁ κύριος, the lord of the earth, Eſdr. 2. 3. And Artaxerxes, in his epiſtle for the deſtruction of the Jews, writes thus, Being lord over many nations, καὶ πάσης ἐπικρατήσας οἰκουμένης, and having dominion over all the world, &c. Eſth. 13. 2. 4.

As for the third, that is, the Grecian monarchy, the prophet Daniel ſaith expreſsly of it, It ſhall bear rule over all the earth, Dan. 2. 39. Accordingly Alexander is celebrated in all hiſtorians and poets which ſpeak of him, as the conqueror of the world; when he came to Babylon, ambaſſadors were ſent unto him ἐξ ἀπάσης σχεδὸν τῆς οἰκουμένης, from almoſt the whole world, ſaith Diodorus Siculus, hiſt. l. 17. p. 579. and when he died, this inſcription was writ upon his tomb, Γᾶν ὑπ' ἐμοὶ τίθημι, I have put the earth under me. And, laſtly, as for the Roman monarchy, as it was ſtyled by the poets παμβασιλεία, the univerſal kingdom, and by the hiſtorians, orbis terrarum, the world, ſo is it in the ſcripture repreſented as the government πάσης τῆς οἰκουμένης of the whole earth, Luke 2. 1.; for, ſaith Dionyſius Halicarnaſſæus (o), Ἡ Ῥωμαίων πόλις ἁπάσης μὲν ἀρχῆς τῆς γῆς, ὅση μὴ ἀνήμερός ἐστιν, ἀλλ' ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων οἰκεῖται, Rome preſides over the whole habitable earth. Now, this kingdom of Chriſt being propheſied of by Daniel, as that which was to be ſet up after theſe kingdoms which bore that name, and to break in pieces all other kingdoms, is therefore ſtyled ἡ οἰκουμένη μέλλουσα, the kingdom of the world to come: and if (as we may probably conjecture from the angel the prince of Perſia, and the angel the prince of Greece, Dan. 10. 13. 20.) angels were by God appointed to preſide over thoſe monarchies; then hence ariſeth another reaſon why the apoſtle might ſay, Unto the angels hath he not ſubjected the world to come, of which we ſpeak.

Ver. 6. ᾿ &c. Here note, 1. That though theſe words of the Pſalmiſt may be allowed, in their firſt and obvious ſenſe, to relate to the firſt Adam, created after God in his ſimilitude and likeneſs, with reſpect to his dominion; yet doth not this hinder that they be expounded in the myſtical ſenſe, of Chriſt the ſecond Adam; for the Jews acknowledge, that the firſt Adam was a type of the ſecond Adam, that is, of Chriſt, who is by them ſtyled, האדם האחרון, the laſt, or ſecond Adam. Moreover, the myſtery of Adam is, ſay they, the myſtery of the Meſſiah; and the man created the ſixth day ſignifies the Meſſiah. For thus they ſpeak (p): Our redemption is ſignified by the ſix days of the creation, eſpecially by the ſixth in which man was created; by whom we are not to underſtand the nations of the world, but סוד משה סוד אדם חוא, the myſtery of man is the myſtery of the Meſſiah; as it is ſaid, Dan. 7. 13. He came like to the ſon of man. And this lays a foundation for the inference of the apoſtle, that what was ſpoken of man in general, and more particularly related to the firſt Adam, was only punctually fulfilled in the ſecond Adam taking the nature of man on him: for, ſaith he, we ſee it not in any meaſure fulfilled in any other man; but as for Chriſt, we do already ſee it actually fulfilled, as to the firſt clauſe of it, he being now crowned with glory and honour, and ſo as all things are already ſubject to his feet, as far as the preſent neceſſities of the church require, Eph. 1. 22. ſo will they completely and actually be ſo, when death, the laſt enemy, ſhall be deſtroyed, 1 Cor. 15. 25. 26. 27.

filled,

Ver. 7. Καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου.] Theſe words are wanting in Oecumenius, Theophylact, and ſome MSS. but they are in Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and all the ancient verſions.

Ver. 9. Δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφανωμένον, crowned with glory and honour.] That theſe words are, in conſtruction, to follow the enſuing words, that "he, by the "grace of God, might taſte death for every man," ſee note on chap. 7. 20.; but the apoſtle puts theſe words laſt, as being to diſcourſe of our Lord's ſufferings for us.

Ibid. He, χάριτι Θεοῦ, by the grace of God, taſted death.] Origen (q), in his commentary upon the goſpel of St John, twice ſaith, that ſome copies read χωρὶς Θεοῦ, without God; ſo read the Syriac, and Ambroſe, l. 2. de fide ad Gratianum, c. 4. et Virgilius Tapſenſis, l. 2. p. 17. & 20. And this reading either confutes the Patripaſſians, or confirms the doctrine of Irenæus, that Chriſt ſuffered ἀσυγχύτως τῷ λόγῳ, the "divine nature being quieſcent, and not "exerting its energy to ſtrengthen him againſt, "or deliver him from theſe ſufferings;" it making its impreſſions upon the human nature, ſaith Grotius, not always, but pro temporum ratione. Note alſo, That to taſte death is a Jewiſh phraſe ſignifying to die, as when they ſay, "The firſt Adam "was worthy not to taſte of death."

Ver. 10 Ἔπρεπε γάρ.] Conveniens hoc fuit Dei ſapientiæ, ſaith Grotius: "He thought fit to do "this," ſaith Dr Hammond; 1. Becauſe thus the ſame nature ſuffered which had ſinned, and therefore purged us from the guilt we in that nature had contracted, and ſo diſſolved that death to which we became ſubject by the ſin of Adam. This is the reaſon of Chriſt's ſufferings, which all the primitive fathers do ſuggeſt, and on which they eſpecially inſiſt, aſſigning this reaſon of our Lord's death, ὅπως τὸ θνητὸν ἡμῶν καθαρίσῃ, "That our obnoxiouſneſs "to death might be expiated." So Ignatius (r). He died, ſaith Juſtin Martyr (s), for mankind, ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ ὑπὸ θάνατον, καὶ πλάνην τὴν τοῦ ὄφεως ἐπιπλάσας, which, from Adam, became ſubject to death, and the deceit of the ſerpent. Irenæus ſaith (t), that "as "mankind, by man overcome, was obnoxious to "death, ſic enim per hominem victorem aſcendamus "in vitam; ſo by a man conquering death, we "may riſe to life:" And as death prevailed againſt us by man, ſic iterum nos adverſus mortem per hominem accipiamus palmam, "ſo we may prevail a-"gainſt it by man;" that as in the animal Adam we all died, ſo in the ſpiritual we might all be made alive. And Athanaſius (u), in his oration of the incarnation, is very copious on this ſubject; declaring, that Chriſt took our nature on him, πάλιν τὸ φθαρτὸν εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν ἐπισπᾶσθαι, to reduce again our corruptible to incorruption; that our Lord ſeeing mankind loſt by death, exerciſing the dominion of corruption over them, and ſeeing the puniſhment threatened to our tranſgreſſion, διαφθορὰν τὴν καθ' ἡμᾶς φθορὰν (x), "prevailing over us to corruption; "and ſeeing the whole race of men ſubject to death, "he, in compaſſion to them," (y) καὶ τὸν θανάτου κράτησιν οὐκ ἐνέγκας, "and not enduring this dominion of "death, that what he created might not periſh, "took a body to himſelf, not alien from ours; "and becauſe we were all ſubject to corruption," (z) ἀντὶ πάντων αὐτὸς θανάτῳ παραδίδως, "delivering it "to the death for us all, he offered it to the Father, "that, as it were, all men dying in him, the law "of the corruption of mankind might be diſſolved, "and he might tranſlate them again to incorrup-"tion:" "And this," ſaith he (a), "is the firſt "cauſe of his incarnation." Hence many of them ſay, that (b) "the hand-writing which was blotted out "by the death of Chriſt, was the threat made to A-"dam, in the day that thou eateth thereof, thou ſhalt "die." Here then is one reaſon why the death, or blood of bulls or goats, could not take away ſin; viz. they did not partake of the ſame nature that had ſinned, and therefore could not in that nature diſſolve the debt we had contracted, and ſo tranſlate us to incorruption. 2. It became him thus to ſuffer, becauſe theſe ſufferings fitted him to be a merciful high prieſt to them that ſuffer as he did, and alſo to be a faithful high prieſt, to make atonement for our ſins, ver. 17. Obſerve here, that the apoſtle doth not ſay, Chriſt's ſufferings were abſolutely neceſſary to ſatisfy divine juſtice; that infinite mercy could not pardon ſin, without a ſatiſfaction made to juſtice; and that infinite wiſdom could contrive no other way for the atonement of our ſins: but that divine wiſdom ſaw it fit that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer for the ends forementioned. And why then may not others be permitted to think, and ſpeak, with the apoſtle, without adding that which the apoſtle, in all this long and excellent diſcourſe concerning the ends, the reaſon, and neceſſity of our Saviour's ſufferings, thought not once fit to mention?

Ibid. [k] Τελειῶσαι διὰ παθημάτων, to ſanctify, to conſecrate, and dedicate him to that work, by his ſufferings.] That this is the true import of theſe words, will appear, 1. From the like words uſed by this apoſtle, chap. 5. 8. 9. 10. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things that he ſuffered, and being made perfect, [τελειωθεὶς], i. e. being conſecrated, to his prieſtly office, "he became the au- "thor of eternal ſalvation to all that obey him, "being called of him an high prieſt after the or- "der of Melchiſedec." And again, chap. 7. 27. 28. The law maketh them high prieſts which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which is after the law, maketh the Son ſo, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τετελειωμένον, who is conſecrated an high prieſt for evermore. 2*dly*, From the collation made betwixt the call of Aaron to his prieſthood, and of Chriſt to his: For as Aaron took not this honour to himſelf, but was called of God to it; ſo Chriſt glorified not himſelf to be made an high prieſt, but was conſtituted ſo by him, who ſaid, Thou are a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec. Now, the conſecration of Aaron, and the legal prieſts, is continually expreſſed by this word: for what is in the Hebrew, Thou ſhalt fill the hands of Aaron and his ſons, and is by us tranſlated, thou ſhalt conſecrate them, is by the Septuagint thus rendered, τελειώσεις Ἀαρὼν τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν ἁγιάσαι αὐτούς. So Numb. 3. 3. ἐτελείωσαν τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν ἱερατεύειν, they conſecrated them to the prieſthood. Accordingly the prieſt conſecrated, is, in the Greek, ὁ τετελειωμένος, Lev. 21. 10. The day of his conſecration, is ἡμέρα τῆς τελειώσεως, Lev. 8. 33. The ſacrifice then offered for ſin, is θυσία τελειώσεως, the burnt-offering, ὁλοκαύτωμα τελειώσεως, ver. 28. The Ram offered is κριὸς τελειώσεως, ver. 22. The fleſh of conſecration, τὸ κρέας τῆς τελειώσεως, Exod. 29. 34. By theſe ſufferings he became an high prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedec; and the author of ſalvation to all that obey him; becauſe appearing with this ſacrifice before God in heaven for ever, he is able to ſave for ever, them that come unto God by him.

Ver. 11. [l] Ὁ ἁγιάζων, he that ſanctifies, &c.] I have ſhewed, note on chap. 9. 13. that the word ἁγιάζειν, in this epiſtle, is uſed in the ſacrifical ſenſe, or with relation to the expiation of ſin: in the Old Teſtament, when it reſpecteth ſacrifices, it ſometimes ſignifies to devote, conſecrate, and offer them to God. So Lev. 22. 3. The holy things which the children of Iſrael hallow to the Lord, ὅσα ἂν ἁγιάζωσιν, which they ſhall offer to the Lord; for Numb. 18. 9. theſe holy things are thus enumerated, every heave-offering, ver. 8. every meat-offering, every ſin-offering, every treſpaſs-offering, Deut. 15. 19. all the firſtlings of thy flock, thou ſhalt ſanctify to the Lord thy God, ἁγιάσεις τῷ Κυρίῳ. For if they were clean, they were to be offered to God, and their blood was to be ſprinkled on the altar, and their fat burnt for an offering made by fire, Numb. 18. 19. But if they were unclean, οὐ θύσεις αὐτὸ τῷ Κυρίῳ, thou ſhalt not ſacrifice them to the Lord, ſaith the text, Deut. 15. 21. And 1 Chron. 23. 13. Aaron was ſeparated, that he might ſanctify the moſt holy things, τοῦ ἁγιάσθηναι, i. e. that he might offer them in ſacrifice, and to burn incenſe; for he was ſeparated to execute the prieſthood, Exod. 28. 1. And that was to be performed by offering gifts, and ſacrifices for ſin, Heb. 5. 1. And in this ſenſe, our Saviour ſaith, ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν ἁγιάζω ἐμαυτὸν, ἵνα ὦσιν ἡγιασμένοι ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, For their ſakes I ſanctify myſelf, i. e. I offer myſelf a piacular victim, that they may be ſanctified in the truth, John 17. 19. i. e. that they may be conſecrated to their office, or ſet apart for my ſervice: for as Aaron and his ſons were hallowed, and ſet apart for God's ſervice by a ſacrifice, to expiate them from their ſins; and this was done, ἁγιάζειν αὐτοὺς, ὅτι ἱερατεύειν, to ſanctify them to the prieſthood, Exod. 29. 1. 14. 21. as well as by the holy anointing, Exod. 30. 30. 31. and 40. 13.; ſo Chriſt's apoſtles were ſanctified, and ſet apart to their office, not only by the unction of the Holy Ghoſt, but alſo by that piacular victim Chriſt offered for their ſins: and accordingly, in theſe words, he that ſanctifies, is Chriſt that offers himſelf, that he might ſanctify, ἁγιάζων, i. e. purge them from their ſins by his own blood, Heb. 13. 12.; and they that are ſanctified, are they that by this blood are purged from their ſins, and ſo are fitted to draw nigh to God, and made a royal prieſthood to ſhew forth his praiſes, and offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices acceptable to God, through Jeſus Chriſt.

2*dly*, The word doth alſo ſignify, to purge, purify, and make clean, by ſacrifice, both in the ſcripture and profane authors. Thus of the altar, it is ſaid, He ſhall ſprinkle the blood upon it with his finger ſeven times, and he ſhall cleanſe it, and hallow it, καθαριεῖ αὐτὸ καὶ ἁγιάσει αὐτό, from the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, Lev. 16. 19. So Exod. 29. 33. And they ſhall eat thoſe things, בפר בהם אשר, ἐν οἷς ἡγιάσθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς, by which, or for whom, the atonement was made, to conſecrate, καὶ ἁγιάσαι αὐτούς, and to ſanctify them; and ver. 39. Thou ſhalt cleanſe the the altar, כפרך עלי, ἐν τῷ ἁγιάζειν σε ἐπ' αὐτῷ, when thou haſt made an atonement for it. In profane authors, to purge by ſacrifices, from guilt or uncleanneſs, is ſometimes ἁγιάζειν, ſometimes ἁγνίζειν; and the ſacrifices that did this, are ſtyled ἁγιασμοὶ, ſacrifices of purgation: according to this ſenſe of the word, he that ſanctifieth, is he that purgeth; and they that are ſanctified, are they who are purged from the guilt of ſin.

Ver. 12. [n] Pſal. 22. 22. This pſalm being interpreted by the Jews themſelves concerning the Meſſiah, the apoſtle might well apply this paſſage of it to him.

Ver. 13. [o] I will put my truſt in him; and again, I, and the children which God hath given me.] Theſe two citations being from the ſame place, Iſ. 8. 17. make but one proof, that he who ſanctifies, and they who were ſanctified, have the ſame nature; ſhewing, that he who ſaid, I will put my truſt in him, called them whom God had given him, his children, or offspring, and ſo declared them to be of the ſame nature or original with him. Now, that theſe words were anciently adapted to Chriſt, we learn from the words of Simeon, who applies the words following to him, Luke 2. 4. and from the Jews who expound the words, "He ſhall be a ſtumbling-ſtone "and a rock of offence," of our Saviour, Pug. Fid. "part 2. c. 5. ſect. 2. to whom they are applied by St Paul, Rom. 9. 33. and by St Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 7. Dr Owen here contends, that the words ἐγὼ ἔσομαι πεποιθὼς ἐπ' αὐτῷ, are not taken from Iſaiah 8. 17. where they are almoſt expreſsly found, but from Pſal. 18. 3. Echaſah bo, ἐλπιῶ ἐπ' αὐτον, where they are not found; becauſe, ſaith he, were both theſe citations taken from the ſame place, the apoſtle would not have ſaid, καὶ πάλιν, and again, this being an evidence that he cites another place. To which the anſwer is, that he doth ſo, citing the firſt words from ver. 17. and the ſecond from ver. 18.

Ver. 14. [p] Καταργήσῃ τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, That had the power of death.] That by ſeducing Adam to eat of the forbidden fruit, the Devil, whom the Jews called Sammael, had power to accuſe men, and to demand that they might die according to the threat pronounced againſt them, is the conſtant opinion of the Jews (c). Our wiſe men ſay, it is a tradition, that Satan the adverſary, the "angel of "death, deſcendeth and ſeduceth, aſcendeth and "accuſeth, receives power, and takes away the "ſoul or life." Hence they ſay of him, That "(d) he cauſed death to the whole world."

Καταργῆσῃ τὸν Διάβολον, is to fruſtrate and bring to nought his deſign of ſubjecting all men to the power of death, and keeping them under the dominion of it; and render it of no effect, Rom. 3. 3. 21. and 4. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 28. and 2. 6. and 6. 13. 13. 8. 10. 11. and 15. 24. 26. 2 Cor. 3. 7. 11. 13. 14. Gal. 3. 17. and 5. 11. 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. And thus Chriſt is ſaid καταργῆσαι θανατον, to aboliſh death, 2 Tim. 1. 10. That therefore we are ſtill ſubject to death, is, ſay the fathers, not that we are now puniſhed with it; but out of mercy, that ſin might not be immortal in us, the time of our reſurrection being that in which death ſhall be totally aboliſhed, 1 Cor. 15. 26.

Ver. 15. [q] Φόβῳ θανάτου, through fear of death.] That the whole Heathen world was ſubject to this fear, and that it was the king of terrors to them, ſee note on Rom. 8. 2. From this fear we are delivered at preſent, by our deliverance from that guilt of ſin, which alone makes it truly terrible, 1 Cor. 15. 55. 56. and by the promiſe of a glorious reſurrection, when death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory, ver. 54.

Ver. 16. [r] Οὐκ ἐπιλαμβάνεται. This word, ſay the gloſſaries, ſignifies, Manum injicere, to lay hold upon; manu prehendere, to hold with the hand. So Eccluſ 4. 11. Wiſdom ἐπιλαμβάνεται, layeth hold of them that ſeek her; Suſan. ver. 36. 40. The man we could not hold, being too ſtrong for us; τούτου δὲ ἐπιλαμβανόμενοι, but laying hold of her, we aſked her, &c. And ſo, in the Septuagint, it ſignifies almoſt continually, ἐπιλάβου, take hold of his tail, Exod. 4. 4. See Kircher, in the words, חמש חיק אחו. But then, that he thus laid hold of fallen man, and of the ſeed of Abraham, by taking of the human nature from one derived from the ſtock of Abraham, that in that nature he might ſuffer death for the propitiation of thoſe ſins, which rendered them ſo obnoxious to death, is extremely evident both from the words preceding, and from the words following; for ver. 14. we read thus, Becauſe therefore the children were partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo did partake of the ſame fleſh and blood, or mortal nature, that through (his) death he might deſtroy him that had the power of death, for, ſaith he, he took hold of the ſeed of Abraham, i. e. by partaking of the ſame nature with them, ver. 14. And again, he took hold on the ſeed of Abraham, to reſcue them from that death they feared, by his own death, ver. 17. ὅθεν ὤφειλε, wherefore he ought in all things (belonging to their nature) to be he made like to his brethren, that, as their high prieſt, he might make an atonement for the ſins of the people, by his ſacrifice made on the croſs, ἐν ᾧ γὰρ πέπονθεν, for in that he ſuffered, &c. ver. 18.

Ibid. [s] The ſeed of Abraham.] The note of the beſt commentators here, is this, That the apoſtle, writing to the Jews, thought it ſufficient to mention only the mercies deſigned, by the Meſſiah, for the Jews. And true it is, that they confined the ſeed of Abraham to themſelves; but the apoſtle reckons all believers as the ſeed of Abraham, Rom. 4. 12. 16. 17. Gal. 3. 14. 29. though Chriſt is here ſaid to have taken upon him the ſeed of Abraham, becauſe he derived his fleſh from his poſterity.

Ver. 17. [f] Εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ, to make atonement for the ſins of the people: i. e. ἱλάσκεσθαι τὸν Θεὸν περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, to make atonement to God for their ſins. So in Porphyry (e), ἀπομειλίσσειν τὰς τῶν πολλῶν ἁμαρτίας, to propitiate for the ſins of many, is in the ſame place, ἀπομειλίσσειν τὸ θεῖον, to propitiate the Deity for them. This ſenſe the words require; for Chriſt is here ſaid to be a faithful high prieſt, τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι, in things pertaining to God, that he might make atonement, ſurely, to him. This reconciliation, therefore, muſt reſpect God. Again, this phraſe, when it reſpects the Jewiſh ſacrifices, hath ſtill relation to the guilt of ſin to be expiated, and taken away by them; and every ſin-offering offered by the prieſt, is ſaid to be offered by him, ἱλάσκεσθαι περὶ ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν, to make atonement for their ſins, Lev. 4. 35. and 5. 6. 10. and 13. 44. Ezek. 44. 27. And of the piacular victim it is ſtill ſaid, καὶ ἐξιλάσεται περὶ αὐτῶν ὁ ἱερεύς, καὶ ἀφεθήσεται αὐτοῖς ἡ ἁμαρτία, the prieſt ſhall make atonement for them, and the ſin ſhall be forgiven, Lev. 4. 20. 31. and 5. 6. 10. 13. 18. and 12. 7. 8. and 14. 18. 19. 29. 31. and 15. 30. and 19. 22. Numb. 6. 11. 15. 28. The apoſtle, therefore, here ſpeaking to the Jews in the phraſe always uſed by them, of ſuch ſacrifices as ſuffered in their ſtead, to expiate the guilt of their ſin, muſt be ſuppoſed to teach them, that the like was done for them by our Saviour's ſacrifice.

Ver. 18. [g] Πειρασθείς, being tempted:] i. e. Expoſed to agonies and ſufferings; for πειρασθῆναι, in the epiſtles, ſignifies, to be expoſed to ſuch afflictions as ſubject us to great temptations to deſiſt from our duty and obedience; as when the apoſtle ſaith, No temptation hath befallen you, but what is ἀνθρώπινος, ſupportable by man; for the Lord is faithful, who will not ſuffer you πειρασθῆναι, to be tempted above what you are able, (or, expoſed to ſufferings beyond your ſtrength), but will, with the temptation, make a way (ſo far) to eſcape, that you may be able to bear it, 1 Cor. 10. 13. So the apoſtle, finding his Theſſalonians ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι, in great afflictions from their perſecutors, ſends to know their faith, μήπως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειράζων, leſt the tempter might have prevailed on them, by reaſon of theſe tribulations, to deſert it, 1 Theſſ. 3. 4. 5.; Rev. 2. 10. Fear none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer: behold, Satan ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon, ἵνα πειρασθῆτε, that you may be tempted, i. e. be tried by temptations. See Jam. 1. 2. 12. 1 Pet. 1. 6. 2 Pet. 2. 9. Rev. 3. 10. So here, our Saviour, tried by theſe agonies, which he ſuffered in the hour of darkneſs, when the tempter fell upon him with all his fury, is become experimentally able to ſuccour us under thoſe ſufferings, which render obedience ſo hard to fleſh and blood.

Ibid. [a] Δύναται, he is able.] He hath δύναμιν συμπαθητικὴν, a power joined with a ſympathy towards us, and a propenſity to ſuccour us. So Rom. 11. 23. They ſhall be graffed in, δυνατὸς γάρ ἐστιν ὁ Θεὸς, for God is able. And chap. 14. 4. The weak ſhall ſtand, δυνατὸς γάρ, for God is able to make him ſtand. Thus, to encourage us to charity, the apoſtle ſaith, δυνατὸς ὁ Θεὸς, God is able to make all grace abound towards us, 2 Cor. 9. 8. I know whom I have believed, and I am perſuaded, ὅτι δυνατός ἐστι, that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him to that day, 2 Tim. 1. 12.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. WHerefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, (i. e. the calling to celeſtial bleſſings), conſider the Apoſtle and High Prieſt of our profeſſion, Chriſt Jeſus, (who, as our Apoſtle, taught theſe things; and, as our High Prieſt, ſuffered, to obtain theſe bleſſings for us, and confirm them to us):

2. [a] Who was faithful to [b] him that appointed him (to be an Apoſtle and High Prieſt); as alſo (it is ſaid of) Moſes, (that he) was faithful in all his houſe, (i. e. in all the houſe of God, Numb. 12. 7.)

3. For this man (this Jeſus) was counted worthy of (or, dignified with) more glory than Moſes, in as much as he [c] who hath builded (Gr. ὁ κατασκευάσας, who orders, or governs) the houſe, hath more honour than the houſe, (of which Moſes only was a part).

4. For every houſe is builded (κατασκευάζεται, ordered and governed) by ſome man; but [d] he that built (ὁ κατασκευάσας, that orders and governs) all things, is God.

5. And Moſes verily was faithful in (the adminiſtration of) all (things in) his houſe (but this he was only) [e] as a ſervant, for a teſtimony of thoſe things which were to be ſpoken after (by God to them):

6. But Chriſt as a Son (is placed) over his own houſe, (i. e. he enters upon the government of it, as an heir and ſucceſſor into the rights of his Father; the Father now judging no man, but having com- mitted all judgment to his Son, John 5. 22.); whoſe houſe we (Chriſtians) are, (and ſhall continue to be) if we hold faſt the [f] confidence, and the [g] rejoicing of the hope firm to the end.

7. Wherefore as the [h] Holy Ghoſt ſaith (by David, Pſal. 95. 8.), [i] To-day if you will hear his voice,

8. Harden not your hearts, as (your forefathers did) in the (time of) provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderneſs; (hence learn, that it was in their power to prevent the hardneſs of their hearts):

9. [k] When (where) your fathers [l] tempted me, (i. e. doubted of my preſence with them, ſaying, Is the Lord among us, or not? Exod. 17. 7. Numb. 14. 11. 21.), [m] proved me, and ſaw my works [n] forty years.

10. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and ſaid, They do always err in their hearts; (not with the heart believing, ver. 11.), and they have not known my ways, (i. e. not hearkened to me, to walk in them, ver. 22.)

11. So I ſware in my wrath, (ver. 21.), [o] They ſhall not enter (Gr. if they ſhall enter) into my reſt, (i. e. into the land where they were to reſt from their wars).

12. Take heed (therefore), brethren, leſt there be in any of you (as there was in them) an evil heart of unbelief, [p] in departing from the [q] living God;

13. But exhort one another (to ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith) daily, while it is called, To-day, (before the night cometh upon you, John 12. 35.); [r] leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin.

14. For we are made partakers of (the bleſſings purchaſed by) Chriſt, if we hold the [s] beginning of our confidence ſtedfaſt to the end;

15. While it is ſaid, (Gr. Ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι, in that it is ſaid), To-day, if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. (You may diſcern the miſchief of unbelief, and hardneſs of heart, and the neceſſity of the exhortation tendered, ver. 12. 13.)

16. [t] For ſome when they had heard, did provoke; howbeit not all that came out of Egypt, (not Caleb and Joſhua.)

17. But (and) with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had ſinned (by unbelief), whoſe carcaſes fell in the wilderneſs?

18. And to whom ſware he, that they ſhould not enter into his reſt, but to them that believed not?

19. [u] So we ſee (Καὶ βλέπομεν, we ſee therefore) that they could not enter in becauſe of unbelief.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 2. [a] Πιστὸν ὄντα, who was faithful, &c.] i. e. As Moſes faithfully diſcharged all that the Lord commanded him to ſay or do for the church of Iſrael; ſo Chriſt was faithful in the diſcharge of his prophetic office, doing and ſpeaking as the Father had given him commandment, John 12. 49. 50. and 14. 10. And in his prieſtly office, in laying down his life for the ſheep, according to the commandment he had received from the Father, John 10. 18. and doing all things requiſite to make atonement for the ſins of the people, chap. 2. 17. I know indeed, the critics ſay, נאמן, and πιστὸς, ſignify one eſtabliſhed in his office; as in thoſe words, πιστὸς Σαμουὴλ εἰς προφήτην τῷ Κυρίῳ, Samuel was eſtabliſhed a prophet to the Lord: but this criticiſm is here needleſs; and the word πιστὸς, chap. 2. 17. bearing not this ſenſe, I chuſe rather to follow the ordinary import of the word.

Ibid. [b] Τῷ ποιήσαντι αὐτὸν, to him that appointed him.] So the word ſignifies, 1 Sam. 12. 6. God is witneſs, ὁ ποιήσας, who appointed, or choſe Moſes and Aaron. See ver. 8.

Ver. 3. [c] Ὁ κατασκευάσας] Is he that orders, and governs, and provides, or prepares all things. So Phavorinus, κατασκευάζω, καλαρτύομαι, ἐξαρτύομαι, ordino, guberno, moderor. And thus, τὰς πολιτείας, καλασκευασθῆναι, in Plato, epiſt. 11. is to have cities and polities well ordered. So Wiſd. 9. 2. Thou in thy wiſdom κατασκευάσας ἄνθρωπον, haſt ordered man to have dominion over thy creatures. Thus Philo, De cherub. p. 100. ſaith, "God is the cauſe of the "world, δι' ὃν γέγονεν, by which it was made, and the "λόγῳ δι' οὗ κατεσκευάσθη, logos, the cauſe by which "it was ordered," or put into that frame and order in which it is. The words preceding, ἀξίωται, he was dignified with more honour, ſeem plainly to refer to Chriſt's regal office, by which all power in heaven and earth was given to him, and he was made head over all things for his church, which is his body, and in which he dwells, as in his houſe, Eph. 2. 21. 22. And this to me ſeems to eſtabliſh this ſenſe of the word.

Ver. 4. [d] Ὁ δὲ κατασκευάσας τὰ πάντα ὁ Θεὸς, he that built all things is God.] The apoſtle, ſay the Socinians on the place, proves Chriſtum tanto præſtantiorem eſſe Moſe, quanto Deus præſtantior eſt ſuo populo, qui Dei domus eſt, idque merito: "That Chriſt is as much more excellent than Moſes, "as God is more excellent than his own people. And "this they had juſt cauſe to ſay." And if ſo, Chriſt muſt be properly and truly God; for nothing elſe can ſo far excel Moſes, the chiefeſt of that people, as God himſelf excels them. By this interpretation, therefore, they do not avoid, but confirm the argument for our Saviour's deity, from this text. The argument ſeems plainly to run thus: He that governs all things is God; but Chriſt, as pater familias, father of his family, governs all things in his houſe, that is, the church diſperſed throughout all the world; and hath, in order thereunto, all judgment, and all power, in heaven and earth, committed to him: he therefore muſt be God; that is, the exerciſe of his kingly office ſhews, that he muſt be God as well as man. Thus Philo, De victim. offer. p. 661. C. often ſaith of that power, καθ' ἣν ἀνῆπλαι τῶν ὅλων τὸ κράτος, to which the government of all things is committed, that οὐκ ἀνθρώπων μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ θεῶν ἐστι θεὸς, μέγας τίς ἐστιν, ὄντως καὶ ἰσχυρὸς, καὶ κραταιὸς, "He is God not only of men, but angels, a great "being, who truly doth exiſt, both ſtrong, and "mighty."

Ver. 5. [a] Ὡς θεράπων, as a ſervant.] The government of Iſrael was a theocracy, where God gave all the laws and precepts; and Moſes, only as his ſervant and miniſter, told them what things God thought fit to command them: but the government of the Chriſtian church is entirely committed to our Lord Jeſus, and He, as Supreme Head, and Lord of all things, governs both it and all things in earth and heaven, for the good of it; and therefore, if he be not truly God, God doth not now govern the world, as formerly, but hath given up the adminiſtration of it to a creature. [Whoſe houſe we are;] Chriſt living in our hearts by faith, Gal. 2. 20. Eph. 3. 17. abiding in us by his Spirit, John 14. 23. Rom. 8. 9. 10. 11. and dwelling in our bodies, and in the body of the church, as in his temple, 1 Cor. 3. 16. 17. and 6. 17. 2 Cor. 6. 15. 16. Eph. 2. 20. 21. 22. and 4. 16.

Ver. 6. [f] Παῤῥησίαν, the confidence,] Or, the free profeſſion of the faith; for παῤῥησία is a liberty or freedom of ſpeaking; as when it is ſaid of Chriſt, that he ſpake ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, freely, Mark 8. 32. John 7. 13. 18. 20. and of his apoſtles, that they ſpake, μετὰ παῤῥησίας, with all freedom and courage, Acts 2. 29. and 4. 13. 29. 31. and 28. 31. 2 Cor. 3. 12. and 7. 14. Eph. 6. 19. Phil. 1. 20. 1 Tim. 3. 13. Heb. 4. 16. So Phavorinus, παῤῥησιάζομαι, ἐλευθεροστομῶ.

Ibid. [g] Καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος, the rejoicing of hope;] i. e. The hope which cauſes us to rejoice, in expectation of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2. 2 Cor. 1. 14. Gal. 6. 4. If we hold this firm unto the end. Which ſuppoſes, that they who were partakers of this heavenly calling, and had at preſent this cauſe of rejoicing, might not hold it firm unto the end, but might fall off from it, ver. 14.; might depart from the living God, ver. 11. chap. 4. 11. Yea, the apoſtle, in this epiſtle, plainly doth ſuppoſe, that they who had taſted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, &c might fall away, chap. 6. 4. 5. 6.; that the juſt who live by faith might draw back unto perdition, chap. 10. 38. 39.; that they might fall from the grace of God, chap. 12. 15. See the reading of the text juſtified, Examen Millii hic.

Ver. 7. [h] Τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, the Holy Ghoſt ſaith.] Hence it appears, that David writ his pſalms, by the afflatus, or inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. See note on Matth. 23. 43.

Ibid. [i] Σήμερον, to-day;] at preſent; for now is the day of ſalvation, 2 Cor. 6. 2. the preſent time being only ours. "We muſt do God's commandments to-"day," ſay the Jews, from Deut. 7. 11. "and re-"ceive the reward to-morrow. We muſt repent to-"day, leſt we die to-morrow, before we have re-"pented." See Cartw. in locum. And again, "If "Iſrael would repent but one day, the Meſſiah "would come;" and this they prove from theſe words of the pſalmiſt, אם בקלו תשמעו, when you hear his voice, ſpeaking in the prophets, or, as the Targum, אם במימריה, when you hear him ſpeaking by the Word, proceeding from the Father, harden not your hearts. That this is the frequent ſenſe of the particle אם, ſee Noldius, p. 89. § 31.; and it is alſo the ſenſe of the Greek ἐὰν. So ἐὰν εἶπε, when he ſaid thus, Gen. 13. 8.; ἐὰν ἐξελεύσωνται, when the daughters of Shilo come forth, Judg. 21. 21.; ἐὰν κοιμηθῶ, when I lie down, 1 Sam. 11. 12.; ἐὰν πληρωθῶσι, when thy days be fulfilled, 1 Kings 13. 31.; ἐὰν ἀποθάνω, when I die, Job 7. 4.; ἐὰν καθίσῃς, when thou ſitteſt; ἐὰν καθεύδῃς, when thou lieſt down, Prov. 3. 24. 25.; ἐὰν πορεύῃ, when thou goeſt; ἐὰν τρέχῃς, when thou runneſt, Prov. 4. 12. See alſo in the New Teſtament, ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, when I ſhall be lifted up, John 12. 32.; ἐὰν πορευθῶ, when I ſhall go, John 14. 3. and 16. 7.; ἐὰν φανερωθῇ, when he ſhall appear, 1 John 3. 2. Theſe words are therefore to be extended to the whole time of their hearing God ſpeaking to them by his prophets, and eſpecially to the time of God's ſpeaking to them by his Son, who was to bring them into a better reſt than that of Canaan, into which Joſhua led them.

Ver. 8. [k] When, ὅ, where.] So the Hebrew אשר is rendered, Numb. 22. 26. Deut. 8. 15. Pſal. 84. 3. Eccl. 8. 10.; ſo Numb. 20. 13. Theſe are the waters of contention, אשר, where the children of Iſrael contended.

Ibid. [l] Ἐπείρασάν με, tempted me.] That to tempt God, in the ſcripture-phraſe, is always to diſtruſt his power, or goodneſs, after ſufficient demonſtrations given of it; ſee note on Matth. 4. 7. And note here, that the apoſtle ſaith they tempted Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10. 9. which ſhews, that theſe words may truly be applied to him.

Ibid.

Ibid. m Ἐδοκίμασαν, proved me.] The Hebrew word which is here rendered proved me, is, Mal. 3. 16. rendered by the Greek ἀντίσησαν, they reſiſted God; and by the Chaldee, the Syriac, and by our verſion, they who tempted God; that is, ſaith Dr Pocock, who went about to try and prove him, whether he could or would puniſh ſinners, and to provoke and dare him to do his worſt, to execute his judgments, if he were a God of judgment: and then, to ſee his works forty years, muſt be, to ſee his judgments executed upon them forty years.

Ibid. n Τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη, forty years.] If this be the right connection of the words, then to ſee God's works forty years, muſt be, to ſee his puniſhments ſo long upon them, as he plainly threatened they ſhould, ſaying, You ſhall bear your iniquities forty years, Numb. 14. 33. and that ſo viſibly, that all the nations ſhould diſcern his judgments on them; for ſurely as I live, ſaith he, all the earth ſhall be filled with the glory of God, ver. 21. But if, according to the reading of the Hebrew, and the Septuagint, the forty years ſhould be added to the following verſe thus, Wherefore I was angry with that generation forty years, as the apoſtle doth intimate by that inquiry, ver. 17. With whom he was angry forty years? Then the גם ראו, and καὶ εἶδον, will be beſt rendered, though they ſaw my work, as גם ſignifies, Noldius, p. 220. and καὶ, Luke 18. 7. John 16. 32. Acts 7. 5. according as God ſpeaks to them, Numb. 14. 22. For all theſe men which have ſeen my glory, and my ſigns which I did in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs, and yet have tempted me theſe ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice, ſurely they ſhall not ſee the land. And ver. 11. How long will it be ere they believe me, after all the ſigns? &c.

Ver. 11. o אם יבאון, Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται, if they ſhall enter;] i. e. Let me not be God, or, let me not be true, if they enter. This is a form of ſwearing very frequent in the Old Teſtament. So Deut. 1. 35. The Lord was wroth, and ſwore, ſaying, εἰ ὄψεται, אם יראה, If any of theſe men ſhall ſee that good land of promiſe, Pſal. 95. 11.; ſo 1 Sam. 3. 14. אם יתכפר, εἰ ἐξιλασθήσεται, If the iniquity of the houſe of Eli ſhall be purged with ſacrifice; Pſal. 89. 35. Once have I ſworn by my holineſs, אם אכזב, εἰ ψεύσωμαι, if I fail David; Pſal. 132. 2. 3. Lord, remember David, how he ſware אם אבא, εἰ εἰσελεύσομαι, if I go into my tabernacle; אם אעלה, εἰ ἀναβήσομαι, if I climb up into my bed; אם אתן, εἰ δώσω, if I give ſleep to my eyes; ſo Mark 8. 12. Verily I ſay unto you, εἰ δοθήσεται τῇ γενεᾷ ταύτῃ σημεῖον, let me not be true, if a ſign be given to this generation; where Chriſt himſelf ſwears, and therefore cannot be ſuppoſed abſolutely to forbid all ſwearing, Matth. 5. 34.

Ver. 12. p Ἐν τῷ ἀποστῆναι, in departing.] The Jews that tempted God, Numb. 14. are ſaid ἀποστῆναι, to depart from the land of Canaan, ver. 31.; They ſaid one to another, Come, let us make a captain, καὶ ἀποστρέψωμεν, and let us turn back into Egypt, ver. 4. and are ſaid, ἀπιστοῦντι, not to believe God, ver. 11.

Ibid. q The living God;] ſo ſtyled, to ſhew that he is always able to puniſh unbelievers, Note alſo, that as he who believeth in Chriſt believeth in God the Father alſo, John 12. 44. ſo he that deſerts him, doth alſo deſert the Father who ſent him, and makes him a liar, 1 John 5. 9. 10.; For he that denies the Son, hath not the Father, 1 John 3. 23.

Ver. 13. r Ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις, leſt any man be hardened.] To be hardened in the New Teſtament, imports infidelity and want of faith. Thus Chriſt upbraids to his diſciples their unbelief, καὶ σκληροκαρδίαν, and hardneſs of heart, that they believed not, Mark 16. 14.; and the Jews that believed not are ſaid to be hardened, Acts 19. 9. and ſo it will be evident that here it ſignifies, to him that compares ver. 15. with ver. 19.

Ver. 14. s Τὴν ἀρχὴν ὑποστάσεως, the beginning of their hope.] That hope to which we have fled for refuge, chap. 6. 18.; that hope which cauſeth us to rejoice, ver. 6. faith being ἐλπιζομένων ὑπόστασις, the firm expectation of things hoped for, chap. 11. See the note there.

Ver. 16. t Τινὲς γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρεπίκραναν, ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες, &c.] I would render theſe words thus, For who are they that hearing did provoke? were they not all that came forth out of Egypt? For τινὲς ſignifies as well who as ſome. So Acts 19. 15. Τίνες ἐστέ; who are ye? Rev. 7. 13. Τίνες εἰσί; who are they that are clothed with white robes? Iſ. 60. 8. Τίνες οὗτοι; who are theſe? So Heb. 1. 5. Τίνι γὰρ; For to whom of the angels ſaid he? and here, ver. 18. Τίσι δέ; To whom did he ſwear? So Joſephus, c. 17. of his Maccabees, Τίνες οὐκ ἐθαυμασαν τὰς τῶν θείων νομοθετῶν ἀθλητάς; τίνες οὐκ ἐξεπλάγησαν; Who did not admire? who were not aſtoniſhed at the champions of the divine law? And then the anſwer to this inquiry muſt be this, Were they a few? yea, were they not all? &c. as if it had been οὐχὶ πάντες. It is alſo evident, that οὐ and οὐκ are often interrogatives, as 1 Cor. 12. 15. John 8. 42. See Noldius, p. 487. And if the Greek will bear this conſtruction, it anſwers beſt, 1*ſt*, To the ſtory as it is repreſented, Numb. 14.; for notwithſtanding the exception made, ver. 38. of Joſhua and Caleb, it is ſaid, ver. 12. that πᾶσα ἡ συναγωγὴ, all the congregation, καὶ πάντες, and all the children of Iſrael murmured againſt Moſes and Aaron; that πᾶσα ἡ συναγωγὴ, all the congregation ſpake of ſtoning Joſhua and Caleb, ver. 10. and πάντες οἱ ἄνδρες, all the men, ver. 22. are the οἱ παροξύναντες, provokers, ver. 23. the συναγωγὴ πονηρὰ, evil congregation, and the murmurers, ver. 27. 35. Joſh. 5. 6. And, 2*dly*, It agrees beſt with the following lowing verſes, which are plainly interrogatives and anſwers, With whom was he grieved? was it not with them? To whom ſware he? was it not to them that believed not? And, laſtly, with the cloſe of the argument, which ſaith generally, they could not enter in.

Ver. 19. [a] Καὶ here ſignifies idcirco, therefore; as the Hebrew ו often does: ſee Noldius, p. 279. So Joſh. 23. 11. πρὸς φυλάξιτε, Take good heed therefore; Pſal. 2. 10. πρὸς νῦν σύνετε, Be wiſe now therefore. See Pſal. 7. 7. and 18. 42.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. LET us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe being left us of entering into his reſt (in the celeſtial Canaan, as to them in the terreſtrial), any of you ſhould [a] ſeem to come ſhort of it, (i. e. ſhould fail of it.)

2. For to us was (Gr. is) the goſpel preached as well as (Gr. as it was alſo) unto them, (they being οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες, the firſt to whom it was preached, or formerly evangelized, ver. 6.): but the word preached (Gr. heard) did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. (That is, we have now the glad tidings, and goſpel-promiſe of a future reſt; as they alſo had in types, their reſt in Canaan being a type of their future reſt with God in the heavenly Canaan.)

3. For we which have believed do enter into reſt, as (may be gathered from what) he ſaid, As I have ſworn in my wrath, If they ſhall enter into my reſt: although the works were finiſhed from the foundation of the world. (Gr. καίτοι τῶν ἔργων ἀπὸ καταβολῆς τοῦ κόσμου γενηθέντων, and indeed, or for (ſee Budæus and Stephanus), this phraſe, my reſt, relates to the works done by God from the foundation of the world. This ſenſe ſeems certain from the reaſons following.)

4. For he (Moſes) ſpake in a certain place (Gen. 2. 1.) of the ſeventh day (from the beginning of God's work of creation, ſaying) on this wiſe, And God did reſt the ſeventh day from all his works.

5. And in this place (he, i. e. God, ſaith) again (long after), If they ſhall enter into my reſt, (i. e. if they ſhall have a reſt from their labours and travels, reſembling that of mine from the creation of the world, ſee ver. 10.)

6. Seeing therefore it remaineth that ſome muſt enter therein, (to the reſt of God ſpoken in theſe words), and they to whom it was firſt preached (οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες, they who had the goſpel firſt preached to them concerning this reſt of God), entered not in (to it) becauſe of unbelief:

7. [a] Again, he (God) limiteth a certain day, ſaying in (theſe words of) David, To-day, after ſo long a time (of their continuance in the reſt of Canaan); as it is (there) ſaid, To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, (&c. ſpeaking not of the reſt of Canaan, of which they were poſſeſſed in the days of Joſhua, as he ſaith to the Reubenites and Gadites: And now the Lord hath given reſt unto your brethren, as he promiſed them, Joſh. 22. 4.)

8. [a] For if Jeſus (i. e. Joſhua) had given them (a) reſt (like to that of God), then would not he (i. e. God by David) afterward have ſpoken of another day (of reſt after their reſt in Canaan.)

9. There remaineth therefore (yet) a (more glorious and complete) [c] reſt to the people of God.

10. For he that is (thus) entered into his reſt, he alſo hath ceaſed from his own works, (i. e. from the labours and travels of this life, Rev. 14. 13.), as God (after he had finiſhed the creation) did from his.

11. Let us labour therefore to enter into that reſt (which yet remaineth for the people of God), leſt any man fall (Gr. that we may not fall from it) after the ſame example of unbelief, (by our infidelity, as they did.)

12. [a] For the word of God (mentioned, ver. 1. 2.) is quick and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword, piercing even to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a diſcerner (or cenſurer) of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13. Neither is there any creature which is not manifeſt in his ſight, (whoſe word this is): but all things are naked and open to the eyes of him [a] with whom we have to do, (Gr. to whom we muſt give an account, and ſo there is no hope theſe unbelievers ſhould eſcape his judgments.)

14. Seeing then that we have a great high prieſt (merciful and faithful to make reconciliation for our ſins, chap. 2. 17.), that is paſſed into the heavens (to appear for ever there to make interceſſion, and to prepare this reſting-place for us, John 14. 2. even) Jeſus the Son of God, let us hold faſt our profeſſion (without wavering.)

15. For we have not an high prieſt who cannot be touched with the ſenſe of our infirmities; but (one who) was in all points tempted (i. e. expoſed to ſufferings) like as we are, yet (and this) without ſin (to deſerve the leaſt of them: ſee note on chap. 2. 18.)

16. Let us therefore (depending on his power, his interceſſion for, and ſympathy with us) come boldly [b] to the throne of grace, (this ἱλαστήριον, or mercy-ſeat, Rom. 3. 25.), that we may obtain mercy (in the pardon of our ſins), and find grace (or favour) to (a ſuitable) help in time of need, (Gr. εἰς εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν, for ſeaſonable help in all our ſufferings for his ſake.

ANNO

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Δοκῇ τις ὑστερηκέναι, ſhould ſeem to come ſhort.] That the word ὑστερηκέναι ſignifies to fail of, or fall from any thing, ſee note on chap. 12. 13.; and that δοκέω is oft an expletive, all critics do acknowledge; ſo μὴ δόξητε λέγειν, ſay not, Matth. 3. 9.; οἱ δοκοῦντες ἄρχειν, they who rule, Mark 10. 42. ὃ δοκεῖ ἔχειν, that which he hath, Luke 8. 18. Matth. 25. 29. ὁ δοκῶν ἑστάναι, he that ſtandeth, 1 Cor. 10. 12.; ſee the note on 1 Cor. 7. 40.

Ver. 2. [b] Καθάπερ κἀκεῖνοι, as well as they.] This, by ſome, is referred to their hearing of the law, as in the paraphraſe; by others, as probably to the goſpel-bleſſings then typified to them; for the apoſtle informs us, that they all did eat the ſame ſpiritual meat, and drank the ſame ſpiritual drink; for they drank of the rock that followed them, and that rock was Chriſt, 1 Cor. 10. 3. 4. This ſounds flat to them only who are averſe to this doctrine, that the bleſſings of the goſpel were typified to the Jews, but is confirmed from ver. 6.

Ver. 3. [c] Εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου, into my reſt.] Upon the true interpretation of theſe words here, and ver. 1. καταπαυσιν αὐτῆ, depends the true ſenſe of this chapter. Now, ſome refer this to that deliverance from their perſecutors, and the peaceable days of profeſſing the goſpel, the Chriſtians in Judea and elſewhere ſhould enjoy after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. But to this I can by no means aſſent: for, 1. The bearing of the croſs, the ſuffering perſecution, being ſo often hinted as the portion of all that will live godly, I cannot believe that a promiſe of deliverance from them ſhould be ſo often repreſented by the Holy Ghoſt, as the great goſpel-bleſſing promiſed to believers, the ἐπαγγελία, the evangelical promiſe made to Chriſtians by God, that they ſhould enter into his reſt, ver. 1. the ſabbatiſm remaining for the people of God, ver. 9.; the reſt which they ſhould ſtrive to enter into, ver. 11. and be afraid leſt they ſhould fail of, ver. 2. 2. I know of no ſuch happy change of the affairs of Chriſtians in all other parts of the world, that the apoſtle ſhould here, and almoſt in all his other epiſtles, ſpeak of it, as this interpretation maketh him to do, as one of the greateſt bleſſings of Chriſtianity; nor were there any ſuch halcyon-days enjoyed by Chriſtians after the deſolation of Jeruſalem. This will be evident from Chriſt's meſſage to the Aſiatic churches, after the times of Domitian; for there he ſpeaks to the angel of the church of Smyrna, Fear none of thoſe things which thou art about to ſuffer: behold, Satan is about to caſt ſome of you into priſon, that ye may be tried ten days. Be thou faithful to the death, and I will give thee a crown of life, Rev. 2. 10. To the church of Pergamus thus, I know thy works, and where thou dwelleſt, where is the throne of Satan, and thou holdeſt my name, and haſt not denied the faith in the days in which Antipas my faithful martyr ſuffered, who was ſlain among you where Satan dwells, ver. 13. To the church of Philadelphia thus, Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, I will alſo keep thee from the hour of temptation, which ſhall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth, chap. 3. 10. This argument a Reverend perſon endeavours to evade, by ſaying, that John writ his Revelations in the ninth year of Claudius. But, 1ſt, This is contrary to the teſtimony of all antiquity, excepting only the ſingle teſtimony of Epiphanius, which alſo is fully anſwered by Dr More: for it is generally agreed, that he writ his Revelation in, or after he came from the iſle of Patmos, as may be proved from chap. 1. 9. 10. 11. Now, all the ancients ſay, that John was baniſhed thither by Domitian, and writ his Revelations about that time. So Irenæus (f) ſpeaks expreſsly, ſaying, "If the name "of antichriſt had been to be divulged, it would "have been mentioned by him who ſaw the reve- "lation; for it was not ſeen long ago, but almoſt "in our age, at the end of the reign of Domi- "tian;" which paſſage cannot be underſtood of the name only of the beaſt, but of the whole Revelation; as is evident, 1. Becauſe Euſebius, who cites this paſſage, muſt underſtand him ſo; for he ſaith, "that he returned from his exile in this iſland μετὰ "τὸν Δομιτιανοῦ τελευτὴν, chap. 23. after the death of "Domitian;" and ſo he muſt have writ his Revelation while he lived. And, 2. Becauſe the name of the beaſt is not ſaid to be revealed to the evangeliſt, but only the number of his name. And, 3. The words, ᾧ τὴν Ἀποκάλυψιν ἑωράκατον, even force this ſenſe; for they are properly rendered, who ſaw alſo the revelation, diſtinguiſhing the revelation from the name. And, laſtly, A name cannot properly be ſaid to be ſeen, nor doth St John ever uſe any ſuch expreſſion about it; but a revelation may be properly ſaid to be ſeen, and St John often ſaith he ſaw them. Again, in this perſecution of Domitian, ſaith Euſebius (g), κατέχει λόγος, the tradition runs, "That John the evangeliſt was baniſhed to the iſle

(f) Δι' ἐκείνου ἂν ἐρρέθη τοῦ τὴν Ἀποκάλυψιν ἑωρακότος, οὐδὲ γὰρ πρὸ πολλοῦ χρόνου ἑωράθη, ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν ἐπὶ τῆς ἡμετέρας γενεᾶς, πρὸς τῷ τέλει τῆς Δομετιανοῦ ἀρχῆς. Apud. Euſeb. hiſt. eccl. l. 3. c. 18.

(g) Τοῦτο δὲ τοῦ λόγου ἴσμεν μαρτυρίας Πάτμον οἰκῶν καταδικασθῆναι τὸν ἥσον. Ibid. c. 8.

" of Patmos, for the teſtimony he gave to the di" vine word." And in his Chronicon (h) he adds,
" That under him the apoſtle John being baniſhed
" into the iſle of Patmos, ὅθεν τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν ἑώρακεν,
" ὡς δηλοῖ Εἰρηναῖος, there ſaw his revelation, as Ire-" næus teſtifies;" which both confirms the tradition and gives the true ſenſe of the words of Irenæus, cited by him. So alſo St Jerom (i) ſaith, " That
" St John being baniſhed into the iſle of Patmos,
" in the 14th year of Domitian, ſcripſit Apocalypſin, " compoſed the book of the Revelation." So almoſt all the Greek and Latin writers, ſaith Huet in Orig. com. p. 72. Vid. Oroſ. l. 7. c. 10. 11. Martyr. Tim. apud Phot. cod. 254. p. 1403. l. 1. Aret. in Apoc. 1. 9. 2*dly*, It is certain, from the ſecond text here cited, that Antipas had ſuffered martyrdom before the writing of theſe epiſtles to the churches. Now, that Antipas ſuffered martyrdom under Domitian, the old Roman martyrology aſſures us, and Dr Hammond on the place confeſſes: it is therefore evident, that St John, ſpeaking of this martyrdom, which happened in the days of Domitian, as a thing paſt, muſt write the Revelations in or after the reign of Domitian. This the Doctor ſaw, and therefore interprets theſe words, Thou haſt not denied my faith, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις, even in thoſe days (of fiery trial) in which Antipas ἀπεκτάνθη, was, or hath been ſlain: " Thus the time is approaching wherein An" tipas, I foreſee, will be cruelly martyred, that is,
" (if this was written in the 9th year of Claudius,
" and Antipas ſlain the 10th of Domitian), I foreſee
" he will be ſlain forty years hence:" which deſcant, to ſpeak in his own words, " is too vain to be ſeri-
" ouſly conſidered." Laſtly, The Chriſtians had no ſuch halcyon days for any conſiderable time after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; for Jeruſalem was deſtroyed anno Chriſti 70. and the ſecond perſecution began under Domitian, anno Dom. 96. They had therefore only reſt for twenty years, and then comes the ſecond perſecution, in which many Chriſtians (k) were exiled, and ſome ſuffered martyrdom; " for
" even Heathen writers," ſaith Euſebius, " mention
" τὸν διωγμὸν, καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ μαρτύρια, the perſecutions,
" and the martyrdoms of our men (l)." And in his Chronicon he ſaith, " That Brutus, in his hiſtory,
" affirms, that πολλοὶ χριστιανῶν ἐμαρτύρησαν καθὰ Δομιτιανὸν;
" many Chriſtians ſuffered martyrdom under Domi-
" tian." Ten years after the end of this perſecution, comes on a third perſecution under Trajan,
" in which," ſaith Euſebius (m), " ſo great and hea" vy was the perſecution in moſt places, that Pliny,
" one of the celebrated preſidents of the provinces,
" being moved with the multitude of the martyrs,
" writ to the Emperor concerning the multitude of
" the martyrs that had ſuffered, and received this
" anſwer from him, that they ſhould not be inqui" red after, but only puniſhed as they fell into their " hands. And that though hereupon the open per-
" ſecutions ceaſed, yet in divers provinces they con" tinued, and exerciſed many of the Chriſtians with
" divers kinds of martyrdom (n)."

In the 17th year of Trajan the Jews in Meſopotamia rebel, and many myriads of them periſh. In the 2d of Hadrian they rebel again, and overcome. In the 17th of Hadrian, Barchochebas ſet up for their Meſſiah, and drew an infinite multitude of Jews after him. Now, all theſe, and eſpecially the laſt, were ſevere perſecutors of the Chriſtians of thoſe places. For Juſtin Martyr (o) oft informs us,
" that, even after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they " retained ſtill the ſame hatred to the Chriſtians,
" and cut them off where-ever they had power and
" opportunity;" and in the days of Barchochebas,
" put thoſe Chriſtians to exquiſite torments who " would not deny Chriſt." And could theſe be the times of quiet and ſafety to the Chriſtians from their perſecutors? and of proſperous and peaceable days for the public worſhip and ſervice of God? Is this the εὐαγγέλιον, goſpel-promiſe of a reſt and ſabbatiſm to the people of God? the reward which it is juſt with God to render them for all their ſufferings for his ſake? 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. See Dr Hammond on that place.

To come then to the true import of this phraſe, let it be noted, that there is a double reſt mentioned in this and the former chapters, viz.

1. The reſt promiſed to the Jews in the land of Canaan, chap. 3. 11. and this, ſaith the apoſtle, could not be the reſt of God: for if Joſhua had given them (ſuch) reſt, David could not have ſpoken of another day, ver. 8. Why not? ſaith Mr Clerc. Anſ. Becauſe then, by entering into that, they would have already entered into the reſt of God.

2. A reſt after the example of God ceaſing from his labours, when he had finiſhed the creation, which is the reſt of the bleſſed that die in the Lord, ἵνα ἀναπαύσωνται ἐκ τῶν κόπων αὐτῶν, that they may reſt from their labours, Rev. 14. 13. And that this is the reſt which the apoſtle now begins to ſpeak of, is evident from theſe words, ver. 10. He that is entered into reſt, he hath alſo ceaſed from his own works, as God did from his; for what can we underſtand by reſting from his own works, but, as the fathers (p) do interpret it, τῶν διωγμῶν, τῶν πειρασμῶν, τῶν θλίψεων, from his perſecutions, temptations, and afflictions, to which he is obnoxious in this preſent world? The phraſe ſeems plainly to be taken from Iſ. 57. 1. where it is ſaid of the righteous taken away from the evil to come, They ſhall enter into peace, they ſhall reſt in their beds. Of this reſt, that of Canaan, and the ſabbatiſm there obſerved, were a type, as the Jews themſelves inform us; and therefore it ſeems reaſonable to interpret theſe words agreeably to that ſenſe.

Ver. 7. [a] Here Mr le Clerc ſpeaks thus: "I ſay "again, There is no mention in the pſalmiſt of "any future reſt?" which, if true, there is no ſenſe in the apoſtle's words, nor any ſtrength in his argument; for it doth evidently run thus, There muſt be a reſt to the people of God, beſides, i. e. ſucceeding that which Joſhua procured them in the land of Canaan; becauſe the pſalmiſt, ſo long after their reſt in Canaan, makes mention of a future reſt: ſo the apoſtle. "There is no mention in the apoſtle of a future "reſt," ſaith Mr le Clerc. He had ſpoken in one place of the reſt of God, ſaith the apoſtle, ver. 4. and he ſpeaks again ἐν τούτῳ, in this place of the pſalmiſt, of this reſt, ver. 5. into which unbelievers not entering, in this paſſage of David, he again τινὰ ὁρίζει ἡμέραν, ſets or defines a certain day, by ſaying to them, who lived ſo long after theſe unbelievers miſcarried, To-day if you will hear his voice, (and ſo enjoy this reſt), chap. 3. 18. 19. harden not your hearts; ſpeaking there of a reſt not already enjoyed, but hereafter to be enjoyed by them, and ſo not of the reſt procured to them by Joſhua: εἰ γὰρ, for if Joſhua had given them the reſt called the reſt of God, David would not have here ſpoken of another day of reſt; but having done ſo, ἄρα, certo utique, we conclude, there remains yet a reſt to be enjoyed by the people of God.

Ver. 8. [b] Εἰ γὰρ Ἰησοῦς, for if Joſhua.] For explication of the apoſtle's argument, here let it be noted, that all the Greek commentators on this place concur in this, that the apoſtle ſpeaketh of a threefold reſt.

1. Of the reſt of God, mentioned Gen. 2. 2. in theſe words, And God reſted on the ſeventh day from all his works that he had done. Which reſt, ſay the ancients, was "the ſymbol of the reſt of the "juſt from all their labours." So Irenæus (q) ſaith, "The ſeventh day, which was ſanctified, and in "which God reſted from all his works, is the true "ſabbath of the juſt in which they ſhall do no earth-"ly labour:" And Origen ſaith (r), "that Cel-"ſus underſtood not the myſtery of the ſeventh "day, and the reſt of God, in which all that had "done their work in ſix, and had left nothing un-"done which belonged to them, ſhould feaſt with "God, aſcending to the viſion of him, and in that "to the general feſtivity of the juſt and bleſſed." And again, (s) "If we farther inquire which are "the true ſabbaths, we ſhall find that the obſer-"vation of the true ſabbath reaches beyond the "world; the true ſabbath in which God will reſt "from all his works, being the world to come, then "when all grief, ſorrow, and ſighing ſhall fly a-"way, and God ſhall be all in all."

2. Of the reſt of the Jews in Canaan: which is the reſt God ſware the murmuring and unbelieving Jews ſhould not enjoy, perhaps as well in the ſpiritual ſenſe, as in the natural. For the Jews themſelves repreſent their ſin, as that in which they made bold, (t) ψευδολογίαν καλλιερίσαν τῷ Θεῷ, to charge God with a lie And the Jeruſalem Targum ſaith, (u) God threatened to remember it in the day of judgment. In Midraſh Tillim, an evil tongue is ſaid to be worſe than idolatry: and this is proved from what theſe rebels ſpake againſt God, דין דיליה, the ſentence of judgment being paſſed upon them for their evil words, Numb. 14. 28. Now, idolatry is ſtill reckoned by them a ſin excluſive from the heavenly Canaan. "They ſhall not enter into the reſt "of the houſe of my ſanctuary," ſaith the Chaldee, on Pſalm 95. 11. However, thoſe Jews who entered into Canaan, when they were to have reſt from all their enemies round about, ſo as to dwell ſafely, Deut. 12. 9. 10. did ſo far diſobey the voice of the Lord, that he ſaid, he would not drive their enemies out from before them, but would leave them to be as thorns in their ſides, and pricks in their eyes, to vex them in the land where they dwelt, Judg. 2. 2, 3. Joſh. 23. 13. Numb. 33. 55. So that the Jews themſelves expected a farther completion of that promiſe, in the times of the Meſſiah, as we learn from thoſe words of Zacharias the father of the Baptiſt, Bleſſed be the God of Iſrael, who hath viſited, and redeemed his people, and hath raiſed up a mighty ſalvation for us in the houſe of his ſervant David, as he ſpake by the mouth of his holy prophets which have been ſince the world began, that we ſhould be ſaved from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate us: that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear, Luke 1. 68. 74. And hence the apoſtle here concludes, that Joſhua gave them not the reſt, emphatically ſtyled, The reſt of God, as reſembling his reſt from all his works, when he had finiſhed the world; and ſo there muſt be yet another reſt remaining to the people of God, as it follows, ver. 9.

Ver. 9. A reſt, σαββατισμὸς.] The apoſtle, by thus changing the word ἀνάπαυσις, reſt, into ſabbatiſm, and by comparing of this ſabbatiſm with the reſt of God on the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, clearly leads us to the interpretation of all the ancient Chriſtians, that our glorious and complete reſt hereafter with God, is that of which God's reſting on the ſeventh day was a ſymbol; and to the ſpiritual ſabbath, of which the Jewiſh doctors ſpeak ſo generally, as the great thing ſignified by their ſabbath; as when they ſay, (x) "The ſabbath was given to be רומא של העולם הבא "the world to come. The ſabbath-day, what is it? "(y) A figure of the land of the living, to wit, of "the world, or age to come, the age of ſouls, the "age of conſolations." Thus in their deſcants upon the 92d pſalm, which bears this title both in the Hebrew and the Greek, a ſong ליום השבת, εἰς τὴν ἡμέραν τῶν σαββάτων, upon the ſabbath-day, they ſay, (z) "This is the age to come, כולו שבת, "which is all ſabbath." The pſalmiſt, ſaith R. Solomon Jarchi in locum, "ſpeaks of the world to "come, which is all ſabbath." "A pſalm upon the "ſabbath-day," ſaith R. Eliezer, cap. 19. p. 42. that is, "upon the day which is all ſabbath, and "reſt, in the life of the world to come." And again, cap. 18. p. 41. "The bleſſed Lord created ſeven worlds, (i. e. ages), but one of them is all ſabbath, and reſt in life eternal:" where he refers to their common opinion, that the world ſhould continue ſix thouſand years, and then a perpetual ſabbath ſhould begin, typified by God's reſting the ſeventh day, and bleſſing it. So Bereſchith Rabba: "If we expound the ſeventh day of the ſeven thouſand years, which is the world to come, the expoſition is, And he bleſſed; becauſe that in the "ſeven thouſand all ſouls ſhall be bound in the "bundle of life; for there ſhall be there the augmentation of the Holy Ghoſt, wherein we ſhall "delight ourſelves. And ſo our Rabbins, of bleſſed memory, have ſaid in their commentaries, "God bleſſed the ſeventh day, the holy God "bleſſed the world to come, which beginneth in "the ſeven thouſand of years." (a) Philo is very copious in this allegory, who diſputing againſt thoſe, who, having learned that the written laws were σύμβολα νοητῶν πραγμάτων, ſymbols of intellectual things, did upon that account neglect them, ſaith, "that "though the ſeventh day was a document of the "power of God, and of the reſt of the creature: "yet was not the outward reſt to be caſt off." And again, It is fitly ſaid, δι' ὑπονοιῶν, by allegories, or "figurative expreſſions, the ſabbaths of the land "ſhall be meat for you, Lev. 25. 6. (b) For reſt "in God producing the greateſt good, peace, ſecure from war, is only that which truly nourisheth, and is to be enjoyed with pleaſure." And a third time, (c) "This is the reaſon of the ſeventh "day, or the ſeptenary, i. e. of the ſoul reſting in "God, and performing no more mortal works."

Ver. 12. ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, the word of God.] The apoſtle ſeems not to ſpeak here of the eſſential Word of God, the ſecond perſon of the Trinity. 1. Becauſe St Paul, in all his writings, never applies this phraſe to our Lord Chriſt, it being peculiar to St John. 2. The apoſtle muſt have very abruptly ſpoken here of him, under this metaphor, of whom nothing went before; but very appoſitely of the goſpel, to which theſe attributes do well agree. For, 1*ſt*, The word is quick and vital, not only promi-ſing life to the obedient, but threatening death to the diſobedient, from the living God, who can quickly execute it, chap. 3. 12. 2*dly*, It is powerful, being the power of God for the deſtruction of ſtrong holds, and every thing that exalts itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, 2 Cor. 10. 4. 7. 3*dly*, It is ſharper than a two-edged ſword, and piercing even to the dividing aſunder of the ſoul and ſpirit, the joints and the marrow; ſlaying Ananias and Sapphira, and delivering up others to Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, 1 Cor. 5. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 20. It is, 4*thly*, A diſcerner of the thoughts and intentions of the heart, there being then a gift of diſcerning ſpirits, attending the preachers of it, by which they judged and diſcerned of them; and ſo the ſecrets of their hearts were made manifeſt, 1 Cor. 14. 24. 25. And, which makes this extremely pertinent to the preſent exhortation, all this was very viſible in the inſtance of the unbelievers here mentioned, to terrify the Jews from falling by the ſame example of unbelief. For, 1. The word of threatening was ſo quick upon thoſe ſpies, who brought up the evil report upon the land, that they died immediately by the hand of God, or by the plague before the Lord, Numb. 14. 37. And as for the reſt of the unbelievers, they were conſumed, ſaith Moſes, by God's anger, and by his wrath were troubled: they were carried away as with a flood; they vaniſhed as a dream, or as the morning-graſs, which in the evening is cut down, and withereth, Pſal. 90. 5. 6. And thus they found the weight of that threat, Γνώσεσθε τὸν θυμὸν τῆς ὀργῆς μου, Ye ſhall know the vehemency of my wrath, Numb. 16. 34. They were alſo thus puniſhed for the evil intentions of their hearts; for, ſaith St Stephen, in their hearts they turned back into Egypt, Acts 7. 30. So that by the word of God, I am inclined to underſtand his threats denounced againſt unbelievers, Numb. 14. Pſal. 95. 11. It alſo may deſerve to be noted, that Philo, lib. de cherub. p. 86. G. aſcribes moſt of theſe epithets to the λόγος, ſaying, "The flaming ſword "was a ſymbol of the Word, eſpecially of the firſt "cauſe, ἐξυκινήτατον γὰρ καὶ θερμὸν ὁ λόγος, for his word "is quick and fervent." And again, (d) "God," ſaith he, "whetting his ſword, the diſſector of all "things, divides the inform eſſence of all things, "and cuts them in the middle."

Ver. 13. ᵇ Πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, to whom we muſt render an account.] So Matth. 12. 36. Of every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, ἀποδώσουσι λόγον, they ſhall give an account in the day of judgment. Matth. 18. 23. The kingdom of heaven is like to a certain king, who would συνᾶραι λόγον, make up an account with his ſervants. Luke 16. 2. Ἀπόδος λόγον, give up an account of thy ſtewardſhip. Rom. 14. 12. Every one λόγον δώσει τῷ Θεῷ, ſhall give an account of himſelf to God. Phil. 4. 17. I deſire fruit that may abound εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν, to your account. Heb. 13. 17. ὡς λόγον ἀποδώσοντες, as they that muſt give an account. 1 Pet. 3. 15. Being always ready to give to every one that aſks you λόγον, an account of the hope that is in you. And chap. 4. 5. Οἱ ἀποδώσουσι λόγον, who ſhall give an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and dead.

Ver. 16. ⁱ To the throne of God.] The Jews ſay, God hath a double throne, one of judgment, and the other of mercy; and when he beholds the world obnoxious to condemnation, he riſes from his throne of judgment, and places himſelf on that of mercy. This throne of mercy is our bleſſed Jeſus, ſtyled by this apoſtle, ἱλαστήριον, the true propitiatory, or mercy-ſeat: by this high prieſt and interceſſor muſt we come unto God, he being able to ſave to the utmoſt, them that come unto God by him, chap. 7. 25.

Note alſo, That ſome great men think, the reſt and ſabbatiſm diſcourſed of, chap. 3. 4. refers to the millennium, or the time of the converſion of the Jewiſh nation, and the new heavens and new earth, then promiſed: but I am not able to aſſent to that opinion, for this reaſon, that the apoſtle writes to the believing Jews of the preſent age, warning them, that there be not in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, and exhorting them to continue unto the end in faith, chap. 3. 13. 44. that ſo they might not fail of this reſt of God; and to fear, leſt a promiſe being made of entering into this reſt, any of them ſhould fall ſhort of it, chap. 4. 1. 2. And again, ver. 11. Let us give diligence to enter into this reſt, that we fall not by the ſame example of unbelief. Now, theſe exhortations could not properly be directed to the believing Jews of that age, concerning the millennium, or the glorious times which were to happen at the converſion of the Jewiſh nation, they being to die 1700 years before that converſion, which is not yet accompliſhed, and before thoſe glorious days, which are not yet come; for what advantage, in reference to that, could they receive by this diligence, who were to die ſo long before it happened, and being once in heaven or paradiſe, could neither expect nor deſire to come down thence to be partakers of any enjoyments, or better company here on earth? But theſe exhortations are very properly directed to them, to take care they fail not of their reſt in the celeſtial Canaan, typified by their reſt in the earthly Canaan, the time when they ſhould reſt with God, ſaith Origen, "aſcending to the viſion of him, the reſt "of ſouls in the land of the living, the reſt in the "life and the world to come, and in life eternal," ſee note on ver. 8. 10. Seeing theſe bleſſings only can belong to, and at the time of retribution will only be conferred upon them who uſe this diligence. And hitherto the apoſtle ſeems plainly to refer it, when he ſpeaks of ſo great ſalvation, chap. 2. 3.; of bringing many ſons to glory, ver. 10.; of their being partakers κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου, of an heavenly calling, chap. 3. 1. The hope and confidence of which he exhorts them to hold faſt unto the end, ver. 6. and then immediately begins his diſcourſe of this reſt.

CHAP. V.

LET us come, ſaith he, to God's throne of grace with freedom, as having there ſuch an high prieſt in whom are all things by way of excellency to be found, for which the Levitical prieſthood was ordained, and repaired to; as having,

1. A better prieſthood, viz. after the order of Melchiſedec, chap. 7.
2. A better conſecration to it, viz. by an oath.
3. A better tabernacle in which he miniſters.
4. A better ſacrifice offered there.
5. A better covenant eſtabliſhed in his blood.

Ver. 1. For every high prieſt taken from among men, is ordained for (the ſervice of) men in things [a] pertaining to (the worſhip and propitiation of) God, that he may offer both [b] gifts and ſacrifices for ſins:

2. (And he is one) who can have compaſſion [c] on the ignorant, and on them that are out of (Gr. err from) the way, (offering willingly, and interceding affectionately on their behalf); for that he himſelf alſo is compaſſed with (the like) infirmity:

3. And by reaſon hereof (of which infirmities) he ought (by God's command, and from the nature of the thing), as for the people, ſo alſo [d] for himſelf, to offer (ſacrifices) for ſins.

4. And [e] no man taketh this honour to himſelf, but he (only enjoys it) who is called of God, as was Aaron, (and his poſterity.)

5. (And) ſo alſo (was it with our Lord) Chriſt, (for he) glorified not himſelf, to be made an high prieſt, but he (appointed him to be ſo) who ſaid unto him, Thou art my Son, [f] to-day have I begotten thee.

6. As he ſaith alſo (of him) in another place, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec; (as being raiſed up to appear for ever in the heavens, and there officiate as a prieſt for us).

7. Who in the days of his (continuance in the) fleſh, when he had offered up (Gr. offering up) prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong cryings and tears, to him that was able to ſave him from death, and was (Gr. being) [g] heard, [h] in that he feared; (and being heard ſo far as to obtain deliverance from his fears, which he did by an angel ſent to ſtrengthen him, Luke 22. 43.);

8. Though he were a ſon, yet learned he (the difficulty of) obedience (to death) by the things which he ſuffered; (i. e. by the agonies and terrors which he ſuffered at the apprehenſion and approach of the death he was to ſuffer, and ſo was the more fitted to be to us a compaſſionate high prieſt, under our ſufferings for his ſake):

9. And being (by theſe ſufferings) [i] made perfect, (τελειωθεὶς, conſecrated to his prieſthood), he became the author of eternal ſalvation to all them that obey him;

10. (Being) called (or conſtituted) of God an high prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec, (i. e. for ever.)

11. Of whom (i. e. whoſe prieſthood) we have many things to ſay, and (thoſe) [k] hard to be uttered, (or explained, not from the nature of the things themſelves, but) ſeeing (ἐπεὶ, becauſe) ye are dull of hearing.

12. For when for the time (you have profeſſed the faith) you ought to (have been able to) be teachers (of it to others), you have need that one teach you again which be the [l] firſt principles of the oracles of God; and are become ſuch as have need of milk, (the food of babes), and not of ſtrong meat, (the food of men).

13. For every one that uſeth milk, is (as yet) unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs; for he is (but) a babe (in Chriſt, 1 Cor. 3. 2. 14. 20. Gal. 4. 19. Eph. 4. 14.)

14. But ſtrong meat belongeth to them (only) [m] who are of full age, (i. e. perfect men), even (to) thoſe who, by reaſon of uſe, have their ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern both good and evil.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, In things pertaining to God.] To procure "and perform "thoſe things which relate to the worſhip and the "propitiation of the Deity. So Crellius."

Ibid.

Ibid. [b] Δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας, gifts and ſacrifices.] Both theſe may relate to ſacrifices for ſin; for not only peace-offerings, but gifts of any kind are called חקרבנות, δῶρα, Matth. 5. 23. and מנחה is by the ſeventy interpreters often rendered θυσία, Gen. 4. 3. 5. Exod. 29. 41. 39. 9. 40. 26. Levit. and Numbers, centies.

Ver. 2. [c] Τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις.] He refers to the ſins which go under the names of אשם וחטאת; for the word חטאת belongs properly to the thing, in doing which we err from the way; and an expiatory ſacrifice was therefore required from him that did ſo, becauſe he knew שחטא ושגג כורך, that he had erred and gone from the way: but אשם was a ſin committed out of ignorance of the command of God: So Abarbinel. For ſins committed ἑκουσίως, wittingly, and with an high hand, or from a will ſet in oppoſition to the law of God, there was no ſacrifice appointed by the law: and to this the apoſtle alludes, chap. 10. 26. ſaying, To them that ſin wilfully there remains no more ſacrifice for ſin.

Ver. 3. [d] Περὶ ἑαυτοῦ, for himſelf.] Here Grotius notes, that this being ſpoken generally of every prieſt taken from among men, Chriſt alſo muſt have offered for himſelf a ſacrifice for ſin, i. e. that he might be delivered from thoſe ſorrows which were the puniſhment of ſin, and were inflicted on him upon occaſion of our ſins. But in this he ſeems guilty of great and manifold miſtakes: for, 1. The apoſtle plainly ſpeaks of the ſinful infirmities of theſe prieſts, who therefore were to offer for their own ſin, chap. 7. 27. Whereas, of Chriſt, he declares, That though he was in all other things made like to us, yet χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without ſin, chap. 4. 15. That he offered himſelf to God a Lamb without ſpot, chap. 9. 14. That being thus holy, free from evil, undefiled, and ſeparate from ſinners, he needed not, upon a day, as thoſe high prieſts, to offer up ſacrifice firſt for his own ſins, and then for the people's, chap. 7. 26. 27. 2. He was not, nor could he, after he became our ſurety, be delivered from thoſe ſorrows, which were the puniſhment of our ſins, he being, as our expiatory ſacrifice, not only on occaſion of our ſins, but in our ſtead, to bear the puniſhment of our iniquity.

Ver. 4. [e] Καὶ οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις, no man,] i. e. According to the law, ſay moſt interpreters; but I ſee no neceſſity of this limitation, it being true that no man can promiſe to himſelf God will accept his offerings, who hath no commiſſion from God to make ſuch offerings; whence doth ariſe a good argument, to ſhew that ſacrifices are of divine, and not of human inſtitution only.

Ver. 5. [f] This day.] I have ſhewed, note on chap. 2. 10. that Chriſt was by his death conſecrated to his prieſthood; whence it muſt follow, that he could not exerciſe his ſacerdotal function till after death; and this the apoſtle ſheweth here, by ſaying, He was made an high prieſt by the Father, ſaying, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; for that this relates unto the reſurrection of our Lord, is evident, becauſe we find the ſame apoſtle proving his reſurrection from theſe words, Acts 13. 33. which he could not have done, had they not been intended as a prediction of his reſurrection.

Ver. 7. [g] Εἰσακουσθείς, he was heard;] i. e. delivered from his fear. So the word doth, and muſt ſignify, when it relates to prayer for deliverance from evils. So Pſal. 22. 21. Σῶσόν με, Save me from the mouth of the lion, καὶ ἀπὸ κεράτων μονοκερώτων, and hear me from the horns of the unicorn. Pſal. 34. 6. This poor man cried, καὶ εἰσήκουσεν αὐτοῦ, and the Lord heard him, and ſaved him out of all his troubles. And ver. 4. I ſought the Lord, καὶ εἰσήκουσε, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears. Pſal. 55. 2. Attend unto me, καὶ εἰσάκουσόν μου, and hear me, ἀπὸ φωνῆς ἐχθροῦ, καὶ ἀπὸ θλίψεως ἁμαρτωλοῦ, from the voice of the enemy, and from the vexation of the wicked. And ver. 16. I cried to the Lord, and the Lord εἰσήκουσέ μου, heard me. ver. 18. He delivered my life ἀπὸ τῶν ἐγγιζόντων μοι, from thoſe that drew nigh to me. Ecclus 51. 10. 11. εἰσηκούσθη ἡ δέησις μου, My prayer was heard, for thou ſavedſt me from deſtruction. See Pſal. 31. 7.

Ibid. [h] Ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, from his fear.] Some would have this rendered ſo, he was heard by reaſon of his reverence of God; but it is truly rendered, from his fear; and ſo the word continually ſignifies both in the Old and the New Teſtament, and when it is uſed, as it very often is, by Philo. So Joſh. 22. 24. ὑπὲρ εὐλαβείας ἐποιήσαμεν τοῦτο, we did this out of fear; and Wiſd. 17. 8. καταγέλαστοι εὐλάβειαν ἐποίουν, they were affected with a ridiculous fear; Heb. 12. 28. Let us ſerve God acceptably, μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας, with reverence and godly fear; Acts 23. 10. εὐλαβηθεὶς ὁ χιλιάρχος, the captain fearing; Heb. 11. 7. Noah εὐλαβηθείς, fearing, prepared an ark. So Joſephus ſaith of the king, Eſther's huſband, That "he held forth his "ſceptre, εὐλαβείας αὐτὸν ἀπαλλύων, delivering her from "her fear." And, in the Septuagint, εὐλαβεῖσθαι ἀπὸ προσώπου Κυρίου, is to fear before God, Exod. 3. 6. Jer. 5. 22. Hab. 2. 20. Zeph. 1. 7. 3. 13. Zech. 2. 13.; and εὐλαβεῖσθαι ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, is to fear before man, or be afraid of men, 1 Sam. 18. 15. Job. 19. 29. Iſ. 57. 11. Jer. 22. 25. Ecclus 7. 7. This ſenſe alſo the particle ἀπὸ doth require, which rarely doth import the meritorious cauſe: his prayers and tears alſo do expreſs the greatneſs of his fears; and laſtly, The ſcope of the apoſtle requires this ſenſe, he being here repreſenting our Lord as one of like paſſions with us, that he might ſhew he was a merciful high prieſt. This fear he became ſubject to, ſay Grotius and the fathers, becauſe the divinity for a ſeaſon, as it were, withdrew its influence from the human nature, ᾧ γὰρ τὴν ἀνθρωπότητα τοῦτο παθεῖν ὁ θεὸς συνεχώρησεν, "for the Deity permitted the humanity thus to "ſuffer," ſaith Theodoret. And this, doubtleſs, all thoſe fathers intended, who followed that reading, chap. 2. 9. that he taſted death for every man, χωρὶς θεοῦ; for that this was no depravation of the Neſtorians, as Oecumenius and Theophylact fancied, is evident from this, that his words are thus cited by Origen (e), and by St Ambroſe (f), who lived before Neſtorius.

Ver. 8. Ἔμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε τὴν ὑπακοήν,] He learned obedience from the things that he ſuffered.

Ibid. Ἔμαθεν ὑπακοήν, he learned obedience by the things that he ſuffered.] Theſe words I have expounded thus, He learned (the difficulty of) obedience (to the death) by the things that he ſuffered. But I conceive they may be alſo rendered, and expounded thus, ver. 7. He was heard and delivered from his fears, to wit, from thoſe fears which threw him into an agony in the garden, and againſt which an angel was ſent from heaven to comfort him, ver. 8. καίπερ ὢν υἱὸς, "though being a Son (even the proper "Son of God)," he taught us obedience by the things that he ſuffered, or by the death he ſuffered, in obedience to the will, and commandment of his Father, John 10. 18.: for as the Hebrew Lamed ſignifies both to learn, and to teach, and is by the Septuagint above twenty times rendered διδάσκειν to teach, and as the word learn in our language ſignifies alſo to teach, as in theſe words of the old tranſlation, Pſal. 119. 66. Oh learn me underſtanding and knowledge; ſo alſo, ſaith Euſtathius (g), the word μανθάνω is μίαν λέξιν, a word that ſignifies both to teach, and to be taught, and is ſo uſed by the authors that lived after Homer's time, and by the ſophiſters.

Ver. 9. [1] Τελειωθείς, made perfect.] That this word is here taken in the notion of conſecration, may appear, ſaith the Reverend Dr Hammond, by the words following; as the application of it, being pronounced, or declared an high prieſt, which belongs to Chriſt after his reſurrection, and not before, that being the time when he entered into his heavenly tabernacle, living there for ever to appear before God, and exercile that function in his preſence for us; and ſo he became an high prieſt for ever.

Ver. 11. [k] Δυσερμήνευτος, hard to be uttered.] See here what are St Paul's δυσνοήτα, things hard to be underſtood, 2 Pet. 3. 16. viz. thoſe things which were not ſo in themſelves, or through the difficulty of the matter revealed, but through the imbecillity and weakneſs of them to whom they were ſpoken.

Ver. 12. [l] Στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ θεοῦ, the firſt principles of the oracles of God.] It is the deſcant of all the ancient commentators (h) on this place, that by theſe firſt principles the apoſtle underſtands the "humanity of Chriſt, becauſe the preachers of the "goſpel ſpake of that only, to them who were not "yet perfect in the faith." And yet this ſeemeth neither to be true, nor ſafe. Not true, becauſe the apoſtle had in the 1ſt and 2d chapters of this epiſtle, as all theſe commentators teach, ſpoken to thoſe rude Jews of the Deity of Chriſt; and becauſe he mentions not Chriſt's human nature among the principles of the doctrines of Chriſt, reckoned up, chap. 6. 1. 2. Not ſafe, becauſe it ſeems to intimate, that Chriſtians might be taught the faith before they had knowledge of the divinity of Chriſt, and conſequently that this was no neceſſary part of Chriſtian faith.

Note, ſecondly, That hence we may fairly gueſs who were, in the epiſtles to St Timothy, the teachers of the law, who neither underſtood what they ſaid, nor whereof they affirmed, 1 Tim. 1. 7.; and the ἑτεροδιδασκαλοι, the falſe teachers, who were proud, knowing nothing, but doting about queſtions, and ſtrifes of words; men of corrupt minds, and deſtitute of the truth, chap. 5. 3. 4. 5. and who they were who were always learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 7. viz. not the Gnoſtics, but, in all likelihood, the Jewiſh falſe teachers, and ſuch as were perverted by them.

Note, thirdly, That this ſeems not to be ſpoken of all the Jews, but only of the greateſt part of them; that therefore which is ſpoken of the Deity of Chriſt, the Melchiſedecian prieſthood, the virtue of Chriſt's prieſthood, belonged to the more perfect, who were not to be debarred of the knowledge of theſe things, by reaſon of the imbecillity of their brethren.

to be taken from the digeſtion of the ſtomach; that which is light of digeſtion, and needs not much concoction, as ſolid food, and ſtrong meat doth, being here repreſented by the name of milk; and ſo in reference to the judgment, that which can eaſily be learned, and apprehended aright, and in which we are in no great danger of miſtaking, as are the firſt principles of religion, mentioned chap. 6. is compared to milk; but that we cannot eaſily diſcern, and about which we are ſubject to miſtakes, and wrong conceptions, as the things mentioned in the former note, were to the Jews, is called ſtrong meat.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. THerefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Chriſt, (though your ſmall proficiency in them makes it ſeem almoſt neceſſary to diſcourſe anew of them to you), [a] let us go on unto perfection, (i. e. to the doctrines which will render you perfect men in the knowledge of Chriſt); not laying again the foundation of (Chriſtianity in the doctrines of) repentance from dead works, (i. e. from works deſerving death, Rom. 6. 23. 8. 13.), and of faith towards God,

2. (And) of the [b] doctrine of baptiſms, (that of water and of the Spirit, by which they that repent and believe, are initiated into the church of Chriſt), and [c] of laying on of hands (after baptiſm, for the receiving of the Holy Ghoſt), and of the reſurrection of the dead, and [d] of eternal judgment; (the great motives to engage all Chriſtians herein to exerciſe themſelves, to have always conſciences void of offence towards God, and towards all men, Acts 34. 15. 16.)

3. [e] And this will we do, if God permit.

4. (I ſay, let us not attempt wholly to lay again the foundation of Chriſtianity); for it is impoſſible for thoſe who were once [f] enlightened (in baptiſm), and [g] have taſted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, (ſent down from heaven, and conferred on them by the impoſition of hands),

5. And have [h] taſted the good word of God, (preached among them with ſuch variety of tongues, and confirmed by ſo many miracles), and (have ſeen, and felt) [i] the powers of the world to come;

6. If they ſhall fall away (from Chriſtianity), [k] to renew them again to repentance: ſeeing they (by ſo doing) crucify to themſelves (or by themſelves) the Son of God afreſh, and put him to an open ſhame.

7. For (as) the earth which drinketh in the rain which cometh oft (from heaven) upon it, and (ſo) brings forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreſſed, receiveth (farther) bleſſing from God, (ſo is it with them who become fruitful under the dew and ſhowers of divine grace):

8. But that (earth) which (being thus dreſſed and watered) beareth (only) thorns and briers, is [l] rejected, and nigh unto curſing; whoſe end is to be burnt.

9. But, beloved, we are perſuaded better things of you, and things that accompany ſalvation, though we thus ſpeak (to warn you of the danger of falling off from the Chriſtian faith).

10. For (if you be not wanting to yourſelves) God is not unrighteous to forget [m] your work (of faith), and (your) labour of love, which you have ſhewed to his name, in that you have miniſtered to the (neceſſities of the) ſaints, and (yet) do miniſter (to them.)

11. And we deſire (ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δὲ, we deſire therefore) that every one of you do ſhew the ſame diligence (which hitherto you have done), to the (intent that you may retain a) full aſſurance of hope to the end:

12. [n] That ye be not ſlothful (Gr. may not be ſlothful), but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit-(ed) the promiſes.

13. For when God (upon his faith in offering his ſon Iſaac) made a promiſe to Abraham, [o] becauſe he could ſwear by no (one) greater, he ſware by himſelf,

14. Saying, Surely, bleſſing, I will bleſs thee, and multiplying, I will multiply thee.

15. And ſo (accordingly) after he had patiently endured, he obtained the [p] promiſe (of a ſeed multiplied greatly to him, Gen. 22. 17.)

16. (God confirming his faith in the promiſes made to him after the manner of men): for men verily ſwear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them an [q] end of all ſtrife, (or contradiction.)

17. Wherein (ἐν ᾧ, in which thing accordingly) God (being) willing more abundantly to ſhew (not only to Abraham, but alſo) to the heirs of promiſe the immutability of his counſel, confirmed it by an oath:

18. That by two immutable things, in which it was impoſſible for God to lie, (viz. his promiſe and his oath), we might have a ſtrong conſolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope ſet before us, (who, to eſcape the wrath impendent on the unbelieving Jews, here and hereafter, have fled to the hope of glory ſet before us in Chriſt Jeſus, the lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, to which we are begotten by Chriſt Jeſus, 1 Pet. 1. 3.):

19. Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt (in all the ſtorms and billows of the world), and which [r] entereth into that within (Gr. the inward part of) the vail,

20. Whither

20. Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jeſus, (who is) made an high prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec; (and ſo one that can never die, or miſcarry in his office, but lives for ever, there to appear in the preſence of God for us, chap. 7. 24. 25.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VI.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα, to perfection.] That to be perfected ſignifies to be fully inſtructed in the principles of Chriſtian faith, ſee note on 1 Cor. 2. 6.

Ver. 2. [b] Βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς, the doctrine of baptiſms.] He ſpeaks not of the baptiſm of John, and of Chriſt, for the baptiſm of John was preparatory to repentance, and faith in Chriſt; nor of the baptiſm of martyrdom, that being not ordinarily known to the Jews by that name, but of the double baptiſm, of which the baptiſt ſpake in theſe words, I baptize you with water, but there is one who cometh after me, he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire, Matth. 3. 12.; and of which our Saviour ſpeaks to Nicodemus, ſaying, Except a man be born again of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God, John 3. 5. For this in order follows the doctrine of repentance, and faith in God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Ibid. [c] Ἐπιθέσεως τε χειρῶν, impoſition of hands.] Impoſition of hands was uſed in ordination, healing of the ſick, and abſolution of penitents; but this impoſition of hands was not common to all Chriſtians, nor joined with baptiſm; nor was it to be reckoned among the principles, or initiatory doctrines of the Chriſtian faith. It remains therefore that we underſtand this of the impoſition of the apoſtles hands, uſed after baptiſm for the receiving of the Holy Ghoſt, mentioned, Acts 8. 17. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghoſt. See chap. 19. 6.

Ibid. [d] Καὶ κρίματος αἰωνίου, of eternal judgment.] Hence interpreters obſerve, That the doctrine of Origen, touching the period of the torments of the damned, is here condemned: and indeed the primitive fathers, not Origen himſelf excepted, taught the contrary.

"If we do not the will of Chriſt," ſaith Clemens Romanus (i), δεῖν ἡμᾶς ῥύεσθαι τῆς αἰωνίου κολάσεως, "nothing will deliver us from eternal puniſhment: the black way, in Barnabas (k), is ὁδὸς τοῦ θανάτου αἰωνίου μετὰ τιμωρίας, "the way of eternal death with puniſhment." "The puniſhment of the damned," ſaith Juſtin Martyr (l), is κόλασις καὶ τιμωρία ἐν αἰωνίῳ πυρί. Κόλασις ἀπέραντος, κόλασις αἰώνιος, πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκη, "endleſs "puniſhment, and torment in eternal fire." In Theophylus (m), it is κόλασις αἰώνιος, αἰώνιος τιμωρία, "eternal puniſhment." Irenæus (n), in his ſymbol of faith, makes this one article, That τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς καὶ ἀδίκους καὶ τοὺς αἰώνιον πῦρ πέμψῃ, "Chriſt would ſend the "ungodly and unjuſt into everlaſting fire."

Tertullian (o) declares, Omnes homines aut cruciatui deſtinari aut refrigerio, utroque ſempiterno, "that all men are appointed to eternal torments or "refreſhments. And if any man," ſaith he, "thinks "the wicked are to be conſumed, and not puniſhed, "let him remember, Ignem gehennæ æternum prædicari in pœnam æternam, that hell-fire is ſtyled "eternal, becauſe deſigned for eternal puniſhment;" and thence concludes "their ſubſtance will remain "for ever, whoſe puniſhment doth ſo." So St Cyprian (p) ſaith, Servantur cum corporibus ſuis animæ infinitis cruciatibus ad dolorem; that "the ſouls of "the wicked are kept with their bodies, to be grieved with endleſs torments." Tormentis nec modus ullus aut terminus, "There is no meaſure nor end "of their torment, ſaith Minutius (q)." Laſtly, Origen (r) reckons this among the doctrines defined by the church, That "every ſoul, when it goes "out of this world, ſhall either enjoy the inheri-"tance of eternal life and bliſs, if its deeds have "rendered it fit for life, ſive igni æterno, ac ſuppliciis mancipanda eſt, or, is to be delivered up to "eternal fire and puniſhment, if its ſins have deſerved that ſtate."

Ver. 3. [e] Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, and this will we do, &c.] This verſe by Grotius and Dr Hammond is thus interpreted: We purpoſe ſome other time to inſtruct you farther in theſe rudiments of Chriſtianity, if you do not in the mean time fall from the Chriſtian faith, chap. 2. 1. 3. If there be not in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God, chap. 3. 12. If you fall not after the ſame example of unbelief which your forefathers gave, chap. 4. 11.

Others put this verſe in a parentheſis, and make it to relate to theſe words, ver. 1. Let us go on unto perfection, or to the higher doctrines of Chriſtianity, as God willing we now intend to do. So Acts 18. 21. God willing I will return unto you. I will come to you ſpeedily if God will, 1 Cor. 4. 19. And this interpretation I like beſt.

we learn from the concurrent teſtimonies of Juſtin Martyr (s), Irenæus, and Clemens Alexandrinus (t), which makes it very probable that this phraſe obtained from the beginning of Chriſtianity, and ſo this anſwers to the doctrine of baptiſms, ver. 2.

Ibid. ε Γευσαμένους τε τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, and have taſted of the heavenly gift;] i. e. The Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven, ſtyled by our Saviour, τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ Θεοῦ, the gift of God, John 4. 10. Thus our Saviour diſcourſing of baptiſm by water and the Holy Ghoſt, and of regeneration ἄνωθεν, from above, by virtue of this Spirit, faith, he diſcourſed περὶ τῶν ἐπουρανίων, of heavenly things, John 3. 12. and they who were ſealed with the Spirit of promiſe, Eph. 1. 13. are ſaid to be bleſſed with ſpiritual bleſſings, ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in heavenly things; and this gift was imparted by impoſition of hands, Acts 8. 17. 19. 6.

Ver. 5. ζ Καὶ καλὸν γευσαμένους ῥῆμα, and have taſted the good word of God;] i. e. And have been acquainted with the goſpel, which affords the promiſe of remiſſion of ſins, and of juſtification here, and of a reſurrection to eternal life hereafter, ver. 2. So the promiſe of bringing the children of Iſrael into the land of Canaan, is ſtyled דבר השוב, ῥῆμα καλὸν, a good word, Joſh. 21. 45. 23. 15.; the word of God for bringing his people out of captivity, is ſtyled דברי השוב, my good word, Jer. 29. 10. The words of conſolation which the angel ſpake to Jeruſalem, are טובים דברים, ῥήματα καλὰ, good words, Zech. 1. 13. The promiſe made to God's people of remiſſion of ſins, and peace and truth in the days of the Meſſiah, is הדבר הטוב, a good word. And the prophet ſpeaking of the Meſſiah, ſaith, My heart meditateth a good word, דבר טוב, λόγον ἀγαθὸν, Pſal. 45. 1. This word they ſaw confirmed by the gift of tongues and prophecy, vouchſafed to the firſt preachers of it, and daily experimented in their aſſemblies, 1 Cor. 14. and ſo they could not but be convinced of the truth of it.

Ibid. η Δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the powers of the world to come.] The world to come doth, in the language of the prophets, and of the Jewiſh doctors, ſignify the times of the Meſſiah, who, in the prophet Iſaiah, is called ὁ πατὴρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the father of the world to come. See note on chap. 2. 5. The powers, therefore, of the world to come, according to the ſcripture-idiotiſm, muſt be the external operations of the Holy Ghoſt, viz. the gifts of faith, of healing, of caſting out devils, ἐνεργήματα δυνάμεων, 1 Cor. 12. 8. 9. the working of miracles, or the operations of powers. Or, 2*dly*, This fourth particular may anſwer to the day of judgment, which is the fourth thing mentioned, ver. 2. as the three former ſeem to do to the three other things there mentioned, and then the powers of the world to come may ſignify the powerful perſuaſions the doctrine of a future judgment adminiſters to repentance, and a new life, Acts 17. 30. 31. 2 Cor. 5. 10. 11. though of this import of the phraſe I find no example.

Ver. 6. θ Ἀδύνατον τοὺς πάλιν ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, It is impoſſible to renew theſe to repentance.] For theſe being all the means, internal and external, by which God gave teſtimony to the truth of Chriſtian faith, and the prophetic office and glorious reſurrection of our Lord; they, ſaith the apoſtle, who, after a full experience of them, do of their own accord renounce that faith, cannot be renewed to repentance, becauſe they have already reſiſted all that evidence which God ſaw fit to give men of the truth of that faith, and of this Meſſiah; and ſo they become guilty of that ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which, ſaith our Saviour, ſhall never be forgiven, Matth. 12. 32.

But then the παραπίποντες, men that thus fall away, are not thoſe who lapſe in the times of perſecution, and much leſs thoſe who through the temptations of the fleſh may ſometimes fall into great ſins, for to ſuch the apoſtle grants place for repentance, 2 Cor. 12. 21. and one of theſe he delievers to Satan, for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus, 1 Cor. 5. 5. exhorting his Corinthians, upon his repentance, to receive him into their communion, 2 Cor. 2. 7. 8.; but ſuch as, after theſe experiences of the truth of the Chriſtian faith, have voluntarily renounced it, relapſing either to Heatheniſm or Judaiſm; for they are ſuch as apoſtatize from the living God, chap. 3. 12.; ſuch as fall through unbelief, chap. 4. 11.; ſuch as hold not the profeſſion of the faith, chap. 10. 23.; ſuch as draw back from the faith, ver. 38.

2. This will be farther evident from the deſcription of theſe perſons, they being here ſaid ἀνασταυροῦν ἑαυτοῖς, by themſelves to crucify Chriſt afreſh, and παραδειγματίζειν, to put him to an open ſhame, as one that deſerved the puniſhment which the Jews inflicted on him; and being apoſtate Jews, to crucify Chriſt again.

Ver. 8. ι Ἀδόκιμος, rejected.] It is rejected of the huſbandman, who will ſpend no more labour upon it, but leave it to be ſcorched by the heat, and ſo to be like the heath, which is the emblem of the curſed man, Jer. 17. 5. 6. or like the barren fig-tree which the Lord curſed, ſaying, Never fruit grow on thee more, Matth. 21. 19. Accordingly they on whom the ſhowers of divine grace fall down from heaven, if they bring forth no good fruit, ſhall be ἀδόκιμοι, rejected by God, continue under the curſe of the law, and their end ſhall be deſtruction.

Ver. 10. [n] Τῦ ἔργυ ὑμῶν, your work.] This ſeems to be the ἔργον πίστως, work of faith, mentioned, 1 Theſſ. 1. 3. 2 Theſſ. 1. 11. and joined with ὁ κόπος τῆς ἀγάπης, the labour of love, as here, and which is ſtyled ἔργον ἀγαθὸν, the good work, Phil. 1. 6. Rom. 2. 7.; ſee note on that verſe; the following exhortation being this, that they would continue in the faith to the end, and be imitators of them who through faith and patience did inherit the promiſes.

Ver. 12. [o] Ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ, that ye be not ſlothful;] i. e. God being ſo engaged on his part, to let nothing be wanting which is requiſite to enable you to perſevere, and ſo to enjoy the fruits of your faith in the ſalvation of your ſouls, ſee that ye be not ſlothful, nor faint-hearted, but ſtill continuing the ſame Chriſtian diligence to the end, that ſo you may at laſt enjoy the bleſſings promiſed by this goſpel, and live in an aſſured hope of them, as your father Abraham did.

Ver. 13. [o] Ἐπὶ κατ' οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ὀμόσαι, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater.] So Philo, ὁρᾷς γὰρ ὅτι ὃ καθ' ἑτέρου ὀμνύει ὁ Θεὸς, οὐδὲν γὰρ αὐτῷ κρεῖττον, ἀλλὰ καθ' ἑαυτῦ, thou ſeeſt that God ſweareth not by another, for there is nothing better than he, but by himſelf. Leg. alleg. l. 2. p. 75. D.

Ibid. He ſwears δι' ἑαυτῦ, by himſelf.] It may perhaps be not unworthy of our obſervation, that where God ſaith in the Old Teſtament, I ſwear by myſelf, the Jeruſalem Targum renders this frequently, benimri, by my word, as Exod. 17. 16. Deut. 1. 1. 32. 22. 26.

Ver. 15. [p] Τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, the promiſe.] This cannot be underſtood of Iſaac, the promiſed ſeed, he being not only born, but offered, when God made this promiſe to Abraham; nor can it be ſaid that he inherited the promiſe, becauſe he ſaw it afar off, that being a ſign he did not yet inherit it, or that he did this in his poſterity; for the apoſtle ſaith, he himſelf inherited the promiſes, which is exactly true of the words cited here by the apoſtle, Surely, bleſſing I will bleſs thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee; for the book of Geneſis aſſures us, this promiſe was exactly fulfilled in his life, for the Lord bleſſed him in all things, Gen. 24. 1.; he had a numerous ſeed by his wife Keturah, Gen. 25. to whom he gave gifts, ver. 6.; from Iſhmael aroſe twelve ſons, which were princes of their tribes, ver. 13. 16.; he lived fifteen years after the birth of Jacob and Eſau by Rebekah, of whom the oracle declared, that there were two nations in her womb; for Iſaac was ſixty years old when they were born to him, ver. 23. 26.; he himſelf was born when Abraham was an hundred years old, Gen. 21. 5.; Abraham was an hundred and ſeventy-five years old when he died, Gen. 25. 7.: he therefore lived fifteen years after the birth of Jacob and Eſau, and ninety years after the birth of Iſhmael; and ſo lived to ſee this promiſe verified to him.

Ver. 16. [q] Ἀντιλογίας πέρας, an end of contradiction.] Diodorus Siculus (u) informs us, that the Egyptians ſtyled an oath μεγίστην πίστιν, the greateſt confirmation. It is, ſaith D. Halicarnaſſenſis, τελευταία πίστις, the laſt or utmoſt aſſurance. It is, in the language of Procopius, ὕστατον καὶ ἰσχυρότατον πίστεως τε καὶ ἀληθείας ἐνέχυρον, the laſt and firmeſt pledge of faith and truth. That the apoſtle here ſpeaks of promiſſory oaths, is evident from the occaſion of this diſcourſe, viz. his promiſe made to Abraham. Now, theſe oaths being equally conducing to this good end in all ages, we have juſt reaſon to believe that Chriſtianity allows of them for theſe ends.

Ver. 19. [r] Εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τῦ καταπετάσματος, which entereth into the vail;] which, being the hope of the heavenly manſions typified by the ſanctum ſanctorum, within the veil, carries our expectations thither. The Jews had the higheſt expectations from the ſervice of the high prieſt entering in to the holy of holies; if on the day of expiation he came out alive, "there was great joy, for then they thought "they were accepted (x)." how then may we rejoice in contemplation of that heavenly ſanctuary?

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. (Which order ſure was very excellent, and therefore fit to repreſent the prieſthood of the holy Jeſus, the King of ſaints, and Prince of peace): for this Melchiſedec [a] king of Salem, prieſt of the moſt high God, who met Abraham returning from the ſlaughter of the (four) kings, (mentioned Gen. 14. 9.), and bleſſed him, (ver. 18.);

2. To whom Abraham alſo gave a tenth part of all (the ſpoils taken by him): firſt being by interpretation (of the word Melchiſedec) king of righteouſneſs, and after that alſo (ſtyled) king of Salem, which (by interpretation) is, king of peace; (and being)

3. [b] Without father, (or) without mother (of any prieſtly order), without deſcent (from any of the pedigree of Abraham, ver. 7.), [c] having neither beginning of days (from which his prieſtly office was to commence), nor end of life (in which it terminated); but (being) [d] made like unto the Son (a ſon) of God, abideth a prieſt continually.

4. Now conſider how great this man (Gr. he) was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave [e] the tenth of the ſpoils, (which anciently were given to kings and prieſts, as belonging to God whom they ſerved or repreſented.)

5. And verily they that are of the ſons of Levi, who receive (i. e. they indeed of the ſons of Levi receiving) the office of the prieſthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham; (i. e. they receive tithes only by virtue of the law, and that from them only who come out of the loins of Abraham, as well as they, Numb. 18. 21. 26.):

6. But he [f] whoſe deſcent is not counted from them, (being no kin to Abraham), received tithes of Abraham (himſelf), and bleſſed him who had the promiſes, (that in him ſhould all the families of the earth be bleſſed.)

7. And without all contradiction, (in all ſolemn benedictions, ex officio) the leſs is bleſſed of the better, (and ſo he that bleſſed Abraham muſt be greater than he was.)

8. And here (under the Levitical prieſthood) men that die receive tithes: but there (in the inſtance of Melchiſedec) [g] he (received them), of whom it is witneſſed (Pſal. 110. 4.) that he liveth.

9. And as I may ſo ſay, (the family of) Levi alſo who receiveth tithes, [h] paid tithes in Abraham.

10. For he was yet in the loins of his father (Abraham) when Melchiſedec met him.

11. If therefore [i] perfection (i. e. full expiation of ſins) were (to be obtained) by the Levitical prieſthood, (as it muſt have been had it come by the law, ver. 18. 19.), for [k] under (Gr. about) it the people received the law, what further need was there that another prieſt ſhould ariſe (as the pſalmiſt ſaith) after the order of Melchiſedec, and not be (rather) called (a prieſt) after the order of Aaron?

12. (And yet you ſee this need there was); for the prieſthood being changed, (i. e. tranſlated from the order of Aaron to that of Melchiſedec), there is made of neceſſity a change alſo of the law (concerning prieſthood, ver. 14. or touching prieſts to be repaired to for expiation.)

13. (And this change is ſignified by theſe words, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec); for he (i. e. Chriſt) of whom theſe things (words) are ſpoken, pertaineth to another tribe (than that of Levi), of which (tribe) no man gave attendance at the altar.

14. For it is evident that our Lord (to whom theſe words belong) ſprang out of (the tribe of) Judah; of which tribe Moſes ſpake nothing concerning prieſthood.

15. And it is yet far more evident; (by ſaying) [l] for that (Gr. ti, that) after the ſimilitude of Melchiſedec (not of Aaron, ver. 11.) there ariſeth another prieſt,

16. Who is made (a prieſt), not after the law of a carnal commandment, (relating to men that are fleſh and blood, and ſo infirm and ſubject to mortality; for all fleſh is graſs, Iſ. 40. 6. and therefore muſt be ſucceeded by others), but after the power of an endleſs (or indiſſoluble) life.

17. For (thus) he teſtifieth (by ſaying), Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec.

18. (I ſay, not after the law of a carnal commandment), for there is verily (in theſe words) a diſannulling of the commandment going before (the preceding commandment concerning the Levitical prieſthood and ſacrifices), [m] for the weakneſs (of it as to juſtification), and [n] unprofitableneſs of it (as to the expiation of ſin.)

19. For (thus) [o] the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in [p] of a better hope did; by [q] which we draw nigh to God.

20. [r] And (by ſo much is Jeſus made the mediator of a better covenant) inaſmuch as (his prieſthood, by virtue of which he became this mediator, was) not without an oath, (as was that of the tribe of Levi),

21. For thoſe prieſts were made (ſuch) without an oath: but this with an oath, by him that ſaid unto him, (Pſal. 110. 4.), The Lord ſware, and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec: (Now, where no oath intervenes, God may change his inſtitution, but not after his oath):

22. (I ſay), By ſo much was Jeſus made a ſurety of a better teſtament, (eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, chap. 8. 6.)

23. And (to proceed in the compariſon) they truly were many prieſts (ſucceſſively), becauſe they were not ſuffered to continue by reaſon of death:

24. But this man, (Gr. but he, i. e. Jeſus, ver. 22.), becauſe he continueth (for) ever, hath an unchangeable (high) prieſthood, (which paſſeth not away, and ſo admits of no ſucceſſion to it.)

25. Wherefore he is able alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, (Gr. for ever), that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them, (and by that interceſſion to become the propitiation for their ſins for ever, 1 John 2. 2.)

26. (And

26. (And thus was he an high prieſt ſuited to our condition): for ſuch an high prieſt became us (ſinners), who is holy, (i. e. conſecrated to his office, and ſo holineſs to the Lord, Exod. 28. 36.), [r] harmleſs, (ἄκακος, free from evil in himſelf), undefiled (by the impurities of others), ſeparate from ſinners, (and ſo not liable to any defilement by dwelling among them), and (therefore) made higher than the heavens; (he being aſcended far above the heavens, Eph. 4. 10. and paſſed through the heavens, Heb. 4. 14. into the preſence of God, there to appear for ever for us);

27. (And ſo one) who needeth not daily, as thoſe high prieſts (under the law did), to offer up ſacrifice, firſt for his own ſins, (which he, being free from evil, ver. 26. could not do), and then for (the ſins of) the people: [s] for this (laſt) he did once, when he offered up himſelf.

28. For the law maketh men high prieſts which have infirmity, (ſubjecting them to ſin, and by that to mortality, whence they have need to offer, as well for themſelves as for the people, ver. 27.); but the word of the oath which was ſince the law, (as being in the pſalms written after it), maketh the Son (our high prieſt), who is conſecrated (to this office) for evermore; (he being not ſubject to thoſe infirmities which brought mortality upon others.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VII.

Verſe 1. [a] Βασιλεὺς Σαλὴμ, king of Salem.] They ſeem miſtaken who think this Salem was the ſame with Jeruſalem; for it is plain from this very place, Gen. 14. 15. 16. 17. that Salem was in the way which led from the valley of Damaſcus unto Sodom. St Jerom (y) alſo ſaith, "that he "learned ab eruditiſſimis gentis illius, from the "moſt learned of the Jews, that Salem was not "Jeruſalem, but a town near Scythopolis, which "till then was called Salem:" and it retained its name in our Saviour's days, as appears by the evangeliſt, ſaying, that St John baptized near Salem, John 3. 23. Now, of this Melchiſedec king of Salem let it be noted,

1. That he muſt be a man, not an angel, not the Holy Spirit: for, 1*ſt*, Every high prieſt, ſaith the apoſtle, is taken from among men, chap. 5. 1. 2*dly*, The ſcripture ſtill ſpeaks of him as a man, deſcribing him by his proper name, his kingly dignity, and the city where he dwelt, and by his perſonal actions, proper to a man, his bringing forth bread and wine, and his receiving the tithes of the ſpoils. And, 3*dly*, From theſe words, conſider, πηλίκος ὗτος, what an eminent perſon this Melchiſedec was, to whom Abraham gave the tenth of the ſpoils; things, ſurely, which neither angels nor the Holy Spirit would receive, nor was it neceſſary to prove their dignity. Accordingly Joſephus (z) ſaith expreſsly, "that he was a king of "the city of Salem;" and Philo (a), "that he was "a king, and not a tyrant."

2. He could not be Sem, as the Jews vainly imagine; for the apoſtle ſaith here expreſsly, that Melchiſedec was not γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, i. e. one who had his pedigree or deſcent from them, which is not true of Sem: nor could he be ſaid to be without father or mother, whoſe genealogy is evident from Adam, Gen. 5. 32. and 10. 1. and who was the ſon of Noah. Nor was Sem's prieſthood, if he had any, of a different order from Levi's, who was in his loins, as well as Levi was in the loins of Abraham; and therefore it could not be ſaid, that Levi paid him tithes in the loins of Abraham; but it would be as true, that he received tithes in the loins of Sem; for, according to this interpretation, he was in the loins both of him that received tithes, and of him that paid them; which deſtroys the whole argument of the apoſtle here. Moreover, there is no viſible cauſe why Moſes ſhould call Sem, whom he ſo often mentions, by any other name than his own, by which he doth ſo oft make mention of him; nor is it likely that Sem reigned in the land of Canaan, which now was in the poſſeſſion of his brother's ſon; nor could Abraham be ſaid to ſojourn there, as in a ſtrange country, if his noble anceſtor Sem had been king there.

3. Much leſs could he be the eternal λόγος, or the Son of God himſelf; for as he only was a prieſt according to his human nature, i. e. that nature in which he was inferior to God, and which he had not yet aſſumed, and was then conſtituted an high prieſt, when God ſaid to him, at his reſurrection, This day have I begotten thee, chap. 5. 5. ſo could he not be an high prieſt after his own order, or made like unto himſelf. But Melchiſedec was in this like unto him, that he was both a prieſt of the moſt high God, and a king alſo in that country, thoſe two offices being anciently in the ſame perſon; whence the Hebrew כהן, a prieſt, is by the Targum often rendered רבא, a prince; ſee Gen. 41. 45. Exod. 2. 16. and 3. 1. 2 Sam. 8. 18. and 20. 26. 1 Kings 4. 6. Job 12. 19. and on thoſe words, Pſal. 110. 4. Thou art a prieſt for ever, ["Thou "ſhalt be a great prince for ever)," is the deſcant of the Targum.

" old cuſtom of explaining the ſcripture after this

" of the Meſſiah, the ſacred writer makes uſe of

" they acknowleged the Meſſiah ought to be like
" Melchiſedec, he reaſons againſt them from their " own conceſſions, not againſt other men who might

" matical argument can be drawn againſt others
" from that hiſtory; and therefore ſuch things are " not too much to be urged now, becauſe that way
" of explaining ſcripture is grown out of uſe:"
That is, the apoſtle proceeds all along upon weak grounds, and urges arguments that in themſelves depend on falſehoods, only becauſe ſome ſilly Jews had ſaid the ſame thing before him. I read indeed in profane Celſus (b), this vile reflection on the ſacred penmen, that " they produce
" things unknown, phanatical, uncertain, and which
" no wiſe man thinks to be of any ſtrength;" but I am ſorry to find a Chriſtian writer thus expoſing them to the contempt and ſcorn of anti-ſcripturiſts. Chriſt is a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec, ſaith the apoſtle, chap. 6. 20. So indeed you tell us out of the idle tales and " allegorical inter" pretations of ſome brain-ſick Jews," ſaith Mr le Clerc; but without all ground. It is περισσότερον κατάδηλον, exceeding manifeſt, ſaith the apoſtle, that another prieſt ſhould ariſe after the order of Melchiſedec, chap. 7. 15. It is no ſuch thing, ſaith Mr le Clerc. This follows only from the vain conceſſions of the Jews: " Another man may deny what " you thus confidently affirm." It is exceeding manifeſt, ſaith the apoſtle, for the ſcripture teſtifies this, by ſaying, Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec, ver. 17. And God hath confirmed this by an oath, in theſe words, The Lord ſware, and will not repent, Thou art a prieſt for ever. You make uſe of a rabbinical interpretation, ſaith Mr le Clerc, and call that falſely a ſcripture-teſtimony; " but another man may deny what you
" thus aſſume, for no ſtrong or grammatical ar" gument can be drawn from theſe words."

Ver. 3. ὁ Ἀπάτωρ, &c. without father, without mother, &c.] It being certain that theſe things cannot be properly ſpoken of a man, it is neceſſary to interpret them as I have done in the paraphraſe; and to this interpretation the apoſtle leads, by ſtyling him ἀγενεαλόγητον, without pedigree, as being μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, not of the genealogy of the people of Abraham.

Ibid. ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν, μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔχων. Having neither beginning of days, nor end of life.] Though I have placed another expoſition of theſe words in the paraphraſe, I condemn not the ordinary ſenſe which interpreters put upon theſe words, viz. that in ſcripture there is nothing ſaid of the beginning or end of his life; for ſo Philo ſaith of Cain, " Perhaps the ſign that Cain ſhould not be killed, was
" this, τὸ μηδέποτε ἀναιρεθῆναι, that he ſhould never be " taken away by death, οὐδὲ γὰρ θάνατον αὐτῷ διὰ πάσης
" τῆς νομοθεσίας διείλεκται, for Moſes hath ſaid nothing
" of his death." L. quod deter. p. 145. C.

Ibid. ἀφωμοιωμένος δὲ τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, but made like to a ſon of God.] All the interpreters I have met with with, refer this to Chriſt, of whom Melchiſedec was a type, he being the anti-type, as being emphatically a king of righteouſneſs, and a prince of peace, without earthly father, as to his divinity; without mother, as being not of the genealogy of the Aaronical prieſthood; " without beginning of days as to his " divine nature, and without end of life as to his " prieſthood." But the apoſtle is not here ſpeaking of Melchiſedec's likeneſs to Chriſt, but of Chriſt's likeneſs to him, as being a prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec: nor do theſe things well ſuit with our Lord Chriſt, who, as to his human nature, was not without mother, nor as to his prieſthood without beginning of days, Luke 3. 23. I therefore rather think, that as in all the former characters, ſo here the apoſtle ſpeaks of Melchiſedec, and ſaith, he was, in this, like to a ſon of God, or to one of the angels, who are immortal, and never ceaſe to be: for it is certain, that the angels are often ſtyled the ſons of God; ſo Job. 1. 6. Bene heloim, The ſons of God, are, in the Septuagint, ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ. So alſo chap. 2. 1. and chap. 38. 7. and Pſal. 29. 1. Chal. So Dan. 3. 25. The viſion of the fourth is like υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, a ſon of God, i. e. an angel of God: for ſo it follows, ver. 28. He ſent his angel, and delivered them. It is the obſervation of the book of Wiſdom, chap. 2. 3. that man was made immortal, and to be an image of God's eternity; and at their reſurrection, ſaith St Luke, they ſhall die no more, but ſhall be like unto the angels, καὶ υἱοὶ εἰσὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, and are the ſons of God, being ſons of the reſurrection; and our υἱοθεσία, or ſonſhip, is by this apoſtle made to conſiſt in the redemption of the body from corruption. See note on Rom. 8. 23. Melchiſedec therefore being here repreſented as one who had no end of his life; and upon that account, one who abides a prieſt for ever, is in this ſaid to be like to a ſon of God; whence, ver. 8. the apoſtle oppoſes him to prieſts that die, ſaying, there he received tithes, of whom it is teſtified that he liveth, viz. Pſal. 110. 4.

Ver. 4. [e] Δικάτην τῶν ἀκροθινίων, the tenths of the ſpoils.] Τὰ ἀκροθίνια, ſaith Phavorinus, are τὰ τῶν πολέμων, the ſpoils of war; they are, ſaith Heſychius, and Suidas, αἱ λαφύρων ἀπαρχαί, the firſt-fruits of the prey; or, as Joſephus ſaith (c), δικάτη τῆς λείας, the tenths of what was gotten by war; it being a very ancient cuſtom to give partly to the gods, and partly to kings, the tenths or firſt-fruits of theſe ſpoils: and ſo Melchiſedec might here receive them both as a king, and as a prieſt. That they were given to the gods, we learn from thoſe words of Arrian (d); "We ought in hunting, to begin from the gods, and "to preſent to them the firſt-fruits of what we have "taken," ἀμῆσαι ἢ ἐν τῇ νίκῃ πολέμου ἀκροθίνια, "no leſs "than in a victory in war, the chief of the ſpoils." Thus did the Athenians, ſaith Herodotus (e), who τῶν λύτρων τὴν δικάτην ἀνέθηκαν, "conſecrated the tenth of "their prize "to the gods." Diodorus Siculus ſaith, "all the Greeks did it;" and Joſephus ſaith, that Joſhua preſerved the gold and ſilver of the inhabitants of Jericho, to be ἀπαρχὴν ἐξαίρετον τῷ Θεῷ, excellent firſt-fruits to God of their ſpoils. Antiq. l. 5. c. 1. p. 136. See this, as to both parts, largely proved by Dr Spencer (f). And evident it is, that Abraham here paid not the tithes of all he had, but only the tenths of the ſpoils. 1. Becauſe he had nothing elſe there, the remainder of his eſtate being at Mamre. 2. The manner of paying tithes being not this, that a man ſhall pay the tenth of all he hath, but only that he pay the tenth of his increaſe; and that not whenever he meets the prieſt, but at the time of harveſt only, or when he receives from God's hands the increaſe of it: it cannot then be thought reaſonable, that Abraham ſhould give to Melchiſedec the tithes of any other ſpoils than thoſe he had now reaped by way of harveſt.

Ver. 6. [f] Ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν, whoſe deſcent, &c.] Thus Philo ſaith (g), That Ἱερέα ἑαυτῷ πεποίηκεν ὁ Θεὸς, ἀδὲν ἔργον αὐτῷ προδιατυπώσας, "God made "him his prieſt, having not mentioned any work "that he did before:" and elſewhere, he ſaith, "That he received," αὐτομαθῆ καὶ αὐτοδίδακτον ἱερωσύνην, "a prieſthood taught and learned by himſelf."

Ver. 8. [g] (He) They ſeem to be miſtaken who think this belongs only to Chriſt, and not at all to Melchiſedec: the contrary is manifeſt, 1. From the particle καὶ, which ſhews that the apoſtle is ſtill ſpeaking of the ſame perſon, i. e. Melchiſedec; and from the three following verſes, which all ſpeak of him; nor is here more ſaid of him than ver. 3. where it is affirmed, he had neither beginning of days nor end of life. And by the oppoſition betwixt the Aaronical prieſts as dying, and him as living; and by the word μαρτυρούμενος, which reſpects a teſtimony of this thing, it is evident that the apoſtle infers this from the words of the pſalmiſt, Thou art a prieſt for ever, after the order of Melchiſedec.

Ver. 9. [h] Ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν.] Is not here, to ſpeak briefly, and as in a word; but, ὡς ἄν εἴπῃ τις, as a man may ſay, or, ἵνα ἔτως εἴπω, that I may ſo ſay; becauſe, ſaith Theophylact, is was τόλμημα, "a harſh "figure; for in ſuch a manner," ſaith Quintillian (h), we uſe to mollify harſh expreſſions;" which is enough to guard us againſt the inference which ſome make from theſe words, that in like manner we may be ſaid to have ſinned in Adam, as being in the loins of Adam when he ſinned. Which may be granted τρόπον τινὰ, in a manner, becauſe we derived from him that death which was the puniſhment of his ſin, as coming from the loins of one mortal, and deriving from him a nature ſubject to that ſin which deſerveth death: and more cannot be inferred from theſe words, becauſe the apoſtle here ſays no more of Levi, but that he, in a manner, paid tithes in Abraham. 2. Becauſe, by the like argument, it may be proved, that Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, as man, paid tithes to Melchiſedec; for he alſo was in the loins of Abraham, when Melchiſedec met him, and conſequently that he was alſo inferior to Melchiſedec; which perhaps was the very reaſon why the apoſtle thus mollifies his words, and is ſo careful to let us know he uſeth here a form of ſpeech which is not proper and exact, and ſuch as ought not to be preſſed too far: and therefore, 3. The ſubject-matter fairly ſhews the difference; for tithes are paid out of ſuch things as as are the father's goods, and ſo would have deſcended, by the laws of nature and nations, to their poſterity, had they not been thus given to another; but good and evil actions are merely perſonal, and therefore, though the effects of both may, and often do deſcend unto poſterity, the good actions of the parents bringing temporal bleſſings on their offspring, and their evil actions ſubjecting them to temporal calamities and diſeaſes; yet their merit or demerit cannot be properly derived or propagated to their poſterity: for Ibid. [k] Ἐπ' αὐτῇ γὰρ ὁ λαὸς νενομοθέτητο, for about that the people received the law.] i. e. The law appointed, that the people, under all their defilements which needed any expiation and purgation, ſhould repair to the levitical prieſts: or, under the prieſthood, the people received the law concerning ſacrifices, the prieſthood being firſt inſtituted; and then the laws concerning ſacrifices and expiation.

Ibid. Καὶ ἡ καθὰ τάξιν Ἀαρὼν λέγεσθαι.] The words are in all the Gr. ſcholia, vulg. Syr. Arab. and yet are by Dr Mills rejected as a marginal note, upon the ſole authority of the Æthiopic. See Examen Millii. So chap. 8. 4. τῶν ἱερέων, is rejected upon the authority of the vulgar, and three MSS. though it be in all the Gr. ſcholiaſts, the Syr. and Arab. So chap. 9. 22. σχέσιν is wanting only in the Syr. and Æthiop. and yet rejected by the Doctor. So ὁ Θεὸς, chap. 10. 9. is rejected upon the ſole authority of the Æthiopic, againſt the authority of the Greek commentators, and all the other verſions. And chap. 13. 21. he rejects ἴγνυ upon the ſole authority of the vulgar. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 15. [l] Εἰ, for that.] The particle εἰ often ſignifies quod, that in ſcripture, as doth the Hebrew כִּי. So Acts 26. 8. Why ſhould it be thought impoſſible, εἰ Θεὸς νεκροὺς ἐγείρει, that God ſhould raiſe the dead? And ver. 23. Εἰ παθητὸς ὁ Χριστὸς, εἰ πρῶτος, &c. That Chriſt hath ſuffered, and that he is the firſt that aroſe from the dead. So Jeremiah 2. 28. Where are thy gods? εἰ ἀναστήσονταί, that they may ariſe and ſave thee? See 1 Tim. 5. 10. 2 Chron. 6. 18.

Ver. 18. [m] Διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενὲς, for the weakneſs of it,] for what the law could not do; i. e. that deliverance from death, that juſtification to life it could not give, ἐν ᾧ ἠσθένει διὰ τῆς σαρκὸς, in that it was weak through the fleſh, rendering us ſubject to the tranſgreſſion of it, and ſo to death by the ſentence of it, Chriſt, by his ſacrifice for ſin, did, Rom. 8. 3.

Ibid. [n] Τὸ ἀνωφελὲς, the unprofitableneſs] Of the law here mentioned, muſt not be taken abſolutely; for that the apoſtle denies, declaring in his anſwer to that queſtion, What advantage then hath the Jew, (above the Gentile?) or, τίς ἡ ὠφέλεια; What is the profit of the circumciſion? that it is much every way, Rom. 3. 1. 2. And reckoning among their advantages, the giving of the law, Rom. 9. 4. and ſhewing the uſes of it, and the reaſon which moved God to give it, Rom. 7. 8. Gal. 3. 19. 24. But the precepts of the ceremonial law were, ἀσθενῆ καὶ πτωχὰ στοιχεῖα, weak and beggarly elements, compared to thoſe of the goſpel, Gal. 4. 9. and wholly unprofitable as to juſtification, or the abſolution of the ſinner, or tranſgreſſor of it, from the guilt of ſin, as the apoſtle teſtifies in theſe words, Rom. 3. 9. What then are we (Jews) better than they (the Gentiles?): οὐ πάντως, not altogether: for we have before proved (touching) both Jews (chapter the ſecond), and Gentiles (chapter the firſt), that they are all under ſin, (and ſo both equally ſtand in need of juſtification by faith.)

Ver. 19. [o] Οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος, for the law made nothing perfect.] Nor is it to be wondered, that the law, of which the levitical prieſthood was the chiefeſt part, and that only which concerned the expiation of ſin, ſhould be thus diſannulled, ſince it was thus weak and unprofitable as to the abſolution of the ſinner from the guilt of ſin, and could not, by its ſacrifices, τελειῶσαι, procure an abſolution as to conſcience, to thoſe that came unto God by them, from the guilt of ſin, chap. 10. 1. 2. They could not make the worſhippers of God by them perfect, as appertaining to conſcience, chap. 9. 9. i. e. ſo as to have no more conſcience of the guilt of ſin. This made it neceſſary that they ſhould give place to the introduction of a better hope.

Ibid. [p] Ἐπεισαγωγὴ κρείττονος ἐλπίδος, the introduction of a better hope:] i. e. The introduction of that ſacrifice which gives a better hope; a hope of entering, not into an earthly tabernacle, which was all the Jewiſh ſacrifices could procure, (the way of entering into the holy of holies being not yet made manifeſt, chap. 9. 8.), but of entering within the vail, chap. 6. 19. The hope of good things to come, by a better and more perfect tabernacle, chap. 9. 11. The hope, not of an annual, but of an eternal redemption, ver. 12.; not of an inheritance to be continued for a little time in the land of Canaan, but of an eternal inheritance, ver. 15. Chriſt being entered, not into an earthly tabernacle, as the Aaronical prieſts only did, which was the figure of the true, but into heaven itſelf, there to appear in the preſence of God for us, chap. 9. 24. and ſo procuring to us freedom to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus.

Ibid. [q] Δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ, by which we draw nigh to God;] Having our conſciences purged from dead works, by the blood of Chriſt, to ſerve the living God, chap. 9. 14. and having through him freedom to come unto him with full aſſurance of faith, chap. 10. 22. and by which we are made ἐγγὺς, nigh to God through the blood of Jeſus, Eph. 2. 13. and have acceſs unto the Father, ver. 18.

Ver. 20. [r] Καὶ καθ' ὅσον---καθὰ τετύπωται.] Here is plainly the figure called σύγχυσις, or συμπλοκὴ, verborum, that which is put laſt being to be conſtrued firſt, as is manifeſt from the ὁ δὲ, but he, relating to the mediator of the better covenant, in the following verſe. So Mark 14. 23. 24. And taking the cup, he gave thanks, and gave it to them, and they all drank of it; and he ſaid unto them, This is the blood of the New Teſtament, &c. For it is manifeſt from Matth. 26. 27. 28. that Chriſt firſt ſaid, This is my blood of the New Teſtament, before they drank of it. And ſo thoſe words, ver. 23. And they all drank of it, muſt in conſtruction follow thoſe of ver. 24. This is the blood of the New Teſtament. So, Rev. 20. 12. And I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtanding before the throne of God, and they were judged, &c. And ver. 13. And the ſea gave up her dead, and death and hades gave up their dead, and they were judged according to their works: and yet it is certain, that the ſea and hades muſt give up their dead, before they could ſtand before the throne of God, or be judged. So Heb. 2. 1. We ſee Jeſus made a little lower than the angels, for the ſuffering of death, crowned with glory and honour, that he, by the grace of God, might taſte death for every man; i. e. for the ſuffering death, that ſo by the grace of God he might taſte death for every man, crowned with glory and honour.

Ver. 26. ἅκακος, harmleſs.] Ἄκακος τὶς ἔστιν ἀπόνηρος, the word imports, one free from ſin; ſo Chryſoſtom and Theophylact: and this place, ſaith Philo (i), muſt be the property of a true high prieſt, for ὁ πρὸς ἀλήθειαν ἀρχιερεὺς, καὶ μὴ ψευδώνυμος, ἀμέτοχος ἁμαρτημάτων ἐστι, He that truly, and not improperly, bears that name, is free from ſin: And of him that was to enter once a-year into the holy of holies (k), he ſaith, "He muſt be ὁλόκληρος καὶ παντελὴς, περὶ μηδὲν, μὴ μέγα, μὴ μικρὸν, ἁπλᾶς κεραίων πάθος, ἀλλ' ἀρτίῳ καὶ πλήρει καὶ πάσῃ τελειοτάτῃ κεχρημένος φύσει, entire, perfect in all things, not tainted at all with any paſſion great or ſmall, but of a nature ſound, whole, and every way perfect, (κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, ſeparate from ſinners.) This muſt ſignify ſomething different from ἅκακος, free from evil, and undefiled by ſin. And what can that be, beſides what I have hinted in the paraphraſe? Now, to clear up this, let it be noted, that though the holy of holies was the place into which none entered but the high prieſt, and he only once a-year, after a ſin-offering had been firſt offered for him, yet God commands, that an atonement ſhould be made for the holy place, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe of their tranſgreſſions in all their ſins, Lev. 16. 16. i. e. becauſe it was ſeated among an unclean people, it needed an atonement. That therefore our high prieſt might be every way clean and undefiled, he was to be, not only free from ſin, but alſo ſeparate from ſinners, as the high prieſt (l) was ſeven days before the expiation, and when he made the expiation, Lev. 16. 17.

Ver. 27. Τοῦτο γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἐφάπαξ, For this he did once for all.] Grotius, and the Socinians, contend, That Chriſt is here ſaid to have offered up himſelf for his own ſins; but then, by ſins, they ſay, is improperly ſignified his natural infirmities and ſufferings. But where hath the word ſin any ſuch import? It is indeed ſometimes applied to impurities not moral, but only legal: as in the caſe of menſtruous women, Lev. 12. 8. and 15. 13. and to leproſies ſent by the hand of God, for the puniſhment of ſin, Lev. 14. 30. but never to any thing which by the law of Moſes was accounted no defilement. And how improper is it to make the ſame words, uſed but once, ſignify properly ſin, when reſpecting the people, and only ſufferings, with reſpect to Chriſt? Moreover, how did he offer up himſelf for his own ſufferings? Did he ſuffer, that he might not ſuffer? or, that he might not be obnoxious to them? The interpretation therefore of all the ancient commentators, which I have given in the paraphraſe, ought to ſtand in oppoſition to this vain invention.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. NOw (for) of the things which we have ſpoken, this is the ſum; (i. e. to give you a ſummary of the things ſpoken in the former chapters, touching our high prieſt Chriſt Jeſus, or, but the chief of the things ſpoken is this, that) we have (in him) ſuch an high prieſt, who is ſet on the right hand of the throne of the Majeſty in the heavens, (there to officiate for us);

2. (And who is therefore) a miniſter of the (heavenly) ſanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man, (for by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, Pſal. 32.)

3. An high prieſt, I ſay, of the heavenly ſanctuary, and therefore one who muſt have ſomething to offer in that ſanctuary): for every high prieſt is ordained to offer gifts and ſacrifices (in that ſanctua-

4. (I ſay, there, and not on earth) : for if he were on earth, he ſhould not be a prieſt, (or, had he been (ſtill) on earth, he had not been a prieſt at all), ſeeing that there are (other) prieſts that (are appointed to) offer gifts according to the law :

5. [b] Who ſerve to the example and ſhadow of heavenly things, (or, in that holy place and tabernacle, which is an example and ſhadow of the heavenly), as (we learn from what) Moſes was admoniſhed of God when he was about to make the tabernacle. For ſee (ſaith he) Exod. 25. 40.) that thou make all things according to the pattern ſhewed to thee in the mount. (For calling it ὁ τύπος, a type or pattern, he ſhews that it was only a reſemblance of the things in heaven, and not the heavenly things themſelves, chap. 9. 23.)

6. But now he (Chriſt) hath obtained a more excellent miniſtry, (viz. that of officiating in the heavenly ſanctuary), by how much alſo (Gr. ὅσῳ καὶ, inaſmuch as alſo) he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was eſtabliſhed upon [c] better promiſes.

7. (A better covenant, I ſay) : for if that firſt covenant (made by Moſes with the Jews) had been [d] faultleſs, (ſo that God ſhould have found no cauſe of blaming them who lived under it), then ſhould no place have been ſought for (the introduction of) the ſecond.

8. (But ſo it was not) ; for finding fault with them (for the breach of it), he (i. e. the prophet) ſaith, Behold, the days come (ſaith the Lord) when I will make a new covenant with the houſe of Iſrael, and with the houſe of Judah :

9. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt ; becauſe they continued not in (the obſervance of) my covenant, and I (therefore) [e] regarded them not, ſaith the Lord, (Jer. 31. 31. 32. 33.)

10. (I ſay, not according to that covenant) : for this is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord ; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts : and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people.

11. And they ſhall not (have need to) teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord : for all ſhall know me, from the leaſt to the greateſt.

12. (I ſay, I will be their God) : for I will be merciful to their unrighteouſneſs, and their ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

13. In that he ſaith, [f] A new covenant, he hath made (a declaration, that) the firſt (is) old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vaniſh away.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. VIII.

Verſe 2. [a] Ἣν ἔπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, the ſanctuary which the Lord pitched, and not man ;] that is, of heaven itſelf. For, 1. Τὸ ἅγιον, in this epiſtle, being put abſolutely, oft ſignifies the heavenly ſanctuary, the holy manſion in which the divine Majeſty reſides glorioufly, in oppoſition to the ἅγιον κοσμικὸν, earthly holy, mentioned, chap. 9. 1. ; and the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man, is the heavenly tabernacle, ſet in oppoſition to the χειροποίητον, or that of Moſes, which was made with hands, and ſtyled by the Chaldee paraphraſt, the ſanctuary above, in which the angels ſing God's praiſes, Pſal. 29. 9. So chap. 9. 11. Chriſt being come an high prieſt of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, ὁ χειροποίητος, not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building, but by his own blood he entered once into the holy place, (ἐφάπαξ εἰς τὰ ἅγια, once for all into the holy places) ; chap. 10. 19. Having freedom of acceſs into the holy place, and having an high prieſt over the houſe of God. And chap. 9. 23. 24. It was neceſſary that the examples of the things in the heavens ſhould be purified with theſe, but the heavenly things themſelves with better ſacrifices than theſe. For Chriſt entered not into the holy places made with hands, εἰς χειροποίητα ἅγια, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itſelf, to appear now in the preſence of God for us. And this is ſuitable to the old notions of the Jews, who oft declare, that the chief intention of making the tabernacle, and other things, was, that they might be a book of wiſdom to inſtruct them in the things above, which they reſpected ; and that when Moſes made one tabernacle on earth, another was made by the angels in heaven, Buxt. hiſt. arcæ, p. 83. 84. It alſo was their opinion, that the ſecond part of the tabernacle was made to be an image of the viſible world, and the holy of holies to be a reſemblance mundi ſupercœleſtis, of the celeſtial world. So Philo (m) often calls the tabernacle of the Jews τὸ χειροποίητον, and ſays, " It was a ſhadow " or reſemblance τῦ ἀρχέτυπυ, of the archetypal or " original in heaven. Moſes," ſays he, " framed " τὰ ἀρχέτυπα, the archetypal plan of the tabernacle, " Bezeleel only, τὰ αὐτῶν μιμήματα, the reſemblance

(m) Legis Alleg. l. 2. p. 61. B.

" of things;" and this he proves by the apoſtle's argument, uſed ver. 5. " For Moſes," ſaith he, " uſed " God for his guide, who ſaid to him, See thou make " all things according to the pattern ſhewed thee in " the mount (n): Bezeleel," ſaith he, " ſignifies one " ἐν σκιαῖς ποιῶν, employed in making ſhadows; where- " as Moſes was employed not to frame the ſhadows, " but ἀρχετύπους φύσεις αὐτῶν τῶν πραγμάτων, the arche- " typal natures of the things themſelves." Elſewhere (o) he diſtinguiſheth betwixt the τὰ ὁρώμενα ἐκ τῆς " αἰσθήσεως καὶ φθαρτῆς δημιουργήσαντα ὕλης, viſible things of " the tabernacle made of inanimate and corruptible " matter, and τὰ ἀόρατα καὶ τὰ νοητὰ διανοήματα, the in- " viſible and intellectual ideas, of which the other " were the images. (p) The firſt he calls ἱερὸν χειρο- " ποίητον, the ſanctuary made with hands, of which " Moſes had the incorporeal ideas." And Joſephus ſaith, (q) " That the ſecond part of the tabernacle " ſignified that earth in which men converſed, but " the third part was appropriated to God, heaven " being inacceſſible to men;" which ſeems to be the very thing the apoſtle intendeth by thoſe words, The Holy Ghoſt this ſignifying, that the way into the holieſt of all was not yet manifeſted, whilſt the firſt tabernacle was yet ſtanding, Heb. 9. 8.

Ver. 5. [b] Ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιᾷ, to the example and ſhadow.] Theſe words, ſaith Mr le Clerc, can by no means ſignify a prefiguration of ſomething future, for heaven was a great while before the tabernacle and temple: but this argument is of no force; for though heaven be older than the tabernacle, yet that conſidered as a place in which the Jews then worſhipped and enjoyed communion with God, might be a type of that place in which they were hereafter to worſhip and enjoy him.

The argument of the apoſtle is to this effect: Chriſt could not be a prieſt on earth, becauſe he could have there no tabernacle in which to offer ſacrifice, the only place God had appointed upon earth to offer ſacrifice in being the Moſaical tabernacle, and the temple, in which no other ſacrifices could be offered but thoſe appointed by the law; no oblation made, or to be made, but by the Levitical prieſthood. Moreover, this tabernacle being the ſhadow of the heavenly one, that muſt ſucceed it as the ſubſtance, therefore the oblation to be made by this high prieſt after the order of Melchiſedec, muſt be made in that tabernacle which was to ſucceed and follow this, as being the ſubſtance of that ſhadow. So Oecumenius here, Had he not died, and been received up into heaven, ἐκ ἂν ἦν ἱερεύς, he had not been a prieſt.

Ver. 6. [c] Better promiſes.] Thoſe of the law being only temporal promiſes relating to bleſſings to be conferred upon them in the land of Canaan, this covenant had the promiſe of an eternal inheritance to be conferred upon them in the celeſtial Canaan, chap. 9. 15. Theſe ſpiritual promiſes were indeed made to the fathers alſo of old, before the law, whence they are ſaid by faith to look for a better country, that is, an heavenly, and to have expected a city that hath foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God, Heb. 11. 10. 16. But then theſe promiſes of a Saviour, and of ſuch ſalvation by him, were not made in and by the law, but long before it, Rom. 4. 13. and Gal. 3. 15. 17. as they muſt be, if made to them who lived and died long before it. Under the law alſo they had ſpiritual promiſes and types of the Meſſiah in it, who was the promiſed ſeed, in whom all theſe promiſes were made, and by whom they were purchaſed; but then they had not theſe promiſes by the law, nor theſe bleſſings by the Levitical prieſthood, but by virtue of the Lamb ſlain from the beginning.

Ver. 7. [d] Ἄμεμπτος, if the firſt covenant had been faultleſs;] that is, ſay the fathers, εἰ ἀμέμπτους ἐποίει, " If it could have made them blameleſs that were " under it;" ſo Theodoret, Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact; and ſo the words following do force us to interpret this clauſe; for the apoſtle and the prophet plainly charge the breach of the old covenant upon the Jews themſelves, blaming them for it, ver. 9. I know ſome interpreters render the words, μεμφόμενος αὐτοῖς λέγει, blaming it, he ſaith to them; but the obſervation of the ancient fathers is this, ὐκ εἶπε μεμφόμενος αὐτῇ, ἀλλὰ μεμφόμενος αὐτοῖς, he ſaid not, blaming it, but blaming them; and the words following, becauſe they continued not in that covenant, do juſtify that expoſition.

Object. But you will ſay, How doth it follow that the covenant was faulty, becauſe the Jews continued not in it, any more than that the new covenant is alſo faulty, becauſe many Chriſtians do not obſerve the conditions of it? I anſwer, That the word faulty doth not here ſignify ſinful in itſelf, for ſo this apoſtle denies it to be faulty, Rom. 7. 7. but only imperfect and defective as to the great end of the covenant, Do this and live, it being a law that could not give life, Gal. 3. 21. and as to the preſerving thoſe that were under it from offending, and ſo becoming blame-worthy, and obnoxious before God, Rom. 3. 29. This being premiſed, I ſay, two things ſhew that the prophet and the apoſtle ſo lay the fault on them, as plainly to inſinuate there was alſo an imperfection and deficiency in the law they were under, which miniſtered occaſion to it: 1ſt, Becauſe he lays the blame, not on ſome refractory perſons only, but on the whole houſe of Iſrael and Judah. Now, where all, good and bad, come under blame, there muſt be ſome imperfection and defect in the law, with reference to the two great ends forementioned. 2dly, Becauſe, for the prevention of this blame, God, by his prophet, doth not call them to a more exact obſervance of that law and covenant, but promiſeth a new covenant; plainly inſinuating thereby, that there was need of a new and better covenant, to prevent their tranſgreſſion, and render them fit objects of his grace and favour for the future. Accordingly this weakneſs of the law is by St Paul reſolved, partly into ſuch cauſes as reſpect the offenders, and partly into ſuch as reſpect the law itſelf. Into ſuch as reſpect the offenders, as ver. 9. the weakneſs of the fleſh, which made them unable to perform that exact obedience the law required, and ſo it became unable to juſtify them; for this the law could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, Rom. 8. 3. and their carnal inclinations, which made them averſe to the ſpiritual precepts of the law, Rom. 7. 14. And this the new covenant remedied, by requiring, not perfect, but only ſincere obedience as the condition of thoſe bleſſings which it promiſeth, and giving the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit to perform that obedience. For, to come to the imperfections of the law itſelf, compared with this new covenant:

1. The firſt is this, that the law required exact obedience, but gave no inward ſpiritual aſſiſtance for the performance of that duty. Hence the apoſtle puts this difference betwixt the law and the goſpel, that the firſt is only the miniſtration of the letter, the ſecond is the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 3. That, under the law, the Jews ſerved God in the oldneſs of the letter, whereas, under the goſpel, we ſerve him in the newneſs of the Spirit, Rom. 7. 5. That then the inclinations and deſires of the things forbidden by the law, wrought in our members to bring forth fruit unto death; whereas, if we through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the fleſh, we ſhall live, Rom. 8. 13. Then, the good which they would they did not, Rom. 7. 19.; but now the righteouſneſs of the law is fulfilled in us, who walk not after the fleſh but after the Spirit, Rom. 8. 4.

2. The law not only made all that were ſubject to it obnoxious to condemnation for the guilt of ſin, but alſo was unable to remove that guilt, and clear the conſcience from the ſenſe and terror of it. It could not juſtify us, ſaith the apoſtle: For by the deeds of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified, Rom. 3. 20. Gal. 2. 16. i. e. it could not abſolve us from condemnation on the account of ſin; it could not, by the ſacrifices it offered daily, take away the guilt of ſin, Heb. 10. 4. 11. and ſo could not make the worſhipper perfect as pertaining to conſcience, Heb. 9. 9.; whereas, by virtue of the blood of Chriſt, as a full remiſſion of them was procured, ſo that God would remember them no more, Heb. 10. 17. 18. and ſo the conſcience was by it purified from dead works, Heb. 9. 14.

3. The law, conſidered not as moral, that being the law common to all mankind, but as purely Moſaical, contained in it only ceremonial precepts, which had no real or intrinſic goodneſs in them to commend them to our practice; whence, by the apoſtle, it is ſaid to conſiſt of outward and carnal ordinances impoſed on them only till the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 10. and to contain only the elements of the world, Gal. 4. 3. weak and beggarly elements, ver. 9.; whereas the new covenant is a law written in the heart, ver. 10.

Laſtly, As the Moſaical law had no inward goodneſs to commend it, ſo alſo was it wanting in the promiſe of thoſe ſpiritual and eternal bleſſings, which are the ſovereign motives to obedience, and to purification of ourſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit; whereas, by virtue of the death of Chriſt, a promiſe of an eternal inheritance is procured for us, Heb. 9. 15. and an entrance into the holy of holies through the blood of Jeſus, chap. 10. 19; on which account the apoſtle ſaith, The law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, Heb. 7. 19.

Ver. 9. [e] And I regarded them not.] Κἀγὼ ἠμέλησα αὐτῶν. So the Septuagint, and from them the apoſtle; whereas the Hebrew runs ובעלתי בהם, and or though I was an huſband to them: but the learned Dr Pocock hath ſhewed that the Hebrew בעל, not only ſignifies in the Arabic, to govern, and be a huſband, but alſo to refuſe, deſpiſe, and nauſeate. And ſo it well accords with the words of the Septuagint.

Ver. 13. [f] For explication of this new covenant, let it be conſidered,

1. That it is expreſsly promiſed to be made with the whole houſe of Iſrael, with them to whom the old covenant was made, with them who were brought out of the land of Egypt; it therefore is not a promiſe made to, or a covenant made with ſome few elect and choſen people out of Iſrael and Judah, but with thoſe who abode not in their former covenant, and ſo were not regarded by God. Now, hence it is manifeſt,

That this can be no promiſe of abſolute election, or vouchſafing irreſiſtible grace to any of the Jews, becauſe then the whole nation of the Jews muſt have been converted. 2dly, Becauſe this is a promiſe of ſomething to be done in the laſt times, or in the times of the Meſſiah; whereas God hath at all times his his elect, and doth at all times vouchſafe them his effectual grace. 3*dly*, Becauſe this is here called a covenant; which implies two parties covenanting or ſtipulating; the one obedience, the other bleſſings on the performance of it; whereas an abſolute promiſe admits of no conditions. 4*thly*, The elect always perſiſted in their covenant with God, and were always regarded by him; they always were his people, and he always was their God: this therefore can be no new covenant with them.

2. This being a promiſe of a new covenant, of which new covenant Chriſt is declared here to be the mediator through his blood, it cannot properly be ſaid to be fulfilled in the complete import of it before our Saviour's ſufferings, and the preaching of juſtification through faith in his blood. Nor ſeems it to have been yet accompliſhed in the extent and the full meaning of it, as it will be when the blindneſs of the Jews ſhall be removed, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. 11. 25. 26. For this is God's covenant with them, when he ſhall take away their ſins, ver. 28. which though he did make good at the firſt preaching of the goſpel to as many as believed in Jeſus, yet ſince that was the time of the falling and caſting off the generality of that nation, a remnant only being then preſerved from judicial blindneſs, I believe there will be a time when this, and other like promiſes made to them in the Old Teſtament, ſhall have a more complete accompliſhment. But to proceed to the proper import of the words:

1*ſt*, I conceive that the phraſe, I will put my laws into their mind, and write them on their hearts, imports, that he would clearly and perſpicuouſly make known his will to them, and by his Holy Spirit make ſuch a deep impreſſion of it on their ſpirits, and ſo continually bring it to their remembrance, that it ſhould be as powerful upon them, and as preſent to them, as if it were writ upon their hearts. For theſe two metaphors, both in the ſcripture and the Jewiſh writers, chiefly ſignify two things:

1. A clear and a perſpicuous revelation of the mind and will of God, ſo that we need not be at much pains to ſearch it out; as in theſe words, The commandment which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee, neither is it far from thee; the word is near unto thee, in thy mouth, καὶ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ σου, and in thy heart, and in thy hands, that thou ſhouldſt do it. See I have ſet before thee life and death, Deut. 30. 11. 14. And ſo, ſaith the apoſtle, is it with that word of faith which we preach; it is nigh to the Chriſtian in his mouth to confeſs, and in his heart to believe it, Rom. 10. 8. 9. And the law written in the hearts of Heathens, is the law ſo plainly taught them, that their own conſciences do inwardly condemn them when they do tranſgreſs it, Rom. 2. 15. This alſo is apparent from the conſequent effect of writing this law in the Chriſtians hearts, and putting it in their inward parts, viz. that they ſhall have no need to teach every one his neighbour, ſaying, Know the Lord, for they ſhall all know him from the leaſt to the greateſt. This law therefore muſt be plain to the capacities of, and eaſy to be perceived by them all: and to this interpretation the fathers give a general conſent (r).

2*dly*, An efficacious impreſſion of them on the ſoul, and on the memory, ſo that we do not let them ſlip out of our minds. So Deut. 6. 6. Theſe words which I command thee this day ſhall be in thy heart, they ſhall be כתיבין על לוח ליבטן, writ upon the table of thy heart, ſaith Jonathan B. Uziel, and thou ſhalt talk of them when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way, and when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up, ver. 7. They ſhall be ἐν καρδίᾳ καὶ ψυχῇ σου, in thy heart and ſoul, ſaith the Septuagint, as the expreſſion is, Deut. 11. 18.; by which expreſſions he requires μὴ ἀποστῆναι τὸν νόμον ἀπὸ τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, that the law ſhould not depart from their hearts, 2 Maccab. 2. 3.; ſo Prov. 3. 1. My ſon, forget not my law, but let thy heart keep my commandments; ver. 3. Write them upon the table of thy heart. And again, chap. 7. 1. My ſon, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee: Bind them upon thy finger, write them upon the table of thy heart, ver. 3.; ſo the Targum on Cant. 8. 9. ſaith, "God will remember them for the ſake of "the law which is written על לוחא דלבא, upon "the table of the heart of his children." And Jer. 17. 1. the ſin of Judah is ſaid to be written on the table of their hearts, as if their memory of it, and affection to it, could never be obliterated. And the Targum on Job 30. 4. ſaith, "They who let the "law ſlip על לוח לבהון, from the table of their "hearts, burning coals ſhall be their meat." So frequent is this phraſe to this ſenſe, both in the ſcripture and the Jewiſh writers. Accordingly Clemens gives this commendation of the Corinthians, "that the commandments of the Lord ἐπὶ τὰ πλάτη "τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν ἐγέγραπτο, were written upon the "tables of their hearts."

That the words in which this new covenant is framed, Jer. 31. 33. 34. 35. may have a more exact and full completion at the ſecond calling of the Jewiſh nation, this apoſtle ſeems to intimate, Rom. 11. 27.; but that they alſo were fulfilled by the firſt advent of our Lord, can only be denied by them who think, with Mr le Clerc, that the apoſtle argues upon unſound foundations; for he moſt clearly ſaith, that the old covenant was only to continue till the new covenant, in which God promiſed to be merciful to our iniquities, took place; and alſo, that this new covenant was eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus, the mediator of a better covenant, ver. 6. and proves that Chriſt had by his ſufferings perfectly procured the remiſſion of the ſins of them that were ſanctified, or cleanſed from the guilt of ſin by faith in his blood, by the words of this new covenant, chap. 10. 14. 15. 16. 17. 2*dly*, He ſays, that the old covenant, there mentioned, was to vaniſh away at the coming of this new covenant, ver. 13. and thereby intimates, that this new covenant, mentioned, Jer. 31. 33. began to take place, even from the abolition of the old covenant, conſiſting in ordinances, which were only to continue till the time of reformation, Heb. 9. 11. and which were taken away by the death of Chriſt: this therefore ſeems to be one of thoſe places which prove there will be a double completion of the promiſes and predictions contained in the Old, and perhaps in the New Teſtament, and thereby ſhew they may admit of a double ſenſe, the one relating to the firſt, the other to the ſecond coming of our Lord.

Ver. 13. Ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ, is ready to vaniſh away.] Though the Judaical ſacrifies which ſignified the death of Chriſt, after his death, ceaſed to be obliging, and their diſcrimination from all other nations, on the account of circumciſion, and the diſtinction of meats ceaſed, as St Paul often teſtifies; yet theſe words ſeem to intimate, that the church, ſtate, and polity of the Jews was not to come to its full period, till the deſtruction of the temple and city of Jeruſalem.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. (THE apoſtle had declared, chap. 8. ver. 5. that the tabernacle had only a ſhadow of heavenly things, this he now proceeds to ſhew in the following words.] Then verily [a] the firſt covenant had (εἶχε μὲν οὖν πρώτη σκηνὴ, the firſt tabernacle therefore had) alſo ordinances of divine ſervice, and a worldly ſanctuary, (in which that worſhip and theſe ordinances were performed.)

2. For there was a tabernacle made, the firſt (Gr. σκηνὴ γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη ἡ πρώτη, for a firſt tabernacle was prepared) wherein was the candleſtick, and the table, and the ſhew-bread; which (firſt tabernacle) is [b] called the ſanctuary, (or holy.)

3. And after the ſecond vail, the (other) tabernacle (was prepared, ver. 2. 6.) which is called the holieſt of all:

4. Which had (for its uſe) the [c] golden cenſer, (uſed only on the day of expiation), and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, [d] in which was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, (Numb. 17. 10. Exod. 16. 33. 34.), and the tables of the covenant, (1 Kings 8. 9.);

5. And over it (the ark, were) the [e] cherubims of glory ſhadowing the mercy-ſeat: of which we cannot now ſpeak particularly, (ſo as to give the myſtical ſignification of them.)

6. Now when theſe things were thus ordained, (or theſe things being thus prepared), the prieſt went always into the firſt tabernacle, accompliſhing the ſervice of God:

7. But into the ſecond went the high prieſt alone [f] once every year, (i. e. one day only in the year, and then) not without blood, which he offered for himſelf (firſt,) and (then) for the [g] errors of (Gr. ſins of ignorance committed by) the people.

8. The Holy Ghoſt (by whoſe afflatus Moſes was directed to prepare the tabernacle) this ſignifying (by this admiſſion of the high prieſt alone, and that but once a-year, and that then only when all the people were gone out of the tabernacle of the congregation), that [h] the way into the (true) holieſt of all was not yet made manifeſt, while as the firſt tabernacle was yet ſtanding:

9. Which was a figure for the time then preſent, (ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, which figure continues till this preſent time, viz. in the like ſervice performed in the temple), in which were (προσφέρονται, are) offered both gifts and ſacrifices, that could not (μὴ δυνάμεναι, which ſacrifices cannot) make him who did the ſervice (i. e. who brings theſe gifts and offerings) [i] perfect, as pertaining to the conſcience,

10. (As being converſant) only in meats and drinks [k] (to be abſtained from by theſe worſhippers, Lev. 10. 9.), and divers waſhings (to be then uſed by the prieſts officiating, Exod. 29. 4. by the Levites, Numb. 8. 7. and by the people defiled, Lev. 15. 8. before they might enter into the temple); and (in other) carnal ordinances (which only ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, ver. 13. and were therefore) impoſed on them (only) [l] until the time of reformation (of all things, by this new high prieſt. Theſe carnal ordinances include all the ſacrifices, and other ſervices performed in the tabernacle.)

11. But Chriſt being come (γενόμενος, made) a high prieſt, (not of preſent temporal bleſſings in the land of Canaan, but) of good things to come, (not by the ſervice of the tabernacle made with hands, ver. 23. but)

but) by (a ſervice performed in) a greater and more perfect [l] tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to ſay, not of this building, (i. e. the building of this worldly ſanctuary, ver. 1.);

12. Neither (yet to be procured as the Moſaical bleſſings were) by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he (to procure thoſe good things for us) entered in (not as the high prieſt did yearly into the earthly tabernacle, but, ἐφάπαξ) once (for all) into the (heavenly) holy place (with this blood), having obtained (for us by it, not an annual, but an) [m] eternal redemption.

13. For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling the unclean, (Numb. 9. 2. 4.), [n] ſanctifieth to the purifying of the fleſh (from ceremonial defilements, and ſo procures a free admiſſion to the ſervice of the tabernacle);

14. How much more ſhall the blood of Chriſt, who (being ſanctified) through the eternal Spirit, [o] offered himſelf (as a lamb) without ſpot to God, (John 1. 29. 1 Pet. 1. 19.), [p] purge your conſcience from dead works, (i. e. from works deſerving death, Rom. 6. 23. that ſo you may be admitted) [q] to ſerve the living God (in his church here, and in his heavenly ſanctuary hereafter, chap. 10. 19. 20. 21.)?

15. [r] And for this cauſe (διὰ τοῦτο, or by this blood), he is (become) the Mediator of the New Teſtament, (in which he promiſes to be merciful to our iniquities), that by means of (his) death, [s] for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions that were (committed by us) under the firſt Teſtament, (and not by that folly expiated), they which are called (to be God's church and people) might receive [t] the promiſe of (an) eternal inheritance.

16. (I ſay, by means of his death); for where a teſtament is (that is unchangeable), there muſt alſo of neceſſity be the death [u] of the teſtator.

17. For a teſtament is of force (only) after men are dead; otherwiſe it is of no ſtrength at all, while the teſtator liveth, (and ſo hath power to revoke his teſtament.)

18. Whereupon (ὅθεν, whence it is, that) neither the firſt teſtament (made with the Jews, Exod. 24. 8.) was dedicated without blood; (which blood ſhewed the death of the ſacrifice was neceſſary to make that teſtament.)

19. For when Moſes had ſpoken every precept to all the people according to the law (given at Mount Sinai), he took the [x] blood of calves and of goats, with water (mixed with the blood, to keep it from congealing), and (with) ſcarlet wool, and hyſſop, (the wool to receive and imbibe the blood, and the hyſſop to ſprinkle it, Exod. 12. 22. Lev. 14. 49. 50. Pſal. 51. 7.), and ſprinkled (the blood) both (upon) the book (of the covenant), and (upon) all the people,

20. Saying, This is the blood of the [y] teſtament which God hath injoined to you.

21. Moreover, he [z] ſprinkled likewiſe with blood both the tabernacle, and all the veſſels of the miniſtry.

22. And [aa] almoſt all things are by the law purged (purified) with blood; and without ſhedding of blood is no remiſſion.

23. It was therefore neceſſary, (by virtue of the Moſaic inſtitution), that the patterns of things [bb] in the heavens ſhould be purified with theſe (ſacrifices); but the heavenly things themſelves (i. e. our bodies to be received into heaven are to be purified) with better ſacrifices than theſe.

24. (I ſay, the heavenly things themſelves); for Chriſt is not entered into the holy places (of the tabernacle) made with hands, which are the figures of the true (holy place); but into heaven itſelf, now to appear in the preſence of God (and ſo prepare and conſecrate thoſe manſions) for us:

25. (It was not neceſſary, I ſay, that he ſhould enter with his blood, as the high prieſt did, into the earthly tabernacle), nor yet that he ſhould offer himſelf often, as the high prieſt (did, who) entereth into the holy place every year with (the blood of others, (to make an annual atonement for the guilt of ſin):

26. (For then muſt he often have ſuffered [cc] ſince the foundation of the world), (his offering himſelf before God with his blood being the conſequence of his ſufferings); but now once [dd] in the end of the world (ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, in the end of the ages), hath he appeared to put away (the guilt of) ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf.

27. And (in this the death of Chriſt reſembles that of all other men; for) as it is appointed unto all men once to die, but after this (comes) the judgment (when they ſhall die no more):

28. So Chriſt was (Gr. being) once offered to bear the ſins of many; and unto them that look for him ſhall he appear (Gr. ſhall appear to them that look for him) the ſecond time, [ee] without (any more ſacrifice for) ſin, unto ſalvation (i. e. for their ſalvation.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IX.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἡ πρώτη διαθήκη, the firſt covenant.] Some of the ancients, as Chryſoſtom, read only ἡ πρώτη, but none of them read διαθήκη, but many of them σκηνὴ, as Theodoret and Oecumenius; and this I believe to be the true reading: for it is well obſerved by the fathers, who do, and who who do not read the word σκηνὴ, that the apoſtle having before proved from the enallage of the prieſt and prieſthood, and of the former covenant, that an end was put unto the Jewiſh conſtitutions, proceeds now to prove the ſame from the conſideration of that tabernacle which was a ſhadow of good things to come. Secondly, becauſe the thread, or the contexture of the apoſtle's argument, ſeems plainly to require this reading; for the tabernacle conſiſting of two parts, an outward houſe called the holy place, and an inward houſe called the holy of holies; the apoſtle here calleth the outward houſe the firſt tabernacle, and diſcourſes of it as ſuch, ver. 1. 2. and then ver. 3. proceeds to the holy of holies, or the ſecond tabernacle, ſaying, the firſt, or outward tabernacle had a worldly ſanctuary, in which the rites of the Jewiſh worſhip were performed; for a firſt tabernacle was prepared by Moſes, containing ſuch and ſuch things; and then a ſecond, containing other things: now, this firſt tabernacle is called a worldly tabernacle, becauſe, as both the Jews and fathers ſay, it was deſigned to repreſent this lower world; the earth and the ſea, ſaith (s) Joſephus, it was κοσμῷ τῷ αἰσθητῷ σύμβολον, a ſymbol of the ſenſitive world, ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus (t). See Dr Spencer de legibus Hebr. p. 188.

The δικαιώματα λατρείας are the conſtitutions, or the rites and rules of worſhip preſcribed to be uſed in the ſervice of the tabernacle; δικαιώματα, τυπίσι, σύμβολα, ἅγιοις, νομοθεσίαις, ordinances, that is, "ſymbols, con-"ſtitutions, laws." So Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, Theophylact.

Ver. 2. ᵇ Ἥτις λέγεται ἁγία, which is called the ſanctuary.] Or, as other copies read, ἥτις λέγεται ἁγία, which is called holy. Vain therefore is the argument of Mr le Clerc, that the writer of this epiſtle did not well underſtand Hebrew, and therefore cannot be thought to have been St Paul, but rather ſome Grecian; to wit, becauſe he calls the ſanctuary only ἅγια, holies; whereas, according to the conſtant uſage of the Hebrew, he ſhould have called it ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, holy of holies. For 1. All this depends on an uncertain accent; read but ἁγία, and there is no foundation for this argument; ſeeing then the apoſtle ſpeaks not of the ſanctuary, but of the firſt tabernacle, which was only called holy. And ſo Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact read; and Theodoret obſerves, that the tabernacle was divided into two parts by the vail, the one was called holy, the other the holy of holies, and that ἡ πρώτη ἔλεγεν, ὡς πρὸς τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, the apoſtle calls this the firſt tabernacle, to diſtinguiſh it from the ſanctuary, as it is evident he doth from the verſe following, which demonſtrates that ἁγία is the true reading in this verſe. 2*dly*, It depends upon a falſe criticiſm; for מִן הקֹדֶשׁ, 1 Kings 8. 8. ſignifies ex adyto, or "from the moſt holy place," where the ark was, as appears from 2 Chron. 5. 8. See Dr Lightfoot's Treatiſe of the temple, chap. 15. ſect. 4.

Ver. 4. ᶜ Χρυσοῦν θυμιατήριον, the golden cenſer.] Of this golden cenſer the Jews inform us, that it was only uſed on the great day of expiation, when the high prieſt entered into the holy of holies; and that on other days they offered incenſe in a ſilver cenſer. So Maimonides and Abarbinel. See Buxt. hiſt. arcæ, p. 76.

Ibid. ᵈ Ἐν ᾗ, in which, &c.] Of the ark the ſcripture ſaith expreſsly, That there was nothing in it but the tables of the covenant, 1 Kings 8. 9. 2 Chron. 5. 10. Whereas the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, are here ſaid to be alſo in it. To ſolve this difficulty, ſome interpreters ſay, That, as ver. 2. the apoſtle tells us what was in the firſt tabernacle, viz. the candleſtick, the table, and the ſhew-bread; ſo here he ſeems to tell us, not what was ſtrictly in the ark, but in the holy of holies, ſaying, it had for its uſe the golden cenſer; and the ark, and in it the tables of the covenant; the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod. But the words, over it were the cherubims, relating not to the holy of holies, but only to the ark, confute that expoſition.

Others ſay, that the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, are ſaid to be in the ark, as being placed in the receptacles of the ark, or the coffers in the ſide of it, mentioned Deut. 31. 26. 1 Sam. 6. 8. Hence they are ſaid to be laid up, not in, but before the ark of the teſtimony, Exod. 16. 34. Numb. 17. 10. or with the ark, as ב, which anſwers to ἐν, here ſignifies, viz. cum, ad, prope, juxta. See Noldius de partic. p. 144. 145. So בְּגִבְעוֹן is near Gibeon, Joſh. 10. 10. and בְּקִרְיַת יְעָרִים, near Kiriah-Jearim, Judg. 18. Bochart. Hieroz. l. 2. c. 50. p. 590. And this expoſition ſolves the difficulty, and agrees fully with the tradition of the Jews; for that there were ſuch capſulas to the ark for this uſe, is owned, ſaith Buxtorf (u), both by the Talmud of Jeruſalem and Babylon. Maimonides (x) ſaith, There was a ſtone in the weſt part of the holy of holies, on which the ark was placed, and "before it the pot of manna, "and the rod of Aaron." Moſes Mikkotſi ſays the ſame; and Abarbinel (y) adds, That our interpreters write, that "this place does not deny that the "pot of manna and the rod of Aaron were kept "there for the children of Iſrael, as it is ſaid in "a certain tradition of our Rabbins."

dwelleſt between the cherubims, ſhine forth: and they being emblems of the angelical nature, were alſo emblems of the divine preſence, before which the angels ſtood continually.

Ver. 7. [f] Ἅπαξ τῷ ἐνιαυτῷ, Once every year.] The prieſt entered into the holy of holies on the great day of expiation four times, to offer incenſe, Lev. 16. 12. to offer the blood of the goat, ver. 15. and to make an atonement for himſelf, ver. 17. which makes it neceſſary to paraphraſe the words as I have done.

Ibid. [g] Καὶ τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ ἀγνοημάτων, and for the ignorance of the people.] It is certain that the law allowed of ſacrifices for ſins committed not out of mere ignorance, i. e. for lying, and falſe ſwearing, Lev. 6. 1. 6. We therefore muſt either ſay with Vatablus and Munſter, in locum, that ſins committed through the violence of our paſſions and affections are called ſins of ignorance, and ſo they ſtand oppoſed to ſins of preſumption, Numb. 15. 27. 28. 30. or that the ſins of the people are here ſo ſtyled, becauſe they are moſtly ſuch.

Ver. 8. [h] Τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδὸν, the way into the holy of holies,] i. e. into the heavens, was not yet revealed nor opened. Thus did the Jews themſelves interpret this ſymbol, ſaying, that (z) " the adytum, " ὃ τοῖς ἱερεῦσιν ἦν ἄβατον, which was inacceſſible to the " prieſts, repreſented the heaven where God dwelt." This interpretation all the ancient commentators give us of this place, viz. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, ſaying, Theſe things were ſo prepared, that they might learn, ὅτι τὰ ἅγια τῶν ἁγίων, τυτέστιν, ὁ οὐρανὸς ἔτι ἦσιν ἄβατος, that is, " that " heaven, repreſented by the holy of holies, was " as yet inacceſſible," for Chriſt firſt entered into heaven, καὶ βατὸν ἡμῖν τοῦτον ἀπέφηνε, " and ſo rendered " it acceſſible to us:" and therefore, as the apoſtle ſaith here, μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδὸν, the way into this holy of holies was not yet manifeſted. So he ſaith in the next chapter, that we Chriſtians have τὴν παῤῥησίαν τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ αἵματι Ἰησοῦ, an entrance into heaven by the blood of Jeſus, and ὁδὸν πρόσφατον, a new way which he hath made new through his fleſh; i. e. Our Forerunner being thus entered into heaven with his blood, to appear before God, and ſo to prepare theſe manſions for us, the way of our entrance into heaven is now made manifeſt. And this the ancients ſay was ſignified by the rending of the veil, at our Lord's death, viz. τὰ ἄβατα εἶναι λοιπὸν βατὰ, τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνοιγήσεσθαι, that heaven, before inacceſſible, was now opened, and a way was made into the true holy of holies; Chryſoſtom, hom. 88. in Matth. p. 541. and the hope of Chriſtians being now to enter within the veil, becauſe our forerunner is gone before, Heb. 6. 19. 20. ſeems to intimate the ſame thing.

Ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' ὃν, &c.] Here the vulgar and Oecumenius read καθ' ἣν, which, ſaith Dr Mills, is the true reading, adding, that καθὸ συνείδησιν acceſſit aliunde, has been added to the text. The ſecond oppoſes the Ethiopic, which is a verſion of no credit, to the Syriac, Arabic, Vulgar, all the Greek ſcholiaſts, and Cyril. Alex. who all own the reading of the text; which liberty if it be allowed, the ſcripture muſt be a very uncertain and precarious rule. In the firſt, the reading of the text is approved by Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Cyril of Alex. de ador. ſp. p. 347. and by all the Eaſtern verſions. The other reading indeed gives a very good ſenſe thus, Which tabernacle was a figure of the preſent time, according to which figure, gifts and ſacrifices were offered: but ſince the reading of the text, which runs thus, (Which figure continues to this preſent time, in which by the Jews are ſtill offered gifts and ſacrifices), bears the ſame ſenſe, and is ſupported by better authority, what reaſon can be given why it ſhould be changed?

Ver. 9. [i] Τελειῶσαι καθὸ συνείδησιν, to perfect according to the conſcience.] The beſt account of this phraſe relating to what the law and its ſacrifices could not do, may be learned from what the new covenant, and the blood of Chriſt, in which it was eſtabliſhed, is ſaid to do. 1. Then, that blood offered in the preſence of God, is ſaid to take away ſins εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, ſo as that there ſhall be no return of them upon the conſcience; no need of any more oblation for the ſins of ſuch a perſon, there being in him no more conſciouſneſs of guilt, after his juſtification by faith in the blood of Jeſus. For where remiſſion of ſins is, there is no more offering for ſins; becauſe the tenor of the new covenant runs thus, Their ſins and their iniquities will I remember no more, chap. 10. 17. 18. Hence the apoſtle argues thus, That the law, with thoſe ſacrifices which were offered every year, could not εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς τελειῶσαι, perfect for ever them that come to God with them, becauſe if they could have done that, the worſhippers once purged by them, would have had no more conſcience of ſins, Heb. 10. 1. 2. i. e. they would not have been ſtill conſcious of the guilt of ſin, and ſo could have no need yearly to repeat the ſame ſacrifices. And of our Saviour's ſacrifice he ſpeaketh thus, That by one offering τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, i. e. are purged by it from the guilt of ſin, Heb. 10. 14. Wherefore, to perfect according to the conſcience, is ſo fully to expiate from the guilt of ſin, that it ſhall no more be remembered by God, and we ſhall have no more conſcience of the guilt of it. Now, the conſequents of this full remiſſion are theſe two, 1ſt, A coming unto God with freedom, and full aſſurance of acceptance with him. This the apoſtle frequently aſcribes unto the death of Chriſt, who ſuffered for our ſins, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. ſaying, By him who hath reconciled us to God by the croſs, we have freedom and acceſs with confidence to the Father by faith in him, Eph. 2. 16. 18. 3. 12. and upon that account exhorts us to come to him in full aſſurance of faith, having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, Heb. 10. 22. 2dly, A right of entrance into heaven. This, ſaith the apoſtle, could not be obtained by the ſervice of the tabernacle, ver. 8. but only by the death of Chriſt, by which the way into the holy of holies is laid open, chap. 10. 19. 20. Eternal redemption is obtained for us, chap. 9. 12. and we receive the promiſe of an eternal inheritance; and ſo it conſequentially ſignifies to have a full aſſurance of acceptance with God here, and of happineſs with him hereafter.

Ver. 9. Which could not perfect according to the conſcience.] To clear up what hath been ſaid upon this verſe, let it be noted, that God declares the tenor of the new covenant ſhould run thus, I will be merciful to their iniquities, and remember their ſins no more. Whence obſerve,

1. That there was no ſuch promiſe, or condition, made under the old covenant, that requiring, for every new ſin of ignorance, a new oblation; whereas ſins of ignorance and infirmity being not contrary to the ſincerity of our obedience, they do not violate the new covenant, and ſo are pardoned by virtue of the blood of the new covenant ſhed ἐφάπαξ, once for all, for the remiſſion of ſins; for if we thus ſin, ſaith the apoſtle John, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins, 1 John 2. 2. And if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, the blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin, 1 John 1. 7.

2. Obſerve, that the legal ſacrifices ſerved only for the purification of the fleſh from ceremonial defilements, and reſtored to them only a right to the benefits of the Moſaical covenant, viz. life, and proſperity in the land of Canaan, but did not ſo far purify the conſcience, as to procure them an admittance into the heavenly Canaan, which, if they had entirely cleanſed them from the guilt, and the defilement of ſin, they would have done; and hence the apoſtle ſays, the way into the holy of holies was not opened, whilſt the firſt tabernacle was ſtanding, ver. 8. See the note there.

Ver. 10. [k] Μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως, till the time of reformation.] That is, as the next verſe expounds it, till the coming of Chriſt, the Meſſiah of the Jews, when they themſelves expected a reformation of the law, ſaying, That (a) "the law which was "learned in that age was vanity, in reſpect of the "law of the age to come;" that is, ſaith the gloſs on Eccl. 11. 8. לפני תירתי של משיח, "in reſpect "of the law of the Meſſiah;" and that "then the "law will be renewed." For our doctors (b), ſaith the author of Sephir Ikkarim, declare, That "all "Iſrael ſhall receive a ſecond law from the mouth "of God immediately, as formerly;" and this they all prove, as the apoſtle doth, chap. 8. from Jer. 31. 31. 32. 33.

Ver. 11. [l] That the tabernacle here mentioned is not the body of Chriſt, but heaven itſelf; ſee note on chap. 8. 2.

Ver. 12. [m] Αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν, eternal redemption.] Here it is evident, 1. That this our high prieſt hath procured for us a perfect and perpetual expiation from the guilt of ſin; and this Schlictingius on the place fully grants. 2. That this λύτρωσις, or redemption, was procured by the blood of Chriſt, we having ἀπολύτρωσιν, redemption through his blood, even the remiſſion of ſin, Eph. 1. 7. That therefore was the λύτρον, or price paid, to procure this redemption. That this ἀπολύτρωσις παραβάσεων, redemption from tranſgreſſions was made, θανάτῳ γενομένη, by the death of Chriſt, ſuffering as a piacular victim for us, there being no other way of procuring this remiſſion under the law, ver. 22. and ſo no other known to, or heard of by the Jews. And, laſtly, that ſuffering thus, he alſo muſt ſuffer in our ſtead, as all piacular victims did. Whence he is ſaid to give his life λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, a ranſom for many, Matth. 20. 28. ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, a ranſom for all, 1 Tim. 2. 5. See the note there.

Ver. 13. [n] Ἁγιάζει πρὸς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα, ſanctifies to the purifying of the fleſh.] It is truly obſerved by the Reverend Dr Hammond, That to ſanctify to the purifying of the fleſh, is to make legally clean, i. e. ſo as that they might come into the congregation again, it being the ſanctification τῶν ἀκεκοινωμένων, of the unclean; but ſtill in a metaphorical ſignification, as cleanſing ſignifies expiation, and obtaining pardon of ſin; and when this is done by a ſacrifice, ἁγιάζω ſignifies to expiate, and cleanſe from guilt by virtue of it. In which ſenſe it is uſed throughout this epiſtle, and that agreeably to the import of it, when it relates to ſacrifices in the Old Teſtament. So chap. 10. 10. ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν, we are ſanctified, i. e. are purged from the guilt of ſin by the body, or, as other copies read, by the blood of Chriſt, offered once for all. And ver. 15. By one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, i. e. hath entirely purged them who by this offering are cleanſed from the guilt of ſin: he being offered once, εἰς τὸ πολλῶν ἀνενεγκεῖν τὰς ἁμαρτίας, "to bear "or take away the ſins of many," and εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, "for the putting away ſin by the ſacrifice of "himſelf," chap. 9. 26. 27. and ver. 29. where it is ſtyled, the blood of the covenant, ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, by which he, who now counted it as common, was ſanctified, or cleanſed from the guilt of ſin, it being the blood ſhed for the remiſſion of ſin, the blood of that new covenant, which ſaid, I will be merciful to their impieties, and their ſins and their tranſgreſſions will I remember no more, ver. 17. 18. So chap. 13. 12. Therefore Jeſus, that he might ſanctify the people by his own blood, ſuffered without the camp: where both the blood ſanctifying, and τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, the ſacrifice for ſin, ver. 11. to which it anſwers, ſhew that Chriſt ſanctified the people by the oblation of himſelf as a ſin-offering, to cleanſe them from the guilt of ſin. See note on Heb. 2. 11.

Ver. 14. Διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου.] The Vulgar, Chryſoſtom, and Cyril. Alex. de R. Fide, p. 73. read ἁγίου, but Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, Athanaſ. Ep. ad Scrap. p. 180. Ambroſ. de Sp. S. cap. 8. Cod. Alex. Syr. Arab. read as the text.

Ver. 14. ᵒ Ἑαυτὸν προσήνεγκεν, offered himſelf without ſpot to God.] In heaven, ſaith Dr Hammond; for that oblation, ſaith Grotius, muſt be here underſtood which anſwers to the legal oblation made in the holy of holies, which the oblation of Chriſt upon the croſs doth not, but his oblation in the heavens. Againſt this interpretation ſome object, That Chriſt preſenting himſelf with his blood in the heavens, is never ſtyled an oblation; but that is a plain miſtake, ſee note on chap. 8. 3. 4. and of evil conſequence; for if Chriſt had no oblation to offer in heaven, he could not be an high prieſt there, ſince every high prieſt muſt have ſomething to offer in that ſanctuary, in which he exerciſes his prieſtly office. But yet it being ſaid, not that he offered up his blood, but that προσήνεγκεν ἑαυτὸν, he offered up himſelf, which he did upon the croſs, Eph. 5. 2. Heb. 9. 25. 28. And the φορὰ προσφορᾶς, or oblation of the ſacrifice, being properly the giving it up to the death, or to be a piacular victim in the ſinner's ſtead, theſe words may very well be thus interpreted, "Who, through the "Holy Spirit, by which he was ſanctified from the "very womb, offered himſelf a piacular victim "without ſpot to God." But then the blood of Chriſt here mentioned, as purging the conſcience from dead works, muſt be his blood preſented before God in the heavenly ſanctuary; for the apoſtle had ſpoken before, ver. 7. of the blood brought into the holy of holies, by the Aaronical high prieſt, and declared that it could not perfectly expiate the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, ver. 10. and therefore here the analogy requires that he ſhould ſpeak of the blood of Chriſt, brought by our high prieſt into the heavenly ſanctuary. Moreover he had ſaid before, that he entered with his blood into the holy of holies, ver. 12. and therefore, ver. 14. muſt be ſtill ſpeaking of the effect or influence of this blood, there preſented for us.

Ibid. ᵖ Καθαρίσει συνειδησιν ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, Purge the conſcience from dead works.] Τὸ καθαρίζειν, here, as the compariſon clearly ſhews, being in ſenſe the ſame with ἁγιάζειν in the verſe preceding, muſt ſignify the cleanſing of the conſcience, not from the inclination to ſin, by the Holy Spirit, but from the guilt of ſin, by the blood ſhed for the remiſſion of it. And, 2*dly*, This is the conſtant ſenſe of the word καθαρίζειν in the Old Teſtament, when joined with ἀπὸ ἁμαρτίων. So Lev. 14. 19. The prieſt ſhall make an atonement for him that is to be cleanſed from his uncleanneſs, ἐξιλάσεται ὁ ἱερεὺς περὶ τοῦ καθαριζομένου ἀπὸ τῆς ἀκαθαρσίας αὐτοῦ. And chap. 16. 30. The prieſt ſhall make an atonement for you to cleanſe you, καθαρίσαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ πασῶν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ὑμῶν, from all your ſins. So Joſh. 22. 17. Pſal. 51. 3. Jer. 33. 8. Ezek. 24. 13. Hence then it follows that the dead works, from which their conſcience was to be thus cleanſed, muſt ſignify works which deſerved death by the tenor of the old covenant.

Ibid. ᵠ Λατρεύειν Θεῷ ζῶντι, to ſerve the living God.] God, being an holy God, can enter into covenant with none, or admit them into his ſervice, whilſt they lie under the guilt of ſin unpardoned, and ſo have not found grace in his ſight. Noah found grace in the eyes of God, and with him he eſtabliſhed his covenant, Gen. 6. 8. 18. Abraham believes in God, and this was counted to him for righteouſneſs; and then the Lord makes a covenant with him by ſacrifice, Gen. 15. 10. 18. So Exod. 24. 6. the Jews offer burnt-offerings, and ſacrifice peace-offerings to the Lord, and the blood is ſprinkled upon all the people, and then he enters into covenant with them. Hence the apoſtle ſaith, Let us draw nigh to God with full aſſurance of faith, having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil (or condemning) conſcience, Heb. 10. 22.

Ver. 15. ʳ Διὰ τοῦτο,] May either relate to the end of Chriſt's mediatory office, and ſo be rendered for this end, or for this cauſe; or to the means by which that new covenant, of which he is the mediator, was eſtabliſhed, and then it will be beſt rendered, by this blood; his blood being ſtyled, the blood of the new covenant, Matth. 26. 28. Mark 14. 24. and the covenant being ſtyled, the new covenant in his blood, Luke 22. 20. 1 Cor. 11. 25.

Ibid. ˢ Εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ πρώτῃ διαθήκῃ παραβάσεων, for the redemption of ſins under the firſt covenant.] St Paul's deſign, in the epiſtles to the Romans and Galatians, is to ſhew, that the law could not juſtify any man, i. e. that it could not procure his his abſolution from the guilt of ſin, but rather left all guilty before God; and his deſign in this epiſtle is to ſhew, that the ſacrifices offered under the law, could never take away ſin, chap. 10. 4. And hence ariſeth the neceſſity that Chriſt ſhould ſhed his blood for the redemption, i. e for the remiſſion of ſins committed under the old covenant, before we could be capable of entering into the new, or have a right to the bleſſings of it.

Ibid. [t] Τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, the promiſe of an eternal inheritance.] The immediate promiſe of the new covenant, eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt, is remiſſion of ſins, chap. 10. 17. but then this being an eternal redemption from them, ver. 12. and ſuch as perfects for ever them that are ſanctified, chap. 10. 14. upon it neceſſarily follows the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, there being nothing to exclude us from it, but the guilt of ſin. Hence is there a cloſe connection betwixt Chriſt's overcoming death, and bringing life and immortality to light: and this emphatically is ſtyled the promiſe of the goſpel, Tit. 1. 2. 1 John 1. 2. and 5. 11.

Ver. 16. [u] Ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι, there muſt be.] There muſt be produced, ſaith Dr Hammond, as the word φέρω ſignifies, John 18. 28. Acts 25. 7. there muſt intervene. So Schimidius and Budæus.

Ver. 19. [x] Τὸ αἷμα τῶν μόσχων, &c. The blood of calves and goats.] There ſeems no need of the conjecture of Biſhop Uſher, and others, that beſides the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings mentioned by Moſes, Exod. 24. 5. there were then offered ſin-offerings, the holocauſts themſelves being expiatory ſacrifices, as is evident from theſe words, Lev. 1. 4. He ſhall put his hand on the head of the burnt offering, and it ſhall be accepted for him to make atonement for him: Now, (c) the Jewiſh doctors tell us, that this impoſition of hands was always joined with confeſſion of ſins over the ſacrifice, which confeſſion ſtill concluded with a prayer, that the ſacrifice might be an expiation for them. And the phraſe, it ſhall be accepted, ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ αὐτοῦ, to make an atonement for him, uſed here, and Lev. 14. 20. concerning holocauſts, is as much as ever is ſaid of expiatory ſacrifices. 2. This may be further urged from the word kepher, uſed concerning holocauſts, Lev. 1. 3. that being the word uſed to import expiation for ſin; on which account the Syriac verſion ſaith, that the burnt-offering was deſigned ad placationem obtinendam a Deo, to appeaſe God: and the Chaldee paraphaſt (d), That the burnt-offering came ad expiandum pro cogitationibus cordis, to expiate for the thoughts of the heart. And it was the general opinion of the Jews, ſaith Dr Outram (e), that ſome kind of ſins were expiated by holocauſts. And, 3. All the ſacrifices of living creatures, before the law, were holocauſts, and yet it is certain that many of them were offered to appeaſe God, and expiate for ſin. Thus Noah, after the flood, offered burnt-offerings, Gen. 8. 20.; and yet Joſephus, Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. hath informed us, that he offered a ſacrifice to atone God, and appeaſe his diſpleaſure. The ſacrifices which Job offered for his children, were burnt-offerings, yet were they alſo offerings for ſin, Job 1. 5. the reaſon of their oblation being aſſigned, It may be that my ſons have ſinned. The oblation which God commanded his friends to make, was a burnt-offering, Job 42. 7. and yet it was offered to appeaſe God's wrath, and prevailed, with the prayer of Job, λύειν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτοῖς, to procure abſolution from their ſin. Nevertheleſs, becauſe Joſephus, ſpeaking of this matter, mentions the blood τῶν κριῶν σφαγέντων, of the rams ſlain, as the apoſtle doth τῶν τράγων, the blood of the goats; hence it ſeems neceſſary to allow theſe alſo were ſlain then, either as ſin offerings, or as burnt-offerings, as they are allowed to be, Lev. 1. 2. 3. 10.

Ver. 20. [y] Διαθήκη, covenant, or teſtament] "This "diſcourſe," ſaith Mr le Clerc, "is to be looked "upon merely as the play of an Helleniſtical wri- "ter; who, becauſe he ſaw that διαθήκη was uſed "for that covenant whereof Chriſt is the mediator, "and ſignified alſo a teſtament, and Chriſt was "dead, thence deduced conſectaries which are true "indeed, conſidered in themſelves; but here rely "upon weak principles, rather to ſet off his "diſcourſe, according to the cuſtom of that age, "than to convert the Jews to the faith by the force "of reaſoning." Thus is the great apoſtle of the Gentiles turned into a Jewiſh Rabbin, ſetting off his diſcourſe by weak reaſonings, becauſe it was cuſtomary for the Jews to do ſo. Our word and preaching is, ſaith the apoſtle, not in the words of man's wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, 1 Cor. 2. 4. By your leave, ſaith Mr le Clerc, you ſometimes ſpeak not in the words of man's wiſdom, but of Jewiſh folly, talking plainly like an allegorical Philo, making often "ſuch accommodations of "ſcripture, and ſuch conſequences deduced from "them, in which no regard at all is had to gram- "mar." We ſpeak the wiſdom of God, ſaith the apoſtle, ibid. ver. 7. "No," ſaith Mr le Clerc, "your diſcourſe is to be looked upon merely as "the play of an Helleniſtical writer." "We ſpeak "the things which God hath revealed unto us by "his Spirit, and have received this Spirit, that we "may know the things which are freely given us

" of God; which things we ſpeak not in words " taught by human wiſdom, but in words taught us " by the Holy Ghoſt." No, ſaith Mr le Clerc, even in things relating to the new covenant, eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt, " your diſcourſe relies " upon weak principles, and is no better than playing with the ambiguity of words, and deducing " conſequences without any regard to grammar. " For true it is indeed, that a teſtament is ratified by the death of the teſtator; and Chriſt " is dead, but Chriſt was not the mediator of a " teſtament; for teſtaments do not want mediators: " and if it ſhould be granted that he was, he could " not be thought at once a mediator and a teſtator, " by whoſe death alone a teſtament was confirmed. The teſtator here is God the Father, whoſe " heirs men are in conjunction with Chriſt, but " God the Father can in no ſenſe be ſaid to die." Thus Mr le Clerc confutes the author, and yet ſays, he does not " leſſen the authority of this epiſtle;" though others think he plainly overthrows it: but, God be thanked, he does it ſtill without juſt ground. For,

1. It is plainly falſe that God can be the teſtator here; and that, for his own reaſon, " becauſe " God the Father can in no ſenſe be ſaid to die:" for a teſtator muſt have his teſtament; and where there is a valid teſtament, there, ſaith the apoſtle, muſt of neceſſity be the death of the teſtator; " a " teſtament," ſaith Mr le Clerc, " being ratified by " the death of the teſtator."

2. I grant, that Chriſt was not the mediator of a teſtament, but then he was the mediator of a covenant; which, as it was ſealed with, and confirmed by his blood, procuring for us ſuch bleſſings as he by his will deſigned for, and declared ſhould be conferred upon believers, through faith in his blood, became alſo a teſtament. Thus when he ſaid, For their ſakes, ἁγιάζω ἐμαυτὸν, John 17. 19. i. e. I offer up myſelf as a piacular victim, that they might be ſanctified, or truly purged from their ſins; he adds, (f) as his laſt will and teſtament, Father, I will that thoſe whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am. So here he is become an high prieſt of good things to come, purchaſing eternal redemption for us by his blood. And ver. 15. he became the mediator of that new covenant, in which God promiſed to be merciful to our tranſgreſſions, and to remember our ſins no more; procuring the remiſſion of them by the intervention of his death, that we that believe in him might receive the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, which he died to intitle us to, and conſer upon us; whence it is ſtyled, the purchaſed poſſeſſion. This therefore was his will and teſtament, that they for whom he died ſhould live through him, and this teſtament could not be confirmed but by his death: he therefore was at once the mediator, in whom the new covenant, promiſing to us remiſſion of ſins, was made: and the teſtator, by whoſe death the teſtament, that they who believed in him ſhould have eternal life, was ratified.

Moreover, what if, after all, here ſhould be nothing ſaid of a teſtator, but only of a mediator of ſuch a covenant as was to be ratified in the blood of Jeſus? This, ſure, would confound all that Mr le Clerc here offers; and yet I think, with ſubmiſſion to better judgments, that even this may be maintained againſt him.

For though there be here mention, ver. 16. 17. τῷ διαθεμένῳ, yet it is not neceſſary that word ſhould ſignify a teſtator properly ſo called, but only a promiſer, and one that confirms his promiſe with his own blood. For διατίθημι, in Phavorinus, is ὑπισχνοῦμαι, συντίθημαι, I promiſe, I covenant, and διαθήκας διαθέσθαι, is very commonly in profane authors, to enter into covenant; and ſo the phraſe διατίθεμαι διαθήκην, and δίδωμι διαθήκην (g), is conſtantly uſed in the Old Teſtament; and therefore the participle διαθέμενος, derived from the ſame verb, muſt probably have the ſame ſignification here, in which it is ſtill uſed by the Septuagint, and which it always bears in the New Teſtament. Thus, Acts 3. 25. You are the children διαθήκης ἧς διέθετο, of the covenant which God made with our fathers. Luke 22. 29. Κἀγὼ διατίθεμαι ὑμῖν, And I appoint to you a kingdom, καθὼς διέθετο, as my Father hath appointed me. So here, chap. 8. 10. and 10. 16. αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσομαι, This is the covenant which I will make with the houſe of Iſrael. And becauſe covenants were uſually made, victimas cædendo, by ſacrifices, and eſtabliſhed in blood, as both the Hebrew Berith, the Latin fœdus, and the Greek σπονδὴ, whence the word ſpondeo is derived, ſhew; and the phraſes, ἱέρκια τέμνειν, fœdus ferire, and percutere; accordingly it was in the new covenant eſtabliſhed in the blood of Jeſus. Hence the apoſtle ſpeaks thus of this covenant, and the appointer, diſpoſer, or the maker of it:

Ver. 15. That, by virtue of this blood, he is become the mediator of a better covenant.

Ver. 16. For where there is a covenant, (διαθήκη γενομένη, made by death, or ratified by the blood of him that makes it, ver. 15.), there of neceſſity muſt intervene death, τοῦ διαθεμένου, of him that makes the covenant, or promiſe.

Ver. 17. For a covenant (of this nature) is only from (ἐπὶ νεκροῖς) in the death of them who make it), as other covenants were ratified by the death of the ſacrifices uſed at the making of them), and is of no force whilſt (ὁ διαθέμενος) the maker of the covenant lives.

(f) Ἄκων γὰρ τῆς καλὰ Χρισὸν διαθήκης, θέλω ἵνα ὅπου ἐγώ εἰμι κἀ ἐκεῖ ὦσι, Theoph. in locum.
(g) See Kircher's conc. v. 1. p. 2139.

Ver. 18. Whence (i. e. becauſe without ſhedding of blood there is no remiſſion; ſo it was alſo in) the firſt covenant, (for it) was not dedicated without blood.

To this ſenſe the contexture of the apoſtle's argument doth plainly lead; for, chap. 8. he introduceth the promiſe of a new covenant, in which God engageth to be merciful to our iniquities, and to remember our ſins no more, ver. 12. and ſo, by removing our guilt, made us fit to be partakers of an eternal inheritance. This remiſſion of ſins, ſaith he, could not be purchaſed by the gifts and ſacrifices under the law, for they could not fully purge the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, chap. 9. 9.; but Chriſt, by his own blood, hath purchaſed eternal redemption for us, ver. 12. and by this blood he is become the mediator of a better covenant; he having ſuffered death, for the remiſſion of ſins committed under the old covenant, that we might receive the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, ver. 15.

And this death was neceſſary for him to ſuffer, for the obtaining of theſe ends; for where there is ſuch a covenant, there is a neceſſity that the death of him who ratifies this covenant with his blood, ſhould intervene: for ſuch a covenant is only ratified upon the death of them by whom it is made, and is of no force, whilſt he lives that makes the covenant, becauſe this remiſſion of ſins is not to be procured without ſhedding of blood: which was a thing ſo abſolutely neceſſary under the law, that neither was the firſt covenant dedicated or eſtabliſhed without blood.

Now, if this be ſo, here is no playing with the ambiguity of the word διαθήκη, nor any intimation of an Helleniſt, but rather of an Hebrew, uſing the word in the ſenſe which both the Hebrew Berith uſually bears, and in which διαθήκη anſwers to it in the Septuagint: and ſo there was no juſt occaſion for the dangerous reflections which Mr le Clerc hath made on this diſcourſe of the apoſtle.

Ver. 21. [a] Ἐῤῥάντισε, &c.] Of this ſprinkling of the tabernacle, and all the veſſels, we read nothing in the place of Exodus forecited, or in any other part of the law; but Joſephus ſaith (b), that Moſes did διεκόσμησε τὴν σκηνὴν, καὶ τὰ περὶ αὐτὴν σκεύη ἐλαίῳ, καὶ τῷ αἵματι τῶν ταύρων καὶ κριῶν σφαγίων, conſecrate for God's ſervice the tabernacle, and all the veſſels of it, anointing them with oil, and with the blood of bulls and rams.

Ver. 22. [b] Almoſt all things.] He ſaith almoſt; becauſe ſome things which could abide the fire, were purified by the fire, Numb. 31. 23. and others by water, Lev. 16. 28.

Ver. 23. [c] Αὐτὰ δὲ τὰ ἐπουράνια, the heavenly things.] For explication of theſe words, let it be obſerved, 1. That the apoſtle here ſpeaketh all along, not of purification of perſons, but of things, of the tabernacle, and of the veſſels of it, ver. 21. of the τὰ πάντα, all other things which were to be purified; of the ὑποδείγματα τῶν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, the patterns of the things in heaven, ver. 23. that is, the tabernacle and the utenſils of it, chap. 8. 5. The heavenly things themſelves, oppoſed to them, cannot therefore ſignify men in general, viz. the chuch triumphant, or militant, or in particular, our ſouls or conſciences, but the heavenly place, ſtyled, ver. 24. heaven itſelf, the place into which Chriſt entered, in which he appears before God, the place of which the tabernacle made with hands was a figure.

2. Obſerve, That by God's appointment an atonement was to be made for the holy place, by the blood of a ſin-offering ſprinkled upon, and before the mercy-ſeat ſeven times, becauſe of the uncleanneſs of the children of Iſrael, and becauſe of their tranſgreſſions and their ſins, Lev. 16. 16. Now, theſe could not defile that holy place into which they never entered, but yet they rendered them and their ſervices unworthy to appear, and to be tendered before it, as they ſtill did, worſhipping towards, or before this footſtool of the divine Majeſty. An atonement was alſo to be made for the tabernacle of the congregation, in which God dwelt among them, becauſe of their uncleanneſſes, which rendered them unworthy to come into that tabernacle where he was preſent; whence it is obſervable, that no man was permitted to be in the tabernacle, till the atonement was made for it; ſo that the purification of the holy of holies was only the preparing of it to be ſtill a mercy-ſeat, to which they might repair with their prayers, praiſes, and adorations, and from which God might graciouſly ſhine forth upon them, when purified by his atonement from the defilements of their ſins. And the purification of the tabernacle, was only to prepare it to be a place in which they might preſent their perſons before God, thus cleanſed by this atonement from the guilt of ſin.

And in like manner was heaven itſelf to be prepared, or purified for us, by our Lord's entrance into it with his own atonement, or propitiatory ſacrifice. 1. That our prayers and praiſes might aſcend up thither, and be accepted at God's mercy-ſeat, as being offered to God by our high prieſt, and rendered acceptable by the atonement he had made for the pollutions cleaving to them. Hence is he repreſented as having a golden cenſer, and much incenſe to offer, with the prayers of all ſaints, Rev. 8. 3. 4. 2. That our perſons might be admitted into this heavenly tabernacle, as being cleanſed by his blood from thoſe defilements which they had contracted. Accordingly our Lord tells his diſciples, In my Father's houſe are many manſions; I go to prepare a place for you, John 14. 2. 3. And here he is ſaid to purify and prepare theſe heavenly manſions for us, by entering into heaven, there to appear with his blood of ſprinkling in the preſence of God for us.

Ver. 26. " Ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, from the foundation of the world.] This phraſe is uſed ſix times elſewhere in the New Teſtament, viz. Matth. 13. 35. and 25. 34. Luke 11. 50. Rev. 13. 8. and 17. 8.; in this epiſtle, God's works were finiſhed from the foundation of the world, Heb. 4. 3. And in all theſe places it manifeſtly ſignifies, from the beginning of the world. See Pſal. 78. 2. Matth. 13. 35. and therefore muſt in reaſon bear the ſame import in this text; and then it proves, againſt Crellius, that the ſufferings of Chriſt had reſpect to all preceding generations: for if his ſufferings had not reſpected the ſins of the whole world, where is the neceſſity, upon the ſuppoſition here made, of the reiteration of his ſacrifice, that he ſhould have ſuffered from the beginning of the world?

Ibid. " Ἐπὶ τῇ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, at the end of the world.] Dangerous here is the note of Grotius, That St Paul " in id propendebat, ut crederet de " propinquo imminere mundi ruinam." See this confuted, note on 1 Theſſ. 4. 15. and that τὰ τέλη and ἡ συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων, ſignifies, not the end of the world, but the laſt of the three celebrated ages of the world. See note on 1 Cor. 10. 11.

Ver. 28. " Χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without a ſin-offering.] See note on 2 Cor. 5. 20.

CHAP. X.

(THE legal high prieſt, I ſay, went yearly into the holy of holies, ver. 25. as it was neceſſary for him to do in that imperfect diſpenſation);

1. For the law having (only) [a] a ſhadow of good things to come, and [b] not the very image of the things (themſelves), can [c] never with thoſe ſacrifices which they (who officiated under it) offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect, (i. e. abſolved from the guilt of ſin for ever.)

2. For [d] then would they not have ceaſed to be offered; becauſe that the worſhippers once purged (by them εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, for ever), would have had no more conſcience of ſin, (i. e. would not have been after conſcious of the guilt of ſin.)

3. But (ſo far are they from procuring this perpetual remiſſion, or freeing thoſe that offered them, from being any more conſcious of ſin, that) in thoſe ſacrifices there is a rememberance again made of ſins every year, (viz. in the great day of expiation; whereas, where there is full remiſſion of ſins, there is no remembrance of them any more, and ſo no more offering for ſin needful, ver. 16. 17.)

4. (They could not, I ſay, expiate for ever, or clear them from all conſcience of ſin); for it is impoſſible that the blood of bulls and goats [e] ſhould take away ſins (for ever, ſo that no further ſacrifice ſhould be needful to that end.)

5. Wherefore when he (the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world) [f] cometh into the world, he (in the pſalmiſt) ſaith, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldſt not, but [g] a body haſt thou prepared (for) me; (i. e. thou wouldſt not have them to continue after my coming into the world to offer myſelf a ſacrifice for the ſins of the world, they being only to continue till the time of reformation, chap. 9. 10. and here, ver. 9.):

6. In burnt-offerings and ſacrifices for ſin thou haſt had no pleaſure:

7. Then ſaid I, Lo, I come, (as) [h] in the volume (or roll) of the book it is written of me, to do (τὸ ποιῆσαι, that I ſhould do) thy will, O God; (i. e. to offer my body a ſcrifice for ſin, according to thy will.)

8. Above, when he ſaid, (ἀνώτερον λέγων, when he, i. e. Chriſt, had ſaid before, Pſal. 40. 6.), Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for ſin, thou wouldſt not, neither hadſt pleaſure therein, (ſpeaking of the ſacrifices) which are offered by the law;

9. Then ſaid he (afterwards, ver. 7.), Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. (And thus) he taketh away the firſt, (the legal ſacrifices), that he may eſtabliſh the ſecond, (the oblation of his body, ver. 10.)

10. [i] By the which [k] will we are ſanctified, through the offering (Gr. οἱ διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς, who are ſanctified by the offering) of the body of Jeſus Chriſt (ἐφάπαξ) once for all, (not as the legal ſacrifices, once every year, chap. 9. 25. 26.)

11. And every prieſt (according to the law) ſtandeth (Gr. ſtood) daily miniſtering, and offering oftentimes the ſame ſacrifices, which can never take away (the guilt of) ſins:

12. But this man (Chriſt Jeſus) after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, (by which the guilt of them hath been fully taken away, Heb. 1. 3. is) [l] for ever ſat down on the right hand of God, (and ſo is placed over all his works, according to Pſal. 8. 6.);

13. From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made made his footſtool, (till the devil, antichriſt, death the wages of ſin, and the laſt enemy, be aboliſhed, 1 Cor. 15. 25. and ſo the following words of the pſalmiſt, Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet, be fully accompliſhed.)

14. For by (this) one offering (of himſelf to the death for us) he hath [m] perfected for ever (i. e. completely expiated the ſins of) them that are ſanctified (through faith in his blood, procuring the remiſſion of ſins, Acts 26. 18.)

15. Whereof (and of this) the Holy Ghoſt alſo is a witneſs to us: for after he had ſaid before,

16. This is the covenant that I will make with them after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their hearts, and in (or upon) their minds will I write them, (Jer. 31. 33.):

17. (He adds, as a further promiſe, or part of the new covenant), And their ſins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18. Now, where (ſuch a) remiſſion of theſe is, (as cuts off the remembrance of them any more), there is [n] no more (need of) offering for ſin. (See ver. 2. 3.)

19. Having therefore, brethren, boldneſs (or liberty, ſee note on chap. 3. 6.) to enter into the holieſt by the blood of Jeſus, (from which the Jews were typically debarred, the way into the holieſt being not then revealed, chap. 9. 8.),

20. [o] By a new and [p] living way which he hath conſecrated (or made new) for us, through the veil, that is to ſay, (through) his fleſh, (offered for our ſins upon the croſs);

21. And having (ſuch) [q] an high prieſt over the houſe of God, (i. e. the church, chap. 3. 6. 1 Tim. 3. 15. or, over the houſe not made with hands, in which God dwells, chap. 8. 1. 2. and 9. 1. 11.):

22. Let us (who are of this houſe, chap. 3. 6. and for whom this freedom is procured by this high prieſt) draw near (to God) with a true (upright) heart, in full aſſurance of faith (that our ſervices ſhall be accepted now, and our perſons hereafter admitted into his preſence, as) having [r] our hearts ſprinkled (by the blood of Jeſus) from (the accuſations of) an evil conſcience, and our bodies waſhed with pure water, (viz. the laver of regeneration.)

23. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our faith (Gr. the hope we profeſs) without wavering, (or being moved from the hope of our calling, Col. 2. 23. that hope which cauſeth us to rejoice, chap. 3. 6. which entereth within the veil, chap. 7. 27.); for he is faithful who hath promiſed (this entrance into it.)

24. And let us conſider one another (as members of the ſame body) to provoke (one another) to love, and to good works, (or works of charity; ſee note on Tit. 3. 8.):

25. Not forſaking the aſſembling of ourſelves together, (not drawing back from Chriſtianity to Judaiſm, ver. 26. 38.), as the manner of ſome is, (who for fear of perſecution from the Jews return to the worſhip of the ſynagogue, ver. 32. 36.); but exhorting one another (to perſeverance in the faith): and (that) ſo much the more, as you ſee [s] the day (of vengeance upon the unbelieving and apoſtatizing Jews) approaching.

26. [t] For if we ſin wilfully (by renouncing and falling off from Chriſtianity) after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remains no more ſacrifice for ſins, (οὐκ ἔτι, there is not yet left any other ſacrifice beſides that which you reject, to purge you from the guilt of ſin, and therefore nothing can remain for ſuch apoſtates),

27. But a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which ſhall devour the adverſaries (of Chriſt, the Son of God, ver. 29.)

28. (And of this you may be aſſured from what befel thoſe who revolted from the law of Moſes; for) he that deſpiſed Moſes's law, died without mercy, under (the teſtimony of) two or three witneſſes (of that apoſtaſy, Numb. 15. 30. 31. Deut. 27. 2.—7.):

29. Of how much ſorer puniſhment, ſuppoſe ye, (then) ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, (uſing him with the greateſt contempt), and hath accounted the blood of the (new) covenant, [u] wherewith he was ſanctified (or purged from the guilt of his ſins, chap. 2. 11. and 9. 13. and 13. 12.), an unholy thing, (ſuch as pollutes rather than purges, as being the blood of a malefactor), and hath done deſpite to the Spirit of grace, (by refuſing to own him as the Spirit of God, yea, rejecting him as a lying ſpirit, and his gifts and miracles as illuſions)?

30. For we know him that hath ſaid, (i. e. who introduceth God thus ſpeaking), Vengeance belongeth to me, and I will recompenſe, [x] ſaith the Lord, (Deut. 32. 35.). And [y] again, (in the ſame place, ver. 36. ſaith of him), The Lord ſhall judge his people.

31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, (who ever lives to puniſh thoſe who revolt from him. See chap. 3. 12.)

32. But call to remembrance (ἀναμιμνήσκεσθε δὲ, remember therefore) the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, (i. e. baptized into the Chriſtian faith, chap. 6. 4.), you endured (courageouſly) a great fight (Gr. conflict) of afflictions: (for a great perſecution then befel the church which was at Jeruſalem, Acts 8. 2. 1 Theſſ. 2. 14.):

33. Partly while you were made a gazing-ſtock (or ſpectacle), both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly while yē became companions of them that were ſo uſed, (Acts 5. 41. the apoſtles, eſpecially Paul and Barnabas, Acts 14. 5. 19. 20. and 17. 10. 14. 15.)

34. For ye had compaſſion of me in [a] my bonds, (Acts 20. 23. and 21. 4. 11. 12. 13.), and took joyfully the ſpoiling of your goods, knowing in yourſelves (by the teſtimony of that Spirit who is the earneſt of our future inheritance, Eph. 1. 14. and 4. 30.) that you have in heaven a better and an enduring ſubſtance.

35. Caſt not away therefore your confidence, (παῤῥησίαν, your freedom in profeſſion of the faith), which hath great recompenſe of reward; (for with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation, Rom. 10. 10.)

36. For ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, (i. e. have ſuffered according to his will, 1 Pet. 4. 19.), ye might receive [b] the promiſe, (reward.)

37. For (the viſion of Habakkuk, reſpecting the coming of Chriſt, and exhorting you to wait for him, ſaid then, Yet for a time, as I do now), yet a little while, [b] and he that ſhall come, (Gr. ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that cometh now to reward your patience), will come, and will not tarry.

38. (It alſo adds theſe words of comfort to the faithful, and terror to the revolter, expect him now, δίκαιος δὲ, for) the juſt ſhall live by (his) faith: [c] but if any man draw back, (ἐὰν ὑποστείλῃται, and if he draw back from it), my ſoul (ſaith God) ſhall have no pleaſure in him.

39. But we (I hope, chap. 6. 9.) are not of them that draw back to perdition; but of them that believe, to the ſaving of the ſoul.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. X.

Verſe 1. [a] Σκίαν τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, a ſhadow of good things to come,] i. e. of thoſe good things to come, of which Chriſt is the high prieſt, their tabernacle being only a ſhadow or figure of that celeſtial tabernacle, into which he, as our forerunner, hath already entered, chap. 9. 11. the purgation they obtained by their ſacrifices from the defilements of the fleſh, of the purifications of our conſciences from dead works, ver. 13. 14. their annual redemption, of the eternal redemption obtained by Chriſt, ver. 12. their freedom of entrance, being cleanſed by their ſacrifices, into the tabernacle of the congregation, of our freedom to enter in to the holy of holies.

Ibid. [b] Οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων, not the very image of the things.] The apoſtle here diſtinguiſhing betwixt the things and the image of them, I think the word image cannot properly be rendered ſubſtance; but we under the goſpel do enjoy ſuch lively repreſentations of the good things to come as are both aſſurances, and foretaſtes, and beginnings of them, the earneſts of our future glory, in the enjoyment of the Holy Spirit, who is the earneſt of it, Eph. 1. 14. and by whom we are changed into the image of our glorious Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 18.; the image of our enjoyment of God, and dwelling for ever with him, by being made an habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. 2. 22.; the image of our entrance into his preſence, in that freedom of acceſs we have already to the Father through Chriſt, Eph. 2. 18. and 3. 12.; the image of our final abſolution, in that juſtification which is attended with that peace of God which paſſeth all underſtanding. And this ſufficiently anſwers the objection of Eſthius againſt this ſenſe, viz. that a more expreſs ſignification of theſe future good things would not more efficaciouſly avail towards the exhibition of them: for ſuch an image of them, as alſo is an earneſt, foretaſte, aſſurance, and an inchoation of them is ſufficient to make the comers to God perfect for ever, as far as we are capable of being ſo in this life; as being fully aſſured of the entire pardon of our paſt ſins, ſo as that they ſhall not be remembered any more, and of the enjoyment of thoſe future bleſſings, of which we have received already the earneſt, firſtfruits, and aſſurance.

Ibid. [c] Εἰς τὸ δυνατὰς ἐδέποτε δύνασθαι τοὺς προσερχομένους τελειῶσαι, could never make the comers to them perfect for ever.] All interpreters allow a σύγχυσις, or trajection of the words in this verſe. Now this, which I make in the tranſlation, ſeems to be confirmed by the effect of our Lord's ſacrifice oppoſed to theſe; for that, ſaith the apoſtle, τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, hath perfected for ever them that were ſanctified, i. e. hath cleanſed them for ever from the guilt of ſin, ver. 14. That therefore which he here denies to the legal ſacrifices, muſt be alſo this, that they could τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, expiate ſins for ever, or ſo as that they who were once purged by them, ſhould have no more conſcience of ſin, ver. 2. and to this ſenſe the following argument inclines.

The words τελεῖν and τελειοῦσθαι have two ſignifications; the one is agoniſtical, and then it ſignifies to reward and crown, as in thoſe words, That they without us μὴ τελειωθῶσι, might not be made perfect, i. e. be crowned, or have their full reward, Heb. 11. 40.; ſee the note there. The other is ſacrifical; for when it is joined with ſacrifices, or hath relation to them, it ſignifies ἁγιάζειν, καθαρίζεσθαι, to ſanctify and purge from the guilt of ſin. Whence τελείωσις is rendered by Heſychius and Phavorinus ἁγιάζεις. So the ſin-offering by which Aaron and his ſons were ſanctified and ſet apart for the prieſthood, is ſtyled θυσία τελειώσεως, Exod. 29. 34.; and the ſacrifice by which which the temple was ſanctified, or purged from its defilements, is ſtyled θυσία τελειώσεως, 2 Mac. 2. 9. and therefore what is here, cannot make perfect, is ver 4. cannot ἀφαίρειν ἁμαρτίας, take away ſins; and ver. 2. καθαρίζεσθαι, is to purge from the conſcience of ſin. See chap. 9. 9. 12. 14.

And, laſtly, The word προσερχομένους here, ſeems not to ſignify the comers to it, i. e. the law, but the comers to God for pardon, by theſe legal ſacrifices; for the word in this whole epiſtle ſtill relates to coming to God, as the phraſe is expreſsly, chap. 7. 25. and 11. 6. the coming to the throne of grace, chap. 4. 16. and in this chapter, ver. 2. προσερχώμεθα, Let us come (to God) with a true heart.

Ver. 2. [a] Ἐπεὶ ἂν ἐπαύσαντο προσφερόμεναι, for then they would not have ceaſed to be offered.] Some leaving out the ἂν, tranſlate the words thus, For then ſure they would have ceaſed to be offered; but the ἂν is found in Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, and the Alexandrian manuſcript, and therefore ought not to be omitted. Others, with the Arabic verſion, read the words interrogatively, For then would they not have ceaſed to be offered? which gives a very good ſenſe. But yet there ſeems to be another ſenſe of them very agreeable to the context, viz. For then they would not have ceaſed, or been taken away, to give place to another ſacrifice for ſin, as the apoſtle proves they were, from ver. 5. to the 9th.

Ver. 4. [c] Ἀφαίρειν ἁμαρτίας, to take away ſins,] is not, as Grotius here notes, efficere ne ultra peccetur, to make us ſin no more; for that is not the effect of Chriſt's blood, but, as far as in this imperfect ſtate we are enabled ſo to do of his ſanctifying Spirit. Moreover, the apoſtle ſpeaks, ver. 1. of expiation of the conſcience from the guilt of ſin, of expiation by the legal ſacrifices, which did not inwardly ſanctify; of purgation by the oblation of them, ver. 2. from that ſin of which there was a yearly remembrance in the oblation of thoſe ſacrifices to make atonement for them, ver. 3. and therefore the ἀδύνατον γὰρ which connects this verſe with the former, and ſhews that to be impoſſible to be effected, which he had ſaid before was not effected by thoſe ſacrifices, muſt confine this phraſe to the taking away the guilt of ſins, by expiation and atonement for them (i); not to the removal of the power and dominion of them, by internal ſanctification: and ſo ἀφαίρειν ἁμαρτίας always ſignifies, either to take away ſin by a mere act of grace, abſolving from the puniſhment due to it; as when Nathan ſaid to David, ἀφῆκε ὁ Κύριος τὸ ἁμάρτημά σου, the Lord hath taken away thy ſin, thou ſhalt not die, 2 Sam. 12. 13.: and the Seraphim to Iſaiah, This hath touched thy lips, καὶ ἀφελεῖ τὰς ἁμαρτίας σου, and he will take away thy ſins, Iſ. 6. 7.; and chap. 27. 9. By this ἀφαιρεθήσεται ἀνομία Ἰακώβ, ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be forgiven; and this is the bleſſing, ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι τὴν ἁμαρτίαν αὐτῶν, when I ſhall take away his ſin. And when God ſaith to Joſhua, ἴδε ἀφῆκα τὰς ἀνομίας σου, Behold, I have taken away thy ſins, Zech. 3. 4. Or when this phraſe hath relation to a ſacrifice, to take it away by that; as when it is ſaid, Lev. 10. 17. Wherefore have you not eaten the ſin-offering in the holy place, ſeeing it is moſt holy, and God hath given it you, ἵνα ἀφέλητε τὴν ἁμαρτίαν τῆς συναγωγῆς, καὶ ἐξιλάσησθε περὶ αὐτῶν ἔναντι Κυρίου, that you might bear (away) the iniquity of the congregation, to make an atonement for them before the Lord? See ver. 11.

Ver. 5. [f] Εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον, coming into the world.] The Socinian gloſs here, de ingreſſu Chriſti in mundum futurum, i. e. of Chriſt's going out of this world into the next, or into heaven, is ſo abſurd, that it needs no refutation; his coming into the world, in the ſcripture-phraſe, being his deſcending from heaven to be with us, John 16. 28. I came down from the Father, and came into the world; and his going hence into heaven being ſtyled, his leaving of the world, John 13. 1. and 16. 28. and 17. 11. And though the phraſe of entering into the world, may ſometimes in St John import, Chriſt's entering on his prophetic office, or his appearing publicly in the world, as ὁ ἐρχόμενος, is that prophet which was to come into the world; yet the connection of it here with the time when a body was prepared for him, will not ſuffer us to doubt that it importeth here his aſſumption of the human nature, and his being born into the world in it. And ſo this phraſe is uſed, when Chriſt is ſtyled the true light that enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world, John 1. 9. For though the grammatical conſtruction doth not hinder but that ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, may be conſtrued with light, thus, which coming into the world enlighteneth every man; yet כל בא עולם, all that come into the world, being the conſtant phraſe by which the Jews expreſs all men living, as Dr Lightfoot on the places obſerves; and the Jews themſelves, ſpeaking of God himſelf after this manner, את־הוא כל באי עולם, Thou art he that illuminates every man that comes into the world (k); this is a plain confirmation of our tranſlation of theſe words.

Ibid. [g] Σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι, a body haſt thou prepared, or framed for me.] The words in the Hebrew are, אזנים כריית לי, My ears haſt thou bored, in plain alluſion to the ceremony uſed to a ſlave that would not have his liberty, but would continue in his obedience to his maſter, and would not go free, Exod. 21. 6. Deut. 15. 17.; and ſeeing this was done out of love to his maſter, the boring of his ear ſeems not to be commanded as a note of infamy, but as a ſolemn devoting of him to his maſter's ſervice, though were it uſed as a mark of ſervitude, it anſwers ſtill exactly to our Saviour, who took upon him, ſaith the apoſtle, μορφὴν δούλου, the form of a ſervant, or of a ſlave, and became obedient to the death for us, when he might have been free from it, out of love to his Father, and us his children, Heb. 2. 14. And becauſe he only could appear in this form, and performed this obedience in the body he aſſumed for this purpoſe, the ſeventy interpreters, perhaps by the internal motion of the Holy Spirit, tranſlated the phraſe thus, A body haſt thou prepared, or framed for me; for that the apoſtle did not change the tranſlation of the Septuagint, but find it thus, his words declare, when he ſaith, He taketh away the firſt, viz. ſacrifice, and offering, according to the law, that he might eſtabliſh the latter, i. e. the oblation of his body, or his obedience to the death in the body thus prepared for him. So read Theodoret, St Auſtin, Euthymius, St Chryſoſtom, Apollinarius, and Ambroſius; ſo read the Arabic and Æthiopic verſions; and they who read otherwiſe may be ſuppoſed to have followed, not the Greek, but the Hebrew. And this reading the apoſtle approves, and follows, as the true meaning of the Hebrew phraſe, and that which ſo fitly doth expreſs our Saviour's oblation of himſelf, as that ſacrifice which was to put an end to thoſe which only were the types and ſhadows of it; and this giving up himſelf entirely a ſervant to do the will of God, on which account ſlaves and ſervants, who were altogether at the beck and will of their lords, were both by Jews and Heathens called σώματα, bodies. Thus Raguel gave to Tobias half his goods, σώματα, καὶ πλήν, καὶ ἀργύριον, ſervants, and cattle, and money, Tobit 10. 10. The ſale of the captive Jews by Nicanor, is in the Greek thus, ἀνορισμὸς Ἰουδαϊκῶν σωμάτων, 2 Mac. 8. 11. Joſeph. antiq. Jud. l. 12. c. 2. p. 390. F. So all the ſervants of the men of Sichem are, πάντα τὰ σώματα αὐτῶν, Gen. 34. 29. And σώματα is by our tranſlation rendered ſlaves, Rev. 18. 13. So Ariſtotle, Strabo, Demoſthenes, and J. Pollux, uſe the word. See Conſtantine.

I do not find that the ancient Jews interpreted theſe words of Chriſt in expreſs terms, but they ſay enough to juſtify the apoſtle's argument from this text. For hence they conclude, "that God had no "principal regard to ſacrifices, and that obedience "and praiſe was better than ſacrifice (l);" and that "a further ſalvation was to be expected, even the "ſalvation of God (m)," Pſal. 50. 23. Iſ. 45. 17. which was עולמים תשועת, an eternal ſalvation; or, in the language of the apoſtle here, ſalvation εἰς τὸ παντελὲς, for ever, Heb. 7. 25. εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, chap. 10. 14.

Ver. 7. [b] In the volume of thy book it is written of me, that I ſhould come to do thy will.] It being there written, that the Meſſiah was to make his life an offering for ſin, Iſ. 53. 10. and by that to cauſe theſe offerings and ſacrifices to ceaſe, Dan. 9. 27. therefore he is ſaid to go to his croſs, as it was written of him, Matth. 26. 24.; and the rulers of the Jews are ſaid to have fulfilled the ſcriptures in condemning him, and to have done that which was written of him, Acts 13. 27. 29. See Luke 24. 44. 46.

Ver. 10. [i] Though perhaps the article οἱ ſhould be left out, it being not read by Chryſoſtom and Theodoret, or by the Syriac verſion, yet becauſe it is in the Alexandrian copy, in Oecumenius, Theophylact, the Arabic verſion, and in many manuſcript copies, I thought fit to give it a place in the paraphraſe, and then it is eaſy to perceive that ἁγιάσμεθα muſt be repeated to complete the ſenſe.

Ibid. [k] Ἐν ᾧ θελήματι, by the which will.] Chriſt had ſaid, in the pſalmiſt, that his Father would not have the ſacrifices and oblations of the law continued, but that his will was, that he ſhould once for all ſuffer for the ſin of man, by the execution of which will, performed by Chriſt's oblation of his body for us, we are ſanctified; where ἁγιάζω, or ἁγιάζεσθαι, doth not ſignify, to be freed from the power and dominion of ſin, but from the guilt of it, as is proved, note on chap. 9. 13.; and this is farther proved from the means of this ſanctification, viz. the oblation of Chriſt's body, that being offered as a piacular victim, to purge us from the guilt of ſin, and from the condemnation due unto us for it: nor doth the apoſtle here underſtand the oblation of Chriſt's body in the heavens for us, that being properly his interceſſion, but the oblation of his body on the croſs, and his ſufferings, Heb. 2. 10. 11. and chap. 13. 12. And, laſtly, This being effected by the oblation of Chriſt's body, ἐφάπαξ, once for all; as it reſtrains the word to his oblation on the croſs, which was but once performed, and is paſt, whereas his appearance in the heavens for us is ſtill preſent and perpetual, ſo doth it perfectly overthrow the pretended ſacrifice of the maſs; for if by this one oblation he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, what efficacy can there be in this vain repetition of it? Nay, muſt it not import, that remiſſion of ſins is not fully obtained for us by our Lord's ſacrifice on the croſs? For, ſaith the apoſtle, where remiſſion of theſe is, there is no more offering for ſin, ver. 18.

Ver. 12. [l] Εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, for ever.] By comparing this with ver. 14. By one offering he hath perfected εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, for ever them that are ſanctified, and with ver. 1. where it is denied that the legal ſacrifices could τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, expiate ſins for ever; and from the ſtreſs the apoſtle here, ver. 10. and elſewhere, lays upon this προσφορὰ ἐφάπαξ, oblation once for all, I imagine that theſe words may be better rendered thus, This man, after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſin for ever, is ſat down.

Ver. 14. = That τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, is to expiate ſin for ever, ſee note on ver. 1. And that the apoſtle here ſpeaks of them who are ſanctified by this expiation, hath been obſerved, note on chap. 9. 13. as is apparent from the teſtimony of the Holy Ghoſt produced here to confirm this, viz. that God would remember their ſins no more, ver. 17.

A queſtion ariſeth from ver. 4. and 11. upon what ground it is here aſſerted, that the legal ſacrifices could never take away ſin? and wherein lies the difference, in point of expiation, between the ſacrifices of the law, and the oblation of the body of Chriſt, that one could purge the conſcience from the ſenſe of guilt, and take away ſin for ever, and the other could not? "If all muſt be reſolved into divine ap-" pointment, and divine acceptation, how is it im-" poſſible that the blood of bulls and goats ſhould take " away ſin? Was it not poſſible that God might " have appointed and accepted of the life of a " beaſt, inſtead of that of the greateſt malefactor, " who thereby might be freed, not only from a " temporal, but likewiſe from the obligation to " eternal death?" Now, in anſwer to this queſtion, I conceive that divine acceptation muſt neither wholly be excluded, nor wholly be aſſigned, as the cauſe that the oblation of our Saviour's body was thus available for that expiation of the guilt of ſin, which could not be obtained by the legal ſacrifices.

And, firſt, I ſay, Divine acceptation muſt not, yea, cannot wholly be excluded; for that would render the oblation of our Lord's body, of what virtue ſoever it might be in itſelf, wholly unable to procure the pardon of our ſin, and exclude all true remiſſion and forgiveneſs of ſin. For,

1. The puniſhment of another, being not the thing threatened, or required, but only the death of the offender, can be of no avail to free the criminal from puniſhment, though he, that is the ſubſtitute, be never ſo able, or ſo well inclined to ſuffer it; unleſs the governor, or he to whom the execution of the law belongs, be willing to accept of his vicarious puniſhment; and whenſoever he is pleaſed, and ſees juſt cauſe to do ſo, it is an act of grace and favour to the criminal, and a remiſſion of his perſonal obligation to bear the puniſhment he had deſerved. In puniſhments inflicted on the criminal, it is true, that ſo far as he ſuffers what the law exacts, ſo far doth he diſſolve the obligation to further puniſhment, and ſo far muſt his puniſhment be inconſiſtent with remiſſion; for as far as any man is puniſhed, he is not forgiven; but by admiſſion of another to ſuffer in our ſtead, we are as much forgiven as we could be did he not ſuffer in our ſtead, becauſe we are as much exempted from ſuffering any puniſhment on the account of our offences: and how can we be more forgiven than we are by ſuch an act, as removes from us the whole puniſhment as much as if we had never offended? The vicarious puniſhment is indeed the motive and the procuring cauſe of this forgiveneſs, as it renders it conſiſtent with the governor's honour, and with the ends of government to grant it, but it takes off nothing from the freedom of the pardon.

2. I add, That divine acceptation muſt not be aſſigned as the only cauſe that the oblation of our Saviour's body was thus available for the expiation of the guilt of ſin, for then no reaſon can be given why he might not have accepted of the blood of bulls and goats, and much more of the ſufferings of any ordinary man, for the procuring our exemption from the guilt of ſin; whereas two reaſons have been already offered in the note on chap. 2. 14. why the blood of bulls and goats could never take away ſin, viz. 1ſt, Becauſe they were not of the ſame nature and original with man who ſinned, and ſo could not diſſolve the debt his nature had contracted. 2dly, They never could procure for us a reſurrection, and ſo they could not free us from that eternal death our ſins deſerved; nor could any mortal man do it, becauſe he never could have power to raiſe his own body; only that Jeſus who had power to lay down his life, and take it up again, (who hath life in himſelf, and who can make the dead hear the voice of the Son of man, and live), can do this. Indeed they could do nothing of that which was requiſite, ſaith this epiſtle, and the whole ſcripture, for that end. But the great reaſon why the blood of bulls and goats could never take away ſins is this, that they could never anſwer the great ends of puniſhment, and thereby render it conſiſtent with the honour of the governor, and with the ends of government, to admit the ſubſtitution of them in our ſtead. Now, the ends which wiſe men do aſſign of puniſhments are theſe:

1ſt, Παράδειγμα, "That they who ſuffer may be " exemplary to others;" and may, by what they ſuffer, deter others from the commiſſion of the like offences, by letting them, in their example, know what they muſt ſuffer, when the guilt of their own ſins is laid upon them.

2dly, Νουθέτημα, "That the offender may learn wiſ-" dom by the rod;" that the remembrance of what was ſuffered for it, might prevent the repetition of his his ſin; and that he may be fitted to embrace that counſel of our Saviour, Sin no more, leſt a worſe thing come upon thee.

3*dly*, Τιμωρία, "The vindication of the prince's "honour, and the preſervation of the laws he hath "eſtabliſhed from contempt." Now, to apply this to our purpoſe: I ſay,

1. That by the obedience of our Lord Chriſt unto the death in our ſtead, theſe ends of puniſhment are very ſignally obtained, and that with more advantage to God's glory, than if the puniſhment of our offences had been inflicted upon us; and ſo God by it may be truly ſaid to have been ſatisfied, ſeeing that juſtice, which conſiſts in puniſhing for the tranſgreſſion of a law is truly ſatisfied, when all thoſe ends for which the puniſhment of the offender could be deſired, are obtained.

2. I add, That none of theſe ends could be at all obtained by the ſuffering of bulls and goats, and not comparatively by the ſufferings of any mortal man whatſoever. And,

1*ſt*, God by this diſpenſation hath given us the beſt and moſt effectual example to deter us from ſin. For three things only can be requiſite to this end, that the puniſhment of ſin be inſupportable, when we ſuffer it; inevitable, when we, by our rebellions, have made ourſelves the veſſels of God's wrath; and that we have a lively ſenſe and deep impreſſion of all this upon our ſpirits. Now,

The example of our Saviour's ſufferings ſhews how inſupportable the puniſhment will be, which juſtice will inflict upon the ſinner; for if the apprehenſion of it produced ſuch agonies and conſternations in the ſoul of Chriſt, that God ſaw need to ſend an angel to ſupport him under them, how muſt the ſinner ſink under that burden, when it is laid upon his ſhoulders? If he, who was the well beloved Son of God, found it ſo dreadful to lie under the burden for ſome hours; to lie expoſed for ever to it, muſt be far more intolerable: if the conſideration of God's paternal love, and of the glorious iſſues of his ſufferings, was ſcarce ſufficient to ſupport our Lord under the terrors of that cup; what will ſupport the ſinner, when he ſhall know himſelf to be the everlaſting object of God's wrath?

This example alſo ſhews, that impenitent ſinners cannot eſcape this wrath of God, ſince he inflicted ſo great a puniſhment on the beloved of his ſoul, when he became our ſurety. For if on this account God ſpared not his only Son, we may be ſure he will not ſpare his ſtubborn enemies. With what ſtrong cries, and with what earneſtneſs, did our Lord pray to be delivered from this cup? And yet when he had made his ſoul an offering for ſin, thus did it pleaſe the Lord to bruiſe him. If then his ears were ſhut againſt the cries of his beloved Son, how can they be opened to the howlings of rebellious ſinners? If God was pleaſed to lay ſo great a load on him who was but ſponſor for our ſins, their puniſhment cannot be milder who commit them. And, Laſtly, This example gives us the moſt lively ſenſe and deep impreſſion of theſe things, as being the moſt ſenſible demonſtration of God's indignation againſt ſin, which is recorded in the ſacred writings. To find God drowning the whole world, and raining fire and brimſtone on Sodom and Gomorrah for ſin; to ſee the darling objects of his love, the Jewiſh nation, become, for above 1700 years, the objects of his ſoreſt wrath, are inſtances ſufficient to deter men from ſin: but then to ſee God mix a cup ſo bitter, ſo full of gall and wormwood, for his own innocent and well beloved Son, and make him drink it off, only becauſe he undertook to be our ſurety; to ſee him lifted up upon the croſs, the earth trembling under him, as if unable to bear his weight, the heavens darkened over him, as if ſhut againſt his cry, and all this becauſe our ſins did meet upon him, is a ſure and eminent demonſtration of God's indignation againſt ſin.

2. Whereas inevitable ruin muſt have followed upon the execution of the deſerved puniſhment on the offender's perſon, God, by this method, hath taken a moſt excellent way for reformation of the ſinner, which was the ſecond end of puniſhment. For what can be a more effectual motive to abſtain from ſin, than this example, which ſo clearly repreſents the greatneſs of the provocation in the greatneſs of the puniſhment, and ſhews it is impoſſible that guilty perſons ſhould avoid the ſtroke of God's vindictive juſtice, or bear the weight of his almighty arm?

3. God, by this diſpenſation, hath ſufficiently conſulted the preſervation of his honour, and ſecured the reverence and obſervation of his laws; which was the third great end of puniſhment. For,

God, by declaring thus, he would not pardon our offences, without this ſatisfaction made for the violation of his law, hath fully vindicated his inſtitutions from contempt; ſeeing, by this example, he hath let all men know, that though he be a God of great long-ſuffering and mercy, he will by no means clear the ſinner, or ſuffer ſin to go unpuniſhed.

Again, God, by this diſpenſation, hath vindicated his honour, more than if he had deſtroyed the ſinner, having more evidently ſhewed his hatred of, and great diſpleaſure againſt ſin, by puniſhing it ſo ſeverely in his only Son, when he became our ſurety: for the greater the inducement is to remit the puniſhment of ſin, the greater muſt be his hatred who inflicts it; that therefore this conſideration, That he who ſuffered was his well-beloved Son, would not induce him to remit the puniſhment, muſt be the higheſt demonſtration of his moſt perfect hatred of all iniquity.

But that none of thoſe ends could be at all obtained by the ſubſtitution of a bull, or goat, or ram, to ſuffer in our ſtead, muſt be extremely evident, this being a ſubſtitution very ſupportable, eſpecially by the rich, who very freely ſpend much more upon the ſatisfaction of their luſts, and who would therefore gladly buy a freedom to commit them at ſo ſmall expenſe. This then would be ſo far from tending to reform the ſinner, that it would rather be a great encouragement to him to continue in his evil courſes, when he thus knew the damage would be very little to him; this alſo could not tend to the honour of the lawgiver, but rather would tempt men to conceive that his diſpleaſure againſt ſin could not be great, ſince he required ſo little to repair his honour; and that he was not much concerned for any ſatisfaction for the violations of his law, when ſuch ſlight matters were by him thought ſufficient expiations for them.

Moreover, the oblations of any ordinary man could not procure this expiation for us: 1. Becauſe he could only ſuffer that puniſhment he had deſerved by his own ſins: now, evident it is, no ſatisfaction can be made by me for others, by ſuffering that which juſtice doth require me to ſuffer for my own offences. 2. Becauſe he could not overcome death, he never could raiſe up himſelf from the grave, and ſo could not procure that redemption from it to another, which he could not obtain for his own ſelf. Nor, 3. Is it viſible how he can ſerve the ends of juſtice, or of government, by doing ſo, more than the criminal himſelf would do by his own ſufferings. For, 1. What great indication would it be of divine hatred to ſin, that he required only the death of a mortal man, to expiate the ſins of the whole world? or, 2. What diſcouragement could this afford to ſinners from continuing in their evil courſes, or what great dread of divine vengeance? For if, as it was conjectured by moſt nations, the death of a malefactor might be ſufficient for this purpoſe, what nation could ever want ſuch expiations for their ſins? Or, if it were to be a good man, ſeeing they bore ſo great love to mankind in general, and to their country in particular, ſome of them would ſtill be ready to offer their own lives, for preſervation of their nation: or how, by this would God conſult either the honour of his government, or ſecure the reverence and obſervation of his laws, by thus requiring only one criminal to ſuffer leſs than he himſelf deſerved, to make atonement for the continual violations of his ſacred laws by a whole nation, or even the whole race of men?

Ver. 18. [a] Οὐκ ἔτι προσφορὰ, no more offering for ſin.] From theſe, and many other paſſages of this epiſtle, the ſacrifice of the maſs declared by the Trent council, ſeſſ. 22. can. 2. 3. to be "a true "and proper propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin," is utterly overthrown. For, 1. From theſe words of the apoſtle, It was not needful that he ſhould offer himſelf often, for then muſt he have often ſuffered, chap. 9. 24. 25. 26. it is very evident, that Chriſt cannot offer himſelf, but he muſt ſuffer: ſince then they dare not ſay that Chriſt ſuffers in the maſs, neither can they ſay that Chriſt offers himſelf there. 2. From thoſe words, Without ſhedding of blood there is no remiſſion, chap. 9. 22. it follows, either that the ſacrifice of the maſs muſt be a bloody ſacrifice, and ſo Chriſt's blood muſt be as often ſhed, as he is offered in the maſs, or elſe that it obtaineth no remiſſion of ſin. 3. This follows from theſe words, By one oblation he hath perfected (i. e. hath perfectly and fully expiated, and that) for ever them that are ſanctified; for what neceſſity of, what virtue can there be in, doing that again, which is perfectly and fully done already, and that for ever? And, laſtly, Where remiſſion of ſins is ſo obtained by Chriſt's own oblation, that God will remember them no more, there is, ſaith the apoſtle, no more need of offering for ſin; but by the blood of Chriſt, the blood of the New Teſtament, ſuch remiſſion is obtained, ſaith the ſame apoſtle, ver. 15. 17. Ergo, &c.

Ver. 20. [b] Ὁδὸν πρόσφατον, a new way.] The way into the higheſt heaven being before ἄβατον, impaſſable, ſaith Joſephus: (ſee note on chap. 9. 8.), there being no entrance for us into that place, till our forerunner had entered into it, chap. 7. 20. till he had purified, and prepared it for us by his better ſacrifice, chap. 9. 23. John 14. 2. This was the doctrine of all the primitive Chriſtians, That Chriſt, by his death, opened this veil for the juſt that were from Adam (n) ἀποκεκλεισμένοι, excluded from thoſe bliſsful regions: (o) That διέσχισε φραγμὸν τὸν ἐξ ἀιῶνος μὴ σχισθέντα, "he rent open the incloſure which from the begin-"ning had not been laid open." Hence Tertullian (p) ſaith, "The patriarchs were Dominicæ re-"ſurrectionis appendices, the appendants of our "Lord's reſurrection;" and therefore, as ἔχοντες is here to be repeated from ver. 19. ſo the preposition διὰ, through, ſeems here not to denote the means, or the condition of entrance into the holy of holies; but rather the term to be paſſed through; as if he ſhould have ſaid, "We have a new way of "entrance through the veil, now rent;" which, before it was ſo, hindered our entrance into that place; that is, through the fleſh, or body of Chriſt broken upon the croſs, and ſo letting out that blood which Ibid. [p] Καὶ ζῶσαν, and living way:] That is, ζωοποιοῦσαν, leading to, and giving life, ſaith Grotius. He dying for us, that we might live through him, 1 John 4. 9. Thus the bread of life, John 6. and the word of life, Acts 5. 20. Phil. 2. 16. is the bread and word giving life, in oppoſition to the dead ſhadows of the law, ſaith Dr Hammond, or the ſacrifices preſcribed by it, all whoſe virtue was in their death; we being reconciled by the death of Chriſt, but ſaved by his life, Rom. 5. 10. Our acceſs to theſe manſions being obtained by this Forerunner, made higher than the heavens, chap. 7. 26. made a prieſt there, after the power of an endleſs life, ver. 16. and therefore able to ſave us to the uttermoſt, becauſe he lives for ever, there to make interceſſion for us, ver. 25.

Ver. 21. [q] An high prieſt;] i. e. An high prieſt ſo merciful, and able to help us when tempted, and ſo faithful in the performance of his office, chap. 2. 14.

Ver. 22. [r] Ἐῤῥαντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας, having our hearts ſprinkled from an evil conſcience, &c.] Here is a manifeſt alluſion to the things requiſite to procure to a defiled Jew admittance to God's ſacred preſence in the temple, or the tabernacle. The Jewiſh maxim ſaith, that "the very root and eſſence of the ſa-"crifice was ſprinkling of blood;" and therefore, on the great day of expiation, the bullock for the ſin-offering, and the goat for the ſin-offering, which was brought in to make atonement in the holy place for the people, was ſprinkled before the mercy-ſeat ſeven times, Lev. 16. 14. 15. 27. and ſo they were made clean from all their ſins before the Lord, ver. 30. and admitted again into the tabernacle of the congregation, from which they were excluded till this ſprinkling was performed, ver. 17. Again, when the Iſraelites were in a great fear, that, by coming near the tabernacle, they ſhould be conſumed, ſaying, Behold, we die, we periſh; whoſoever cometh any thing near unto the tabernacle of the Lord, ſhall die, Numb. 17. 12. 13. God appoints the water made of the aſhes of the red heifer, to cleanſe them from thoſe legal impurities, which rendered them unfit to come into his tabernacle, and made it dangerous for them to approach unto it, ſtyling it on that account a purification from ſin, ver. 9.; and this water was to be ſprinkled on the unclean, and he was to waſh his cloaths, and bathe himſelf in water, and being thus purified, might come into the ſanctuary, ver. 19. 20. This ſprinkling of the blood and water, ſanctifying to the purifying of the fleſh, Heb. 9. 13. Let us therefore, ſaith the apoſtle, who have (not our fleſh only, but) our conſciences purified from the guilt of ſin, by the ſprinkling (not of the blood of bulls and goats, but) of the blood of Chriſt, and have our high prieſt ſtill preſenting this blood before the mercy-ſeat, and who have our bodies waſhed with the pure water of baptiſm, the laver of regeneration, (as the cloaths and bodies of the unclean were with fountain-water), draw near to God with greater freedom than they could.

Ver. 25. [s] Ἡμέραν, the day approaching;] i. e. The day of the Lord's coming to deſtroy the unbelieving Jews, and to execute his vengeance on them, for rejecting and crucifying their Meſſiah, ſtyled by St Luke, the days of vengeance, chap. 21. 22. ἡμέρα τῆς ἐλεύσεως αὐτοῦ, the day of the Lord's coming, which who can bear? ſaith the prophet, Mal. 3. 2. ἡμέρα καιομένη ὡς κλίβανος, the day burning like an oven; ἡμέρα ἡ ἐρχομένη, the day coming that ſhall ſo burn up them that do wickedly, as not to leave them root or branch; ἡμέρα Κυρίου ἐγγίζουσα, the day of the Lord drawing near, when all the inhabitants of the land ſhall tremble, Joel 2. 1.; μεγάλη ἡ ἡμέρα Κυρίου καὶ ἐπιφανὴς, the great and terrible day of the Lord, ver. 11. 31. ἡμέρα αὐτοῦ, the day of the Son of man. That this is the meaning of the place, will appear from the ſcope of the apoſtle, which is to terrify them he writes to, by the conſideration of that dreadful day of vengeance threatened to the unbelieving Jews, not only by our Lord, but their own prophets, and now near at hand; as it follows from ver. 26. to ver. 32.

Ver. 26. [t] Ἑκουσίως γὰρ ἁμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν, for if we ſin wilfully.] That theſe words do not concern every ſin committed knowingly againſt the laws of Chriſt, but only ſuch as do conſiſt in apoſtatizing from the faith, after we have received the knowledge of it, and rejecting him as our Prophet and Lawgiver, will appear, 1. From the parallel place, chap. 6. 4. 5. 6. for they who there cannot be renewed unto repentance, are they who fall away from the faith, after they have been enlightened, &c.; which plainly anſwers to theſe words here, they who ſin wilfully, after they have received the knowledge of the truth; they are there ſaid to crucify afreſh the Lord of life, and to put him him to an open ſhame; yea, to fall away after they have taſted of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghoſt; which alſo anſwers to the trampling under foot the Son of God, and the doing deſpite to the Spirit of grace. 2. From the inſtances produced out of the Old Teſtament; for the argument uſed, ver. 28. from the compariſon of him who deſpiſed Moſes's law, and therefore was to die without mercy under the hand of two or three witneſſes, Deut. 17. 6. plainly concerns them only who tranſgreſſed God's covenant, by going and ſerving other gods, ver. 2. 3. And as for thoſe who ſinned voluntarily, or with an high hand, under the law, and ſo were to be cut off, and have no ſacrifice allowed to expiate their ſin, Numb. 15. 30. 31. they were were ſuch as blaſphemed, or reproached the Lord, i.e. revolted from, and would not own him as their Governor; they deſpiſed the word of the Lord; they made the covenant given in Sinai void, by contemning the authority by which it was injoined, as the Hebrew ſignifies, and ſo they were indeed apoſtates from God. 3. From the preceding exhortation, ver. 25. not to fall off from the aſſemblies of Chriſtians; and the following, not to caſt away their confidence, ver. 35. not to draw back from the faith, ver. 38. it being better not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than having known it, to depart from the holy commandment delivered to them, 2 Pet. 2. 21. And laſtly, from the expreſſions uſed, ver. 29. which can agree to none beſides apoſtates from the Chriſtian faith: for, to tread the Son of God under foot, muſt ſurely ſignify the extremeſt contempt that can be caſt upon him; to count the blood of the covenant, by which we are purified, itſelf, κοινὸν, unclean, and polluting, can be only done by him who looks on Chriſt, not as the Saviour of the world by it, but as one who deſerved to ſuffer what from the Jews he did: and to do deſpite to the Spirit of grace, cannot well ſignify leſs than that which our Lord ſtyles the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which men cannot commit, and in their hearts continue Chriſtians.

Ver. 29. [x] Ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, By which he was ſanctified.] That this refers, not to Chriſt ſanctifying himſelf, or offering himſelf as a piacular victim for us, John 17. 19. but to him who counted this blood an unholy thing, ſeems clear, 1. From the conſtant uſage of this phraſe in this epiſtle, where he that is ſanctified, is he that is purged from the guilt of ſin, chap. 2. 11. and in this very chapter, where it is ſaid, ver. 10. that we are ἡγιασμένοι, ſanctified by the oblation of the body (or, the blood) of Chriſt; and ver. 14. that by one oblation he hath perfected for ever τοὺς ἁγιαζομένους, them that are ſanctified. 2. From the phraſe, the blood of the (new) covenant, i. e. of that covenant in which God promiſes to be merciful to our iniquities, and remember our ſins no more, chap. 8. 12. and 10. 17. 3. Becauſe though Chriſt is ſaid to ſanctify himſelf, yet is he never ſaid to be ſanctified, but only ἁγιάζειν τὸν λαὸν, to ſanctify the people by his own blood, chap. 13. 12. See the reading juſtified, Examen Millii.

Ver. 30. [x] Saith the Lord, Λέγει Κύριος.] Theſe words are not to be found in many manuſcripts; they are not in the vulgar, Syriac, or Æthiopic verſion; not in the original, or in the Septuagint; and therefore ſeem to have crept in here from Rom. 12. 19. Where inſtead of οἴδαμεν γὰρ τὸν εἰπόντα, we know him that ſpeaketh, we find, γέγραπται γὰρ, for it is written; which reading Chryſoſtom here hath, and without theſe words the ſenſe runs better.

Ibid. [y] And again.] Not Pſalm 135. 14. the words there being taken from Deut. 32. 36. but in the ſame place, or in the following verſe. So chap. 2. 13. I will put my truſt in him, Iſ. 8. 17. Καὶ πάλιν, And again, ver. 18. Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me.

Ver. 34. [x] Τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, my bonds.] Were this certainly the true reading, it would fairly prove St Paul the author of this epiſtle; but the other reading, Τοῖς δεσμοῖς συνεπαθήσατε, you had compaſſion of them that were bound, is more likely to be the true reading; for ſo reads the Alexandrian, and two other manuſcripts, the Syriac, the vulgar Latin, and St Chryſoſtom.

Ibid. Γινώσκοντες ἔχειν ἐν ἑαυτοῖς κρεῖττονα ὑπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ μένουσαν.] Note, that Origen, in his book de martyrio, omits the words ἐν ἑαυτοῖς; that Clemens of Alexandria (q) reads ἑαυτὸς; that ſome read inſtead of it ὑμᾶς, and that all the ancient verſions follow this reading: note alſo, that all the Greek fathers read ἐν οὐρανοῖς, which two various readings make the Greek run clear and ſmooth. See Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 36. [x] Τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, the promiſe.] That is primarily the recompenſe of reward, mentioned, ver. 35. So, chap. 11. 39. ἐπαγγελία, the promiſe is the ſame with the recompenſe of reward, ver. 26. the things not ſeen, but hoped for, which are the objects of our faith, ver. 1. But then this epiſtle being directed to the believing Jews, who had both from their prophets and from our Lord, a promiſe, that in the great and terrible day of the Lord, whoſoever ſhould call upon the name of the Lord ſhould be ſaved, Joel 2. 32. and that the εὐαγγελιζόμενοι ὑπὸ Κύριος πρόσκλησιν, i. e. they whom the Lord had called by his goſpel, ſhould be delivered, ibid.; that when the day was to come that burned like an oven, then was the Sun of righteouſneſs to riſe on them that feared him, with healing in his wings, Mal. 4. 1. 2.; that he who endured to the end, ſhall be ſaved, Matth. 24. 13. and to whom it was ſaid, Hab. 2. 3. 4. The viſion is, עוד למועד, yet for a time then, now for a very little time, ὑπόμεινον αὐτὸν, with patience wait for him (the Meſſiah, ſay the Jews), for he that cometh will come, and will not tarry. "Wait "for him," ſay the Jews (r), לקבל שכר, to receive your reward: Chriſt alſo having taught them by a parable, that God would come ἐν τάχει, ſpeedily to avenge his elect who cried unto him, under proſecutions, day and night, Luke 18. I believe, that the receiving this promiſe verified to them, which tended ſo excee lingly to confirm their faith, might be here intended, eſpecially if we conſider that the apoſtle could not properly affirm of our Lord's coming to judgment, that it was μικρον ὁσον ὁσον, a very very little while, and he would come, and would not tarry.

Ver. 37. ὁ ἐρχόμενος.] This is the peculiar title given to the Meſſiah by the Jews, as we learn from the Baptiſt's queſtion to him, Σὺ εἶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος; Art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another? Matth. 11. 3. and from the Hoſanna's of the Jews, ſung to him in theſe words, Bleſſed be ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Matth. 21. 9. And the Jews do not only interpret this paſſage of him, but alſo encourage themſelves to wait for him, by this very argument of the apoſtle, שכר לקבל, That they may receive their reward; for Bleſſed (s), ſay they, are all that hope in him, Iſ. 30. 18.

Ver. 38. ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, if any man draw back.] The Reverend Dr Hammond hath ſhewed from Phavorinus, and from Acts 20. 20. 21. Gal. 2. 12. that this word ſignifies to draw back, refuſe, and fly from a thing; and ſo the object of it, being here faith, muſt ſignify, his flying from, and drawing back from the faith, or refuſing ſtill to profeſs it; and ſo, as it follows, muſt be, his drawing back unto perdition; and becauſe this is uſually done from fear of perſecution, hence it is joined with fear, Gal. 2. 12. Peter ὑπέστελλεν ἑαυτὸν, withdrew himſelf, fearing the circumciſion; and ſometimes is put to ſignify fear; ſo, Deut. 1. 17. μὴ ὑποστείλῃ πρόσωπον ἀνθρώπου, you ſhall not be afraid of the face of man; and becauſe mens cowardly fears make them to hide, diſſemble, and play the hypocrite, hence it is reckoned by Julius Pollux (t), among the words which ſignify to conceal and hide; and, by Heſychius and Suidas, is rendered ὑποκρίνεται, δολοῦται, he plays the hypocrite, and deals deceitfully; all which, in things which do reſpect our God, and our religion, are pernicious to the ſoul; eſpecially if we conſider, that he that draws back, ſtands oppoſed, ver. 39. to him that believeth, and therefore is an unbeliever; and ver. 38. to him that liveth by his faith, and therefore can have none, or only a dead faith. And laſtly, that God here ſolemnly declares, his ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him, and then he muſt ſtill lie under his ſad diſpleaſure.

Note, 2*dly*, That ἐὰν δὲ ὑποστείληται, refers plainly to the juſt man, the man who lives by his faith; and in the prophet, to him that is with faith and patience to wait for the accompliſhment of the viſion; and ver. 39. the ὑποστολήν, the drawer back ſtands oppoſed to him that believeth to the ſalvation of his ſoul. The words do therefore plainly ſuppoſe, that the juſt man who liveth by that faith, in which, if he perſiſted, he would ſave his ſoul, may draw back unto perdition. And this is alſo evident from the enſuing words, My ſoul ſhall take no pleaſure in him; for they do plainly intimate, that God took pleaſure in him before his drawing back; for otherwiſe this threat would ſignify nothing, the Lord taking pleaſure in no man but in juſt men only, and ſuch as live by faith.

Note, 3*dly*, That ἐὰν δὲ may be rendered, not hypothetically, and if, but cum vero ſemet ſubſtraxerit, but when he ſhall draw back; which I have ſhewn to be the common import of the Greek ἐὰν, note on chap. 3. 15. But if we read them hypothetically, the ſuppoſition cannot be of a thing impoſſible; for then God muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak thus, "If the juſt man do that which I know is impoſſible "for him to do, and which I am obliged by pro- "miſe to preſerve him from doing, my ſoul ſhall "have no pleaſure in him;" which is to make God ſeriouſly to threaten men for ſuch a ſin, of which they are not capable, and of which they are engaged to believe they are not capable, if they believe the doctrine of perſeverance, and ſo to threaten them to none effect.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. NOW (the) faith (by which the juſt man lives, chap. 10. 38.) is the [a] ſubſtance (or, the firm expectation) of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen, (i. e. by which we are confirmed in the truth of them.)

2. For by it the elders (i. e. the fathers before and ſince the flood) obtained a good report, (or, teſtimony from God, left on record in the holy ſcriptures.)

3. Through (that) faith (which is the evidence of things not ſeen) we underſtand that the worlds (the lower, middle, and ſuperior worlds; ſee note on chap. 1. 2.) were framed [b] by the word of God, ſo that (the) things (of them) which are ſeen were not made of things which do (did then) appear, (but ἐκ τῶν ἀοράτων, of things not then viſible, Gen. 1. 2.)

4. By faith Abel offered to God [c] a more excellent ſacrifice than (that of) Cain, by which (faith) he obtained witneſs, (i. e. a teſtimony from God), that he was righteous, (or accepted by him), [d] God teſti-

fying (his acceptance) of his gifts; and by it he being dead, yet ſpeaketh; (i. e. declareth by his faith, that God is a rewarder of the righteous, though they die.)

5. By (virtue of this) faith (that God would reward thoſe that ſerve him, though in this world he might not do it) Enoch was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death; and [c] was not found (on earth), becauſe God had tranſlated him (from it): for before his tranſlation he had this teſtimony (from God, Gen. 5. 22. 24.), that he pleaſed God.

6. [f] But without (this) faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe him: for he that cometh to God (in a way of duty), muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek (to pleaſe) him. (To believe that he is, relates to that faith which is the evidence of things not ſeen; for God is inviſible: to believe that he is a rewarder, to that faith which is the expectation of things hoped for.)

7. By faith Noah being warned by God of things not ſeen as yet, (i. e. of a future deluge), moved with fear (of what God threatened), prepared an ark to the ſaving of his houſe (from that deluge); by the which he condemned the (old) world, (which would not believe his prediction of this deluge), and became [g] heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith.

8. By faith (in God's promiſe) Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he ſhould after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went, (no, not ſo much as what the land of promiſe was; God's firſt command unto him being only this, Get thee into a land which I ſhall ſhew thee, Gen. 12. 1.)

9. By faith (Gen. 12. 7. 13. 15.) he ſojourned in the land of promiſe, as in a ſtrange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Iſaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the ſame promiſe; (it being renewed to Iſaac, Gen. 26. 3. and to Jacob, Gen. 28. 13.)

10. [h] For (God having ſaid unto him, I am thy ſhield, and thy reward ſhall be exceeding great, Gen. 15. 1.) he looked for a city which hath foundations, (an heavenly one, ver. 16. which cannot be ſhaken, Heb. 12. 28.), whoſe builder and maker is God; (it being, not a building made with hands, as thoſe on earth, but eternal in the heavens, 2 Cor. 5. 1. Heb. 9. 11.)

11. By faith alſo Sarah herſelf (who at firſt believed not, Gen. 18. 12. after that the Lord had renewed the promiſe to her, ſaying, At the time appointed I will return unto thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah ſhall have a ſon, ver. 14.) received ſtrength to conceive ſeed, and was delivered of a child when ſhe was paſt (the ordinary) age (of bearing children), becauſe ſhe judged him faithful who had promiſed.

12. Therefore ſprang there even of one, and him as good as dead, (his body being dead; and the womb of Sarah dead, as to the procreation of children, Rom. 4. 19.), ſo many as the ſtars of the ſky in multitude, and as the ſand which is by the ſea-ſhore innumerable), according to God's promiſe, Gen. 15. 5. and 22. 17.)

13. Theſe all (forementioned that died, or all theſe patriarchs) died in faith, not having received the [i] promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, and were perſuaded of them, and embraced them (as certain), and confeſſed that they (themſelves) were (only) ſtrangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14. (I ſay, they died in faith, or in firm expectation, not only of theſe temporal, but of ſpiritual and heavenly promiſes): for they that ſay ſuch things, (viz. that they, even in the land of promiſe, are pilgrims and ſtrangers), declare plainly that they ſeek a country, (where they may reſt, and dwell, when this their pilgrimage on earth is ended.)

15. And truly, if they had been (only) mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned (to it, i. e. from Canaan and Egypt, to Ur of the Chaldeans):

16. But now (by this profeſſing themſelves ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth, they declared that) they [k] deſire a better country, that is, (not one on earth, where they profeſs they are but ſtrangers, but) an heavenly: wherefore (the) [l] God (of heaven) is not aſhamed to be called their God, (and to own them as his ſons and children), for he hath prepared for them a (heavenly) city.

17. By faith (in God's power, ver. 19.) Abraham, when he was tried, [m] offered up Iſaac, (laying him upon the wood, which was on the altar, Gen. 22. 9.); and he that had received the promiſes (of a numerous ſeed to iſſue from him), offered up his only begotten ſon:

18. (Even him) of whom it was ſaid (by God), That in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called:

19. Accounting that God was able to raiſe him up even from the dead; from whence alſo he received him in a figure, (i. e. from his own dead body, and the dead womb of Sarah, Rom. 4. 19.)

20. By faith (or a firm expectation that God would make good his benediction) Iſaac [n] bleſſed Jacob and Eſau concerning things to come, (Gen. 27.)

21. By (the like) faith Jacob, when he was dying, bleſſed both the ſons of Joſeph, [o] and worſhipped (God, leaning) upon the top of his ſtaff, (by which he was ſupported from falling.)

22. By faith Joſeph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Iſrael (out of Egypt, ſaying, God will ſurely viſit you, and bring you out of this land, Gen. 50. 24.); and gave commandment concerning his bones, (that they ſhould be carried with them when they returned to Canaan, ver. 25. which was an evidence of his faith in the promiſe of God.)

23. By (the) faith (of his parents, that God would ſend them a deliverer) Moſes, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, becauſe they ſaw he was [p] a proper (Gr. comely) child, (and therefore hoped he might be that deliverer God had promiſed); and (therefore) they were not (ſo) afraid of the king's commandment, (as to deliver him up to be ſlain.)

24. [q] By faith (in God's promiſe of a deliverance out of Egypt) Moſes when he was come to years (of diſcretion), refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter;

25. Chuſing rather (by his owning himſelf to be one of them) to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy (in Pharaoh's court) the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon;

26. Eſteeming the [r] reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt: for he had reſpect unto the [s] recompenſe of the reward.

27. By faith he forſook Egypt, [t] not fearing the wrath of the king, (when he purſued after him, Exod. 14. 13.): for he endured as ſeeing him (preſent with them) who is inviſible; (and therefore ſaid unto the people, ver. 30. Fear ye not, ſtand ſtill, and ſee the ſalvation of God, Exod. 14. 14.)

28. Through faith (in God's promiſe, that upon ſeeing the blood of the paſchal lamb upon the upper door-poſts, and the two ſide-poſts of the houſes of the Iſraelites, he would paſs over them, when he ſlew the firſt-born of the Egyptians, Exod. 12. 13. 23.) he kept the paſſover, and (obſerved) the ſprinkling of (the) blood (of it; and this he did), leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born, (See note on 1 Cor. 10. 10.) ſhould touch them.

29. By faith they paſſed [u] through the Red ſea, as by dry land: which the Egyptians eſſaying to do, were drowned.

30. By faith (in God's promiſe, Joſh. 6. 5.) the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compaſſed about ſeven days.

31. [x] By faith the harlot Rahab periſhed not with them that believed not, (which faith ſhe teſtified), when ſhe had received the ſpies with peace.

32. And what ſhall I more ſay? for the time would fail me (ſhould I proceed) to tell of Gedeon, (who, through faith, overthrew the Midianites, Judg. 7.), and of Barak, (who ſlew the Canaanites, Judg. 4.), and of Samſon, (who vexed the Philiſtines); and of Jephthae, (who ſlew the Ammonites, Judg. 11. and) of David alſo and Samuel, and of the prophets:

33. Who through faith ſubdued kingdoms, (as Joſhua and David did), wrought righteouſneſs, (as Abraham, Gen. 15. 6. Phinehas, Pſal. 106. 30. or turned the people from idolatry, into the way of righteouſneſs, as Samuel, 1 Sam. 12. Elijah, 1 Kings 18. 39.), obtained promiſes, (as Abraham and David), ſtopped the mouths of lions, (as Daniel),

34. Quenched the violence of fire, (as the three children, Dan. 3. 17.), eſcaped the edge of the ſword, (as David the ſword of Goliath, 1 Sam. 17. 46. 47. and of Saul; the Jews, the ſword of Haman, Eſth. 4. 14.; Elijah, the ſword of Ahaziah, 2 Kings 1. 15.), out of weakneſs were made ſtrong, (as Gideon was with his three hundred men, Judg. 7. 15.; Samſon, Judges 16. 28.; Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. 20. 12.; Jonathan, 1 Sam. 14. 12.; Job, and Hezekiah, 2 Kings 19.), waxed valiant in fight, (Joſhua, Gideon, David), turned to flight the armies of the aliens, (the Maccabees.)

35. Women received their dead raiſed to life again, (the widow of Zarephath, 1 Kings 17. 20. the Shunamite, 2 Kings 4. 36.): and others were tortured, (Eleazar, 2 Mac. 6. 28.), not accepting a deliverance, (ver. 26. 30.); that they might obtain a better reſurrection, *(*2 Mac. 7. 9. 11. 14. 23. 29. 36.)

36. And others had trial of cruel mockings, *(*2 Mac. 7. 7. 10.), and ſcourgings, (μαστιγώμενοι, Joſ. 12. 7. 2 Maccab. 6. 30. and 7. 1. 37.), yea moreover, of bonds and impriſonment, (as Joſeph, Samſon, Jeremiah.)

37. They were ſtoned, (as Zechariah, 2 Chron. 24. 21.), they were ſawn aſunder, (σώματα λυμαινόμενοι, Joſh. ibid. Iſaiah, by Manaſſeh, ſee Buxt. lex. p. 1360.), [y] were tempted, (or, ἐπυράσθησαν, they were ſcorched and fried, 2 Maccab. 7. 5.), were ſlain with the ſword, (1 Maccab. 2. 38.): they wandered about in ſheep-ſkins and goat-ſkins, (Elijah, 1 Kings 19. 13. 19. 2 Kings 2. 8. 14.), being deſtitute, (as Elijah when fed by crows, 1 Kings 17. 4.), afflicted, tormented, (Gr. evilly intreated, 1 Kings 19. 10.):

38. (And though they were men) of whom the world was not worthy; (yet) they wandered in deſerts, (1 Mac. 2. 29.), and in mountains, (ver. 28.), and in dens and caves of the earth, *(*2 Mac. 6. 11.)

39. And theſe all having obtained a good report through faith, (μαρτυρηθέντες, having obtained a teſtimony from God, or from his word, that they pleaſed him through faith, notwithſtanding) [z] received not the promiſe (of an heavenly country, ver. 13. 16. not the recompenſe of reward, ver. 26. not the better reſurrection, ver. 35.):

40. God having provided (Gr. foreſeen) [aa] ſome better things for us, (and ſo deferring the completion of that promiſe, till we alſo ſhould be made partakers of it), [bb] that (ſo) they without us ſhould not be made perfect.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XI.

Verſe 1. [a] Ὑπόστασις τῶν ἐλπιζομένων.] The word ὑπόστασις in the Old Teſtament, anſwers either to the Hebrew תִּקְוָה, which ſignifies expectation, as Ruth 1. 12. ἔστι μοι ὑπόστασις; Have I any expectation of an huſband? Ezek. 19. 5. ἀπώλετο ὑπόστασις αὐτῆς, her expectation was loſt: or to the word תּוֹחֶלֶת, which is of the ſame import, as Pſal. 39. 7. ἡ ὑπόστασίς μου παρὰ σοί ἐστι, my expectation is from thee; Pſal. 89. 47. It alſo bears the ſame ſenſe in the New Teſtament, ſignifying there a confidence of expectation, as 2 Cor. 9. 4. Leſt we ſhould be aſhamed ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως, in this confidence of boaſting; and chap. 11. 17. That which I ſpeak, I ſpeak not after the Lord, but as it were fooliſhly, ἐν τῇ ὑποστάσει ταύτῃ τῆς καυχήσεως, in this confidence of boaſting; and in this epiſtle, chap. 3. 14. We are made partakers of Chriſt, if we hold τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστάσεως, the beginning of our confidence firm to the end. And this import of the word accords beſt with the inſtances of this faith that follow, they being ſuch as generally conſiſted in the expectation of ſome future good, which, ſaith the apoſtle, they have not yet received completely, ver. 39. Hence it is that I render the words thus, Faith is the confidence, or firm expectation of things hoped for.

Ver. 3. [b] Ῥήματι Θεοῦ, by the word of God;] that is, as the comparing this with ch. 1. 3. ſhews, by the word of the divine Λόγος. So Philo, ſpeaking of the framing of the heaven and earth, ſaith, Τὸ γὰρ περιφανεστάτῳ καὶ τελαυγεστάτῳ ἑαυτοῦ λόγῳ, ῥήματι ὁ Θεὸς ἀμφότερα ποιεῖ, God made them both by his illuſtrious and ſplendid Logos, with a word, Leg. alleg. l. 1. p. 33. G. And of Moſes he ſaith, That dying, he did not ἐκλείπειν, ceaſe to be, nor was he gathered to the moſt, as others, ἀλλὰ διὰ ῥήματος τοῦ αἰτίου μετανίσεται, δι' οὗ καὶ ὁ σύμπας κόσμος ἐδημιουργεῖτο, but he was tranſlated by the word or command of that cauſe, by which the whole world was made. L. de ſacrif. Abel et Cain, p. 102. C. Now, whether this ῥῆμα be the word of the Father ſpeaking to the Son, or Logos, or the word of the Logos, ſaying, Let them be made, and they were made; it is hence evident, that this Logos muſt be a perſon, and not an attribute. See the note on Heb. 1. 3.

Ver. 4. [c] Πλείονα θυσίαν, a more excellent ſacrifice.] Philo, in his diſcourſe on this ſubject, de ſacr. Cain et Abel, p. 107. makes the defect of Cain's ſacrifice to conſiſt in two things: 1ſt, That he did not offer it ſoon enough, but μετ' ἐμέρας, after certain days. 2dly, That he did not offer of the firſt-fruits of the earth, as did Abel, of the firſt-fruits of his ſheep, but only of the fruits; but there is no ground for either of theſe things in the text, which ſeems to intimate, that they both offered at the ſame time; nor doth it ſay that Cain offered not of the firſt-fruits of the earth. The apoſtle here plainly diſcovers, that the thing which gave the preference to Abel's ſacrifice above that of Cain's was his faith, viz. that faith which is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, or his expectation or perſuaſion that God would certainly reward thoſe who diligently endeavour to pleaſe him, in this or in the other world. Accordingly the Targum of Jeruſalem, and Jonathan B. Uziel upon the place declare, "That Cain de-"nied that there would be any future judgment or "rewards hereafter to the juſt; and that Abel did "maintain the contrary, that there ſhould be a fu-"ture recompenſe for the righteous." And this he, being dead, yet preaches by his faith; for this faith, which God ſo ſignally approved of, and confirmed with ſo great a teſtimony, he will not ſuffer to go unrewarded, as he muſt do in one ſo quickly ſlain, becauſe God thus preferred his ſacrifice before his brother's, if he did not reward him in the other world. And therefore Philo ſays, that ſeeming to die as to this corruptible life, ζᾷ τὸν ἄφθαρτον, καὶ τὸν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζῶν εὐδαίμονα, he lived the incorruptible and bleſſed life in God. L. quod. deter. &c. p. 127. C. D. To ſay, as do the fathers, "He yet ſpeaketh, becauſe "he is ſtill celebrated in the world," is to ſay nothing proper to Abel, that being alſo true of all the other patriarchs; and to refer this to "the cry of "his blood for vengeance," is to refer to that which ſeemeth not to be the commendation of his faith, by which the apoſtle here declares he ſpeaketh.

Ibid. [d] Μαρτυροῦντος, God teſtifying upon his gifts;] that is, ſaith Theodotion, ἐπέχοντος, "he cauſed fire "to deſcend from heaven and conſume his ſacri-"fice, and thereby teſtified his acceptance of it." So he diſcovered his acceptance of the ſacrifice of Abraham, Gen. 15. 17. and of the ſacrifices of Aaron, Lev. 9. 24. of Gideon, Judg. 6. 21. of David, 1 Chron. 21. 26. of Solomon, 2 Chron. 7. 1. and of Elijah, 1 Kings 18. 38. And accordingly the prayer of the Iſraelites for their king runs thus, The Lord remember all thy offerings, and turn to aſhes thy burnt-ſacrifice, Pſal. 20. 3. To this agrees the interpretation of R. Solomon and Aben Ezra, among the Jews; of Oecumenius and Theophylact on the place: and St Jerom (u) confirms it by this inquiry, "Whence could Cain know that God accepted the "ſacrifice of Abel, and rejected his, if the interpre-"tation of Theodotion was not true?"

Ver. 5.

Ver. 5. • Οὐκ ἐυρίσκετο, was not found on earth, becauſe God had tranſlated him.] God killed him not, ſaith Onkelos; and this we may ſufficiently learn from the ſtory, Gen. 5.; for of all the reſt mentioned in that chapter, it is ſaid, they died, but of him this is not ſaid, but only that he was not, becauſe God took him, ὅτι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς, becauſe God tranſlated him, ſaith the Septuagint, the book of Wiſdom, and the ſon of Syrach, Wiſd. 4. 10. Ecclus 14. 44. Moreover, it is ſaid of Noah, and of Abraham, that they walked with God, Gen. 6. 9. 17. 1. but it is not ſaid that they were not, becauſe God took them: this phraſe muſt therefore import ſomething which happened not to them. Many of the Hebrew doctors ſay, that he was taken into heaven, or into paradiſe: He was taken into heaven by the word of the Lord, ſaith the Targum of Jonathan; He was tranſlated into paradiſe, ſay the Arabic and Æthiopic verſions; God ſhewed him the tree of life, ſay R. Menechem and Zoar, in 2 Kings 2. 1.; He tranſlated him into paradiſe, ſay Kimchi and Menaſſeh Ben Iſrael (x). Hence Munſter on the place ſpeaks thus, Aſſerunt noſtri hunc Enoch cum corpore et anima tranſlatum eſſe in paradiſum. To be tranſlated, ſaith Philo (y), is μετοικίαν τυλαθαι τὴν ἀπὸ θνητῆ βίυ πρὸς τὸν ἀθάνατον, to go from this mortal to an immortal life. The ſame was the opinion of the ancient fathers, of Irenæus (z), and of Pſeudo-Juſtin (a), who ſaith, "that they who roſe with Chriſt are with "Enoch and Elias ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, in paradiſe." See others cited for this opinion by Feuardentius upon Irenæus. Note, laſtly, that this tranſlation into paradiſe was the fruit of his faith, that faith which was the expectation of things hoped for, and that God would reward his diligence in ſeeking him; for ſince he by this faith obtained this teſtimony that he pleaſed God, God could not take him hence in diſpleaſure, but out of favour to him.

Ver. 6. ' In this ſixth verſe we have the Heathens creed, that God is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him; without which the apoſtle declares, 1. That it was impoſſible for them to pleaſe God, and ſo God muſt either have laid upon them no obligations to pleaſe him, or required what he knew to be impoſſible, or given them ſufficient means to know this. 2. That they could have no ſufficient motives to ſerve him, or to come unto him in expectation of his bleſſing upon them that did ſo, and therefore the Heathens embraced this as a principle of natural religion, "That God could not ſuffer it "to go ill with good men, either in life or death, "but would be ſure to take care of, and provide "good things for them." Thus Socrates (b) requeſts his judges, to receive this as a certain truth, "That "a good man, living or dying, can be ſubject to "no evil, becauſe the gods never neglect his affairs;" and this is commended by Cicero (c), and by Jamblichus (d), as the great principle which philoſophy ſuggeſts, as an encouragement to virtue, "that "if we believe that nothing is concealed from God, "we muſt believe that which happens to the friend "of God happens for the beſt; and that what ſeeming evils happen to him, will do him good in this "or in the other life: for he can never be neglected by the gods, who is deſirous to be a virtuous "and good man, and as like to God as he is able; "but περὶ τῶ ἀδίκυ τἀναντία τύτων δεῖ διανοεῖσθαι, of the "wicked and unjuſt man we are to believe juſt the "contrary." And this again Jamblichus (e) delivers as a great principle of philoſophy, "That if we believe there is a God, who is Lord of all things, "we muſt own, that whatſoever is good and honeſt, "muſt be aſked of him; for all men give good "things to them they love and rejoice in, and the "contrary to them to whom they are diſaffected; "and therefore much more will the gods do ſo." Another principle alſo founded in the nature of man, and laid down by them as the foundation of all religion, was this, That if piety were not advantageous to them, no man would embrace it, it being natural to all men to purſue their advantage, and to decline the contrary. So Arrian (f) upon Epictetus lays down this for an axiom, "That if piety and profit "did not go together, piety would be preſerved in "none; the reaſon is, becauſe nothing is ſo natural to us as to affect and purſue our own advantage, ſo that if you place what is holy and juſt "in that which profits, you preſerve them; but if "you ſeparate what is honeſt from what is advantageous, you deſtroy what is juſt and honeſt, as "being weighed down by profit (g)." Simplicius adds, "That where is profit, there we place our

And this they learned from their maſter Epictetus (i), who lays the foundation of all religion upon this principle, That where profit is, there is piety. And he, perhaps, from Plato, who lays it down for an axiom, that τὸ μὲν ὠφέλιμον καλὸν, τὸ δὲ βλαβερὸν αἰσχρὸν, what was good was profitable, what evil hurtful.

See note on Gal. 3. 29. and on Heb. 1. 14.

Ver. 10. ᵇ Thy exceeding great reward.] Thus the Jeruſalem Targum and that of Jonathan interpret this phraſe, " Fear not, the reward of thy " works ſhall be great in the world to come." " So " ought we," ſaith Theophylact, " to look to " things above, and make no great account of " thoſe on earth."

Ver. 12. Καὶ ταῦτα.] Some manuſcripts read τοῦτο, but all the Greek ſcholiaſts read καὶ ταῦτα, being, according to the cuſtom of the Greek language, uſed by way of amplification, and ſignifying idque, is well rendered by our tranſlation, and that.

Ver. 13. ⁱ Τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, the promiſes.] Here note, that theſe words, καὶ πεισθέντες, and were perſuaded, are neither to be found in the ancient verſion, nor the Greek commentators. 2. That the promiſes here mentioned, as not received by theſe patriarchs, cannot be temporal promiſes; for ἅτοι πάντες, all theſe, as it cannot be referred to the whole Jewiſh offſpring, ſince many of them, as the apoſtle has obſerved, chap. 3. 18. 19. chap. 4. 2. 6. 11. died in unbelief; ſo neither to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob only; for, 1ſt, They are not all that died in faith; and, 2dly, The ſame is ſaid of all in general, ver. 39. ἅτοι πάντες, theſe all died in faith, not having received the promiſe. Now, we find no temporal promiſe made to Abel, and to Enoch, and that temporal promiſe which God made to Noah, he fulfilled. 2. The text ſaith, They embraced them, confeſſing they were ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth; whence the apoſtle makes this inference, that they ſought another country, that is, an heavenly; which makes it neceſſary to conceive, that the promiſes here mentioned, as not received, were, as Oecumenius ſaith, τὰ ἐπουράνια, heavenly promiſes; τὰ περὶ τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν, καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως, the promiſe of the kingdom of heaven, and the reſurrection, ſaith Theophylact. Thus Philo (k) ſaith, Οἱ κατὰ Μωυσῆν σοφοὶ πάντες ὡς ἀπόγονται παρῳκηκότες, All the wiſe men are introduced by Moſes as ſtrangers, their ſouls coming from heaven to travel here on earth, and that they deſire to return thither; πατρίδα μὲν τὸν οὐράνιον ἐν ᾧ πολιτεύονται, ξένον δὲ τὸν περίγειον ἐν ᾧ παρῴκησαν νομίζοσαι, looking upon heaven as the city where they dwell, and the earth in which they travel as their place of pilgrimage. And again, Πᾶσα μὲν ψυχὴ σοφῶ πατρίδα μὲν οὐρανὸν, γῆν δὲ ξένην ἔλαχε, The ſoul of every wiſe man looks on heaven as his country, the earth as the place of his pilgrimage. De agric. p. 153. So did Abraham, ſaying, I am a ſtranger and a ſojourner with you, Gen. 23. 4. And Jacob calling the time he lived here, the years of his pilgrimage, Gen. 47. 9. So David ſaying, I am a ſtranger with thee, and a ſojourner, as all my fathers were, Pſal. 39. 12. The ſame he ſpeaks of the whole Jewiſh nation, ſaying, We are ſtrangers before thee, and ſojourners, as were all our fathers, 1 Chron. 29. 15. And this he learned out of the law, where God ſpeaks thus to them, Lev. 25. 23. The land is mine, for ye are ſtrangers and ſojourners with me, παροίκιον μου, ſaith the Septuagint. Accordingly the philoſophers taught, " that to die was to go into our " country, πρὸς τὴν πατρίδα τὴν ἀληθινὴν ὅθεν ἤλθομεν, to " the true country whence we came." Simpl. in Epict. p. 77.

Ver. 16. ᵏ Κρείττονος ὀρέγονται, they deſire a better country.] The ancient Jews declare, " that the " earthly Canaan was a type of the ſpiritual Ca- " naan, and the promiſe of living in it for ever, " was a parable repreſenting their future happineſs " in the world to come." It is written, " (l) All " Iſraelites have their portion in the world to " come, as it is ſaid, And thy people ſhall be all juſt, " they ſhall inherit the land for ever," Iſ. 60. 21. " This land," ſaith Maimonides (m), " is a parable, " as if he ſhould ſay, the land of the living; and " that is the world to come." And R. Menachen on Gen. 12. refers it to " the land which is above, " watered with waters which are above." If they received this parabolical interpretation from the patriarchs, here is the reaſon of their faith and expectation of this better country. Vain here is the interpretation of Mr le Clerc, both upon the 10th and 16th verſe: for, 1ſt, A city which has foundations, is, ſaith he, Jeruſalem; whereas in Abraham's time there was no ſuch city that he could expect, nor was that a city which could not be ſhaken, Heb. 12. 28. it having been long ſince deſtroyed: nor was it a city whoſe builder and maker was God, but man. Again, he expected a better country, that is, an heavenly, i. e. the land of Canaan, which was an antitype of heaven; ſo Mr le Clerc, in flat contradiction to the apoſtle, ſaying, the country they expected was not that from whence they came out, ver. 14. 15. i. e. was not Canaan, but an heavenly country; and he adds, God had provided for them a city, not Jeruſalem ſure, but an heavenly city.

Ibid. [l] Οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται, God is not aſhamed to be called their God;] i. e. the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob. To be their God, and their Father, is the ſame thing. Thus Jer. 31. 1. I will be the God of all the families of Iſrael; ver. 9. is thus varied, I am a Father to Iſrael. I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people, 2 Cor. 6. 16. is, ver. 18. I will be a Father to you, and you ſhall be my ſons and my daughters. To be ſons of God, is to be heirs of God, Rom. 8. 17. to be ſons of the reſurrection, Luke 20. 36. to inherit all things, Apoc. 20. 7.; and the υἱοθεσία, or adoption promiſed by God, is the redemption of the body from corruption. See note on Matth. 22. 31. 32. and on Rom. 8. 17. 23.; and this is the reaſon why God, taking upon himſelf the title of their God and Father, anſwers this title, by preparing for them a city.

Ver. 17. [m] Προσενήνοχεν, he offered up Iſaac.] So ſpeaks the New Teſtament twice here, and James 2. 21. So the Jews conſtantly. Philo (n) informs us, that though the fact was not perfected, " yet it " was preſerved in the minds of the readers, and " mentioned in the ſacred volumes as a thing en- " tire, and abſolutely done." And to this day they pray, " (o) That God would be gracious to them for " the merit of the ſacrifice of Iſaac," according to the prayer which both the Targum of Jeruſalem, and Jonathan mention on Gen. 22. 14. as made by Abraham, to this effect, viz. " I beſeech thee, O " God, by thy mercies, that when the ſons of Iſaac " ſhall offer to thee in the time of their neceſſity, " thou wilt be mindful of this binding of Iſaac." Hence have they framed this ſtory, " (p) That when " the knife touched the throat of Iſaac, his ſoul de- " parted, and that when God ſaid, Lay not thy hand " upon the lad, it returned, and ſo he being dead, " revived." And truly Abraham having done all that belonged to him to do towards this offering his ſon, and being fully reſolved to have gone through the work, had not God's call reſtrained him, may well be ſaid, in the divine conſtruction, to have actually done it; and to this ſome refer Abraham's receiving Iſaac from the dead in a figure, he being thus ſnatched from the jaws of death, and reſtored to him when he expected nothing but his death.

Ver. 20. [n] Εὐλόγησε τὸν Ἰακὼβ, bleſſed Jacob.] It may be inquired how he could bleſs Jacob by faith, when he knew not that it was Jacob? To this I anſwer, That to the bleſſing him by faith, it was not neceſſary he ſhould know him to be the perſon he intended thus to bleſs, but only that he ſhould feel the divine afflatus, or the ſpirit of prophecy upon him when he bleſſed him, that being ſufficient to confirm him, that his benediction ſhould be eſtabliſhed by that God before whom he bleſſed him, and who guided his lips and his heart in it: and though we have tranſlated it as a prayer, it moſtly runs in the future tenſe, and may wholly be tranſlated as a prophecy, and ſo it muſt be uttered in faith. And whereas it is objected farther, that Iſaac thought he was bleſſing Eſau; now ſo to bleſs him as to make him lord over his brother, ver. 29. could not be ſpoken in faith, becauſe the oracle had before declared to Rebecca, that the elder ſhould ſerve the younger. I anſwer, 1ſt, That this rather is an argument againſt the truth of his benediction, than the faith of it; it rather proves that Iſaac ſhould not thus have bleſſed Eſau, than that he believed not what he ſaid: but indeed it proves neither; for Iſaac might feel ſuch a ſtrong afflatus upon him as might convince him that his benediction was derived from the gift of prophecy, and ſo would certainly be accompliſhed, whomſoever it concerned. 2dly, The learned Biſhop of Ely on ver. 4. anſwers, that either Rebecca had not acquainted Iſaac with the oracle, or it ſeems he did not underſtand it as Rebecca did.

Ver. 21. [o] Καὶ προσεκύνησεν, and worſhipped] God, for the aſſurance he had of being buried in the land of promiſe, which he deſired out of faith in the promiſe God had made to him, Gen. 28. 13.

St

St Stephen, ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, of a very excellent beauty, Acts 7. 20.; μορφῇ θείος, of a divine form, ſaith Joſephus (q); of an angelical form, ſay the Jews (r); he was, ſaith Juſtin, one quem formæ pulchritudo commendabat, renowned for his beauty. Joſephus alſo adds (s), that an Egyptian ſcribe, to whoſe predictions they gave great credit, had foretold one ſhould be born of Iſrael, "who, if he came to age, "ſhould grievouſly afflict the Egyptians, and bring "out the Iſraelites from among them; and that "God had by a viſion declared to Amram, that this "child to be born to him ſhould deliver the Iſrael-"ites out of Egypt;" which, if true, gives a farther ground of their faith.

Ver. 24. [q] Joſephus informs us, that when Pharaoh had put the crown upon his head, adopting him as the ſon of his daughter, to be his ſucceſſor, "he let "the crown fall to the ground, and ſtamped upon "it with his feet." But the words μέγας γενόμενος being the very words uſed, Exod. 2. 11. where it is ſaid, It came to paſs, that when Moſes was grown, he went out unto his brethren, the apoſtle doubtleſs had relation to them, and interpreted his going out unto them to be his owning himſelf to be one of them. It came into his heart, ſaith Stephen, to viſit his brethren, Acts 7. 23. i. e. to join himſelf to the afflicted Jews.

Ver. 26. [r] Τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν, the reproach of Chriſt.] The ſeed of Abraham, even before they went down to Egypt, are ſtyled the chriſts of God, Pſal. 105. 15. μὴ ἅψησθε τῶν χριστῶν μου, touch not my chriſts. And the prophet Habakkuk ſpeaking of God's judgments upon Pharaoh, and God's deliverance of them from him, ſaith, ἐξῆλθες εἰς σωτηρίαν λαοῦ σου τοῦ σῶσαι τὸν χριστόν σου, thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy people, to preſerve thy chriſt, Hab. 3. 13.; ſo that the reproach of Chriſt may be the reproach of the people of God, ver. 15. Moreover, the reproach which he and they ſuffered was for their faith in the promiſed ſeed, and that was Chriſt, Gal. 3. 16. on which account it might be truly ſtyled the reproach of Chriſt, as the afflictions of the apoſtle are ſtyled the afflictions of Chriſt, Col. 1. 24. and he himſelf the priſoner of Chriſt, Eph. 3. 1. as being the reproach he ſuffered for his faith in the promiſed ſeed, which was Chriſt.

Ibid. [s] Photius here ſaith, "the reproach of Mo-"ſes may be called the reproach of Chriſt, as being "ſuch as Chriſt ſuffered," ὅτιος ὁ Χριστὸς ἔπαθε; in which ſenſe we are bid to go forth to him without the camp bearing his reproach, chap. 13. 13. Betwixt this and the following verſe ſome Latin copies inſert theſe words, Fide magnus factus Moſes occidit Egyptium, conſiderans dolorem ſuorum, which Dr Mills thinks genuine, though they are neither owned by any of the verſions, nor any of the Greek commentators.

Ibid. Εἰς τὴν μισθαποδοσίαν, the recompenſe of reward,] here mentioned, could not be temporal; for Moſes came not into the land of Canaan, nor could he expect any greater bleſſing in that kind than he might have had in Egypt. He therefore muſt have reſpect to ſome ſpiritual and heavenly recompenſe.

Ver. 27. [t] Μὴ φοβηθεὶς, not fearing.] It is expreſsly ſaid, that Moſes, when he fled from the face of Pharaoh, feared, Exod. 2. 14.; and it is farther evident from theſe words of God to him, Go, return into Egypt, for all the men are dead that ſought thy life, chap. 4. 19. And therefore they who refer this to that flight, ſay, He did not fear his wrath, ſo as to diſtruſt the providence of God in working a deliverance to his people by his hand: but his unwillingneſs, when God commanded him, to go back to Egypt, confutes this gloſs. Others ſay, he feared not the wrath of the king, when he ſaid unto him, Take heed to thyſelf, ſee my face no more; for in that day thou ſeeſt my face, thou ſhalt die, Exod. 10. 28. But then he had not forſook Egypt, and when he went from it, he did ſo by the command of Pharaoh, Exod. 12. 31. and ſo needed not to fear him. Againſt the expoſition given in the paraphraſe, it is objected, that it agrees not with the order of the words, becauſe the paſſover mentioned, ver. 28. was kept in Egypt. But this objection will be of little force, if we conſider, that other things are mentioned in this chapter out of the order in which they were performed: thus, ver. 32. Gideon is mentioned before Barak, and Samſon before Jephtha, as alſo, ver. 33. 34. 35. 36.

Ver. 29. [u] Through the Red ſea.] That this they truly did, ſee note on 1 Cor. 10. 1.

Ver. 31. [x] She teſtified her faith, not only by preſerving thus the ſpies, but by ſaying to them, I know that the Lord hath given you this land, Joſh. 2. 9. and again, The Lord your God he is God in heaven above, and on earth beneath, ver. 11.

Ver. 37. [y] Ἐπειράσθησαν.] That this is not the right reading, may eaſily be gathered from this one conſideration, that after two ſuch great puniſhments, as ſtoning, and being ſawn aſunder, it is very improper to introduce their being tempted, which ſignifies no certain kind of puniſhment at all, and is included in all the other puniſhments, here mentioned. Some therefore read ἐπυρώθησαν, ſome ἐπυρώθησαν, ſome ἐκρίθησαν, all ſignifying, they were burnt: which reading agrees well with the ſtory of the Maccabees, where they bring Eleazer and the young men ἐπὶ τὸ πῦρ, καταφλέγοντες αὐτοὺς, to the fire, and burnt their flesh; so that Josephus (from c. 6. to c. 12.) saith they were ὡς ἐπὶ πυρὶ μετασχηματιζόμενοι εἰς ἀφθαρσίαν, as one might say, translated in the fire to incorruption. But yet I prefer the opinion of those who think this was an error arising ἐκ διπλογραφίας, from writing the same word twice, or rather that some who knew not what ἐπρίσθησαν meant, writ for it ἐπιρράσθησαν, and so in time they came to be both written, because the Syriac hath not ἐπιρράσθησαν. (t) Eusebius cites St Paul's words thus, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον. (u) Tertullian paraphrases them thus, "Hieremias lapidatur, "Esaias secatur, Zacharias inter altare et ædem "trucidatur." (x) Clemens of Alexandria reads thus, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπιρράσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ, &c. which gives just ground to conjecture that some ignorant writer put ἐπιρράσθησαν for ἐπρίσθησαν. This fault is very visible in the transcriber of Origen (y); for in his 4th homily on Jeremy, we read in the Greek ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐπιρράσθησαν, but in the old translation there is only, fecti, occasione gladii occubuerunt. And in the 15th homily (z), ἄλλον ἐλιθοβόλησαν, ἄλλον ἐπρίσθησαν, ἄλλον ἐπέκτειναν, which shews that Origen did not own the word ἐπιρράσθησαν: and though we find the word again in his homilies on St Matthew (a), yet whosoever reads the place will find that Origen takes no notice of it, but proceeds immediately from ἐπρίσθησαν, to ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, saying, the word ἐπρίσθησαν refers to Esaias, and the words ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, to Zacharias: in the fourth dialogue against Marcion, p. 125. he proves, that the prophets were not phantoms, but men consisting of flesh and blood, because ὁ μὲν ἐπρίσθη σαρκί, ὁ δὲ ἐλιθάσθη, οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον, one of them was sawn asunder, another was stoned, and the rest were killed by the sword: and in his exhortation to martyrdom, p. 232. he adds, "The writer of the epistle to the He- "brews saith, ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας "ἀπέθανον, they were stoned, they were sawn asun- "der, they were slain with the sword." From all which places it is evident, that ἐπρίσθησαν was the reading followed by the ancients.

Ver. 39. [a] Οὐκ ἐκομίσαντο τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, or, as some copies read, τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, received not the promises.] These words being the same with those in ver. 13. of this chapter, All these died in faith, μὴ λαβόντες ἐπαγγελίας, not having received the promises; it is reasonable to interpret them to the same sense, viz. of their not having received the heavenly kingdom, and blessed resurrection they expected. And so the whole current of this epistle will force us to interpret them; for it is the promise of entering into rest after we have ceased from our labour here on earth, chap. 4. 1. 10. the promise of an eternal inheritance, chap. 9. 15. the promise we are to receive after we have patiently done the will of God, chap. 10. 36.

Ver. 40. [bb] Κρεῖττόν τι περὶ ἡμῶν, some better thing concerning us.] viz. Our hope of entering into the vail, by reason of our forerunner entering in thither first, chap. 6. 19. 20. We having an high priest higher than the heavens, chap. 7. 26. set on the throne of Majesty in the heavens, chap. 8. 1. who by his death hath procured, that they which are called might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance, chap. 9. 15. and who hath, by his entrance into this holy place with his blood, purified and prepared these holy places for us, ver. 23. 24. the way into which was not opened before, ver. 8. and given us freedom of entrance into the holiest through the blood of Jesus, by this new way which he hath consecrated through his flesh, chap. 10. 20. we being therefore come to Mount Sion, the city of the living God, to the heavenly Jerusalem, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, chap. 12. 22.

Ibid. [bb] Ἵνα μὴ χωρὶς ἡμῶν τελειωθῶσι, that they without us may not be made perfect.] This all the fathers interpret of their receiving their crowns or their rewards hereafter. Thus of Abel and Noah, St Chrysostom saith, That they might not be crowned before us, ἵνα ἀρτι πᾶσι τῶν στεφάνων καιρὸν, God hath appointed one time of coronation for them all. Οὐδέπω τῶν στεφάνων ἐπλάνυσαν, "they have not yet obtain- "ed their crowns," saith Theodoret. "God expect- "ing still those that are to combat, that he may "proclaim them victors all together." Origen (b) having cited this place, saith thus: "You see that "Abraham yet expects to obtain perfection, yea "Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets expect us, "that with us they may obtain perfect bliss." Yea he says the same, not only of all the saints of the New Testament, but even of the blessed apostles, saying, (c) "Even the apostles have not received "their joy, but wait that I might be partaker "with them; nor do the saints departed obtain the "full reward of their good actions." Nor did the primitive fathers mean this only of their bodies, but also of their souls, which they conceived not to be exalted to the highest heavens; saying that they had not yet received their full reward, yea that they were not to expect it till the day of judgment. See note on 2 Tim. 4. 8. and therefore I cannot but wonder to hear a very learned perſon in his note on this place ſaying, "It will be acknowledged by all, that then (i. e. at our Saviour's reſurrection) the patriarchs received this promiſe, or that the ſufferers here mentioned then received it;" eſpecially when the apoſtle here ſaith, they were tortured, not accepting a deliverance, that they might obtain a better reſurrection, which ſure they have not yet obtained: and I more admire that this ſhould by him be interpreted of deliverance from their perſecutors, and reſt from perſecutions. For is this promiſe fulfilled to Chriſtians? to them who, if they will live godly, muſt ſuffer perſecutions? and through many tribulations enter into the kingdom of God? And do they who were thus tortured, find this perfection with us? Or had they any other reſt or freedom from them, than what death gave them? Surely the expoſition of all the ancient fathers is much to be preferred before this new and ſingular invention; as alſo before the new doctrine of the Florentine council, "That the ſouls of "ſaints departed do already behold the face of "God in heaven."

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. WHerefore ſeeing we alſo are compaſſed about with ſo great a [a] cloud (i. e. a multitude) of witneſſes, let us (who are to run our Chriſtian race) lay aſide every weight (of worldly cares and affections), and the [b] ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet (and circumvent) us, (and ſo hinders our feet from making a due progreſs in it), and let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us,

2. [c] Looking unto Jeſus (who by his prophetic office was) the author and (by his regal office will be the) finiſher of our faith; who for the [d] joy that was ſet before him, (as the reward of his ſufferings), endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame (of it), and (therefore) is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God.

3. For conſider him who (being ſo excellent a perſon, and ſo dear to God, yet) endured (patiently) ſuch contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, (ſuch blaſphemies againſt his doctrine, ſuch calumnies againſt his perſon, ſuch malicious and unwearied attempts againſt his life), [e] leſt ye be wearied and faint in your minds, (under the conflict of afflictions ye endure.)

4. For which fainting you have no ſuch cauſe as this Captain of ſalvation, and this cloud of witneſſes are; for) [f] ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood, (as they did), ſtriving againſt ſin.

5. And (by your proneneſs to grow weary, and even faint under the combat) you (ſeem to) have forgotten the exhortation which ſpeaketh to you as to children, (thus), My ſon, [g] deſpiſe not thou (be not ſlothful and diſpirited under) the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him, (Prov. 3. 11. 12.)

6. For whom the Lord loving he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth (into that relation.)

7. If ye (then) endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as (a father) with (his) ſons: for what ſon is there whom the father chaſteneth not (for his offences?)

8. [h] But if ye be without (ſuch) chaſtiſement, whereof all (ſons) are partakers, then are ye (treated as) baſtards (whom the reputed parent diſregards), and not (as) ſons (whom he loves, ver. 6.)

9. Furthermore, (εἶτα, and if) we have had fathers of our fleſh, which corrected us, and (yet) we gave them reverence, (and honour, in expectation of the long life promiſed to them that do ſo, Exod. 20. 12.): ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection to the [i] Father of (our) ſpirits, (who gives and who recalls our ſpirits at pleaſure), and (ſo) live (everlaſtingly?)

10. For they verily [k] for a few days chaſtened us after their own pleaſure, (Gr. as ſeemed beſt to them); but he (our heavenly Father doth it) for our (own) profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs.

11. (Nor let it diſcourage you that theſe afflictions ſeem grievous to the fleſh, πᾶσα δὲ.) For no chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth joyous, but grievous (to it): nevertheleſs, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, to them that [l] are exerciſed thereby, (i. e. thoſe fruits of righteouſneſs which end in peace.)

12. Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down, (as if wearied with, and giving over the combat), and (ſtrengthen) the feeble knees, (which ſeem unable to ſtand firm, and run on this race with patience; ſee note on ver. 3.)

13. And (ſo) make (ποιήσατε, ye will make) [m] ſtraight paths for your feet, (to walk in); leſt that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed: (Gr. ἵνα μὴ, that that which is lame may not be turned out of the way, but rather may be healed.)

14. (And in order thereunto), [n] follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord:

15. Looking diligently, let any man [o] fail of the grace (Gr. ὑστερῶν ἀπὸ, fall from the grace) of God;

leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled:

16. Leſt there be any fornicator, or profane perſon (among you, ſuch) as (was) Eſau, who for one morſel of meat ſold his [p] birth-right.

17. For ye know how that afterwards when he would have inherited the bleſſing (he had loſt), he was rejected (by his father, ſaying of Jacob, I have bleſſed him, and he ſhall be bleſſed): for he found no place of repentance, (no change of the bleſſing pronounced by his father), [q] though he ſought it carefully with tears, (crying with an exceeding great and bitter cry, Gen. 27. 34.)

18. For ye (believing Jews) are not come (as your forefathers when they entered into the old covenant with God) unto the mount that might be touched, (and ſo you might die, Exod. 19. 12.), and that burned with fire, (Gr. to the burning fire, Deut. 5. 23.), nor to the blackneſs and darkneſs, (cauſed by the cloud, ſtyled νεφέλη γνοφώδης, Exod. 19. 16.), and (to the) tempeſt (of thunder and lightning, Deut. 5. 22.),

19. And the ſound of a (the) trumpet, (exceeding loud, which made the people tremble, Exod, 19. 16.), and the (great) voice of words, which (was ſo terrible, that) they that heard (it), intreated that the word ſhould not be ſpoken to them any more, (leſt they died for it, Exod. 20. 19. Deut. 5. 25. 18. 16.):

20. For they could not endure [r] that which was commanded, (that ſevere cautionary command which runs thus), And if ſo much as a beaſt touch the mountain, it ſhall be ſtoned, or thruſt through with a dart.

21. And ſo terrible was the ſight, that [s] Moſes ſaid, I exceedingly fear and quake.

22. But ye are come (under the goſpel-diſpenſation, to things of a more excellent nature, not apt to terrify and diſcourage, but create joy and comfort to you; not as then to Mount Sinai, but) to mount Sion, (whence you expect all your ſpiritual bleſſings; not the terreſtrial Jeruſalem, which is in bondage with her children, Gal. 4. 25.), but to the city of the living God, [t] the heavenly Jeruſalem, (not to thouſands of angels attending on God as at Mount Sinai, Pſal. 68. 17. but) to an [x] innumerable company of angels (miniſtering to them who ſhall be heirs of ſalvation, Heb. 1. 14.),

23. (And) to the general aſſembly and church (not of the Jews, and of the firſt-born regiſtered amongſt them, Numb. 1. 16. but) [y] of the firſt-born, who are written in heaven, [z] and to God (now declared to be) the judge of all, (Acts. 17. 30. 31.), [aa] and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, (who have run their race, and are to be crowned at the great day, 2 Tim. 4. 8.),

24. And to Jeſus the mediator (not of the old covenant, which promiſed only the land of Canaan, but) of the new covenant, (eſtabliſhed in his blood, by which we receive the promiſe of an eternal inheritance, Heb. 9. 15.), and to the [bb] blood of ſprinkling, [cc] which ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel.

25. [dd] See (therefore) that ye [ee] refuſe not him that ſpeaketh (now by his Son to you): For if they eſcaped not (God's ſevere judgments) who refuſed him that ſpake on earth (by Moſes), much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh (by his Son coming down, and by his Spirit ſent down) from heaven, (1 Pet. 1. 12.):

26. [ff] Whoſe voice then ſhook the earth (when the law was given, Exod. 19. 18. Pſal. 68. 8.): but now (under this diſpenſation) he hath promiſed (yet a farther ſhaking), ſaying, [gg] Yet once more (at the making my new covenant) [hh] I ſhake not the earth only, but alſo heaven, (Hag. 2. 7. 8.)

27. And this word, Yet once more, ſignifieth the removing of thoſe things that are ſhaken, as of things that are made, that thoſe things which cannot be ſhaken may remain.

28. Wherefore we receiving (the promiſe of) a kingdom that cannot be moved, (or ſhaken, or give place to another), [ii] let us have (or retain that) grace, whereby (alone) we may ſerve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear.

29. For our God is (to the diſobedient and rebellious among us, as he was to them, Deut. 4. 24. 9. 3.) [kk] a conſuming fire.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XII.

Verſe 1. [a] Νέφος, a cloud,] For a multitude, is a phraſe uſed by Homer, who calls a multitude of footmen νέφος πεζῶν, which Virgil (d) thus tranſlates, inſequitur nimbus peditum: this cloud of witneſſes, therefore, contains all the worthies mentioned in the former chapter, who by their words and actions have teſtified how much the objects of their faith were valued before all worldly things, and how equitable it was to endure afflictions, not accepting a deliverance, that they might obtain a better reſurrection.

Ibid. [b] Τὴν ἐυπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, the ſin that eaſily beſets us.] The apoſtle being here ſpeaking of the Chriſtian's race, this phraſe is beſt interpreted with relation to it; and ſo it muſt reſpect the ſin which cleaves to our affections, which are the feet of the

ſoul, like a long garment wrapt about us, and ſo hinders the running of our Chriſtian race: for it is either our affection to, and our deſire of what we ought not to deſire or affect at all, or which we ought not comparatively to affect or deſire, which gives the riſe and prevalence of all temptations to ſin, and renders ſelf-denial ſo exceeding difficult: he therefore requires us to put off this ſin as racers did their garments, running naked, that without hinderance we may run our Chriſtian race.

Ver. 2. [c] Ἀφορῶντες, &c. looking to Jeſus.] As an example of patience under ſufferings, fit to be imitated by his diſciples, and as one glorioufly recompenſed in his human nature, for the ſufferings he ſuſtained in it, and as one who will give to us the ſame happy repoſe after our ſufferings; he having, as the author of our faith, promiſed, and being able, as the finiſher of our faith, to confer that glorious recompenſe, chap. 10. 35. 36.

Ibid. [d] Ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης αὐτῷ χαρᾶς, for the joy ſet before him.] That ἀντὶ is uſed for the final cauſe, appears from theſe examples in the New Teſtament: He gave himſelf a ranſom ἀντὶ πολλῶν, for many, Mat. 20. 28. Render not evil ἀντὶ κακοῦ, for evil, Rom. 12. 17. Her hair was given ἀντὶ περιβολαίου, for a covering, 1 Cor. 11. 15. Ἀντὶ τούτου, For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother. And here, ver. 16. ἀντὶ βρώσεως μιᾶς, for one morſel of bread he ſold his birth-right. See 1 Theſſ. 5. 15. 1 Pet. 3. 9. Note alſo, that the apoſtle goes on in his agoniſtical terms, and having ſpoken, ver. 1. of the προκείμενον ἡμῖν ἀγῶνα, the race before us to run, he here ſpeaks in the ſame language, of the joy ſet before our Saviour in his race; that is, of the βραβεῖον, the prize, or crown placed in his view for his encouragement to run it: it being the cuſtom in thoſe games, (e) "to hang the crown at the end of the goal, that "he who came firſt to it, might ſnatch it, or lay "hold of it." The joy ſet before him, muſt therefore be the proſpect of that majeſty and glory, power and dominion, he in his human nature was to be inveſted with, as the reward of theſe his ſufferings: He for the ſuffering of death being crowned with majeſty and honour, Heb. 2. 9. God having therefore highly exalted him, and given him a name above every name, Phil. 2. 9. And thus we have juſt cauſe to look upon him as an example of faith and patience, and of God's eſpecial favour to them that ſuffer for his ſake.

Ver. 3. [e] Ἵνα μὴ κάμητε ἐκλυόμενοι, leſt you be wearied and faint in your minds.] Theſe alſo are two agoniſtical terms. The one ſignifies to be weary, as in thoſe words of C. Marcius (f), Νικώντων δὲ οὐ δεῖ τὸ κάμνειν, "Conquerors muſt not be weary, and ſo give over "the fight;" the other to faint, and be diſpirited, ſo that we can run, or fight no longer: and becauſe in thoſe combats they fought ὀρθοστάδην, ſtanding upright, and χεῖρας ἐκτείνοντες, ſtretching out their hands; therefore the apoſtle exhorts them in their ſpiritual combat, to ſtretch out the hands that hang down, and ἀνορθοῦν, to erect their feeble knees, ver. 12. Faber. Agon. l. 1. c. 8.

Ver. 4. [f] Ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι μέχρις αἵματος, Ye have not reſiſted unto blood.] This is another agoniſtical expreſſion belonging to the pugiles, who were oft beſmeared with blood, and ſometimes died under the blows they received from the clubs of their adverſary. Faber. Agon. l. 1. c. 7.

Ver. 5. [g] Μὴ ὀλιγώρει.] Ὀλιγωρεῖν is, ſay Phavorinus and Heſychius, ἀμελεῖν, ῥαθυμεῖν, "to be unregardful "of, to be ſlothful;" ὀλιγωρος μικρόψυχος, to be creſt-fallen, ἀναπίπτειν, animo concidere, to faint, and be diſpirited. Τὸ ἀναπίπτειν, κυρίως ἐπὶ ψυχὴν ἔστιν οἷον ἀθυμεῖν ὀλιγωρεῖν, Athen. Deipnoſ. l. 1. p. 23. B.

Ver. 7. God dealeth with us, as with his ſons.] Here the note of Chryſoſtom is this, That from thoſe things whence men uſually conclude they are deſerted by God, the apoſtle ſhews, that God demonſtrates his fatherly affection to them.

Ver. 8. Hence the Jews ſpeak thus, Wo to the man who goeth out of the world without tribulations, Buxt. lex. p. 1528.

Ver. 9. [i] Τῷ πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων, to the Father of ſpirits.] This phraſe is not here put to ſignify the author of our new ſpiritual birth; for ſpiritual graces and diſpoſitions are never called πνεύματα, ſpirits, in ſcripture; nor is the Holy Spirit, who produceth them, ever mentioned in the plural, when they are ſpoken of. It is plainly an Hebrew phraſe, uſed twice by Moſes, when he ſpeaks thus to God, O God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, Numb. 16. 22. And again, Let the Lord, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, ſet a man over the congregation, Numb. 27. 16. And he is ſo ſtyled, both as the Creator of them, or that God who formeth the ſpirit of man within him, Zech. 12. 1. and the preſerver and governor of them; the God in whoſe hand is the ſoul of all living, and the ſpirit of all fleſh of man, Job 12. 10. and into whoſe hands they do return at death, Eccl. 12. 7. according to that old tradition of the Heathens, preſerved in Epicharmus (g), That man dying, ἀπῆλθεν ὅθεν ἦλθε πάλιν, γᾶ μὲν εἰς γᾶν, πνεῦμα δ' ἄνω, "returns

(e) He did, ſaith Plutarch, καθελεῖν τὸν στέφανον κρεμάμενον. Περὶ φιλοπλουτίας, p. 523. And I run, ſaith the apoſtle, διώκω, ἐπὶ τὸ βραβεῖον, Phil. 3. 14. Fab. Agoniſt. l. 2. c. 27.

" from whence he came, his earthly part to the " earth, his ſpirit upwards:" And the tradition of the Hebrews, that in the time of our diſſolution, (b) " God comes, and takes away his part, and leaves " the part of our father and mother," ſtyled here, " The fathers of the fleſh." Joſephus (i) ſaith, That at the formation of Adam, " God made man out of " the earth, and ſent into him a ſoul and ſpirit." Philo (k) ſaith, That " his body was indeed made of " earth, ſhaped into human form, but his ſoul was " only derived from the maker and governor of all " things;" and this was ſignified by theſe words, He breathed into him the breath of life; ſo that though according to his viſible part he was mortal, as to his inviſible he was immortal: Hence ſaith the Targum of Jonathan, on Numb. 16. 22. and 27. 16. " It is God that putteth the ſpirit of the " ſoul in the bodies of all men:" and the Targum of Jeruſalem, " It is God who ruleth over the ſouls " of all fleſh." See Pug. Fid. p. 401.

Ver. 10. [k] Πρὸς ὀλίγας ἡμέρας, for a few days,] Seems not here to refer to the days of childrens minority, for that makes nothing to the purpoſe of the apoſtle's argument; and the motive to ſuffer divine chaſtiſements, uſed by the ſcripture, is, not that they are long, but that they are but for a very little while, Heb. 10. 17. momentary, 2 Cor. 4. 17. ὀλιγον ἀρτι, but for a little, 1 Pet. 1. 6. nor is κατὰ τὸ δοκὲν αὐτοῖς, after their pleaſure, but, as it ſeemed good to them. This therefore ſeems to be the meaning of the words, That earthly parents chaſtiſe their children, aiming at that which ſeems beſt for them in this preſent life, conſiſting of few days, or for their temporal good in this life; but God doth it for their ſpiritual and eternal benefit, to make them here partakers of his holineſs, and ſo to fit them for the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs hereafter.

Ver. 11. [l] The word γεγυμνασμένοις, uſed here, ſhews that the phraſe is agoniſtical, and taken from the exerciſes performed by them naked in the Olympic games, where one of the crowns given to the victors being στέφανος ἐλαινὸς, of olive, the ſymbol of peace: hence Faber conceives, the Chriſtian's crown is here repreſented by the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs.

Ver. 13. [m] Τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς, ſtraight paths:] i. e. Make ſtraight paths in the way of Chriſtianity, not ſtepping out of it to avoid perſecution; that they who are already lame and feeble, may not be moved, by your example, to go out of it, but rather, by your conſtancy in it, may be confirmed.

Ver. 14. [n] Be of a pure and peaceable converſation, towards all with whom you do converſe; for as this is neceſſary in order to your living with God, ſo will it tend much to prevent the perſecutions of men.

Ver. 15. [o] That ὑστερεῖναι is the ſame with ἀφίστασθαι, to depart from the grace of God, which brings ſalvation, or, to depart from the faith, and, by ſo doing, fall ſhort of the promiſed reſt, Heb. 4. 1. the words of the apoſtle, and his ſcope, which is to preſerve the Jews from backſliding from Chriſtianity to Judaiſm, and the following exhortation, not to refuſe him, that ſpeaketh now, ver. 25. and ἔχειν τὴν χάριν, to retain and hold faſt the grace of God, ver. 28. ſufficiently ſhew. But this is ſtill more clear from the words of Deut. 29. 18. whence this whole verſe is taken, which runs thus, μὴ τίς ἐστιν ἐν ὑμῖν ---- τοῦ ἡ διανοία ἐξέκλινεν ἀπὸ Κυρίου, leſt there be among you any man or woman whoſe heart turneth away from the Lord our God, to go and ſerve the gods of the nations, μὴ τίς ἐστιν ἐν ὑμῖν ῥίζα ἄνω φύουσα ἐν χολῇ καὶ πικρίᾳ, leſt there ſhould be among you a root ſpringing with gall and wormwood; which makes it probable, that the true reading here ſhould be, not ἐνοχλῇ, but ἐν χολῇ; though it be certain that the word ἐνοχλεῖν ſignifies " to " create trouble to ourſelves, or others," as Dan. 6. 21. Eſth. 2. 22. 29. and in thoſe words of Antoninus, l. 7. § 16. Τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν αὐτὸ ἑαυτῷ ἐνοχλεῖ, doth not the mind create trouble to itſelf? See the full conſent of the ancients to the word ἐνοχλῇ, which is here rejected by Dr Mills, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 16. [p] Πρωτοτοκία, the birth-right,] Which Eſau ſold, contained theſe privileges: 1. A double portion of his father's goods, Deut. 21. 17. 2. Power and dominion over the younger: for he ſucceeded in the government of the family, or kingdom: Reuben, thou art my firſt-born, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power, Gen. 49. 3. The kingdom gave he to Jehoram, becauſe he was the firſt-born, 2 Chron. 21. 3. This Iſaac gave to Jacob in theſe words, Be thou a maſter to thy brethren, and let thy mother's ſons bow down to thee, Gen. 27. 29. 3. The honour of prieſthood in their own family at leaſt: ſo Exod. 24. 5. He ſent the young men (Chald. the firſt-born) of the ſons of Iſrael, and they offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed ſacrifices to Jehovah. Afterwards the Levites were taken into the ſervice of God, inſtead of all the firſt-born among the children of Iſrael, Numb. 3. 41. conſecrated before to God, Exod. 22. 29. Numb. 8. 17. Gen. 25. 29. This birth-right Eſau ſold, when he was faint, ἐκλιπων, and this ſhews how proper this inſtance is to preſerve them from being wearied and fainting in their mind.

The Targum of B. Uziel ſaith, That he was made faint by committing idolatry, ſhedding innocent blood, and going in to a damſel betrothed that day; and this ſhews him a fornicator, both in the ſpiritual and carnal ſenſe, and a profane perſon. And laſtly, Mercer ſaith, Primogenituram hereditatem cæleſtem adumbraſſe, that "the primogeniture was "a type of their celeſtial inheritance:" which alſo ſeems to be hinted by the paraphraſes on the place; for that of Uziel ſaith, "He denied the life of the "world to come, and contemned his birth-right;" and the Targum of Jeruſalem, That "he contemn-"ed his birth-right, and deſpiſed his part in the "life to come, and denied the reſurrection:" and Chryſoſtom here ſtyles him, ἀκρατὴς καὶ πνευματικὰ ἀτιμάζειν. And as this ſhews his profaneneſs, ſo alſo doth it ſhew the appoſiteneſs of his example to the apoſtle's purpoſe.

Ver. 17. [q] Ἐκζητήσας μετὰ δακρύων αὐτὴν, though he ſought it carefully with tears.] Though theſe words thus expounded, do not immediately prove that true repentance may find no acceptance with God, (that which Eſau ſought with tears, being not his own repentance, but the bleſſing which Eſau gave to Jacob, and would not repent of, Gen. 27. 33.); yet are they deſigned to inſinuate, that men may ſo deſpiſe the bleſſings of Chriſtianity, as to be after thought unworthy to enjoy them; that by their apoſtaſy they may fall ſo entirely from God, as that he will not be prevailed on to reſtore them to their loſt and deſpiſed privileges, upon their tears and faſtings; as is apparent in the caſe of the Jews, who have large times of penance and humiliation, but are not to this day reſtored to the grace and favour of God, and to the privilege of being his peculiar people, and firſt-born, as once they were.

Ver. 18. Ψηλαφωμένῳ ὄρει, to the mountain that might be touched.] And therefore was corporeal, and terrene, and by being touched after the prohibition, Exod. 19. 12. would procure preſent death: but you are come to the ſpiritual and heavenly Zion, which will certainly give life to all that belong to it.

Ver. 20. [s] Τὸ διαστελλόμενον.] Διαστέλλομαι ſignifies, to command with vehemence, or ſeverity, Matth. 16. 20. Mark 5. 43. and 8. 15.

Ver. 21. [t] Μωϋσῆς εἶπεν, Moſes ſaid.] This, interpreters think, St Paul received by tradition of his anceſtors, though no footſteps of this tradition have been found among them. But doubtleſs the apoſtle had reſpect to Deut. 9. where, ver. 15. Moſes ſees the mount burning up to heaven, and ver. 9. 19. ſaith, Ἔκφοβός εἰμι, I exceedingly fear.

Ver. 22. [u] Σιὼν ὄρει, to mount Zion.] All the good things, bleſſings and comforts which God will give to Iſrael, are only out of Zion, ſay the Jews, Vajikra rabba, § 24. Midraſh. Tillim. ad pſalm. 14. Hence came their ſtrength, Pſal. 110. 2. and help, Pſal. 20. 2. bleſſings, Pſal. 128. 5. and life, Pſal. 133. 3. and ſalvation, Pſal. 14. 7.

Ibid. [x] Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ, to the heavenly Jeruſalem,] Which is the mother of us all, Gal. 4. 26. where our city is, Phil. 3. 20. This the Rabbins call "the "Jeruſalem of the age to come, to be built in the "days of the Meſſiah;" ſaying alſo, That "the inſe-"rior Jeruſalem is a figure of that which is above;" (ſee note on Gal. 4. 26.). And it is here ſtyled, the heavenly Jeruſalem; not that heaven is primarily intended by it, and not the church of Chriſt on earth, but propter originem, et finem, as having its riſe from heaven, and as leading to it; on which account the goſpel-ſtate is ſtyled oft the kingdom of heaven.

Ibid. [y] Μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων, to myriads of angels.] The glorious citizens of heaven, who attend at the throne of God, to whom we are united, they being made one with us, in Chriſt, Eph. 1. 10. and to whom we are reconciled by him, Col. 1. 20.

Ver. 23. [z] Πρωτοτόκων, of the firſt-born;] i. e. Of the apoſtles who received the firſt-fruits of the Spirit, Rom. 8. 23. and of the churches which received firſt the Chriſtian faith, Eph. 1. 12. whoſe names are written in heaven, i. e. who are inrolled among the citizens of the new and heavenly Jeruſalem, or among the juſt, for whom the kingdom is prepared. In this rejoice, ſaith Chriſt, that your names are written in heaven, Luke 10. 20. Thus, Exod. 32. 32. Moſes, by the Targum, is introduced ſpeaking thus, "I know thou haſt writ my name in the book "of the juſt:" and of the falſe prophets, the Targum on Ezek. 13. 9. ſaith, "They ſhall not be writ-"ten in the book of eternal life, which is written "for the juſt of the houſe of Iſrael;" and into this kingdom they only are to enter, whoſe names are thus inrolled in the book of life, Rev. 21. 27.

Ibid. [a] Καὶ κριτῇ Θεῷ, and to God the judge of all;] Who will adjudge the crown of glory to thoſe who have fought the good fight of faith, 2 Tim. 4. 8. who run this race with patience, 1 Cor. 9. 24. 25. and will give them the kingdom prepared for them, Matth. 25. 34. Luke 12. 32.

Ibid. [aa] And to the ſpirits of juſt men τετελειωμένων, made perfect.] This word here cannot well ſignify them who are crowned in the agoniſtical ſenſe; becauſe the apoſtle, in the former chapter, had aſſerted of thoſe witneſſes which died in faith, That they had not yet received the promiſe, and were not to be crowned before us Chriſtians; and ſaith, That he himſelf expected to receive his crown only at the great day, 2 Tim. 4. 8. But it ſignifies, either that they had fulfilled their courſe, and ſo reſted from their labours and conflicts, as Chryſoſtom here ſaith, and ſo have nothing more to do, but to receive their crown: or, in the other ſenſe of the word, τελειωθῆναι, "to be made perfect in holineſs," or to be perfectly purged from all guilt of ſin, and ſo fit to be admitted to this kingdom: in which ſenſe the apoſtle here denies that there was any τελείωσις, or perfect expiation made by the Levitical prieſthood; the law making nothing perfect, Heb. 7. 11. 16. And that the offerings preſcribed by it, could not τελειῶσαι, make perfect the worſhipper, as to his conſcience, Heb. 9. 9.; that they could not τελειῶσαι εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, perfect him for ever, ſo as that he ſhould need no farther expiation for ſin, Heb. 10. 1. and that Chriſt, by one offering, τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, had perfectly expiated for ever them that were ſanctified, ver. 14. And accordingly the Targum upon 1 Chron. 21. 15. ſaith, "God ſaw the houſe of his ſanctuary, "which is above the heavens, where the ſouls of "the juſt are." And hence it is evident, that the ſouls of juſt men are not reduced by death to a ſtate of inſenſibility: for can a ſoul that reaſons, and perceives good things, be made perfect by perceiving nothing at all? Can a ſpirit, which here enjoyed the pleaſures of a good conſcience, of a life of faith, and of communion with God, and the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt, be advanced to perfection by a total deprivation of all thoſe ſatisfactions and enjoyments?

Ver. 24. [bb] Αἵματι ῥαντισμοῦ, the blood of ſprinkling.] Not that of bulls and goats, with which Moſes ſprinkled the people, when they entered into the old covenant, Exod. 24. 8. and the tabernacle, and the veſſels of the miniſtry, to ſanctify them for the Levitical ſervice; but the blood of Chriſt, by which the heavenly places are purified, and prepared for us, chap. 9. 23. 24. and by which we have entrance into the holieſt, chap. 10. 19. 20. Whereas the blood ſprinkled ſeven times, for their purification under the Old Teſtament, was ſprinkled before the veil, becauſe the prieſts could not enter with it within the veil.

Ibid. [cc] Κρείττονα λαλοῦντα παρὰ τὸν, or, παρὰ τὸ Ἄβελ, which ſpeaketh better things than that of Abel.] Than the blood of Abel; not becauſe that called for vengeance, this for mercy; but than the blood of the ſacrifice of Abel offered by faith, by which God teſtified his acceptance, and by which, he being dead, yet ſpeaks, Heb. 11. 4.: That procuring acceptance for himſelf alone, this, for all believers: that, ſpeaking only for him, and declaring him righteous; this, interceding to God, for the juſtification of all men, through faith in his blood.

Ver. 25. [dd] Χρηματίζοντα, him that ſpeaketh.] This word, both in the Old and New Teſtament, ſignifies ſpeaking as from God, or words proceeding from him. See Jer. 25. 30. and 26. 3. and 29. 23. and 30. 2. and 36. 4. Matth. 2. 22. Luke 2. 26. Acts 10. 22. Rom. 11. 4. Heb. 8. 5. and 11. 7. So, 2 Mac. 2. 4. χρηματισμῷ γενηθέντος αὐτῷ, the prophet being warned of God, commanded that the ark ſhould go with him.

Ibid. [ee] Μὴ παραιτήσησθε, refuſe not.] As they did, ſaith Theodoret, deſiring, ἀντὶ τοῦ Θεὸν τὸν Μωσέα λαβεῖν, inſtead of God to have Moſes; by ſaying, Speak thou to us, and let not God ſpeak to us, Exod. 29. 19.; deſiring not God, but an angel, ſaith Philo on theſe words, De ſomniis, p. 455. E. See note on Col. 2. 19.

Ver. 26. [ff] Οὗ ἡ φωνὴ, whoſe voice.] He ſpeaks here not of the voice of Chriſt, but of the God of Iſrael, who, at his appearance on Sinai, ſhook the earth; of his voice who made the promiſe, that Chriſt, the deſire of all nations, ſhould come. Nor can the apoſtle, or the prophet, ſpeak of Chriſt's ſecond coming, to give new heavens and new earth, by the converſion of the Jewiſh nation: For, 1. This ſhaking was to be the forerunner of the coming of the deſire of all nations, or contemporary with it; now he was to come to fill that very houſe then built with glory, and to make the glory of it greater than the glory of that houſe built by Solomon. The prophet muſt therefore ſpeak of ſhaking antecedent to the deſtruction of the temple. And therefore the apoſtle, ſpeaking of the very thing promiſed in the words of the prophet Haggai, muſt alſo ſpeak of the firſt advent of our Lord. 2. The prophet ſpeaks of a ſhaking which was to happen after a little time, Hag. 2. 7. and therefore not of an advent of our Saviour, after two thouſand years expired, yet to come. And, 3. The apoſtle ſays plainly, That Chriſtians had then received that kingdom, which could not be ſhaken, to give place to another; and upon that grounds his exhortation to them, to retain or hold faſt the grace received, ver. 28. Which ſhews, it was not a kingdom yet to come after one thouſand ſeven hundred years; but that which, throughout the goſpel, is ſtyled the kingdom of God, and of heaven, and is ſaid to be then come unto them, Matth. 12. 28.

Ibid. [gg] Ἔτι ἅπαξ, yet once more.] The word yet ſignifies, that there was yet to be another ſhaking, for the introduction of another covenant, and conſequently for the aboliſhing the firſt; and the word once only, that there ſhould be no more ſhaking, after the introduction of the ſecond covenant.

Ibid. [hh] Ἐγὼ σείω, I ſhake not the earth only, but the heavens, Hag. 2. 7.] The ancient Jews ſpeak of this place thus: "I will give a ſhort glory to the "Iſraelites, and afterwards ſhall the Meſſiah come." Talm. tr. Sanhedr. c. 11. expounding this place of the coming of the Meſſiah, they add, That as the "firſt tabernacle and temple were built and deſtroy-

"ed,

" ed, ſo was the ſecond temple, but the Meſſiah " ſhould build a temple, and God had built a " tabernacle and temple in the heavens, which " ſhould never be deſtroyed," Pug. Fid. p. 304. ad 309.

Now, this ſhaking of the heaven and earth, being to be accompliſhed at the coming of the Meſſiah, or the deſire of all nations, cannot ſignify the removal and ſubverſion of the material heavens and earth, they being not thus ſhaken at Chriſt's coming: but this is a metaphor frequently uſed in the prophets, to ſignify the ſubverſion of a ſtate and kingdom, and of the government which obtains amongſt them; as when the prophet, ſpeaking of the deſtruction of Babylon, ſaith, I will make the heavens ſhake, and the earth ſhall be removed out of its place, Iſ. 13. 13. And of the deſtruction of the Jews, by the Aſſyrians, he uſeth theſe very words, The earth ſhall be moved, and the heavens ſhaken, Joel 2. 10. See Judg. 5. 4. Pſal. 77. 18. Iſ. 24. 19. 20. Thus, at our Lord's coming to deſtroy Jeruſalem, ſay ſome interpreters; to deſtroy antichriſt, as others think; the powers of heaven ſhall be ſhaken, Matth. 24. 30. Mark 13. 25. and Luke 21. 26. Which import of this phraſe being not underſtood by Eſthius, he, without cauſe, rejecteth this interpretation of the word.

2. This ſhaking, being for the removal of things which were ſhaken, and they being not the material earth, muſt ſignify the things which were then introduced with the ſhaking of the earth; i. e. the covenant made, and the worſhip and tabernacle, and other materials then appointed to be made with hands for God's ſervice; which, as the apoſtle, throughout this whole epiſtle, contends, were to be aboliſhed, and to continue only till the time of reformation, chap. 9. 10. and then to give place to that new covenant and diſpenſation, which procured for us an eternal redemption, and an entrance, not into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itſelf.

Ver. 28. ii Ἔχωμεν χάριν.] It is the obſervation of critics here and elſewhere, that ἔχειν, to have, is often put for κατέχειν, to retain, or hold faſt; ſo ἔχειν πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνείδησιν, is to hold faith and a good conſcience, 1 Tim. 1. 19.; ἔχειν τὸ μυστήριον τῆς πίστεως, to hold the myſtery of faith; ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχειν, to hold faſt the form of ſound words, 2 Tim. 1. 13. Χάρις, throughout the whole New Teſtament, doth ſignify the favour and the grace of God, ſo freely tendered to us in the goſpel; (ſee note on 2 Cor. 6. 1.). So that the import of theſe words ſeems to be this: Let us continue ſtedfaſt in that faith and diſpenſation delivered in the goſpel, as being that alone which renders both our perſons and our ſervices acceptable to God; let us not fall from the grace of God, ver. 15.; let us not caſt off our confidence, chap. 10. 35. Let us hold faſt the profeſſion of our hope without wavering, ver. 23. continuing to ſerve God with an holy reverence.

Ver. 29. kk Πῦρ καταναλίσκον, a conſuming fire;] To conſume thine enemies, if thou obey him, and to bring them down before thy face, Deut. 9. 3. but to conſume thee, if thou forget the covenant thou haſt made with him, Deut. 4. 24. This hath relation to the Schechinah, or glorious preſence of God, the ſight of which was like devouring fire, Exod. 24. 17. and from which went out fire to conſume Nadab and Abihu, Lev. 10. 2. and thoſe two hundred and fifty perſons which burned incenſe, Numb. 16. 35. and of which the pſalmiſt ſpeaketh in theſe words, A fire burned in their congregations, the flame burnt up the wicked, Pſal. 106. 18.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. LET brotherly love continue.

2. Be not forgetful to entertain ſtrangers: for thereby ſome (viz. Abraham, Gen. 18. and Lot, Gen. 19.) have entertained [a] angels unawares.

3. Remember them that are in bonds, as (affectionately as if you were) bound with them; and them that ſuffer adverſity, as being yourſelves alſo in the body, (and ſo as being ſubject to the like afflictions.)

4. [b] Marriage is honourable in all (perſons), and (ſo is) the bed undefiled: but (or, wherefore) whoremongers and adulterers [c] God will judge, (i. e. adjudge to condemnation.)

5. [d] Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs; and be content with ſuch things as ye have (at preſent): for he hath ſaid, (Deut. 31. 6. Joſh. 1. 5.), I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee.

6. So that we may boldly ſay, (as the pſalmiſt doth, Pſal. 56. 4.), The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man ſhall do unto me.

7. Remember them which have the rule over you, (Gr. be mindful of your governors, or guides), who have ſpoken to you the word of God: whoſe faith follow, conſidering the end (or cloſe) of their converſation, (with what conſtancy and perſeverance they continued in the faith, and ſealed it with their blood, in hopes of that crown of glory Chriſt had promiſed to them that were faithful to the death.)

8. (Even that) Jeſus Chriſt (who both, as to his doctrine and his promiſes, is) the ſame [e] yeſterday, and to-day, and for ever.

9. Be not carried about with divers and [f] ſtrange doctrines, (i. e. doctrines diverſe from them, and new, i. e. not taught by thoſe guides who ſpake to you the word of God, ver. 7.): for it is a good thing that [g] the heart be eſtabliſhed (i. e. comforted and ſtrengthened) [h] with grace, (i. e. the ſenſe of the divine favour, and the grace brought to us by the goſpel), and not with meats (eaten at the Jewiſh feſtivals, and their peace-offerings), which have not profited (to the purifying of the conſcience from guilt, Heb. 9. 9.) them that have been occupied therein.

10. We (Chriſtians) have (a ſacrifice upon) [i] an altar (that of the croſs) of which they have no right to eat, (or to partake), who ſerve the tabernacle, (i. e. cleave ſtill to the worſhip appointed for the Jewiſh tabernacle.)

11. (The truth of this they may learn from their own inſtitutions concerning ſacrifices); for the bodies of thoſe beaſts, whoſe blood is brought into the ſanctuary by the high prieſt [k] for (a) ſin (offering), are (by the law of Moſes not to be eaten, but) burnt without the camp, (Exod. 29. 14. Lev. 4. 21. and 6. 30. and 16. 27.)

12. Wherefore Jeſus alſo, (our ſin-offering, the perſon typified by theirs offered on the great day of expiation, Lev. 16.), that he might ſanctify the people with his own blood (carried into the heavenly ſanctuary), [l] ſuffered without the gate. (He therefore thus anſwering the type of that ſin-offering, of which neither prieſt nor people were to eat; they who ſtill do adhere to the legal inſtitutions, are by that law excluded from partaking of this ſacrifice.)

13. Let us go forth therefore to him without the camp, (the terreſtrial Jeruſalem, the Jewiſh church, and ſervice), [m] bearing his reproach.

14. For here we (eſpecially, who are thus perſecuted) have no continuing city; but we ſeek one to come, (even the city of the living God, chap. 12. 22.)

15. By him therefore (our high prieſt) let us offer the (Chriſtian) [n] ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, that is, (in the language of the prophet, Hoſ. 14. 2.), [o] the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name.

16. But (and for the other Chriſtian ſacrifices, thoſe of alms) to do good, and communicate, forget not: for with ſuch ſacrifices God is (ſtill) well pleaſed.

17. Obey them that have [p] the rule over you, (your biſhops and paſtors, ver. 24.), and ſubmit yourſelves (to their godly admonitions): for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give an account (to God for them); that they may do it [q] with joy (in the preſence of Chriſt, that they have gained you to him, and built you up in your faith, 1 Theſſ. 2. 19.), and not with grief, (that they could not prevail upon you to live ſuitably to their inſtructions): for that is unprofitable for you, (and pernicious to you.)

18. Pray for us, (for our freedom and ſucceſs in preaching the goſpel, Eph. 6. 19. Col. 4. 3. and our deliverance from the enemies of our faith, 1 Theſſ. 3. 1. 2.): for we truſt we have a good conſcience, in [r] all things (being) willing to live honeſtly.

19. But I beſeech you the rather to do this (now), that I may be reſtored to you the ſooner.

20. [s] Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jeſus, that great Shepherd of the ſheep, through (with) the blood of the everlaſting covenant, (to be offered by him in the heavenly ſanctuary),

21. [t] Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, [u] working in you (by his grace given to, and his Spirit reſiding in you) that which is well pleaſing in his ſight, through Jeſus Chriſt; [x] to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

22. And I beſeech you, brethren, ſuffer the word of exhortation, (to perſeverance with patience in the Chriſtian faith); for I have written a letter to you (of this ſubject) in (as) few words (as the importance of the matter, and my affection to you would permit.)

23. Know ye, that our brother Timothy (ſee the preface) is ſet at liberty; with whom, if he comes (hither again) ſhortly, I will (God willing) ſee you.

24. Salute all them that have the [y] rule over you, and all the ſaints. They of Italy ſalute you.

25. Grace be with you all. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. XIII.

Verſe 2. [a] Ἀγγέλους, angels.] It follows not hence, ſay the commentators here, that all the three perſons which appeared to Abraham were created angels; for one of them being ſtyled by Abraham, the judge of all the earth, Gen. 18. 24. Jehovah, ver. 22.; and Abraham praying to him with ſo great humility, Oh, let not the Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak unto him, who am but duſt and aſhes, ver. 27. 31. it ſeems more proper, with the ancients, to conceive, he at leaſt ſhould be the "the Son of God, the angel of the covenant;" for the word of God, ſaith Juſtin Martyr (l), Καὶ ἄγγελος καλεῖται, καὶ Θεὸς, καὶ Κύριος, καὶ ἀνὴρ, καὶ ἄνθρωπος, Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Ἰακὼβ φανεὶς. Yet ſince, in the opinion of the Jews, they were three angels, (as Ainſworth and Cartwright note upon the place, the apoſtle, writing to them, ſaith no more of them); I rather think, with the Reverend Biſhop of Ely, that it may be granted, that the three that appeared to Abraham were created angels; but then they appeared only as the retinue of the Schechinah, or Divine Majeſty, ſtyled the Lord, ver. 1. and ver. 13. For after the ſame men, who came in, and did eat with Abraham, and roſe from the table, were departed, ver. 16. and 22. Abraham ſtands yet before the Lord, that is, before the Divine Majeſty who appeared to him, ver. 1. and ſtyles him the Judge of the whole earth. And this agrees well with the opinion of the Jews, who, as they acknowledge that the three men whom Abraham entertained were created angels, ſo alſo do they own that there was then a ſeparate appearance, or Divine Majeſty, which talked with Abraham. And this takes off the obſervation of Crellius, and others, on this place, That the name Jehovah is given to angels; for, according to this interpretation, the name Jehovah is not given to any of the three angels which were entertained by Abraham, but only to the Shechinah, or Divine Majeſty, which appeared with them, and ſpake to Abraham, from ver. 10. to 17. and to whom, after the departure of theſe three, one into heaven, and two to Sodom, Abraham ſtill ſpeaks to the end of that chapter.

Ver. 4. [b] Τίμιος ὁ γάμος, marriage is honourable.] It is not worth diſputing, whether theſe words ſhould be rendered as a precept, thus, "Let honourable "marriage, and the bed undefiled, obtain among "all;" or, as our verſion renders them, by way of aſſertion. The obſervation of the ancients upon the place is this, That "marriage is honourable in "all perſons, (m) old and young, and in all things."

Ibid. [c] Κρινεῖ ὁ Θεὸς, God will judge;] i. e. κατακρινεῖ, "he will condemn them;" ſo John 3. 16. God ſent not his Son into the world, ἵνα κρίνῃ τὸν κοσμὸν, that he might condemn the world. He that reſiſteth, ſhall receive to himſelf κρίμα, puniſhment, or condemnation, Rom. 13. 3. So Matth. 23. 14. 1 Cor. 11. 29. 1 Tim. 3. 6. Jud. ver. 4. Mark 3. 29. Luke 23. 40. τέτον κρίναντες, by condemning Chriſt, they fulfilled the voice of the prophets, Acts 13. 27. That the apoſtle here ſhould give theſe cautions againſt the Gnoſtics amongſt the Jews, is ſaid without ground; for no man can prove that any Gnoſtics had been then among them; but they had then the ſect of the Nicolaitans (n) among them, mentioned Rev. 2. 6. 15. who did ἀναίδην ἐκπορνεύειν, fornicate without ſhame, holding "whoredom and adultery to be things indif-"ferent." Moreover, Juſtin Martyr (o) ſaith, That where-ever they travelled, they multiplied to themſelves wives, ὀνόματι γάμε, under pretence of marriage; ſee note on Rom. 2. 22. On which account there was ground ſufficient for this exhortation. Note hence, that "whoredom is a mortal ſin."

Ver. 5. [a] Hence we learn, 1ſt, That we are then covetouſly minded, when we are not content with the things we enjoy at preſent, but are impatiently deſirous of having more.

2dly, That what God promiſes to any of his ſervants, may, in like circumſtances, be applied to them all; for this promiſe, which the apoſtle here makes and applies to all good Chriſtians, was particularly made to Joſhua, chap. 1. 5.

Ver. 8. [e] i. e. Through all times and ages: for, as Philo (p) obſerves, Τριμερὴς γὰρ ὁ χρόνος· ἐκ παρῳχημένου, καὶ ἐνεστῶτος, καὶ μέλλοντος, time conſiſts of three parts, the paſt, preſent, and to come, and theſe three ſignify ἅπαντα τὸν αἰῶνα, all time, or the whole compaſs of it: ſo that as the ſame doctrine of Chriſtianity muſt always be profeſſed by all Chriſtians, ſo the ſame Jeſus is always ready to aſſiſt and reward the ſincere profeſſors of it.

That the apoſtle ſpeaks here, not of their living, but dead guides, will appear, partly from his exhortation to remember them, the living guides being the objects, not of their memory, but ſenſe; partly from the phraſe ἐλάλησαν, who have ſpoken, which intimates they had now left off ſpeaking, and partly from the ἔκβασις, the cloſe, or period of their converſation here on earth, they are exhorted to look back unto their living biſhops, they are commanded to obey, ver. 17. their dead biſhops to remember, ver. 7.; for I think, ſaith Origen on Matthew, ed. Huet. t. 1. p. 420. he who is ſtyled by Chriſt ὁ ἡγούμενος, a guide, Luke 22. 26. is ὁ καλούμενος ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις ἐπίσκοπος, he who is called in the churches a biſhop.

Ver. 9. [f] Διδαχαῖς ξέναις,] I render new doctrines, and therefore ſtrange to the ears of them that hear them firſt; ſo ξένα δαιμόνια are new dæmons, Acts 17. 18. and the apoſtle ſaith, they were not to look upon their fiery trial, ὡς ξένε ὑμῖν συμβαίνοντος, as if ſome new thing had happened to them, 1 Pet. 4. 12.

Ibid. [g] Βεβαιῶσθαι τὴν καρδίαν, that the heart is eſtabliſhed,] is an Hebrew phraſe, ſignifying to comfort, ſtrengthen, and refreſh the heart; ſo Gen. 18. 5. I will fetch a morſel of bread וסעדו לבבכם, and comfort your hearts; Judg. 19. 5. 8. στήριον καρδίαν σε, comfort thy heart with a morſel of bread; of which the pſalmiſt ſaith, that καρδίαν ἀνθρώπε στηρίζει, it ſtrengthens man's heart, Pſal. 104. 15.; whence it is often ſtyled, στήριγμα ἄρτε, Pſal. 105. 16. cients, ἡ τῆς χάριτος διδασκαλία, the doctrine of the goſpel, or of the grace of God tendered in it. The meats here mentioned are the meats eaten in the Jewiſh feſtivals, new moons and ſabbaths, Col. 2. 16. or their peace-offerings and oblations, ſtyled βρώματα, meats, Heb. 9. 10. which feaſts ſome Jewiſh zealots would have obſerved with the Chriſtian feſtivals, viz. their Paſſover and Pentecoſt, 1 Cor. 11. and in the ſame riotous manner, ver. 21. And theſe ſacrifices or peace-offerings they would have ſtill retained, perhaps as being not ſacrifices for ſin, but free-will offerings, and only ſacrifices of praiſe: ſo that the import of theſe words is this, It is good the ſoul or heart be eſtabliſhed, refreſhed, and comforted, not with meats eaten in the Jewiſh feſtivals, or at their euchariſtical oblations, which profit or avail nothing to the peace and quiet of the conſcience, but with the divine favour, and that goſpel-grace by which juſtification and remiſſion of ſins is obtained through the blood of Jeſus, of which they cannot be partakers who ſtill cleave to the legal obſervations.

Ver. 10. [i] Θυσιαστήριον, an altar.] That the altar here ſignifies the ſacrifice offered upon the altar, is plain from this, that of this altar they were to eat: ſo they that eat of the Jewiſh ſacrifices are ſaid to be κοινωνοὶ θυσιαστηρίου, partakers of the altar, 1 Cor. 10. 18. i. e. of the things offered at the altar; and then it muſt import the body of our Lord offered and broken on the croſs; by partaking the memorials of which body, we teſtify our communion with Chriſt and his church, ver. 16. 17.; and of this, ſaith the apoſtle, they have not right to partake who adhere ſtill to the Moſaical oblations.

Ver. 11. [k] Περὶ ἁμαρτίας.] That περὶ ἁμαρτίας ſignifies a ſacrifice for ſin, or a ſin-offering, ſee note on 2 Cor. 5. ult.

Ver. 12. [l] Without the gate.] That ſin-offering which was carried without the camp, whilſt they were in the wilderneſs, when the temple was ſeated at Jeruſalem, was carried without the gate of the city. Maimon. de rat. ſacrif. faciend. c. 7. § 4. Ainſw. in Lev. 6. 30. And this is the reaſon of the variation of the phraſe here.

Ver. 13. Τοίνυν ἐξερχώμεθα.] Some quarrel with the apoſtle for beginning a ſentence with τοίνυν, which it is confeſſed that the beſt Grecians rarely do, but this, ſaith Stephanus, is not without example; and Vigerius notes, τοίνυν initio quidem periodi ponitur, ſed tamen vocem ſequi, that is, it is ſometimes firſt in poſition, but is not ſo in conſtruction.

Ibid. [m] His reproach;] i. e. his croſs and ſufferings, which the perſecuting Jews inflict upon his followers, as they did upon him, perſecuting them even to ſtrange cities, Acts 26. 11. and from city to city.

Ver. 15. [n] Θυσίαν αἰνέσεως, the ſacrifice of praiſe.] The Jews ſay, that in ſeculo futuro, "in the age to "come," (which often ſignifies the age of the Meſſiah), "all oblations ſhall ceaſe, but the oblation of "thankſgiving, which ſhall never ceaſe (q)," and that praiſe is more acceptable to God than all ſacrifices; which they prove from thoſe words of the pſalmiſt, I will not reprove thee for thy ſacrifices, becauſe they were not always before me: offer unto God thankſgiving, Pſal. 50. 23.; He that offereth praiſe, honoureth me. And the Greek commentators obſerve, that the ſacrifices God now requires are unbloody ſacrifices, viz. thoſe of praiſe and thankſgiving, and imitation of Chriſt. So Chryſoſtom and Oecumenius.

Ibid. [o] Καρπὸν χειλέων, the calves of our lips,] Hoſ. 14. 2. So the Jews themſelves interpret theſe words, What ſhall we render for the calves of our lips? Dr Pocock (r) notes, that καρπὸς is here taken for κάρπωμα, which in the Septuagint ſignifies an holocauſt, which being uſually of young bullocks, correſponds to the calves of our lips in Hebrew. So in the ſong of the three children, καρπῶσαι ἐπὶ σε, is to ſacrifice before thee, ver. 14.

Ver. 17. [p] Τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν.] Περὶ ἐπισκόπων λέγει, "he ſpeaks of biſhops," ſay Chryſoſtom, Oecumenius, and Theophylact. Clemens Romanus (s) places them before the preſbyters, ſaying, Τοῖς νόμοις Θεοῦ ἐπηκούσατε, ὑποτασσόμενοι τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν καὶ τιμὴν τὴν καθήκουσαν ἀπονέμοντες τοῖς παρ' ὑμῖν πρεσβυτέροις, "Ye walked in the "laws of God, being ſubject to your guides or ru"lers, and giving convenient honour to your preſ"byters or elders."

Ibid. [q] Μετὰ χαρᾶς, with joy;] that is, ſay others, that they may go on with their work joyfully, which they can only execute with trouble and ſadneſs, when they find you refractory to their admonitions. But theſe words, That they may do it, ſeem plainly to relate to the account they muſt give up hereafter to God.

Ver. 18 [r] Ἐν πᾶσι.] In all times, circumſtances, things, and places. Here is the true teſt of an upright conſcience, that in all times, things, and cafes, it renders us induſtrious to walk exactly according to the rules of righteouſneſs. The want of this ſome of the Jews might ſuſpect in the apoſtle, as not being concerned for the obſervation of the law.

Ver. 20. [s] Theſe words ſeem to expreſs all the three offices of our great Mediator, which are the foundations of all our prayers and praiſes directed to God, and of all the bleſſings we receive or expect from him; his prophetic office, in that he is ſtyled, the great Shepherd of the ſheep; his prieſtly office, in that he is ſaid to be brought again from the dead with the blood of the everlaſting covenant; and his kingly office, in that he is ſtyled our Lord Jeſus.

(q) Pug. fid. part 3. diſt. 3. c. 12. § 14. 15. 16. 17. (r) Ibid. § 20. (s) Epiſt. ad Roman. § 1.

Ver. 21.

Ver. 21. [s] Καταρτίσαι ὑμας, make you perfect.] Here is the duty of every good Chriſtian to be ready for every good work, Tit. 3. 1. doing the will of God from the heart, Eph. 6. 6.

Ibid. Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, working in you, &c.] Here is the power by which we are enabled ſo to do, and the motive to the performance of our duty, viz. the grace of God teaching us, denying all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, to live righteouſly, ſoberly, and godly, in this preſent world; and the expectation of the bleſſed hope and glorious appearance of our Lord, to reward our ſervices, Tit. 2. 11. 12. 13. The love of God the Father, in giving up his Son to the death for us; and of Jeſus Chriſt, who gave himſelf for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify to himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works, ver. 14. and who died for all, that they who live, might not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him that died for them, 2 Cor. 5. 15. And, laſtly, The inward aſſiſtances of the Holy Spirit, bringing theſe things to our remembrance, exciting us to the performance of our duty, ſtrengthening us againſt our temptations, and comforting and ſupporting us under our ſufferings.

Ibid. Ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ ἐυάρεστον ἐνώπιον αὐτῦ, working in you that which is well-pleaſing in his ſight.] That God doth ſome way work in us every good work, and whatſoever is well-pleaſing in his ſight, can be denied by none who underſtand the ſcriptures; and one would think it ſhould be as little the ſubject of diſpute, whether God works theſe things as a vomit, or a purge, works in us by phyſical and irreſiſtible operations, or whether he works on reaſonable creatures by offering reaſons to perſuade them, and upon men endowed with a will to make them willing, as all men do, by propounding motives and encouragements of a prevailing nature, to engage them to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evil, of which I have ſaid ſo much in the treatiſe of grace annexed to 2 Cor. 6. 1. that I ſhall ſay nothing more at preſent, but that it is unaccountable how actions ſhould be good, unleſs we conſent to them, or how they ſhould be ours, unleſs we chuſe and do them. This text is therefore vainly urged to prove, that we are purely paſſive in the work of our converſion, and that we neither do nor can do any thing towards it.

1. Becauſe God evidently ſpeaks this to them who were already true believers, and converts to the Chriſtian faith, and wanted only to be made perfect in every good work. 2. Becauſe he exhorts all Chriſtians to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling, upon this very account, that it is God that worketh in them both to will and to do, Philip. 2. 13. For if God ſo worketh in us, that we do not co-operate with him, why are we commanded to work out our ſalvation? For can we act where we are purely paſſive? or can that be a reaſon why we ourſelves ſhould act, that another will effectually do this very thing without our co-operation? Is it not rather a reaſon why we ſhould not work at all, ſince this work will be certainly performed without us? See more to this effect in the note on Philip. 2. 13. Note alſo, that the word καταρτίσαι, which begins this verſe, ſignifies fully to inſtruct, as in thoſe words, Luke 6. 40. The diſciple is not above his maſter, κατηρτισμένος δὲ πᾶς, but he that is fully inſtructed is as his maſter; 1 Cor. 1. 10. [t] Ἦτε δὲ κατηρτισμένοι, Be ye perfectly inſtructed in the ſame mind and judgment; Eph. 4. 12. God hath appointed apoſtles, prophets, and evangeliſts, paſtors, and teachers, πρὸς τὸν καταρτισμὸν τῶν ἁγίων, for the full inſtruction of the ſaints, till we all come to the unity of the faith, and knowledge of the Son of God, ver. 13.; ſo the Gloſſa Græco-Latina, καταρτίζω, ſtruo, inſtruo, κατηρτισμένος, conſtructus, inſtructus; and in this ſenſe this may be reaſonably deemed a prayer, that God would fully inſtruct the believing Jews in every good work requiſite to be done in obedience to his will, and ſo would work in them that which was well-pleaſing in his ſight, we being thus tranſformed by the renewing of our mind, εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν, that we may approve, (and ſo be inclined to do) the good, ἐυάρεστον, well-pleaſing, and perfect will of God, Rom. 12. 2.

Ibid. [u] Ὦ ἡ δόξα εἰς τὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, to whom be glory for ever, Amen.] Here Schlictingius ſaith, that he who is a Chriſtian cannot be ignorant, that glory for ever and ever is to be aſcribed to Chriſt as well as to the Father, as it is Rev. 5. 12. 13. and 2 Pet. 3. 18. And how then can he be ignorant that Chriſt is to be owned as the true God? This being the doxology aſcribed in the New Teſtament, to him, of whom, and by whom, and to whom are all things, Rom. 11. 36.; to God the Father, Gal. 1. 5.; to the omnipotent God, Eph. 3. 20. 24.; to him who dwelleth in light inacceſſible, 2 Tim. 4. 15. 16.; to the God of all grace, 1 Pet. 5. 10. 11.; to the only wiſe God our Saviour, Jude, ver. 25. In St Clemens (t), it is frequently aſcribed τῷ Θεῷ παντοκράτορι, to almighty God, to whom be glory for ever and ever, Amen, as a character peculiarly belonging to him. And in the Jeruſalem Targum (u), this is the frequent appendix to the mention of the great God, Let his name be bleſſed (i. e. glorified) for ever and ever, Amen. So that, both in the opinion of Jews and Chriſtians, this was a doxology proper to the true God.

Ver. 24. [x] Τὺς ἡγουμένους, that have the rule over you.] Hence it ſeems evident, that this epiſtle was not ſent to the biſhops or rulers of the church, but to the whole church, or to the laity.

ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

SEVEN CATHOLIC EPISTLES.

The GENERAL PREFACE.

OF theſe epiſtles, in the general, I have only this to note, that from the fourth century they have both obtained the name of catholic epiſtles, and alſo have been ranked in the ſame order in which they now ſtand in our Bibles, viz. by the council of Laodicea (a), by Cyril of Jeruſalem (b), by Athanaſius (c), and Greg. Nazianzen (d), by Amphilochius (e), and by others.

Only it is not eaſy to aſſign the reaſon why they in a particular manner were ſo called: it could not be becauſe they were paſſim receptæ ab omnibus et ubique, "generally received by all;" for we learn from the teſtimonies of Origen (f), Euſebius (g), Amphilochius (h), and St Jerom (i), that the ancients doubted of four of the ſeven, or five of them.

Oecumenius and others ſay they were ſo ſtyled, becauſe they were written, not to one nation, as were generally thoſe of St Paul, ἀλλὰ καθόλου τοῖς πι-στοῖς, ἤτοι Ἰουδαίοις τοῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, but generally to the faithful, or to the Jews of the diſperſion: which laſt expreſſion ſeems to hint the true reaſon of the name, viz. becauſe excepting the two brief epiſtles of St John, they were written to the Jews diſperſed throughout the world. Which, though it be true alſo of the epiſtle to the Hebrews, yet hath that no inſcription, and for a long time was alſo queſtioned; nor was it written to the diſperſed Jews, but to the inhabitants of Judea, chap. 13. and upon theſe accounts might not come into the number.

THE PREFACE TO THE GENERAL EPISTLE of St JAMES.

§ 1. THAT the author of this epiſtle was an apoſtle hath been proved, note on ver. 1.; whence it muſt follow that he could not be James the ſon of Zebedee, becauſe that James was ſlain by Herod, A. D. 44. twenty-eight years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which yet was nigh at hand, and even at the door when this epiſtle was indited; ſee the note on chap. 5. 8. 9. Nor could he be James the Juſt, biſhop of Jeruſalem, for he was no apoſtle, if he was not the ſame perſon with James the Leſs. It ſeemeth therefore that he was James the ſon of Alpheus, apoſtle, and brother of our Lord, ſtyled James the Leſs, in diſtinction from James the ſon of Zebedee, ſtyled the Greater, by reaſon of his age. For that the James mentioned by St Paul, Gal. 1. 19. was an apoſtle in the ſtrict acceptation of the word, is evident from this, that having ſpoken of St Peter, who, doubtleſs, was an apoſtle in that ſenſe, he adds, Others of the apoſtles ſaw I none, ſave James the Lord's brother; and chap. 2. 6. he reckons him with Peter and John, among the στύλοι, or the chief pillars of the church; and to me he ſeems to be the ſame with James the biſhop of Jeruſalem. For,

1. Of this James the biſhop of Jeruſalem, who was ſtyled the Juſt, St Jerom ſaith (a), "That he "was the ſon of Mary, the ſiſter of the mother of "our Lord, of whom St John makes mention, chap. "19. 25. where ſhe is ſtyled the wife of Cleophas, or "Alpheus; and by St Mark, chap. 15. 40. the mo-"ther of James the Leſs."

2. It ſeems highly probable, that the James mentioned Acts 15. was ſtrictly an apoſtle; for Paul and Barnabas were ſent up to the apoſtles and elders, ver. 2.; they were received by the apoſtles and elders, ver. 4.; the apoſtles and elders were gathered together to decide the queſtion touching the circumciſion of the Gentiles, ver. 6.; the firſt perſon that ſpeaks to it is Peter the apoſtle, the ſecond James, who having determined the queſtion, It ſeemed good to the apoſtles and brethren to ſend letters to the churches, ver. 22. And theſe they ſend with this inſcription, The apoſtles, elders, and brethren. In all which places it is evident, that the word apoſtles muſt be taken in the proper ſenſe, they being ſtill diſtinguiſhed from all the elders or biſhops which were not apoſtles: nor can it be thought reaſonable that St James here ſhould be ranked among the elders, or the inferior ſort of the clergy, it remains then that he was in the ſtrict ſenſe an apoſtle. There being therefore no other of that name then living but James the ſon of Alpheus, who alſo was the brother of our Lord, i. e. his mother's ſiſter's ſon, (i. e. his couſin), he, in all likelihood, muſt be the biſhop of Jeruſalem.

3. The ſtory of three that were called James, viz. James the Great, James the Leſs, and James biſhop of Jeruſalem, is, ſaith Dr Cave (b), a great miſtake, and built upon a ſandy bottom: "For, beſides that the "ſcripture mentions no more than two of this "name, and both apoſtles, nothing can be plainer "than that St James the apoſtle, whom St Paul "calls the brother of our Lord, was the ſame that "preſided among the apoſtles, and determined in

" the ſynod at Jeruſalem. Nor do either Clemens " Alexandrinus (c), or Euſebius out of him, men- " tion any more than two, St James put to death " by Herod, and St James the Juſt, biſhop of Jeru- " ſalem, whom they expreſsly affirm to be the ſame " with him whom St Paul calls the brother of our " Lord. Once indeed Euſebius makes our St James " one of the ſeventy; though elſewhere, quoting a " place of Clemens of Alexandria (d), he numbers " him with the chief of the apoſtles, and expreſsly " diſtinguiſhes him from the ſeventy diſciples." And though St Jerom (e), when he repreſents the opinion of others, ſtyles him the thirteenth apoſtle; yet elſewhere, when ſpeaking his own ſenſe, he ſufficiently proves that there were but two (f), James the ſon of Zebedee, and the other the ſon of Alpheus, the one ſirnamed the Greater, the other the Leſs; and he frequently ſtyles the author of this epiſtle writ to the twelve tribes, James the apoſtle: beſides, ſaith he, the main ſupport of the other opinion is built upon the authority of Clemens his Recognitions, a book, in doubtful caſes, of no eſteem and value.

§ 2. And having thus ſhewed, that James the apoſtle, and brother of our Lord, was the author of this epiſtle, we cannot reaſonably doubt the authority of it; eſpecially if we conſider that it is cited by (g) Clemens Romanus four ſeveral times, and by Ignatius (h) in his genuine epiſtle to the Epheſians, by Origen (i) in his thirteenth homily upon Geneſis. Euſebius ſaith (k) it was known to moſt, and publicly read in moſt Chriſtian churches: St Jerom (l), " That in proceſs of time it obtained au- " thority." Eſthius notes (m), " That they who " before doubted of it, in the fourth century, em- " braced the opinion of them who received it, and " that from thence no church, no eccleſiaſtical wri- " ter, is found who ever doubted of it; but, on the " contrary, all the catalogues of the books of holy " ſcripture, publiſhed by general or provincial coun- " cils, Roman biſhops, or other orthodox writers, " number it among the canonical ſcriptures;" quæ probatio ad certam fidem faciendam cuique catholico ſufficere debet; " which proof muſt give ſufficient " certainty of it to any catholic." As for the ſeeming contradiction of this epiſtle to the doctrine of St Paul, in the matter of juſtification by faith, ſee it ſufficiently cleared in the cloſe of the annotations on the ſecond chapter.

§ 3. 4*thly*, That this epiſtle was directed to the twelve tribes which were ſcattered abroad, the words of this epiſtle ſhew; but whether the twelve tribes import only thoſe of them which returned into Judea, or thoſe of them alſo who were carried away by the Aſſyrians, and never returned to their own nation, ſo as to make any more a diſtinct people, or a body-politic under their own governors, is uncertain: that God had abſolutely determined, that the ten tribes ſhould never more return to ſuch a ſtate, the prophet Hoſea in many places doth inform us; as when God by him ſaith, I will no more have mercy on the houſe of Iſrael, but I will utterly take them away, chap. 1. 6.; that they ſhould be among the Gentiles as a veſſel wherein is no pleaſure, chap. 8. 8.; that they ſhould not dwell in the Lord's land, chap. 9. 3. And again, I will drive them out of my houſe, I will love them no more: My God will caſt them away, becauſe they did not hearken to him, and they ſhall be wanderers among the nations, ver. 15. 17.

And yet that God deſigned not to exclude them from the bleſſings promiſed in the days of the Meſſiah, or from being called into the church of Chriſt, is as evident from many expreſſions, and gracious promiſes of God, recorded in that prophet, concerning the ſame tribes of Iſrael; as, v. g. That the number of the children of Iſrael ſhall be as the ſand of the ſea, which cannot be meaſured nor numbered: and it ſhall come to paſs, that in the place where it was ſaid unto them, Ye are not my people; there it ſhall be ſaid unto them, Ye are the ſons of the living God, chap. 1. 10. 11. &c. And again, I will betroth thee unto me for ever: yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteouſneſs, and judgment, and in loving kindneſs, and in mercies; I will even betroth thee unto me in faithfulneſs, and thou ſhalt know the Lord, chap. 2. 19. 20. I will have mercy on her which had not obtained mercy; and I will ſay to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they ſhall ſay, Thou art my God, ver. 23. And again, Afterwards ſhall the children of Iſrael return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall fear the Lord, and his goodneſs, in the latter days, chap. 3. 5. See chap. 14. 4. 8. Now, theſe prophecies being not to be fulfilled upon them, by bringing them into their own land; it ſeemeth reaſonable to conceive, they might be fulfilled, by calling them to embrace the goſpel; and that by doing ſo, were thoſe words fulfilled, I will call them my people who were not my people, not only towards the Gentiles, Rom. 9. 24. 25. 26. but alſo towards thoſe Iſraelites of whom they primarily were ſpoken, 1 Pet. 2. 10. And to this the inſcription ſeems to lead us, it being ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς, ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, To the twelve tribes; to thoſe who are in the diſperſion. That the places whither theſe ten tribes were carried by the Aſſyrians, were well known to the other Jews, ſee proved by Dr Lightfoot; that in Meſopotamia, Media, and Babylon, where they were placed, the Jews abounded in a very great meaſure. Joſephus teſtifies (n), they had there three famous univerſities, Neerda, Sorana, and Pombeditha. We therefore have great reaſon to believe the goſpel was then preached among them, by the apoſtles of the circumciſion. See the preface to the firſt epiſtle of St John.

There is one farther obſervation taken notice of by Grotius and Dr Hammond, That ſome part of this epiſtle ſeems to be directed, not only to believers, but even to the unbelieving Jews, eſpecially the ſix firſt verſes of the fifth chapter, where he ſaith, Ye have killed the juſt, and he doth not reſiſt you; which cannot well agree to the converted Jews, to whom he ſeems to turn his ſpeech, in theſe following words, Be patient therefore, brethren, ver. 7. Yea, the whole third and fourth chapters may be equally directed to both; the name of brethren ſuiting to both, when uſed by a Jew writing to them, Rom. 9. 2.

§ 4. As for the occaſion of this epiſtle, it ſeemeth to be written upon two accounts.

1*ſt*, To correct the pernicious errors both in doctrine and manners, which had crept into the theology of the Jews, and had an evil influence on their practice. See note on chap. 2. 11. and ver. 14. to the end of the chapter.

2*dly*, To comfort and eſtabliſh the ſincere believers, under the preſſures which they then ſuffered, or were ſhortly to expect from the unbelieving Jews, or their falſe brethren. Where note,

1. That though the Jews, from the beginning of the apoſtles preaching, were ſtill incenſed againſt the Chriſtians; yet ſeeing Chriſtianity, whilſt they continued preaching to the Jews, did not ſpread much among other nations, and ſince the Jews were under reſtraints in the time of Caius, who had no good affection to them, they could not proceed far in ſhewing their hatred to the Chriſtian faith. What perſecutions therefore happened in thoſe early times, concerned only the churches of Judea, or thereabouts, or ſpent themſelves on the chief leaders, and aſſertors of the Chriſtian faith, St Stephen, St James, St Peter, and St Paul, or on the churches converted from the Jewiſh ſynagogues, and reached no farther than the places where they were converted; and though they were begun by inſtigation of the Jews, yet were they chiefly managed by the heathen powers, or by their own countrymen. For about the 39th year of Chriſt, then had the churches peace throughout all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, Acts 9. 31. and ſo they ſeem to have continued till after the council of Jeruſalem, the churches being then eſtabliſhed in the faith, and increaſing in number daily, Acts 16. 5. Yea, when Paul comes to Rome, he receives all that came unto him for two whole years, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things which concerned the Lord Jeſus Chriſt with all confidence, no man forbidding him, Acts 28. 30. 31. So that at leaſt till the fourth or fifth year of Nero, the goſpel was freely preached at Rome, without any contradiction either of the Romans or the Jews: but then, in his ſixth year, afflicti ſuppliciis Chriſtiani, "the Chriſtians "were ſubjected to puniſhment by him," ſaith Sue tonius (o); "and it ſeems very probable," ſaith Dr Lightfoot, "that even then Nero had by ſome act or "edict ſuppreſſed Chriſtianity, not only at Rome, "but alſo at Judea;" as he gathers from that clauſe in Tacitus, "Repreſſaque in præſens exitiabilis ſu- "perſtitio, rurſus erumpebat, non modo per Judæam "originem ejus mali, ſed per urbem etiam;" which ſhews, that before the perſecution began, in the tenth of Nero, of which Tacitus there ſpeaks, Chriſtianity had been by him ſuppreſſed, not at Rome only, but Judea. Here then ſome place St Peter's πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμὸν, burning for trial, which forwarded the defection which was ſo general in the churches of the Jews that had received the goſpel, they falling to Moſes again, or joining the adheſion to the law with the profeſſion of the goſpel, that ſo they might retain their liberty, the religion of the Jews not being at all ſuppreſſed by him, and that they might eſcape the rage of the Jews; who doubtleſs, by his example, would be induced to expreſs that hatred they had ſtill borne againſt the Chriſtians. The ſame Nero, in his 10th year, renews this perſecution of the Chriſtians; and this he did, ſaith Oroſius (p), not only at Rome, but, by his edict, " through all the provinces of his empire ;" and this encouraged the Jews every where to ſhew their utmoſt rage againſt all thoſe of their religion, whether Jews or proſelytes, who had embraced the faith of Chriſt ſincerely ; and the more they drew nigh to their final deſolation, the more did Satan inhance their fury againſt thoſe Chriſtians whom he found the fatal enemies and overthrowers of his kingdom.

§ 5. Note, Laſtly, That whereas Mr le Clerc ſaith, (note on chap. 5. 3.), That St James doth not ſpeak here to the Jews who had embraced the faith in Paleſtine, but to thoſe who were ſcattered abroad, ſeeing he ſpeaks to the whole twelve tribes, I doubt not but thoſe of Paleſtine muſt be included : but when he adds, that thoſe " Jews only who lived in " Paleſtine, and the neighbouring countries, and " had riſen up in arms againſt the Romans, were " deſtroyed by them," ſuggeſting, that the Jews diſperſed through the other parts of the Roman empire, received no harm : this is a great miſtake ; for theſe being the days of vengeance upon the unbelievers of that nation, God's ſevere judgments reached them every where, as we may fully learn from the rueful account (q) Joſephus gives us of their calamities throughout all their diſperſions : " For," ſaith he, " when the Romans had no ene- " mies left in Judea, the danger reached πολλοῖς καὶ " τῶν ἀπωτάτω κατοικούντων, to many of them living " the remoteſt from it ; for many of them periſh- " ed at Alexandria, and Cyrene, and in other ci- " ties of Egypt, and throughout all Syria." And Eleazer, in Joſephus (r), having reckoned up many places where they were cruelly ſlaughtered, concludes thus, Μακρὸν ἂν εἴη νῦν ἰδίᾳ λέγειν, " It would be " too long to ſpeak of all theſe places in particular."

We know from Tacitus (s), and others, that the Jews were a nation generally hated by all about them, and by thoſe among whom they lived, partly becauſe they uſed ritus contrarios ceteris mortalibus, rites contrary to all other nations, and ſpake and thought contemptuouſly of their deities and worſhip ; partly becauſe they bore adverſus omnes alios hoſtile odium, the greateſt hatred to men of other nations, and ſhewed the greateſt contempt of them, calling them dogs, and thinking it unlawful to converſe with them, and a pollution even to touch them. All nations therefore where they lived, muſt, upon all occaſions, be ready to riſe up againſt them, as we may learn from the ſlaughter of them in Ceſarea (t), Damaſcus, Scythopolis, and throughout all the cities of Syria, about the beginning of the war, of which Joſephus gives us the account. When therefore the Romans were very much incenſed againſt them, becauſe when other nations had ſubmitted to their empire, ſoli Judæi non ceſſiſſent, they dared to rebel, muſt they not be ſure to ſuffer in every province where they dwelt, not only from the Roman governors, but alſo from thoſe people in every nation who bore ſo great hatred to them ? And hence Euſebius informs us (u), That " they did thus ſuffer in all other places."

2*dly*, Joſephus (x) doth confeſs, that the Jews in Judea did expect ἅπαν τὸ ὑπὲρ Εὐφράτην ἐμοέθνιον σφίσι συνεπιθήσεσθαι, " that all of their own nation, even " beyond Euphrates, ſhould be aſſiſtant to them in " this war." And doubtleſs they were not wholly diſappointed in their expectation ; for in their war commenced under Hadrian, Dion (y) expreſsly ſays, " That the Jews out of all nations came to their " help." We therefore reaſonably may conceive, this alſo was ſo in the former war under Veſpaſian and Titus ; and then we cannot doubt that they who ſhared in the war, muſt alſo bear a ſhare in the calamities it brought upon that nation, in thoſe days of vengeance, which befel them for their infidelity, and the rejection of the true Meſſiah, of which the Jews who lived in other nations were as guilty as thoſe who lived in Judea.

§ 6. And hence alſo I return an anſwer to an objection which I foreſee may be made againſt my interpretation of ſome paſſages in the fourth and fifth chapters of this epiſtle, viz. that I reſtrain them to what was done to, and by the Jews in Judea ; whereas this epiſtle is written to " the twelve " tribes which were ſcattered abroad," ver. 1.

For, 1. As all the Jews of the diſperſion were under the government of the ſanhedrim, and after, of the patriarch of the Jews, reſiding in Judea, and obeyed his pleaſure ; ſo many, both of Jews and proſelytes, went up out of all nations to their feaſts : when the Holy Ghoſt fell down on the apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt, we find them there, Acts 2. and when Jeruſalem was beſieged at their Paſchal feaſt (z) ; and ſo, even upon that account, they muſt be ſomewhat concerned in what was done and ſuffered in Judea ; and if they ſided with them in that war, as I have ſhewed it probable they did, they muſt be more concerned in thoſe matters. But,

2. Joſephus

2. Joſephus tells us, That they had wars about the ſame time in many places of their diſperſions with the Gentiles; that when the Alexandrians, in the reign of Nero, had impeached three of their brethren as enemies and ſpies, (a) ἤδη πᾶν τὸ Ἰουδαϊκὸν ὑπὲρ τὴν ἄμυναν, "all the Jews there roſe up to "their aid;" and that Tiberius Alexander, the governor of the city, commanded the Roman legions, to ſlay them, καὶ τὰς κτήσεις αὐτῶν διαρπάζειν, καὶ τὰς οἰκίας καταφλέγειν, "and to ſeize upon their goods, "and burn their houſes;" which they did, killing fifty thouſand of them on the ſpot. That the Jews invading the cities and villages of Syria, the Syrians fell upon them in all their cities, and were eſpecially moved thereunto by covetouſneſs, τὰς γὰρ οὐσίας τῶν ἀναιρεθέντων ἀδεῶς διήρπαζον, "for they fell boldly upon the ſubſtance of "the ſlain:" and in theſe, and all the other places mentioned by Joſephus, the Jews were as forward to take up arms againſt the Gentiles, as they were to ſuppreſs the Jews. Here then is a ſufficient account of their wars and tumults mentioned, chap. 4. and of their riches being corrupted, and their fleſh eaten by fire, chap. 5.

ANNOTATIONS

GENERAL EPISTLE of St JAMES.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. [a] JAmes a ſervant of God (the Father), and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (ſendeth) [b] to the twelve tribes which are [c] ſcattered abroad, greeting.

2. My brethren, count it (matter, not of ſorrow, but of) all joy when (through the divine permiſſion) ye fall [d] into divers temptations, (i. e. afflictions from the world);

3. Knowing this, that (this outward trouble ſent for) [e] the trial of your faith (by the help of God's over-ruling grace, and the aid of his Holy Spirit then eſpecially reſiding on you, 1 Pet. 4. 14.) worketh (in you) patience.

4. But (And) let patience have her perfect work (in you), that [f] ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing (to make you perfect in Chriſt Jeſus, and entire as to all Chriſtian graces.)

5. (Εἰ δὲ, And) If any of you lack wiſdom, (how to exerciſe and preſerve this patience, under the various temptations he may be ſubject to), let him aſk (it) of (that) God, who giveth to all men liberally (whatſoever he ſees needful for us), and upbraideth (us) not (for want of this wiſdom); and (if he duly aſk) [g] it ſhall be given him.

6. But (then) let him (take care to) [h] aſk in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth (in the time of temptation), is like a wave of the ſea driven with the wind, and toſſed (to and fro by every temptation.)

7. For let not (μὴ γὰρ, let not then) that man think, that he ſhall receive any thing of the Lord.

8. (For) a double-minded man is unſtable in all his ways, (and therefore cannot pray in faith, as he that would be heard muſt do.)

9. (And if temptations be matter of the Chriſtian's joy), let the brother of [i] low degree (impoveriſhed by them) rejoice (ſtill) in that he is exalted (to be rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom of God, chap. 2. 5. Luke 6. 20.)

10. But (let) the [k] rich (rejoice), in that he is made low: becauſe as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away. (Gr. For as the flower of the graſs he ſhall paſs away, when it is ſcorched with the ſun.)

11. For the ſun is no ſooner riſen with a burning heat, but it withereth the graſs, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the faſhion of it periſheth: ſo alſo ſhall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12. Bleſſed is the man that (thus) endureth temptation (for the ſake of Chriſt): for when he is tried, (Gr. δόκιμος γενόμενος, being approved), he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him: (i. e. being, by his patient enduring of theſe afflictions for the ſake of Chriſt, ap- proved, as one that loves him more than the world, he ſhall receive the reward promiſed to them that do ſo.)

proved

13. (As for the other ſorts of temptations unto ſin), let no man ſay, when he is (thus) tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man (to it.)

14. [l] But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own luſt, and enticed, (Gr. being drawn and enticed by his own luſt.)

15. Then when luſt hath conceived, (i. e. obtained any conſent to, or approbation, and goodliking to the deſire of the ſenſual appetite), it bringeth forth (and engageth the ſoul in) ſin: and ſin, when it is finiſhed, (in the deliberate outward action, or ſuch endeavours to perform and execute it, as want nothing on the part of the will to the completion of it, and much more when by a cuſtomary practice it becomes habitual), [m] bringeth forth death (the wages of ſin.)

16. Do not err, my beloved brethren, (by aſcribing your ſin, or your temptations to it, unto God.)

17. Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, (the light of nature and of grace), with whom is no variableneſs, neither ſhadow of turning (from good to evil; he therefore never will deny thoſe gifts to them that duly aſk him, nor will he ever be wanting in his grace and favour to them that love him, and much leſs will he tempt any one to depart from him.)

18. (For) of his own will begat he us (Jews) by the word of truth, that we ſhould be a kind of firſt fruits of his (new) creatures: (we therefore have little cauſe to think he will do any thing to deſtroy that life, or deny us any thing which he ſees neceſſary to preſerve that life which he ſo freely gave.)

19. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, (being regenerated by this word of truth), let every man be [n] ſwift to hear (it), [o] ſlow to ſpeak, (ver. 26. or be a teacher of it, chap. 3. 1.), [p] ſlow to wrath, (or contention about it.)

20. For the wrath of man worketh not the righteouſneſs of God; (i. e. it tends not to beget or to improve that faith by which we are righteous before God, but rather to hinder it in ourſelves, and others.

21. Wherefore lay apart all filthineſs, (all evil luſtings, ver. 14.), and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, (all the diſtempers of your tongue, and of your angry paſſions, ver. 19.), and receive with meekneſs the [q] ingrafted word, which (being thus received) is able to ſave your ſouls.

22. But (that it may have this effect upon you) be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves, (by thinking that ſufficient to procure favour with God.)

23. [r] For if any (man) be a hearer of the word (only), and not a doer (of it), he is like unto a man beholding his (own) natural face (which he was born with) in a glaſs:

24. For he beholdeth himſelf, and goeth (preſently) his way, and ſtraightway forgets what manner of man he was.

25. But whoſo looketh into the perfect law of liberty, (i. e. the goſpel which gives the ſpirit of liberty, and freedom from the power of ſin and death, and from the ſpirit of bondage, Rom. 8. 2. 15. 2 Cor. 3. 17.), and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word; this man ſhall be bleſſed in his deed.

26. If any man among you ſeem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue (from bitter zeal, contentions, and imprecations, chap. 3. 10. 14.), but [s] deceiveth (Gr. deceiving) his own heart, (thinks his zeal for God will bear him out in all this), that man's religion is vain, (chap. 3. 14. 15.)

27. Pure religion and undefiled before God, and (i. e. who is) the Father, is (viſible in) this, (that it engages the Chriſtian) [t] to viſit the fatherleſs and widows in their affliction, and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] James.] That this was James an apoſtle, is confirmed from the teſtimony of Euſebius (a), who declares of that James to whom the ancients aſcribed this epiſtle, that he was the brother of the Lord. The ſame we learn from the Syriac, Arabic, Vulgar, and Ethiopic verſions, in all which he is ſtyled James the apoſtle.

Ibid. [b] Ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς, to the twelve tribes.] That ſome of the ten tribes remained in, and ſome of them returned to the land of Iſrael, we are aſſured, from the cities of Manaſſeh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even to Nepthali, purged by Joſiah from their idols, 2 Chron. 34. 6. from the money ſent in to repair the houſe of the Lord from Manaſſeh, Ephraim, and the remnant of Iſrael, ver. 9. from the mention made of the children of Iſrael, that were come again out of their captivity, Eſd. 6. 21. and the ſin-offering made by Ezra at the dedication of the temple, of twelve goats, according to the number of the tribes of Iſrael, ver. 17. and from theſe following words, chap 8. 35. The children of thoſe which had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered twelve goats for a ſin-offering. And, laſtly, from the mention of the twelve tribes by the apoſtle Paul, who inſtantly ſerved God day and night, Acts 26. 7.

Ibid. [c] Ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, which are ſcattered abroad.] That the Jews were diſperſed throughout the world, we learn from the words of Agrippa, in his oration to them, who tells them, That (b) "there was not "a nation upon earth where ſome part of them "was not ſeated:" and that if they of Judea ſhould rebel, all of them that reſided in other places would be deſtroyed, and every city would be filled with the blood of them. From the words of Strabo, cited by Joſephus (c), "That it was not eaſy to find an emi-"nent place in the whole world where the Jews did "not reſide." From Philo (d), in his oration againſt Flaccus, where he makes mention τῶν πανταχῇ τῆς οἰκουμένης Ἰουδαίων, "of the Jews diſperſed through-"out all the world:" adding, That one region could not contain the Jews, but (e) "they dwelt in "moſt of the flouriſhing cities of Aſia, and in Eu-"rope, in the iſlands, and in the continents, not "much leſs in number than the inhabitants;" and introducing (f) Agrippa interceding to Caius for them, as inhabiting in the moſt celebrated parts of Africa, Aſia, and Europe. And even Cicero (g), in his oration for another Flaccus, declares, That the gold which the Jews ſent to their temple at Jeruſalem, "was ſent from Italy, and all the other pro-"vinces of the Roman empire."

Ver. 2. [d] Πειρασμοῖς ποικίλοις, into divers temptations.] Temptations, ſaith Oecumenius, are of two kinds; 1. Such as lead to ſin, which the luſts of the fleſh, and the love of riches produce in us, 1 Tim. 6. 9. againſt which our Lord inſtructs us to pray that we enter not into them; and of theſe the apoſtle begins to diſcourſe, ver. 13. Or ſuch as are ſent for the trial of our conſtancy and ſincerity in the faith; and to our patience and perſeverance under theſe, is promiſed a great reward in heaven: and of theſe the apoſtle ſpeaketh here, and ver. 12. See Luke 22. 28. Heb. 4. 15.

Ver. 3. [e] Τὸ δοκίμιον, the trial of our faith,] Being attended with theſe aſſiſtances, and conſolations of the Holy Ghoſt, and theſe firm hopes of a moſt glorious reward of all our ſufferings, tends naturally to make us bear them patiently, (as the apoſtle ſpeaketh here). But then it is as true, that ὑπομονὴ κατεργάζεται τὴν δοκιμὴν, Rom. 5. 4. i. e. that this patience worketh the trial; and by that, in good Chriſtians, the experience of their ſincerity and conſtancy in the faith; and therefore it concerns them not to faint under theſe tribulations.

Ver. 4. [f] Τέλειοι, that you may be perfect and entire.] For where there is this perfect work of patience, there muſt be a ſtrong faith as the foundation of it, a ſteddy virtue, or Chriſtian fortitude, enabling us thus to ſuſtain theſe fiery trials; an exact knowledge of our duty, to bear theſe afflictions with a meek and quiet ſpirit, with forgiveneſs of, love to, and prayer for them that perſecute us, which includes the height of charity, under the higheſt provocations; a great love to God, for whoſe ſake we ſuffer, and a ſtrong affection to his ſervice; a greater fear of his diſpleaſure, than of the wrath of man; an entire truſt and dependence on him, and a full reſignation to his will of providence, in which conſiſts the life of godlineſs; an exact temperance, as to the honours, pleaſures, and temporal concernments of this life, we loſe by theſe our ſufferings, and a true charity to our Chriſtian brethren, for whoſe example and encouragement we do thus ſuffer. Now, theſe are all the graces which the apoſtle Peter doth require to make us fruitful and perfect Chriſtians, 2 Pet. 1. 5. 6. 7. 8.

Ver. 5. [g] Δοθήσεται, it ſhall be given.] Hence it appears, that this wiſdom depends not on our own ſkill, or ſtrength; nor can it be obtained without divine aſſiſtance.

Ver. 6. [h] Αἰτείτω----μηδὲν διακρινόμενος, ὁ γὰρ διακρινόμενος] What is the ἀνὴρ δίψυχος, ὁ διακρινόμενος, the double-minded, and the wavering man, we may learn from Hermes (h), who informs us, "that viſions and re-"velations are, διὰ τὴν δίψυχον, for the double mind-"ed, i. e. τὴν διαλογιζομένην ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις αὐτῆς, ἢ ἔσται ταῦτα ἢ οὐκ ἔσται, that is, "for them who reaſon "in their hearts, whether theſe things will be, or "not." And again, (i) Credite Deo qui eſtis dubii, "believe in God, you that are doubtful, for he can "do all things. Wo to the doubtful, who have " heard thoſe things and contemned them." And again, (k) " they that doubt of God, they are the " double-minded, who ſhall receive none of their " requeſts." See the whole mandate to the ſame effect. And from that of Barnabas (l), touching him that walketh in the way of light, That ὁ μὴ διψυχήσῃ, " he will not be doubtful whether a thing will be " ſo or not." From the like precept of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions (m), μὴ γίνου διψυχος, " Be not " doubtful in thy prayer, whether thy petition will " be heard or not:" and from St Clement (n), " with whom οἱ διψυχοι, the doubtful are, οἱ διστάζοντες " περὶ τῆς τῶν Θεῦ δυνάμεως, the diſtruſters of the power " of God." This faith therefore relates to prayer, and is a firm belief that God will afford to his ſincere ſervants, under all their ſufferings for his ſake, ſuch aid as will enable them to bear them with true Chriſtian patience, 1 Cor. 10. 13. and ſuch wiſdom as will direct them to improve theſe ſufferings to his glory, and their good. He that doubts of this, will be now hoping, and anon deſponding, apt to quit his dependence on God, and lean on his own wiſdom, and ready to caſt off that religion which ſubjects him to theſe temptations from which he expects no good iſſue; and therefore wanting that faith in God which is here made the condition of an acceptable prayer, &c. he cannot hope to obtain any thing of him.

"have

Ver. 9.[j] Ὁ ταπεινὸς, the man of low degree,] In the Old Teſtament, is the poor and afflicted man. So עני is, in the Septuagint, πένης, ταπεινὸς, the poor, the afflicted, עניות, πενία, ταπείνωσις, poverty, or lowneſs of ſtate. And this ſenſe here is confirmed from the oppoſition of the rich to him.

Ver. 10.[k] Ὁ πλούσιος, the rich.] Let God, ſaith Philo (o), be the matter of thy chief joy, not riches, honour, ſtrength, or beauty, theſe being μεγαινόμενα τρόπον τινὰ πρὶν ἀνθῆσαι βεβαίως, things which wither before they are fully grown up. Let then the Chriſtian conſider, that the things he loſeth for the ſake of Chriſt, are only things of ſuch a fading nature; whereas he doth ſecure, by his perſeverance, an everlaſting treaſure reſerved for him in the heavens; and then he may rejoice in his humiliation. Note alſo an ellipſis of the verb καυχάσθω, let him rejoice, ver. 10. to be taken from ver. 9. So John 15. 4. 1 Cor. 4. 15. Gal. 2. 7. Eph. 1. 12.

Ver. 14.[l] Note here, That the deſires or luſtings of the ſenſual appetite, put us only under a ſtate of temptation, not of actual ſin: they are indeed the root of ſin, but ſo is temptation to ſin, and the ſuggeſtions of Satan; but they are not our ſins, till we conſent to them: they are not a tranſgreſſion of the law, for there is no law given to the ſenſual appetite alone, but to the whole man, who cannot hinder ſenſual appetites from ariſing in him before he perceives them; but he can reſtrain the will from conſenting to them as ſoon as he perceives them; and can refuſe to admit of them, or ſuffer them to make ſtay in, or gain upon his mind to contemplate them with delight, or aſſent to them: and this being all he can do, muſt be all he is obliged by the law to do. There be many ſcriptures urged againſt this opinion in the Synopſis, but they are too impertinent to be inſiſted on.

Ver. 15.[m] Ἀποκύει θάνατον, bringeth forth death:] i. e. Not only deſerveth death, for ſo doth the conſent of the will; but it renders us obnoxious to death, and will end in it, without repentance. Hence therefore note, That not only the ſoul hardened in ſin, and given up to the frequent practice of the ſame ſin, is guilty of mortal ſin, but every deliberate ſinful action, done againſt the convictions and checks of concience, till by repentance it is retracted, puts us under that ſtate, as being a breach of the goſpel-covenant of ſincere and impartial obedience, a departing of the heart from God, and a wilful and preſumptuous ſin: and therefore David, after his adultery and murder, prays that God would create in him the clean heart, and renew in him the right ſpirit. Though therefore God in mercy may, and will deal with ſuch men, not according to their particular failures, but according to the general tenor of their lives; yet can they claim no covenant-right to ſuch a favour, till they have thoroughly repented of ſuch wilful ſins, and returned to the ſincere performance of their duty.

Ver. 18.[n] Λόγῳ ἀληθείας, by the word of truth.] Here is a plain evidence, that the word of God is the ordinary means of our regeneration, it being the word preached, the word we are to hear, ver. 19. 22. and to receive with meekneſs, by which the new birth is by God wrought in us, and which, ſaith the apoſtle, is able to ſave the ſoul. And it is ſurely a great diſparagement to the word of God, to think that his perſuaſions, admonitions, exhortations, and threats, ſhould be all inſufficient to prevail with us to turn from our ſinful courſes, and to turn to him; when all men who do uſe theſe methods towards their children, ſervants, friends, or relations, do it in hopes they ſhall be ſucceſsful by theſe means: only this is not ſo to be underſtood, as to exclude the bleſſing and co-operation of God with the word preached, or the aſſiſtance of his Holy Spirit, ſetting it home upon our hearts; provided this be not by way of phyſical, but moral operation, by that illumination of the underſtanding from the word, which

produceth that renovation in the ſpirit of the mind, by which we are enabled to diſcern, and to approve the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God, Rom. 12. 2. Eph. 4. 23. to diſcern what is acceptable to the Lord, Eph. 5. 10. to underſtand what the will of the Lord is, ver. 17. the things that are moſt excellent. And if the word of God be a perfect rule, able to make us wiſe unto ſalvation, and furniſh us for every good work, ſure the good ſpirit may by his ſuggeſtion of the truths delivered in it, by bringing them to our remembrance, and opening our underſtanding to perceive the ſcriptures, remove that darkneſs which is in our minds, either by natural corruption, or by the miſts which Satan caſt upon them; whence the apoſtle doth inform us, 2 Cor. 4. 3. 4. that if the goſpel be hidden from any to whom it is preached, it is becauſe the god of this world hath blinded the conceptions of their minds, that the light of the glorious goſpel ſhould not ſhine into them. And, 2. By making deep impreſſions on the mind, of the advantages and rewards promiſed to our converſion, and ſincere obedience, and the tremendous evils threatened to the diſobedient; and bringing theſe things oft to our remembrance, which, in the ſcripture-phraſe, is putting theſe laws in our minds, and writing them upon our hearts, that we may not depart from him, Heb. 8. 10. See note on Heb. 8. 10. For what reaſon can be given, why the Spirit of wiſdom, having enlightened the eyes of our underſtanding, to know what is the hope of our calling, and the glorious riches of the inheritance of the ſaints, Eph. 1. 18. And theſe things being as firmly believed, and made thus preſent to our minds, ſhould not have greater prevalence upon our wills to obedience, than any temporal concerns to yield obedience to the laws of ſin? It is certain Satan can tempt us no other way, than by ſuggeſting ſome temporal allurements and advantages, or ſome temporal loſſes and affrightments to us. Since then the ſcripture doth aſſure us, this is our victory over the world, even our faith, 1 John 5. 4. even that faith which is the firm expectation of things hoped for, the evidence of things not ſeen, Heb. 11. 1.; why ſhould not theſe objects of our faith preſented to us, and impreſſed on us by the Holy Spirit, be more powerful to baffle all the temptations of ſin, Satan, and the world? If beyond this there be ſome phyſical and irreſiſtible operation on God's part, requiſite to make men know the things which belong to their peace, and knowing, to chuſe the good, and refuſe the evil, this being not wrought in them who are not born anew; why is the want of this new birth, and this ſpiritual renovation, ſo oft imputed to mens want of conſideration, and of laying to heart the things propounded to them? their not inclining their ear to wiſdom, and applying their heart to underſtanding? their hatred of knowledge, their rejecting the counſel of God, and not chuſing the fear of the Lord? Prov. 1. 24. 25. 29. 30. Why is it ſaid that they continue thus unreformed, becauſe they would have none of God's counſel, but deſpiſed all his reproofs; becauſe they would not frame their doings to turn unto the Lord? To omit innumerable expreſſions of the like import. See note on Rom. 10. 17. 1 Pet. 1. 23.

Ver. 19. • Slow to ſpeak.] It was the imputation which the Heathens caſt upon the Chriſtians, that they were in publico muti, not being inclined palam loqui, to ſpeak openly of their religion: And this is confeſſed by (p) Chriſtians to be true of the laity, who were not by office engaged to preach it to the world; that it was not their cuſtom to aſſert and defend their religion publicly, but only to give an anſwer to them who required a reaſon of the hope that was in them: and in this ſenſe good commentators do expound theſe words, viz. as an admonition to be ſlow to ſpeak of divine things, and much more to be teachers of them; but in the uſual ſenſe it agrees with that of Bias (q), Μίσει τὸ τάχυ λαλεῖν, μὴ ἁμαρτῇ, μετάνοια γὰρ ἀκολουθεῖ, "Be averſe from raſh "ſpeaking, leſt thou offend, for thou will repent of "it;" as θυμῷ κρατεῖν, "to curb our angry paſſions," agrees with the following words, Be ſlow to wrath.

Ibid. ᵖ Βραδὺς εἰς ὀργὴν, ſlow to wrath.] This was an admonition needful for the Jewiſh zealots, who were ἐξ ἐριθείας, of contentious ſpirits; ſee note on Rom. 2. 8. filled with wrath againſt the teachers of Chriſtianity, and eſpecially againſt thoſe who denied the neceſſity of circumciſing the Gentiles, or requiring them to obſerve the law of Moſes, Acts 13. 45. and 17. 5. (r) "They compelling all men to "be circumciſed, if they would abide with them; "and looking upon this as a thing of abſolute ne- "ceſſity," without which nothing elſe would ſatisfy them.

Now, theſe diſputes naturally tended to obſtruct that faith by which men were juſtified, and not by circumciſion, or the works of the law, and which in the epiſtles of St Paul is ſtill ſtyled the righteouſneſs of God; ſee note on Rom. 1. 17. 2. They were very prone to ſet up for teachers of the law, though they underſtood not aright thoſe things of which they ſpake, 1 Tim. 1. 7. Rom. 2. 18.; and this might give occaſion to the other admonition here, to be ſlow to ſpeak. And chap. 3. 1. they alſo were incontinent, and very prone to luſtings, and to fornications: ſee note on Rom. 2. 22. 2 Tim. 3. 5. Heb. 12. 16. and therefore fitly are admoniſhed to lay aſide all filthineſs and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs.

Ver. 21. Τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον, the ingrafted word,] ſaith Oecumenius, is that principle of reaſon by which we are enabled to diſcern good from evil; but of that the apoſtle would not ſay, "that it is "able to ſave our ſouls." But the apoſtles, or preachers of the Chriſtian faith, being ſaid φυτεύειν, to plant the word among their hearers, 1 Cor. 3. 6. 7. 8. the ingrafted word ſeems to be the word planted in the heart of believers by the miniſters of Chriſt, which St Barnabas ſtyles, τὴν ἔμφυτον δωρεὰν τῆς διδαχῆς αὐτοῦ, "the ingrafted gift of his doctrine," § 9. p. 6. So they who made the Jews underſtand the law read to them, are ſaid ἐμφυσιᾶν ἅμα τὴν ἀνάγνωσιν, to imprint upon them the knowledge or remembrance of what they read, Eſd. 9. 48. 55. Againſt this ſenſe it is objected, that the word thus planted in us is not properly λόγος ἔμφυτος, but ἐμφύτευτος. But ſince νόμος ἔμφυτος, "is the law planted in the heart by God," I think not this criticiſm ſufficient to deſtroy the ſenſe of the words here given; eſpecially if we conſider, that all filthineſs, and ſuperfluity of naughtineſs, muſt be firſt laid aſide, that we may be fitted to receive with meekneſs this λόγος ἔμφυτος, ingrafted word, which ſhews it cannot import any thing, which is by nature always in us.

Ver. 22. [r] That many of the Jews had conceived an opinion, that even the ſtudy and knowledge of the law would procure them a reward in heaven; ſee note on Rom. 2. 13.

Ver. 26. [r] Ἀπατῶν, &c. deceiving his own heart.] That the unbelieving Jews had a zeal for God, the apoſtle bears them record, Rom. 10. 2. but then that zeal wrought ſo great a bitterneſs of ſpirit in them, that in thoſe very ſynagogues in which they met to bleſs God, they imprecated a curſe upon the Chriſtians created anew after his image, chap. 3. 10. I being zealous for God, as all you are this day, ſaith St Paul, perſecuted this way unto the death, Acts 22. 3. 4. and in thus doing, they thought they did God ſervice, John 16. 2. The zealots among them, ſaith their own Joſephus (s), "who gave themſelves "that name, from their zeal to what was good, "committed all manner of wickedneſs, and account-"ed the worſt of evils good." And yet Eleazer (t), the ringleader of them, repreſents them, as "per-"ſons, who had cauſe to hope they ſhould be by "God preſerved, as having not offended againſt "him, and being guilty of no fault, and being "teachers of others." That the believing Jews, who urged upon the Gentiles the neceſſity of circumciſion, had a zeal for God, we learn from Gal. 4. 17. 18. Yet that they had the ſpirit of contention and envy, Phil. 1. 15. 16. and were deceitful workers, the apoſtle doth inform us; ſo that neither of them were truly religious; and to thoſe latter the apoſtle ſeems chiefly to ſpeak, in theſe words, If ye have bitter zeal and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not againſt the truth, &c.

Ver. 27. [r] Ἐπισκέπτεσθαι, to viſit the fatherleſs and widows.] It is very true, that Ignatius (u) ſaith of ſome who maintained opinions contrary to the grace of God come unto us, That "they had no regard to "charity, to the widow, and to the orphan, to the "oppreſſed, to thoſe that were in bonds, to the "hungry and thirſty." But then it is not manifeſt from his words that theſe were the Gnoſtics; nothing hinders, but what the apoſtle here ſpeaks of, may be alſo true of the Jews, who, as Joſephus (x) notes, were great enemies one to another, and wanted mercy moſt of all; or to thoſe zealots who ſpared none who would not be of their opinion, and their bitter zeal.

cloathing, and ſay unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and ſay to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit here under my footſtool:

4. [a] Are ye not then partial in yourſelves, (do you not both put a difference among yourſelves, on theſe accounts), and (alſo are) become [b] judges of evil thoughts, (in thinking that the rich is to be preferred in judgment, and the poor deſpiſed, ver. 6. on theſe accounts?)

5. Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God choſen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promiſed to them that love him? (And are they fit to be deſpiſed by you, who are ſo highly honoured and enriched by him?)

6. But (ſo it is, that) ye have deſpiſed the poor, (and had a partial reſpect to the rich: and yet) do not (theſe) rich men oppreſs you, and draw you before the judgment-ſeats, (on the account of your Chriſtian profeſſion?)

7. Do not they blaſpheme that worthy name, by which ye are called?

8. If (in this matter) you fulfil [c] the royal law, (which is) according to the ſcripture, (ſaying), Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf, ye do well; (for then ye will not be guilty of this reſpect of perſons, for you would not be deſpiſed becauſe you are poor, or have a rich man preferred before you in judgment.)

9. But if ye have (ſuch) reſpect to perſons, (as to honour the rich, and deſpiſe the poor, in judicial cauſes), ye commit ſin, and are convinced of (or, by) the law (now mentioned) as tranſgreſſors (of God's law in the general; this law comprehending all the duties of the ſecond table, Rom. 13. 9. Matth. 22. 39.)

10. For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law (in other matters), and yet (knowingly) offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

11. For he that ſaid, Do not commit adultery; ſaid alſo, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become [d] a tranſgreſſor of the law (of love, mentioned ver. 8. which comprehends all the duties of the ſecond table, in which here the apoſtle inſtanceth.)

12. So (therefore) ſpeak ye, and ſo do, as they that (know they) ſhall be judged [e] by the law of liberty.

13. [f] For he ſhall have judgment without mercy, who hath ſhewed no mercy, (and ſo hath highly thwarted the great law of love); and mercy rejoiceth againſt (or, triumpheth over) judgment, (i. e. it enables the merciful man to rejoice, as being free from the judgment of condemnation from that God, who to the merciful will ſhew himſelf merciful, Pſal. 18. 27.)

14. (And let not any Jew or Chriſtian think his faith ſufficient to juſtify and ſave him, without theſe works of charity and mercy; for) what doth it profit, my brethren, though a man ſay he hath faith (in God, ver. 19. or in Chriſt), and hath not works (to evidence his faith)? can (ſuch a naked, fruitleſs) faith ſave him?

15. If a brother or a ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of daily food;

16. And one of you ſay unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed, and filled, (wiſhing only that they may be ſo): notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which be needful for (the clothing or feeding) the body; what doth it profit (them to hear your kind wiſhes?)

17. Even ſo faith, if it hath not works, is dead (fruitleſs and lifeleſs as theſe words) being alone (without works ſhewing the truth of it.)

18. [g] Yea, a man may ſay (to ſuch a ſolifidian), Thou haſt (in thy pretenſions) faith, and I have (real) works: ſhew me thy faith (of which thou boaſteſt) without thy works, (which thou canſt never do; ſince faith being ſeated in the heart, can only be diſcovered by its effects), and I will ſhew thee my faith by my works, (as the cauſe is demonſtrated by the effect.)

19. Thou (being a Jew) believeſt that there is one God; thou (in that) doſt well: (but doſt no more than the very devils, for) the (y) devils alſo believe, and tremble; (and if thou haſt no better faith than they, thou haſt the ſame reaſon to tremble which they have.)

20. But wilt thou know, O vain man, (who boaſteſt of a faith deſtitute of works), that faith without works is dead, (and ſo unable to juſtify and ſave thee? See it in the example of that very Abraham, in thy relation to whom thou ſo confideſt).

21. (For) was not Abraham (whom we ſtyle) our father juſtified by works (proceeding from his faith), [h] when he had offered his ſon Iſaac upon the altar, (counting that God was able to raiſe him from the dead? Heb. 11. 17. 19.)

22. Seeſt thou how (Gr. thou ſeeſt by this example, that) faith wrought with his works (to produce them), and by works was faith made perfect (in him?)

23. And the ſcripture was (again) fulfilled, which ſaith, Abraham believed God, and it (viz. that faith which produced theſe works) [i] was imputed to him for righteouſneſs: and (upon that account) he was called the friend of God.

24. Ye ſee then how that by works (proceeding from faith) a man is juſtified, and not by faith only, (alone without them.)

(y) Gigantes contremiſcunt, Targ. in Job 26. 4.

25. Likewiſe

25. Likewiſe alſo was not [a] Rahab the harlot juſtified by works (proceeding from her faith), when ſhe had received the meſſengers, and had ſent them out another way?

26. (And ſo it muſt be in all other perſons who would be ſaved, they muſt ſhew their faith by their works:) [a] for as the body without the ſpirit is dead, ſo faith without works is dead alſo, (and therefore cannot ſave us, or give life unto us.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὴν πίστιν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τῆς δόξης, the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of glory.] This verſion ſeems obnoxious to this exception, that the pronoun ἡμῶν will not ſuffer the word Lord to be joined with glory; therefore that which renders the words thus, The faith of the glory of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or, Hold not the glorious faith of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt with reſpect of perſons, ſeems to be the better verſion, and more agreeable to the deſign of the apoſtle, as giving the beſt reaſon againſt the accepting perſons on the account of their riches, or their gay attire; becauſe their faith hath clothed them with a greater and more valuable glory, which renders them more honourable than any riches or gay cloathing could do. For this faith, ſaith the apoſtle, is the miniſtration of glory, and by it we all beholding the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 8. 18.; ſee the note there. And whom God hath juſtified by faith, he hath alſo glorified, by giving them this Spirit of glory, Rom. 8. 30. See the note there.

Ibid. [b] Ἐν προσωπολημψίαις, with reſpect of perſons.] Προσωπολημψία is the reſpect of perſons in judgment, not purely according to the merits of the cauſe, but according to external reſpects which relate not to it. As for inſtance, the dread of any man's power, or the fear of what he may do to us, if we judge againſt him. So Lev. 19. 15. Thou ſhalt not honour the perſon of the great, or reſpect the perſon of the poor; in juſtice ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour; and Deut. 1. 17. Ye ſhall not reſpect perſons in judgment, ye ſhall hear alike the ſmall and the great; ye ſhall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is the Lord's. Or, 2. The poverty of any man, which renders him leſs able to ſuffer the puniſhment of his injuſtice: Thou ſhalt not reſpect a poor man in his cauſe, Exod. 23. 3. 3. It is the reſpecting perſons in judgment, by reaſon of any gift, or hope of gain, by favouring any cauſe; Thou ſhalt not wreſt judgment, thou ſhalt not reſpect perſons, neither take a gift, Deut. 16. 19. Or, 4. By reaſon of relation, affinity, friendſhip, or affection. In ſpiritual or evangelical matters, it is to have regard to men in reference to things which render them neither better nor worſe, more or leſs acceptable in the ſight of God. As for inſtance, to regard them, 1. In reſpect to their nation, and their offſpring: Of a truth I perceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him, Acts 10. 31.; he will have no reſpect to nations, or external profeſſions, in his future recompenſes, Rom. 2. 6. 10. Or, 2. With regard to their condition, as being maſters or ſervants: hence maſters are bid to deal with their ſervants, as knowing they have a maſter in heaven, with whom is no reſpect of perſons, Eph. 6: 9.; and ſervants to be juſt to their maſters, becauſe he that is unjuſt ſhall receive for the wrong that he hath done, and there is no reſpect of perſons with God, Col. 3. 25. 1 Pet. 1. 17. Or, 3. To their quality; for God acceptеth not the perſons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor; for they are all the works of his hands, Job 34. 39. And this is the thing here cenſured.

Ver. 2. [c] Εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν, into your aſſembly.] That here the apoſtle ſpeaketh of conſiſtories for civil judicatures, is argued, 1. From the accepting of perſons, mentioned, ver. 1. which in the Old Teſtament and the New, as oft as it is applied to men, reſpecteth human judicatures. 2. From the foot-ſtool, mentioned, ver. 3. which obtained in their judicial conſiſtories, and which was proper to princes on their thrones, and judges on their tribunals. 3. From the judges mentioned, ver. 4. and the κριτήρια, or judgment-ſeats, ver. 6. 4. From the law violated by this reſpect of perſons, ver. 8. 9. And, laſtly, From the canon of the Jews, by which it is provided, "That when the rich and poor have a ſuit "together in their conſiſtories, either both muſt ſit, "or both ſtand, to avoid all marks of partiality." R. Levi Barcinon, l. 142. Juris Hebraici.

Yet becauſe the Jewiſh Chriſtians then had no diſtinct churches of their own, much leſs any with ſuch diſtinct ſeats for men of rank, or ſuch πρωτοκαθεδρίαι, chief places, as the Jews had, Matth. 23. 6. both in Judea, Alexandria, and other places, Campeg. Vitringa de ſynag. vet. l. 1. c. 9. but rather aſſembled ſtill in the Jewiſh ſynagogues, where there was a Beth-din, or houſe of judgment, where the head of the ſynagogue, and the ſeniors that aſſiſted him, ſat to give judgment on offenders, and where they were brought before them, and ſcourged for their offences, Matth. 10. 17. and 23. 34. Acts 22. 19. and 26. 11.; ſee the notes there; the aſſembly here mentioned might be a Jewiſh ſynagogue. Moreover, the Jews living among the Gentiles, retained ſtill a juriſdiction over men of their own nation and religion, even as to matrimonial and pecuniary, as well as religious cauſes; and ſo the Jewiſh Chriſtians might be drawn before their judgment-ſeats on thoſe accounts, ver. 6. this being long after forbidden by a law of Honorius and Theodoſius. Theod. cod. 16. tit. 8. leg. 22. Vid. not. Gothofr. p. 240.

Ver. 4. [a] Καὶ ὐ διακρίθητε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς;] Do you not put a difference or diſcrimination among yourſelves on thoſe accounts, which are alien from the cauſe? That this is the frequent ſenſe of the word διακρινόμενοι and διακρίνεσθαι, ſee Acts 15. 9. where οὐδὲν διέκρινε is rendered, He put no difference betwixt us and them; and Jude, ver. 22. where we read thus, Of ſome have compaſſion, διακρινόμενοι, making a difference. See note on Rom. 14. 23.

Ibid. [b] Κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν, judges of evil thoughts;] i. e. who paſs judgment from your own evil thoughts, as judging the rich worthy of reſpect in judgment, for his gorgeous attire, and outward appearance, and the poor fit to be deſpiſed for his outward meanneſs.

Ver. 8. [c] Νόμον βασιλικὸν, the royal law.] Not ſo much becauſe it is the law of Chriſt our king, it being a law of the Old Teſtament, as becauſe it is the law which, of all laws which concern our neighbour, is moſt excellent, and which governs and moderates other laws, eſpecially the ceremonial and poſitive laws, which are to give place to that of charity and mercy. Moreover, the Jews themſelves ſo interpret this law, as to forbid the contempt of our brother, as you may ſee in Dr Cartwright's Mellificium on this place.

Ver. 11. [d] Παραβάτης νόμου, a tranſgreſſor of the law;] or, becauſe the authority of the lawgiver is as much deſpiſed by the breaking any one of his laws, as by the violation of them all; and he that by it will not be reſtrained from the violation of it in one point, under the like temptations will do it in another.

Note farther, that theſe words ſeem to be directly levelled againſt that looſe doctrine of the Jewiſh doctors, mentioned by Dr Pocock (z), "That God "gave ſo many commandments to them, that by "doing any of them they might be ſaved." So Kimchi expounds thoſe words of Hoſea, Take away iniquity, קח טוב, and receive good; i. e. ſaith he, "receive in lieu of them any good, אזות מצוה, any "commandment that we have done." It was a vulgar rule among them, ſaith Dr Smith (a), "That men "ſhould ſingle out ſome one commandment of God's "law, and therein eſpecially exerciſe themſelves, "that ſo they might make God their friend by that, "leſt in others they ſhould too much diſpleaſe him." And he cites from them this rule (b), "He that ob- "ſerves any one precept, it ſhall be well with him, "and his days ſhall be prolonged, and he ſhall poſ- "ſeſs the earth." And this precept was with them uſually that of the ſabbath, of ſacrifices, or of tithes; for theſe they looked upon as the great commandments of the law, not thoſe of mercy and judgment, which in our Saviour's account were ſo.

Ver. 12. [e] Διὰ νόμου ἐλευθερίας, by the law of liberty;] by that law of love which makes all men our neighbours, and frees us from thoſe reſtraints the ceremonial law, and the traditions of the Jewiſh doctors, lay upon them, of confining their love and freedom of converſe to thoſe that were of their own nation, or were circumciſed. The Jews had great need of theſe inſtructions; for as they held it unlawful to converſe with publicans and ſinners, Luke 15. 1. 2. though it were to inſtruct them in the way of life, ſo much more to come to, or converſe with one of another nation, Acts 10. 28.; yea, they would not ſuffer them to be among them who would not be circumciſed. Vide Joſeph. in vita ſua, p. 1007. B.

Ver. 13. [f] Of this mercy the Jews were ſo unmindful, that Joſephus (c) having ſaid, "They vio- "lated the laws of nature, and polluted the divinity "with their injuſtice towards men," he adds, "That "no good affection was ſo entirely loſt among them "as ἐλεημοσύνη, as that of mercy."

Ver. 18. [k] The Greek in moſt copies runs thus, Δεῖξόν μοι τὴν πίστιν σου ἐκ τῶν ἔργων σου, κἀγὼ δείξω σοι ἐκ τῶν ἔργων μου τὴν πίστιν μου, i. e. Shew me thy faith by thy works, and I will ſhew thee by my works my faith: i. e. Shew me by the proper fruits of it the faith of which thou boaſteſt, and I, by the ſame effects, will ſhew I have that faith alſo, though I boaſt not of it. But it is further to be obſerved, that ἐκ τῶν ἔργων σου, is left out in Oecumenius, and one Greek copy: and, 2. That the Alexandrian MSS. and thoſe peruſed by Curcellæus read χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων σου, without thy works. So did the Vulgar, the Syriac, and the Æthiopic verſions; and ſo the following words, ver. 20. Know, O vain man, that faith χωρὶς ἔργων, without works, is dead, ſeem to require; and this reading our tranſlation follows.

Ver. 21. [l] Ἀνενέγκας, &c. when he offered his ſon Iſaac.] This being a greater act of faith than that by which he was at firſt juſtified; for that was only faith in God's promiſe, that he would raiſe up ſeed from his dead body, and the dead womb of Sarah, Rom. 4. 20.; this was a belief, that he would raiſe up this very ſeed, conſumed to aſhes, from the dead; and therefore by this work was his faith made perfect, i. e. advanced to the greateſt height, there being no more noble act of faith than this of the reſurrection of the dead conſumed to aſhes, and none by which we give more glory to God. See Ecclus 44. 20.

Ver. 23. [m] Ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιοσύνην, was accounted to him for righteouſneſs;] that is, it engaged God to own him as a truly religious perſon, or one that did ſincerely fear him, by ſaying, Now I know that thou feareſt God, ſeeing thou haſt not with-held thy only ſon from me, Gen. 22. 15. or as one who upon trial had been found faithful: ſo Mattathias, Was not Abraham found faithful in temptation, and that was accounted to him for righteouſneſs? 1 Mac. 2. 52.; and alſo to deal with him as a righteous perſon, ſo as to renew the covenant made with him, and to eſtabliſh it with an oath, Gen. 22. 16. 17. 18. and to give him the high title, not only of his ſervant, but his friend, 2 Chron. 20. 7. Iſ. 41. 8.

Ver. 25. [n] Ῥαὰβ ἡ πόρνη, Rahab the harlot.] That Rahab had a ſtrong faith in God, the apoſtle teſtifies, by ſaying, By faith Rahab the harlot periſhed not with thoſe that believed not, receiving the ſpies in peace, Heb. 11. 31.; and this ſhe ſhewed, by ſaying, The Lord your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath, Joſh. 2. 11.; and this ſhe teſtified, by being ſo induſtrious to preſerve the meſſengers, and to do all things agreed on betwixt them and her, for her ſafety.

Ver. 26. [o] There have been many ways invented how to reconcile theſe words of St James with the apoſtle Paul, aſſerting, that a man is juſtified by faith, without the deeds of the law, Rom. 3. 28. As,

1. That when St Paul ſaith, We are juſtified by faith, without the works of the law; and that, To him that worketh not, but believeth, faith is imputed unto him for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 5. or to juſtification; juſtification, there aſcribed to faith alone, imports only our abſolution from condemation, by reaſon of our paſt offences committed before faith, and our reconciliation to God, by the pardon, or not imputing them to believers. It conſiſts, ſaith the apoſtle, in the remiſſion of ſins that are paſt, Rom. 3. 25.; it is, ſaith Peter, the purgation of us from our old ſins, 2 Pet. 1. 9.; it is effected by the death of Chriſt, procuring redemption for ſins committed under the old covenant, Heb. 9. 15. This is apparent from the chief argument the apoſtle uſeth to prove the neceſſity, that both Jew and Gentile ſhould be juſtified freely by his grace, and not by the works of the law, becauſe they were all under ſin, all become guilty before God, all having ſinned, and come ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 3. 9. and 19. 23.; whereas, ſaith he, being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 1. 2.; therefore, chap. 3. he muſt be ſpeaking of the condition of Jew and Gentile before faith. So again, when the apoſtle ſaith, The ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe (of juſtification) by (the) faith of Jeſus Chriſt might be given to them that believe (in him), Gal. 3. 22. 23. 24. Wherefore the law was (then) our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith (in him), ver. 25. But now, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter, (i. e. under the pædagogy of the law), ver. 26. For ye are all the children of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus; he plainly inſinuates, that we cannot be juſtified by the works of the law, becauſe the law leads us to Chriſt for juſtification and ceaſeth, now the way of juſtification by faith in Chriſt is made known. And again, We are juſtified by grace, not of works; for we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus to good works, Eph. 2. 8. 9. 10. where the argument ſeems plainly to run thus, We cannot be juſtified by works preceding faith, becauſe we do no good works till by faith we are intereſted in Chriſt Jeſus; whereas St James ſpeaks plainly of thoſe works which follow faith, are wrought by it, and are the fruits of it, and of their neceſſity in order to our continuance in a ſtate of juſtification and freedom from our final condemnation.

2. That St Paul excludes from juſtification only thoſe works which are oppoſed to juſtification by an act of grace, and make it to be of debt, and ſo give occaſion to our glorying in our being righteous in the ſight of God, purely by reaſon of our works, as in theſe words, If it be of grace, it is no more of works, otherwiſe grace is no more grace; but if it be of works, then it is no more of grace, otherwiſe work is no more work, Rom. 11. 6. And again, To him that worketh, the reward is reckoned, not of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth, faith is accounted unto him for righteouſneſs, Rom. 4. 4. 5. And again, Where then is glorying? It is excluded. By what law? by that of works? No; but by the law of faith, Rom. 3. 27.; whereas St James requires only thoſe works to our ſalvation, and our continuance in a ſtate of juſtification, which proceed from, and are accepted through grace, and ſo can never render our juſtification of debt, or give us a juſt ground of boaſting.

3. That St Paul is arguing againſt the Jews, who fought for juſtification by virtue of the law of Moſes, and ſought it not by faith, Rom. 9. 32. nor ever conceived that ſufficient for that end, declaring againſt that way of juſtification, becauſe it would confine the bleſſing of Abraham to the circumciſion only, Rom. 4. 9.; and becauſe the law of Moſes was four hundred and thirty years after the promiſe made to Abraham, ſpeaking of that law which ſaid, Do this and live, Gal. 3. 17. which was our ſchoolmaſter to bring us to Chriſt, and which was then to ceaſe, as to the obligation of it; whereas St James ſpeaks of juſtification by works performed under the covenant of grace, and as conditions even of that new covenant. Now, I except not againſt any of theſe ways of reconciling theſe two apoſtles in their diſcourſe upon this ſubject; but then I alſo think we may add this other to them.

4. That St Paul plainly ſpeaks to Chriſtians only concerning their juſtification from their paſt offences by faith in the blood of Jeſus; but St James ſpeaks as well to the unbelieving as believing Jews, touching faith in God, ſuch as Abraham had when he believed God's promiſe, ver. 23. and ſuch as Rahab the harlot had, ver. 25. ſaying, Thou believeſt there is one God, ver. 19. without the leaſt mention of faith in Chriſt; and who, perhaps, thought it ſufficient to keep them in the favour of God, and render them his friends, that they had caſt off all idolatry, and only owned the true God; proving this not to be ſufficient to procure the divine favour, unleſs, by the obedience of their lives, they glorified him as God, ſince otherwiſe they only did in words profeſs to own him, but in works deny him, being diſobedient.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. MY brethren, [a] be not many maſters, (i. e. διδάσκαλοι, teachers of the law), knowing that (thereby) we ſhall receive the greater condemnation (for our offences againſt that law we teach to others.)

2. (And this we ought the rather to beware of); for in many things we offend all (againſt the law, and more eſpecially in that member that we employ in teaching of others. For) if any man offend not in word, the ſame is [b] a perfect man, and able alſo to bridle (curb, and direct the motions of) the whole body.

3. (I uſe the metaphor of a bridle as appoſite in this caſe; for) behold we put bits (or bridles) in the horſes mouths, that they may obey us, and (with them) we turn about their whole bodies; (even ſo, if we by any means can bridle, and thereby govern the tongue, by the like means we may govern the whole man.)

4. Behold alſo the ſhips, which though they be ſo great (in bulk), and are driven with fierce winds; yet are they turned about with a very ſmall helm, whitherſoever the governor (or pilot of the ſhip) liſteth.

5. Even ſo (is it with) the tongue (as with this bit and helm; it) is a little member, [c] and boaſteth great things, (ὑ μεγαλαυχῶ, but it mightily exalts itſelf by its great performances.) Behold how great a matter (how much wood) a little fire kindleth.

6. [d] And the tongue is (as) a fire, a world of iniquity (is kindled by it): ſo is the tongue amongſt our members (as fire among wood), that it defileth (Gr. ſpotting or blackening) the whole body, and ſetteth (Gr. inflaming or ſetting) on fire the courſe of nature, (or the ſucceſſion of men in the world); and it is ſet on fire of hell, (Gr. being ſet on fire by hell.)

7. (And it reſembles fire in this alſo, that when it hath once got the maſtery, it cannot eaſily be ſubdued and extinguiſhed); for every kind of beaſts, and of birds, and of ſerpents, and things in the ſea, is tamed, and hath been tamed [e] by mankind;

8. But the tongue (of others) can no man tame; it is an unruly evil, (and like the ſerpents mentioned, ver. 7.), full of deadly poiſon.

9. Therewith bleſs we God, even the Father (of us all); and therewith [f] curſe we men, which are made [g] after the ſimilitude of God, (and upon that account are to be reverenced by us.)

10. Out of the ſame mouth proceedeth bleſſing and curſing. My brethren, theſe things ought not ſo to be. (For)

11. Doth a fountain ſend forth at the ſame place ſweet water and bitter?

12. Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries, or a vine, figs? (ſurely no: even) ſo no fountain can both yield ſalt water and freſh. (And if nature produceth no ſuch contrary fruits, much leſs ſhould grace produce things ſo extremely oppoſite as are bleſſing and curſing.)

13. Who (then) is [h] a wiſe man and endued with knowledge among you? (to which you are great pretenders), let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works with meekneſs of wiſdom, (or the works of wiſdom with meekneſs, i. e. let him, by his charity and meekneſs towards his brethren, ſhew forth his wiſdom.)

14. But if ye have [i] bitter envying and ſtrife in your hearts, glory not (of your wiſdom), and lie not againſt the truth (in pretending to be wiſe as to it.)

15. This wiſdom deſcendeth not from above, but is earthly, (from the love of earthly things), ſenſual, (proceeding from the luſts of the fleſh, among which ſtrife and envy are reckoned, Gal. 5. 20.), deviliſh, coming from Satan, the promoter of ſtrife and envy, and from pride and ambition, by which he fell, 1 Tim. 3. 6.)

16. For where envying and ſtrife is (as the root), there is [k] confuſion, and every evil work (as the fruit.)

17. But the wiſdom which is from above is firſt pure (from ſenſuality and earthly-mindedneſs, ver. 15), then peaceable (and) gentle, (in oppoſition to contention, contention, ver. 14.), eaſy to be entreated, (or perſuaded, in oppoſition to the inflexibility of the Jews), [i] full of mercy and good fruits, (wanting in them, ver. 13.), [m] without partiality, and [n] without hypocriſy, (of which things the Jews were highly guilty.)

18. And the [o] fruit of righteouſneſs is ſown in peace of (for or to) them that make peace.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Μὴ πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι γίνεσθε, Be not many teachers.] The Jews had not only in Judea, but in their ſeveral diſperſions, their מוֹרִים, or doctors of the law, who being created doctors, maſters, or Rabbins, by impoſition of hands, were authoriſed to teach the law to others. This office the Jews much affected, θέλοντες εἶναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι, affecting to be teachers of the law, 1 Tim. 1. 7. and being confident of their abilities to be guides to the blind, a light to them that ſat in darkneſs, inſtructors of the fooliſh, and διδάσκαλοι νηπίων, teachers of babes, Rom. 2. 19. 20. And ſuch eſpecially were the zealots among them. Whence (d) Eleazer the chief of them ſaith, "They had eſpecial reaſon to "expect a ſhare in the divine favour, as being "blameleſs as to the obſervation of the law, and alſo "teachers of it to others." This affectation of that office the apoſtle here warns them to avoid, as that which would expoſe them to greater condemnation, for their offences againſt that law they taught to others, and ſo confeſſed they knew themſelves.

Ver. 2. [b] Τέλειον ἄνδρα, a perfect man,] Is a perſon fully inſtructed in his duty. See note on 1 Cor. 2. 6.

Ver. 5. [c] Καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖ, and boaſteth great things.] This word ſignifies not only to vaunt of, but alſo to do great things; μεγάλα ἐργάζεται καλὰ, καὶ κακὰ, it works great good, and evil, ſaith Oecumenius: Magnificatrix eſt, It is a doer of great things, ſo Faber. It anſwers to the Hebrew עָרַץ, which ſignifies to to be valid, and move itſelf violently, to be haughty, and exalt itſelf, Pſal. 9. 19. Ezek. 16. 50. Zeph. 3. 11. Ecclus 48. 18. And this ſignification, both the text, and the reſemblance of the tongue to fire, ſeem plainly to require. (See Examen Millii.)

Ver. 6. [d] Ἡ γλῶσσα πῦρ, the tongue is a fire.] The compariſon of the tongue to fire, firſt blackening, and then waſting the whole world, (or wood), is taken from the ſcripture, and from the ſayings of the Hebrew doctors: The froward man bringeth deſtruction; in his mouth there is a burning fire, Prov. 16. 27. And, ver. 28. Λαμπτῆρα δόλος πυρσεύει κακοῖς, he kindles a firebrand of deceit to the wicked. As the matter of fire, κατὰ τὴν ὕλην πυρὸς, according to the wood of the fire, ſo it burneth; and the ſtronger they are that contend, the more they will be inflamed, Ecclus 28. 10. A haſty contention kindleth a fire, the fire burning kindles great heaps, ſaith Ben Syra; which is thus explained, As a little fire conſumes great heaps of wood, ſo nothing more waſtes the world than an evil tongue.

Note, 2. If the original was, as our tranſlation hath it, a world of iniquity, ſomething muſt be added to it to make the ſenſe complete, as I have done in the paraphraſe, or as the Ethiopic, "a world "of iniquity is contained in it." But the Syriac reads thus, "And the wicked world is as the wood;" and this makes both the ſenſe and the ſimilitude run clear.

Ver. 7. [e] Τῇ φύσει ἀνθρωπίνῃ, by mankind], is the Hebrew phraſe for man, as ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις is a man, 1 Pet. 2. 13.

Ver. 9. [f] Καταρώμεθα, curſe we men.] This the unbelieving Jews did towards the Chriſtians, curſing and anathematiſing them in their ſynagogues; as Juſtin Martyr (e) often teſtifieth to the face of Trypho the Jew.

Ibid. [g] Καθ' ὁμοίωσιν Θεοῦ, after the ſimilitude of God.] From this 9th verſe it appears that man loſt not the image of God by the fall; and thence it is probable that it conſiſts not primarily in holineſs, but in dominion, Gen. 1. 26.

Ver. 13. [h] Ἐπιστήμων ἐν ὑμῖν, a wiſe man among you.] That the Jews were great pretenders to knowledge, ſee Rom. 2. 18.; that they gloried in the title of chochamim or wiſe men, ſee note on 1 Cor. 1. 20. 3. 18. Hence their divines are ſtyled חכמי האמת, wiſe men as to the truth, ſaith Buxtf.

Ver. 14. [i] Ζῆλον πικρὸν καὶ ἐριθείαν, bitter envy and ſtrife.] The unbelieving Jews are repreſented ſtill as οἱ ἐξ ἐριθείας, men of contention, who obeyed not the truth, Rom. 2. 8.; men who were filled with bitter zeal againſt the preachers of the goſpel, Acts 13. 45. 17. 5. and very mad againſt them. And ſome of them who owned the goſpel, did yet preach Chriſt ἐξ ἐριθείας, out of contention, and envy againſt St Paul, Philip. 1. 15. and the effects of their diſputes were, ſaith the apoſtle, φθόνος καὶ ἔρις, envy and ſtrife, 1 Tim. 6. 4. ἔρις καὶ μάχαι νομικαὶ, conten- tions, and fightings about the law: and where they were mixed with the converted Gentiles, we find eſpecial cautions againſt ſtrife and envy, as at Rome, Rom. 13. 13. againſt provoking one another, and envying one another, Gal. 5. 26. againſt doing things through ſtrife and vain-glory, Phil. 2. 3. Or complaints of the abounding of theſe vices, 1 Cor. 1. 11. 3. 3. See eſpecially 2 Cor. 12. 20.

Ver. 16. [k] Ἀκαταστασία, confuſion.] i. e. Tumult, ſedition, and diſturbance of peace, and order; for contention naturally tends to fighting, and envy to the deſtruction of him we hate; φθονεῖτε καὶ ζηλοῦτε, you are envious and zealous againſt one another, chap. 4. 2. and then it follows, μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε, ye fight and war.

Ver. 17. [l] Μετὰ ἐλέους, full of mercy.] Which, ſaith Joſephus (f), "of all good paſſions was moſt of all "loſt among the Jews."

Ibid. [m] Ἀδιάκριτος, without partiality.] Or, as the word ſignifies, without putting a difference betwixt men of their own, and other nations, as the Jews did, accounting all other nations dogs; unclean, not fit to be converſed with, and dealing with them accordingly; for as Tacitus (g) hath obſerved of them, apud ipſos fides obſtinata, miſericordia in promptu, adverſus omnes alios hoſtile odium: "They "would be merciful to men of their own religion "and country, but hated all mankind beſides;" confining brotherly love to men of their own nation, as we learn from our Saviour's parable of the good Samaritan. When they broke into ſects and parties, they had the ſame hatred to thoſe of their own nation, who would not think and do as they did. The zealots, and thoſe that were for war, ſet themſelves againſt, and even threatened death to them who were for peace, looking upon them as no better than heathens, ſaith Joſephus (h): Whereas true Chriſtian wiſdom requires us to live peaceably with, and to do good to all.

Ibid. [n] Ἀνυπόκριτος, and without hypocriſy.] For which our Saviour ſo ſeverely inveighs againſt the Scribes and Phariſees, the leaders of the Jews.

Ver. 18. [o] Καρπὸς τῆς δικαιοσύνης, the fruit of righteouſneſs,] i. e. The reward of righteouſneſs to them who make it their buſineſs to live peaceably themſelves, and incline others to it, is here ſown happily and quietly, by the preachers of the goſpel of peace declaring it to the world, and ſhall hereafter aſſuredly be reaped by them. Or thus, Theſe fruits of righteouſneſs now ſown by the Chriſtian endued with this heavenly wiſdom, will yield a plentiful and happy crop to them who are promoters of peace.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. FRom [a] whence come wars and fightings among you (Jews)? come they not hence, even of your luſts (or pleaſures), that war in your members (againſt the ſoul? 1 Pet. 2. 11.)

2. [b] Ye luſt, and have not: ye kill, and deſire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, becauſe ye aſk not.

3. Ye aſk, and receive not, becauſe ye aſk amiſs, that ye may conſume it upon your luſts.

4. Ye adulterers, and adultereſſes, know ye not that the friendſhip of the world (which ſtands in competition with, and indiſpoſeth you to believe, and obey God's will) is enmity with God, (and ſo idolatry, which in the language of ſcripture is adultery?) whoſoever therefore will be (thus) a friend of the world, is the enemy of God, (having renounced him to have Mammon for his Lord, Matth. 6. 24.)

5. [c] Do you think that the ſcripture ſaith (Gr. ſpeaks) in vain, (againſt this worldly-mindedneſs), The Spirit that dwelleth in us (Chriſtians) luſteth (he) to envy, (as yours doth? ver. 2. Is he not rather the ſpirit of love and goodneſs, engaging us to love all men, and eſpecially our Chriſtian brethren? 1 Pet. 1. 22.)

6. But (ſo far is he from this envy, that where he dwells) [d] he giveth more grace, (or favour): wherefore he (or it, the ſcripture) ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, but giveth grace (or ſheweth favour) to the humble, (Prov. 3. 34.)

7. (Be ye then humble, and) ſubmit yourſelves therefore to (that) God (who giveth grace to the humble); reſiſt the devil (the author of thoſe wars, envyings, and luſtings which are among you), and (then) he will fly from you.

8. [e] Draw nigh to God (by prayer, humiliation, repentance, and obedience), and he will draw nigh to you (in mercy): [f] cleanſe your hands (from rapine and injuſtice), ye ſinners, and purify your hearts (from the love of the world), ye double-minded, (whoſe hearts are divided betwixt God and Mammon.)

9. Be

9. Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heavineſs.

10. Humble yourſelves (therefore) in the ſight of the Lord, (and under his mighty hand that is upon you, 1 Pet. 5. 6.), and he ſhall lift you up, (that he may exalt you ἐν καιρῷ, in that ſeaſon of his viſitation, as he did then his faithful ſervants, by a wonderful deliverance, according to his promiſe. See note on Matth. 24. 31.)

11. [b] Speak not evil one of (or againſt) another, brethren. He that ſpeaketh evil of (or againſt) his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law, (or ſpeaketh againſt the law, as being evil, or imperfect, in that it doth not command or condemn thoſe things which thou doſt command or condemn): but if thou (take upon thee to) judge the law, thou art not (in thy behaviour as) a doer of the law, but a judge (of it.)

12. (Whereas indeed) there is (only) one lawgiver, who is able to ſave and to deſtroy: who (therefore) art thou that judgeſt another?

13. Go to now, ye that (preſume to) ſay, To-day or to-morrow we will go into ſuch a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain, (as if both life, and the advantages of life, depended wholly on yourſelves, and not at all on divine providence.)

14. Whereas ye (who ſpeak with ſuch confidence of the future) know not what ſhall be on the morrow: For what is your life? It is even (as) a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vaniſheth away.

15. (Thus you are wont to ſpeak); for that (Gr. whereas) ye ought to ſay, [i] If the Lord will, we ſhall live, and do this or that.

16. But now you rejoice in your boaſtings (of the future): all ſuch rejoicing is evil, (as being an aſſuming to yourſelves what belongs to God only, and ſo an evidence that you do not ſubject your own will to the will of God: For ſince this life is ſo ſhort and uncertain, and thereby teaches you to think humbly, and ſpeak modeſtly, and with due dependence on the divine providence, with reſpect both to your lives and future actions; you by thus pleaſing yourſelves in theſe vain boaſtings, and talking as if you were immortal, and independent upon providence, are guilty of an evil exaltation, and vain boaſting.)

17. Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, to him it is ſin. (If after my admonition to avoid this and other crimes, you continue in them, you will be inexcuſably guilty of ſin, John 15. 22. and the guilt of it will abide upon you, John 9. 41. as it will alſo in all other things done againſt knowledge, and the convictions of your conſcience? for in ſuch things the heart departs from, and rebels againſt the Lord; he that thus ſins, deſpiſeth the word of the Lord, and reproacheth him that ſpake it, Numb. 15. 30. 31.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 1. [a] Πόθεν πόλεμοι; whence come wars? This epiſtle ſeems to have been writ about the 8th year of Nero, and the 62d of Chriſt, the year before the death of James; before which time the Jews had great wars and fightings, not only with their neighbours, (ſee note on Matth. 24. 6.), but even among themſelves in every city and family, ſaith Joſephus (i); not only in Judea, but in Alexandria, Syria, and many other places. See the preface, § 5. 6.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἐπιθυμεῖτε, &c. Ye luſt, &c.] For explication of theſe words we are to note, that the Jews were then vehemently luſting after two things.

1. Liberty and freedom from tribute; which was, ſay they, the token of ſubjection. Joſephus (k) ſaith they were continually clamouring, "to have "the tributes taken away," and that upon this very account; and that the zealots (l), "the band "of thieves, and their magicians, were ſtill preſſ- "ing the people to fight for their liberty from the "Roman yoke."

2. Dominion over other nations: for having got this fancy into their heads, That their Meſſiah (m) was to be a temporal prince, who ſhould enable them to lord it over the Heathens, they were zealous to have theſe pretended prophecies accompliſhed; and (n) "the hopes of it encouraged them to "fight." Whence we may paraphraſe on theſe two verſes thus: You luſt (for liberty and dominion), and you have it not; ye (in purſuit and deſire of

Ver. 4. Φιλία τῦ κόσμυ ἔχθρα τῦ Θεῦ ἐστὶν, The friendſhip of this world is enmity to God.] This one mentioned here by Oecumenius explains thus; κόσμον ἐνταῦθα πᾶσαν τὴν ὑλικὴν ζωὴν ἀποκαλεῖ, "he here ſtyles "the whole ſenſual life the world, ὡς μητέρα τῆς "φθορᾶς ὡς ὁ μετασχεῖν σπεύδων ὀλιγώρως ἔχει τῶν θείων, καὶ "ὑπερορίζοντας, as being the mother of corruption, "which he that is haſty to enjoy, overlooks, and "deſpiſeth divine things." See the text defended here, Examen Millii.

Ver. 5. [c] Ἢ δοκεῖτε ὅτι κενῶς ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; Or do you think that the ſcripture ſaith in vain? &c.] They who make this whole verſe one ſentence, are obliged to ſhew where the ſcripture hath theſe words, The Spirit that dwelleth in us luſteth to envy; which no interpreter hath yet ſucceſsfully attempted. But in the expoſition given in the paraphraſe, which makes the whole to conſiſt of two queſtions, this is needleſs. Now, in favour of this expoſition, let it be noted,

1. That nothing is more ordinary than for particles to be repeated from the precedent member. So Pſal. 9. 19. The needy ſhall not always be forgotten, the expectation of the poor ſhall (not) periſh for ever. See Pſal. 38. 1. 44. 19. 1 Sam. 2. 3. Job 30. 25. 31. 20. Prov. 25. 27. 30. 3. So ם, if, Pſal. 139. 8. Prov. 6. 1. 9. 12. See Glaſſius de ellipſi partic. l. 4. tr. 2. obſerv. 10. p. 721. So here the particle ἢ may be repeated thus, Or doth the Spirit that is in you luſt to envy? though the ſenſe be full only by reading the words by way of interrogation. Note,

2. That not to ſpeak in vain, is not to do it without cauſe or juſt reaſon, as Ezek. 6. 10. And God, or the ſcripture, is ſaid to ſpeak in vain to them who attend not to, or receive no benefit by his words, Jer. 8. 8. So then the ſenſe runs thus, Doth the ſcripture ſpeak without cauſe againſt this worldly-mindedneſs? Would it not have you attend to, and receive advantage by what it ſaith againſt it?

Ver. 6. [d] Μείζονα δὲ δίδωσι χάριν, but he giveth more grace.] That חן and χάρις throughout the ſcripture ſignifies favour, and good will; ſee note on 2 Cor. 6. 1. And this ſenſe the oppoſition here requires; God being diſpleaſed with, and oppoſing himſelf to the proud, but ſhewing favour to the humble, and cauſing them to find favour among men, Prov. 3. 34. What Monſ. le Clerc here ſaith, "That in thoſe "times the Jews uſed to produce, as out of ſcripture, not only the ſenſe of places without regarding the words, but alſo a Jewiſh tradition "or interpretation of ſcripture, and ſo we are "not to look for what is here ſaid, in the Old "Teſtament," is intolerable: for is it fit to make an apoſtle, giving us theſe ſcriptures which are to be our rule of faith, ſpeak thus, Do you think the ſcripture ſpeaks in vain, what it ſpeaks not at all? and to call a Jewiſh tradition the ſcripture?

Ver. 8. [e] Ἐγγίσατε τῷ Θεῷ, Draw nigh to God.] The way of drawing nigh to God being now, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, through faith in Chriſt, and in his blood ſhed for the propitiation of our ſins, we being made nigh to him through the blood of Chriſt, Eph. 2. 13. and through the introduction of that better hope, by which ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ, we draw nigh to God, Heb. 7. 19. it being Chriſt alone by whom we have an introduction to the Father through faith in him, Eph. 2. 18. 3. 12. and who hath ſuffered for us, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. 3. 18. This may be looked on as an exhortation to the ἁμαρτωλοὶ, the unbelieving Jews, to believe in Chriſt, and to the δίψυχοι, the wavering Jews, (ſee note on chap. 1. ver. 8.), to cleave ſtedfaſtly to the faith.

Ibid. [f] Καθαρίσατε χεῖρας, cleanſe your hands.] That the hands of the Jews, and eſpecially of the zealots among them, were full of blood and rapine, we learn from Joſephus (o), who makes very often ſad complaints of the murders and rapines committed by them. (See chap. 5. 4. 6.). And ſo this exhortation muſt be very properly directed to them. True alſo is the note of Eſthius here, "Porro ſi jubentur "homines emundare manus, et purificare corda, "nec jubetur quid impoſſibile, conſequens eſt eos "poſſe hæc præſtare."

Ver. 9. [g] Εἰς κατήφειαν, into heavineſs.] For now the day of vengeance upon the unbelieving and backſliding Jews approacheth, Luke 21. 22. Now the coming of the Lord to execute vengeance on them draweth near, chap. 5. 8. when wrath ſhall come upon them to the uttermoſt, 2 Theſſ. 2. 16.

Ver. 11. [h] Μὴ καταλαλεῖτε, ſpeak not evil.] For explication of theſe verſes, let it be noted, that the great exception which both the unbelieving Jews, and the Judaiſing Chriſtians among them, had againſt the believing Gentiles, was this, That "(p) they obſerved not their feaſts or ſabbaths, "and

(p) Ἐκεῖνο δὲ ἀποῤῥῆξαι μάλιστα, εἰ ὑμεῖς, ἰουδαῖοι λέγεσθε, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων βίοιμεν διαφέρειν, κατ' ἐθῶν αὐτῶν ἀπολιπόντες, ἐθνικοῖς διαλλάττεσθε

" and that they were not circumciſed," whence they conclude they differed little from the Heathens. This was the thing thing for which the (q) Chriſtian fathers did contend againſt them; viz. That the ancient patriarchs of old were acceptable to God, and conſequently the Chriſtians, and eſpecially the converted Gentiles, might be acceptable to God without the obſervation of theſe feaſts and ſabbaths, or of circumciſion. Hence the apoſtle is ſo concerned that they ſhould not judge one another on the account of days or meats, Rom. 14. 4. 5. 6. Hence he inveighs againſt the Galatians, as being brought in bondage by the Judaiſers, to the obſervation of circumciſion, chap. 5. 3.; and of days, months, times, and years, chap. 4. 10.: and warns his Coloſſians not to be induced to follow thoſe rudiments of the world, as being circumciſed in Chriſt, Col. 2. 11.: And ſaith, Let no man judge you in reſpect of feaſts, or new moons, or of the ſabbaths, ver. 16. So that the argument of the apoſtle here ſeems to run thus, Let no man ſpeak againſt his Chriſtian brethren the Gentiles, for not obſerving theſe things; for, the law itſelf requiring theſe things, not of the Gentiles that even dwelt among them, but only of the Jews, he that ſpeaks againſt them, and judgeth them for the non-obſervation of theſe things, he in effect ſpeaks againſt and judgeth that law as deficient, which required not theſe things. And thou who takeſt upon thee to ſay they cannot be ſaved, Acts 15. 1. and ſo judgeſt them to deſtruction without the obſervation of them, thou even takeſt upon thee the office of this great lawgiver, who alone is able to ſave and to deſtroy, and who, by not requiring thoſe things of the Gentiles, ſhews, he will ſave them without them, and not deſtroy them for neglect of them. So the Targum on Ezek. 13. 18. brings in God ſpeaking to the falſe prophets thus, " Can you kill or make alive the ſouls " of my people?" Others indeed refer this to the law of Chriſtian love, but that is ſtill ſtyled the law of Chriſt, Gal. 6. 2. or the law of liberty, chap. 2. 12. but never abſolutely the law, as here: and therefore I prefer the former interpretation.

Ibid. Κρίνει τὸν νόμον, judgeth.] That is, ſaith Oecumenius, καταγέλᾳ, καταφρονεῖ, he condemns and deſpiſeth the law forbidding him to condemn, and to ſpeak evil of his brother, and ſo will not be a doer of it; ἢ γὰρ τὶς καταφρονεῖ, πῶς ἀνέξεται ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἔτι ζῆν; for how will a man be induced to live by that law which he deſpiſeth?

Ver. 15. ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος θελήσῃ, if the Lord will.] It was a rule of Ben Syria, (Buxt. Flor. p. 4.), " Let no " man ſay he will do any thing, unleſs he firſt ſay, " If the Lord will:" Who alſo adds, that " one " died before night, for refuſing to add this." And when Alcibiades had ſaid to Socrates, " I will do " ſo, if you will:" (r) Socrates tells him, he ought to have ſaid, ἐὰν ὁ Θεὸς ἐθέλῃ, if God will. Not that we are obliged always to ſay thus, Rom. 15. 28. but only ſtill to own our dependence on divine providence, ver. 17. εἰδότι οὖν, to him that knoweth to do good, and doth it not, it is ſin. So Menander ſaith, εὐηθία μοι φαίνεται δηλαδὴ τὸ νοεῖν μὲν ὅσα δεῖ, μὴ φυλάττεσθαι δ' ἃ δεῖ. It is manifeſt folly to know what we ought to do, and not to do it. Apud Stob. ſerm. 4. p. 53.

Ver. 16. Νῦν δὲ καυχᾶσθε ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζονείαις ὑμῶν πᾶσα καύχησις, &c.] Theſe words I would render thus, But now you vaunt yourſelves in your boaſtings, all ſuch vaunting is evil, i. e. You boaſt how much you will gain, and then what brave men you will be.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. GO to now, ye rich men, (of the Jewiſh nation, you will have cauſe to) weep and howl for the miſeries that ſhall come (Gr. are coming) upon you.

2. Your riches are corrupted, (or are as things putrified by being kept too long), and your garments (are become) moth-eaten: (They being laid up in your wardrobes, and not uſed to clothe your naked brother, ſhall be as uſeleſs to you as if they were devoured by the moth.)

3. Your gold and ſilver is cankered, (or eaten out with ruſt); and the ruſt of them ſhall be a witneſs againſt you, (of your covetous and worldly minds), and ſhall eat your fleſh as it were fire: ye have heaped treaſure together for the laſt days, (Gr. It ſhall eat your fleſh as fire, you have treaſured it up for the laſt days.)

4. Behold the hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them that have reaped, (and are thus defrauded of their wages by you), are entered into the ears of the Lord of ſabaoth.

5. [s] Ye have lived in pleaſure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nouriſhed your hearts, as in (or for) [t] a day of ſlaughter.

6. Ye have condemned [u] and killed the juſt; and he doth not reſiſt you.

7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of our Lord, (to avenge you of theſe murtherers). Behold, the [x] huſbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, till he receive the early and latter rain, (the firſt to make the corn ſown ſwell and grow up, the latter to make the ear plump before harveſt.)

8. Be ye alſo patient; ſtabliſh your hearts (in expectation of this advent): for [y] the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9. [z] Grudge not (Gr. groan not) one againſt another, brethren, (as men impatient, and deſiring vengeance, uſe to do), leſt ye be condemned, (as wanting in that patience which ought to have its perfect work in you, and in that Chriſtian charity, which requires you to pray for mercy, and not to cry for vengeance on your enemies): behold, the judge (who will plead your cauſe againſt your perſecuting brethren) ſtandeth before the door.

10. Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have ſpoken (to you Jews) in the name of the Lord, for an example of ſuffering afflictions, and of patience, (i. e. of patient ſuffering; for they had experience of cruel mockings, and of death, and yet they ſuffered theſe things patiently.)

11. Behold, we count them happy that endure (afflictions for righteouſneſs ſake, and for the trial of their faith, Matth. 5. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 14.). Ye have heard of the [a] patience of Job, and have ſeen (i. e. known) the end of the Lord, that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy, (as then he was to him a deliverer and a rewarder of his patience, ſo will he be to you.)

12. [b] But above all things, my brethren, ſwear not, neither by heaven, nor by the earth, nor by any other oath; but let your yea, be yea, and your nay, nay; (i. e. let your actions be agreeable to your words: ſee note on 2 Cor. 1. 17.); [c] leſt ye fall into condemnation.

13. Is any man among you afflicted? let him pray (to God to alleviate and ſanctify his affliction). Is any merry? let him ſing pſalms (of praiſe, to that God who hath given him this chearfulneſs of ſpirit.)

14. Is any (man) ſick among you? [d] let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, [e] anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord.

15. [f] And the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick, and the Lord (in anſwer to this prayer of faith) ſhall raiſe him up; and if he [g] hath committed (ſuch) ſins (as brought this ſickneſs on him), they ſhall be forgiven him (upon this prayer of faith.)

16. Confeſs (therefore) your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed: The [h] effectual fervent (Gr. the inſpired) prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17. Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the ſpace of [i] three years and ſix months.

18. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19. Brethren, if any of you do err from the faith, and one convert him;

20. [k] Let him know, that he who converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. Ἄγε νῦν, go to now.] This is only a form of tranſition, chap. 4. 13. and converting of ſpeech to any perſon; as if he ſhould have ſaid, And now to ſpeak to you that are rich, I call upon you to weep, &c.

That this prediction was exactly fulfilled by the ſlaughter and ſpoiling of the rich Jews throughout Galilee and Judea, Joſephus (s) will not ſuffer us to doubt. For he informs us, that the "zealots ſpared "none but thoſe who were ταπεινοὶ διὰ τυχὴν, poor "and low in fortune," and that they were ſo inſatiably rapacious, that they ſearched all the houſes of the rich, killing the men, and abuſing the women. And that it alſo was fulfilled touching thoſe of the diſperſion, ſee the preface, § 5. 6.

Ver. 3. [l] It ſhall eat your fleſh as fire, ὡς πῦρ φάγεται τὰς σάρκας ὑμῶν ἐν ταῖς ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις, in the laſt days.] As the ruſt eats into the gold and ſilver, ſo ſhall your fleſh and ſubſtance be eaten up as with fire, as if you had treaſured up fire in the midſt of it. For,

1. This is a frequent metaphor among the prophets, who often ſpeak of the fire eating up the wicked, and devouring their fleſh: Thou ſhalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thy wrath, καὶ καταφάγεται αὐτοὺς πῦρ, and the fire ſhall eat them up, Pſal. 21. 9.; the light of Iſrael ſhall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame, and it ſhall burn, καὶ φάγεται, and eat up his thorns and briers in one day, καὶ καταφάγεται ἀπὸ ψυχῆς ἕως σαρκῶν, and it ſhall eat up from the ſoul to the fleſh, Iſ. 10. 16. 17.; πῦρ τοὺς ὑπεναντίους ἔδεται, The fire ſhall up the adverſaries, chap. 27. 11.; Behold, the name of the Lord cometh forth from far,

burning with anger, καὶ ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ θυμοῦ αὐτῶν πῦρ ἔδεται, and the anger of his fury ſhall eat as the fire, chap. 30. 11.; Behold, I will make my word in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, καὶ κατα φάγεται αὐτοὺς, and it ſhall eat them up, Jer. 5. 14.; They ſhall go out from one fire, καὶ πῦρ αὐτοὺς καταφάγεται, and another fire ſhall eat them up, Ezek. 15. 7.; I will bring forth a fire from the midſt of thee, and the fire καταφάγεταί σε, ſhall eat thee up. See Amos 5. 6.

2. This was punctually fulfilled in the deſtruction of that nation by their own ſeditions, and the Roman wars. For amongſt the Sicarii and the zealots, the ringleaders of all their ſeditions, it was crime enough to be rich, and their inſatiable avarice induced them ſtill to make τῶν πλουσίων οἴκων ἔρευναν, "a ſearch into the houſes of the rich:" for them to remain among theſe tyrants was deſtruction; "for "(t) by falſe accuſations they were ſlain as deſer-"ters," for their ſubſtance. Yea, both their ſubſtance and their fleſh were (u) devoured by the flames which burnt up the city and the temple, "and "ſo conſumed both their dead bodies, and their "ſubſtance, and their wardrobes;" and that which remained became a prey to the army of the Romans. See the like done in their diſperſions, Preface, § 6.

Ver. 4. [c] Ὁ μισθὸς, the hire.] The precept in the law touching this matter running thus, Thou ſhalt not defraud thy neighbour — The wages of him that is hired, ſhall not abide with thee all night until the morning, Lev. 19. 13. This keeping of it back is truly ſtyled fraud and oppreſſion, and all ſins of that nature, cry to heaven for vengeance on the fraudulent oppreſſor. So the cry of the Iſraelites, under their oppreſſion in the land of Egypt, came up to God, Exod. 2. 23. 3. 7.; the cry of the afflicted widow, and the fatherleſs, Exod. 22. 27.; the cry of the poor and the afflicted, Job 34. 28. Pſal. 9. 12.; the cry of him that wants his pledge to cover him, Exod. 22. 27.; and the cry of him whoſe wages is kept back. Thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy; at his day thou ſhalt give him his hire, neither ſhall the ſun go down upon it — leſt he cry againſt thee to the Lord, and it be a ſin unto thee, Deut. 24. 14. 15.

Ver. 5. [d] Ἐτρυφήσατε καὶ ἐσπαταλήσατε, ye have lived in pleaſure, and been wanton.] The firſt word ἐτρυφήσατε, ſay critics, refers to their luxurious eating; the ſecond, ἐσπαταλήσατε, to their carnal luſtings and laſciviouſneſs, 1 Tim. 5. 6. Ezek. 16. 49. both which were vices the Jews then were very ſubject to, eating and drinking to exceſs in their feaſts. See note on 1 Cor. 11. 21.; and were, ſaith Tacitus (x), projectiſſima ad libidinem gens, "a nation very prone "to luſt."

Ibid. [e] As for a day of ſlaughter.] i. e As the ſacrifices, which are firſt fattened, and then ſlaughtered, ſaith the Chaldee on thoſe words, The enemies of the Lord ſhall be as the fat of lambs, Pſal. 37. 20. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 6. [f] Ἐφονεύσατε, Ye have killed, &c.] Here Oecumenius ſaith, Ἀναντιῤῥήτως τὸ ἐφονεύσατε δίκαιον ἐπὶ τὸν Χριστὸν ἀναφέρεται, "this is undoubtedly to be refer-"red to Chriſt, who is emphatically ſtyled the Juſt "One, Acts 3. 14. 7. 52. 22. 14." So Juſtin Martyr (y), Ἀπεκτόνατε τὸν δίκαιον, "Ye have killed the "Juſt One, and before him the prophets." But againſt this interpretation it is objected by Eſthius, 1. That the apoſtle here ſpeaks by way of diſtinction to the rich, who dragged the Chriſtians before the tribunals; whereas the death of Chriſt is imputed to the princes and rulers of the Jews, and to the people in general, Acts 3. 14. 7. 52. 13. 27. 28. 2. It is ſaid in the preſent tenſe, And he doth not reſiſt you; whereas, had this been ſpoken of Chriſt, it ſhould have been ſaid, He did not reſiſt you: and therefore Oecumenius doth acknowledge this is to be extended alſo to all thoſe juſt men, St Stephen, and others who ſuffered in like manner from the Jews, according to our Lord's prediction, Matth. 24. 9. and St Paul's confeſſion, That, before his converſion, he perſecuted this way unto the death, Acts 22. 4. Hence this paſſage is connected to the enſuing words directed to the Chriſtians in general, by this particle, therefore.

Ver. 7. [g] The huſbandman waiteth, &c.] So the Targum of Jonathan, on 2 Sam. 23. 4. compareth thoſe who expect "the years of conſolation," to the huſbandman, who in a year of drought waiteth for rain upon the earth. See the text defended, Examen Millii.

Ver. 8. [h] Ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, the coming of the Lord is at hand.] He ſpeaks, ſaith (z) Oecumenius, "of the coming of the Romans to captivate the "Jews, which he calls the coming of our Lord;" as St John does, chap. 21. 22. And this expoſition is confirmed, 1. From the conſtant uſe of the like phraſe, Ἐγγὺς ἡμέρα Κυρίου, the day of the Lord is at hand, Iſ. 13. 6. Ezek. 30. 3. Joel 1. 15. and 2. 1. and 3. 14. Obad. ver. 15. Zeph. 1. 7. 14. From the evils which he ſaith are coming on the rich, ver. 1. and which then eſpecially came upon them. 2. From his ſaying, This coming is at hand, and the judge ſtandeth at the door, ver. 9. or in St Peter's phraſe, τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε, the end is at hand, 1 Pet. 4. 7. which anſwers exactly to the words of Chriſt, touching the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Then ſhall τὸ τέλος, the end come, Matth. 24. 14.; it is near, ἐπὶ θύραις, even at the door, ver. 33.; her deſolation ἤγγικε, draweth nigh, Luke 21. 20. See note on Phil. 4. 5. And this was a true ground for patience, and anſwers the objection of Eſthius againſt this expoſition.

Ver. 9. [1] Μὴ στενάζετε, groan not.] Theſe groanings, in the ſcripture, have a voice and cry; and God is ſaid to hear them. Thus the children of Iſrael groaned, by reaſon of their hard bondage, κατεστέναξαν; and their cry came up to God, Exod. 2. 23. And the Spirit is ſaid to intercede, in Chriſt's ſuffering members, with groans unuttered, Rom. 8. 26. Thus David prays, that God would hear the voice of his groanings, and the groaning of the priſoners, Pſal. 102. 5. 20. Theſe groanings, when they are only the natural iſſues of an afflicted ſoul, move God to pity, Judg. 2. 18. and remember us in mercy, Exod. 6. 5. But when they are the fruits of impatience under troubles, and a deſire of revenge upon our enemies, they tend to our condemnation; and the perſecuting Jews, being of the ſame ſtock with the converted Jews, their groaning againſt them is ſtyled groaning againſt one another.

It is the obſervation of Juſtin (a), That the converts among the Gentiles were not only more than thoſe among the Jews, and the Samaritans, but alſo that they were better Chriſtians, and more truly ſo; for theſe Jewiſh converts were ſtill leavened with an expectation of a temporal kingdom, and of liberty from the Roman yoke, and the dominion over all Heathen governors. Whence the apoſtles do ſo frequently injoin them to be ſubject to the higher powers, Rom. 13. 1.; to be ſubject to principalities and powers, Tit. 3. 1.; to be ſubject to every human ordinance, and not uſe the liberty to which they were called, as a cloak of maliciouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 13. 16. Now theſe, as Dr Hammond well obſerves, lived intermixed with the unconverted Jews and zealots, who were ſtill grudging, and contending againſt all that would not ſtand up for liberty, and fight for this temporal kingdom, (b) "accounting them no "better than the very Heathens," on that account; and theſe may be the grudgers here intended.

Ver. 11. [k] The patience of Job.] Hence may we very probably conclude, That what is written in the book of Job, is truly an hiſtory of what happened to him; and not, as ſome conceive, a parable or fiction of a thing not truly done: for feigned things contain no ſerious motives to, nor juſt examples of patience. 2. We find this holy man numbered with Noah and Daniel, as perſons very prevalent in prayer, Ezek. 14. 14. 20. As therefore Noah and Daniel were perſons truly prevalent in their ſupplications, Gen. 8. 21. Dan. 9. 23. ſo alſo Job muſt be, as he is repreſented, chap. 42. 8. 10.

Ver. 12. [l] Μὴ ὀμνύετε, ſwear not:] i. e. Let not your afflictions move you to uſe raſh oaths, as men are wont to do when much provoked. That raſh oaths are only forbidden here, and Matth. 5. 34. ſee the note there. The oaths here forbidden being ſuch as our impatience under ſufferings, and our unbridled paſſions, do produce; or elſe the oaths forbidden here, may be illuſive oaths, viz. ſuch as the Jews were free to uſe, becauſe they thought they did not bind, (ſee note on Matth. 9. 34.), and ſo were free to make, to purchaſe their deliverance.

Ibid. [m] Ἵνα μὴ ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσητε, that ye fall not into condemnation.] Some copies read, εἰς ὑπόκρισιν, into hypocriſy. But, 1. This reading is not found in many copies. 2. The apoſtle, ver. 9. puts them in mind of the judge ſtanding at the door, requiring them not to grudge againſt one another, leſt they be condemned by him: it is therefore far more probable he ſpeaketh alſo here of condemnation by the judge. 3. To be falſe to the oath of God, is perjury in the proper ſenſe, for which God threatens he will not hold the offender guiltleſs, but is not properly hypocriſy. If therefore this had been the meaning of St James, Swear not, leſt you be tempted to the violation of your oaths, he ſhould have called that perjury, not hypocriſy.

Ver. 14. [n] Προσκαλεσάσθω τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλησίας, the elders of the church.] That it was the office of the preſbyters, ἐπισκέπτεσθαι πάντας ἀσθενεῖς, to viſit all the ſick, we learn from the epiſtle of Polycarp ad Philip. § 6. But that theſe preſbyters ſhould be biſhops properly ſo called, as ſome conceive, ſeems not very probable; for then it muſt not only be the office of the biſhop perſonally to viſit the ſick; but the duty of every ſick perſon to ſend to him, and to no other. Yea, there muſt be more than one biſhop in the church, of which the ſick man is a member, and he muſt be obliged to ſend to more; for the text runs wholly in the plural, "Let him "call for the elders of the church, ὑ πρεσβυτέρους, "and let them (not, one of them) pray over him;" and therefore the ſick man muſt be obliged by this text, to call for more than one of them, where more were to be had, as we know there were in the primitive conſtitution of the church.

Ibid. Anointing him with oil.] This was agreeable to the practice of the Jews (c), who anointed the ſick, pro more, cuſtomarily, ſaith their tradition: hence, though our Lord only commiſſionated his diſciples to heal the ſick, Matth. 10. 8. Luke 9. 2. yet St Mark informs us, that they added their uſual ceremonies in doing this, for they anointed many that were ſick with oil, and healed them, Mark 6. 13. And St James, ſpeaking to the elders of the Jews, bids them uſe this unction in the name of the Lord, as doubtleſs the apoſtles did; as in caſting out of devils, Luke 10. 17. ſo in healing the ſick, Acts 3. 16. and 4. 10. 30.; and this addition made the cure miraculous.

Ver. 15. ῥ Ἡ ἐυχὴ τῆς πίστεως, and the prayer of faith ſhall ſave the ſick.] Among the χαρίσματα, or the miraculous and extraordinary gifts vouchſafed at firſt to the preachers of the goſpel, and to the rulers or elders of the churches, was the gift of faith, as in theſe words, To another is given faith by the ſame Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 9.; i. e. by a ſtrong impulſe of the Spirit, fully perſuading them that God would enable them to do this or that. This ſeems to be that faith which is ſtyled πίστις Θεοῦ, the faith of God, to which even the removing of mountains, or the performing things moſt difficult and extraordinary, is promiſed, Mark 11. 22. 23. Matth. 21. 21. and of which the apoſtle ſpeaks, ſaying, If I had all faith ſo as to remove mountains, 1 Cor. 13. 2.; and by which they healed the ſick, even by faith in his name, Acts 3. 16.; and therefore this is here promiſed, that where the prayer of the elders was attended with ſuch a faith, it ſhould be ſtill ſucceſsful for the healing of the ſick, or the raiſing him up again from the bed of ſickneſs; for σώσει, will ſave, is ἐγερεῖ, he will raiſe him up.

Ibid. ϛ And if he hath committed ſins;] i. e. Such ſins for which God was pleaſed to inflict this bodily diſeaſe upon him, as he did on the members of the church of Corinth, for their diſorderly celebrating the Lord's ſupper; for which cauſe, ſaith the apoſtle, many are weak and ſickly among you, 1 Cor. 11. 30.; they being thus chaſtened of the Lord, ver. 32. And where the ſickneſs is by way of chaſtiſement, the healing it is a teſtimony of God's forgiveneſs of it. Hence, Thy ſins be forgiven, is our Lord's uſual expreſſion when he healed the ſick, Matth. 9. 2. 6. 7.: ſee the note there; according to thoſe words of the prophet Iſaiah, The inhabitants ſhall not ſay they are ſick, the people ſhall be forgiven their iniquity, chap. 33. 24. Hence it is evident, that there is no foundation for the ſacrament of extreme unction, called by the Romiſh church, The ſacrament of the dying, and adminiſtered for the purgation of their ſins, when they ſeem paſt hopes of recovery: for how can they gather a ſacrament of extreme unction, from an unction that is not extreme; or a perpetual ordinance from an action that was extraordinary and miraculous, and is long ſince ceaſed? How can they prove a ſacrament that is proper to dying perſons, from a right uſed only upon perſons who were not to die, but to be raiſed up from ſickneſs? or promiſe to him forgiveneſs of his ſins, to whom they cannot promiſe that recovery which was the token of it? Moreover, the things already obſerved, afford us a ſufficient anſwer to the objections of Eſthius, againſt our expoſition, which are theſe.

Object. 1. Firſt, That the grace of miracles extended not to ſpiritual effects, as the forgiveneſs of ſins, but temporal.

Anſ. This is ſaid in flat contradiction to our Lord, who doth ſo often preface his miraculous cures of the ſick with this expreſſion, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, Matth. 9. 2. Nor was this forgiveneſs ſo much a ſpiritual effect, as temporal, it being only the remiſſion of a temporal puniſhment of ſin, viz. ſickneſs inflicted for it.

Obj. 2. Had the apoſtle ſpoke of miraculous cures, he would only have adviſed them to call thoſe who had the gift of healing, whether preſbyters or not, all the preſbyters, and them only.

Anſ. He reaſonably adviſeth to call them, and them only, to pray over the ſick, who were by office appointed for that work; and doth here only tell them what they might expect from it, when that miraculous faith was raiſed in them, which often, in thoſe times of miracles, accompanied their prayers.

Obj. 3. The apoſtle ſpeaks of a ſick Chriſtian brother to be anointed by a faithful preſbyter, whereas the uſe of miracles was chiefly for converting infidels; and hence this unction was not uſed towards Trophimus left at Miletum ſick, 2 Tim. 4. 20. or to Epaphroditus ſick near unto death, Phil. 2. 27.

Anſ. If it were not uſed by St Paul to them, and eſpecially to Epaphroditus, it is certain that he knew nothing of this ſacrament. 2. Eſthius hath no cauſe to aſſert, that of miracles in general, which the apoſtle ſaith only of the gift of tongues, That they were only for unbelievers; the gift of healing, for ought he knows to the contrary, might be ſtill exerciſed upon believers, but only under the conduct of the Spirit raiſing up this miraculous faith, which aſſured them of it in reſpect to ſome, and not to others, as he ſaw fit. See note on Phil. 2. 27.

Obj. 4. That had the apoſtle intended miraculous healing, oil had not been preſcribed; Chriſt having ſaid, They ſhould lay their hands on the ſick only, Mark. 16. 18.

Anſ. One ceremony excludes not the other; moreover, laying on of hands is there preſcribed in preaching to the Gentiles, anointing with oil here to the Jews, as being cuſtomary in caſe of ſickneſs.

Obj. 5. All the other things delivered in this epiſtle, belong to the Chriſtians of all ages; this therefore muſt do ſo too.

Anſ. As if this hindered the apoſtles, as they had occaſion, to give rules touching the ſpiritual gifts proper to their own times; that, when they ſpake of other matters not to ceaſe, their precepts reach unto all times. St Peter, in his following epiſtle, hath one direction concerning thoſe ſpiritual gifts, 1 Pet. 4. 10. 11. though the other precepts contained in that epiſtle do concern all ages.

Ver. 16. [r] Δέησις ἐνεργουμένη, the inſpired prayer.] As they who were inwardly acted by an evil ſpirit were ſtyled ἐνεργούμενοι, ſo they that were acted by the Holy Spirit, and inwardly moved by his impulſes, were alſo ἐνεργούμενοι in the good ſenſe; and therefore it ſeems moſt proper to apply theſe words, not to the prayer of every righteous perſon, but to the prayer offered by ſuch an extraordinary impulſe: not only from the force of this expreſſion, but, 2*dly*, from the ſame thing here mentioned as the ſubject of this prayer, that our ſick brother may be healed, which was to be done by the prayer of faith, ver. 15. 3*dly*, From the example of Elias; for his prayer was the prayer of faith, in the ſenſe now mentioned; for he abſolutely foretold, and confirmed it with an oath, that there ſhould be no rain thoſe years but according to his word, 1 Kings 18. 1.; and his prayer for rain was upon God's promiſe, to ſend rain upon the earth, chap. 19. 1.

Ver. 17. [s] Three years and ſix months.] So Luke 4. 35. When therefore it is ſaid, that Elijah came to Ahab in the third year, and the Lord ſaid, I will ſend rain upon the earth, note, that Elias tarried before a year at the brook Kerith, and then in the middle of the third year came to Ahab.

Ver. 20. [t] This ſeemeth to be meant, not of the ſins of the perſon thus converted, (for the ſaving of his ſoul includes the remiſſion of his ſins), but of the ſins of him that converts him; i. e. this charitable work ſhall be ſo pleaſing to God, as to prevail with him to cover many of his ſins.

First EPISTLE of St PETER.

CONcerning this epiſtle, allowed by the church of all ages to be the genuine work of the apoſtle Peter, it may be inquired, 1. When? 2. Whence? 3. To whom? 4. On what account it was written? And, Queſt. 1. 1ſt, Whereas it is ordinarily affirmed by the Romaniſts, that this epiſtle was written in the 44th year of Chriſt, as that opinion ſeems to have been taken up by them, in favour of their avowed tenet, that St Peter was twenty-five years in that ſee; and therefore he dying in the year of our Lord 69, muſt have come thither in the year 44. So is it eaſily confuted, both from this epiſtle, and by many other cogent arguments.

1. From theſe words of this epiſtle, chap. 4. 8. τὸ τέλος πάντων ἤγγικε, the end of all things is at hand; that is, ſaith Dr Hammond, who alſo follows this opinion, "the great and fatal deſtruction to the obdurate Jews, ſo often ſpoken of by Chriſt, and his "apoſtles, is now near at hand;" which could not have been ſaid in the 44th year of Chriſt, that is, about twenty-ſix years before it happened; ſeeing the apoſtle St Paul, in his ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, writ, ſaith the Rev. Dr Hammond, A. D. 51. warneth the Theſſalonians, not to be ſhaken by any word, or epiſtle, as coming from the apoſtles; which intimated, that the coming of the Lord was at hand; and ſo he muſt have contradicted St Peter, had he delivered this poſitively ſeven years before. 2. The apoſtle James hath the like expreſſions, ſaying, Ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, The coming of the Lord draweth near, chap. 5. 8. Behold, the judge ſtands πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν, before the door. Whence Dr Hammond and Dr Lightfoot well conclude, that this epiſtle could not be written long before the death of St James, which happened in the year 63; and this argument concludes as ſtrongly for this epiſtle's being endited after the ſame time. Add to this, that theſe expreſſions, τέλος, and ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε, the end, the coming of the Lord is at hand, and πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν, before the door, are plainly taken from our Saviour's words, in his prediction of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; where alſo the time is fixed by two remarkable characters. 1. When you ſhall ſee Jeruſalem compaſſed about with armies, then know ye ὅτι ἤγγικεν ἐρήμωσις αὐτῆς, that her deſolation draweth near, Luke 21. 20.; that is, ſaith Dr Hammond, "When you ſee Jeruſalem beſieged by the Ro-"mans, then know the deſtruction of the city is "near." Now, this happened not at all till the twelfth year of Nero, and the 66th year of our Lord, when Ceſthius (a) beſieged Jeruſalem. It happened not, ſay the beſt interpreters, according to the words of the evangeliſt, till the year 68, when Veſpaſian coming thither, his army (b) compaſſed the city round about. Theſe, ſaith St Luke, are the days of vengeance, when all things which are written ſhall be fulfilled, ver. 22. and then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds, ver. 27. Again, Our Lord having foretold all the ſigns of his coming, καὶ τῆς συντελείας, and of the end of the Jewiſh age, adds, When you ſee all theſe things come to paſs, then know that this deſolation ἐγγύς ἐστιν ἐπὶ θύραις, is nigh, even at the door, Matth. 24. 33. Mark 13. 29. clearly ſhewing, that phraſe importeth ſtill a nearer approach of that great deſolation.

2. That St Peter was not at Rome, nor departed from Judea, till a long time after the 44th year of (a) Joſeph. de bello Jud. l. 2. c. 39. (b) Εἶργεν ἡ τρατιὰ πανταχόθεν τὴν πόλιν περιέχουσα. Ibid. l. 5. c. 28. p. 893. B.

Chriſt, is ſo evident from the hiſtory of the Acts, and the epiſtles of St Paul, that he that runs may read it. For, that St Luke, in an hiſtory, deſigned eſpecially to record the acts of St Peter and St Paul, ſhould omit a matter of ſuch vaſt moment and importance to the whole Chriſtian world, happening within that very time in which he ſpeaketh of St Peter, that ſaying of him, chap. 12. 17. He departed, and went to another place; he ſhould not ſay, as Bellarmine and Baronius, that place was Rome, but in flat contradiction to them, that he went down from Judea to Ceſarea, and there abode, ver. 19. That he ſhould tell us how Aquila and Priſcilla came from Italy, becauſe Claudius had commanded that all the Jews ſhould depart from Rome; but ſhould not tell us, as they do, that St Peter came thence to Jeruſalem on the ſame account, and therefore was found preſent at the council of Jeruſalem about ſix years after, but ſpeak of him there, as if he never had left Jeruſalem: that in this council he ſhould urge againſt the neceſſity of impoſing circumciſion on the Gentiles, only the example of Cornelius, and his kinſmen, converted and not circumciſed; and ſay not one word of the church of Rome, the ſeat of all ſpiritual power and infallibility, and to which all other churches were to veil and do homage, converted by him in like manner, and free alſo from the yoke of circumciſion: nay, that he ſhould not mention that ever he was there, in an hiſtory continued till the fifth of Nero, though he mentions his travels to, his preaching, and abode at ſeveral other places: theſe, ſure, are things ſufficient to convince all unprejudiced perſons that St Peter was not then at Rome.

3. The ſame may ſtrongly be concluded from the epiſtles of St Paul. For about the year 57, ſaith Biſhop Pearſon, he writ his epiſtle to the Romans, in which he ſpends the greateſt part of one chapter in ſaluting particular perſons that were there, but yet we find no ſalutation to St Peter, who, had he been then at Rome, would doubtleſs have been mentioned in the firſt place; and yet in ſo large an epiſtle, he neither is directly nor indirectly taken notice of. Moreover, St Paul himſelf, in the beginning, intimates his earneſt deſire to come thither, that he might impart unto them ſome ſpiritual gifts, to the end they might be eſtabliſhed in the faith; for which there could be no apparent cauſe had the apoſtle Peter been there ſo long before him. St Paul himſelf ſoon after comes to Rome, which when the brethren heard of, they came to meet him, as far as Appii Forum, Acts 28. 15. but not a word of St Peter either coming or ſending to him. When he is come, he goes not to ſojourn with, or ſo much as to ſalute St Peter, (which ſure he would have done if he had been there), but dwells in his own hired houſe. Being come, he calls the chief of the Jews together, who deſire to hear of him what he thought of the ſect of the Chriſtians, they knowing this only of it, that it was every where ſpoken againſt, ver. 22. And what then had St Peter, the apoſtle of the circumciſion, been doing all this while among them? And how unlikely is it that there ſhould be then, as Dr Hammond (c) ſaith, a church conſiſting much of the Jews reſiding there? And how reflecting on the ſuppoſed labours of St Peter among the Jews there are the following words, ver. 26. 27. 28. that becauſe they would not hear, or be converted, he would not leave them to St Peter, but turn unto the Gentiles, who would hear? After his coming to Rome he writes epiſtles to ſeveral churches, to the Epheſians, Philippians, Coloſſians, and one to Philemon; in which two laſt we have ſent from Rome the ſalutation of Ariſtarchus, Marcus, Juſtus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas, Col. 4. 10.—14. Philem. ver. 23. 24. but not a word from St Peter. In that to the Coloſſians he tells them he had no other helpers, or fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God among the Jews, which had been a comfort to him, but Ariſtarchus, Marcus, and Juſtus, chap. 4. 10. 11. which evidently excludes St Peter. In his epiſtle to Timothy he ſaith, that at his firſt anſwer at Rome, all men forſook him, 2 Tim. 4. 16. which we can hardly believe had St Peter been there. He adds, That only Luke was with him; that Creſcens was gone to this place, Titus to that, and Tychicus was left at another. Strange therefore it is, that if St Peter were then gone from Rome, St Paul ſhould take no notice of it. Was he a perſon ſo inconſiderable as not to deſerve to be remembered? or was he gone upon a ſleeveleſs errand, not worthy of the notice of St Paul? or was he not rather one, who, being not at Rome, could give St Paul no reaſon to take notice of him when he writ from thence? But this ſubject is ſo fully handled, and the hypotheſis of Baronius ſo learnedly confuted by Dr Cave (d), that it is ſuperfluous to inſiſt longer on this ſubject.

Queſt. 2. To the ſecond inquiry, Whence this epiſtle was indited? I have returned a ſufficient anſwer in the note upon theſe words, chap. 5. 13. The church which is at Babylon ſaluteth you; by ſhewing that by Babylon, Rome is to be underſtood; whence this epiſtle muſt be therefore written: and then it muſt be written after the perſecution in the 10th of Nero, at which time neither Paul nor Peter were at Rome.

Queſt. 3. That it was written to the Jews diſperſed through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia Minor, (c) Preface to the epiſtle to the Romans. (d) In the life of St Peter.

and

and Bithynia, the inscription shews (e); but that it must be also written either to the Gentiles proselyted to the Jewish religion, of whom see the note on 1 Pet. 1. 1. or to the converts of the twelve tribes scattered among the Heathens, and there serving their gods, according to the threat denounced upon them, Deut. 28. 36. 64. that they should serve other gods, which neither they nor their fathers had known, seems evident from these words, that they were delivered from their vain conversation, delivered to them from their fathers, chap. 1. 18.; see the note there: that in times past they were not the people, but now are the people of God; that they had not obtained mercy, but now had obtained mercy, chap. 2. 10. which words were spoken of the ten tribes, Hos. 1. 10. and 2. 23.; and that the time past might suffice them to have done the will of the Gentiles, when they walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquettings, and abominable idolatries, chap. 4. 3.

To imagine that the apostle is here speaking of the dispersion mentioned, Acts 8. 1. is to speak what is very improbable, they being dispersed only into the countries of Judea and Samaria, saith the text there; nor is it said that any travelled any farther than Phœnice, Cyprus, and Antioch, chap. 11. 19.; nor is it likely that many of them travelled so far, the churches of Judea and Samaria having peace soon after this dispersion, Acts 9. 31. That any of them went to all, or any of the places here mentioned by St Peter, we have no reason to imagine; but that there was long before a great dispersion of the Jews throughout these parts of Asia; see the note on James 1. 1.

Lastly, Upon what account this epistle was written, we may best learn from the epistle itself, which informs us, 1*st*, That it was written to encourage them to persevere, and to continue constant under those manifold temptations, chap. 1. 6.; those fiery trials, chap. 4. 12.; and persecutions, chap. 2. 3. 4. 5. they were then subject to. 2*dly*, To preserve them from being concerned in the Jewish wars, or bearing any part in that rebellion against Cæsar and his officers, which was then beginning among the Jews, chap. 2. from ver. 12. to the 23d, and chap. 3. 16. 17. 18. And 3*dly*, To engage them to lead a Christian conversation, that so they might bring over others to the Christian faith, chap. 2. 12. and 3. 1. and might stop the mouths of those who spake against them as evil-doers, chap. 3. 16.

(e) Whence by Tertullian in Scorp. and by St Cyprian, l. 3. test. § 39. it is styled, Epistola Petri ad Ponticos.

PARAPHRASE

First EPISTLE of St PETER.

CHAP. I.

Verse 1. PEter an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, (writeth) to the [a] ſtrangers [b] ſcattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia (Minor), and Bithynia,

2. (That is, to thoſe of them who are) [c] elect [d] according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, [e] through ſanctification of the Spirit unto obedience, and (to the) [f] ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt; (wiſhing that) grace to you and peace (may) be multiplied.

3. Bleſſed be the [g] God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a [h] lively (Gr. living) hope, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt from the dead,

4. (We being begotten by his reſurrection as the firſt-fruits of ours, 1 Cor. 15. 20. 23.), to (the hope of) an inheritance incorruptible, and [i] undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for you (believers),

5. [k] Who are kept by the power of God through faith [l] unto (the) ſalvation ready to be revealed in the laſt time.

6. Wherein (i. e. on the account of which) you greatly rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon [m] (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations.

7. That the trial of your faith being (which is) much more precious (and advantageous to you) than (the trial) of gold that periſheth, though it be [n] tried by fire, (or, though upon trial it endure the fire), might be found to (your) praiſe, honour, and glory, at the appearance of Jeſus Chriſt (in glory):

8. [o] Whom having not ſeen, ye love; in whom, though now you ſee him not, yet (Gr. not now ſeeing, but) believing, ye rejoice with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory:

9. Receiving the end of your faith, [p] even the ſalvation of your ſouls.

10. Of which ſalvation the prophets have inquired, and ſearched diligently, who propheſied of the grace that ſhould come unto you; (i. e. of the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 13. Matth. 13. 17.):

11. [q] Searching what, or what manner of time the [r] Spirit of Chriſt which was in them did ſignify, (or to what time he did relate), when he teſtified beforehand [s] the ſufferings of Chriſt (in himſelf, and his members), and the glories that ſhould follow (them, Dan. 9. 24.)

12. To whom it was revealed, that not unto themſelves, but unto us they did miniſter the (ſame) things which are now reported (or have been now declared) to you by them who have preached the goſpel to you, [t] with the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven; which things the [u] angels deſire to look into.

13. [x] Wherefore

13. [x] Wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind; be ſober, (Gr. vigilant), and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought (Gr. that is brought) to you at (by) the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, (who hath brought life and immortality to light by the goſpel, 2 Tim. 1. 10.);

14. As (it becometh) obedient children, not faſhioning yourſelves according to the former luſts (you practiſed) in your ignorance:

15. But as he (God the Father, ver. 17.) who hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all manner of converſation;

16. Becauſe it is written (thus), Be ye holy, for [y] I (the Lord your God) am holy, (Lev. 11. 44. and 19. 2.)

17. And if ye call upon the Father, who [z] without reſpect of perſons judgeth according to every man's works, paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear (of condemnation from this impartial judge at that day.)

18. Foraſmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, (ſuch) as (are) ſilver and gold, (ſuch as the Jews brought up to Jeruſalem to buy their offerings), from (the demerit of) your [a] vain converſation received by tradition from your fathers;

19. But with the precious blood of Chriſt, (who was delivered up to death for you), as [b] a lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot:

20. Who verily was [c] foreordained (Gr. foreknown, i. e. deſigned as the Meſſiah), before the foundation of the world, but was manifeſted in theſe laſt times for your-(r ſakes);

21. [d] Who by (faith in) him (thus riſen) do believe in God that raiſed him up from the dead, that your faith and hope (of a bleſſed reſurrection) might be in God.

22. Seeing ye have purified your ſouls in (by) obeying the truth through the Spirit, (by whom you are enabled to perform this obedience), to unfeigned love of the brethren, (which is one part of that obedience); ſee that you love (Gr. ye will love) one another with a pure heart fervently:

23. Being born again, not of corruptible ſeed, (as is that from which you had your firſt nativity, whence you alſo who are thus begotten are corruptible), [e] but of incorruptible, (as being born again) [f] by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever.

24. For all fleſh is as graſs, and all the glory of man as the flower of graſs. (As then) the graſs withereth, and the flower of it falleth away, (ſo will it be with our body of fleſh):

25. But the word of the Lord (ſaith the prophet Iſaiah, chap. 40. 8.) endureth for ever (in itſelf, as being of eternal truth; and in its effects upon us, as nouriſhing us to life eternal). And this is the word which by the goſpel is preached to you.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Παρεπιδήμοις, to the ſtrangers.] He writes eſpecially to the diſperſion of the Jews, to whom the word ſtrangers, or foreigners, here chiefly doth belong; but not to them only, for he ſpeaks to them alſo who in time paſt had walked according to the will of the Gentiles, in abominable idolatries, chap. 4. 3. and of them who formerly were not the people of God, and had not found mercy. We therefore are to underſtand, that among them were many devout Greeks and proſelytes of the Gentiles converted with them to the Chriſtian faith. Thus when St Paul and Barnabas preached in a ſynagogue of the Jews at Iconium, a great multitude both of Jews and Greeks believed, Acts 14. 1.; and Paul preaching at Epheſus, and thereabouts, two years, prevailed ſo, that all that dwelt in Aſia heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, both Jews and Greeks, Acts 19. 10.; ſee chap. 17. 4. 12. and 18. 4. In the Acts of the apoſtles we read of proſelytes of all nations. They were reckoned in the days of David and Solomon 153,600 perſons, 2 Chron. 2. 17. In the days of Artaxerxes we are told, that πολλοὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν περιετέμνοντο, καὶ Ἰουδαΐζον, many of the Heathens were circumciſed, and turned Jews, Eſth. 8. 17.; and ſo it was alſo in the ſucceeding ages; for Joſephus (a) informs us, "That after the times of Antiochus Epi-"phanes, the Jews in Antioch, and other places, "always converting to their worſhip a great many "Greeks, made them, as it were, a part of them-"ſelves:" and at Damaſcus (b), he ſaith, "They "would have deſtroyed the Jews among them, but "that they feared their own wives, who all, except "ſome few, were converts to the religion of the "Jews."

Ibid. [b] Διασπορᾶς, of the diſperſion;] i. e. diſperſed through Pontus, &c. The apoſtle ſpeaks not of the diſperſion made by the perſecution mentioned, Acts 8. 1. for that ſcattered the Chriſtians only through Judea and Samaria, ibid.; nor were they afterwards diſperſed farther by the malice of the Jews, but went themſelves to preach the word, not in Aſia, but in the parts of Syria, in Phenice, Cyprus, and Antioch,

Acts

Acts 11. 19. Of their diſperſion thence into Aſia we read not one word; but that there were great diſperſions before of the Jews through the places here mentioned, from the time of the captivity under Salmanaſſer, we learn from Agrippa's addreſs to Caius (c), where he informs him, that they poſſeſſed moſt parts of Aſia, to the utmoſt borders of Bithynia and Pontus.

Ver. 2. [c] Ἐκλεκτοῖς, elect;] i. e. to the converted Jews, ſtyled the elect, Matth. 24. 22.; ſee note on chap. 2. 9. So alſo Oecumenius interprets theſe words, to the elect, that is, τοῖς ἀφωρισμένοις ἐκ τῶν ἄλλων ἐθνῶν εἶναι λαὸν περιούσιον, to them that are ſeparated from other nations to be his holy and peculiar people.

Ibid. [d] Κατὰ πρόγνωσιν, according to the foreknowledge of God,] diſcovered in the prophetical writings, which foretold of theſe bleſſings to be conveyed to them by the Meſſiah, who alſo is ſaid to be foreknown before the foundations of the world, i. e. propheſied of from the beginning, Gen. 3. 15. but manifeſted in the laſt times for them, ver. 20.

Ibid. [e] Ἐν ἁγιασμῷ, through ſanctification of the Spirit,] the great principle of all true obedience; ſo ver. 22. Having ſanctified your ſouls, or lives, to the obedience of the truth through the Spirit.

Ibid. [f] Καὶ ῥαντισμὸν, and ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus,] by way of obſignation of that covenant, by which we are engaged to that obedience; for ſo it was in the delivery of the old law: for upon the reading of that covenant in the audience of all the people, and upon their profeſſing, All that the Lord hath ſaid, we will do, and be obedient, Moſes took the blood, and ſprinkled it upon the people, and ſaid, Behold the blood of the covenant which the Lord hath made with you, concerning all theſe words, Exod. 24. 7. 8; ſo Dr Hammond. Or to that ſprinkling of the blood of Jeſus Chriſt which cleanſeth us from all ſin, 1 John 1. 7. i. e. from all the ſinful imperfections which cleave to our obedience, and by which the full pardon of our paſt ſins is procured, and we obtain an entrance into the holy of holies, Heb. 10. 19. 20. and which procures for us not only acceptance upon earth, but an inheritance in heaven, Heb. 9. 15. and 12. 24.; whence this blood is ſtyled αἷμα ῥαντισμοῦ, the blood of ſprinkling, Heb. 12. 24.; and of Chriſt it is ſaid, He ſhall ſprinkle many nations, Iſ. 52. 15.

Ver. 3. [g] Ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ, the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.] Here, ſaith Schlictingius, as formerly, the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, diſtinguiſhed the one true God from any other; ſo now this phraſe diſtinguiſheth him who is called his God and Father, from Jeſus Chriſt. But yet the primitive fathers (d) thought otherwiſe; for they ſtiffly maintained againſt the Gnoſtics, who held there was another God above the God of Abraham, &c. or the God of the Jews, That he was the God and Father of all, ſupra quem non eſt alius; and yet that Jeſus Chriſt was God, as being in the Father from all eternity, and receiving the divine nature from him.

Ibid. [h] Εἰς ἐλπίδα ζῶσαν, to a living hope.] Either an hope that giveth life, as ὕδωρ ζῶν, living water, John 4. 10. 11. 14.; Ὁ ἄρτος ὁ ζῶν, The living bread which came down from heaven, of which if a man eat, he ſhall live for ever, John 6. 51. and 7. 38. λόγια ζῶντα, the living oracles, Acts 7. 38. which if a obſerve, ſaith Moſes, he ſhall live by them, Lev. 18. 4.; ὁδὸς ζῶσα, a living way, Heb. 10. 20. as leading to life eternal; and ζωῆς πηγαὶ, living fountains of waters, Rev. 7. 17. for by hope we are ſaved, Rom. 8. 24.; or a hope that makes us active and lively, joyful and comfortable in our lives, rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2.; in which ſenſe it is ſaid of the word of God, that it is ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργὴς, living and active, Heb. 4. 12. Of the members of Chriſt's ſpiritual houſe, that they are λίθοι ζῶντες, i. e. living ſtones, 1 Pet. 2. 5.; and we are bid to offer our bodies θυσίαν ζῶσαν, a living ſacrifice, Rom. 12. 1. Hence it ſeems to follow, that the Jews before had not this lively hope which our Lord's reſurrection miniſters.

Ver. 4. [i] Ἀμίαντον, undefiled.] The land in which men who are ſinners dwell on earth is ſaid to be defiled by their ſins, Lev. 18. 28. Numb. 5. 3. and 35. 34. Deut. 21. 23. Iſ. 24. 5. Jer. 2. 7. and 16. 18. heaven, into which no unclean thing can enter, being the only inheritance undefiled. Oecumenius hence obſerves, 1ſt, That this therefore was not ſuch a hope as that which was contained in the law of Moſes, ἥτις θνητὰ, θνητοῖς ἐπαγγέλλεται θνητὰ, a dying hope, which promiſed dying things to mortal men. 2dly, That if this inheritance be in heaven, μυθώδης ἡ χιλιοίτης ἀποκατάστασις, the opinion of the millenaries muſt be fabulous.

Ver. 5. [k] Ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους διὰ πίστεως, who are kept by the power of God through faith.] Not that all who have true faith, are kept by the power of God, ſo as that they ſhall certainly continue in the faith; but that they ſhall be thus preſerved, if they continue in the faith, rooted, and settled, and are not removed from the hope of the gospel, Col. 1. 23. If they hold the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end, Heb. 3. 4. This place therefore only proves, 1st, That all who are preserved to salvation are preserved by God, but not that all true believers will be certainly so kept. 2dly, This place proves only, that they who are thus preserved, are kept through faith, i. e. if they hold the beginning of their confidence firm to the end, Heb. 5. 14. for this faith, thus continued in them, will render them victorious over the world, 1 John 5. 4. It will enable them to resist the devil so effectually, that he shall fly from them, 1 Pet. 5. 9. and to quench all the fiery darts of Satan, Eph. 6. 16.; and even to suffer death, not accepting a deliverance, that they may obtain a better resurrection; but this place does not prove that all who are once true believers, shall certainly continue in the faith, and never make shipwreck of the faith, as did Hymenæus and Alexander, 1 Tim. 1. 19. never have their faith overturned as some had, 2 Tim. 2. 10.; never draw back to perdition, as the apostle supposeth some might do, Heb. 10. 38. 39.

Ibid. [l] Ἑτοίμην ἀποκαλυφθῆναι ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ, the salvation ready to be revealed in the last time:] i. e. say some, The deliverance ready to be vouchsafed to the Christians, at the destruction of the church and polity of Jerusalem, this being the salvation then ready to be revealed. But this seems not very probable: 1. Because in this salvation Christians are said to rejoice greatly, or, to exult for joy, ver. 6. which it becomes not them to do for temporal, but for spiritual blessings. 2. Because it is the salvation, not of our bodies, but our souls, even that salvation which is the end of our faith, ver. 9.; see the note there. To the argument produced for the other sense from the words,

I answer, 1. That though the last times and days, in the plural, do mostly signify the times of the gospel-dispensation, concurring with the last times of the Jewish state; yet the last time, or day, in the singular, often signifies the time of the resurrection, or the last judgment, especially when it is joined with the resurrection of the body mentioned here, ver. 3. So, John 6. 39. I will raise him up ἐν τῇ ἐσχάτῃ ἡμέρᾳ, in the last day. See ver. 40. 44. 45. chap. 11. 24. I know that he shall rise in the last day; and chap. 12. 48. The word that I have spoken, shall judge him in the last day.

2. As there is mention of a double revelation of Jesus Christ, one, when he appeared as a prophet to the world, styled usually φανέρωσις, the manifestation of Jesus Christ; another, at the day of judgment, styled ἀποκάλυψις, the revelation of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. 1. 7. the revelation of Jesus Christ from heaven, 2 Thess. 1. 7.; his glorious revelation, 1 Pet. 4. 13. and here emphatically, the revelation of Christ, ver. 7. 13.: so is there a double revelation of the salvation promised in the gospel; one, by the preaching of the gospel, which brought life and salvation to light, 2 Tim. 1. 10. And a farther revelation of it to be made hereafter, when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, Col. 3. 3. 4. 1 John 3. 2. styled the glory ready to be revealed, when the great shepherd shall appear, 1 Pet. 5. 4. The glory ready to be revealed at the redemption of our bodies, Rom. 8. 18. 23. to which this passage may refer.

Ver. 6. [m] Εἰ δέον ἐστὶ, if need be.] This is great consolation, under all the afflictions of God's servants, That they then only shall befal them, when God sees them needful for the promotion of his glory, or for the furtherance of our salvation, as when they tend to make us partakers of his holiness, and to work in us the comfortable fruits of righteousness, Heb. 12. 10. 11. or, work for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17. by conforming us to him in sufferings, to whom we shall be like in glory, 1 Pet. 4. 13. Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11.

Ver. 7. [n] Διὰ πυρὸς δοκιμαζομένου.] Proved to be genuine by the fire it endures; as your faith is, by patiently enduring fiery trials. See note on chap. 4. 12.

Ver. 8. [o] Ὃν οὐκ εἰδότες.] If this reading be true, it is most proper to translate the words thus, whom having not known; if ὃν οὐκ ἰδόντες, as other copies have it, and all the versions do translate it, be the true reading, then our translation is right also.

Ver. 9. [p] Σωτηρίαν ψυχῶν.] The preservation of your lives; so Dr Hammond. But there is no ὑμῶν in the Greek, to answer to the word your, in the English; and the salvation of lives seems not so properly assigned as the end of our faith, as the salvation of souls; as we may learn also from the following words.

Ver. 11. [q] Εἰς τίνα ἢ ποῖον καιρὸν; what, or what manner of time?] The particle ὡς is oft redundant; see Nold. p. 66. 67. and p. 464. Or it may here be rendered de, of what time, as, 2 Cor. 12. 6. Let no man think ὡς ἐμὲ, of me, more than he ought to think, Eph. 5. 32.; I speak ὡς Χριστὸν, καὶ ὡς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, of Christ and the church, Acts 2. 25.; David spake ὡς αὐτοῦ, of him. So, Acts 25. 20. Heb. 7. 14. ὡς ἐν φυλῇ, of which tribe. They testified of his sufferings, saith Oecumenius, in those words of Isaiah, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter.

Ibid. [r] Τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, the Spirit of Christ which was in them:] That is, say the Socinians, the Spirit in them, which spake of Christ as the word of life, and of salvation, is the word which speaks of life, and of salvation. But in this sense he might as well have been styled the spirit of Antichrist, tichriſt, or the falſe prophets, becauſe he alſo ſpake of them. All the ancients agree in the other ſenſe, That (e) Chriſt ſpake by his Spirit in the prophets, "they being inſpired with his grace, and taught by "his Spirit, their words proceeded from the divine "word moving them, and by him they propheſied; "he ſpake in Iſaiah, in Elias, and in the mouth "of the prophets." So the Fathers.

Ibid. [r] Τὰ εἰς Χριστὸν παθήματα, the ſufferings of Chriſt.] Not only in himſelf, but in his members, and the glories which ſhould be after, as well to them, as to their Saviour, Rom. 8. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12. 1 Pet. 4. 13. as appears from ver. 13. where this glory is ſtyled, the grace to be brought to us at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 12. [s] Ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, by the Holy Spirit ſent down from heaven.] Hence it is evident, that the apoſtles, in all thoſe writings in which they declared the goſpel of Chriſt, were διάκτοροι, men aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt; and that they, in preaching and enditing the goſpel, were acted by the ſame Spirit who moved formerly the prophets. See the General Preface.

Ibid. [t] Παρακύψαι, angels deſire to look into.] And ſhall holy prophets be ſo deſirous to know the time when theſe things ſhould happen, and holy angels ſo diligent to look into theſe glorious revelations; and ſhall we, to whom, and for whoſe happineſs this goſpel was revealed, neglect not only to obtain, but even to know this great ſalvation? Some refer this to Dan. 8. 13.

Ver. 13. [u] Note, That from this, and the foregoing verſe, we have ſeveral arguments to prove, theſe things relate not to the temporal deliverance of Chriſtians from the perſecution of the Jews, but to their deliverance from the guilt of ſin, by the blood of Chriſt, ver. 19. and that eternal deliverance which is the object of the Chriſtian's hope. For, 1. That cannot properly be ſtyled, the grace which is to come to us by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; that being the grace which brings ſalvation, Titus 2. 11. 13. [x] 2. That was not the thing which they who preached the goſpel did ἀναγγέλλειν ὑμῖν, declare unto us; but, as St John informs us, they did ἀναγγέλλειν ζωὴν αἰώνιον, ſhew unto us eternal life, 1 John 1. 2. 3. They could not be the things the angels did deſire to look into. 4. The motive to perſeverance to the end, is not a temporal deliverance from the Jews, but a ſpiritual and eternal deliverance, Rom. 8. 18. 2 Cor. 4. 17. Heb. 10. 35. 36.

Ver. 16. [y] Ἐγὼ ἅγιος εἰμι.] The holineſs of God, in ſcripture, hath reſpect to a double object, viz. ſin; and ſo it doth import his perfect freedom from, his hatred of, and oppoſition to all impiety. 1. His entire freedom from all impurity; for God is light, ſaith the apoſtle, and in him is no darkneſs at all, 1 John 1. 5. He is a juſt God, and without iniquity, Deut. 32. 4.; a God of purer eyes than to behold evil, Hab. 1. 13.; i. e. without the greateſt deteſtation. 2. His perfect hatred of it; whence he is ſaid to loath, deteſt, and to abhor it, and the workers of it; and it is ſtyled the abominable thing which his ſoul hateth, Jer. 44. 4. And ſince God's nature is immutable, his holineſs unchangeable, he muſt for ever hate, with a moſt perfect hatred, whatſoever is unholy and impure; and to ſuppoſe an interruption in his hatred of evil-doers, is to ſuppoſe he can ceaſe to be a pure and holy God. And, 3. From this hatred naturally flows a juſt aſſurance of his oppoſition to all impiety and unholineſs, that he by no means will clear the guilty, Exod. 34. 7. or let the ſinner always go unpuniſhed, Nahum 1. 3. And this ſeems to be the import of the holineſs of God we are here called to imitate, becauſe it ſtands in oppoſition to the former luſts of their ignorance: Or, 2. God's holineſs reſpects ſuch perſons as are, by conſecration, or by reſemblance of him, holy; and ſo it intimates his great affection to them, and concernment for them.

Ver. 17. [z] Ἀπροσωπολήπτως.] i. e. Without difference of nations, whether Jew or Gentile, or without reſpect had to any man's progenitors, in the great day of his account, Acts 10. 34. 35. Rom. 2. 58. See note on James 2. 1.

Ver. 18. [aa] Ἐκ τῆς ματαίας ὑμῶν ἀναστροφῆς, from your vain converſation.] Two expreſſions in this chapter ſeem to intimate, that the apoſtle ſpeaks here, not only to the native Jews, but alſo to the converted Gentiles. 1. His exhortation to them, not to faſhion themſelves according to their former luſts, ἐν τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ ὑμῶν, in their ignorance; which phraſe, in the New Teſtament, hath ſtill relation to the times of ignorance in which the Gentiles lay, before the preaching of the goſpel to them. So, Acts 17. 30. Τοὺς χρόνους τῆς ἀγνοίας, the times of ignorance God winked at, Eph. 4. 10. being darkened in your mind, διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν, by the ignorance that is in you. 2. This of their converſation, received by tradition from their forefathers: for though the Scribes and Phariſees had delivered traditions to the people, which rendered the worship of God vain, Matth. 15. 9. yet a vain conversation, received by tradition from their forefathers, seems rather to respect the conversation of the Heathens, ἀναστροφὴ being the word by which the conversation of the Gentiles is designed, Eph. 2. 3. and 4. 22. 2 Pet. 2. 7. 18. and ματαια here added to it, determining the conversation to the worship of vain gods, Acts 14. 15. Eph. 4. 17. Their plea for their religion and vain worship being also this, that "they received it from their fathers," saying, That (f) "they were not to be moved, by "any persuasions, from the religion which they had "received (g) from their forefathers." But yet I confess, these things may relate to the Gentile proselytes among the Jews, which were very numerous. See note on ver. 1.

Ver. 19. [bb] Ὡς ἀμνοῦ ἀμώμου, a lamb without blemish.] Christ being perfect, and without spot of sin, was typified by the lamb offered daily for their sins; and that lamb being bought with the half-shekel, every one gave for the buying of the daily sacrifice, Exod. 30. 14. 15. 16. and which was therefore styled Keseph kipputim, "the money of expiations," and was sent up to Jerusalem from every city of Judea, and all the provinces where the Jews lived, "in silver and gold," the apostle may here allude to this, when he saith, You were not redeemed with silver and gold, by which the daily sacrifice was bought, which made atonement for your souls, but with the precious blood of Jesus, who shed his blood for your redemption from that death which by your sins you had contracted. Others refer this to the paschal lamb, by the sprinkling of whose blood they were delivered from destruction, when the first-born of the Egyptians perished, Exod. 12. 11. 17. Both these lambs were to be ἀμνοὶ ἄμωμοι, perfect, and without spot, that they might be accepted, Exod. 12. 5. Lev. 22. 21. Numb. 28. 3. 9. 11. 19. &c.

Ver. 20. [cc] Προεγνωσμένου, foreknown.] The Jews say, that (h) "When God created the world, he held "forth his hand under the throne of glory, and created the soul of the Messiah, and his company, and "said to him, Wilt thou heal and redeem my sons "after six thousand years? He answered, Yes. God "said to him, If so, wilt thou bear chastisements, "to expiate their iniquity, according to what is "written, Is. 53. 4. Surely he bore our griefs? "He answered, I will endure them with joy." And to this representation of this covenant made with the Messiah, "before the creation of the world," it may be the apostle here refers. See the note on Eph. 1. 4. In the style of Philo (i), he is ἀιδιος λογος, "the eternal Word, the first-born," and "the "most ancient Son of the Father, by whom all the "species were framed." This therefore is according to the received opinion of the Jews.

Ver. 21. [dd] Πιστεύοντας εἰς Θεὸν, by him do believe in God.] Here the Socinians object thus: He by whom we believe in God, is not that God in whom we believe; for the means of faith can never be the object of it: but Christ is he by whom we believe in God; ergo, Christ is not God. To this I answer, That Christ, according to the nature which died for us, and which was raised from the dead, is he by whom we believe in God, i. e. own him to be able to raise us also from the dead; and according to the same nature we acknowledge him not to be God: but that hinders not his being God, according to that nature by which he had power to, and did actually raise himself from the dead, John 10. 18. and 2. 19.

But still they object, That "by him we believe "in him that raised him from the dead, that our "faith and hope might be in God," to wit, the Father: faith, therefore, and hope in Christ, is not faith and hope in God. Ans. 1. It only follows hence, that it is not faith and hope in God the Father; but, 2*dly*, The apostle here saith, That by believing in him who raised up Christ from the dead, we believe in God, because we believe in that divine power which can raise us also from the dead: since therefore the holy scripture expressly and frequently asserts, that we shall be raised up from the dead, by the voice of the Son of God, John 5. 25. 28.; and that because as the Father hath life in himself, and so is able to give life to the dead; so hath he given to the Son, to have life in himself, ver. 26. Seeing Christ often saith of him that believeth in him, I will raise him up at the last day, John 6. 39. 40. 44. 45. for I am the resurrection and the life, John 11. 24. 25. Since the apostle saith, He hath dominion over the dead, and over the living, Rom. 14. 9.; that by him all men shall be made alive, 1 Cor. 15. 22.; and, That he will change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, according to the mighty power whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself; it rather follows hence, That our faith and hope in Christ thus raising us from the dead, as his Father did him, is faith and hope in God.

corruptible ſeed.] Here is a further evidence, that the word of God is the ordinary means of our new birth: for it is τὸ ῥῆμα τὸ ἐυαγγελισθὲν, the word preached, (not any inward word infuſed), which is here ſtyled that incorruptible ſeed from which this new birth is derived.

Ibid. [ff] Διὰ λόγε ζῶντ@ Θεῦ, the living word of God.] This epithet is aſcribed to the word of God, Heb. 4. 12. And that this is not ſpoken of the living God, is evident; becauſe in the Greek it is not διὰ λόγε Θεῦ ζῶντος, but ζῶντος Θεῦ, i. e. not by the word of the living God, but by the living word of God. 2*dly*, That it is to be underſtood of the word preached, is clear; becauſe the epithet, living, and abiding for ever, agrees to the ſame thing. Now, the apoſtle ſaith, It is the word preached, that abideth for ever; and ſo the prophet Iſaiah had ſaid before him, chap. 40. 8. Τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα τᾶ Θεᾶ ἡμῶν μενει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. 2. As new-born babes deſire the [a] ſincere milk of the word, that (as you were begotten, chap. 1. 23. ſo) you may grow thereby (unto a perfect man in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. 4. 13.):

4. To whom coming, as to a living ſtone, [b] diſallowed (Gr. rejected) indeed of men, but choſen of God, and precious,

5. Ye alſo, as [c] lively (Gr. living) [d] ſtones, are built up a ſpiritual houſe, (and are) an holy [e] prieſthood to offer up [f] ſpiritual ſacrifices, acceptable to God by Jeſus Chriſt.

6. Wherefore alſo it is contained in the ſcripture, (Iſ. 28. 16.) [g] Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-ſtone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him, ſhall not be confounded, (Gr. aſhamed. And it is alſo written in the ſame ſcripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, Iſ. 8. 14. 15. Rom. 9. 33.)

7. To you therefore that believe he is precious, (Gr. ἡ τιμὴ, belongs the honour of being thus built upon the corner-ſtone to a ſpiritual houſe); but to them which be diſobedient, (belongs what is written, Pſal. 118. 22.), the ſtone which the builders diſallowed, the ſame is made the head of the corner.

8. And (alſo what is written, Iſ. 8. 14. 15.) a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a a rock of offence, (or falling), even to them who ſtumbled at the word, being diſobedient, [h] whereunto alſo they were appointed.

9. But ye (who are built upon him) are [i] a choſen generation, a [k] royal prieſthood, [l] an holy nation, [m] a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth [n] the praiſes of him who hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light:

10. [o] Who in times paſt were not a people, but are now the people of God: who had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

11. Dearly beloved, I beſeech you, [p] as ſtrangers and pilgrims, (to) abſtain from fleſhly luſts which [q] war againſt the ſoul;

12. Having your converſation honeſt (Gr. honourable) among the Gentiles; that whereas they [r] ſpeak againſt you as evil-doers, they may, by your good works which they ſhall behold, (be induced to) glorify God [s] in the day of viſitation.

13. Submit yourſelves (Gr. Be ye ſubject therefore) to every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake: whether it be to the king, as ſupreme;

14. Or unto governors, as to them who are ſent [t] by him, for the puniſhment of evil-doers, and for the praiſe of them that do well.

15. 17. Honour (therefore) all men, (even Heathens). Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honour the king, (who then was Nero, the worſt of kings, and the perſecutor of Chriſtians.)

18. [x] Servants (alſo), be ſubject to your maſters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but alſo to the froward.

20. [y] For what (ground of) glory is it (to you), if when ye be buffeted for your faults, you shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well, and (yet) suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God.

21. (And it is also suitable to your profession): For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also (whose followers ye profess to be) suffered for us, leaving us an example (both of well-doing, and patient suffering), that ye should follow his steps.

22. (For he was one) who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth, (and so he could not suffer for evil-doing):

23. (And also one) who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously, (and so was an example of perfect patience):

24. Who (was not only to us an example of sufferings, but) his own self [z] bare our sins in his own body on the tree; that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verse 2. [b] Τὸ λογικὸν γάλα.] The milk which rational creatures feed on. (So λογικὴ λατρεία is the service performed by men of reason, Rom. 12. 1. It seems to be the same in sense with the ingrafted word, James 1. 21.)

Ver. 4. [b] Ἀποδεδοκιμασμένον, disallowed, or rejected of men), i. e. of the Jewish sanhedrim, the builders mentioned, Psal. 118. 22. So R. Solomon Jarchi on those words of Micah, chap. 5. 2. Out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people Israel; i. e. the Messiah, the son of David, shall come from thee; as it is written, Psal. 118. 22. The stone which the builders refused, is become the head-stone in the corner. And so our Lord expounds these words to the high priests, scribes, and Pharisees, Matth. 21. 42. 45. Luke 20. 17. 19. So Peter, full of the Holy Ghost, Acts 4. 11.

Ver. 5. [c] Ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες, a living stone, ver. 4. Living stones.] The Christian church being not a building made up of materials without life, as was the temple of Jerusalem; but a spiritual building, consisting of the members of Christ's body, living by the Spirit communicated from Christ their head, and the fountain of life to them, Eph. 4. 16. Col. 2. 19. He who communicates this life to them, is therefore styled a living stone; and they who receive it from him, are also living stones: and being by this Spirit thus fitly put together, compacted, and edified into one building, Rom. 14. 19. 1 Thess. 5. 11. are said to be built up a spiritual house.

Ibid. [d] Ἱεράτευμα ἅγιον, an holy priesthood.] The legal sacrifices were to be offered by the priests alone, and only in the temple: accordingly the Christian church is here represented as God's temple; the praises they offer up to God in their assemblies, are styled, spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, Heb. 13. 15. the persons who offer them, an holy priesthood. See ver. 9.

Ibid. [e] Πνευματικὰς θυσίας, spiritual sacrifices.] Thus (k) Philo having said, agreeably to the psalmist, That God delights not in hecatombs, since the whole world is his, and he can want nothing, adds, That men τὸν ἀρίστην ἀνάγκαι θυσίαν ὕμνοις τὸν εὐεργέτην καὶ σωτῆρα γεραίροντες, then offer the best sacrifice, when they honour their benefactor and saviour with hymns: he adds, That the altar for burnt-offerings was made of stone, and placed in the court before the tabernacle, but the altar of incense of gold was in the holy place within the vail: whence he infers, That as much as gold is better than stone, and the holy place more sacred than the court, (l) τοσούτῳ κρείττων ἡ διὰ τῶν ἐπιθυμιαμένων εὐχαριστία τῆς διὰ τῶν αἱμάτων, so much is the thanksgiving offered up with incense, better than that of sacrifices. And lastly, he saith, That the fire always burning on the altar, was τὸ σύμβολον τῆς εὐχαριστίας, a symbol of thanksgiving. And this thanksgiving, sent up to God with the oblation of bread and wine in the eucharist, in commemoration of our Saviour's passion, and with prayer for our acceptance through his Beloved, is by the primitive Christians styled, their spiritual sacrifice, and that pure incense, which, according to the prophet Malachi, chap. 1. 11. the Gentiles were to offer to God throughout the world. See the text defended, Examen Millii.

ſtumble and fall at that ſtone, i. e. to be bruiſed, and ruined by that means, to be deſtroyed among the crucifiers of the Meſſiah, and condemned with them hereafter; it being juſt with God, that they who will not reform, and amend, at the preaching of the goſpel, and ſo receive benefit by it, ſhould, for their obſtinacy, be condemned, and ſo the worſe for it; Chriſt being ſet for the falling, as well as the riſing of many in Iſrael, Luke 2. 34. and the goſpel being a ſavour of death to them that periſh, 2 Cor. 2. 15. 16. and they being thoſe whom ἔθετο ὁ Θεὸς εἰς ὀργὴν, God hath appointed for wrath, 1 Theſſ. 5. 6. And to be ſure it cannot ſignify, that God abſolutely ordained the unbelieving Jews εἰς ἀπείθειαν, to diſobedience; for then this diſobedience would be a compliance with the divine ordinance, or will, and ſo could not deſerve the name of diſobedience: nor could this diſobedience be objected to them as their crime, unleſs compliance with his ordinance and will be ſo, and it be a fault to be ſuch as God by his immutable counſel and decree hath ordained we ſhould be; or it ſhould render men criminal, and obnoxious to puniſhment, that they have not made void God's abſolute decree, or done what that made it impoſſible for them to do. Wherefore this paſſage cannot ſignify, that the unbelieving Jews were appointed to diſobedience; but only, that being diſobedient to the goſpel ſo clearly revealed, and by ſo many miracles and diſtributions of the Holy Ghoſt confirmed, they were appointed to the puniſhment of that diſobedience, to fall and periſh: for ſo the Hebrew בשל, and the Greek προσκόμμα, and σκάνδαλον, import, viz. the ruin and fall of them who ſtumble at this ſtone; as hath been proved on Rom. 14. 13. See Prov. 16. 19. If. 8. 14. 15. Jer. 6. 21. Ezek. 3. 20. and 21. 15. Zech. 12. 3. Matth. 21. 41. Luke 20. 18. So Oecumenius (m) on this place. Or, 2*dly*, The words may be thus conſtrued, To them who are diſobedient, and through that diſobedience ſtumble at the word, this other character of the ſtone belongs, "of a ſtone of ſtum-"bling; whereunto thoſe ſtones were put, one for "honour to the believer, the other for a ſtone of "ſtumbling to the unbeliever and diſobedient;" for to both theſe ſtones the apoſtle Paul, Rom. 9. 33. and St Peter here, do put this preface, Behold, I lay in Zion a ſtone. And this agrees with that of Simeon, Behold, this child is placed for the fall and riſing of many in Iſrael, Luke 2. 34.

Ibid. The titles here given to the Chriſtians, are the ſame which formerly were given to the whole Jewiſh nation, and are accordingly to be interpreted.

Γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, a choſen or elected nation.] Not only the righteous and obedient perſons among them, but the whole nation of the Jews, are ſtyled, the elect of God, throughout the Old Teſtament. Thus, Deut. 4. 37. Becauſe he loved thy fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, therefore ἐξελέξατο τὸ σπέρμα αὐτῶν μετ' αὐτὸν ὑμᾶς, he choſe you their ſeed after them, and brought you out of Egypt by his mighty power. Where it is evident, that their whole ſeed, even all that came out of Egypt, were the elect, Deut. 7. 6. 7. Jehovah thy God hath choſen thee to be a peculiar people to himſelf, above all people that are on the face of the earth. The Lord did not ſet his love upon you, becauſe you were more in number than any people; but becauſe the Lord loved you, and becauſe he would keep the oath which he had ſworn to your fathers, hath he brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondmen. Where evident it is, 1. That their being choſen, before other nations, to be God's peculiar people, is their election. 2. That all that were brought out of Egypt were thus beloved, and thus elected. 3. That to theſe elect and choſen people, God only promiſeth to keep covenant and mercy, provided they would love him, and obey him; and that he threateneth to deſtroy them, and to repay them to their face, if they neglect ſo to do. In the 10th chapter, ver. 14. 15. 16. he ſpeaks thus, The Lord had a delight in thy fathers, to love them, ᾧ ἐξελέξατο, and he elected you their ſeed after them above all people: circumciſe therefore the foreſkin of your hearts, and be no more ſtiff-necked. Where again evident it is, that the whole ſeed of Abraham, by Iſaac, even the ſtiff-necked of them, were the beloved, and elect of God. Chap. 14. he ſaith, to all to whom the following precepts did belong, and therefore doubtleſs to all Iſrael, Thou art an holy people to the Lord thy God, ᾧ σε ἐξελέξατο ὁ Κύριος, and the Lord hath choſen thee out to be a peculiar people above all nations.

And with this notion of the words, accords the conſtant uſe of the ſame phraſe in all the prophets and ſacred writers of the Old Teſtament. Thus Solomon ſaith, 1 Kings 3. 8. Thy ſervant is in the midſt of thy people, ὃν ἐξελέξω, which thou haſt elected; a great people, that cannot be numbered, nor counted for multitude. In the book of Pſalms, the Jews in general are ſtyled, the ſeed of Iſrael his ſervant, the children of Jacob, ἐκλεκτοὶ αὐτοῦ, his elect, Pſal. 105. 6. 43. and 135. 4. There doth he ſay, Τὸν Ἰακὼβ ἑαυτῷ ἐξελέξατο ὁ Κύριος, the Lord hath choſen Jacob to himſelf, and Iſrael for his own inheritance, Pſal. 106. 5. There doth he tell us, that the Lord

brought forth his people with joy, μὲ τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς αὐτοῦ, and his elect with gladness. There he desires of God, χρηστότητα τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν, the good of his elect, to rejoice in the gladness of his nation: so that, throughout the psalms, God's servants, his people, his nation, his inheritance, and his elect, are the same persons.

In the evangelical prophet we read, God speaking of Jacob, ὃν ἐξελεξάμην, whom I have elected, and Israel whom I have loved, Is. 41. 8. 9. and to whom he speaks thus, Thou art my child whom I have chosen, chap. 43. 20. 21. There God declares, He will make waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the deserts, ποτίσαι τὸ γένος μου τὸ ἐκλεκτὸν, to give drink to my chosen generation, my people whom I have chosen to shew forth my praise, chap. 45. 4. There we read of Jacob my servant, and Israel mine elect, chap. 65. 9. and of a mountain which his elect shall inherit, and in which his servants shall dwell.

In the prophet Jeremy we find God is displeased with them who said, the two families, אשר בחר יהוה בהם, whom the Lord had chosen, he hath even cast them off, Jer. 33. 24. The prophet speaks of the day when the Lord chose Israel, and lifted up his hand to the seed of the house of Jacob, Ezek. 20. 5. The prophet Zechariah styles God, the Lord who hath chosen Jerusalem, Zech. 3. 2. And Daniel speaks of a time when οἱ ἐκλεκτοὶ αὐτοῦ, his elect should not be able to stand before their enemies, Dan. 11. 15.

And to carry on this phrase even to the times of the New Testament, in the book of Esther, we are told of a time in which τὸ γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, the chosen generation should have perished, Esth. 16. 21. i. e. in which the wicked Haman designed to cut off the Jews. In the book of Ecclesiasticus we are informed, that Joshua was made great, ἐπὶ σωτηρίᾳ ἐκλεκτῶν αὐτοῦ, for saving the elect of God, and taking vengeance on their enemies that rose up against them, Ecclus 46. 1. that he might set Israel in ther inheritance.

Thus have I traced this phrase throughout the whole Old Testament, and shewed, that it belongs not to particular persons, but to the whole Jewish church and people in the general; to the bad, as well as to the good among them; to them to whom God threateneth the worst of evils, as well as them to whom he promised the greatest blessings.

When in the New Testament this phrase is applied to the Jews, it plainly signifies as many of them as were converted to the Christian faith; though afterwards too many of them fell off from it, or brought not forth those fruits of righteousness which Christianity required, and is applied to them all in general, and without distinction. And it is highly reasonable to conceive it should be so; for the apostle writing to that nation, who had been still accustomed to this notion of the word, and were all styled the elect, they must be supposed to use the words of the Old Testament in that sense in which they always understood them: that the apostle doth here so use the word, is evident from this consideration, That the holy nation, the peculiar people, the royal priesthood, joined with it, are expressions belonging primarily to that nation, and from them derived to the Christians. 2. That this epistle is writ to the elect, that is, the "strangers "of the dispersions of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, "Asia, and Bithynia," they all being styled the elect, i.e. such as professed Christianity, and so were visible members of the church of Christ; whereas too many of them were not so, according to that meaning of the word elect, which makes it to import men absolutely designed for eternal happiness, as this and the second epistle may inform us. 3. That the second epistle, sent to the same persons, writes only to them who had obtained like precious faith with us; and so informs us, that the faithful and elect are, in St Peter's phrase, the same. And that this is the notion of the word in all the other places of the New Testament, see proved in the notes upon them; and that it is applied to whole churches, and scarce ever to any individual person, in that sense in which it hath been so generally used by some late divines.

Ibid. [i] Βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, a royal priesthood,] Exod. 19. 6. A kingdom of priests: Kings and priests, saith the Chaldee. And so St John declares, that Christ hath made us kings and priests to God, Rev. 1. 6. and 5. 10. Kings to reign with him, chap. 20. 6. and priests to offer up unto him our spiritual sacrifices. See here, ver. 5.

Ibid. [k] Ἔθνος ἅγιον, an holy nation:] i. e. A people separated to God from all other nations, and from their idolatry, or false and antiquated worship, to serve him in an acceptable manner. On which account all Christian churches, being called out of the world, and dedicated to the service of God by Jesus Christ, are, in the preface to St Paul's epistles, styled saints. See note on 1 Cor. 1. 2.

Τὰς ἀρετὰς, his praises;] Or glory, תהלה, is so rendered by the Septuagint, Is. 42. 8. I will not give my glory to another, οὐδὲ τὰς ἀρετάς μου, nor my praise to graven images. And, ver. 12. Let them give glory to the Lord; τὰς ἀρετὰς αὐτοῦ ἀναγγελλέτω, let them shew forth his praises in the islands. And chap. 43. 21. he styles Israel, my elect; as here, my peculiar people, τὰς ἀρετάς μου διηγεῖσθαι, to shew forth my praise. See also chap. 63. 7. Hab. 3. 3. Zech. 6. 13. Esth. 14. 10.

Ibid. [l] Λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν, a peculiar people.] A treasure, as the word Segullah signifies, a people in in covenant with God, and ſo become his peculium, whom he will be careful to protect, and preſerve, and to whom belong his peculiar favours and privileges.

Ver. 10. [m] Οἱ ποτὲ οὐ λαὸς, who in times paſt were not a people.] Theſe words plainly relate to God's dealing with the ten tribes of Iſrael, when he had given them a bill of divorce, Jer. 3. 8. and ſent his prophet Hoſea to ſay unto them, You are not my people, neither will I be your God, Hoſea 1. 6. 9. And again, I will no more have mercy on the houſe of Iſrael, but will utterly caſt them away. And indeed, God having ſo expreſsly ſaid, that the children of Judah and Iſrael ſhould be gathered together, and appoint themſelves one head, that he would have mercy upon her who had not obtained mercy, and would ſay to them who were not his people, Thou art my people, Hoſ. 1. 11. 2. 23. and that they ſhould ſay, Thou art my God, and that the houſe of Judah ſhould walk with the houſe of Iſrael; I doubt not but that there was a conſiderable return of the ten tribes, or at leaſt a conſiderable converſion of them in the places where they were: and though they, being mixed with the Heathen, did many of them ſerve their gods, as he threatened they ſhould, Deut. 28. 36. 64, and ſo may be alſo ſaid to be called from darkneſs to this marvellous light; yet ſince the apoſtle Paul applies this paſſage to the Gentiles, Rom. 9. 25. I doubt not but that, in the myſtical ſenſe, it muſt relate to them alſo.

Ver. 11. [n] Ὡς παροίκους, as ſtrangers and pilgrims.] They whoſe citizenſhip is in heaven, and whoſe names are written in heaven, Phil. 3. 20. Heb. 12. 23. muſt be pilgrims and ſtrangers upon earth. See note on Heb. 11. 13.

Ibid. Στρατεύονται, war againſt the ſoul.] For whereas the natural motion of that ſpiritual being is towards ſpiritual and heavenly things, "Theſe "luſts," ſaith Oecumenius, "draw down, and "captivate the ſoul to ſenſual and worldly things:" As therefore ſtrangers and pilgrims are not wont to be affected much with the objects which they ſee in their travels; ſo neither ſhould we, who profeſs to be pilgrims in this world, be much affected with ſenſual objects.

Ver. 12. [o] Καταλαλοῦσιν ὑμῶν, ſpeak evil of you as of evil-doers.] Here Oecumenius gives this relation from Irenæus, Biſhop of Lyons, concerning the martyrs, Sanctus and Blandina; that "the Hea-"thens apprehending the ſervants of ſome Chri-"ſtians, and compelling them to declare what e-"vil they knew of them; thoſe ſervants having "heard from the Chriſtians, that the holy ſacra-"ment was the body and blood of Chriſt, and "thinking that it was τῷ ὄντι, verily and ſubſtan-"tially his fleſh and blood, related this to the in-"quirers, and they thinking ὡς αὐτόχρημα, that this "was done in very deed by Chriſtians, told this to "other Heathens, and compelled the martyrs, San-"ctus and Blandina, by torments, to confeſs it; "to which Blandina anſwered, How can they be "guilty of ſuch things, who by exerciſe (i. e. "through temperance) permit not themſelves to "enjoy lawful fleſh?".

Ibid. [p] Ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς, In the day of viſitation.] That is, when they afflict and perſecute you: So ἐπισκοπὴ and ἡμέρα ἐπισκοπῆς often ſignify in the Septuagint, Iſ. 10. 3. What will you do in τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, in the day of viſitation, when your affliction ſhall come from far? Jer. 6. 15. ἐν καιρῷ ἐπισκοπῆς, in the time of their viſitation they ſhall periſh; and again, chap. 10. 15. Wiſd. 3. 7. ἐν καιρῷ ἐπισκοπῆς, in the time of their viſitation they ſhall ſhine, Ecclus 2. 14. Wo to them who have loſt patience, what will they do, ὅταν ἐπισκέπτηται ὁ Κύριος, when the Lord viſits? And chap. 18. 20. Before the judgment examine thyſelf, καὶ ἐν ὥρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς, and in the hour of viſitation, thou ſhalt find propitiation.

Ver. 14. [q] Δι' αὐτοῦ, by him;] that is, by God, ſaith Eſthius, becauſe theſe governors were not always ſent by Cæſar for theſe good ends; but it is ſufficient that this was the general end of puniſhment, &c. and therefore they, in charity, muſt be ſuppoſed to be ſent by kings and emperors for thoſe ends.

Ver. 16. [r] Ὡς ἐλεύθεροι, as free, &c.] That the Gnoſtics pretended to any ſuch liberty, as exempted them from ſubjection to ſuperiors, I find not in church-hiſtory; but that the Jews to whom St Peter writes, and eſpecially the zealots among them, were notorious for this doctrine, and were practiſing it at the writing of this epiſtle, is evident. For,

1*ſt*, They held themſelves obliged "to own God "alone as their only Lord and Governor, in oppo-"ſition to Cæſar, and all kings which were not of "their own nation (n)," and did not govern them by their own laws, or his immediate appointment.

2*dly*, They, many of them, rebelled againſt the Romans, and againſt the governors ſent by them, upon this very pretence, that "they were a free "people, and ought to preſerve their liberty (o)." And thus they uſed their liberty for a cloak of malicioufneſs.

Ver. 18.

Ver. 18. [u] Οἱ οἰκέται, servants, be subject.] This also was a lesson needful for the Jews, because the Essenes among them, say Philo and Josephus, thought it against the law of nature to be servants to any; and their rabbins allowed not a Jew to be a servant to an Heathen; see note on 1 Tim. 6. 1. 2.

Ver. 19. [x] Τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις.] This will procure the divine favour and reward. So what is ποία ὑμῖν χάρις; what thank have ye? Luke 6. 32. 33. is τίνα μισθὸν ἔχετε; what reward have you? Matth. 5. 46. And in the following verse this phrase is rendered, This is acceptable.

Ver. 20. [y] Note, 1st, From comparing this and the preceding verse, that to suffer, ver. 19. and to take our sufferings patiently, ver. 20. in the scripture-import is the same thing.

2dly, That to do that which is truly acceptable to God, is also matter of our glory; see note on 1 Cor. 9. 6. Jer. 9. 24. Rom. 2. 7. 10.

Ver. 24. [z] Ἀνήνεγκεν, bare our sins.] If these words be truly rendered, he bare our sins, it is certain that an innocent person can only bear them by bearing the punishment due to them. And that this is the proper import of these words, τὰς ἁμαρτίας ὑμῶν ἀνήνεγκεν, is evident both from the prophet's exposition of them, when he saith of the same person, αὐτὸς ἁμαρτίας πολλῶν ἀνήνεγκε, he bore the sins of many, Is. 53. 12. and expounds this thus, διὰ τὰς ἀνομίας αὐτῶν παρεδόθη, he was delivered up to death for their iniquities; and from the usual import of the phrase in the Old Testament; as when we read in the book of Leviticus, chap. 7. 18. He that eateth of the peace-offering in the third day, it shall not be favourably accepted, τὴν ἁμαρτίαν λήψεται, he shall bear his iniquity. And again, Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, thou shalt in any wise reprove him, καὶ οὐ λήψῃ δι' αὐτὸν ἁμαρτίαν, and not bear sin for him, Lev. 19. 17. And in the book of Numbers thus, Your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, καὶ ἀνοίσουσι τὴν πορνείαν ὑμῶν, and shall bear your whoredoms —— Ye shall bear your iniquities forty years, Numb. 14. 33. 34. When we hear the prophet Jeremy complaining, Our fathers have sinned, and are not, usabalnu; τὰ ἀνομήματα αὐτῶν ὑπέχομεν, and we have borne their iniquities, Lam. 5. 7. When we hear God saying to Ezekiel, Lie thou upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it, λήψῃ τὰς ἀδικίας αὐτῶν, thou shalt bear their iniquities, Ezek. 4. 4. 5. 6. When it is farther said, The soul that sinneth it shall die; the son οὐ λήψεται, shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son, Ezek. 18. 20. When we read so often in the law of Moses, that such persons have been guilty, and shall bear their iniquity, they shall die for it (p); and find so many cautions there given to the Jews, that they offend not in such a kind, that they bear not iniquity and die (q); or, lest they bear iniquity and die; in all these places, neither Socinians, nor any other persons, do fancy any other import of these words, but that by bearing of iniquity and sin, is meant, bearing the punishment of sin; and in these latter places, being punished with death for it. When therefore the same Jews found it foretold of their Messiah by their own prophet, that he should bear their iniquity, that he should bear the sin of many; what could they understand by these expressions, but that he was to suffer the punishment, and bear upon him the burden of their sins? When the apostle informs those very Jews who were so well acquainted with the import of this phrase, that Christ was once offered, or given up to death, to bear the sins of many; and when St Peter, writing to the same Jews, informs them, that he bare our sins in his own body on the tree, how can we think otherwise, than that they both apprehended, and the blessed apostle did design to teach them, that he suffered this death as the punishment of their iniquities? Let Mr le Clerc continue, if he please, to be confident, that it is not so much the expiation of sins as the mortification of them that is here signified, whilst we, poor mortals, rather think our sins must be mortified in us than on a tree, and in our own bodies than in Christ's, or in the sufferings of his body; and that it is not very good sense to say, he mortified our sins, that we might die unto them.

Ver. 25. [a] These and the former words are taken from Is. 53. 7. where the words are, We as sheep have gone astray, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. Hence are both Jews and Gentiles represented as lost sheep, and Christ as the good Shepherd who goes after them, and brings them home upon his shoulders; see Is. 40. 11. Ezek. 34. 23. Here then is a farther confutation of the Socinian gloss upon the former verse, viz. "That Christ took "away our sins by his own body crucified upon the "cross, procuring our absolution from them by his "sufferings; not that he underwent the punishment "of our transgressions, but because his voluntary "death prevailed with God to give him power to

" abſolve his ſervants at the laſt, and to reward " them with eternal glory (r.)" For were this the whole import of the words, why is it added, in plain alluſion to thoſe emphatical words of the prophet Iſaiah, He bare our ſins, the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and by his ſtripes we are healed? Why is it ſo emphatically noted, that he who did no ſin, ver. 22. yet bare our ſins? Doth not this lead us to this ſenſe, that he thus ſuffered not for his own, but for our ſins? Why is he ſaid to take away our ſins in his own body? Doth not that ſeem to intimate, that the puniſhment of our ſins was laid upon his body? Why is he ſaid to do this upon the tree? Muſt not that intimate, that what he did to take away our ſins was done upon the croſs? Eſpecially if we conſider, that the croſs was the altar upon which he ſuffered, and that ἐπιφέειν, ἀναγκαῖον ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον, to carry up upon the altar (s), is the uſual phraſe for offering the ſin-offering, or the burnt-offering upon the altar. And ſo the import of this whole ſentence ſeems to be this, He bare, or took away our ſins in his own body offered upon the altar for us. Moreover, if this be chiefly done after Chriſt's reſurrection, and the great day of recompenſe, and only by Chriſt's death, as it prevailed with God to give him power then to abſolve us from our ſins, why doth the author to the Hebrews make ſuch a plain diſtinction betwixt Chriſt's bearing our ſins, and his ſecond coming to give a final abſolution from them, ſaying, Heb. 9. 27. 29. Chriſt was once offered to bear the ſins of many; and to them that look for him, he will appear a ſecond time χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, without a ſacrifice for ſin unto ſalvation? Crellius allows, that χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ſignifies without a ſin-offering; and doth it not hence follow, that his firſt coming to bear our ſins was his coming with a ſin-offering for them? Since then the ſin-offering ſtill ſuffered in the ſinner's ſtead, and bare the puniſhment of his iniquity, it follows, that he who came to be a ſin-offering for us, muſt come to ſuffer in our ſtead, and bear the puniſhment of our iniquities.

Laſtly, Admit the words may be tranſlated thus, He took away our ſins, it is moſt reaſonable ſo to interpret them as this phraſe is uſed in ſcripture, when it is applied to the ſame purpoſe; now, when it is there uſed of taking away ſin by a ſacrifice offered up to God for ſin, it always hath relation to an atonement made by the ſacrifice for that iniquity, and that ſin-offering is ſaid to bear away the iniquity, by taking it upon himſelf. So when it is ſaid, that the ſin-offering is given, ἵνα ἀφέλητι τὴν ἁμαρτίαν τῆς συναγωγῆς, καὶ ἐξιλάσασθαι περὶ αὐτῶν ἔναντι Κυρίου, to take away the iniquity of the congregation, it is there ſaid to do it, by making an atonement for them before the Lord, Lev. 10. 17. So it is ſaid of the ſcape-goat, that he ſhall bear away all their iniquities; but then he muſt be preſented before the Lord, τοῦ ἐξιλάσασθαι ἐπ' αὐτοῦ, to make atonement with, or, upon him, Lev. 16. 10. i. e. Aaron muſt confeſs their iniquities upon his head, and he ſhall bear upon him all their iniquities, λήψεται ἐφ' ἑαυτῷ τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν, he ſhall take their iniquities upon himſelf, and ſhall bear them away into the wilderneſs; ſo Deut. 21. 9. Thou ſhalt take away innocent blood from among you: but this is to be done by making an atonement for the innocent blood ſhed. When therefore it is ſaid, that Chriſt was manifeſted to take away ſin, 1 John 3. 5. and that he took away our ſins in his own body, and was offered to take away the ſins of many, Heb. 9. 28. is it not reaſonable to ſuppoſe he did this by taking the puniſhment of them upon himſelf, and making atonement for them before God? eſpecially if we conſider that he is ſpeaking to thoſe Jews to whom theſe phraſes were familiar?

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. (AND to proceed to the other relations of man and wife): Likewiſe ye wives, be in ſubjection to your own huſbands, that if any (be ſuch as) obey not the word, they alſo without the word (i. e. without attending to the other demonſtrations of the truth of it) may be won (to the faith) by the converſation of the wives,

2. Whilſt they behold your chaſte [a] converſation coupled with fear.

3. Whoſe adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of [b] plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold (chains), or of putting on of (gorgeous) apparel:

4. But let it be (that of) the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which in the ſight of God is of great price.

5. For after this manner in the old time the holy women alſo who truſted in God, adorned themſelves (with chaſtity and ſubjection), being in ſubjection to their own huſbands;

6. Even as Sara obeyed Abraham (in token of that ſubjection), subjection), calling him lord: whose daughters ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement, (i. e. and be not moved by your fears to deny the truth, as she was, ἐφοβήθη γάρ, for she was afraid, Gen. 18. 15.)

7. [c] Likewise ye husbands, dwell with them according to (the) knowledge (of your Christian duty, which requires you to love, and cleave to your wives, forsaking all others, and to render them due benevolence), giving honour (or conjugal affection) to the wife as to the weaker vessel, (and so less able to contain, and more liable to temptations), and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered, (as they must be, if you refuse to cohabit with them.)

8. Finally, be ye all of one mind, (minding the same things), having compassion one of another (under all your afflictions), love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, (these being the effects of love):

9. Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing, (things contrary to love, as shewing rancour in the heart and tongue): but contrariwise, blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, (i. e. for this very end), that you should inherit a blessing, (and so, by blessing others, will imitate your gracious God, and shew how willing you are the same mercies may be conferred on others.)

10. For he that will love life, (i. e. who is desirous of a quiet, pleasant life), and (would) see good (i. e. prosperous) days, let him refrain his tongue from evil (speaking, so that men may refrain from speaking evil of him again), and his lips that they speak no guile.

11. Let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it, (that so men may be disposed to speak uprightly, and do good to you, and live peaceably with you, and you may live under the protection of divine providence.)

12. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, (to protect them from evil), and his ears are open to their prayers: but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, (to return it upon their own heads.)

13. And (this deportment doth also naturally tend to preserve you from evil, for) who is he that will (be so unnatural and ungrateful as to) harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good, (and obliging to them)?

14. But if (it should so happen, that notwithstanding) ye (should) suffer for righteousness sake, happy are ye, (chap. 4. 14.): and (therefore) [d] be not afraid of their terror, (i. e. of what they threaten), neither be ye troubled (for what they can inflict upon you);

15. But [e] sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an [f] answer (or account) to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear:

16. Having (or retaining) a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil-doers, (and consequently represent your faith as instigating you to evil practices), they may be ashamed (of such accusations), when they falsely accuse your good conversation in (the faith of) Christ.

17. (This care of retaining a good conscience is necessary, that you may have comfort in your sufferings, and be conformed to Christ by them); for it is better, if the will of God be so, (and he sees fit to permit it), that you suffer for well-doing, than for evil-doing.

18. For Christ also hath once [g] suffered for sins, the [h] just for the unjust, that he might [i] bring us to God; being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

19. By which (Spirit) also he went and preached [k] to the spirits in prison;

20. Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water.

21. The like figure whereunto (Gr. the antitype of which ark is that) baptism (which) doth also now save us, not (merely as it is) the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but (as it is) the [l] answer (or stipulation) of a good conscience towards God; (and this salvation it works for us) by (virtue of) [m] the resurrection of Jesus Christ;

22. Who is (Gr. being) gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God (there interceding for us, and invested with all power to give eternal life to those whom God hath given him, and who is able to save us to the uttermost who come unto God by him, Heb. 7. 25.), angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject to him, (who therefore will use the good angels as ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who are heirs of salvation, Heb. 1. 14. and will preserve them from those authorities, and powers, and evil spirits, which oppose and persecute them, and seek their ruin.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verse 2. [a] Τὴν ἐν φόβῳ ἁγνὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν, your chaste conversation in fear;] i. e. that they observing that the fear and reverence of that God you serve, produceth in you all due subjection and obedience to them, great chastity, and freedom from all suspicion of lust, great meekness and quietneſs of ſpirit in the family, ſobriety in your apparel, and care of their concerns, you may by theſe things commend to them, not only your own perſons, but that faith which produces in you theſe good fruits.

Ver. 3. ὁ Ἐμπλοκῆς τριχῶν, not the outward adorning, &c.] Theſe, in the words of Clemens of Alexandria (t), are τὸ ἑταιρικὸν καλλώπισμα, the ornaments of whores, and ſuch as demonſtrate τὸ σοβαρὸν, καὶ θρυπτικὸν, καὶ ἀκροδίατον, their arrogance, ſofineſs, and laſciviouſneſs; the plaiting of the hair was, ſaith he (u), a ſign of corrupt women, καὶ γὰρ αἱ περιπλοκαὶ τριχῶν ἑταιρικαὶ, and they that uſe them, ſaith he, were ἑταιρικῶς κεκοσμημένοι, attired like whores. And in his third book and fourth chapter, he ſaith, αἱ χρυσοφορεῖσαι γυναῖκες, the women that wear gold, plait their hair, paint their faces, have not the image of God in the inward man, but in lieu of it, a fornicating and adulterous ſoul. The apoſtolical conſtitutions (x) alſo forbid women to wear τὴν ἐπιτηδευομένην ἐσθῆτα εἰς ἀπάτην, exquiſite garments, or garments fitted to deceive, or gold rings upon their fingers, ὅτι ταῦτα πάντα ἑταιρισμοῦ τεκμήρια ὑπάρχει, becauſe all theſe things are ſigns of whoredom. And as for the wearing of gold, Jamblichus (y), in the life of Pythagoras, ſaith, τὸ χρυσὸν ἐλευθέραν μὲν μίαν φορεῖν, μόνον δὲ τὰς ἑταίρας, that no free women wore gold, but whores only. The precious apparel is the thing which all the comedians mention as the attire which ſuch women ſought after, and gloried in. Theſe things therefore, when they are uſed as ſuch marks of diſtinction, are abſolutely forbid chaſte women; but when they ceaſe to be ſo, they may be worn by Chriſtian women, provided they do it without pride, or much concern about them; and ſtill remembering that gravity in apparel is ſtill more honourable and becoming Chriſtian matrons, and that the ornaments of the mind, which are not ſubject to corruption, are much to be preferred before them.

Ver. 7. ὁ Οἱ ἄνδρες ὁμοίως, likewiſe, ye huſbands.] I am very uncertain what is the true ſenſe of theſe words. The Reverend Dr Hammond interprets them thus: "Let the huſbands in like manner live conjugally with their wives, as Chriſtianity requires of them, giving them maintenance, as perſons leſs able to provide for themſelves; and conſidering that they are, by God's appointment, copartners with them of the good things of this life; that ſo they may not be diſturbed in their prayers by their diſtractions and ſolicitudes for this world." Which interpretation I ſhould acquieſce in, could I find that the phraſe συγκληρονόμοι ζωῆς, or ζώσης, being heirs together of the grace of life, was ever uſed only with reſpect to the good things of this preſent life: or that ἐκκόπτεσθαι τὰς προσευχὰς, ſignified only to be diſtracted in prayers, and not rather to have them wholly hindered.

Others interpret them thus: Let the huſbands live with their wives as Chriſtianity requires, not irritating, or provoking them, Col. 4. 19. not deſpiſing their company; but giving honour to them as moſt needing it, and as conſidering that they are equal to them in reſpect of ſpirituals; and that by your diſcontents, diſpleaſure againſt, and ſeparation from one another, your prayers be not hindered.

Others, as in the paraphraſe, refer this to conjugal relation, and to conjugal duties, as all the ancients, who have ſpoken of theſe words, interpret them. Oecumenius ſaith, he thinks they are to be interpreted ἐπὶ τῆς γαμικῆς χρήσεως, of the conjugal uſe of one another; and the word συνοικοῦν ſeems to plead for this ſenſe, as being ſo uſed by the Septuagint, Gen. 20. 3. Deut. 24. 1. 25. 5. Iſ. 62. 5. Eſdr. 1. 8. 70. 84. 92. but then I find not that the word τιμὴ beareth any ſuch ſenſe. Only to this it may be anſwered, that Origen (z) ſeems to point the words thus: "Let the huſband dwell with the wife accor"ding to knowledge, as being more infirm, giving
"honour to them alſo, as being heirs of the grace
"of life." And ſeeing συνοικέω ſignifies to marry, or contract matrimony, the words may be thus paraphraſed: "Likewiſe, ye men, be joined in marriage "with the women, as you find them endued with "the knowledge of Chriſtianity, they being the "weaker veſſels, and ſo more ſubject without this "knowledge to miſcarry; giving preference in "your choice to ſuch as be heirs together with you
"of the grace of life, that through difference in "religion your prayers be not cut off."

Ver. 14. ὁ Τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, fear not their fear.] Theſe, and the following words, Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, are plainly taken from Iſ 8. 12. and they are there an exhortation not to fear the Aſſyrians, nor to be diſmayed, as thoſe Jews were, who out of fear were deſirous to confederate with them; and ſo accordingly they muſt here ſignify, that Chriſtians were not ſo to dread thoſe by whom they ſuffered for the ſake of righteouſneſs, nor any that out of fear conſpired with them to avoid perſecution, as too many of the Jews did, Gal. 6. 12. 13. as to do any thing contrary to the fear of God, or unbecoming their profeſſion.

Ver. 15. ὁ Κύριον ἁγιάσατε, but ſanctify the Lord God in your hearts.] This phraſe in ſcripture ſeems to import theſe things.

vail upon us to dread more his displeasure than any thing which we can suffer from the hand of man, Matth. 20. 28. and so enable us to stick close to our duty, and to endeavour to secure his favour, whatsoever we may suffer for so doing. So Is. 8. 12. 13. Fear not their fear, but sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread. So chap. 29. 23. They shall sanctify the holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.

2. To sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, is from the heart to own, and to believe the truth of all that God delivers by his word and promise: as when God saith to Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them, Numb. 20. 12. Hence the apostle having told the Christians he writeth to of the engagements God had made, that his eyes should be over the righteous, and his ears open to their prayers, and minded them of the hope that was in them, requires them thus to sanctify the Lord God in their hearts.

3. This phrase imports a firm belief of his almighty power, which makes him able to protect his people against all their enemies, and an affiance in his goodness, and especial providence towards them: Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and he shall be for a sanctuary, Is. 8. 13. So Ezek. 36. 22. 23. 24.

4. To sanctify the Lord, is to acknowledge and believe his justice, and that he is a God who will be sure to execute his judgments on the wicked, and more especially upon the persecutors of his people. So when he executed his judgments on Nadab and Abihu, Moses declares, This is the thing the Lord had spoken, I will be sanctified in those that come nigh me. So Numb. 20. 13. This is the water of Meribah, because the children of Israel contended with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them, by punishing their rebellion, saith the Targum. So God declares he would be sanctified upon Sidon, which had been to the house of Israel a pricking brier, and a grieving thorn, Ezek. 28. 24.; and upon Gog, the great enemy of Israel, chap. 38. 3. So the rabbins say, "That "when God doth judgment, he sanctifies himself "before his creatures;" according to these words of the prophet Isaiah, The Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness, chap. 5. 16.

Ibid. [f] Πρὸς ἀπολογίαν.] This apology for the hope that was in them, seems rather such as should be made by works, than words; against them who accuse the professors of it as evil-doers, rather than against them who only doubt of the truth of it.

Ver. 18. [g] Περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἔπαθε, hath suffered for sins.] Here note, that Christ is not only said to suffer for us, but to suffer for our sins. Now, was ever any man said to suffer for his own sins, who did not suffer the punishment of his iniquity? Why therefore should our Lord be said to suffer for sins, if he did not some way suffer the punishment of our iniquity? Again, is not the sin-offering in the Old Testament styled above sixty times, τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, and τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, the offering for sin? When therefore the oblation of our Lord is also called τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, an offering for sin, Rom. 8. 3. when he is said to suffer περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, for sins, 2 Cor. 5. 21. what could the Jews, to whom the apostle writes, conceive to be the proper import of these words, but that he suffered to make atonement for their sins, as did all their sin-offerings, by suffering in their stead the punishment of their iniquity? See the notes on Rom. 8. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 21.

Ibid. [h] Ὁ δίκαιος ὑπὲρ ἀδίκων, the just for the unjust.] That is, saith Schlictingius (a), "That the unjust "might not suffer death, nor bear the punishment "of their iniquities; for the victim suffers lest the "guilty should be punished."

Ibid. [i] Ἵνα προσαγάγῃ, that he might bring us to God.] This phrase, in all other places of the New Testament, where it is used with respect to Christ, imports his procuring to us freedom of access to God, who by our sins were formerly excluded from him, and banished from his gracious presence. By him we have, saith the apostle Paul, προσαγωγὴν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα, admission to the Father; by him we do obtain παῤῥησίαν εἰς τὴν προσαγωγὴν, a freedom of access to God with confidence, Eph. 2. 18. 3. 12. This is obtained, saith the same apostle, by virtue of his blood; for we who sometimes were afar off, are by the blood of Christ brought nigh unto him: we are brought nigh to him, saith St Peter here, by his suffering for our sins. Must not then we who were excluded, and banished from him by our sins, be brought nigh to, and reconciled to him by the blood of Christ, and by his sufferings for us on the cross?

Ver. 19. [k] Τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, to the spirits in prison.] Or, as other copies read, πνεύματι, by which Spirit going, he preached to those in prison. For explication of which words, note,

1. That by those in prison we may understand the Gentile world in bondage and captivity to sin and Satan, and held in the chains of their own lusts, and in the bonds of their iniquity. For by this phrase the evangelical prophet doth thrice express the preaching of the gospel by our Lord Jesus Christ: as in those words, I gave thee for a covenant to the people, for a light to the Gentiles, to open the blind eyes, to bring ἐκ δεσμῶν δεδεμένους, καὶ ἐξ οἴκου φυλακῆς, the priſoners out of priſon, and them that ſit in darkneſs out of the priſon-houſe, Iſ. 42. 7. And again, I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayſt be my ſalvation to the ends of the earth, that thou mayſt ſay τοῖς ἐν δεσμοῖς, Ἐξέλθετε, to the priſoners, Go forth, chap. 49. 9. And a third time, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to thoſe that are bound, chap. 61. 1. 2. To this effect are all theſe places interpreted by St Jerom, Theodoret, and Procopius upon Iſaiah, viz. of thoſe Gentiles who were bound in the chain of their ſins, and captivated by Satan. Accordingly Lactantius, having cited the words extant, chap. 42. 7. ſaith "Cum igitur nos "antea tanquam cæci, et tanquam carcere ſtulti-"tiæ incluſi, ſederemus in tenebris, ignorantes "Deum et veritatem, illuminati ab eo ſumus, qui "nos teſtamento ſuo adoptavit et liberatos malis "vinculis, atque in lucem ſapientiæ productos, in "hereditatem regni cœleſtis aſcivit," lib. 4. cap. 20. Accordingly Philo (b) doth often repreſent men brought in bondage to their luſts, ὡς ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ κατειργμένην ψυχὴν ἔχοντος, as perſons whoſe ſouls are ſhut up in a priſon-houſe; and thoſe who have overcome their luſts and ſinful pleaſures, (c) ὥσπερ ἐξ εἱρκτῆς προεστηλυθότων, καὶ δεσμοῖς οἷς ἐπεσφίγγοντο διαφυμένων, as perſons who are come out of priſon, and have put off their chains: adding, That God promiſeth liberty to the ſouls that ſeek to him for it, (d) ὁ μόνον λύσιν δεσμῶν καὶ ἔξοδον ἐκ τῆς περιφρεχμένης εἱρκτῆς παρασχόμενος, "not "only affording them freedom from their bonds, "and an exit from the priſon in which they were "kept; but giving them proviſions for their jour-"ney, and ſafe conduct."

Now the antediluvians, who lived about the time of Noah, were ἐν φυλακῇ, in priſon, upon a double account: 1. By reaſon of their bondage to ſin; for then all fleſh had corrupted their way, their wickedneſs was great upon the earth, and every imagination of their heart was to do evil, and that continually, Gen. 6. 5. 6. 13. And, 2*dly*, They were in priſon, or ἐν φυλακῇ, "as having from God received the ſen-"tence of deſtruction, if they repented not within "an hundred and twenty years," according to theſe words, My Spirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man, for that he is fleſh; yet his days ſhall be an hundred and twenty years, Gen. 6. 3.; i. e. ſo long will I expect his reformation before I bring the flood upon them. Thus the long-ſuffering of God waited for them in the days of Noah, expecting their repentance, and keeping them, as it were, in priſon for the day of ſlaughter, if they did not repent. During this time, and before, God ſent unto them his prophets, denouncing by his Spirit his judgments againſt the wicked: for to them Enoch, the ſeventh prophet from Adam, propheſied, ſaying, The Lord cometh with his thouſands of angels to do judgment againſt all, and to reprove all the ungodly concerning all their ungodly works which they had wickedly committed, and concerning all their hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners had ſpoken againſt him, Jude ver. 14. 15. And he ſent alſo Noah to them, a preacher of righteouſneſs, 1 Pet. 2. 5. who by preparing an ark before them for his own preſervation, in obedience to the oracle delivered to him, condemned the old world, Heb. 11. 7. Thus did Chriſt by his Spirit preach to them in the days of Noah: and therefore the antediluvian age is even by the Jews ſtyled "the age "of the Holy Ghoſt;" according to thoſe words, My ſpirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man; that is, ſay Ainſworth and the Biſhop of Ely, My Spirit in my prophets, Enoch and Noah, ſhall not be always chiding and reproving, and thereby endeavouring to bring men to repentance, but ſhall proceed to puniſh them. Now, this puniſhment being the drowning of the old world, their ſpirits have been ever ſince kept in priſon, or reſerved in chains of darkneſs, to the judgment of the great day: for, by the conſent of the Jewiſh nation, (e) "The generation "of the old world have no portion in the world "to come, neither ſhall they ſtand up in judgment;" for it is ſaid, My ſpirit ſhall not always judge with man. The phraſe, "My Spirit," ſaith Dr Fuller, "is never uſed of any other but the Spirit of God, "and therefore muſt here be interpreted of the ſame "Spirit."

Now, from that time to our Saviour's advent, God ſent no prophet to the whole Heathen world, no perſon with commiſſion to preach to all nations, or teach the goſpel to every creature, but ſuffered them to walk in their own ways, Acts 14. 16. whence they are ſaid to have been diſobedient only once of old time, in the days of Noah.

Ver. 19. By which he preached to the ſpirits in priſon.] Hence Mr Dodwell concludes, that our Saviour, after his death, did, in the interval betwixt that and his reſurrection, preach to the ſeparated ſouls in Hades. But to this the Reverend Biſhop Pearſon anſwers:

1. That thoſe words cannot prove this aſſertion, unleſs it were certain, that by the word ſpirit we were to underſtand the ſoul of Chriſt, whereas indeed the ſpirit by which he is ſaid to preach, was not the ſoul of Chriſt, but that ſpirit by which he was quickened; as is evident from the connection of the words thus, He was quickened by that spirit, ἐν ᾧ, by which he went and preached to the spirits in prison; that is, by the eternal Spirit of God, who is the author of the resurrection.

2. He adds, that the persons to whom he preached by the Spirit, were only such as were disobedient in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing, ver. 20. i. e. those who were disobedient before the flood, as were the antediluvians, all that time that the long-sufferance of God waited on them, and consequently so long as God gave them time for repentance, which was 120 years, striving then with them for that end by his Spirit in the prophets Enoch and Noah, but adding, that his Spirit should not always strive with them. In vain then, saith he, are we taught to understand St Peter of the promulgation of the gospel to the Jews or Gentiles then in Hades, since the words so evidently relate to the long-suffering of God to men, then living in the days of Noah.

Ver. 21. [1] Ἐπερώτημα, the answer of a good conscience.] Therefore, say the Anabaptists, baptism cannot be salutary to those infants who cannot make this answer of a good conscience. To this I answer, That St Paul also saith, that the true circumcision before God, is not the outward circumcision of the flesh, but the internal circumcision of the heart and spirit, Rom. 2. 29. But will any one hence argue, That the Jewish infants, for want of this, were not to be admitted into covenant with God by circumcision? And yet the argument is plainly parallel: the answer of a good conscience is required, that the baptism may be salutary; therefore they only are to be baptized who can make this answer: and the inward circumcision of the heart is required as the only acceptable circumcision in the sight of God: therefore they only are to be circumcised who have this inward circumcision of the heart. The Jews did not admit proselytes to circumcision, without this answer of a good conscience; but yet they admitted their infants without any such thing: why therefore may we not allow the Christian church, in the administration of baptism, to observe the same custom in admitting the children of their proselytes to baptism, as they admitted them both to circumcision and baptism?

Ibid. Δι' ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.] Who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, Rom. 4. 25.; and hath by his resurrection begotten us to a lively hope of an inheritance incorruptible, 1 Pet. 1. 3. 4. is risen as the first-fruits of them that sleep, 1 Cor. 15. 20. and so hath assured us that they who are Christ's shall also be raised by him to eternal life, ver. 23. 2 Cor. 4. 14. 1 Thess. 4. 14. and who being risen, is now in heaven promoting our salvation, ver. 22. and preparing mansions for us, John 14. 2.

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. FOrasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind, (or resolution, to be conformed to him in his sufferings, as being buried with him in baptism, Rom. 6. 4. and so planted together with him in the likeness of his death, ver. 5. the old man being crucified with him, that the body of sin might be abolished, that henceforth we might not serve sin): for he that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin;

2. (Insomuch) that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh, (in obedience) to the lusts of men, (ignorant of the truth, 1 Pet. 1. 14.), but to the will of God, (Rom. 6. 10. 11.)

3. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, (fleshly) lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquettings, and [a] abominable idolatries:

4. Wherein they think it strange (Gr. wonder) that you run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

5. Who shall give (an) account (of these sins against nature) to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

6. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also [b] to them that are dead, (i. e. to the Gentile world, dead in trespasses and sins), that they might be judged (might judge, condemn, and oppose their former life, led) according to men (not enlightened by the gospel) in the flesh, but (and might) live according to God in the spirit.

7. But the [c] end of all things (belonging to the Jewish state, mentioned Matth. 24. 6. Mark 13. 7. Luke 21. 9.) is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer, (according to our Lord's advice in that case, Luke 21. 34. 36.)

8. And above things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins, (which you may have been guilty of in the time of your enmity to Christ, and his servants; or those manifold infirmities you may have committed, in building hay and stubble on the foundation, to your own great hazard, 1 Cor. 3. 12. 15.: or, it covers the sins of others, preventing them by patience, not taking notice of them when committed, and concealing them from

from others: to this ſenſe the words of the wiſe man lead, Prov. 10. 12.)

9. Uſe hoſpitality one to another without grudging, (or murmuring that you beſtow your charity on them who are not of your nation, or are not circumciſed, and obedient to the law, as you think yourſelves obliged to be.)

10. As every man hath received [a] the gift (of the Spirit), even ſo (let him) miniſter the ſame one to another, as (becomes) good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God (to do.)

11. If any man ſpeak, (i. e. teach), let him ſpeak as (he is inſtructed from) the oracles of God; if any man miniſter (as a deacon), let him do it as of the ability that God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt; to whom be praiſe and dominion (aſcribed) for ever and ever. Amen.

12. Beloved, think it not ſtrange concerning the fiery trial, which is (come) to try you, (Gr. wonder not at the burning that is among you, and is befallen you for trial), as though ſome ſtrange (and unexpected) thing (had) happened to you; (this being only that which was foretold by us, 1 Theſſ. 3. 4. to which you were appointed, and to which you were called, 1 Pet. 2. 21.):

13. But rejoice (in it rather), inaſmuch as you are (thus made) [c] partakers of (ſufferings reſembling) Chriſt's ſufferings; that (ſo) when his glory ſhall be revealed, ye may (reſembling him then in glory, as you do now in ſufferings, Rom. 8. 17. 2 Tim. 2. 11. 12. &c.) be glad alſo with exceeding joy.

14. (And) if (it ſo happen that) ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, happy are ye, (in ſuch ſufferings); for the [f] Spirit of Glory, and of God, reſts upon you: (ſo that though) on their part (who are unbelievers) he (i. e. Chriſt) is evil ſpoken of, but (Gr. yet) on your part he is glorified.

15. But let (eſpecial care be taken that) none of you ſuffer [z] as a murtherer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a buſy-body in other mens matters.

16. Yet if any man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, (i. e. only on that account), let him not be aſhamed, but let him [b] glorify God on this behalf.

17. For the time is come that judgment muſt (according to our Lord's prediction, Matth. 24. 21. 22. Mark 13. 13. Luke 21. 16. 17.) begin at the houſe of God: and if it firſt begin at us (believing Jews), what ſhall be the [i] end of them that obey not the goſpel of God?

18. And if (ſome of) the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, (i. e. preſerved from this burning, ver. 12. being ſaved, yet ſo as by fire, 1 Cor. 3. 15.), where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner appear? (in ſafety from thoſe dreadful judgments which are coming on the Jewiſh nation, Prov. 11. 31.)

19. Wherefore (ſeeing the ſufferings of Chriſtians then will be ſo little, in compariſon of thoſe which ſhall befal the unbelievers, ver. 17. 18. ſeeing the Spirit of glory and power ſhall ſupport and comfort them under thoſe ſufferings, ver. 14. and Chriſt hath promiſed them protection in that dreadful day, and ſaid, He that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved, Matth. 24. 12. 13.), let them that ſuffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their ſouls (i. e. their lives) to him, in well-doing, as to a faithful Creator, (who being their Creator, muſt be able to deliver them; and being faithful, will not ſuffer them to be tempted above what they are able, 1 Cor. 10. 13.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verſe 3. [a] Θεμίτοις εἰδωλολατρείαις, abominable idolatries:] i. e. In idolatries joined with divers abominations, (i. e. with drunkenneſs, uncleanneſs, unnatural cruelties to their own children, homicide.)

Note here, That this is an evidence, that this epiſtle was directed not only to the Jewiſh nation, but to the Gentile converts.

Ver. 6. [b] For explication of thoſe words, note,

1. That οἱ νεκροὶ, the dead, in ſcripture doth often ſignify, not thoſe who in a natural ſenſe are dead by diſſolution of the ſoul and body, but thoſe who are ſpiritually ſo, as being alienated from the life of God, and dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; as when the apoſtle ſaith, The widow that liveth in pleaſure, is dead whilſt ſhe liveth, 1 Tim. 5. 6. And Chriſt unto the church of Sardis, Thou haſt a name to live, and art dead, Rev. 3. 1. And when he ſpeaks to one of his diſciples thus, Follow thou me, and let the dead bury their dead, Matth. 8. 22. This is a phraſe ſo common with the Jews, that, as Maimonides (f) informs us, they proverbially ſay, Impii etiam viventes vocantur mortui, The wicked are dead even while they are alive: for he, ſaith Philo (g), "who lives a life of ſin, τέθνηκε τὸν εὐδαίμονα, "is dead, as to a life of happineſs;" his ſoul is dead, and even buried in his luſts and paſſions. And becauſe the whole Gentile world lay more eſpecially under theſe moſt unhappy circumſtances, whence the apoſtle ſtyles them ſinners of the Gentiles, Gal. 2. 15. it was proverbially ſaid by the Jewiſh doctors, Populi terrarum, i. e. Ethnici, non vivunt, (f) More Nevoch. lib. 1. (g) Leg. alleg. l. 1. p. 45. quod deter. potior. p. 127.

vivunt, The Heathens do not live; and they in scripture are more peculiarly intended by that phrase. Hence the apostle saith to the Ephesians and Colossians, Eph. 2. 1. Col. 2. 13. that they were νεκροὶ τοῖς ἁμαρτήμασι, dead in trespasses and sins; and brings in God thus speaking to the Gentiles, Awake thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life, Eph. 5. 14.

2. The ends for which this gospel was revealed to these Gentiles, thus spiritually dead, and buried in sensuality, were these:

1. Ἵνα κριθῶσι κατ' ἀνθρώπους σαρκὶ, That they might condemn, might strive against, might mortify those sensual desires, and carnal appetites, which they indulged to whilst they lived, κατ' ἀνθρώπους, as natural men, wanting the knowledge of God's will, and the assistance of his grace and Spirit. This I conceive to be the genuine import of the Greek: for, 1. The word flesh being here set in opposition to the Spirit, not of man, but God, or at the least to the renewed spirit of man, cannot be reasonably thought to signify that fleshly body which we bear about us, but rather that sinful flesh which lusts against the spirit, Gal. 5. 17. that law of our members which wars against the law of our minds, Rom. 7. 23. that φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, or fleshly wisdom, which is not subject to the law of God, Rom. 8. 7.

This being so, κριθῆναι τῇ σαρκὶ, cannot be truly rendered, to be condemned, judged, and punished in the flesh, that is, the body, but to strive with, to mortify, and subdue the flesh, with its affections and lusts; which is the common import of the word κριθῆναι, both in the Septuagint, and in the New Testament: so Job 9. 3. Ἐὰν βούληται κριθῆναι αὐτῷ, if he will contend with God, he cannot answer him one of a thousand. And chap. 13. 19. Τίς ἐστιν ὁ κριθησόμενος, Who is he that contendeth with me? Jer. 43. 26. Put me in remembrance, κριθῶμεν, and let us plead together, chap. 58. He is near that justifieth me; Τίς ὁ κρινόμενός μοι; Who is he that contendeth with me? And chap. 66. 16. Ἐν τῷ πυρὶ κριθήσεται ὁ Κύριος, By fire will the Lord plead with all flesh, Hos. 2. 22. Κρίθητε πρὸς τὴν μητέρα ὑμῶν, κρίθητε, Plead with your mother, plead. And, Mic. 6. 1. Arise, κρίθητι πρὸς τὰ ὄρη, contend against the mountains. So also, Matth. 5. 40. Θέλοντί σοι κριθῆναι, is, To him that will contend with thee; and Jude, ver. 9. τῷ διαβόλῳ διακρινόμενος, is, contending with the devil. See also Judg. 21. 22. Jer. 2. 9. And this, I think, sufficient to justify the rendering these words actively, without referring to Glassius's canon, (l. 3. tr. 3. can. 24.), that verbs passive sometimes signify actively.

Note, 3. That the phrase κατ' ἄνθρωπον, in the New Testament, doth always signify to live, speak, or act, after the manner of mere natural men, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, or not assisted by his Spirit: as in those passages of the apostle Paul, Speak I these things κατ' ἄνθρωπον, according to the dictates of mere human wisdom? Saith not the law the same also? 1 Cor. 9. 8. My doctrine is not κατ' ἄνθρωπον, the product of man's wisdom, but I received it from the revelation of Christ Jesus, Gal. 1. 11. Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak what men would from the mere strength of reason argue, Rom. 3. 5. And again, Κατ' ἄνθρωπον λέγω, I speak what is acknowledged among men, that a man's testament is accounted sacred, and no man addeth to it, or taketh from it, Gal. 3. 15. If I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, κατ' ἄνθρωπον, after the Heathen manner, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? 1 Cor. 15. 32. And lastly, Whereas there are contentions among you, are ye not carnal, and walk κατ' ἄνθρωπον, as natural men, 1 Cor. 3. 3. not as men acted by the Spirit?

So that κριθῆναι καθ' ἄνθρωπον σαρκὶ, is, to condemn their former life led as natural men, or as mere Heathens, in the flesh, or to strive against that flesh which they indulged to in their Heathen state; and to live unto God in the spirit, which is the second end for which the gospel was preached unto the Gentiles, is, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, to live according to the will and the example of a holy God.

To this interpretation of this text, the context plainly seems to lead; for the apostle's argument runs thus: Christ having suffered for us in the flesh, it doth become us also, in a spiritual sense, to suffer in the flesh, by the mortification of our fleshly lusts; that though we still live in the flesh, we may not henceforth live unto the lusts of men, but to the will of God, ver. 2. I say, the Christians must no longer live after the will of the Gentiles in lasciviousness, lusts, &c. ver. 3. for which things Heathens will be obnoxious to God's just displeasure, at the great day of their accounts; since for this cause the gospel hath been preached unto them, that they might be engaged by it to condemn, and strive against that fleshly conversation, in which they lived formerly, according to the lusts of men, not yet acquainted with the mind of God, and might henceforth live according to God in the spirit.

Ibid. For this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead, that they being judged according to men in the flesh, might live unto God in the spirit.] That this text can have no relation to the preaching of the apostles to the dead Gentiles in hades, is evident,

Because the apostle saith this whilst St Paul, St John, and himself were living, and speaks of it as a thing already past, saying, εὐαγγελίσθη, the gospel hath been preached to them, not that it shall be preached to them when dead.

Ver. 7. Τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε, The end of all things is at hand. This phrase, and the advice upon it, so exactly ly parallel to what our Lord had ſpoken, will not ſuffer us to doubt that the apoſtle is here ſpeaking, not of the end of the world, or of all things in general, which was not then, and ſeems not yet to be at hand, but only of the end of the Jewiſh church and ſtate, mentioned in the inquiry of the apoſtles, thus, Tell us when πάντα ταῦτα, all theſe things ſhall be finiſhed? Mark 13. 14. And in our Saviour's anſwer, thus, This generation ſhall not paſs away, ἕως ἂν πάντα γένηται, till all things be fulfilled, Luke 21. 32. that is, πάντα ταῦτα, all theſe things, Matth. 24. 34. Mark 13. 30. And it is the obſervation of interpreters upon theſe words, τοῖς πᾶσι γέγονα τὰ πάντα, I became all things to all men, 1 Cor. 9. 22. and, πάντα μοι ἔξεστιν, all things are lawful for me, chap. 10. 23. that the word πάντα muſt be reſtrained to the ſubject-matter.

Ver. 10. [d] Χάρισμα, The gift.] That the gift ſhould here ſignify wealth, I cannot think; for though χάρις ſometimes bears that ſenſe, yet χάρισμα is never uſed to ſignify wealth, but hath always relation to the ſpiritual gifts vouchſafed then to the church of Chriſt. 2. Becauſe the ſpeaking as the oracles of God, ſeems plainly to be the ſame with propheſying according to the analogy of faith, mentioned, Rom. 12. 6. and the miniſtering here, with the διακονία there, both which are mentioned as ſpiritual gifts according to the grace given to them: ſee note there, and on the helps mentioned, 1 Cor. 12. 27.

Ver. 13. [e] Τοῖς τῦ Χριστῦ παθήμασιν, are partakers of Chriſt's ſufferings.] Becauſe he looks upon the ſufferings of his members as his own, Acts 9. 4. Col. 1. 14.

Ver. 14. Ver. 15. CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. THE [a] elders which are among you I exhort, who am alſo an elder, and a witneſs of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo (ſhall be) [b] a partaker of the glory which ſhall be revealed:

2. Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking (upon you) the overſight thereof, [c] not by conſtraint, but willingly; [d] not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind;

3. [e] Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being enſamples to the flock.

4. And when the chief Shepherd ſhall appear, ye ſhall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away, (and ſo receive a full and better reward of your labours, than others aim at.)

5. Likewiſe ye younger, ſubmit yourſelves unto the elder, (or aged): yea, all of you be ſubject one to another, (i. e. be as ready to do kind offices to others, as if ye were ſubject to them; ſee note on Phil. 2. 3.), and [f] be clothed with humility: for God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace unto the humble.

6. [g] Humble yourſelves therefore under the mighty hand of God, (now coming upon you, chap. 4. 17.), that he may exalt you in due time:

7. Caſting all your care upon him, (and committing yourſelves to the conduct of his all-wiſe providence, chap. 4. 19.), for he careth for you.

8. Be ſober, be vigilant; becauſe your adverſary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about ſeeking whom he may devour; (and, by his perſecutions, tempt to an apoſtaſy from the faith, 1 Theſſ. 3. 5. Rev. 2. 10.)

9. Whom

9. Whom resist stedfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions (which you now endure) are accomplished in your Christian brethren that are in the world. (See James 4. 7.)

10. But (and) the God of all grace, who hath called us to his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect (in patience), stablish, strengthen, settle you.

11. To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12. By Silvanus a faithful brother unto you (ᵇ as I suppose) I have written briefly, exhorting and testifying, that this is the true grace of God in which you (now) stand.

13. The church that is at (Rome, figuratively called) ⁱ Babylon elected together with you, saluteth you, and so doth Marcus my son, (i. e. who, as a son with his father, hath served me in the gospel, Phil. 2. 22.)

14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verse 1. ᵃ Πρεσβυτέρους τοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν, the elders that are among you:] That is, the bishops, saith Dr Hammond here, and wheresoever the word occurs in the New Testament; for the order of presbyters was not yet in being, but only afterwards appointed by St John: for that the apostle is here speaking of elders, not by age, but office, appeareth by his exhortation directed to them, to feed the flock committed to their charge, ver. 2. But this notion seems not well consistent with what others have discoursed upon this subject. For,

1. They who make the bishop, priest or elder, and deacon, to be appointed, as answering to the high priest, the priest, and Levites, must suppose that all these three orders were at first appointed, especially in the church of Jerusalem, as being derived from their platform. And so must all those learned men, who say the church was modelled after the manner of the Jewish synagogue; for, as to that, the parallel must run between the chief of the synagogue, the elders, and their ministerial officers, and the bishops, priests or elders, and the deacons. And if the middle order had been wanting so long as is supposed, the government of the church would not have been formed after that platform; which, as Epiphanius (h) and the Jews inform us, had these several offices in it. The same may be said of those who make the elders or presbyters to be answerable to the seventy, appointed by Christ as inferior officers under the apostles, and make this an argument of an inequality betwixt bishops and presbyters, established in the church by Christ.

2. Hence it must necessarily follow, that not only in the times, but even in the writings of the apostles, the names of presbyters and bishops were so far confounded, that a presbyter, in their style, did always signify one that was properly a bishop; which yet the learned Bishop Pearson (i) seems not to allow.

3. This seems to make the work and office of a bishop too great to be discharged by a single person, especially in such great churches as that of Jerusalem, where there were many myriads of believing Jews, Acts 21. 20. For it was his office, saith that Reverend person, to be the teacher of the whole flock committed to him, Acts 20. 28. Ye that are bishops of the several churches of Asia, look to the churches committed to your trust, to rule and order all the faithful Christians under you; so the paraphrase. See the paraphrase and note on Heb. 13. 7. 17. where he saith, That to teach, exhort, confirm, and impose hands were all the bishop's office in Judea. He was to exercise the whole discipline of the church, by hearing all the ecclesiastical causes, inflicting censures, and receiving penitents; (see the paraphrase and note on Titus 3. 10.). He was to take the principal care of the poor, to receive, and distribute to them the church's stock; so here: The supreme trust and charge of that, saith he, being always reserved to the apostles and bishops of the church. Note F. on 1 Cor. 12. 28. He was to visit the sick, and pray with them; that being, saith he, one branch of the office of bishops; note on James 5. 14. And how one bishop could perform all this to a church consisting of many myriads of persons, it is not easy to conceive. I therefore think it better to admit of the ordinary acceptation of the word presbyter here; that is, to think they also may be included in the term.

Ibid. ᵇ Κοινωνὸς δόξης, and also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed:] i. e. saith one, present at the discourse, concerning the glory that should be consequent to his death, the remarkable destruction of his crucifiers, and the deliverance of his faithful disciples. But, 1. It is certain, that the ſcripture mentions nothing of any ſuch diſcourſe; but only that Moſes and Elias then ſpake of his deceaſe which he was to accompliſh at Jeruſalem, Luke 9. 31. And though Peter was then preſent, he heard not a word of that diſcourſe; being then faſt aſleep, ver. 32. This glory therefore is doubtleſs the glory which we ſhall enjoy at the reſurrection, or the redemption of our bodies from corruption, Rom. 8. 18. 23. ſtyled, the glory of God, Rom. 5. 2. the glory we ſhall enjoy when Chriſt appears, Col. 3. 4. when our vile bodies ſhall be made like unto Chriſt's glorious body, Phil. 3. 21. and ſhall be raiſed up in glory, 1 Cor. 15. 43. eternal glory, ver. 10. this being that we ſhall enjoy at the revelation of Chriſt Jeſus, ver. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 7. 13. chap. 4. 13. Of this St Peter was a partaker then in the promiſe, and in the earneſt of it, the firſt-fruits of the Spirit.

Ver. 2. [c] Not by conſtraint, but willingly; Μὴ ἀναγκαστῶς, ἀλλ' ἑκουσίως.] Not as it were conſtrained to it by the dread of what you may ſuffer, the wo impendent if you do not perform this office; but voluntarily, and as a free-will-offering to that God who hath loved you ſo much, and from a ready mind to ſerve the intereſts of ſouls; as in thoſe words of St Paul, Ἀνάγκη, A neceſſity is laid upon me, and wo unto me, if I preach not the goſpel; but if ἑκὼν, willingly I do this, I have a reward, 1 Cor. 9. 16. 17.

Ibid. [d] Μηδὲ αἰσχροκερδῶς, not for filthy lucre.] As did the falſe apoſtles, and Judaizers, teaching things they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake, Tit. 1. 11. thinking gain godlineſs, 1 Tim. 6. 5.

Ver. 3. [e] Μηδὲ ὡς κατακυριεύοντες τῶν κλήρων, Not as lords over God's heritage:] Or, as it might be rendered, of the poſſeſſions of the church. It was the cuſtom then of many, to ſell their heritages, and give the money to the governors and biſhops of the church, to be diſtributed to the uſe of poor Chriſtians: and theſe inheritances and moneys were ſtyled κλῆροι, both the ſcriptures, and the beſt Greek authors, uſing it for a patrimony or heritage obtained by lot, as the inheritance of the Jews was, Joſh. 12. 8. whence the word κλῆρος is ſo often uſed in this ſenſe through the books of Joſhua and Judges. And ſo the biſhops, to whoſe hands it was committed, are here required, not to act as if they were lords, but only as ſtewards of it; and ſo as to be examples to others, of freedom from avarice, and diligence in relieving the poor, ſick, and needy. But ſeeing what is here κλήρους, is in the ſame ſentence ſtyled τὸ ποίμνιον, the flock of God, the common interpretation of the word for heritage, ſeems to be eſtabliſhed by this latter word.

Ver. 5. [f] Ἐγκομβώσασθε, Be ye clothed with humility.] The word hath two ſignifications. It ſignifies a frock put over the reſt of our cloaths; and ſo imports, that this humility ſhould be viſible in us, above all other Chriſtian virtues, in our whole converſation, our words and actions. 2. It ſignifies a belt which girts about our garments; and ſo imports we ſhould tie it faſt unto us, and have thoſe conſiderations always fixed upon our ſpirits, which may ſtill keep us in an humble frame of ſoul.

Ver. 6. [g] Ταπεινώθητε.] i. e. Submit with patience to the chaſtiſements ſent by his powerful hand upon you; that being truly ſenſible of the divine diſpleaſure, being afflicted, and mourning for thoſe ſins which brought theſe evils down upon you, and turning unto him that ſmites you, he may draw nigh to you, and in due ſeaſon work for you a deliverance from this afflicted ſtate. (See this in the place parallel to this, James 4. 7. 10.)

Ver. 12. [h] Ὡς λογίζω, as I ſuppoſe.] From theſe, and many like expreſſions uſed in the epiſtles of the apoſtles, it is evident, that the divine afflatus by which the Holy Ghoſt aſſiſted them to write, did not dictate the very words, but only preſided over them to preſerve them from error in writing; ſeeing the Holy Ghoſt could not ſay, As I ſuppoſe; nor could St Peter have uſed this phraſe, if the divine illumination had influenced and inſtructed him in this matter.

Ver. 13. [i] Ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι, the church in Babylon.] That Babylon is figuratively here put for Rome, is an opinion ſo early delivered by Papias (k), and which afterwards ſo generally obtained, (as we learn from Euſebius, St Jerom (l), and Oecumenius, on this place), that I ſubſcribe to the note at the end of this epiſtle, that ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, it was written from Rome, ſtyled alſo Babylon by the (m) author to the Revelations, chap. 17. and 18. For the apoſtle muſt, at the writing of it, be at Rome, figuratively, or at ſome city, properly called Babylon: now, as it is uncertain whether St Peter ever was at Babylon in Chaldea, or in Egypt, and improbable that he ever made any conſiderable ſtay there; ſo is it very improbable he ſhould do it ſo near his end. At Rome and Antioch, where he confeſſedly reſided, church-hiſtory is copious in giving an account of his ſucceſſors in thoſe ſees: but who can ſhew any thing of this nature, with reference to either of theſe Babylons? As to the reaſon why Rome is covertly thus repreſented by the name of Babylon, I cannot think, with Oecumenius, it was ſo ſtyled διὰ τὸ ἐπιφανὲς, becauſe advanced to as great eminency as Babylon ever had been; for then why ſhould St Peter have diſguiſed the matter? I rather think it was ſo ſtyled, either becauſe it did reſemble that city in its idolatries, and oppoſition to the church of God; or becauſe it was to be deſtroyed for ever, as the prophets had foretold of Babylon; which though the (n) primitive Chriſtians did believe, it was their wiſdom to conceal. Thus St Jerom (o) ſaith, That the prophet Jeremiah covertly ſpake of Babylon, under the name of Seſack, that he might not incenſe the Babylonians againſt him, who beſieged Jeruſalem; and that the apoſtle ſpeaks of the Roman empire under that name of τὸ κατέχον, that which letteth, that he might not provoke them to perſecute the Chriſtians for ſpeaking of the Roman empire, which was by them eſteemed (f) Imperium ſine fine, or eternal.

Second EPISTLE of St PETER.

ΠΕ'ΤΡΟΥ τῦ ἀποστόλε ἐπιστολὴ καθολικὴ δευτέρα, the ſecond catholic epiſtle of St Peter.] That this epiſtle alſo was written by the apoſtle Peter, is evident beyond all exception, 1. From the inſcription of it, in which the writer ſtyles himſelf Simon Peter, a ſervant and apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, there being no other apoſtle of that name. Moreover, of this apoſtle it is particulary noted in the ſcripture, that he was Σίμων ὁ λεγόμενος Πέτρος, Simon called Peter, Matth. 4. 18. and 10. 2. Σίμων ὁ ἐπικαλούμενος Πέτρος, Simon which was ſirnamed Peter, Acts 10. 18. and 11. 13. He is ſtyled Simon Peter once by St Luke, chap. 5. 8. and by St John the evangeliſt ſeventeen times, chap. 1. 41. and 6. 8. 68. and 13. 6. 9. 24. 36. and 18. 10. 15. 25. and 20. 2. 6. and 21. 2. 3. 7. 11. 15. Whereas Symeon biſhop of Jeruſalem, to whom Grotius aſcribes the writing of this epiſtle, was neither Peter nor apoſtle. 2. From a concurrence of circumſtances in it relating to St Peter, and no other; as, 1. When he ſays, He ſhortly muſt put off this tabernacle, even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt had ſhewed him, chap. 1. 14. This well agrees to Simon Peter, to whom our Lord ſignified what death he ſhould die, John 21. 18. 19. And that this death ſhould befal him before his coming to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ver. 22. which was then at hand, when St Peter writ this. See note on 1 Pet. 4. 7. 2. He adds, That he was with him in the holy mount, when our Lord Jeſus was transfigured, and was an eye-witneſs of his majeſty, and heard thoſe words, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed, ver. 16. 17. 18. which he could hear only then, no ſuch words being ſpoken, John 12. 28. to which Grotius would refer this paſſage. Now, at our Lord's transfiguration, beſides St Peter, were only preſent the two ſons of Zebedee, James and John, neither of which were ever thought to be the author of this epiſtle. 3. This alſo may be gathered from theſe words, chap. 3. 1. 2. This ſecond epiſtle, beloved, I write unto you; in which I ſtir up your ſincere minds, by way of remembrance, ver. 2. That ye may be mindful of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour. Whence it is manifeſt, 1. That this epiſtle was writ by an apoſtle, and therefore not by Symeon biſhop of Jeruſalem. 2. That it was writ by an apoſtle, who had before directed an epiſtle to the ſame perſons. Now, though ſome of the ancients doubted whether this ſecond epiſtle were canonical, yet (a) they all owned, that it bore his name, and was aſcribed to him, and never, that we find, was aſcribed to any other apoſtle: we therefore have juſt reaſon to conclude, according to the title of it, that it was alſo the epiſtle of Simon Peter the apoſtle of our Lord, to whom both theſe epiſtles expreſsly are aſcribed by Origen (b); who alſo adds, that "Paul is called his brother, by "Peter the apoſtle," which he is only in this epiſtle. Being therefore written by an apoſtle aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt ſent down from heaven, 1 Pet. 1. 12. we cannot doubt of the authority of this epiſtle: for whereas Grotius, to avoid the ſtrength of this argument, imagines that this chapter contains a ſecond epiſtle; and that the firſt epiſtle referred to, ended at the cloſe of the ſecond chapter of that which is now called the Second epiſtle; he not only doth this without all authority of any ancient verſions or authors to countenance his opinion; but againſt the frame and the contexture of epiſtles, which uſually begin with an inſcription, which is not to be found in the third chapter.

As for the time when this epiſtle was endited, I lay down this as certain, againſt Grotius, from what hath been diſcourſed already, that it could not be written after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; for St Peter here ſaith, That he was ſhortly to put off his tabernacle, or, to die; whereas he was actually dead in the fourteenth year of Nero, that is, three years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus. But that it was written but a little before his death, may juſtly be concluded from his declaration, that he knew, either by revelation, or by our Lord's diſcourſe, that the time of his death (c) was ſuddenly to follow, or was nigh at hand.

Of the perſons to whom it was written, we are aſſured alſo from theſe words, This ſecond epiſtle, beloved, I write unto you; they being a demonſtration, that it was written to the very ſame perſons to whom the firſt had been directed, viz. to the converted Jews, diſperſed through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia, 1 Pet. 1. 1.

And laſtly, as for the occaſion of his writing, that plainly ſeems to have been double. 1. To arm the Jews converted, againſt the fiery trial which was then come upon them; and againſt that apoſtaſy from the faith, that turning away from the holy commandment, chap. 2. 21.; that falling from their own ſtedfaſtneſs, chap. 3. 17. to which they of that nation were ſo prone: and evident it is, that the chief deſign of the epiſtle to the Hebrews was to put a ſtop to it: and many paſſages in all the catholic epiſtles, not excepting the 2d and 3d epiſtles of St John, are evidently writ for the ſame purpoſe; and to warn them of, and to preſerve them from the deſtructive doctrines of thoſe Jewiſh ſolifidians, who held it unneceſſary to add unto their faith, virtue. 2. To arm them againſt thoſe impure Nicolaitans and Simonians, who turned the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs: of whom ſee the notes on the ſecond chapter. And, 3. Againſt thoſe ſcoffers at the promiſe of Chriſt's coming, as if it were a promiſe which never would be verified.

But then I am conſtrained to diſſent from the opinion of the Reverend and Judicious Dr Hammond, and Dr Lightfoot, who conceive, that the apoſtle doth not diſcourſe of our Lord's coming to the general judgment, in his 3d chapter, but only of his coming to execute his judgments on the Jews, by the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. For not to inſiſt upon this conſideration, that this opinion is wholly new, and contrary to the judgment of all the ancients, who own this epiſtle, and have occaſion to make mention of theſe words, they all agreeing in this with Oecumenius, that the apoſtle ſpeaketh, ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τοῦ αἰῶνος, of the end of the world; it is extremely evident,

1. From theſe very words, ver. 7. But the heavens and earth which now are, by the ſame word are kept in ſtore, reſerved to fire againſt the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. And ver. 10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat; the earth alſo, and the works that are therein, ſhall be burnt up. To interpret all theſe words, only of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, is to turn them into metaphor and allegory; whereas St Peter plainly ſays, That as the old world was deſtroyed by water, ſo ſhall the world that now is be deſtroyed by fire. "Here then," as one ſays truly, "is no room for "allegories, or allegorical expoſitions; for, as the "heavens and earth were deſtroyed by water, ſo are "they to be deſtroyed by fire: and if, in the firſt "place, you underſtand the natural material world, "you muſt alſo underſtand it in the ſecond; they "are both allegories, or neither."

2. Were the apoſtle ſpeaking of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem which happened thirty-ſeven years after the death of Chriſt, and was, according to our Lord's prediction, to fall out whilſt ſome of them whom he ſpake to were yet living, what need was there of ſaying, One day with the Lord is as a thouſand years, &c. when he was ſpeaking, it ſeems, of that which he knew was to happen before four years were expired? And laſtly, the ſolemn exhortation, Seeing then all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, what manner of perſons ought we to be, in all holy converſations and godlineſſes, looking for, and haſtening to the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that we may be found of him without ſpot and blameleſs? This, I ſay, ſounds too high for the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, in which they of Pontus and Galatia could not be much concerned; but it is an exhortation very proper for thoſe who had the lively idea of the conflagration of the world, and the tremendous judgment and perdition of ungodly men, then ſet before them.

There is, I confeſs, a middle opinion betwixt both theſe, which interprets the words of St Peter, in the 3d chapter, of the judgment of the great whore, or the Antichriſtian church, mentioned, Rev. 17. 1. after which is to follow the new heaven, and new earth, promiſed to the Jews, and to be accompliſhed in the calling of them to the Chriſtian faith, and the flowing in of all nations to them. Concerning which, note,

1. That the judgment, according to the predictions both of the prophets in the Old, and of St John in the New Teſtament, is to be executed upon her by fire. So Dan. 7. 11. The beaſt was ſlain, and his body deſtroyed, and given to the burning flame. And ver. 26. The judgment ſhall ſit, and they ſhall take away his dominion, to conſume and to deſtroy it to the end. Accordingly in the judgment of the whore, ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire; for ſtrong is the Lord that judgeth her, Rev. 17. chap. 18. 8. 9. 10.

Note, 2. That it is uſual with the prophets to repreſent God's judgments on the enemies of his church and people by the tragical expreſſions of burning up the earth, diſſolving the heavens. Thus of the deſtruction of Babylon, which name was writ upon the forehead of the great whore, God ſpeaks thus: Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel, and with fierce wrath, to lay the land deſolate: for the ſtars of heaven, and the conſtellations ſhall not give their light, and the ſun ſhall be darkened in his going forth, and the moon ſhall not give her light: and I will make the heavens to ſhake, (or move away), and the earth ſhall remove out of its place, Iſ. 13. 9. 10. 13. The indignation of the Lord againſt the Idumæans is repreſented in theſe dreadful words: The mountains ſhall be melted with their blood, and (d) all the hoſt of heaven ſhall be diſſolved, and the heavens ſhall be rolled together as a ſcroll, and all their hoſt ſhall fall down as a leaf falleth from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree. Of the deſtruction of Sennacherib and his people, God ſpeaketh thus: The heavens ſhall vaniſh away like ſmoke; the earth ſhall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein ſhall die in like manner, Iſ. 51. 6. See Deut. 32. 22. Jer. 4. 23. 24. Joel 2. 30. and 3. 15. Here then we ſee all the expreſſions uſed in the 3d chapter of St Peter, uſed alſo by the prophets, when they ſpeak of the deſolation of a nation and people, and eſpecially of the enemies of the church; which is ſufficient to evince, that the apoſtle being himſelf a Jew, and writing to thoſe Jews who were accuſtomed to theſe expreſſions, might thus ſet forth the great deſtruction of the beaſt, mentioned Revelations, chap. 17. and 18.; and by the new heavens and new earth, that glorious ſtate of the church, which was to enſue by the converſion of the Jewiſh nation, and the flowing in of all nations to them.

PARAPHRASE

Second EPISTLE of St PETER.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. SImon Peter, a ſervant and an apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt, (writing) to them that have obtained like precious faith with us [a] through the righteouſneſs of God, (by faith, Rom. 1. 17.), and (the ſufferings of) our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt;

2. (Wiſheth that) grace and peace (may) be multiplied to you, through the knowledge of God, and of Jeſus (Chriſt) our Lord,

3. According as (it hath been with us already; for) his divine power hath given to us all things that pertain to life and godlineſs, (or, to the life of godlineſs), through the knowledge of him that hath called us to (Gr. by) [b] glory and virtue:

4. [c] Whereby are given to us exceeding great and precious promiſes, that by theſe ye might be [d] partakers of the divine nature, having eſcaped the corruption which is in the world through luſt.

5. [e] And beſides this, (Gr. καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, and for this cauſe), giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue, (or courage in the profeſſion of it, and ſincerity in the practice of thoſe things this faith requires); and to virtue, (an exact) knowledge (of your duty);

6. And to knowledge, temperance, (in carefully abſtaining from thoſe ſenſual affections, and diſorderly paſſions, which obſtruct the performance of your duty); and to temperance, patience (under all the ſufferings which may affright you from it); and to patience, godlineſs, (that fear of God which will reſtrain you from ſin; that love of him which will conſtrain you to your duty; that conformity of will, which will cauſe your mind to approve of, your heart to affect, and chuſe what is according to his will, and your whole man to be exerciſing itſelf to godlineſs);

7. And to godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs, (i. e. fervent love to Chriſtians, as being children of our heavenly Father, and fellow-members of Chriſt's body); and to brotherly kindneſs, charity (to all men, as proceeding from the ſame ſtock, having the ſame nature, and being ſubject to the ſame neceſſities.)

8. For if theſe things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye ſhall neither be [f] barren (Gr. ſlothful), nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

9. But (on the other hand) he that lacketh theſe things, is [g] blind, and cannot ſee far off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old ſins, (by that baptiſm in which he being waſhed from the guilt of them, engaged to die to ſin, Rom. 6. 4.)

10. Wherefore (being called to this faith) the rather, brethren, give diligence (Gr. give the more diligence, by practiſing theſe things) [h] to make your calling and election ſure; (i. e. to ſecure to yourſelves the bleſſings of Chriſtianity to which God hath called you, and for which end he hath choſen you to be his people): for if you do theſe things, you ſhall never fall, (or miſcarry eternally):

11. For ſo an entrance ſhall be miniſtered to you abundantly, [i] into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

12. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always [k] in remembrance of theſe things, though you know them (before), and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth, (viz. that the practice of theſe Chriſtian virtues is neceſſary to the making your calling and election ſure, and to your entrance into Chriſt's heavenly kingdom.)

13. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle (of the body), to ſtir you up (to the performance of your duty), by putting you (ſtill) in remembrance (of theſe things):

14. Knowing that ſhortly I muſt put off this my tabernacle, (by martyrdom), even as our Lord Jeſus Chriſt [l] hath ſhewed me, (John 21. 18.)

15. Moreover, I will endeavour (by leaving theſe epiſtles deſigned for that end) that you may be able, after my deceaſe, [m] to have theſe things always in remembrance.

16. For we have not followed cunningly-deviſed fables, when we made known to you the power (given to our Lord Chriſt over all fleſh, that he might give eternal life to them that believe, John 17. 2.), and (the) coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, (to crown them with glory), but were eye-witneſſes of his majeſty.

17. For he received from God the Father, honour and glory, when there came ſuch a voice to him from the [n] excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed.

18. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

19. We have alſo [o] a more ſure word of prophecy; whereunto you do well that ye take heed, as to a light that ſhineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the [p] day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts:

20. Knowing this firſt, (as the foundation of all you learn from the prophetic writings), [q] that no prophecy of the ſcripture is of any private interpretation, (Gr. of their own incitation, motion, or the ſuggeſtion of their own private ſpirits.)

21. For prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἐν δικαιοσυνῃ τοῦ Θεοῦ, by the righteouſneſs of God.] That this phraſe ſignifies our juſtification through faith in the death and ſufferings of Chriſt, the meritorious cauſe of it, ſee the note on Rom. 1. 17. Or ſince the Hebrew word Tzedakah in the Old, and the Greek δικαιοσύνη, both in the Old and New Teſtament do often ſignify kindneſs and mercy, it may here alſo bear that ſenſe.

Ver. 3. [b] Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς, by glory and virtue;] i. e. who hath called us with a glorious calling, as being attended with the glorious effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, by reaſon of which the revelation of the goſpel is ſaid to be ἐν δόξῃ, or διὰ δόξης, in and with glory, 2 Cor. 3. 7. 11. and ſhewed his power, might, and virtue, by the miraculous operations with which it was confirmed. For though Mr le Clerc is poſitive, that ἀρετὴ no where ſignifies δύναμις, power, yet in Heſychius we read thus, ἀρετὴ θεία δύναμις, virtue, i. e. divine power, ἡ κατὰ πόλεμον δύναμις, ſtrength for war, fortitude, dexterity in wreſtling.

Ver. 4. [c] Δι' ὧν, by which.] If the reading of other manuſcripts, δι' ὃ, obtain, the ſenſe runs plain and eaſy, thus, By whom thus calling you, are given great and precious promiſes, Chriſt having brought life and immortality to light, 2 Tim. 1. 10. and eſtabliſhed the new covenant in better promiſes, Heb. 8. 6.: but if we retain the common reading, δι' ὧν, by which, the ſenſe ſeems to run thus: By which two, the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon us, as the earneſt of them, and his miraculous operations as the confirmation of them, and of that goſpel which contains them, are given to us great and precious promiſes; or rather, By which God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, mentioned, ver. 1. and ver. 3. are given great and precious promiſes, they being the promiſes made by God the Father, 2 Cor. 7. 1. and by the Son, 1 John 2. 25. and confirmed to us in and through Chriſt Jeſus, 2 Cor. 1. 20. 21.

Ibid. [d] Θείας φύσεως κοινωνοὶ, partakers of the divine nature.] Both Philo (a) and Joſephus repreſent them who had the gift of prophecy as having τὴν ψυχὴν θειάζεσθαι, a ſoul inſpired by the Deity, and by the Holy Spirit dwelling in them made divine. Thus Joſephus (b) ſaith of one Papius, renowned for his wiſdom and foreknowledge of things to come, that he did θείας μεταλαχεῖν φύσεως, partake of the divine nature.

Ver. 5. [e] Καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, and for this cauſe;] or, as other manuſcripts read, καὶ αὐτοὶ, ſo ye. Eſthius here probably conjectures, that the ſenſe hitherto is pendent, thus: As you have received from the gift of God, all things neceſſary to life and godlineſs, ſo do ye add, or, for this cauſe, add to your faith, virtue, &c.

Ver. 8.

Ver. 8. [f] Οὐκ ἀργοὺς, you will not be ſlothful,] or negligent, in the concerns of God's glory, and your ſoul's welfare; for ſloth proceeds from want of faith, or courage, or love; nor unfruitful, i. e. unprofitable to others; for that proceeds from want of brotherly kindneſs or charity.

Ver. 9. [g] Τυφλὸς ἐστι, he is blind,] for want of knowledge, and blinded by his paſſions and ſenſual affections, and cannot ſee to the end and deſign of Chriſtianity, and the rewards of faith and patience; nor conſiders he the obligations which lie upon him to depart from iniquity. The word μυωπάζων following is by our tranſlators rendered, one that cannot ſee afar off; agreeably to theſe words of Ariſtotle, they are ſaid μυωπάζειν, who from their birth are τὰ μὲν ἐγγὺς βλέποντες, τὰ δὲ ἐξ ἀποστάσεως οὐχ ὁρῶντες, men who can only ſee things near, not thoſe that are remote; and it is ordinary to ſay, that ſuch a one is blind, as being comparatively ſo, and as to many things: and to this ſenſe the following words, they cannot look back to their purgation of old, ſeem to lead; though the great Bochart ſaith, the word here ſignifies to cloſe the eyes againſt the light. Hieroz. l. 1. c. 4. p. 31. 32.

Ver. 10. [h] Βεβαίαν ὑμῶν κλῆσιν ποιεῖσθαι, to make your calling and election ſure.] Many manuſcripts, and many of the ancients add, διὰ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων, by good works; and this the text ſeems to require; for it immediately follows, If you do thoſe things, you ſhall never fall; plainly declaring, that the making of their calling and election ſure, depended on the doing thoſe works of virtue, temperance, patience, godlineſs, brotherly kindneſs, and charity, mentioned before, and ſo was only a conditional election, upon their perſeverance in a life of holineſs. And from the following words, He that doth theſe things, ſhall never fall, it plainly ſeems to follow, that even the elect, by their neglect to do theſe things, may fail of an entrance into this heavenly kingdom.

Ver. 11. [i] Εἰς τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν, into the everlaſting kingdom.] As ζωὴ αἰώνιος, is everlaſting life, Luke 10. 25. αἰώνιος κληρονομία, an everlaſting inheritance, Heb. 9. 15. αἰώνιοι σκηναὶ, everlaſting tabernacles, Luke 16. 9. οἰκία αἰώνιος, an everlaſting houſe, 2 Cor. 5. 1. δόξα αἰώνιος, everlaſting glory, 2 Tim. 2. 10. σωτηρία αἰώνιος, everlaſting ſalvation, Heb. 5. 9. ſo αἰώνιος βασιλεία is doubtleſs the everlaſting kingdom prepared for Chriſt's faithful ſervants, and not his vindictive kingdom over the Jews; nor yet the kingdom of ſaints mentioned by Daniel, as never to give place to any other kingdom, they to whom the apoſtle writ being to die long before the coming of that kingdom.

Ver. 12. [k] Ἐν ὑπομνήσει, in remembrance.] For could we be eſtabliſhed in the belief of heavenly things, and have them ſtill in remembrance, we ſhould not flag in the performance of our duty. Moreover, from theſe verſes, and from chap. 3. it ſeems reaſonable to conceive, that they who were ſo concerned to write thoſe things the Chriſtians had already heard, and in which they were eſtabliſhed, would not neglect to write whatever elſe was neceſſary to be known to ſalvation.

Ver. 14. [l] Ἐδήλωσέ μοι, hath ſhewed me.] Declaring to him in a viſion, ſay Hegeſippus (c), and St Ambroſe (d), that he muſt go again to Rome to be crucified. Thus St Polycarp (e), in a viſion, ſaw his pillow, or night-cap burning with fire, a little before he was conſumed by the flames; and St Cyprian, by a viſion, was admoniſhed of his death, and of the kind of martyrdom he was to ſuffer. Pontius in vita Cypr. ed. Ox. p. 7.

Ver. 15. [m] Τὴν τούτων μνήμην ποιεῖσθαι, to make a remembrance of theſe things.] St Peter therefore was not of the opinion, that oral tradition was a better way than writing, to preſerve the memory of theſe things; and that without writing they might be able ſo to do. Accordingly Ignatius (f), adviſing the churches to ſtand faſt in the tradition of the apoſtles, thought it neceſſary, for the greater ſecurity, to commit them to writing; for, ſaith Origen (g), that "which is delivered only by mouth, quickly va-"niſheth, as having no certainty."

Ver. 17. [n] Ὑπὸ τῆς μεγαλοπρεποῦς δόξης, from the magnificent glory.] Some conſidering, that in all the three evangeliſts the tranſfiguration of our Lord is mentioned, after he had ſpoken of the coming of the Son of man in glory, or in the glory of the Father, think this tranſfiguration was an image of that glorious kingdom he was to erect at the calling of the Jews, and that St Peter here refers to this, when he ſaith, We made known to you the power and coming, or the illuſtrious coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; whence Moſes and Elias are here ſeen with him in glory, and, according to ſome manuſcripts, are ſaid to ſpeak of the δόξα, i. e. his glory, which was to be hereafter in Jeruſalem. But that glory being not yet come, to what purpoſe ſhould the apoſtle write to them of that age, to give all diligence to obtain an entrance into that kingdom? or why doth he ſo generally promiſe an entrance into it to them who were to die ſo long before, and were not at all, unleſs they died martyrs, to enter into it? nor was it to be an everlaſting, but only a millenary kingdom. Wherefore, for explication of the words, obſerve, concerning the transfiguration of our Lord, 1. That when he was transfigured, his face did ſhine as the ſun, and his garments were ſplendent, Matth. 17. 2.; and this, ſaith Nazianzen, God did, τὸ μέλλον μυσταγωγῶν, ſhewing what he was to be hereafter, and as an introduction to that glory in which he was to ſhine at the right hand of Majeſty in the heavens: for, to ſhine as the ſun, is a phraſe expreſſing ſomething belonging to celeſtial majeſty, Matth. 13. 43.; the white and ſplendid garments being alſo proper to kings and the royal miniſters of the heavenly court, Rev. 3. 4. And hence when Chriſt is repreſented as the firſt-born from the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth, to whom power and glory belonged, he appears in ſplendor, as the ſun ſhining in his power, Rev. 1. 14. 15. And this is the majeſty of Chriſt, of which St Peter, James, and John, were eye-witneſſes on the mount.

2. Of the teſtimony given to him, obſerve, 1. That it was, This is my beloved Son, i. e. this is he who is heir of all things, Heb. 1. 2. and is ſat down at the right hand of Majeſty and Glory, ver. 3.; and therefore this is made a proof of our Lord's reſurrection and exaltation to the higheſt glory, that the Father ſaid to him, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, Acts 13. 33. Heb. 1. 5. and 5. 5. This is he to whom the Father hath given to have life in himſelf, John 5. 26. and ſo to raiſe the dead, ver. 24. and give eternal life to them, John 17. 1. 2. Now, all this being comprehended in this teſtimony, ſhews the truth of what St Peter ſaid he had declared to them. Note, 2. That this voice was given from the magnificent glory, or bright cloud which then appeared, and was the conſtant ſymbol of the divine preſence; ſee note on Philip. 2. 6.; and ſo aſſured them this teſtimony was given by the God of truth. Note, 3. That this teſtimony is delivered in the very words ſpoken of that prophet which ſhould come after Moſes, viz. A prophet will the Lord your God raiſe unto you, like to me, to him ſhall ye hearken, Deut. 18. 15. and ſo aſſured them, that this beloved Son was that prophet of whom Moſes ſpake. Note, laſtly, That theſe words were directed, not to Chriſt, but to thoſe that attended him, and bade them obſerve, that God the Father here owned him as his only Son, in whom he is well pleaſed, and as the only Prophet whom they ought to hearken to.

Ver. 19. ° Βεβαιότερον τὸν προφητικὸν λόγον, a more ſure word of prophecy.] This is ſpoken in compariſon of the apoſtle's teſtimony of what he heard, which to the Jews was not ſo certain and convincing as was the record of their own prophets. Whence the apoſtles, both in diſputing with the unbelieving Jews, and writing to the believers among them, confirm their doctrines from the writings of the Old Teſtament.

Ibid. ᵖ Καὶ φωσφόρος ἀνατείλῃ, &c. and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts.] Some conſidering that Balaam propheſies of the Meſſiah as a ſtar that was to come out of Jacob; by which ſtar, ſay the three Targums, Bereſchith Rabba, R. Moſes Hadarſon, and R. Iſaac, is meant the Meſſiah, compared to a ſtar, becauſe of the ſplendor of his dominion and kingdom, and who is ſtyled by St John, ὁ ἀστὴρ λαμπρὸς, ὁ ἑῳθινὸς, the bright and morning ſtar, Rev. 22. 16. refer this to Chriſt's ſecond coming to convert the Jews, and ſet up the kingdom of the ſaints, Dan. 7. 27. ſaying, that the apoſtle compares the intermediate time in which antichriſt was to reign, to the night and darkneſs, according as the ſcripture uſeth to expreſs the times of ignorance and idolatry, Eph. 5. 8. 1 Theſſ. 5. 4.; ſee note on Rom. 13. 12.; and the time of Chriſt's advent to call all Iſrael, and to bring in with them the fulneſs of the Gentiles, to the light diſſipating that darkneſs; and doth here bid the Jewiſh nation to attend to the prophecies in the Old Teſtament, touching this glorious time, till it ſhould be accompliſhed upon them. But the apoſtle writes not here to the unbelieving Jews, who are to be the only ſubjects of that calling, but to them who had obtained like precious faith with him. Moreover, that the time from writing this epiſtle to the converſion of the Jews, which is not yet accompliſhed, ſhould be accounted as darkneſs, or a time in which the light or day appeared not, ſeems not ſuitable to that expreſſion of St Paul, The night is far ſpent, and the day is at hand; ſee note on Rom. 13. 12.: nor could he bid thoſe of that age to expect, till that day-ſtar ſhould ariſe in their hearts, which to this very day is not yet riſen. It therefore ſeems plain to me from theſe words, though Dr Hammond and others would interpret them to another ſenſe, that the apoſtle ſpeaketh this concerning ſome other light that was to enlighten and affect their hearts, and give them full aſſurance, that our Jeſus was the Son of God, the Prophet God had ſent into the world. Now, this was done by the internal gifts and illuminations of the Holy Spirit vouchſafed to believers; by which, ſaith the apoſtle Paul, the teſtimony of Chriſt, or, which the apoſtles gave of him, ἐβεβαιώθη ἐν ὑμῖν, was confirmed in, or, upon them, 1 Cor. 1. 6. by which God did βεβαιῶν ἡμᾶς σὺν ὑμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν, confirm both the apoſtles, and thoſe that believed, in the faith of Chriſt, 2 Cor. 1. 21. 22. and 5. 5. So that the import of the words ſeems to be this: Till you yourſelves have thoſe prophetic gifts, by which you may be able, from what you find in yourſelves, to know by the Spirit, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God,

1 Cor.

1 Cor. 12. 3. and have that unction of the Holy Ghoſt, by which you know all things, 1 John 2. 27. and have alſo the ſcriptures of the New Teſtament committed to you, which contain a more perfect light, Rom. 13. 14. and are endited alſo by the Holy Spirit ſent down from heaven, 1 Pet. 1. 12. Like to this is that expreſſion of Philo (h), "What reaſon is "in us, that is the ſun in the world, ἐπιδὴ φωσφορεῖ "ἑκάτερος, both being unto us a phoſphorus; the ſun "giving light to our ſenſes, and reaſon intellectual "rays to our conceptions: and when φῶς ἐπιλάμπει "τὸ θεῖον, the divine light ſhines upon us, that of "our reaſon ſets; and when that ſets, this ariſeth, "τῷ δὲ προφητικῷ γένει φιλεῖ τοῦτο συμβαίνειν, and ſo it was "with the prophets."

Ver. 20. ᵠ Ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως οὐ γίνεται, no prophecy is of private interpretation;] i. e. prophecy comes not from the prophet's own ſuggeſtion, but from the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. That this is the true ſenſe of theſe words, appears, 1. From the apoſtle's own interpretation; for, not to be of the prophet's own incitation or ſuggeſtion, ver. 20. is, not to come by the will of man, ver. 21. i. e. not by human reaſon, but by the will of God, John 1. 13. 2. From the uſe of the phraſe; for ἐπίλυσις, according to Phavorinus and Suidas, is ἔφοδος, acceſſion, or incitation, or inſult; and the word ἰδία, added to it, muſt therefore ſignify, that prophecy is not of private impulſe, or incitation. Whence the expreſſion uſed by the true prophets is generally this, ἐπῆλθεν ἐπ' ἐμὲ, the Spirit came upon me, Numb. 24. 2. 1 Sam. 10. 10. 2 Chron. 15. 1. and 24. 20. And, 3. From the nature of the thing itſelf, and the conſtant opinion of the Jews about it, which was, as Philo (i) ſaith, that "a prophet ſpeaketh nothing of himſelf, but he is "the organ of God in what he ſpeaks, God ſpeaking "in and by him." Whence, to ſpeak of himſelf, or of his own heart or mind, is always made the ſign of a falſe prophet, whom God had not ſent, Numb. 16. 28. and 22. 18. and 24. 13. Jer. 23. 16. 26. Ezek. 13. 17. Ridiculous therefore, and full of ignorance, is the inference of Eſthius hence, that the reformed, and their paſtors, muſt not interpret the ſcriptures according to their own ſenſe or judgments; which ſurely they may do, as well as he, or any other Romiſh commentator, who have nothing but their own private ſenſe for many interpretations of the ſcriptures they diſcourſe upon.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. BUT there were falſe prophets alſo among the people, (in the former ages of the Jewiſh church), even as there ſhall be (hereafter) ᵃ falſe teachers ᵇ among you, who privately ſhall bring in ᶜ damnable hereſies, (i. e. doctrines tending to the deſtruction of them that hold them, and) even ᵈ denying the Lord that bought them, and (ſhall) bring upon themſelves ᵉ ſwift deſtruction.

2. ᶠ And many ſhall follow their pernicious ways, by reaſon of whom the way of truth ſhall be evil ſpoken of.

3. And through ᵍ covetouſneſs ſhall they with feigned words make merchandiſe of you: ʰ whoſe judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation ſlumbereth not.

4. For if God ſpared not the angels that ſinned, but caſt them down ⁱ to hell, and delivered them to chains of darkneſs, to be reſerved unto judgment;

5. ᵏ And ſpared not the old world, but ſaved (only) Noah ˡ the eighth perſon, a preacher of righteouſneſs, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;

6. And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example to thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly; (See note on Jude, ver. 7.);

7. And delivered juſt Lot, vexed with the filthy converſation of the wicked:

8. (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in ſeeing and hearing (of them), vexed his righteous ſoul from day to day with their unlawful deeds.)

9. (Then may we reſt aſſured, that) ᵐ the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, (as he did Noah and Lot), and to reſerve the unjuſt ⁿ unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed:

10. But chiefly them ᵒ who walk after the fleſh in the luſts of uncleanneſs, and ᵖ deſpiſe government: Preſumptuous are they, ſelf-willed, they are not afraid to ſpeak evil of dignities:

11. Whereas angels which are greater in power and might (than evil ſpirits), bring not railing accuſations againſt them before the Lord. (See note on Jude, ver. 9.)

12. ᵠ But theſe, as natural brute beaſts, (Gr. as irrational, natural living creatures, rather than men), made to be taken and deſtroyed, (or, to raven, and deſtroy), ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not, (i. e. of the angelical powers whom they blaſpheme, ver. 10.), and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruption;

13. And ſhall receive (Gr. receiving, by this deſtruction, ver. 12.) the reward of unrighteouſneſs, as they that count it pleaſure to [r] riot in the daytime: ſpots they are and blemiſhes, [s] ſporting themſelves with their own deceivings, whilſt [t] they feaſt with you;

14. Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot ceaſe from ſin; beguiling unſtable ſouls: an heart they have exerciſed with [u] covetous practices; curſed children:

15. [x] Which have forſaken the right way, and are gone aſtray, following the way of Balaam the ſon of Boſor, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs; (and to obtain them, counſelled Balak to entice God's people to commit fornication with the Midianites, Numb. 31. 16. Βαλαὰμ τῦ Βόσορ; that is, ſaith Grotius, of the city of Boſor, as Pethor his city, Numb. 22. 5. is called);

16. But was rebuked for his iniquity: (for) the dumb aſs ſpeaking with man's voice, forbade the madneſs of the [y] prophet.

17. Theſe are wells (Gr. fountains) without water, clouds that are carried with a tempeſt, (unprofitable for any good, as fountains without water, and pernicious as tempeſts, which blaſt and root out all before them), to whom the miſt (Gr. the blackneſs) of darkneſs is reſerved for ever.

18. For when they ſpeak great [z] ſwelling words of vanity, they allure through the luſts of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs, (or to laſciviouſneſs), thoſe who were clean eſcaped from them that live in error.

19. Whilſt they promiſe them [aa] liberty, they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage.

20. [bb] For if after they have eſcaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, they are again entangled therein, and overcome; the latter end is worſe with them than the beginning.

21. For it had been better for them not to have known the way to righteouſneſs, than after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them; (becauſe they ſin by apoſtaſy againſt the light received, and with ingratitude to the author of it.)

22. But it is happened to them according to the true proverb, [cc] The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, The ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Verſe 1. [a] Ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, falſe teachers.] Concerning the perſons chiefly concerned in this chapter, and in the parallel epiſtle of St Jude, I find three opinions.

1. That of Dr Lightfoot, who thinks theſe chapters ſpeak chiefly of the Jews, i. e. of the falſe teachers of that nation. The ſecond is,

2. That of the ancients, who ſay expreſsly, Ἄρχεται ἐντεῦθεν τῆς κατὰ τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν αἱρέσεως, He begins to ſpeak of the hereſy of the Nicolaitans. So Oecumenius. The third is,

3. That of the Reverend and Learned Dr Hammond, and of the ancients alſo; that the apoſtles ſpeak theſe things touching the Gnoſtics. And this opinion ſeems not much to differ from the ſecond. For the ancient fathers ſay, The (k) "Gnoſtics ſprang from the Nicolaitans, and borrowed "from them all their filthineſs and laſciviouſneſs." Moreover, the apoſtle Peter ſpeaketh plainly of the falſe teachers which were to be hereafter; for, ver. 1. 2. 3. he ſpeaks ſtill in the future tenſe; though both St Jude in his epiſtle, and St Peter, in the following words, do plainly intimate, that ſome of them were come already: ſo that in the expoſition of this chapter, and the epiſtle of St Jude, we have reaſon to take in thoſe heretics who appeared after the writing theſe epiſtles.

Nevertheleſs, becauſe the falſe apoſtles, and falſe teachers of the Jewiſh nation, and the Nicolaitans, were certainly then come, and we have expreſs and frequent mention of them in the epiſtles of St Paul, and in the Revelation of St John, and becauſe St Peter ſpeaks of them in the plural number; therefore I ſhall apply the words to all of them, giving the preference to them in the expoſition of theſe words, who are expreſsly mentioned in the holy ſcriptures.

Ibid. [b] Ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσονται ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, There ſhall be falſe teachers among you.] The apoſtle, writing to the Jews, ſeems by theſe words to intimate, that theſe falſe teachers ſhould be among the Jewiſh converts, eſpecially, as being either Jews by birth, or proſelytes to that religion, as was Nicolas of Antioch, Acts 6. 5. But then their entering in among the Jewiſh converts, Jude ver. 4. and being among them in their feaſts of charity, ver. 12. their leaving the right way, 2 Pet. 2. 15. and their returning with the dog to the vomit, make it probable that they once profeſſed the Chriſtian faith; though afterwards they revolted from it, or introduced ſuch doctrines of perdition, as fundamentally deſtroyed the faith which they profeſſed.

Ibid. ° Αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, damnable hereſies.] Such as tended to the preſent deſtruction and future damnation of them who taught, and who believed them. Thus the doctrine of the falſe apoſtles, among the Jews, tended to the perverting of ſouls, Acts 15. 24.; to make Chriſt die in vain, Gal. 2. 21. and their faith to profit them nothing, Gal. 5. 2. and Chriſt become of none effect unto them; they being by them fallen from grace, ver. 5. and become enemies to the croſs of Chriſt, Phil. 3. 18.

The hereſy of the Nicolaitans is ſtyled by Epiphanius (l), an hereſy which did ἑαυτὺς καὶ τὺς πιϛεύοντας ἀπολλύων, deſtroy them that taught, and them that believed it. Yea, Chriſt himſelf declares his hatred of it, Rev. 2. 15. And the ſame all the fathers ſay of the Gnoſtic hereſy.

Ibid. ᵈ Τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτὺς δεσπότην ἀρνούμενοι, denying the Lord that bought them.] Chriſt being never ſtyled δεσπότης in the New Teſtament; and St Jude diſtinguiſhing this δεσπότης, or maſter, from our Lord, it ſeems moſt reaſonable to interpret this of God the Father, who is ſaid to have bought the Jews: Is he not thy father, who hath bought thee? Deut. 32. 5. And the Chriſtians; Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God with your ſouls and bodies, which are his, 1 Cor. 6. 20. Hence alſo it is truly obſerved by Eſthius, That Chriſt died for them that periſh, and bring deſtruction upon themſelves.

Ibid. ᵉ Ταχινὴν ἀπώλειαν, ſhall bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction.] That the apoſtatizing Jews did this, the ſcripture every where informs us, and the apoſtles frequently warn them of it. St Paul doth it throughout the epiſtle to the Hebrews, elſewhere ſpeaking of them as men whoſe end is deſtruction, Phil. 3. 19.; on whom ſhould come ſwift deſtruction, 1 Theſſ. 5. 3. they being appointed for wrath, ver. 9. St James, as of men fattened for a day of ſlaughter, chap. 5. 5. and that ſuddenly to come upon them, their judge ſtanding at the door, ver. 9. Chriſt alſo threatens to them that held the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, That he would come againſt them ſwiftly, and fight againſt them with the ſword of his mouth, Rev. 2. 16. i. e. he would deſtroy them, Rev. 19. 15. 21. Accordingly church-hiſtory informs us, that they were extinct, (m) λόγῳ θᾶττον, in a very little time.

But I find nothing of any ſuch remarkable or ſwift deſtruction which befel the Gnoſtics, in church-hiſtory; not one word that any of them periſhed at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Roman army, though doubtleſs their iniquities would find them out. We rather read in the church-hiſtory, that they were never perſecuted by the Heathen emperors; this being the obſervation of the fathers, That the (n) Simonians, and the Menandrians, "were never perſecuted by the Heathens, their "fury being only poured out upon the Chriſtians." Nor could it probably be otherwiſe, ſeeing they made the doctrine of the croſs no part of their religion; but held it lawful (o) to deny the faith in times of perſecution, to avoid ſuffering for it, and counting idolatry, in ſuch caſes, a thing indifferent; whence, ſaith Origen, "they were never perſe-"cuted at all."

Ver. 2. ᶠ Καὶ πολλοὶ, And many ſhall follow, &c.] That the Judaizers much infeſted the Chriſtian church, and perverted many in the church of Corinth, Galatia, Epheſus, and Crete, we learn from St Paul's epiſtles; and that by reaſon of the Jewiſh zealots, who deſpiſed dominion and ſpake evil of dignities, the way of truth was evil ſpoken of, from Pet. 1. 2. 12. Indeed, the Heathens ſeem to have made little or no diſtinction betwixt the Jews and the Chriſtians that ſprang from them; but imputed all the diſturbances they made, to Chriſt, or to the Chriſtians. Hence (p) Suetonius ſaith of Claudius, That Judæos, impulſore Chriſto aſſidue tumultuantes, Roma expulit; "He expelled the Jews "from Rome, as being frequently tumultuous, "through the inſtigation of Chriſt." Of the Nicolaitans, Epiphanius ſaith (q), That "great was "the deceit which they brought upon mankind." And (r) Clemens Alexandrinus profeſſeth to write againſt them, and the Gnoſtics, "to remove the

"ſcandal

" ſcandal which they, by their doctrines, might " bring upon Chriſtianity :" As Juſtin Martyr alſo hints (s). Yea, Clemens adds, That from theſe men, who taught, (t) " That women ſhould be common, " aroſe the greateſt blaſphemy againſt the name of " Chriſt, or Chriſtians."

Moreover, it is to be noted, That inſtead of ἀπωλείαις, many copies read ἀσελγείαις, their laſcivious ways : which reading may be confirmed from St Jude, who begins his deſcription of the ſame perſons, thus, They turn the grace of God εἰς ἀσέλγειαν, into laſciviouſneſs. And this character agrees, in ſome meaſure, to the falſe teachers among the Jews, who taught fornication and uncleanneſs. See note on 1 Cor. 6. 13. Eph. 5. 6. practiſed τὰ κρύπτα τῆς αἰσχύνης, the hidden things of ſhame, 2 Cor. 4. 2. And gloried in their ſhame, Phil. 3. 19. And whoſe exhortation was ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας, of uncleanneſs, 1 Theſſ. 2. 3. And many of whoſe followers were guilty of uncleanneſs, fornication, καὶ ἀσελγείᾳ, and laſciviouſneſs, 2 Cor. 12. 21. But this is more emphatically the character of the Nicolaitans, and of the Gnoſtics, the ſucceſſors of them : for they were, ſaith Oecumenius, περὶ μὲν δόγματος ἀσεβέστατοι, περὶ δὲ βίον ἀπελγέστατοι, moſt ungodly in their principles, and moſt laſcivious in their lives. " Refert complexus, et " permixtiones execrabiles, obſcenoſque conjunctus, " et quædam ex ipſis adhuc turpiora," ſaith Tertullian (u), yea, things ſo exceeding filthy, that we bluſh to mention them, and therefore paſs them by. Παύσομαι Ἀφροδίτην κοινωνίαν μυσικὴν ἀναγρεύουσιν, ſaith Clemens of Alexandria (x). Τὴν αἰσχρεγίαν ἅμα τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐπιτελεῖν τὰς ἑαυτῶ μαθητὰς ἐδίδαξεν, ſaith Damaſcen (y). Hence Pſeud-Ignatius ſtyles them (z), ἀκαθάρτους Νικολαΐτας, immundiſſimos Nicolaitas, amatores libidinis ; St Auſtin, ſectam turpiſſimam. For, ſaith Timotheus (a), Οὐδεὶς τῶν ἄλλων αἱρεσιαρχῶν φαίνεται ὕτως αἴτιος πάσης βδελυκτῆς καὶ μυσερᾶς, καὶ ἀῤῥήτου πράξεως διδάσκαλος, " Amongſt all the maſters of hereſy, none " taught ſuch filthy and abominable actions."

Ver. 3. ε Ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ, through covetouſneſs.] If πλεονεξία ſhould here, and ver. 14. ſignify adultery, as 1 Theſſ. 4. 6. it ſeems to do ; ſee note there ; and as Dr Hammond thinks it doth here, there will be no difficulty in applying this to the Nicolaitans, as well as to the Gnoſtics, and falſe teachers among the Jews ; the note on the ſecond verſe ſhewing, that this emphatically belonged to them, and gave the riſe to that impure ſect. But becauſe they are accuſed, ver. 15. of following the way of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs ; and by St Jude, ver. 11. of running greedily after the error of Balaam for reward ; I think it better to admit of that ſenſe, which our tranſlation giveth of the word, and then to apply it at once to the falſe teachers among the Jews, and to the Nicolaitans : it ſeems highly probable, from the 6th, the 8th, and the 10th chapters of the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, that the apoſtle is there diſcourſing againſt the Nicolaitans. Now, of theſe falſe teachers he ſaid, That they devoured the Corinthians, 2 Cor. 11. 20. St Paul, in his ſecond epiſtle to Timothy, chap. 3. 6. ſpeaks of a ſort of men who crept into houſes, leading captive ſilly women laden with ſins, and led away with divers luſts ; a character which perfectly agrees to the Nicolaitans: and ſpeaking to Titus of the ſame perſons, he ſaith, chap. 1. 10. 11. They ſubverted whole houſes, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's ſake. Irenæus (b) informs us of the Valentinians, That " they would not impart their " myſteries to all, but to them only who were able " to pay great ſums for them." Whence the Pſeud-Ignatius (c) ſtyles them, " covetous of what be- " longs to others, and violent lovers of riches."

Ibid. ᵇ Οἷς τὸ κρίμα ἔκπαλαι οὐκ ἀργεῖ, whoſe judgment now of a long time lingereth not.] St Jude, in the parallel place, ver. 4. ſaying, they were men, οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα, of old aſſigned to this condemnation, viz. by the prophecy of Enoch : ſee the note there. I think theſe words may be beſt rendered thus, " To whom the judgment pronounced " of old lingereth not," it being a ſwift deſtruction which the falſe teachers among the Jews, and the Nicolaitans, brought upon themſelves : ſee note on ver. 1. of this chapter. Note alſo, That their damnation is, in the Greek, their deſtruction.

Ver. 4. Ταρταρώσας, caſting them down to hell.] Tartarus, ſaith Phavorinus, is ἀὴρ ὑπόγαιος, καὶ ἀνήλιος, " the ſubterreſtrial air, where the ſun comes not." It ſignifies alſo, ſaith Suidas, τὸν περὶ τὰ νέφη τόπον, " the place in the clouds, or in the air :" hence τάρταρον ἠερόεντα, and ζόφον ἠερόεντα, in Homer, to intimate that tartarus was " the dark air ;" as Crates in Stephanus ſaith, Ὁ ἅδης ὑπόγειος ἐστι τόπος σκοτεινὸς,

" Hades

" Hades is a dark place under the earth;" ſaith Porphyry, " where ſouls are tormented, ἐν ἀχλυώδει τόπῳ, in utter darkneſs." Apud Stob. eccl. ph. p. 133. Theſe angels being therefore placed in the bright regions of the heavenly light, and being now confined to the dark air, (whence Satan is called the prince of the power of the air), are ſaid to be caſt down into Tartarus. And this ſuits with the opinion both of the Heathens and the Jews, who held, That " the air was full of ſpirits or dæmons; (ſee note on Eph. 2. 2.); but chiefly of the ancient fathers, according to thoſe words of Jerom, in his comment on that paſſage of St Paul, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, in cœleſtibus; that is, ſaith he, in the air: (d) " for this is the opinion of all the " doctors, That the air, which divides between the " earth and heaven, is full of contrary powers." He is ſtyled, the prince of the power of the air, ſaith Oecumenius (e), " becauſe he is the prince of the " evil ſpirits that are in the air;" not as having dominion, ſaith Theophylact, but only his habitation there. That this was the opinion of moſt of the ancients, ſee Petavius de angelis, l. 3. c. 4. Now, hence it follows, that though the devil and his angels are at preſent for ever baniſhed from the divine preſence, and ſo do ſuffer the puniſhment of loſs now of the beatific viſion; though they are, in the language of Tertullian, prædamnati ad judicii diem, " condemned beforehand to the tremendous " day;" Prædeſtinati ſupplicio ſempiterno, " fore- " ordained to eternal puniſhment," ſaith St Auſtin;" Reſervati in diem judicii, " reſerved to the day of " judgment," ſaith Origen, and St Peter here; or kept in chains of darkneſs to that day, ſaith St Jude: and knowing and believing this, they cannot chuſe but tremble, and be filled with preſent horror. Yet is the doctrine of Rupertus (f) highly probable, That " at preſent they are not ſuffering in the infernal " flames, but have their reſidence in the dark air: " whence, at the day of judgment, they ſhall be " precipitated into the fire prepared for the devil " and his angels."

1. Becauſe this ſeems to have been the opinion of all antiquity, for five whole centuries together, as appears not only from their common doctrine, mentioned before, that they at preſent had their habitation in the air, but alſo from their expreſs words, who ſpake ſtill in the future, of their infernal puniſhments, ſaying, as Juſtin Mart. (g) " That they " ſhall be puniſhed with eternal fire;" for that they " are now baniſhed by the name of Jeſus, is an " indication of their future puniſhment in ever- " laſting fire." This he confeſſeth, μηδέπω τοῦτο πράξαι τὸν Θεὸν, that God hath not yet done; but yet he ſaith, (h) " Chriſt hath foretold, that he and his " angels ſhall be caſt into the fire, and everlaſting- " ly tormented there." And Tatianus (i) ſaith of them, " The Lord of all things ſuffers them to ex- " patiate, or inſult, till the time of the diſſolution " of the world, and till the judge comes." Tertullian (k) ſaith, That " their deſperate condition, " on the account of their being condemned before, " receives ſome comfort from the delay of their " puniſhment." Minucius Felix (l) ſaith, That " he " foreknowing, trembles at the puniſhment appoint- " ed for him, and thoſe that worſhip him." Lactantius (m), That, " at the time of judgment, this prince, " with his miniſters, will be laid hold on, and con- " demned to puniſhment."

2. This muſt be the doctrine of thoſe fathers, who held, That the devil knew not that he ſhould be certainly condemned, till our Lord's advent, and therefore durſt not before blaſpheme God; which was the doctrine of Juſtin Mart. (n), Irenæus (o), Eu-

ſebius, and Epiphanius (p), or, as Oecumenius (q) interprets them, He did not know it manifeſtly, as being only obſcurely hinted by the prophets; "but "when Chriſt's coming declared manifeſtly, that "everlaſting fire was prepared for him and his an- "gels, he ceaſed not to practiſe his wiles againſt his "ſaints." And this doctrine they founded on the following ſcriptures, viz.

1. That queſtion which theſe devils put to Chriſt, Art thou come to torment us before the time? concluding hence, That "not this preſent age, "but the future, was the time when theſe evil ſpi- "rits were to be puniſhed;" as Origen (r) ſaith twice. "They thought," ſaith St Jerom, ad judicandos ſe veniſſe, "That Chriſt was come to judge them:" ſaith Chryſoſtom, Οὐκ ἀναμένων τὸν καιρὸν τῆς κολάσεως, "that he would not ſtay till the time of puniſh- "ment," i. e. the day of judgment." Hence Maldonate, upon the place, admires at the great conſent of the ancients in this opinion.

This, 2*dly*, They gathered from thoſe words of Chriſt, Depart, ye wicked, into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Whence they concluded, with St Bernard (s), That the ſentence againſt them was determined, "but was not yet paſſed upon "them;" and that jam diabolo ignis paratus, etſi nondum ille præcipitatus in ignem, "the fire was "indeed prepared for the devil, but he was not yet "caſt into it;" concluding, that was only to be done, (t) "at the end of the world, at the day of "the great judgment, or in the world to come."

But, 3*dly*, This they chiefly concluded from theſe words of St Peter (u), and St Jude, That they were reſerved unto the day of judgment, to be puniſhed. Nor is it eaſy to conceive a more natural conſequence than this; they are reſerved unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed, therefore they are not yet puniſhed with the fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

And, laſtly, This they gathered from the Revelation of St John, who often ſaith (x), That the old ſerpent the devil ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, at the day of judgment: to which the frequent ſayings of St Auſtin do refer.

Since then, to torment the devils at our Saviour's advent, was to torment them before the time of torment; ſeeing our Saviour when he ſhall paſs the final ſentence, will only amand the wicked to the fire prepared for, not actually tormenting then, the devil and his angels; ſeeing they only are reſerved in chains of darkneſs, to the day of judgment, to be puniſhed: and ſo the ſentence, and the execution of it, is no more paſſed upon them, than upon the priſoner that is kept in chains for the aſſizes. Seeing the devil is only ſaid to be then (y) caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, when the judge ſat upon the throne, and all men were judged according to their works; there ſeems ſufficient reaſon to aſſert, that even the devils ſhall not be tormented in the infernal flames, until the day of judgment: and if not they, then much leſs wicked men.

Ver. 5. [k] Οὐκ ἐφείσατο, and ſpared not the old world.] This inſtance agrees very exactly to thoſe Nicolaitans and Gnoſtics, who had corrupted their ways; as they of the old world did, by taking to them what women they pleaſed to enjoy, as far as appears, without any ſolemnity of matrimony, Gen. 6. 2. 4. for it is only ſaid, that the ſons of God went in unto the daughters of men: hence are theſe giants ſaid to be οἱ ἐκπίπτοντες οἱ βίαιοι, violent men, who by force invaded them: and alſo by idolatry. Ibid.

Ibid. Ὄγδοον, the eighth perſon,] One would think, from Adam; whereas indeed he rather was the tenth from Adam, Gen. 5. and ſo it is the eighth of them that were ſaved from the deluge, 1 Pet. 3. 8. So Plutarch ſaith of Pelopidas, That he came τὶς οἰκίαν δωδέκαλος, "unto his houſe with eleven more:" and Polybius of Dioneſidorus, That τρίτος ἀπενήξατο, "he "ſwam out with two more:" ſo here, Noah was ſaved, with ſeven perſons; ſo celebrated in hiſtory, that the hill where the ark reſted, is called, the hill of the eighth, or Themanim; and a village by it bears the ſame name. See Dr Hammond on the place.

Ver. 9. Οἶδε, the Lord knoweth.] God's knowledge here includes his power, and his will: ſo, Pſal. 1. Whatſoever the righteous doth, it ſhall proſper; for the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, ver. 6. i. e. he is able and willing to make it proſper. Matth. 6. 31. Take no thought what you ſhall eat or drink, or wherewithal ye ſhall be clothed; for your heavenly Father knoweth you have need of all theſe things, ver. 32.

Ibid. Εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, to the day of judgment, to be puniſhed.] Note, That this is ſignally the time when the ungodly ſhall be puniſhed: 2*dly*, That the evils which wicked men ſuffer in this life, will not exempt them from future puniſhments in the world to come; even Sodom and Gomorrha muſt then ſuffer, Matth. 10. 15. and 11. 22.

Ver. 10. Ὀπίσω σαρκὸς, who walk after the fleſh.] See note on ver. 2.

Ibid. Καὶ κυριότητος καταφρονοῦντας, and deſpiſe government.] The note of Eſthius on the place is this; that "we read not in church-hiſtory, that the Gno"ſtics deſpiſed governments, but rather flattered "them." What Dr Hammond ſaith, of their teaching Chriſtians to deſpiſe all authority of magiſtrates, or maſters, is not proved by him; for he attempts not to prove, that they were κυριότητος καταφρονητὰς, deſpiſers of government: and his attempt to prove, that "they taught Chriſtian ſervants to deſpiſe their "maſters," from 1 Tim. 6. 2. hath been conſidered already. Nor do I find any thing of this nature charged upon the Nicolaitans. But then it may be noted, that κυριότης καὶ δόξαι, dominions, and glories, in the New Teſtament, doth often ſignify the angelical powers; as when Chriſt is ſaid to be exalted, ὑπεράνω πάσης κυριότητος, above all dominion, Eph. 1. 21. and when κυριότητες are mentioned among the inviſible things of the creation, Col. 1. 16. Accordingly ſome of the moſt ancient fathers (z) refer this to the angelical powers; and this they do with great probability: For, 1. The apoſtle Peter here aſſerts, That they blaſphemed ἐν οἷς ἀγνοοῦσι, in things of which they had no knowledge: St Jude, That they blaſphemed things that they know not; which very well agrees with their bold aſſertions touching the angels; in which they did, as St Paul ſaith, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, intrude into thoſe things they had not ſeen, Col. 2. 18. but cannot ſo well be applied to civil dignities, of which theſe heretics muſt have ſufficient knowledge. 2. The apoſtle adds, That whereas theſe men did not tremble to blaſpheme theſe dignities, the holy angels οὐ φέρουσι καθ' αὐτῶν βλάσφημον κρίσιν, durſt not uſe railing, or blaſphemous words againſt them. Now, they whom Michael and his good angels durſt not blaſpheme, were, ſaith St Jude, the devil and his angels, who were in ſcripture ſtyled the principalities and powers, and rulers of the darkneſs of this world, Eph. 6. 12. And therefore they whom theſe heretics blaſphemed, muſt alſo be angelical dignities.

But againſt this it is objected, That we read not in church-hiſtory, that the hereſy of the Gnoſtics had any thing in it of particular oppoſition or defiance to the angels; but, on the contrary, the Æones, noting the angels, make up a great part of their divinity. Anſ. This ſeems a great miſtake: for both Irenæus (a) and Epiphanius (b) aver, That when they practiſed their moſt vile impurities, they invoked ſome of the angels, to whom they did aſcribe that work, ſaying, when they performed it, Ὁ δεῖνα ἄγγελε, καταχρῶμαί σου τῷ ἔργῳ, ὁ δεῖνα ἐξουσία, σου τὴν πρᾶξιν, O angel, I am doing thy work, I am employed in thy ſervice; which ſure muſt be to blaſpheme theſe dignities.

Moreover, it is evident, that the Nicolaitans did alſo horribly blaſpheme them. For, 1. They made the "angels to be the offſpring of an obſcene "and filthy Æon," as both Tertullian (c) and Epiphanius (d) inform us. 2. They add, That the mother (e) appears in a beautiful form to princes, and extracts their ſeed from them with pleaſure, that ſhe may recollect her power, or virtue, di-Ver. 12. [q] This verſe, in St Jude, runs thus; But theſe ſpeak evil of the things they know not; but what they know naturally, as brute beaſts, in theſe things they corrupt themſelves, ver. 10. And therefore to make this verſe parallel to it, it ſeems neceſſary to make the conſtruction run thus, ὗτοι δὲ, but theſe blaſphemers of dignities, ἐν οἷς ἀγνοοῦσι βλασφημοῦντες, blaſpheming in things of which they have no knowledge, ſhall periſh in their own corruption; as do the natural brute-beaſts, made to be taken and deſtroyed; to whom they are, in this practice, of "making all women common alike, and whoſe ex-"ample they plead, in favour of their common "whoredoms (g)?" eſpecially the followers of Carpocrates (h), and his ſon Epiphanes, "making the "marriage of one, a violation of the community "ordained by God, and exemplified in other living "creatures."

Ver. 13. [r] Τὴν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τρυφήν, riot in the day.] This is exactly true of the Nicolaitans (i), who practiſed their impurities day and night; and held, That "if "a man were not laſcivious every day, he could not "be ſaved."

Ibid. [s] Sporting themſelves in their own deceits.] i. e. In thoſe practices which were the effects of their deceitful principles. So that there ſeems no need of reading ἀγάπαις, their love-feaſts; for they were the feaſts of the church, not of the heretics.

Ibid. [t] Συνευωχούμενοι, when they feaſt with you.] Of theſe feaſts, ſee note on Jude, ver. 12.; and alſo Irenæus's ſaying of Marcus, and other heretics, That εἰώθασιν ἐπὶ τοῖς δείπνοις τῷ κλήρῳ ὅτοι πάντοτε παίζειν, they are always accuſtomed, in thoſe ſuppers which they make, by lot to play; or, as the Latin hath it, ſortibus ludere, to play by lot: I ſuppoſe, what women they ſhould commit lewdneſs with, or who ſhould provide the ſupper; which being ended, there followed, as Juſtin Martyr (k) hints, "the putting "out of the candle, and their promiſcuous luſts:" he ſpeaking thus of the Marcionites; and Clemens Alexandrinus (l) of the Carpocratians.

Ver. 14. [u] Covetous practices.] See note on ver. 3.

Ver. 15. [x] This in St Jude runs thus, πλάνῃ τῷ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν, they ran forth into the error of the reward of Balaam, i. e. the error which the children of Iſrael committed, through the counſel which Balaam gave to Balak. To explain this, let it be noted,

1. That Balaam not only went with the princes of Balak, but alſo had the reward of his divination; for it is expreſsly ſaid, Deut. 23. 4. Neh. 13. 2. That the Ammonites and Moabites hired Balaam. Note,

2*dly*, That Balaam, for his reward, gave counſel to Balak, to entice the children of Iſrael to idolatry and fornication: this is hinted in thoſe words, Come therefore, I will advertiſe thee, Numb. 24. 14. i. e. what to do to this people now, and what they will do to thee in the latter days: So the Chaldee paraphraſt upon the place: "I will counſel "thee what thou ſhalt do to this people, that thou "mayſt make them to ſin;" ſo the Jeruſalem Targum. This counſel, ſaith Joſephus, was, that "Ba-"laam told Balak, upon his departure, that the on-"ly way to prevail upon this people, would be to "draw them into ſin; and to that purpoſe he coun-"ſelled him to tempt them with their beautiful wo-"men: theſe were firſt to entice the Iſraelites with "their beauty, and compliant converſation, and "when they had entangled their affections, they "were to conſent to their embraces, upon condi-"tion that the Iſraelites would forſake their own "law, and worſhip the God of the Moabites," Joſeph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 6. Note,

3*dly*, That this counſel made them err in the matter of Peor; and ſo not only to commit fornication with the women of Midian, 1 Cor. 10. 8. but alſo to commit idolatry. Now, this Baal-Peor, ſaith St Jerom, and other critics, was Priapus, who was worſhipped by ſhewing of their ſhame; to which theſe words of the prophet Hoſea may refer, They ſet up altars to Baal-Peor, and ſeparated themſelves to that ſhame, chap. 9. 10. And thoſe of Jeremiah, You have ſet up altars to ſhame, even altars to burn incenſe to Baal, Jer. 11. 13. And then, as ἐξιχνίθησαν, they were diſperſed, or ran about about after the Midianitiſh women, anſwers to the practice of thoſe men who crept into houſes, leading captive ſilly women; ſo the matter of Baal-Peor anſwers exactly to the execrable villanies theſe men committed cum membris pudoris.

Moreover, this paſſage ſeems to confirm that expoſition, which refers to what is here ſpoken to the Nicolaitans. For St John ſpeaks thus to the church of Pergamus, I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou haſt there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam; who as he taught Balak to caſt a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication; ſo haſt thou alſo them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which I hate. Now, the church-hiſtory informs us, this was the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, That (m) "it was "lawful to eat things offered to idols, and to com- "mit fornication," as Irenæus, St Auſtin, and others teach.

Ver. 16. ᵛ The prophet.] That Balaam was indeed a prophet of God, and well acquainted with his revelations, the hiſtory in the book of Numbers will not ſuffer us to doubt; for thoſe words, I cannot go beyond the commandment of my God, to do good or evil, Numb. 22. 18. ſhew he was not unacquainted with the true God. See alſo chap. 24. 4. Though after, through a covetous deſire of gain, he uſed inchantments; the madneſs of the prophet appeared in this, that hearing the aſs ſpeak, which argued the miraculous aſſiſtance of God enabling him ſo to do, he goes on in his mad fury, and ſaith, he would kill him.

Ibid. Τὴν τῦ προφήτυ παραφρονίαν, The madneſs of the prophet.] The Jeruſalem Targum, and Ben Uziel on Numb. 22. 30. introduce the aſs ſpeaking thus to Balaam, "Wo to thee, Balaam, that art che- "ſer deyetta, mente captus," i. e. mad.

Ver. 18. ᵘ Ὑπέρογκα, ſwelling words of vanity.] This did the heretics many ways, ver. 9. by their barbarous names, quibus terrebant auditores, by which they affrighted the hearers, ſay St Auſtin (n) and Epiphanius (o), and impoſed upon them by thoſe vile words; or by thoſe proud words, that "they are the "ſpiritual, the perfect, the ſeed of election," men who have perfect knowledge of God; ſee note on Jude 19. that they have grace, ἀπὸ τῆς ἀῤῥήτυ καὶ ἀνωνομάστυ συζυγίας, "from the ineffable and not to be na- "med conjugation," and (p) "therefore ought to be "always meditating the myſtery of conjugation;" and that (q) "he that being in the world, does not "love a woman, ſo as to enjoy her, is not of the "truth;" and that except a man be laſcivious every day, he cannot enjoy eternal life: and that they being (r) "ſpiritual, cannot receive corruption by "any evil actions they do, or be hurt by any ma- "terial actions, ſo as to loſe their ſpiritual ſub- "ſtance." In oppoſition to which vain boaſts, theſe apoſtles ſo expreſsly ſay, They ſhall periſh in their corruption.

Ibid. Τὰς ὄντως ἀποφυγόντας.] See this reading defended, Examen Millii in locum.

Ver. 19. ˣ Ἐλευθερίαν, they promiſe them liberty.] They promiſed them a double liberty, 1ſt, A liberty to do any thing they pleaſed without fear. 2dly, A liberty from the eye and hand of their judge; as we learn from the ὑπέρογκα, ſwelling words of vanity, cited by Irenæus (s) from them, which are a full comment on ver. 18.

Ver. 20. ʸ From ver. 18. 20. 21. it ſeemeth to be ſtrongly argued, that they who were once truly faithful, may totally and finally fall away. For, 1. That the perſons here mentioned were once truly faithful, ſeems evident from this, 1ſt, That they had once ὄντως, truly, and entirely eſcaped from them that live in error, ver. 18. Being not then entangled with, not overcome by the pollutions which are in the world through luſt, but having eſcaped them through the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus: that they turned from the holy commandment, in which they formerly had walked: that they were once waſhed from that mire to which they returned, ver. 22.: all which cannot be truly ſaid of hypocritical profeſſors, who were ſtill in the gall of bitterneſs, and the bond of iniquity.

That theſe men after fell away totally and finally, we learn from theſe expreſſions, that they were again allured to wantonneſs; that they were again entangled and overcome by the pollutions which were in the world through luſt, and therefore brought in bondage: that they turned from the holy commandment delivered to them; yea, with the dog to the vomit, and the waſhed ſow to the wallowing in the mire: and this ſo far, as that it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. THis ſecond epiſtle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which I ſtir up your » pure minds by way of remembrance:

2. » That ye may be mindful of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy prophets (of the Old Teſtament, Enoch, Jude, ver. 14. and Daniel, chap. 12. 2. touching the judgment of ungodly men), and of the commandment of us the apoſtles of our Lord and Saviour, (or of the commandment of the apoſtles of our Lord and Saviour, as St Jude, ver. 17. that is, to expect patiently, and with unſhaken faith, that day, Heb. 10. 23. 35. 39. James 1. 6. and 5. 7. 11. 1 Pet. 1. 13. and 4. 1.):

3. Knowing this firſt, that (according to their predictions) there ſhall come in the laſt days « ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts,

4. And ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming (to judge the world, and raiſe his faithful ſervants from the dead?); for » ſince the fathers (to whom theſe promiſes were made) fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

5. For this they willingly are « ignorant of, (Gr. they that are of this mind are ignorant), that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth ſtanding out of the water, (viz. dry land), and in the water, (viz. that part of it which is covered with the ſea.)

6. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, periſhed.

7. But the heavens and earth which now are, by the ſame word are kept in ſtore, (being) reſerved unto fire againſt « the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, (who, as the antediluvians have been puniſhed by water deſtroying the world then, ſhall be puniſhed with fire deſtroying it again.)

8. But (for further anſwer to this queſtion), beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a « thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day.

9. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, as ſome men count ſlackneſs; (concluding thence that he hath changed his purpoſe, or will not perform it); but is (in this) long-ſuffering to us-ward, » not (being) willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to repentance.

10. But (though it be thus deferred for a time, yet) the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, (i. e. ſuddenly and unexpectedly to them, Luke 21. 34. 1 Theſſ. 5. 2. 3.); in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, the earth alſo and the works that are therein ſhall be burnt up.

11. Seeing then that all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved (by fire, deſigned to puniſh the ungodly), what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs,

12. Looking for and haſtening to (prepare for) the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the elements ‹ ſhall melt with fervent heat?

13. Nevertheleſs, according to his promiſe, we look for (καινὸς δὲ οὐρανὸς προσδοκῶμεν, we alſo do expect) » new heavens and a new earth, › in which dwelleth righteouſneſs.

14. Wherefore, beloved, ſeeing that » ye look for ſuch things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without ſpot, and blameleſs:

15. And account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord is (deſigned for the) ſalvation (of you Jews); even as our beloved brother Paul alſo, according to the (ſpirit of) wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you, (in theſe words, Rom. 2. 4. Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? And more eſpecially in theſe, And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, &c. Rom. 11. 26. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all, ver. 32. See the preface to the epiſtle to the Hebrews);

16. » As alſo in all his epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things: ◦ in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which they that are unlearned and unſtable wreſt, as they do alſo the other ſcriptures, to their own deſtruction.

17. Ye therefore, beloved, ſeeing ye know theſe things things before, beware leſt ye alſo being led away with the error of the-(ſe) wicked (ſcoffers), fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs.

18. But (rather) [p] grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Τὴν εἰλικρινῆ διάνοιαν ὑμῶν, your ſincere minds.] A ſincere deſire to know, and regard to the truth, being once ſeated in the mind and heart, we ſhall readily embrace and firmly ſtand in the truth delivered to us.

Ver. 2. [b] That theſe words ſhould relate to that notable deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews, foretold by Chriſt, ſeems not very probable, ſince the believers are inſtructed to be mindful of theſe commands, that they might be armed againſt the ſcoffers, mentioned, ver. 3. who ſaid, Where is the promiſe of his coming? Now, that the thing queſtioned by them was not our Lord's coming to the deſtruction of the Jews, but to the judgment of the world, is evident; it being ſtyled emphatically ἡμέρα κρίσεως, the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, ver. 7. 10. 11. 12.

Ver. 3. [c] Since both St Peter, and, as St Jude tells us, the reſt of the apoſtles were ſo careful to mind thoſe to whom they writ, or preached, of theſe ſcoffers, we may conjecture that theſe ſcoffers were then come; though, in reſpect of the prophecies concerning them, they were yet to come: whence Jude ſaith of them, Theſe are they that ſeparate themſelves, &c. ver. 8. 9.

Ibid. Ἐμπαῖκται, ſcoffers.] St Jude ſeems to teach us, that theſe ſcoffers were the heretics mentioned in the former chapter, viz. the Simonians, who being Samaritans, held ſtill their old hereſy (t), that there ſhould be no reſurrection of the fleſh; and therefore walked after their own luſts: for thoſe of whom, ſaith he, I have treated, and am ſpeaking, are they of whom the apoſtles did forewarn you, ver. 17. 18.

Ver. 4. [d] Ἀφ' ἧς, viz. ἡμέρας.] For from the day that the fathers, to whom this promiſe of a reſurrection, and an heavenly country, Heb. 11. 16. is ſuppoſed to be made, and who foretold this judgment to come upon the wicked, Jude, ver. 14. have ſlept, we ſee no ſuch thing verified to them, nothing anſwering their predictions, but all things continue as they were. That ἀφ' ἧς, ſhould ſignify, except that, I find no inſtance or example.

Ver. 5. [e] Λανθάνει γὰρ αὐτοὺς·] that is, They conſider not God's power in making the world; which muſt enable him alſo to deſtroy it, if he pleaſe; and that by his word the earth was ſeparated from the waters which covered it, and gathered into its channels, ſo that the dry land, which we call earth, appeared; and that by theſe very waters, deſcending partly from the heavens, and partly from the great deep, Gen. 7. 11. the earth was again overwhelmed for the ſin of the antediluvians, (eight perſons being only preſerved), ſo that thoſe wicked men which then lived, periſhed in their wickedneſs; and ſo the prophecy of Enoch was remarkably fulfilled upon them.

Ver. 7. [f] Εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, to the day of judgment.] From theſe words it ſeems to follow, 1. That the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men, and the conflagration of the world, muſt be contemporary; and that therefore new heavens and new earth, in the literal ſenſe, muſt vainly be expected before the final judgment of ungodly men. 2. That the ungodly are not to be judged, or puniſhed by fire, before the conflagration of the world: for the heaven and earth that now are, are to be burnt up with that very fire by which the ungodly are to be deſtroyed, they being left in the midſt of thoſe flames, whilſt the godly, being ſnatched up into the air above the reach of them, ſhall be for ever with the Lord, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16.; for the wicked are reſerved unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed, 2 Pet. 2. 9. That fire in which they are to be tormented and deſtroyed, is reſerved unto the ſame day, Matth. 25. 41. 46. The fallen angels, for whom the fire is prepared, in which the wicked ſhall be puniſhed, are reſerved to that day, 2 Pet. 2. 4. Jude, ver. 6. And, laſtly, Sodom and Gomorrha, who periſhed by fire and brimſtone, are ſet forth ὡς δεῖγμα, as an example of that puniſhment the wicked ſhall ſuffer at that great day of retribution, 2 Pet. 2. 5. Jude, ver. 7. they are not therefore to be caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone before that day. Moreover, that the world was to be diſſolved by fire, was the opinion of Anaximander, Anaxiphanes, Anaxagoras, Archelaus, Diogenes, and Leucippus. Apud Stob. eclog. phyſ. p. 44.

Ver. 8. [g] Χίλια ἔτη, a thouſand years.] That is, though God defer his coming to this judgment a thouſand years or more, we muſt not think this long; for in reſpect of him whoſe duration is eternal, and ſo whoever lives to make good his promiſes and threats, a thouſand years are as one day. In like manner, Zoſimus (u), in his hiſtory, produces a prediction from the Sybils, or from one Phaellon, and then adds, Let none think that this prophecy was of ſome other thing, becauſe it was fulfilled μετὰ χρόνους ὀλίγους, a long time after; πᾶς γὰρ χρόνος τῷ Θεῷ βραχὺς ἀεί τε ὄντι, καὶ ἰσαμένῳ, for all time is ſhort to that God who ever is, and ever will be. Mr Mede indeed ſaith, that theſe words cannot be thus interpreted, becauſe the queſtion is not, whether the time in which they expected the coming of the Lord, were long in reſpect of God, but only in reſpect of us, and ſo he would have the words interpreted thus, "The day of judgment ſpoken of ſhall be a thou-"ſand years." But, 1. The text ſaith not, one day ſhall be a thouſand years, but is as a thouſand years; and that again not abſolutely, but only παρὰ Κυρίῳ, with reſpect to God. 2. Here is no queſtion mentioned touching the length of time, either with reſpect to God or us, but only touching the truth of God's promiſe, ver. 4.; and to this the interpretation well agrees, that God's promiſe may be true, and in his time fulfilled, though he who ever lives to make it good ſhould defer it a thouſand years. And, 3. That this reſpects God's promiſe, and not the length of the day of judgment, is evident from the enſuing words.

Ver. 9. [b] Μὴ βουλόμενός τινας ἀπολέσθαι, not being willing that any ſhould periſh.] Note here, that when it is ſaid, God would have all men come to repentance, it is certain that this will refers to all to whom the preaching of the goſpel is vouchſafed, to all to whom in the times of ignorance God winked at, for now he commandeth them all every where to repent, Acts 17. 30. When therefore it is ſaid, He is not willing any one ſhould periſh, he muſt be ſuppoſed to mean, he would have none to whom the goſpel is vouchſafed to periſh. Vain therefore here are the deſcants of Eſthius upon this place, as v. g.

1. When he ſays, "God would have none to pe-"riſh, becauſe he gives to all ſome general means "of converſion to God, though they be not ſuffi-"cient for that end without thoſe ſpecial aids he "will not give them." For certain it is, that he who wills not the means neceſſary to bring them to repentance, wills not that they ſhould come to repentance. And he that determines to with-hold the means, which being with-held they muſt periſh, wills they ſhould periſh.

2. When he reſtrains this to the elect, ſaying, God is not willing any of them ſhould periſh; for the words are too general to admit of this reſtriction, for they run thus. 1ſt, He would have all to come to repentance; he would not that any ſhould periſh. 2dly, He is here ſpeaking of the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men, and gives this reaſon why it is deferred, viz. becauſe God is long-ſuffering, and would not any man ſhould periſh. He therefore muſt in reaſon be ſuppoſed to ſpeak of God's long-ſuffering in the general.

3. When he adds, "He would not any man ſhould "periſh, becauſe he excites good men to pray they "may repent, and ſo not periſh." For if this prayer be according to the will of God, then muſt it alſo be his will they ſhould not periſh; if it be not, they cannot thus pray in faith, or with expectance to be heard; becauſe they know, according to his doctrine, they do not pray according to his will; nor can God excite them thus to pray.

Ver. 12. [i] Προσδοκῶντας καὶ σπεύδοντας τὴν παρουσίαν, and haſtening to the coming.] Though πρὸς here may be taken from the foregoing words, yet σπεύδω hath ſometimes an accuſative caſe like this without it; as when Thucydides ſaith, σπεύδω τὴν ἡγεμονίαν, I haſten to the government; and Pindar (x), μὴ βίον ἀθάνατον σπεῦδε, i. e. ἐπὶ βίον ἀθάνατον.

Ibid. Στοιχεῖα δὲ καυσούμενα, and the elements being burnt, ſhall be diſſolved.] That the elements cannot be here taken in the common ſenſe, Mr Mede proves well, becauſe one of them is that fire which ſhall conſume theſe elements; but that they ſignify the planets, he proves from the teſtimonies of Juſtin Martyr (y), Theophilus of Antioch (z), of Polycrates (a), and other ancient fathers. So ὑπέρκοσμα στοιχεῖα, is the influence of the ſtars, Wiſd. 7. 18. and στοιχεῖα ἐπουράνια, the celeſtial ſigns or conſtellations, as Valeſius proves in his notes upon theſe words of Polycrates (b), biſhop of Epheſus, κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν μεγάλοι στοιχεῖα κεκοίμηνται, in Aſia great lights are extinct, out of Diogenes Laertius and Epiphanius; and ſince the planetary bodies are found to be as much earth as that we tread on, and borrow all their light from the irradiations of the ſun, I think there is no need of thoſe criticiſms which turn παρελεύσονται, they ſhall paſs away, into they ſhall be changed, and καυσούμενα λυθήσονται, they ſhall be diſſolved being burnt, into they ſhall be refined; whereas, if they be refined as ſilver is by fire, they muſt be diſſolved as that is. Nor ſee I any reaſon why we ſhould prefer either an unuſual or metaphorical before the proper import of theſe words.

Ver. 13.

Ver. 13. [k] Καινὸς οὐρανὸς, New heavens and new earth.] That this cannot refer to the Millennium, ſuppoſed to be promiſed in the Revelations of St John, appears, not only becauſe this epiſtle was writ before the Revelation, which, ſaith Irenæus (c), were ſeen ad finem Domitiani imperii, "about the end "of the reign of Domitian," whereas St Peter ſuffered martyrdom in the reign of Nero; but alſo, 1. Becauſe the Millennium of St John is peculiar to the martyrs, and thoſe who have ſuffered for the cauſe of Chriſt; the new heavens and earth here mentioned, are the common expectation of all Chriſtians, who, upon this account, are admoniſhed to be found of him without ſpot, and unblameable in peace, ver. 14. 2. I grant that the apoſtle is here ſpeaking of the deſtruction, not only of the ſublunary heavens and earth, but alſo of the planetary heavens, ver. 12. by fire: but this conceſſion is ſo far from doing any ſervice to the hypotheſis of the Millennium of St John, that it doth perfectly deſtroy it: for this conflagration of the world is contemporary with the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men: and by that very fire which conſumes the world, are they to periſh. See note on ver. 7. So doth the ſcripture conſtantly expreſs the puniſhment of the wicked, ſaying, That at the end of the world the angels ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire, Matth. 13. 28. And that Chriſt ſhall come in flaming fire to take vengeance on them, 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. 8. Whereas the Millennium of St John muſt be at an end before that day: for after he had ſpoken of the firſt reſurrection, and the concluſion of the thouſand years, in which they were to reign who were then raiſed, and of the inſurrection of Gog and Magog againſt them; I ſay, after the concluſion of thoſe years, doth he introduce one ſitting on a great white throne, and the dead both ſmall and great ſtanding before him, and being judged out of thoſe things which were written in the book, according to their works, Rev. 20. 13. 14.

I alſo grant, that after the apoſtle had ſpoken of the conflagration of the world, he hath theſe words, We alſo do expect new heavens and new earth; but then I add, that theſe words are not to be rendered thus; "Nevertheleſs, after this violent diſſolution "of the world, we expect new heavens and new "earth," which are to ſucceed them: but rather, as Dr More renders them, but "before this con-"flagration" we expect them; or rather, but beſides this conflagration, we expect new heavens and new earth. As if the apoſtle ſhould have ſaid, I hitherto have anſwered this queſtion of theſe ſcoffers, by ſhewing what ſubſtantial mutations have been, and will be brought upon the world by the word of the Lord, and his coming to jude his people: this alſo I think fit to add in anſwer to them, That we Chriſtians expect the coming of our Lord to make ſuch a moral change in the affairs of the church, as will amount to the new creation of heaven and earth, promiſed to the Jews, Iſ. 65. 16. 17. 18. So that theſe ſcoffers have no cauſe to doubt of our Lord's coming in behalf of his faithful ſervants, ſince he will come to raiſe his church by his calling the Jewiſh nation to the faith, and ſo to ſuch a glorious ſtate.

Nor is it to be wondered that the apoſtle ſhould ſpeak of theſe two things together in anſwer to that queſtion, Where is the promiſe of his coming? Seeing the Jews thought them connected, expecting theſe new heavens and new earth at the coming of the Meſſiah, and his coming at the end of the world, according to that queſtion of the diſciples to our Lord, When is the time of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Matth. 24. 3. "In the end "of the world," ſaith R. Saadiah Gaon, "there "ſhall be to the Jews a world full of joy and ex-"ultation;" ſo that their heaven and earth ſhall be "as it were new, as it is ſaid, Iſ. 65. 17." See this more fully in Mr Mede, p. 535. 536. 537.

Ibid. [l] Κατὰ τὸ ἐπάγγελμα αὐτοῦ, according to his promiſe.] This cannot relate, as I have proved, to St John's diſcourſe of theſe new heavens, &c. for this farther reaſon, That he ſpeaks of them only as in viſion, not by way of promiſe; it remains therefore, that the new heaven and new earth promiſed by Iſaiah, be the thing here referred to. Now, theſe new heavens and new earth are manifeſtly promiſed to the Jewiſh nation, to whom alſo the apoſtle here writes; nor can they poſſibly admit of any other ſenſe, or be primarily accompliſhed upon any other people: for God having ſaid by his prophet, Behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth, immediately adds, Be ye (Jews) glad, and rejoice for ever in what I do create; for behold, I create Jeruſalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy; and I will rejoice in Jeruſalem, and joy in my people. Now, ſure, this new heaven and earth promiſed to the Jews, muſt be created before the conflagration of the world, that is, before the Jews be burnt to aſhes, they being not like to be converted afterward. St John indeed ſpeaks of his new heaven and earth, after he had mentioned the day of judgment; but that he doth this by a prolepſis, is evident from this conſideration, that after his whole diſcourſe of theſe new heavens and earth, the new Jeruſalem coming down from heaven, and of the bride and the Lamb's wife, i. e. the Jews converted then to Chriſt, follow theſe words, Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to render to every one according to his works, chap. 22. 13. which words contain a repetition of what was ſaid, chap. 20. 13. to ſhew that what was mentioned there, was not to be accompliſhed till after the appearance of the new heavens and the new earth.

Ver. 14. [m] Ταῦτα προσδοκῶντες, Expecting theſe things.] Theſe words directed to the Jews then living, ſeem to prove, that in ſome inferior ſenſe this promiſe of the new heavens, &c. was to be made good in their times. For why ſhould he exhort them to this diligence on the account of what ſhould only happen one thouſand ſeven hundred years after they were dead? For he plainly ſpeaks to them to whom St Paul had written, ver. 16. and therefore to the Jews of that preſent age.

Ver. 16. [n] Ὡς καὶ ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ἐπιστολαῖς, As alſo in all his epiſtles.] I do not think it neceſſary ſo to underſtand theſe words, as if the apoſtle were ſaid to have ſpoken in all his epiſtles, that the long-ſuffering of God was deſigned for their ſalvation; for I do not find any thing of that nature in many of them: he ſpeaks indeed generally of Chriſt's coming to judgment in them, but that ſeems not pertinent to the text. I therefore give the ſenſe of the words thus; as alſo, according to the ſame wiſdom, he hath written in all his epiſtles, ſpeaking in them of theſe things of which I am now diſcourſing, that is, of the day of the Lord's coming, and of the preparation we ſhould make for it.

Ibid. [o] Ἐν αἷς, In which.] This cannot relate to the epiſtles of St Paul, becauſe the word, being of the neuter gender, cannot agree with ἐπιστολαῖς, epiſtles, which is of the feminine; but to thoſe things of which St Peter had been diſcourſing in this chapter, and which were ſo wreſted by the unlearned and unſtable, that ſome of them thought long before the writing of this epiſtle, that the day of the Lord was inſtant, 2 Theſſ. 2. 2. and ſo became unſtable in the faith, ver. 15. Some ſaid, The reſurrection was paſt already, and thereby overthrew the faith of ſome, 2 Tim. 2. 18.; ſome wanting patience to expect it longer, leſt the aſſemblies of Chriſtians, Heb. 10. 25.; and ſome queſtioned whether this promiſe would be made good at all, as here, ver. 4. 9.: the reſurrection of the fleſh being by ſome thought a thing abſurd, they holding that it was incapable of ſalvation (d); and the reſurrection of the ſame body being by ſome looked on as a thing impoſſible; and theſe ſeem to be the δυσνόητα here mentioned.

Ver. 18. [p] Αὐξάνετε ἐν χάριτι, Grow in grace.] That grace ſignifies generally in the New Teſtament, the favour of God to us. See note on 2 Cor. 6. 1.

THE PREFACE TO THE First EPISTLE GENERAL of St JOHN.

CONcerning the author of this epiſtle, all ages have agreed that it was St John, the apoſtle of our Lord and Saviour.

As for the time when it was written, ſome both ancient and modern writers think his epiſtles to be the laſt of his works, and therefore to have been written in the laſt years of Domitian. But Dr Hammond hath very well obſerved, that this epiſtle muſt have been written ſome time before the great deſtruction which befel the Jews: 1. Becauſe he ſpeaks of the laſt hour as now at hand; which that it muſt be underſtood of the laſt times of the Jewiſh ſtate, ſee note on chap. 2. 18. 2. Becauſe he ſpeaks of the antichriſt, chap. 2. 18. and the falſe prophets, chap. 4. 1. which were then among them, or come into the world; ſuch as Chriſt tells us were to be the immediate forerunners of that deſtruction, Matth. 24. 24. declaring that they went out from them of Judea, ver. 19. 3. It being written by an apoſtle of the circumciſion, it is not doubted but it was written to the Jews; but that it was an epiſtle to the Parthians, as St Auſtin (a), Poſſidonius in his index, and Idacius contra Verim. aver; as I know nothing can be ſaid againſt it, but that it only is aſſerted by authors of a later date; ſo if Parthia be taken for the whole empire, as it was enlarged by the Arſacidæ, it is a farther proof, not only that this epiſtle was written to the Jews, who, ſaith Joſephus (b), abounded in Babylon and Meſopotamia, and had there three famous univerſities, one of them at Neerda mentioned by Joſephus; but alſo, that many of the ten tribes were then converted, they being ſeated in Meſopotamia and Media; for the text ſaith, that they were carried away into Aſſyria, and placed in Halah and Habor by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings 17. 6. and 18. 11. Now all theſe places, ſaith the learned Bochart (c), are to be found thereabouts; and therefore St John being an apoſtle of the circumciſion, may well be ſuppoſed to have written to them, though perhaps he was never there; as St Paul writ ſome of his epiſtles to churches he had never ſeen.

Whence it was written, neither ſcripture, nor any thing in antiquity that I have met with, gives any ground for a conjecture.

The occaſion of it ſeems to be, 1. To arm the Jewiſh converts againſt thoſe looſe and pernicious doctrines which had obtained among the Jews, viz. that Soliſidian doctrine of being righteous by a faith, that is not fruitful in good works, or without doing righteouſneſs, 1 John 2. 29. and 3. 7. 10. being children of the light without walking in the light, favourites of God without obedience to his laws, or love to his ſervants. 2. Againſt the madneſs of their zealots abounding every where among them, who thought their zeal for God, and for his laws, would atone for their hatred of, and murther of their brethren, and for all the other ſins which, ſaith Joſephus, they did ſo greedily commit. See note on Rom. 2. 1. and on ver. 24. and on James 1. 26. And, 3. To preſerve them ſtedfaſt in the truth, which they had heard from the beginning, againſt thoſe deceivers, antichriſts, and falſe prophets, which were then among them, chap. 2. 19. 26. chap. 4. 1. 2. 3. and to continue them ſtedfaſt in the belief that Jeſus was the Chriſt the Son of God, chap. 5.

And here, becauſe that queſtion hath made ſo great a noiſe of late, "Whether ſalvation or perdition depends upon believing or rejecting this one propoſition, That Jeſus was the Meſſiah, as ſaith the author of the reſonableneſs of Chriſtianity," p. 43. adding, p. 47. that "all that was to be believed for juſtification was no more but this ſingle propoſition, That Jeſus of Nazareth was the Chriſt, or the Meſſiah;" I ſhall endeavour briefly to ſtate and explain this matter, and ſo give farther light to thoſe words of this epiſtle, chap. 4. 2. 15. and chap. 5. 1. 5. which seem to say the same thing.

Whereas then this author challenges all the systematical divines, p. 192. " to shew that there was " any other doctrine, upon their assent to which " or disbelief of it, men were pronounced believers or unbelievers, and accordingly received in- " to the church of Christ as members of his body, " as far as mere believing could make them so, " or else kept out of it :" This I shall undertake to shew,

1. From the express words of Christ, who requires of all his disciples, in order to their admission into the church by baptism, faith in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Matth 28. 19. saying, He that believeth (this), and is baptized, shall be saved ; he that believeth not, shall be damned, Mark 16. 16. He adds, with an asseveration, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Execept you eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, you have no life in you, John 6. 53. clearly declaring the necessity of faith in his body given, and his blood shed for the remission of sins, to justification and salvation ; we being justified by his blood, and through faith in his blood, Rom. 3. 25. and 5. 9.

2. From the plain declarations of St Paul, who among the first things he preached to the Corinthians, as things by the belief of which they should be saved, mentions three articles ; first of all, That Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, 1 Cor. 15. 1. 2. 3. 4. 2. That he was buried. And, 3. That he rose from the dead. In the same chapter he plainly asserts the necessity of believing the resurrection of the body, ver. 19. and 32. Among the foundations and first principles of the doctrine of Christ, from which all Christians were to go on to perfection, he reckons the doctrines of repentance, of faith towards God, of baptism, of laying on of hands, (for the receiving of the Holy Ghost), of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, Heb. 6. 1. 2. These therefore were then necessary to be believed by all Christians. The doctrine of the sufficiency of faith in Christ's death for justification, without the works of the law, is by the same apostle declared to be so necessary, that he saith of them who gainsaid it, Christ is become of no effect to you, ye are fallen from grace, Gal. 5. 2. 4.

Moreover, it will be easy to account for the practice of our Lord, and his apostles, who insist so much upon, and lay so great stress upon this one article, if we consider who they preached to, and how much was contained in, or necessarily depended upon the cordial belief of this one article.

1. Then, our Lord and his apostles whilst he was on earth, preached only to the Jews, Matth. 10. 6. that is, to them to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, the covenants, the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises, Rom. 9. 4. and to whom were committed the oracles of God, chap. 3. 2. i. e. those scriptures which were able to make them wise to salvation, with faith in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. 3. 5. i. e. if they, to the belief of them, added faith in Christ, they teaching them the knowledge of the true God, and the way in which he would be worshipped, and shewing them what was good, and what the Lord required of them. They also were writ by, and made frequent mention of the Spirit of God, of the new covenant God would establish with them, of the sufferings of Christ, and of the glory that should follow, 1 Pet. 1. 11. of his prophetical, priestly, and his kingly office, of an Emmanuel that should be born to them, whose name should be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace, Is. 7. 1. 14. and 9. 6. It is not therefore to be wondered that whilst our Saviour was on earth, he only called them to repentance, and faith in the promised Messiah.

Moreover, St Paul's sermon, Acts 13. was preached to the children of the stock of Abraham, ver. 26. and yet he preached to them not only that Jesus was the Christ, but also that he died, and rose again, and that remission of sins was to be obtained through his name ; and that by him all that believed were to be justified from all those things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses, verse 38. 39. And though we find him once disputing in the school of one Tyrannus, we seldom find him preach any where but in a Jewish synagogue. Others also preached to the same persons : for they that were dispersed upon the persecution of St Stephen, preached to the Jews only, Acts 11. 19.

We have, in the whole Acts of the apostles, mention only of four persons who were not Jews by birth, to whom the gospel was thus preached ; one of these was the eunuch, who was before a worshipper of God, and, as is probably conjectured, of the Jews religion ; and therefore came up to Jerusalem to worship. St Paul preached to Lydia in a Jewish synagogue, Acts 16. 13. 14. and she was also one that worshipped God, and so in all probability of the Jews religion. The centurion to whom St Peter preached, was one that feared God, wrought righteousness, was much in prayer and alms ; and yet St Peter, before his baptism, preaches to him and his friends, of the word that God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ ; declaring how he was anointed by God with the Holy Ghost, healed all that were oppressed of the devil, suffered and rose again, that he was made Lord of all things, that he was ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and the dead, and that through his name whosoever believed in him should receive remission of sins, sins, Acts 10. 36. 43. The only Heathen family that St Paul admits to baptism, is the jailor's; and he first preaches to them the word of the Lord, Acts 16. 32. i. e. say even the Socinians, he summarily expounded to them (d) who this Jesus, this Son of God, was, what miracles he did, how he was crucified by the Jews, raised up again by God, taken up into heaven, made Lord of all things; what promises he had made, what precepts he injoined. I know this author saith, that preaching the word was only preaching that Jesus was the Messiah; but the scriptures cited by him do not say so; for the word mentioned Acts 10. 37. is the whole word which God sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ. It is the word of the gospel, Acts 15. 7. It contains the whole ministry of the gospel, Acts 6. 4. All the counsel of God, being the word of his grace which was able to build them up, and give them an inheritance among them who were sanctified through faith in Christ, Acts 20. 27. 32. It cannot therefore be concluded from the preaching of our Lord, or his apostles, that they thought nothing more was necessary to be believed by Christians saving this one article, that Jesus was the Christ.

2. The belief of this proposition, That Christ is the Messiah, and the Son of God, may well be represented as the chief initiating article of Christian faith; because where it is heartily professed, it carries with it a profession of believing all Christ's sayings, and of obeying all his precepts: and where it cordially is embraced, it produceth both this faith and practice. That Jesus is the Christ, as it is the principal article of pure faith, the most peculiar doctrine of our religion, as it stands opposed to that of Judaism; so doth it virtually comprehend all other doctrines of moment in it, regarding either faith or practice. For to believe him to be the Christ, is to believe him to be a prophet sent from God to teach the way of life unto us, John 3. 3. even that prophet which was to come into the world. Hence Christ applies these words to himself, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel, &c. Luke 4. 18. Now, sure, we are obliged to embrace as truth whatsoever was taught by such a prophet, and to obey all his precepts upon pain of destruction; for whosoever will not hear this prophet, shall be destroyed from the people, Acts 3. 23.

Again, To believe him to be the Christ, is to believe him to be the Son of God, according to that profession of St Peter, Thou art Christ the Son of the living God, Matth. 16. 16. and the inquiry of the high priest, Art thou the Christ the Son of God? Matth. 26. 63. Now, this lays an obligation upon us to hear, that is, obey him; according to those words of God, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, hear him, Matth. 17. 5. It is also to believe him to be our Lord and King, according to those words of the angel, To you is born a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord, Luke 2. 11. and of Nathanael, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel. Now, this relation calls for obedience: For why, saith our Saviour, call you me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say? Luke 6. 46. and that on penalty of ruin from him, when he shall say, Bring these mine enemies, who would not I should reign over them, and slay them before me, Luke 19. 27. It was also Jesus who was called Christ, even that Jesus who was to save his people from their sins, and a Saviour to give repentance and remission of sins, Matth. 1. 21. Now upon such a king, and such a Saviour, we may securely rely for the obtainment of all the blessings and rewards which he hath promised to the obedient. Hence we may learn, that it was highly reasonable, that the apostles should begin their preaching with proving and persuading this doctrine; that they should give such great commendations, annex such excellent privileges, offer such high rewards to the hearty belief of such a comprehensive article, and should admit them to baptism who professed it; since, "by that bap-"tism," saith this author, p. 196. 197. "they own-"ed themselves the subjects of this Jesus whom "they believed to be their Messiah," i. e. the prophet sent from God to teach them, "and re-"ceived him for their Lord and King; and this "was the solemn visible act whereby they who "believed him to be the Messiah, received him as "their King, and professed obedience to him," and so "were admitted as subjects into his king-"dom." For as every one who was circumcised became a debtor to obey the whole law of Moses, Gal. 5. 3. and therefore to believe it; so every person baptized being of age, doth by that very baptism profess to believe all the doctrines, and obey the precepts of the holy Jesus, into whose name he is baptized. And therefore though St John here says, He that confesseth that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, chap. 4. 15. and, Every one that believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God, chap. 5. 1.; yet he requires of the same persons, in order to the same ends, that they should walk in the truth of the gospel, in conformity to the example of Christ, and to the love of God, and in obedience to his commands; and adds, that he that is born of God sinneth not, neither can sin; "clearly in-"sinuating, that this proposition, when cordially "embraced, will produce a faith and practice an-"swerable to it in our lives."

ANNOTATIONS

First EPISTLE GENERAL of St JOHN.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. THat which was [a] from the beginning (of the goſpel-diſpenſation, that) which we have heard, which [b] we have ſeen (i. e. diſcerned as clearly as if we had ſeen it) with our eyes, (that) which we have looked upon, and our hands have (as it were) handled of the word of life, (declare we to you.)

2. (Nor have ye the leaſt reaſon to ſuſpect our teſtimony, either of this life, or the author, and procurer of it); for the life (we ſpeak of) was manifeſted (in the author, and the promiſe of it), and we have ſeen, (or known), and bear witneſs (to it), and ſhew unto you [c] that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifeſted unto us.

3. That which we have ſeen and heard (of this word of life), declare we unto you, that ye alſo may have [d] fellowſhip with us (in the ſame life): and truly our fellowſhip is [e] with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

4. And theſe things write we unto you, that your joy may be full, (i. e. that believing this eternal life, you may rejoice with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. 1. 8. 9. For which cauſe you muſt carefully attend to another meſſage he hath ſent by us.)

5. This then (and this) is the meſſage which we have heard of him, (i. e. from God by Jeſus Chriſt), and declare unto you, that God is light, (a pure and ſpotleſs ſpirit), and in him is no darkneſs at all: (nothing of impurity or iniquity in his commands, which are all holy, Rom. 7. 12. or in his actions, as in the Heathen deities, he being holy in all his works.)

6. (And therefore) if we ſay that we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſs, we lie, and do not (ſpeak) the truth:

7. But if we walk in the light, [f] as he is in the light, (endeavouring to be holy as he is holy), we have [g] fellowſhip one with another, and the [h] blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all (thoſe) ſins (which might obſtruct our communion with this holy God, and our attainment of the life thus manifeſted to us.)

8. (And of this expiation we have all need, for) [i] if we ſay that we have no ſin (to be thus cleanſed from), we deceive ourſelves, and the truth is not in us; (for in many things we offend all, Jam. 3. 2. and therefore are required to pray daily for the remiſſion of our ſins, and have, even after our regeneration, need of this advocate for the propitiation of our ſins, chap. 2. 1. 2. See 1 Kings 8. 46. Eccl. 7. 21.

9. (But) if we confeſs (theſe) our ſins, he (who hath made this new covenant in the blood of Chriſt, that he will be merciful to our iniquities, Heb. 8. 8.) is faithful (to his promiſe), and juſt to forgive forgive us our ſins, (upon the ſatisfaction made to his juſtice by the death of Chriſt), and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs.

10. (But) if we (continue to) ſay that we have not ſinned, (and therefore do not need this expiation through the blood of Chriſt), we make him a liar, (who hath declared both in the Old and New Teſtament, that all have ſinned, and fallen ſhort of the glory of God, Rom. 1. 23.), and his word is not in us.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. I.

Verſe 1. [a] Ὃ Ἦν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς.] This I here render, from the beginning of the goſpel-diſpenſation; becauſe I find that is the conſtant import of the phraſe in this epiſtle, and elſewhere, where it relates to what Chriſtians had heard, and ſeen, as here. In this ſenſe is, That which you have heard ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, uſed ſix times by our apoſtle in theſe epiſtles; viz. 1 epiſt. chap. 2. 7. 24. twice; chap. 3. 11. epiſt. 2. ver. 6. So, The commandment which we have received ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, 1 epiſt. 2. 7. 2 epiſt. ver. 5. doth neceſſarily import its being Chriſt's new commandment of love. So, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς αὐτόπται, are thoſe who from the beginning of Chriſt's preaching were witneſſes of what he ſaid and did, Luke 1. 2. And in this ſenſe Chriſt ſaith to his diſciples, You have been with me ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, John 15. 27. Acts 1. 21.

Ibid. [b] Ὃ ἑωράκαμεν, which we have ſeen.] That is, in ſcripture-phraſe, ſaid to be ſeen, and looked upon, which is as truly known and diſcerned by us, as if we had ſeen it. So the Jews are ſaid to do the things which they have ſeen with their Father, John 8. 38.; and to have ſeen the end of the Lord's dealing with Job, James 5. 11. So we are ſaid to ſee God, or not to ſee him, 1 John 3. 6. Eph. 3. 11.; to ſee the life here, ver. 2. So alſo ψηλαφᾶν, when applied to ſpiritual things, is not to touch with the hand, but to apprehend with the mind, Acts 17. 27. I confeſs, all theſe things are more properly true of the Word made fleſh; of whom the apoſtles declared what they had heard from him, and ſeen of him, who ſaw his glory, John 1. 14. and what one of them had touched. But then the λόγος agreeing only to the divine nature, a metaphorical ſenſe muſt be allowed, in ſeeing and handling that.

Ver. 2. [c] Τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον ἥτις ἦν πρὸς τὸν πατέρα, that eternal life which was with the Father.] Thus of our eternal life, the apoſtle ſaith, it is hid with Chriſt in God, Col. 3. 3. And of the evangelical diſpenſation, That, before the revelation of it by Chriſt and his apoſtles, it was a myſtery hid in God, Eph. 3. 9. But this alſo may be applied to the divine λόγος, ſtyled by this apoſtle life eternal, chap. 5. 20. who was in the boſom of the Father, and was manifeſted to us, John 1. 18. Yet two things ſeem to favour the firſt interpretation.

1. That the phraſe here uſed, being not, ἦν ἐν ἀρχῇ ὤν, he ſubſiſted in the beginning of all things; but only ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἦν, he was from the beginning: this phraſe excludes not his creation, as the other ſeems to do; and, as I have obſerved, it chiefly is applied by this apoſtle, to the beginning of the goſpel-diſpenſation.

2. That though ὁ λόγος and ζωὴ, abſolutely put, are ſpoken of Chriſt, yet ὁ λόγος τῆς ζωῆς, is never uſed concerning the perſon of Chriſt, but is expreſsly uſed of that word by which eternal life is manifeſted; as when we are bid to hold faſt λόγον ζωῆς, the word of life, Phil. 2. 16. and when the apoſtles are bid to teach τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς, the words of this life, Acts 5. 20. See Acts 13. 26.

Ver. 3. [d] Κοινωνίαν μεθ' ἡμῶν, fellowſhip with us.] It doth not follow hence, as Eſthius imagines, that no man can have fellowſhip with God, who hath not fellowſhip with the church, (though that be doubtleſs true of fellowſhip with the inviſible church, united to Chriſt by the Spirit, and ſo made an habitation of God through the Spirit, and of fellowſhip in doctrine, and communion with the church of the apoſtles): for as like precious faith with us, is only ſuch faith as we have, 2 Pet. 2. 1. ſo here, fellowſhip with us, is only ſuch fellowſhip as we have.

Ibid. [e] Μετὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς, with the Father.] We being heirs of God, joint heirs with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17. and being united to, and having communion with the Father and the Son, by the Spirit of both dwelling in us, John 14. 21. 23. Eph. 2. 21. 22. Rom. 8. 9. 11.; and he being to us the earneſt of this life, 2 Cor. 1. 22. and 5. 5. Eph. 1. 13. 14. who ſeals us up to the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30.

Ver. 7. [f] Ὡς αὐτὸς ἐστιν ἐν τῷ φωτὶ, as he is in the light.] That this metaphor of light relates not to the knowledge or the felicity, but to the purity of the divine nature, appears, 1ſt, From the injunction, to walk in the light, as he is in the light; for we are not any where bid to reſemble God in knowledge, or in happineſs, but we are commanded to be holy as he is holy. 2dly, From the darkneſs ſet in oppoſition to it; which doth not refer ſo much to the ignorance of men, as to the vices they practiſed in a ſtate of ignorance. See note on Rom. 13. 12.

Ibid. [g] Κοινωνίαν ἔχομεν μετ' ἀλλήλων, we have communion with one another.] Some manuſcripts read, μετ' αὐτοῦ, with him; which either is the true reading, or gives the true ſenſe of the other reading; i. e. We have communion with God, and he with us; as is evident from ver. 6. Moreover, the apoſtle had ſaid nothing before of our communion with one another, but only of our fellowſhip with God, ver. 6.; with the Father and the Son, ver. 3.; which makes it reaſonable to refer the words to that communion, of which the apoſtle ſo often ſpeaketh in this epiſtle. See chap. 2. 5. 6. 24. chap. 3. 24. and chap. 4. 13. Notwithſtanding, it is true, that then we have communion with one another, by virtue of that Holy Spirit, which enlightens us, and enables us to walk in the light.

Ibid. [b] Τὸ αἷμα Χριστοῦ, the blood of Chriſt cleanſeth us from all ſin.] This cannot well relate to that effect of the blood of Chriſt, which we call juſtification by faith in his blood, or the remiſſion of our paſt ſins, by virtue of our faith in Chriſt dying for us; for that follows immediately upon our faith, and cannot require that an habit of purity, or of walking in the light, ſhould precede it: it therefore ſeemeth to refer to thoſe ſinful infirmities and defects, which, in this ſtate of imperfection, cleave to our beſt actions, and even good men are ſtill ſubject to, and which do not deprive us of the divine favour, or of an entrance into that new Jeruſalem, into which nothing enters that is polluted, or unclean; becauſe in this new covenant of grace, eſtabliſhed in the death of Chriſt, his blood doth cleanſe all faithful and ſincere Chriſtians from the guilt of them.

Ver. 8. The blood of Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.] Here note, that theſe words confute the Quakers, who hold that thoſe who are in the light, are guilty of no ſin; for were this ſo, they could be cleanſed from none by the blood of Jeſus. See the text defended, Examen Millii.

Ibid. et Ver. 10. [i] The queſtion is, Of whom the apoſtle here ſpeaketh, Whether of ſincere Chriſtians, after their converſion to the Chriſtian faith, or only of them conſidered before they entered on that ſtate. That St John here ſpeaks only of the latter, is argued from theſe conſiderations.

1. That the apoſtle doth plainly teach the contrary to the firſt expoſition, by ſaying, He that is born of God, ſinneth not, chap. 3. 9. and 5. 18. But to this I ſhall return an anſwer in the comment on thoſe places.

2. That the words run, in the præterperfect tenſe, If we ſay, οὐκ ἡμαρτήκαμεν, we have not ſinned; whereas ſome ſingle acts of leſſer ſins they were then ſtill ſubject to, to whom he ſpeaks.

Anſ. True; and therefore he adviſeth them to confeſs them, that they might obtain forgiveneſs of them: now, confeſſion of them muſt be after they have been committed.

3. Becauſe this phraſe, ἁμαρτίαν ἔχειν, to have ſin, is ſtill uſed of ſuch ſins as will condemn us at the laſt, John 9. 41. and 15. 22. 24. and 19. 11.

Anſ. The text cited from chap. 19. 11. is impertinent; the other two may be taken abſolutely, as to the matter ſpoken of; i. e. They had been guilty of no ſin of infidelity, if Chriſt had not come to them, or if he had not proved his miſſion, chap. 15. 22. 24. or if they had wanted means to diſcern the truth, chap. 9. 41. Nor would their ſin of infidelity have been condemning, had they confeſſed it, and forſaken it.

Since then the apoſtle was ſpeaking, ver. 7. of them who walked in the light, who had communion with God, and who were cleanſed from the guilt of ſin: and ver. 8. goes on to add, If we ſay we have no ſin; it ſeems more probable, that he ſpeaks there at leaſt of the ſame perſons.

Note alſo, That ſome of the Jews (a) profeſſed to be ἀναμάρτητοι πρὸς Θεόν, καὶ μηδεμιᾶς μετέχοντες, ſupply ἁμαρτίας, free from all ſins and offences againſt God; and of ſuch may the laſt verſe be interpreted: they varying in this, from the doctrine of other Jews; for Maimonides (b) truly ſaith, "Nullus homo dari poteſt qui non peccet, vel ignoranter in "dogmate et ſententia aliqua amplectenda, aut "qualitate eligenda quæ non eligenda eſt, vel ob "iræ, aliorumque effectuum, vehementiam et præ-"dominationem."

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. MY little children, theſe things (concerning the neceſſity of walking in the light, and putting off the deeds of darkneſs) write I unto you, that ye ſin not, (i. e. that ye live not in any courſe of ſin). And [a] if any man (through the infirmity of the fleſh, be overtaken with a) ſin, we (Chriſtians) have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, (the juſt One, in whom was no ſin, 1 Pet. 3. 18.):

2. And [b] he is the propitiation for our ſins: and not for ours only, but [c] alſo for the ſins of the whole world.

3. [d] And hereby (Gr. in this) we do know that we know (Gr. have known) him (truly and acceptably), if we keep his commandments.

4. He that ſaith, I (have) know-(n) him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him: (he is a falſe pretender to the knowledge of God; for ſuch perſons do in words profeſs to know God, but in works they deny him, being diſobedient, disobedient, Tit. 1. 16. They likewise know not Jesus Christ according to the truth, Eph. 4. 21.)

5. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the • love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

6. ' He that saith he abideth in him (in Christ, by the Spirit), ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7. Brethren, I write « no new commandment unto you, (when I thus call upon you to walk in the light, as he is in the light, or to walk as Christ walked), but an old commandment which you had from the beginning (of Christ's preaching, John 3. 21. and 8. 12. and 12. 35. See note on chap. 1. ver. 1.): the old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8. » Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (who is the author of it; for no such light ever came into the world before, and no such love was manifested to the world before) and in you, (who before were darkness, but are now light in the Lord, Eph. 5. 8; children of the light, and of the day, 1 Thess. 5. 5.; and to whom not long ago the light appeared, 2 Cor. 4. 6.; and who are taught of God to love one another, 1 Thess. 4. 9.): because (by your late receiving the gospel) the (former) darkness (you were in) is past, and the true light now shineth (in, and upon you: wherefore the night of ignorance and darkness being far spent, and the day being nigh at hand, and shining more and more upon you, you are obliged to put off the works of darkness, and to put on the armour of light, Rom. 13. 12. Or thus:) Again, (being now to speak to you of Christian love), a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him (for thus he speaks, A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another, as I have loved you, John 13. 34.) and in you: because (it shews) the darkness (you were in whilst Jews, bearing affection only to them of your own nation and religion) is past, and the true light (of the gospel) now shineth (upon you).

9. He that saith he is in the light, (that he lives under the influences of the light of the gospel, and walks according to it), and (yet) hateth his brother, (wishing ill to him, and, from that disaffection doing ill offices to him), is (whatever he professes to the contrary) in darkness even until now. (But)

10. He that loveth his brother, (as Christ loved us, being willing to do him all kind offices which he is able, from love to God, and as a fellow-member of Christ's body), abideth in the light, and there is ' no occasion of stumbling (Gr. no scandal) in him.

11. But he that hateth his brother, ^ is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither (the way leads in which) he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes, (John 12. 35.)

12. ' I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14. I have written unto you, fathers, because you have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15. Love not the world, (i. e. neither the men of the world who will not own you, but hate and persecute you, chap. 3. 1. 13. and who live in wickedness, chap. 5. 19. love them not, so as to be conformed to their manners, Rom. 12. 2.), neither the things that are in the world, (the pleasures, honours, or enjoyments of it, so as to cleave to them, Matth. 6. 24.; or to be unwilling to part with them for Christ's sake, and to secure the favour of God, Matth. 19. 28.). If any man (thus) loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him; (for seeing God is to be loved above all, he loves him not at all truly, who cleaves to any other thing in opposition to him, or hazards his favour to secure it.)

16. For all that is in (vogue or esteem with the men of) the world, the lust of the flesh, (all voluptuous enjoyments, which tend to sensuality and intemperance, and making provision for the flesh), and the lust of the eyes, (the desire of gold, silver, stately houses, rich furniture, fair gardens, which tend to gratify the eye), and the pride of life, (the desire of places of dignity, high titles, all the honour, glory, and splendour of the world, which tends to gratify our pride), is not of the Father, (they are not desires excited by him, nor is it according to his will, that we should set our hearts upon them), but is (the desire) of (the men of) the world, (whose chief concern is to gratify these sensual appetites.)

17. And the world passeth away, and the (things which minister to the) lusts thereof: but he that doth the will of God, abideth for ever.

18. Little children, it is the last time, (or hour of the Jewish œconomy): and as ye have heard that » antichrist shall (shortly) come, (so) even now are there many antichrists, (i. e. opposers of Christ, and deniers of him to be the Christ, ver. 22.); whereby we (may) know that it is the last time.

19. ▪ They went out from us (Christians of Judea, Acts 15. 1. and from us the apostles, Acts 15. 24.), but they were not of us, (but were false brethren, Gal. 2. 4. and false apostles, 2 Cor. 11. 13.): for if they had been of us, (conspiring with us the apostles and true churches of Christ, in the doctrine and truth of the gospel), they would no doubt have (Gr. μεμνήκεισαν ἀν, they might have ſtill) continued with us, (preaching that doctrine which we teach): but (they went out from us), that they might be made manifeſt, [o] that they were not all (Gr. that they all were not) of us.

20. But ye have an unction [p] from the holy One, [q] and ye know all things: (ye to whom I write; which ſhews, he ſpeaks not of the Chriſtians of all ages in general, but of them in particular.)

21. I have not written to you, becauſe you know not the truth, (i. e. to inſtruct you as perſons ignorant of it): but becauſe ye know it, and that no lie (uttered by theſe antichriſts and falſe prophets) is of (or, hath any communion with) the truth (of the goſpel.)

22. Who is a liar but he who denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt? (i. e. who ſo emphatically deſerves that title, ſeeing) he is antichriſt (by way of eminency), [r] who denieth the Father and the Son.

23. (And let not the Jewiſh antichriſts pretend, this belongs not to them who know the Father; for) whoſoever denieth the Son (of God), the ſame hath not (the true knowledge of) the Father.

24. Let that (doctrine) therefore abide in you, which you have heard from the beginning (preached to you. For) if that which you have heard from the beginning ſhall remain (and bring forth its due fruits) in you, ye ſhall continue in the Son, and in the Father, (united to them by the Spirit, who alſo will inſtruct you in the ſaving knowledge of them both, John 14. 23. and 6. 56.)

25. [s] And this is the promiſe which he hath promiſed us, (who thus remain in him, viz.) eternal life.

26. Theſe things have I written unto you concerning them that ſeduce you, (i. e. who endeavour ſo to do.)

27. [t] But (this not out of abſolute neceſſity, as if through ignorance you could not otherwiſe be preſerved from their ſeductions, ver. 2. For) the anointing which ye have received of him (who is your head), abideth in (or, among) you: and (ſo) you need not that any man (ſhould) teach you: But, as the ſame anointing (i. e. ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge) teacheth you all things (neceſſary), and (for it) is truth, and is no lie: and even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him.

28. And now, (καὶ νῦν, now therefore), little children, abide in him, (in the profeſſion and practice of what he hath taught you); that when he ſhall appear, we may have confidence (of the life promiſed to them that do ſo, ver. 25.), and (may) not be aſhamed before him (Gr. may not be put to ſhame by him, or, go aſhamed from him) at his coming (to judgment, chap. 4. 17. as being judged by him unworthy of this life; as we ſhall not be, if we be found doing righteouſneſs; for)

29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doth righteouſneſs, is born of him; (as being born again of the Spirit derived from him, and ſo become a ſon of God, and an heir of life, Rom. 8. 14. 17. and by this Spirit ſealed up unto the day of redemption, Eph. 4. 30.)

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. II.

Ver. 1. [a] Ἐάν τις ἁμάρτῃ, And if any man ſin.] Though this is not to be interpreted of ſins of infirmity only, yet ſince the apoſtle is here ſpeaking of his little children, whoſe paſt ſins were already forgiven them for his name's ſake, ver. 12. 16. and the apoſtle would not encourage them in wilful or habitual ſins, I think, as it relates to them, it chiefly is to be referred to thoſe ſins of ignorance, weakneſs, and infirmity, which will be pardoned by the tenor of the new covenant, through Chriſt's interceſſion.

Ver. 2. [b] Ἱλασμός ἐστι περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, he is the propitiation for our ſins.] In the Old Teſtament the ſin-offering which made atonement for a treſpaſs, that it might be forgiven, is called κριὸς ἱλασμοῦ, the ram of atonement, Lev. 6. 6. 7. Numb. 5. 8. and that which in the law is φέρειν, or προσάγειν τὸ περὶ ἁμαρτίας, to bring an offering for ſin, is, in Ezekiel, φέρειν ἱλασμὸν, to bring an atonement, or propitiation, chap. 44. 27. When therefore it is ſaid here of Jeſus Chriſt, that he is ἱλασμὸς, the propitiation for our ſins, and chap. 4. 10. that God ſent him into the world, to be ἱλασμὸν, the propitiation for our ſins, have we not reaſon to conclude, he was ſo our propitiation, as were all the ſin-offerings of the Jews for them, viz. by ſuffering in our ſtead, to make atonement for our ſins, and ſo to render God propitious to us, in the forgiveneſs of them? Moreover, why is he ſtyled Jeſus Chriſt the juſt, or righteous, who made propitiation for our ſins, if he intended not to intimate, that the juſt ſuffered inſtead of the unjuſt, to make atonement for their ſins? To this Crellius replies, that δίκαιος ſhould be rendered, not the juſt, but the faithful.

Anſ. This is to ſay, It muſt here ſignify, not what it ordinarily and truly ſignifies, but what it both improperly and rarely ſignifies; and when it is aſcribed to Chriſt, as here it is, it never ſignifies: for it is aſcribed to him elſewhere ten times in the New Teſtament, Matth. 27. 24. Luke 23. 47. Acts 3. 14. and 7. 52. and 22. 14. 2 Tim. 4. 8. 1 Pet. 3. 18. Rev. 16. 5. and in thoſe places it doth always ſignify that juſt, or righteous perſon; yea, in this very chapter, and the next, it is twice ſpoken of him, firſt, in theſe theſe words, ver. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doth righteouſneſs is born of him; and chap. 3. 7. He that doth righteouſneſs is righteous, even as he is righteous. Where it is evident, that it retains its proper ſenſe. Why therefore, in the place conteſted, ſhould it import that, which, when it is applied to Chriſt, it never ſignifies?

Object. And whereas Crellius objects, That the apoſtle ſpeaks of Chriſt here, as of our advocate in heaven, where he doth not ſatisfy God, or ſuffer any puniſhment on our account:

Anſ. I anſwer, That ſeeing Chriſt there intercedes, by virtue of his blood ſhed to ſatisfy for our offences, and of the death he ſuffered as the puniſhment of our iniquities; the parallel runs clearly thus: That as the ſacrifices of the Old Teſtament were ſlain, and the blood ſhed, before it was brought to the mercy-ſeat, and yet the high prieſt made atonement with it, when, at his entrance into the holy place, he offered up that blood to God in his peculiar preſence; ſo though our Lord was ſlain, and ſhed his blood on earth, yet may he make atonement in the preſence of God with it, by virtue of the ſufferings he endured when his blood was ſhed.

Ibid. [a] Περὶ ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου, for the ſins of the whole world;] i. e. of all men in general. For when he ſaith, He is the propitiation for our ſins, ſure he intends this comfort to all them to whom he ſpeaks, and means not that Chriſt was the propitiation for ſome of their ſins only; for this would have left them all in doubt whether this advocate, and this propitiation, did belong to them, but would have comforted none of them. When then he adds, he is the propitiation, not for our ſins only, but for the ſins of the whole world, he, in like manner, muſt extend this phraſe to all men in the world.

Again, When he ſaith, He is the propitiation for our ſins; he doth not mean, that he was ſo ſufficiently, but not intentionally: for what comfort would that afford them, that his death was ſufficient to procure the pardon of their ſins, had God deſigned it for that end, unleſs they alſo knew that he intended it for their propitiation? When therefore he proceeds to ſay, and not for ours only, but for the ſins of the whole world, he muſt mean alſo, that he was the propitiation for their ſins, not only ſufficiently, but alſo in his gracious intention. And indeed, otherwiſe, it might as properly have been ſaid of the fallen angels, or the whole hoſt of devils, he is the propitiation for their ſins, as for the ſins of thoſe who are not elected; ſeeing had God deſigned it for that end, Chriſt's death, by reaſon of its intrinſic value, might have been ſufficient to procure atonement for the ſins of fallen angels. Laſtly, The import of theſe words cannot be only this, He died, or is the propitiation for the ſins of the elect throughout the world. For, 1. The whole world, in ſcripture, never ſignifies the elect only, in oppoſition to the wicked in the whole world; but in this very epiſtle, and in theſe words, We know that we are of God, and that the whole world lies in wickedneſs, chap. 5. 19. it plainly ſignifies, the wicked of the world, in oppoſition to the faithful Chriſtians. 2. Would it not be ſtrange, and alien from the mind of ſcripture, to ſay, The whole world is elected to ſalvation; the whole world ſhall be juſtified by Chriſt, and ſanctified by his Spirit dwelling in them, and obtain an happy reſurrection: and yet all this muſt be true of the whole world of the elect? Why therefore are none of theſe things equally affirmed of the whole world, as well as that Chriſt died, and is the propitiation for the ſins of the whole world, if they be words of equal latitude and truth? Theſe arguments are as ſtrong againſt the expoſition of others, who ſay, the apoſtle means, not only for the ſins of the Jews, but alſo of the Gentiles.

Ibid. If we ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, and he is the propitiation for our ſins.] Moreover, this being ſpoken by this apoſtle to his little children, whoſe paſt ſins were already forgiven, ver. 12. muſt relate to their future ſins, to which they might be afterwards obnoxious, and therefore muſt ſuppoſe them ſtill ſubject to ſins of infirmity.

Ver. 3. [a] It is a rule in divinity, that verba notitiæ denotant affectum, adde et effectum: i. e. "That when "the knowledge of God or Chriſt is put abſolutely, "it ſignifies a knowledge which is fruitful in love, "and obedience as the effect of that love and know-"ledge." Whence they who diſobey him are ſtill, in ſcripture, ſaid, not to know God, 1 Sam. 2. 12. Hoſ. 5. 14. Jer. 2. 8. and 9. 3. Tit. 1. 16. and here, ver. 4.; and they that do what is acceptable and delightful to him, are ſaid to know him, Jer. 22. 15. 16. and 24. 7. and 31. 33. 34. Hoſ. 2. 19. 20. John 10. 4. Eph. 3. 19.

Moreover, it is obſervable, that many of the Jews had an apprehenſion, that their knowledge and belief of the true God would be ſufficient for their juſtification and acceptance with him: whence they are repreſented as boaſting in God, and in the knowledge of his will, Rom. 2. 17. 18. and expecting juſtification on this account, that they believed there was one God, James 2. 19.; and this might cauſe the apoſtle to be ſo diligent in teaching them, that the true knowledge of God conſiſted in keeping his commandments.

Ver. 5. [a] Ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, the love of God perfected.] The love of God here, may ſignify either God's love to us, as when it is ſaid, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of God which is (ſhewed to us) in Chriſt Jeſus? Rom. 8. 39. and, that the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts through the Spirit that he hath given us, Rom. 5. 5.; ſee Jude, ver. 21. And then this love is perfected in us by that aſſurance the Holy Spirit giveth of it, and that humble confidence we have of it, becauſe we keep his commandments, chap. 3. 21. 22. So the apoſtle ſeems to interpret this perfection in love, chap. 4. 16. 17. 18. Or, 2. This love may ſignify our love to God and Chriſt; as when Chriſt upbraids the Phariſees with the want of the love of God, Luke 11. 42. and ſaith to the Jews, I know that you have not the love of God in you, John 5. 42.; and when Chriſt ſaith, He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me, ſhall be loved of my Father, John 14. 21. and ver. 23. If any man love me, he will keep my word; and my Father will love him, and we will come to him, and take up our abode with him. And this love is perfected in us, by keeping his commandments, becauſe that ſhews we are fully inſtructed in the nature of that love, which is one ſenſe of perfection; ſee note on 1 Cor. 2. 6. And it engages us to the ſincere performance of our whole duty to God, which is another ſenſe of the word perfection: And hereby we know that we are in him, even by this Spirit, by which God abideth in us, chap. 3. 24. and who ſheds abroad the ſenſe of the divine love in our hearts.

Note alſo, That hence we may paſs a certain eſtimate of neceſſary and fundamental doctrines; for if they be ſuch as are neceſſary to the love of God to us, or to that love of ours to him, which conſiſts in keeping his commandments, they are doctrines truly neceſſary to ſalvation: if not, they cannot be ſo, becauſe we may truly love God, and abide in his love, without the knowledge of them.

Ver. 6. [f] For ſeeing we abide in God the Father and the Son, only by the communion of the Spirit, chap. 3. 24. and 4. 13.; whence he that is in Chriſt, is one ſpirit with him, 1 Cor. 6. 17. and he that hath not the Spirit of Chriſt, is none of his, Rom. 8. 9. We that are animated with the ſame Spirit that was in Chriſt, as we are enabled, ſo alſo are we thereby engaged to walk after his example, or, to walk in the light as he is in the light, chap. 1. 7.

Ver. 7. [g] Οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν, no new commandment.] Moſt interpreters conceive this relates to the commandment of Chriſtian love, that being the commandment which they are ſaid to have heard from the beginning, chap. 3. 11. and ſaid to be on that account no new commandment, Eph. 2. 5. and yet being ſtyled by Chriſt, a new commandment, John 13. 34. Nor are the arguments of Epiſcopius againſt this expoſition cogent. For whereas,

Object. 1. He objects, that theſe words ſeem to be ſpoken to remove the thought of ſome, that he was propounding a new doctrine which they had not learned; whereas no man who was acquainted with the law of Moſes, or even with that of nature, could think the law of charity was new.

Anſ. I anſwer, It is not the law of charity in general which our Lord and his apoſtles ſtyle a new commandment, but that of loving one another as he had loved us, John 13. 34. 35. And this might juſtly be looked on as a new commandment, it being a commandment of laying down our lives for the brethren, chap. 3. 16. and therefore a commandment not contained in the law of nature, nor in that of Moſes.

Object. 2. Whereas he adds, that theſe words, I write unto you, ſeem to reſpect not any thing that was to follow, but which was ſaid before; and to contain this ſenſe, When I write this to you, I write nothing new.

Anſ. I anſwer, that it may be ſo; for having told us, that he that ſaith he abideth in Chriſt, ought alſo to walk as he walked, he may well be conceived to have an eſpecial eye to the great example of love Chriſt ſhewed to mankind, both in his life and death; yet in his expoſition given in the paraphraſe ſeems alſo very probable, by reaſon of the following words, Becauſe the darkneſs is paſt, and the true light now ſhineth; and therefore I ſhall have reſpect to both.

Ver. 8. [h] The ceremonials of the law are ſometimes called a ſhadow, but never darkneſs; and though the Alexandrian manuſcript reads σκιὰ, a ſhadow, yet becauſe all other copies read σκοτία, darkneſs, and the following words, ver. 9. and 11. ſhew that this is the true reading, and becauſe it is ſo eaſy in ſhort writing to miſtake σκοτία for σκιὰ, the interpretation of theſe words, which depends upon that reading, cannot be relied on.

Ver. 10. [i] Σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν, i. e. there is nothing at which he will fall, or ſtumble.] So Pſal. 119. 156. Great peace have they that love thy law, καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν αὐτοῖς σκάνδαλον, and they have no ſtumbling-block. The labour of love they muſt undergo; the evils they may be expoſed to will not hinder them from doing the duty they owe to God, and to their brother for his ſake; but they go on ſecurely and chearfully in it; for perfect love caſts out fear, chap. 4. 18.

Ver. 11. [k] Ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ ἐστὶ, is in darkneſs;] i. e. he lives in great ignorance of his duty, and of the way to life, as not guiding his actions by that light of the goſpel which hath appeared unto him.

Ver. 12. 13. 14. [l] Note, That theſe words may either relate to the foregoing, and then they are to be interpreted as motives to walk in the light, and as Chriſt walked, and, in particular, to walk in Chriſtian love, thus: I have written to you, children, touching this love, and walking in the light, and after Chriſt's example, becauſe your ſins have been forgiven for his name's name's sake; and so, in gratitude to him who hath procured the pardon of them, you ought to walk as he walked, and to love the brethren: ye also have known the Father, and had experience of his love to you, and therefore stand obliged to imitate his love to you, and to walk in the light, that you may still have fellowship with him.

I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him who was from the beginning, i. e. Christ Jesus, and so know how to walk by his example, and to imitate his obedience to the Father, and his love to mankind.

I have written to you, young men, because ye are strong, by virtue of the word of God abiding in you, and by the sword of the Spirit, and shield of faith, have been enabled successfully to combat and overcome that wicked one, who tempts you to the deeds of darkness, and to the hatred of the brethren, chap. 3. 10.

If they relate to the words following, they must be an exhortation to little children, to take off their affections from the world, and place them upon God and Christ, on the account of the love and mercy shewed to them by God the Father through Christ. To the fathers so to do, because they have known Christ, how dead he was to the world, and how he despised the pleasures, honours, and enjoyments of it. To the young men so to do, because they had overcome the wicked one, all whose temptations arise from some allurements or affrightments of the world. Or, lastly, The words may be extended to all he saith to them in this whole epistle, and then both expositions may take place.

Ver. 18. ᵃ Ὁ ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται, antichrist cometh;] to wit, then, in the last hour. And this being represented as the character by which they might know that the last hour was now come, it is manifest, that the last hour cannot signify the end of the world, or include the times of the last judgment; but must be restrained to the last times of the Jewish state, which only were then instant, or at hand.

2. The ὁ ἀντίχριστος, antichrist, then in being, if it refer to any nation, must be the nation of the unbelieving Jews, persecuting and opposing Christianity with their whole might, and denying Jesus to be the Christ, or promised Messiah, and then the many antichrists here mentioned may be the false prophets and deceitful workers, who transformed themselves into the apostles of Christ, 2 Cor. 11. 13. 14. 15. who preached Christ not sincerely, but out of contention, Philip. 1. 15. who as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so also did resist the truth, 2 Tim. 3. 8. who were men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, 1 Tim. 6. 5.

Ver. 19. ᵃ Ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλθον, they went out from us] of Judea: for some κατελθόντες ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰουδαίας, going out from Judea, taught the brethren, that except they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved, Acts 15. 1. and from the apostles, for so they speak, We have heard that τινὲς ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξελθόντες, some going out from us, have troubled you with words, perverting your souls, saying, That ye ought to be circumcised, and to keep the law, ver. 24. The persons who taught these doctrines are styled ψευδάδελφοι, false brethren, Gal. 2. 4. ψευδαπόστολοι, false apostles, deceitful workers, ministers of Satan, 2 Cor. 11. 13. 15. dogs, evil workers, the concision, Philip. 3. 2.; their doctrine tended to the subversion of souls, Acts 15. 24. to the corrupting and turning the minds of men from the simplicity of Christ, 1 Cor. 10. 3. to hinder the truth of the gospel from continuing with them, Gal. 2. 5. to make Christ die in vain, ver. 21. to cause Christians to fall from grace, so that Christ should profit them nothing, Gal. 5. 2. 4.; so that they were false prophets, false apostles, and antichrists, in the worst of senses; and by going out from the apostles and churches of Judea to preach this destructive doctrine to the Gentiles, which both the whole church of Judea, and the apostles assembled for that purpose, flatly disowned and censured, it sufficiently appeared, that all the preachers of these doctrines, so opposite to Christianity, and destructive of it, were not of them. These therefore, doubtless, were some of those many antichrists which the apostle speaks of here, as writing to the Jews; and they also divided and separated themselves from the church, and became heretics under the name of Cerinthians, Nazarenes, and Ebionites. Cerinthus (c) spread his heresy in Asia, the province of St John, saith Theodoret, and was contemporary with the apostles (d); whence the (e) church desired him to write against Cerinthus and the Ebionites; and St John (f) left the bath, because Cerinthus, the enemy of truth, was in it. Moreover, these words, they were not of us, cannot be interpreted of the elect, but of the church in general; for from them they went out, and with them might have remained; not from the elect, who are not viſible, nor could they have remained with the church of the elect, who were never of them. 2. Their going out from them for a ſeaſon was no certain argument they were not of the elect, ſince it is confeſſed they may fall totally, though not finally.

Ibid. ο Ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶ πάντες, that they all were not of us.] So ver. 21. Πᾶν ψεῦδος οὐκ, no lie is of the truth; οὐκ ἂν ἐσώθη πᾶσα σὰρξ, no fleſh ſhould be ſaved, Matth. 24. 22.; οὐ δικαιωθήσεται πᾶσα σὰρξ, no fleſh ſhall be juſtified, Rom. 3. 20.; ſee Gen. 4. 15. Pſal. 143. 2. Luke 1. 37. Hab. 2. 9.

Ver. 20. ρ Ἀπὸ τοῦ ἁγίου, from the holy One;] i. e. from Jeſus Chriſt, emphatically ſo called, Acts 3. 14. Apoc. 3. 7. But then that unction is the Holy Spirit which he hath given to them that believe; for he being anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows, Pſal. 45. 7. anointed by God with the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 10. 38. this grace is given to Chriſtians according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt, Eph. 4. 7. and we all beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame likeneſs, as by the Spirit of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 18.; ſee the note there.

Ibid. ϙ Καὶ οἴδατε πάντα, and ye know all things,] belonging to the ſaving truths of the goſpel, he being promiſed to teach them all things, John 14. 26. and to lead them into all truth, John 16. 13. So Oecumenius, "You have received in baptiſm the "unction of the Holy Spirit, who leads you into all "truth (g)."

Ver. 22. ρ Ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα, that denieth the Father, or hath not the Father.] To deny the Father here, is not to deny him to be the true God, as the Heathens did; but, 1. To deny the truth of his teſtimony; for he that believeth not the teſtimony which God hath given to his Son, hath made him a liar, chap. 5. 10. whereas he that receives his teſtimony, hath ſet to his ſeal that God is true, John 3. 33. 2. To deny the doctrine of the Father, or that doctrine which proceedeth from him; for he whom God hath ſent ſpeaketh the words of God, John 3. 34. Whence it is evident, that he who denieth the Son, cannot thus retain the true knowledge of the Father, becauſe no man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son who is in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him, John 1. 18.: he only hath done it; for no man knoweth the Father but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him, Matth. 11. 27.; by him only can we come acceptably to the Father, ſo as to have life, for he is the way, the truth, and the life, John 14. 6.; and by him only are we taught how to worſhip the Father in ſpirit and in truth, John 4. 23. 24. Hence Chriſt ſo often tells the Jews, they therefore wanted the true knowledge of the Father, becauſe they knew not him, ſaying, Ye neither know me, nor my Father; if ye had known me, ye would have known the Father alſo, John 8. 19. 55. and 14. 7.; And theſe things will they do unto you, becauſe they have not known the Father, nor me, chap. 16. 3.

Ver. 23. See Examen Millii.

Ver. 25. For the fruit of the Spirit is life, Rom. 8. 6 11. 13. 16. 17. Gal. 6. 8.; and he is given as the earneſt of our future inheritance, to ſeal us up to the day of redemption, 2 Cor. 1. 22.; 5. 5. Eph. 1. 13. 14.; 4. 30.; and this life he hath often promiſed to us, John 5. 25. 26. 29.; 6. 27. 29. 33. 39. 40. 47. 50. 51. 54. 57. 58.

Ver. 27. ς Καὶ ὑμεῖς, vos quod attinet, and as for you.] So Iſ. 59. 21. and I, i. e. as for me, this is my covenant; 61. 8. Vaani, κἀγὼ, as for me; ſee 1 Chron. 28. 2.

Ibid. The Quakers and other ſectaries hence argue againſt the neceſſity of the miniſterial function, or any teachers of the word, it being here ſaid, You need not that any teach you, &c. And others ſay, this ſeems to make all ſcripture, and all that the apoſtle writ to them, needleſs. But for anſwer to this objection, I ſay,

1. That it muſt be granted that in thoſe times of the effuſion of the Spirit, and his miraculous gifts upon believers, this unction was promiſed to teach them all things neceſſary, who had then no other rule of knowing what was ſo, but by the teaching of the apoſtles and prophets then among them, acted by this Spirit, and teaching in their aſſemblies, and doing other public offices by this afflatus, and by the Spirit of wiſdom and inſtruction then imparted to them; and hereby they were enabled to diſtinguiſh betwixt pretenders to the Spirit, and thoſe who were really acted by him; ſee note on chap. 4. 1. 2. 3.; and to know they dwelt in Chriſt, becauſe he had thus given them of his Spirit, John 3. 24.; 4. 13.; which things do certainly imply, that they who then had the Spirit, could certainly know they had it, and make an argument of it to try the doctrines and ſpirits of others, and much more in themſelves; but now theſe ſenſible indications, and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit are long ſince ceaſed, and therefore now they are to be directed by thoſe writings which were indited for their perpetual uſe, by men aſſiſted with that Spirit, who led them into all truth: and ſurely if in thoſe times, when the gifts of the Spirit were ſo generally vouchſafed, they were yet taught by apoſtles, prophets, evangeliſts, paſtors, and doctors, aſſiſted by the Spirit for that work, it is reaſonable to believe, that, now theſe gifts are ceaſed,

(g) Ἐλάβετε διὰ τοῦ ἁγίου βαπτίσματος τὸ χρίσμα τὸ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, καὶ διὰ τοῦτο τὸ ὡς πᾶσαν ἀλήθειαν ὑμᾶς διδάσκειν ὑμᾶς θεῖον πνεῦμα.

believers should be yet instructed by pastors and doctors, assisted by the scriptures indited by these spiritual men. And therefore,

2. It is observable, that the apostle doth not here absolutely say, they need not any one should teach them, but only that they need not any one should teach them but as this unction taught them. Now, the apostles having this unction in the highest measure, these words cannot exclude their teachings, or render them unnecessary, but rather must confirm them as a standing rule to all posterity. Till then these sectaries can shew that they have still such an immediate and extraordinary afflatus of the Holy Spirit, as was then vouchsafed to the primitive Christians, they cannot hence conclude the outward ministry of the word, by pastors and doctors set apart for that work, to be unnecessary.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. BEhold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called [a] the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, (i. e. doth not acknowledge, and affect us Christians), because it knew him not. (The heathens being wholly ignorant of the true God, and the Jews not knowing him, according to his will, John 8. 55. and 15. 21. and 16. 3. and as he had discovered himself to them by his Son, 1 John 2. 23. And this may comfort you against the persecutions of the world, that it is their want of that saving knowledge of the true God, which ministers so great advantage to you, which causes them to disaffect you.]

2. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be (made farther partakers of, as the complete import of that title): but (this) we know, that [b] when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

3. And every man that hath this hope in him, (of seeing him in glory), doth purify himself, even [c] as he is pure, (in whom was no sin, ver. 5.)

4. [d] Whosoever committeth sin, transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

5. And ye know that he (i. e. Christ, ver. 3.) was manifested to take away our sins, (not only by suffering to remove the guilt of our past sins, but also to purify us from the power and dominion of it, that henceforth we might not serve sin, Rom. 6. 6. that ἁμαρτίαις ἀπογενόμενοι, being freed from sin, we might live unto righteousness, 1 Pet. 2. 24.); and in him is no sin, (and so our likeness to him must consist in ceasing from it.)

6. Whosoever (therefore) abideth in him, sinneth not: whosoever (thus) sinneth, hath not seen him, neither known him (as the truth is in Jesus, Eph. 4. 21.)

7. Little children, let no man deceive you (with pretensions, that faith without works of righteousness will make you righteous before God; for only) he that doth righteousness, is righteous, even as he (i. e. Christ) is righteous, (by doing the will of his Father, John 15. 10.)

8. [e] He that committeth sin, is of the devil; for the devil (thus) sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested (to the world), that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9. Whosoever is born [f] of God, doth not commit sin; for his seed (the word of God, Matth. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 23.) remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10. In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: Whosoever [g] doth not righteousness, is not of God, neither (is) he (so) that loveth not his brother, (and so both these are children of the devil.)

11. For this is the message which ye have heard from the beginning, (or from the first preaching of the gospel), that we should love one another, (from a pure heart fervently, 1 Pet. 1. 23. and as Christ hath loved us, John 15. 12.)

12. (And if we be not the children of the devil, but of God, we shall) not (be) as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and (therefore) slew his brother: and wherefore slew he him? (viz.) Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous, (as God himself testified by respecting the offering, not of Cain, but of Abel; and this begat in him that hatred which concluded in his brother's death.)

13. (And) marvel not, my brethren, if (in like manner) the world (the seed of Cain, who are also of that wicked one, John 8. 44. 1 John 5. 19.) hate you, (i. e. if they persecute and kill the just, as being condemners of their actions, and alien from their ways and manners, in affection, aim, desires, and therefore hated by them, John 15. 19. For whatsoever they may do to destroy this life;)

14. We know that we have passed from death to life, (i. e. that we have obtained a right to escape death eternal, and enjoy everlasting life, John 5. 24.), because we love the brethren (in deed and truth, ver. 18. for this is a sign that we are translated from darkness to light, chap. 2. 10. and so are the children of the light, yea, that we are born of God, chap. 4. 7. and therefore are children and heirs of God, Rom. 8. 17.): he that loveth not his brother, abideth

deth in (the ſtate, and under the ſentence of) death, (he is ſtill in that darkneſs of ſin and ignorance, chap. 2. 11. which will end in eternal death.)

15. (For) whoſoever hateth his brother, is (in the diſpoſition of his heart, and the conſtruction of God's law) a murderer, (Matth. 5. 21. 22.): and ye know that no murderer (being ſo great and wilful a violator of the moral law) hath eternal life abiding in him; (he therefore muſt be obnoxious to death eternal, till, with holy David, by a deep and long repentance, he is delivered from blood-guiltineſs; as in the caſe of David, 2 Sam. 12. 13.)

16. Hereby perceive we the love of God (to us), becauſe he (who was his beloved Son, at his command, John 10. 18.) laid down his life for us, (i. e. for our ſalvation, and the propitiation of our ſins): and we (alſo) ought (in imitation of this example) to lay down our lives (i. e. expoſe them to the death) for (the ſalvation of) the brethren; (going on in the proſecution of our duty, to win them to life eternal, though with the hazard, and even the loſs of this temporal life.)

17. But (if love requires us to part even with life for them, then) whoſo hath this world's goods, and ſeeth his brother have need (of ſome of them), and (yet) ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, (not being moved out of compaſſion to his indigence to give him what he hath to ſpare), how dwelleth the love of God in him?

18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue (only, James 2. 16.), but in deed and in truth, (in true affection of heart, 1 Pet. 1. 22. and in ſincerity of action, Rom. 12. 9. by love ſerving one another, Gal. 5. 13. not pitying only, but relieving them according to their wants, and our ability to ſupply them.)

19. And hereby we (may) know that [b] we are of the truth, and ſhall [i] aſſure our hearts before him.

20. For if our heart (the inward witneſs of our thoughts and actions) condemn us (of want of ſincerity, and obedience to the truth of the goſpel), God is greater than our heart, (both in holineſs to condemn), and (in knowledge to perceive the evil of them, for he) knoweth all things.

21. (Whereas), beloved, if our heart (after a diligent ſearch of it, and a comparing of our actions with the law of liberty) condemn us not (of inſincerity in our obedience), then have we (humble) confidence towards God (in our addreſſes.)

22. And whatſoever we aſk (according to his will, John 5. 14.), we receive of him, becauſe we keep his commandments, and do thoſe things which are pleaſing in his ſight.

23. And this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and love one another, as he gave us commadment.

24. And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, (i. e. in God), and he (God) in him: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by (the efficacious gifts of) [k] the Spirit which he hath given us.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. III.

Verſe 1. [a] Τέκνα θεοῦ, the ſons of God.] The Jews were ſtyled the children, and the ſons of God, becauſe they owned him as their God and Father, and entered into covenant to ſerve him, and ſo became an holy people to the Lord; and he had choſen them to be his people, Deut. 14. 1. So we are all the ſons of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus, Gal. 3. 26. John 1. 12. The land in which they dwelt is ſtyled, The Lord's land, Hoſ. 9. 3.; and they, as being his firſt-born, Exod. 4. 22. have it given them for an inheritance; but we, as being in a more ſpiritual ſenſe the ſons of God, are heirs of God, joint-heirs with Chriſt, as being thoſe that ſhall reign with him in his heavenly kingdom, Rom. 8. 17. See the note there. They in that land enjoyed the majeſtic preſence of that God who dwelt among them; and therefore, ſaith he, the land is mine, Lev. 25. 23. We, as his ſons, ſhall be admitted to his celeſtial preſence, where we ſhall ſee him as he is, ver. 2. The enjoyment of that land was unto them a type of the heavenly Canaan, which the faithful among them were to enjoy; and therefore they are repreſented as ſtrangers and ſojourners with him in it: whence the apoſtle tells them that there remained yet a reſt for the people of God, Heb. 4. 9. And the patriarchs are ſaid to have confeſſed that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth, and thereby to declare, that they deſired, and ſought a better country, that is, an heavenly; and that upon this account God called himſelf their God, viz. the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, becauſe he had prepared for them a city, Heb. 11. 13. 16. Now, becauſe they in their own perſons could not enjoy this heavenly country without a reſurrection, hence the evangeliſt informs us, that they were the ſons of God, τῆς ἀναστάσεως υἱοὶ ὄντες, as being ſons of the reſurrection; the redemption of their bodies from corruption, and the ἀναβίωσις, reviviſcence of that which once died, and ſaw corruption, being the conſequent of this υἱοθεσία, adoption, or ſonſhip of God's children; hence therefore doth our Saviour firmly prove the reſurrection from thoſe words, I am the God of Abraham, &c. Matth. 22. 32. Luke 20. 36. 37. And thus

thus you see how great is the love of God in owning us as his sons, and have also a just comment on the following words.

Ver. 2. ᵇ Ἐὰν φανερωθῇ, when he doth appear.] Note here,

1. That as the Hebrew word אם, so the conjunction ἐὰν, signifies as well when, or postquam, after that, as if. So Judges 6. 3. ἐὰν ἔσπειρεν, when Israel sowed; 1 Sam. 1. 22. ἐὰν ἀπογαλακτίσω, when I have weaned him; Prov. 3. 24. ἐὰν καθῇς, ἐὰν καθεύδῃς, when thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid. So, Judges 21. 21. Psal. 138. 7. Prov. 4. 12. See Nald. partic. pag. 87. 89. So John 12. 32. ἐὰν ὑψωθῶ, when I am lifted up; 13. 20. ἐὰν πέμψω, when I send, 14. 3. ἐὰν πορευθῶ, when I go away, 16. 7. Note,

2. That this is spoken of Christ, seems evident, 1. From the word φανερωθῇ, which is used of Christ; ver. 5. and agrees properly to him alone. And, 2. From the phrase, we shall be like him, viz. who shall change our vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body, Phil. 3. 21.; and cause us to bear the image of the Lord from heaven, by being raised with glorious and incorruptible bodies, 1 Cor. 15. 47. 49. And from the words, we shall see him as he is, i. e. in glory; this being his prayer, that they whom God had given him, might be with him, and behold his glory, John 17. 24.

Ver. 3. ᶜ Καθὼς ἐκεῖνός, As he is pure.] For he being manifested to take away our sins, ver. 5. and to destroy the works of the devil in us, ver. 8. they who expect to be made like to him hereafter, must be so here in purity and righteousness. But then let it be noted, 1. That this imitation doth not require our likeness to him we are to imitate, in the manner, or inward principle of his actions; but only in the quality, and, as far as human frailty will permit us, in the measure of them: for instance, it is as necessary for God to be absolutely perfect in holiness and goodness, as to be God; and yet we must be holy as he is holy, and perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect. And it is generally asserted in the schools, That the obedience and perfect holiness of Christ did necessarily result from the most intimate union of the divine and human nature, and from that grace of unction, which he received without measure; whereas our holiness and obedience must be acts of choice, and so our holiness and virtue will proceed not from an inward principle, which doth necessitate us to be good; but from the choice of our own wills; and yet we must walk as he walked, and must purify ourselves as he is pure.

2. This imitation doth not require an absolute equality, or full proportion of our actions to the example set before us, this being not consistent with the frailty of our human nature. For the example here is that of the holy Jesus, in whom was no sin, and who performed perfect obedience to the whole law of God; whereas in many things we offend all, and our obedience will be still imperfect in this life. When therefore we are commanded to be holy and perfect as God is, to walk as Christ walked, and to purify ourselves as he is pure, it is sicut similitudinis, non æqualitatis; i. e. the word as binds us not to equal them in holiness and perfection, but to bear such a likeness to them in these perfections as may discover that we truly aim at being holy in all manner of conversation, and heartily endeavour to continue so, through the whole tenor of our lives.

Vain then is that objection of the Socinians, That were Christ truly God, we could not possibly expect, nor therefore would it be our duty to imitate him; for seeing the example of God himself is made the matter of our imitation, the argument must equally conclude against the deity of God the Father. In a word, a likeness to him as far as human frailty will permit, may be our duty, though he should be God; a perfect likeness to him who did no sin, could never be our duty, though he were but man.

Ver. 4. ᵈ Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, he that committeth sin;] i. e. who lives in the commission of it, lives in an opposition to the law of God; for he is of the devil, ver. 8. He is not born of God, ver. 9.; which could not be truly said of him that is guilty of any one sin, or violation of God's holy law.

Ver. 6. Whosoever sinneth, οὐχ ἑώρακεν αὐτὸν, οὐδὲ ἔγνωκεν αὐτὸν, hath not seen him, neither known him.] To know God in the sense of this apostle, is to know him as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, and represented to the world by him. Hence Christ saith, If you have known me, you have known the Father also, John 14. 7. and denies that the Jews knew God, because they knew not him, John 8. 19. 15. 21. 16. 2. To see God, is to see his will, love, and goodness, as it is revealed by Jesus Christ; and thus saith Christ, He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father, chap. 12. 45. 14. 9. because he is only known to them, to whom Christ Jesus doth reveal him, Matth. 11. 27. Luke 10. 28. John 1. 18. 6. 46. And in this sense all that the apostle saith in this epistle of seeing and knowing God, is true, viz. that he who knoweth God, as he is revealed by Jesus Christ, keepeth his commandments, chap. 2. 3. 4. He loves his brother, chap. 4. 7. 8. He that is of the world knows not God, chap. 3. 1.; nor he that committeth sin, as here.

Ver. 8. 9. ᵉ Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, he that committeth sin:] i. e. He that lives, or goes on, in any way of sin. That this is the true import of this phrase in the writings of this apostle, will appear, 1. From the same phrase used in his gospel, πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, whosoever committeth sin, is the servant of sin, John 8. 34. Now, to be the servant of sin, is plainly plainly to continue and to live in it, Rom. 6. 1. 2. to yield obedience to it in the luſtings of it, ver. 12. for then ſin reigns in our mortal bodies, ibid. and we are ſlaves and ſubjects to it; then doth it κυριεύειν, lord it over us, and we are δοῦλοι εἰς ὑπακοὴν, ſervants to yield obedience to it, ver. 14. 16. though the conſcience may boggle at it, our reaſon may condemn it, our will be ſomewhat averſe to it, ſo that in obeying it we do the evil we would not; yet if ἡττηθέντες ἐσμὲν, we are ſo entangled as to be overcome by it, we are ſervants to corruption; for of what a man is overcome, to that is he brought in bondage, 2 Pet. 2. 19. 20. If the law of our members leads us captive to the law of ſin, Rom. 7. 23. ſo that we yield our members inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs to ſin, we ſo commit ſin as to be the ſervants of ſin. And he that is born of God, cannot (thus) ſin, becauſe by that new birth he is made free from (the ſervice of) ſin, John 8. 36. and become a ſervant to righteouſneſs, Rom. 6. 18. He hath that ſeed within him which alienates his mind and his affections from ſin, and that Spirit which cauſes him to mortify the deeds of the fleſh, Rom. 8. 13. to die to ſin, and to live to God, Rom. 6. 10.

2. From thoſe words, neither can ſin, for ſo he doth not do it, as he cannot do it. Now, that doth not import that a good man cannot be overtaken with a fault, Gal. 6. 1. No, even thoſe little children whoſe ſins are forgiven, and who have known the Father, may and will be obnoxious ſtill to ſome infirmities, and wanderings out of the way, chap. 2. 1. They may ſin not unto death, and therefore may have ſtill the ſpiritual life remaining in them, chap. 5. 16. 17. 18. But the true import of that phraſe is this, (h) That he hath ſuch an inward frame of heart, ſuch a diſpoſition of ſpirit, as renders ſin exceeding odious and hateful to him; ſo that he cannot entertain the thoughts of doing it, or a temptation to commit it, without the utmoſt deteſtation, and the greateſt horror, and ſo can very rarely, and only through ſurpriſe, or want of due deliberation, or through ſuch violent temptations as prevent or hinder his conſideration, be obnoxious to ſin; and when he comes to conſider of ſuch an action, is preſently condemning himſelf for it, bitterly repenting of it, and for the future watching moſt carefully againſt it. Thus they that are evil cannot ſpeak good things, Matth. 12. 34. A good tree cannot bring forth bad fruit, Matth. 17. 18. The world cannot hate thoſe that are of it, John 7. 7. The Jews could not hear Chriſt's word, John 8. 43.; could not believe, John 12. 39. The world could not receive the Spirit, John 14. 17. They that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, Rom. 8. 7. 8. The natural man cannot know the things of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14. The church of Epheſus could not bear the wicked, Rev. 2. 2.

3. From the phraſe, He that committeth ſin, is of the devil; for it is not he who committeth one or more ſins of infirmity, for ſo did Chriſt's diſciples while they were with him; nor he who committeth one great ſin through the power of a ſtrong temptation, of which he bitterly repents, and from which he returns to his obedience; for thus did David, and St Peter, who yet were not then the children of the devil; but they who comply with the luſts of Satan, and who will do them, John 8. 44.

The other interpretations which are given of theſe words, ſeem either vain and impertinent, or falſe and dangerous. And,

1. Vain is that ſenſe which ſome put upon theſe words, viz. He that is born of God, non debet peccare, ought not to ſin; or that it is abſurd for him to ſin; for the apoſtle ſpeaks not of what he ought not to do, but of what he doth not. Such is that alſo of thoſe fathers who interpret this of him, who is perfectly born of God, by a παλιγγενεσία, or a reſurrection from the dead; for the apoſtle ſpeaks not of what he ſhall not do hereafter, but of what he doth not do at preſent.

2. Falſe ſeems to be the ſenſe which Origen, St Jerom, and Ambroſe put upon the words, That he that is born of God ſinneth not, quamdiu renatus eſt, whilſt he is born of God, becauſe he ceaſeth to be a child of God when he ſins; for this is not only confuted by the examples of David and St Peter, whoſe faith under that great miſcarriage failed not, Luke 22. 32. but by the words of the apoſtle, Little children, if we ſin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins, chap. 2. 1. who yet is only the advocate for the ſons of God. For the ſame reaſon I cannot aſſent to that expoſition which ſaith, "A child of God cannot be guilty of any great, "or deliberate crime," as Tertullian. de pudicitia, c. 19.

3. Dangerous is the expoſition of St Bernard (i), That "they who are born of God ſin not, quia etiamſi peccent, peccata illis neutiquam imputentur, "becauſe their ſins will never be imputed to them:" and of thoſe who think it ſufficient to ſay, "He ſins "not without great reluctancy, or not willingly, "the evil that he doth being that which he would "not

" not do;" for the will of that man, who after some contest in his soul yields to the commission of sin, is more strongly inclined to sin than to the avoiding of it, and so is not renewed. Nor doth the apostle say, He that is born of God sins not willingly, or without renitency; but absolutely, he doth not commit sin.

I conclude this note with that of our judicious Gataker, He that is born of God sinneth not: that is, " Vitam a peccato immunem quantum potest " sibi proponit, nec peccato unquam sponte dat ope- " ram; si aliquando præter animi propositum deli- " querit, non in eodem persistit, sed errore agnito " ad institutum vitæ pristinum quamprimum quan- " tumque potest, festinus revertitur."

Ver. 9. [r] Ἐκ Θεοῦ, of God.] By the Spirit and the word, John 3. 6. 8. James 1. 18. 1 Pet. 1. 23. That is, he is preserved from, and hath his heart framed into an hatred and loathing of sin. 1. From the word of God treasured up in his heart, demonstrating to him the vileness of sin that he may hate it, the danger of it, that he may fly from it; I have hid thy word in my heart, that I might not sin against thee, Psal. 119. 11. And by attending to it as his rule, and taking heed to his ways according to his word, ibid. ver. 9. 2. By the Holy Spirit abiding in him, as a new principle of life lusting against the flesh, so that we cannot do the things which that would have us do, Gal. 5. 16. 17.

Ver. 10. [s] Ὁ μὴ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, that doth not righteousness.] That is, he that doth not from an heart studious of conformity to him who is righteous, ver. 7. and in obedience to his law, commanding us to live righteously, exercise himself in sincere endeavours of walking righteously through the general course of his life, is not a child of God, because he only is born of God, and hath the divine nature in him, who thus doth righteousness, 1 John 2. 29. And he who doth not in truth, and in actions demonstrating the sincerity of his affection to his brother, ver. 18. shew his love to him, he hath no true love to God, chap. 4. 21. and so is not born of God, nor can he be the child of God, since he obeys not his commandments, chap. 5. 1.

Ver. 12. Ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ, of that wicked one.] The Jews say that Cain was begot of the seed of the devil; this the apostle mystically expoundeth, saying of Cain as our Saviour doth of the Jews in general, John 8. 44. That they were of their father the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning, because they did his works, being maliciously bent upon the murder of our Lord.

Ver. 19. [t] Ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐσμὲν, We are of the truth;] i. e. We are rightly acquainted with, and truly live according to the rules delivered in that gospel which is emphatically styled the truth. See note on Rom. 2. 8. This is the truth so often mentioned in these epistles, 1 John 1. 6. 8. and 2. 4. 21. and 4. 6. 2 epist. ver. 1. 2. 3. 4. 1 epist. 3. 3. 4. 8. 12.; and in the gospel, chap. 1. 14. 17. and 3. 21. and 4. 23. 24. and 5. 33. and 8. 32. and 17. 17. and 18. 37.

Ibid. [u] Καὶ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, and shall persuade our hearts.] viz. That we are so in the sight of God.

Ver. 20. Ὅτι ἐὰν, for if our hearts condemn us, ὅτι μείζων.] Some are inclined to read ἔτι μείζων, God is yet greater than our hearts; and others, to make it an expletive, or to approve of those few copies where it is wanting: but seeing it is retained in most copies, and is translated by the Arabic profecto, this I believe to be the true import of it here; and to confirm this import, let it be noted, that the Hebrew Chi, which in its primary import signifieth for, and is by the Septuagint rendered ὅτι, doth also signify certe, and is by our translation often rendered surely, or certainly. So Gen. 43. 10. For if we had not lingered, Chi, LXX. ἤδη ἂν, surely we had returned twice; Exod. 3. 12. Chi, LXX. ὅτι, Surely I will be with thee; chap. 4. 25. Chi, LXX. Surely a bloody husband art thou; Numb. 22. 23. Chi, LXX. ἄν, surely I had slain thee; Judg. 6. 16. ᾧ, Surely I will be with thee; Ruth. 1. 10 Surely we will return with thee; 1 Kings 1. 13. Chi, LXX. ὅτι, Surely Solomon shall reign after me; Josh. 2. 24. Chi, LXX. ὅτι, Truly the Lord hath delivered the land into our hands; Psal. 77. 12. Chi, LXX. ὅτι, Surely I will remember thy works of old; 112. 6. Chi, ὅτι, Surely he shall not be removed for ever, see Job 28. 1. Isa. 7. 9. See Examen Millii here, ver. 16. and chap. 5. 10. 12.

Ver. 21. Παῤῥησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, we have confidence with God.] When is it, saith Philo (k), " that " a servant may use παῤῥησίαν πρὸς τὸν δεσπότην, con- " fidence towards his Lord?" Is it not then ὅταν ἀδικεῖσθαι μὲν ἑαυτῷ δοκῇ συνειδῇ, " when he is not con- " scious of doing any evil against him?"

Ver. 24. [k] Ἐκ τοῦ πνεύματος, by the Spirit.] So the word Spirit is taken in the words following, chap. 4. 1. and so was he given in those times to them that believed, Acts 5. 32.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. BEloved, [a] believe not every (pretender to the) ſpirit (of God), but try the Spirits whether they be of God (or not): becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world.

2. (And for your direction in this trial) hereby know ye the Spirit of God, (from that of error): Every ſpirit (i. e. perſon pretending to the Spirit of God, or of prophecy) which confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt (Gr. Jeſus Chriſt which) is come in the fleſh, is of God.

3. And every (pretender to the) ſpirit which confeſſeth not that Jeſus Chriſt (Jeſus Chriſt which) is come in the fleſh, is not of God: and this is that ſpirit of antichriſt, whereof ye have heard that it ſhould come, and even now already is it in the world.

4. Ye (to whom he hath given this Spirit, chap. 3. 24.) are of God, little children, and [b] have overcome them, (theſe antichriſts and falſe prophets): becauſe greater is he (the Spirit) that is in you, than he (the ſpirit) which is in the world.

5. They (theſe antichriſts, and falſe prophets) [c] are of the world, (ſetting up to be temporal princes, and to give the Jews dominion over the Heathen world; and) therefore ſpeak they of the world, (i. e. of that temporal dominion over the Heathens, which the carnal Jews expect, when their Meſſiah doth appear), and the world (he that is worldly-minded) heareth them.

6. [d] We are of God, (deriving our faith and doctrine from that Jeſus, who was a prophet ſent from God, and delivered his doctrine in his name: as therefore he ſaid to the Jews then, ſo we his diſciples ſay now), He that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us, (John 8. 47. and 6. 45.) Hereby know we the Spirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error. (See note on ver. 1. 2. 3.)

7. Beloved, let us (who are of God, ver. 6.) love one another: for love is of God, (the fruit of his good Spirit in us, Gal. 5. 22. 1 Pet. 1. 22.); and every one that loveth, is born of God, (by the Spirit, John 3. 5.), and (this reſemblance he hath to him, in love to mankind in general, and to thoſe he hath ſo highly loved in particular, ver. 9. 10. ſhews that he) knoweth God (aright, becauſe he keepeth his commandments, chap. 2. 3. 4.)

8. He that loveth not (his brother), knoweth not (Gr. hath not known) God (aright); for [e] God is (the God of) love.

9. In this was manifeſted (the greatneſs of) the love of God toward us, becauſe that God ſent his only begotten Son into the world, (and freely gave him up to the death, Rom. 8. 33.), that we might live through him.

10. [f] Herein is (the demonſtration of his) love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us (firſt, ver. 19.), and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins, (which deſerved death, and ſo to fit us for eternal life.)

11. Beloved, if God ſo loved us, we ought alſo to love one another.

12. (And ſay not, that it is enough that you love God again, though you love not your brother, ver. 20. for) no man hath ſeen God at any time, (as we daily ſee, and converſe with our brother; and therefore if we love not him whom we have ſeen, how can we love God whom we have not ſeen? ver. 20.; but) if we love one another (after his example, though we ſee him not, we may be ſure that) God dwelleth in us (by his Spirit), and (that) his love [g] is perfected in us.

13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit, (who by his powerful energies proves whoſe Spirit he is.)

14. And (by the Spirit given to us according to his promiſe) we have ſeen (i. e. perceived) and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. (See note on ver. 3.)

15. [h] Whoſoever (believing this our teſtimony) ſhall (from his heart believe, and, Rom. 10. 9. 19.) confeſs, that Jeſus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God, (by the Spirit of adoption.)

16. And we (by this Spirit) have known and believed the love that God hath (ſhewed) to us, (in ſending his Son to be the Saviour of the world, ver. 10. 11. 14.). God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him (ver. 7.).

17. Herein is our love made perfect, (i. e. exactly correſponding to the divine pattern and command, note on ver. 12. ſo) that we (who thus love) may have boldneſs in the day of judgment: becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world, (conforming ourſelves to the pattern of God's affection to mankind, and walking as Chriſt walked, chap. 2. 6.)

18. [i] There is no fear (of failing at that day) in love (thus perfect); but perfect love caſteth out fear: becauſe (that) fear (which takes away this boldneſs) hath torment (in it; torments the mind with dreadful expectations: and) he that (thus) feareth, is not made perfect in love.

19. [k] We love him, (and teſtify this love to him by loving our brother for his ſake, after his example, and in obedience to his command), becauſe he firſt loved us.

20. [l] If any man ſay, I love God, and (yet) hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

21. And (he moreover shews, by his disobedience to the command of God, the want of true affection to him; for) this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God, love his brother also.

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. IV.

Verse 1. 2.[a] THE Jews being then generally in expectation of their Messiah, were divided into two parts; a remnant, who believed that he was come already, and that our Jesus was the very person promised under that character; and a more prevailing part of them who rejected him, and looked for another. Now among these appeared many who took upon them to be the Messiah, or the prophet promised by Moses like unto him, saying, Lo Christ is here, and lo he is there; (see the note on Matth. 24. 24. 26.); and these declaring themselves prophets, must also pretend to the spirit of prophecy, and do this, as Josephus saith they did, πνεύματι διακρυῦ, under the pretence of a divine afflatus. These, saith the apostle here, are antichrists, i. e. pretenders falsely to be Christ, in opposition to him who was truly so; nor could they belong to him, or truly confess him who was the Word made flesh. Now, the strength of this argument depends on these considerations, That the effusion of the Spirit, promised in the times of the Messiah, could only belong to them who owned, and believed in the true Messiah; this being made one character of the true Messiah, that he should baptize them who believed in him with the Holy Ghost, Matth. 3. 11. This promise of the Father, as the Holy Ghost is styled, was to be sent by Christ, Luke 24. 49. to his disciples, John 16. 7. and 15. 26. to be sent in his name, John 14. 26. And when he came, his office was to enable those who received him to testify of Christ, that he was indeed risen from the dead, and was the Christ, John 15. 26. Acts 1. 8. and 5. 32. and to convince the world of sin, because they believed not in him, John 16. 9. The condition of receiving him was faith in Christ, John 7. 37. Acts 2. 38. 39. And by his assistance did his disciples prove that Jesus Christ, who appeared to the Jews in the flesh, and was crucified among them, was the Christ. He therefore who was made partaker of the χαρίσματα of the Holy Ghost, must be one who believed in that Jesus who suffered in the flesh for us; and therefore they who denied this, could not be assisted by that Spirit who was only sent by him, and given to believers; whence the apostle saith, That no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus Anathema, as these false prophets, who owned him not, must do, 1 Cor. 12. 3. and that no man could say that Jesus was the Christ, but by the Holy Ghost: that is, he could not confess, and testify to the world this truth, but by the assistance of the Holy Ghost promised, and given to believers for that end. See ver. 6. 13. 14. 15.

Note therefore, that the apostle is not here speaking of the trial of doctrines, but of spirits, not of the faith necessary to be believed to salvation, but only of the faith necessary to the reception of the Holy Ghost, that unction which would teach them all things, 1 John. 2. 27.

Ver. 4.[b] Καὶ νενικήκατε, and have overcome.] The doctrine which you preach, and confirm by these gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost, hath mightily prevailed over all the opposition which the unbelieving Jews, and their false prophets, and false apostles, make against it; because the spirit which acts in them is only able to work by them ψευδέσι, false, counterfeit, and lying wonders; whereas the spirit that is in you, enables you to confirm the truth with real miracles, and signs, and divers distributions of the Holy Ghost, by which God beareth witness to the truth of that doctrine which you preach, Heb. 2. 4. Rom. 15. 19. 1 Thess. 1. 5.

Ver. 5.[c] That the hopes of dominion over the Heathens encouraged some of them to set up for the Messiah, and others to fight, see the testimonies of Josephus; note on James 4 ver. 1. 2. 3. And on this account they rejected the true Messiah, because his kingdom was not of this world.

Ver. 6.[d] When the Romish prelates have once proved they are of God, as the apostle did, it will be time to consider the inference of Esthius from this place, That he that is of God, must hear their prelates and their church, and come to them to be resolved of any doubt.

Ver. 8.[e] Ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη, God is love.] The apostle by these words intends not to express what God is in his essence, or to say, as the schools do, that he is love essentially, and love causaliter, as being the cause; or objective, as being the object of our love; but that he is so demonstrative, and ἐνεργητικῶς, shewing great philanthropy to men in all his dealings with them, or his dispensations towards them, as appears from the two following verses.

Ver. 10.[f] Ἐν τούτῳ ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, Herein is love.] Here the apostle most lively doth express the freedom, and the greatness of the love of God; the freedom of it, in that he loved us first, when there was nothing in us to deserve or move affection, but our misery; but many things which both deserved, and might have moved him to the execution of his wrath, we being enemies to God by wicked works. The greatneſs of it, 1. In the perſon ſending, the great God of heaven, who humbles himſelf even to behold what is done in heaven and earth: Oh therefore what is man that he ſhould be thus mindful of him? 2. The perſon ſent, τὸν μονογενῆ, his only begotten, τὸν ἴδιον υἱὸν, his proper Son, Rom. 8. 32.; for if to call God πατέρα ἴδιον, his proper Father, was to make himſelf equal to God, John 5. 18. the Father himſelf, by calling him his proper Son, muſt equally exalt him. Hence even Epiſcopius here declares him to be ſo called, becauſe eſſentiam ſuam a patre per veram generationem accepiſſet, "he had received his eſſence from "the Father by a true generation." For it is certain that the apoſtle is here extolling the love of God to the higheſt pitch, and therefore muſt uſe this phraſe, the only begotten Son of God, in the ſublimeſt ſenſe in which that word is uſed in ſcripture. 3. The place whither he was ſent, into that world which lay in wickedneſs. 4. The errand for which he was ſent; 1. To give up himſelf a ſacrifice for the propitiation of our ſins. See note on chap. 2. ver. 2. 2. To procure to us, who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, eternal life.

Ver. 12. [e] τετελειωμένη, his love is perfected in us.] He then loves us entirely according to thoſe words of Chriſt, If any man keep my words, my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and take our abode with him, John 14. 23. Or, then is our love to him entire, becauſe then we love him ſo as to keep his commandments, chap. 2. 5. and ſo as to follow that example of love which he hath ſet us; and as he is, ſo are we in the world, ver. 17.

Ver. 15. [b] For to as many as received him, gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name, John 1. 12. And becauſe we are ſons, God hath ſent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father, Gal. 4. 6. Only let it be noted, that this hearty confeſſion muſt be attended with a readineſs to believe all that this Son of God hath taught us in his Father's name, for if he ſay the truth, why do we not believe him? John 8. 46. and a firm purpoſe to obey his commandments; for why call we him, Lord, Lord, and do not the things that he ſaith? Luke 6. 46.

Ver. 18. [i] Φόβος οὐκ ἔστι, There is no fear in love.] Chriſt having ſo expreſsly promiſed a Come ye bleſſed to the charitable perſon, Matth. 25. 34. 35. 36. and the apoſtle recommending it as the moſt excellent of Chriſtian graces, 1 Cor. 13. 13. and the fulfilling of the law, Rom. 13. 8. 10. when this love is made perfect in us, it may well give boldneſs, and caſt out fear of condemnation in the day of judgment.

Others expound the words thus: There is no fear of what we may loſe or ſuffer (in perfect) love (of our brother), but (ſuch) love caſteth out (this) fear, for fear (of what we may loſe or ſuffer) hath torment in it: (and therefore) he that thus feareth, is not made perfect in love (to him.)

Ver. 19. [k] That is, whoſoever thus loves God, and ſhews it by loving thus his brother, can challenge nothing on that account as due from God; it being God's preventing love to him, which gave the riſe to all the love he bears to God, or to his brother for his ſake. If therefore any perſon be conſtrained by this love to that obedience which teſtifies the ſincerity of his affection to God, or to imitate his love to us by fervent love to the brethren, it is the divine philanthropy which hath excited this affection in him. Or, if ἀγαπῶμεν be the ſubjunctive mood, the ſenſe runs thus: Let the great love of God to us, mentioned ver. 9. 10. provoke us to returns of love to him, and to our brethren for his ſake; ſince we do hypocritically pretend to love him, if we do not ſhew it by fervent charity towards his children, and our brethren.

Ver. 20. [l] That is, If what we have more opportunity to do, and can perform with leſs difficulty, we do not do, how ſhall we perform what is more difficult? Now we have our Chriſtian brethren ſtill in our view, they are the object of our ſenſes, we daily converſe with them; and their wants and miſeries, being the objects of our ſenſes, muſt naturally move compaſſion in us; and ſo it is leſs difficult to expreſs our love to them, than to that God whom we have not ſeen, and who is only preſent to our minds by raiſed meditations, which do not naturally occur to us, and which we cannot long continue, and ſo is more difficult than the love of our brother.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. WHoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, [a] is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begot, loveth him alſo that is begotten of him; (as being, by this new birth, partaker of the divine nature, and created anew after the image of God, Eph. 4. 24. Col. 3. 10.)

2. (And this note is reciprocal; for) by this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God and keep his commandments; (when our affection to God prevails upon us to do to them all acts of charity he hath required, and by his example recommended to us, 1 John 3. 11. 23. and 4. 21.)

3. For this is (the genuine teſt of) the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments (to the true lover of him) [b] are not grievous.

4. For

4. For whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world; (his affections are taken off from it, and set upon his God; and so it cannot be grievous to him to part with it, or suffer the loss of any worldly good, to secure the divine favour): and this is the victory which overcometh the world, even our faith, (to wit, that faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, Heb. 11. 1. which gives us the assurance of a better, and a more enduring substance, and so makes us take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, Heb. 10. 34. and patiently endure those light afflictions which are but for a season, as knowing they work for us an exceeding and eternal weight of glory, 2 Cor. 4. 17.)

5. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? (and so the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him; for hence we know that we have eternal life, ver. 11. 12. 13.)

6. This is he [c] that came by (or, with the testimony of) water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not [d] by water only, but by water [e] and blood: and it is [f] the Spirit that beareth witness, (and on his testimony we may rely), because the Spirit is truth.

7. (The law judges that sufficiently proved, which is confirmed by two or three witnesses, Deut. 19. 15. That Jesus is the Son of God, ver. 5. is thus proved, by witnesses from heaven, and on earth); for [g] there are three that bear record (to this truth) in (and from) heaven, the [h] Father, the [i] Word, and the [k] Holy Ghost: and these three are one, (as in testimony, so in essence.)

8. And there are three that bear witness on earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three [l] agree in one.

9. [m] If we receive the witness of men (in these cases), the witness of God is greater, (of more validity and certainty than that of men; he being neither liable to ignorance, nor falsehood: and if his testimony be of such force, we must believe that Jesus is the Christ); for this is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son.

10. He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself, (as having in himself that Spirit of God which gives this testimony to Christ): he that believeth not (this testimony of) God, hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record which God gave of his Son.

11. And this is the (subject of this) record, that God hath given to us (Christians the promise of) eternal life: and this life is in his Son, (he being the hope of glory, Col. 1. 27. this life being hid with Christ in God, Col. 3. 4. and he being our life, ibid. he being the author and procurer of it, and having power to confer it on us, John 17. 2.)

12. He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life: (for we are all the children of God, through faith in Jesus Christ, Gal. 3. 26. and if children, then heirs, Rom. 8. 17.)

13. These things have I written to you that believe on the name of the Son of God, that ye may know that ye have (by promise, a right to, and, by the Spirit, an earnest of) eternal life, and that ye may (more firmly) believe in the name of the Son of God.

14. And this is the (farther) confidence that we have in (and through) him, That if we ask any thing (of God, chap. 3. 21. 22.) according to his will, he heareth us; (according to Christ's promise, John 14. 13. 14. 15. and 7. 16. and 16. 23. 24.)

15. And if we know that he heareth us, whatever we (thus) ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him, (chap. 3. 22.)

16. If any man see his (sick) brother sin a sin which is not [n] unto death, (i. e. for which God hath not peremptorily threatened, and required that he should die for it, as he did to them that were guilty of murder, Gen. 9. 5. 6. Numb. 35. 30. 31. and for idolatry, Deut. 17. 2. 3. 4. 5.), he shall ask (of God, restoration of his life and health); and he shall give him life for them that sin not (thus) unto death. There is a sin unto death (of which God hath denounced, That he that doth it, shall die for it): I do not say, that he shall pray for it, (i. e. for deliverance of the person guilty of it, from death.)

17. All unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin (of unrighteousness against our brother, which is) not unto death; (the law requiring, not that the guilty person should die for it, but only, that he should bring his offering, and make reparation for it.)

18. We know, that whosoever is born of God, sinneth not (thus, chap. 3. 15.); but he that is begotten of God, keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not. (See note on chap. 3. 9.)

19. And we know that we are (begotten) of God, and (that) the whole world lieth (still) [o] in wickedness.

20. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know him that is (the) true (God): and we are in him that is true, (even, or, to wit), in his Son Jesus Christ. [p] This is the true God, and (in him is) eternal life.

21. (Having therefore this knowledge of the true God), little children, keep yourselves [q] from idols, (or false gods). Amen.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS on Chap. V.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἐκ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται, Is born of God.] The Jews gloried in this title, That they were the children of God, and had him for their Father, John 8. 41. 42. 45. they being called his ſons, Deut. 14. 1. and 32. 19. Pſal. 72. 15. and his firſt-born, Exod. 4. 22. The apoſtle therefore here informs them, That this relation would ſtand them in no ſtead, unleſs they were born again of water, and of the Spirit, John 3. 5. or baptized into the name of Chriſt, and, by that faith, had power to become the ſons of God, John 1. 12. and alſo loved thoſe Chriſtians which were born of him; which the unbelieving Jews, and the falſe teachers among them, were ſo far from doing, that they every where perſecuted the true believers. See note on chap. 3. 1.

Ver. 3. [b] Βαρεῖαι οὐκ εἰσὶν, are not grievous.] Becauſe his will is conformed to the will of God, and ſo he only doth what he would do; and his affections are chiefly placed upon him, and ſo he is then doing what he chuſeth and delighteth in; and it cannot be grievous to be employed as we would, and as we do delight to be.

Ver. 6. [c] That came.] Viz. in the name of God, Matth. 21. 9. in his Father's name, John 5. 43. See Matth. 11. 3. John 1. 9. 15. Matth. 21. 9.

Ibid. [d] Δι' ὕδατος, by water:] i. e. With the teſtimony of water, or the teſtimony given to him by St John at his baptiſm; for when John was baptizing, he teſtified of him, ſaying, This is he that cometh after me, who was before me, John 1. 27. 28. He alſo declared, That he came baptizing, for this very end, that he might be made manifeſt to Iſrael, ver. 31. and teſtified, ſaying, I ſaw the Spirit deſcending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him, and I knew him not: but he that ſent me to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid unto me, Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending, and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt. And I ſaw, and bare record, That this is the Son of God, ver. 32. 33. 34. Hence is he ſtyled, A man ſent from God, who came for a witneſs, to bear witneſs of the light, That all men through him might believe, ver. 6. 7. 8. Hence do St John's diſciples ſay to him, He to whom thou beareſt witneſs, baptizeth, John 3. 26. And Chriſt himſelf appealeth to his teſtimony, John 5. 32. 33. Now, this teſtimony could not be rejected by them, for all men held John as a prophet; nor durſt the Phariſees themſelves deny that his teſtimony was from heaven, Matth. 21. 25. 26.

Ibid. [e] Καὶ αἵματος, and blood.] For he died in teſtimony of the truth, and came into the world for this end, that he might bear witneſs to the truth, John 18. 37. Whence he is ſaid to witneſs before Pontius Pilate a good confeſſion, viz. That he was the Son of God, or, the Meſſiah, the King of the Jews, 1 Tim. 6. 13. This he alſo teſtified to the high prieſt, Matth. 26. 63. 64. And for this teſtimony was he condemned as worthy of death, ver. 66. For this they mock him at his ſufferings, that he ſaid, he was the Son of God, Matth. 27. 43. Mark 15. 32. And at his death he commends his ſpirit to God, as his Father, Luke 23. 36. 46. The miracles which attended his crucifixion were ſo great that they forced the Jews, the centurion, and thoſe that were with him, to confeſs, Truly this was the Son of God, Matth. 27. 54. and the whole multitude to ſmite their breaſts, Luke 23. 48. In a word, The Spirit which aſſiſted the Baptiſt, proclaimed him, The Lamb of God, who taketh away the ſins of the world, John 1. 30. And that ſuppoſeth, he was to offer up himſelf unto the death, for the propitiation of their ſins. Yea, he himſelf doth frequently declare, That he was to be ſlain, Matth. 16. 21.; to be delivered into the hands of men, and killed, Matth. 17. 22. 23.; to be condemned to death, Matth. 20. 18. 19. and to riſe again the third day: that he was to be lifted up upon the croſs, John 3. 14. And that being thus lifted up, he would draw all men to him, John 12. 32. Now, what impoſtor would lay this as the foundation of the truth of all his ſayings, and all the hopes of any bleſſings which were to be expected from him, That he ſhould be crucified, and die an ignominious and painful death? Or, what could tempt him thus to die, who had no hopes to riſe again, if he were not the true Meſſiah, or the Son of God? How was it poſſible he ſhould be raiſed from the dead, but by the mighty power of God? And is it reaſonable to imagine that the God of truth ſhould thus exert the greatneſs of his power, in confirmation of a lie? that he ſhould work ſo great a miracle, in favour of a vile impoſtor falſely uſurping his name? or give ſuch large credentials to one who falſely did pretend to be a prophet ſent from God, and to be honoured as his Son by all men?

Ibid. [f] Καὶ πνεῦμά ἐστι, &c. And it is the Spirit that beareth witneſs.] Here it is to be noted, That the witneſs, in this verſe, is only ſtyled, τὸ πνεῦμα, viz. that ſpirit which enabled Chriſt to heal diſeaſes, caſt out devils, raiſe the dead, and work all ſorts of miracles, for confirmation of his miſſion: but in the 7th verſe he is ſtyled, τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, the Holy Ghoſt; which doth diſtinctly ſignify the inward gifts, by which the underſtanding is enlightened, and is enabled to perform things which by nature it could could not do, without the immediate workings of the Holy Ghost, as v. g. the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, prophecy, discerning of spirits, the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of them. That there is ground for this distinction, will appear from these considerations.

1. Because our Saviour, whilst he was on earth, gave to his apostles, and the seventy disciples, power to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils, Matth. 10. 8. Luke 10. 9. And yet the evangelist St John informs us, That the Holy Ghost was not yet, because that Jesus was not glorified, John 7. 39. Our Saviour also tells his disciples, That the Holy Ghost would not come, till he departed, John 16. 7. And St Peter, That our Lord being exalted to the right hand of God, received the promise of the Holy Ghost, Acts 2. 33. The Holy Ghost must therefore signify something distinct from the power of working miracles.

2. The prophecy of Joel, which by St Peter is mentioned as the promise on which the giving of the Holy Ghost was founded, is only a promise of visions, dreams, and prophecies, but not of miracles; and the gifts of the Spirit, mentioned by the prophet Isaiah, are only those of wisdom, knowledge, understanding, counsel, courage, piety, and of the fear of the Lord; no mention being made there of signs and wonders.

3. Because throughout the history of the Acts of the apostles, where St Luke hath occasion to mention the miracles which the apostles and primitive professors did, he always uses these words, τέρατα, σημεῖα, δυνάμεις, wonders, signs, and powers: but where he speaks of persons propheſying, or speaking with tongues, he doth as constantly ascribe this to the Holy Ghost, descending on them.

And, lastly, where the scripture mentions these things together, it puts a manifest distinction betwixt signs and wonders, and the gifts and distributions of the Holy Ghost. Thus God, saith the apostle, bare witness to the doctrine which they preached, by signs and wonders, and divers miracles, τῷ πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, and distributions of the Holy Ghost, Heb. 2. 4. See Rom. 15. 19. Gal. 3. 5.

The Spirit therefore bare witness to Christ on earth, by the enabling him to do so many mighty works in confirmation of his mission, to heal all manner of diseases, sicknesses, and maladies, to command the wind and seas to be obedient to him, to cast out devils, and to raise the dead, and by assisting his apostles and disciples to do these things in his name: for that not only his disciples, but even our Lord himself did cast out devils, by the Spirit of God, he himself expressly testifies, Matth. 12. 28. and saith moreover, That in him was fulfilled that of Isaiah, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, wherefore he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken in heart, to preach deliverance to the captives (to sin and Satan), and to give sight to the blind, Luke 4. 18. 20. Hence St Peter speaks thus to Cornelius and his friends, You know how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost, and with power, who went about doing good, and healed all that were oppressed of the devil, Acts 10. 38. And to these works thus wrought by the assistance of the Spirit of God, our Lord doth frequently appeal, as to a sure testimony that God had sent him: for the works, saith he, that I do in my Father's name, bear witness of me, John 10. 24. and 5. 36. Yea, they shewed, that the Father was in him, and he in the Father, John 10. 37. 38. and 14. 10. 11.

Ver. 7. ὅτι Τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, There are three that bear witness in heaven, &c.] I shall say nothing of the dispute, whether this verse be genuine or not, seeing the learned Dr Mills treats so copiously on that subject in his edition of the New Testament; I only note, that the places cited from Tertullian and St Cyprian agree not exactly with the words of St John, seeing they speak not de Patre, Filio, et Spiritu Sancto, of the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost. The objections of Schlictingius against this verse are these:

Object. 1. That this verse, though it be introduced with ὅτι, for, hath no coherence with the former verse.

Anſ. It coheres well with it thus: The witness of the Spirit ought in this matter to be received, because he is the Spirit of truth, sent from the Father and the Son; for in the testimony of the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, is contained the witness of the Father and the Son also; so that we may truly say, There be three that bear witness.

Object. 2. But if so, the testimony of the Father is included in the testimony of the Holy Ghost.

Anſ. True: and by this these three witnesses become one in testimony; and yet they differ, as the person sending, and the person sent.

Object. 3. The Λόγος, or Word, is the Son of God; and therefore to say, he testifies of the Son of God, is to make him testify of himself.

Anſ. It is confessed, that the same person is both the Λόγος, and the Son of God; but the thing testified is not that Christ was the Λόγος, or the Son of God, by eternal generation, or by his miraculous conception; but that he was the Christ, the promised Messiah, and in that sense the Son of God: and to this the divine nature might give testimony.

Ibid. ὁ Πατὴρ, the Father,] testified this at his baptism by his voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, &c. Matth. 3. 17. and at his transfiguration, saying again, This is my beloved Son, hear him, him, Matth. 17. 5. 6.; ſee note on 2 Pet. 1. 14. 15. 16.; and chiefly, by ſending of the Holy Ghoſt, which he had promiſed in the times of the Meſſiah, and who is therefore ſtyled, The promiſe of the Father, Luke 24. 49. Acts 1. 4.

Ibid. [i] Ὁ λόγος, the Word.] Not only by appearing to St Stephen, Acts 7. 56. and ſaying to Saul, I am Jeſus whom thou perſecuteſt, Acts 9. 5. but chiefly by ſhedding the Spirit on the apoſtles, and other believers, according to his promiſe; for he being exalted to the right hand of God, and receiving from the Father the promiſe of the Holy Ghoſt, hath, ſaith St Peter, ſhed forth this which you now ſee and hear: wherefore let all the houſe of Iſrael know, that God hath made this Jeſus Lord and Chriſt, Acts 2. 33. 36.

Ibid. [k] Τὸ ἅγιον πνεῦμα, the Holy Ghoſt,] the power from on high they were to be endued with, Luke 24. 49. by falling down from heaven upon his diſciples; whence they were filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpake with tongues to men of all nations, the wonderful things of God. Till his deſcent upon them they were not to ſtir from Jeruſalem, as being not fitted for their work, Acts 1. 4.; but when he was once given to them that believed, they proved and bare witneſs, that God exalted Jeſus to his right hand, to be a Prince, and a Saviour, Acts 5. 31. 32. And this our Lord, by his omniſcience, foretold that he ſhould teſtify of him, John 15. 26.; yea, that at his coming he ſhould convince the world of ſin, becauſe they believed not in him; of (his) righteouſneſs, becauſe he was gone to the Father; and of judgment, becauſe the prince of this world was judged, and caſt out of his kingdom by him, John 16. 9. 10. 11. and 12. 31.

And thus it is eaſy to diſcern how theſe three are one in teſtimony, becauſe both the Father and the Son give in their teſtimony by the Holy Ghoſt: but then if theſe be three witneſſes properly ſo called, they muſt be three perſons, and more eſpecially the Holy Ghoſt, by whom the other perſons do bear witneſs, muſt be ſo; and if his teſtimony be alſo the teſtimony of God the Father, and the Word, he muſt be one in eſſence with them: for if the Spirit be a creature, how can his teſtimony be formally the teſtimony of God? as it is ſtyled, ver. 9. 10.

Ver. 8. [l] Εἰς τὸ ἓν εἰσιν, agree in this one.] If by τὸ ἓν εἰσι, ver. 7. were meant no more than εἰς ἓν εἰσι, here, why did the apoſtle change the words, ſince theſe three alſo are one in teſtimony, as that imports this only, that they confirm this fundamental truth, that Jeſus is the Chriſt the Son of God? eſpecially if we conſider what is inſinuated, ver. 6. that of theſe three, the Spirit only beareth witneſs properly; the other, by ſome action of the Spirit attending them, and by the teſtimony of others of it; the water, by the Spirit deſcending on Chriſt whilſt he was in the water; and the Baptiſt's teſtimony, that by this ſign God had declared to him, that he was the Chriſt; the blood, as it aſſures us, that he who ſhed it, died for the truth.

Ver. 9. [m] Εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων λαμβάνομεν, If we receive the witneſs of men.] This is not ſo to be interpreted as if the three witneſſes on earth related only to the teſtimony of men, and the three from heaven only to the teſtimony of God; and ſo that the apoſtle intended here to ſignify we had greater reaſon to believe the witneſſes in heaven than thoſe on earth. For, 1. The teſtimony of the Spirit, and of the Holy Ghoſt are of equal certainty and validity. And, 2. John Baptiſt being ſent from God, John 1. 6. and his baptiſm being from heaven, and not of men, Matth. 21. 25. was alſo in effect the teſtimony of God. The import therefore of theſe words is rather this: If the teſtimony of two or three men be thought ſufficient to give credit to any matter in all courts of judicature, ſurely the teſtimony of that God, ver. 8. who cannot lie or deceive us, muſt be of greater force and ſtrength to produce faith in us.

Ver. 13. [n] Ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον, καὶ ἵνα πιστεύητε.] Here the Codex Alexandrinus reads thus, ὅτι ζωὴν ἔχετε αἰώνιον οἱ πιστεύοντες; ſo alſo read the Vulgar and the Syriac; the Arabic thus: "Hæc ſcripſi vobis, O "qui creditis in nomen Filii Dei, ut ſciatis quod "vitam habetis æternam quamdiu creditis in nomen "Filii Dei." Oecumenius, ἵνα πιστεύητε ἀδιαστάτως, καὶ ἀμώμῳ πίστει.

Ver. 16. [o] Ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον, a ſin unto death.] Note here, that the phraſe, He ſhall give him life, cannot reaſonably be interpreted of eternal life, for that depends not on the prayers of other men; nor can they be certain that their interceſſion ſhall prevail for it, ſince it belongs only to them who truly repent, and reform their lives. 2. Becauſe the perſon to be prayed for is one that hath not ſinned unto death, i. e. hath not committed a ſin which renders him obnoxious to death eternal. 3. They who interpret this phraſe, a ſin unto death, of a ſin on which eternal death will certainly follow, by the decree of God, 1. Make the duty here injoined impracticable; for who can know when his brother's ſin is thus to death or not? who is acquainted with any ſuch decree of God? 2. They make the difference betwixt a ſin unto death, and not to death, to conſiſt not in the nature of the ſins themſelves, but in the decree by God paſſed upon the ſinner. 3. They make the apoſtle ſay, he dares not encourage them to pray for the ſalvation of them who are at preſent in a ſtate of death and condemnation, which is againſt the tenor of the ſcripture; ſee Rom. 10. 1. The words, If a man ſee his brother ſin a ſin not unto death, ſeem like unto thoſe of St Paul, If he ſee him overtaken taken with a fault, Gal. 6. 1. i. e. with an act of injustice against his brother, to awaken him out of which sin, God hath inflicted sickness on him, as he did on the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 11. 30. The words, Let him ask, and he shall give him life, seem parallel to those of St James, The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; see the note on James 5. 15. If this interpretation will not stand good, consider, that after all the miracles and distributions of the Holy Ghost vouchsafed in confirmation of the gospel, too many of the Jews apostatised from the profession of it, relapsing to their former Judaism: and this apostasy may here be termed the sin unto death; it being also that which our Saviour represents as the sin against the Holy Ghost, which should not be forgiven, Matth. 12. 32. And they who commit it being men, saith the apostle, whom it is impossible to renew unto repentance, Heb. 6. 4. 5. 6. and to whom there remaineth nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment, Heb. 10. 26. 27. the apostle might well add, I do not say, that you shall pray for them.

Ver. 19. ° Ἐν τῷ πονηρῷ.] In Satan who worketh in the children of disobedience, Eph. 3. 2. and leads them captive at his will, 2 Tim. 2. 26. whence by faith in Christ we are said to be translated from the power of darkness, Col. 1. 13. from the power of Satan, Acts 26. 18. and recovered from the snare of the devil.

Ver. 20. ᵖ Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς, he is the true God.] That this is not spoken of Christ, the Socinians endeavour to prove, because the article is here added to the word Θεὸς, God, which is never, say they, done when Christ is called God: but this is manifestly false; for Thomas saith expressly of him, Ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, my Lord, and my God, John 20. 28.; and the apostle, ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ πάντων Θεὸς, who is God over all, blessed for ever, Rom. 9. 5.; we prove that this is spoken of Christ:

1. Because the demonstrative pronoun οὗτος most appositely relates to that which immediately went before; now, this is Jesus Christ the Son of God.

To this the Socinians (l) answer, that this is not always so, these relatives often referring to what is more remote: and so this οὗτος may refer to the true God going before. To this we reply,

1*st*, That when this happens to be so, the necessity of referring it to what is more remote, is evident from the text, and necessary from the nature of the thing; as when it is said, Acts 4. 11. οὗτος, This is the stone set at nought by you builders, this cannot be referred to the man that was made whole, ver. 10.; and Acts 7. 19. οὗτος, He dealt subtilly with our nation, this cannot refer to Joseph, but to the king of Egypt. So also Acts 10. 5. 6. 2 Thess. 2. 9. 2 John, ver. 7. But here is no necessity of referring the pronoun to any thing more remote, but on supposition that Christ is not truly God.

2*dly*, This never happens when the pronoun relates to any thing that is spoken of professedly, but only when the nearest antecedent is only mentioned accidentally, and by the by. So Eph. 2. 7. Many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus is the Christ; οὗτος, he is a deciever, and an antichrist; where the pronoun refers not to Christ, because he is there mentioned only by accident, as being the object of the error of these seducers: and so it is in all the other places cited. But here the apostle is professedly speaking of Christ through the whole verse, and of the Father only as we by Christ are taught to know him. And,

3*dly*, To refer this to the true God going before, makes the apostle guilty of a tautology, by saying, the true God, he is the true God.

4*thly*, Of the same person it is said, He is the true God, and eternal life. Now, eternal life is in this very chapter thrice ascribed to the Son, as the author of it, ver. 11. 12. 13. He is styled ζωὴ, life, John 1. 4. and 5. 26. and 14. 6. and 17. 2.; our life, Col. 3. 4.; Christ is here also styled ὁ ἀληθινὸς, the true; as also Rev. 3. 7. and 19. 11. And otherwise the Greek should have been ἵνα, that we may, or might be, to answer to γινώσκωμεν, that we might know, and not ἐσμὲν, we are in the true.

Ver. 21. ᵠ Ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, from the idols,] or false gods of the Heathens, among whom you live: so 1 Thess. 1. 9. They turned ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, from idols, to the true and living God: thus, an idol is nothing in the world, i. e. no true God, because there is but one true God, 2 Cor. 8. 4. Thus to eat things offered to idols, συνηθείᾳ τοῦ εἰδώλου, with conscience of the idol, is to eat it with apprehension that there was somewhat of power or virtue in that god to whom it was offered. Nevertheless, because these false gods were still represented by, and worshipped in their (m) images, and they were thought necessary to the worship of their deities, therefore the apostle useth here the word idols, and equally forbids that way of worshipping the true God.

THE PREFACE TO THE Second EPISTLE GENERAL of St JOHN.

THAT St John the apoſtle was the author of the firſt epiſtle is confeſſed by all the ancients; and that the ſame perſon was the author of this epiſtle, is evident from the exact agreement of almoſt every word of this with the former, except the preface and concluſion. For,

1. Theſe words in the 5th verſe, I write no new commandment to you, but that which you have had from the beginning, that ye love one another, are the ſame with thoſe, epiſt. 1. chap. 2. 8. 10. and 3. 10.

2. Theſe words in the 6th verſe, This is love, that we walk after his commandments, are the ſame with 1ſt epiſt. chap. 5. 3. and the following words are in ſenſe the ſame with chap. 4. 21.

3. Theſe words in the 7th verſe, For many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confeſs not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh: he is a deceiver, and an antichriſt, are in ſenſe the ſame with 1 John 2. 18. 19. 26. chap. 4. 1. 2. 3.

4. Theſe words, ver. 9. He that tranſgreſſeth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt, hath the Father and the Son, are in ſenſe the ſame with 1 John 2. 24.

5. Theſe words, ver. 12. That your joy may be full, are expreſsly found, 1 John 1. 4.

Moreover, the arguments which Grotius advances to the contrary as magna argumenta, are of no force againſt, but rather may be uſed as confirmations of this aſſertion, that St John the apoſtle was the author of this epiſtle. For whereas it is objected, that Euſebius puts this and the following epiſtle among the doubtful epiſtles, leaving it uncertain whether they were written by the apoſtle, or by John, preſbyter of Epheſus, to whom they were aſcribed, ſaith St Jerom; it is to be noted from Euſebius, that though by ſome they were doubted of, yet were they known to many of the ancients (a). Yea, this ſecond epiſtle is cited twice by Irenæus, as the genuine epiſtle of St John the apoſtle, and diſciple of our Lord, declaring, that they who denied that Jeſus Chriſt was come in the fleſh were (b) ſeducers and antichriſts, ver. 7. 8.; and they who bid the (c) heretic God ſpeed, are partakers of his evil deeds, which are the words found, ver. 10.

And in the council of Carthage, held anno Dom. 256. Aurelius (d) cites the 10th verſe, as the words of St John the apoſtle of the Lord.

Clemens of Alexandria (e) makes mention of the larger epiſtle of St John, which ſuppoſeth he had writ one or more ſhorter.

And Epiphanius ſaith (f), that the Alogi who rejected his goſpel and revelations, would perhaps reject his epiſtles alſo. So that we have here the teſtimony both of the eaſt and of the weſt concerning the true author of this epiſtle, that it was John the apoſtle and diſciple of our Lord; which ſure muſt be proof ſufficient againſt a bare doubt, or the ſilence of ſome men about this matter, of which Origen (g) ſpeaks. The other arguments of Grotius are ſo fully anſwered by Dr Hammond, in his preface to this epiſtle, that it is ſuperfluous to ſay any thing more upon that ſubject.

As for the name catholic, that alſo ſeems to be given to this and the following epiſtle, not as being written to all in general, ſome of the ancients conceiving this was written only to one family, as was the other to one perſon; but, as Cotelerius (h) notes, becauſe they were admitted by many churches, and read as catholic epiſtles.

A PARAPHRASE WITH ANNOTATIONS ON THE Second EPISTLE GENERAL of St JOHN.

Verse 1. THE [a] elder to the [b] elect lady, and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not only I, but also all that have known the truth;

2. For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us [c] for ever:

3. Grace be with you, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ the Son of the Father, in truth and love, (or, the true and beloved Son of the Father.)

4. I rejoiced greatly, that I found (those) of thy children walking [d] in the truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5. And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment, but that which we had from the beginning (of the gospel), that we love one another. (See note on 1 John 2. 7.)

6. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments, (chap. 5. 3.). (And) this is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it, (chap. 2. 24. i. e. we should continue walking according to the truth of the gospel, which it concerns us now especially to be careful of.)

7. For many deceivers are gone out into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ [e] is come in the flesh, (or, Jesus Christ coming in the flesh). This is a deceiver and an antichrist. (See note on chap. 2. 18. 22. and chap. 4. 1. 2. 3.)

8. Look to yourselves, that we lose not the things that we have wrought, but that we may receive [f] a full reward.

9. Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that [g] abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

10. If there come any one unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; (i. e. have no familiarity with him, and wish him no success in his enterprises.)

11. For he that biddeth him [h] God speed, is partaker of his evil deeds, (as shewing friendship to him that does them, and wishing well to them; for by this he shews he is willing he should succeed in them.)

12. Having many things to write unto you, I would not write (them) with paper and ink, (as I do this epistle); but I trust (ἐλπίζω γὰρ, for I hope, say some copies) to come unto you, and [i] speak face to face, that your joy may be full.

13. The children of thy elect sister greet thee. Amen. (See note on ver. 1.)

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 1. [a] Πρεσβύτερος, the elder.] That the apoſtle ſhould in this epiſtle conceal his name, as in the former he had done, is ſo far from being an argument to conclude he was not the author of it, that it proves rather the contrary, he being, as it is obſerved by Dr Hammond, the only apoſtle that affected to conceal his name, and who, in his goſpel, ſcarce ever ſpeaks of himſelf without ſome circumlocution.

That he ſhould call himſelf elder, and not apoſtle, as St Peter alſo doth, is no more an argument againſt the apoſtleſhip of the one than of the other. The word elder, being a name of honour and dignity belonging to the chief of their tribes, agrees very well with the office of the apoſtles, ſet over the twelve tribes of the houſe of Iſrael. But if this epiſtle was written before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as is probably collected from that caution given in it, ver. 7. 8. to beware of the deceivers that were gone out into the world, that they might not loſe the things which they had wrought, the apoſtle could not then be ſo aged when he writ it as he is generally thought to have been, though he might be then ſeventy years old, and therefore aged; ſee note on Philemon, ver. 9.

Ibid. [b] Ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ, to the elect lady.] That the apoſtle wrote this epiſtle to a ſingle perſon who was of honourable deſcent, and therefore ſtyled lady, will not follow from the mention of her children, ver. 4. ſeeing that phraſe is uſed both of the members of the Jewiſh and of the Chriſtian church, Iſ. 54. 1. Gal. 4. 25. 27. 28. 31. nor from the words, I hope to come to you, and ſpeak mouth to mouth; for ſo St Paul did to the church of Jeruſalem, when he declared to them what things God had wrought by him and Barnabas, Acts 15. 4. and ſo might St John do to that, or any other church. It ſeems rather, from the words, I have many things to write to you; and from the children of the elect ſiſter, mentioned, ver. 12. 13. that it ſhould be ſome Chriſtian church; and then I think there is great reaſon to conjecture it muſt not be that of Epheſus, but ſome Jewiſh church, and moſt probably that of Jeruſalem, the mother of all churches. For,

1. All the other epiſtles, excepting that one to Gaius, which paſs under the name of catholic, were written to the Jews, and ſo this probably muſt be ſo.

2. As other churches are ſtyled συνεκλεκταὶ, elected together with her, 1 Pet. 5. 13. ſo is the church of the Jews ſtyled, throughout the Old Teſtament, the elect; and the converts of them in the New, the elect, Matth. 24. 22. and the election, Rom. 11. 5. 7.

3. The phraſe, the word that ye have heard, the truth you have received, ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, from the beginning, ſeems moſt properly to agree to them to whom it was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould be firſt preached, Acts 13. 41.

4. This church being that church from whence the word came out to all other churches, who all received of her ſpiritual things, ſhe may on that account, by the apoſtle of the circumciſion, be well ſtyled κυρία, as being the lady and mother of all other churches: and ſo we find, that anciently both ſhe, and her biſhops, were at firſt preferred before other biſhops and churches; whence the emperor Juſtinus (a), in his epiſtle to Pope Hormiſda, ſaith, that all churches favour the church of Jeruſalem, as being the mother of all churches. But yet if this epiſtle was written after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, this interpretation cannot ſtand.

Ver. 2. [c] Εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, for ever.] This ſeems to aſſert the perpetuity and indefectibility of the church of God; for where the truth of the goſpel is for ever, there muſt be a church for ever.

Ver. 4. [d] Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, in the truth;] i. e. in the doctrine of Chriſt, as the Father hath commanded, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, hear him, Matth. 17. 5.

Ver. 7. [e] Ἐρχόμενον ἐν σαρκί, coming in the fleſh.] It appears from the epiſtle of Ignatius to the church of Smyrna, that there were then heretics, or rather infidels (b), who denied that Jeſus Chriſt had taken upon him true fleſh, ſaying, he only had the appearance of it, and ſuffered only in appearance. And theſe are thought to be the followers of Simon Magus, who taking upon him to be Chriſt, ſaid, that he (c) appeared in Judea as a man, not being ſo, and ſeemed to ſuffer, when he did not ſo. Saturninus (d), one of his followers, taught, that "Chriſt only ap-"peared as a man, and ſuffered in appearance only." But the apoſtle could not here put in this caution againſt him, becauſe he was not yet in being when this epiſtle was endited. According to the other rendering of the words, denying Jeſus Chriſt who is come in the fleſh, they will ſignify the ſame as denying him to be the Meſſiah, and ſo reſpect the unbelieving Jews, and be deſigned to eſtabliſh them to whom he wrote againſt that apoſtaſy which was then among the Jewiſh converts.

Ver. 8. ' Μισθὸν πλήρη, That we loſe not — a full reward.] Hence it follows, That it is not only lawful, but is the duty of a Chriſtian, to ſerve God with reſpect to the recompenſe of reward. 2. That they who once walked in the truth, as they had received a commandment, ver. 4. had Chriſtian charity, ver. 5. even that love which enabled them to walk according to God's commandments, ver. 6. might loſe thoſe things which they had wrought.

Ver. 9. ε Ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ, He that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt.] Theſe words being in ſenſe the ſame with thoſe we find, 1 John 2. 22. 23. 24. ſeem to ſhew, that the doctrine of Chriſt, here mentioned, is this fundamental doctrine, That Jeſus is the Chriſt: and then, the not abiding in it muſt be the apoſtatizing from it to Judaiſm; which St Paul, and the apoſtles of the circumciſion, ſo much laboured to prevent.

Ver. 18. ϑ Χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε, bid him not God ſpeed.] This precept ſeems to be taken from the Jews, who were forbid to ſay אלהים, God ſpeed, to a man that was "excommunicated," or "was doing "any evil action." (e) Hence it is forbidden by their canons, to ſay "God ſpeed to a man that is "ploughing on the ſabbath-day." They alſo are forbid to come within four cubits of an heretic, or of a perſon excommunicated; and much more, to admit him into their houſes. But yet this doth not forbid us to ſhew humanity towards a diſtreſſed heretic, (ſeeing he ceaſeth not to be of the number of thoſe whom we ſhould pity, and pray for); but only is a prohibition from doing any thing, which imports a conſent to, or approbation of his evil actions.

Verse 1. THE elder, to the beloved [b] Gaius, whom I love in the truth, (i. e. with great ſincerity.)

2. Beloved, I wiſh above all (things) that thou mayſt proſper and be in health, (περὶ πάντων, in all things temporal), even as thy ſoul proſpereth (in all things ſpiritual.)

3. For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came (out of Judea), and teſtified of the truth (of the goſpel) that is in thee, even as thou walkeſt in the truth, (confirming their teſtimony by thy converſation.)

4. I have no greater joy [c] than to hear that my children walk in (the) truth.

5. Beloved, thou doſt faithfully (as becomes a faithful Chriſtian) whatſoever thou doſt to the brethren, and to ſtrangers (whom thou receiveſt into thy houſe, Rom. 16. 23.);

6. Who have born witneſs of thy charity before the church: [d] whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly ſort, (i. e. with ſuch charity and care, as becomes one who conſiders that he performs theſe things, not to men only, but to God and Chriſt, whoſe miniſters they are), thou ſhalt do well:

7. Becauſe that [e] for his name's ſake they went forth (to preach the goſpel, Acts 15. 26.), taking nothing of the Gentiles, (to whom they preached the goſpel without charge, 1 Cor. 9. 18.)

8. We therefore ought to receive ſuch, that we (Chriſtians who do not preach it) might (yet) be fellow-helpers to the truth (by helping them that do ſo.)

9. [f] I wrote to the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.

10. Wherefore, if I come, [g] I will remember his deeds which he doth, prating againſt us (me, and the other apoſtles, who thought not fit to lay the burthen of circumciſion on the believing Gentiles) with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himſelf receive the brethren, and (but) forbiddeth them that would, and caſteth them out of the church, (as the Jews did the uncircumciſed out of their ſociety. See note on James 2. 12.)

11. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, (after the example of Diotrephes), but that which is good, (as Demetrius doth: for) he that doth good, is of God, (who is good to all); but he that doth evil, hath not ſeen God, (1 John 3. 6. 10.)

12. Demetrius hath (a) good report of all men, and of the truth itſelf; yea, and we alſo bear record (of him), and ye know that our record is true, (John 19. 35. and 21. 14.).

13. I had many things (which it would be profitable) to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee.

14. But I truſt I ſhall ſhortly ſee thee, and we ſhall ſpeak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends ſalute thee. Greet the friends by name.

ANNO-

ANNOTATIONS.

[a] Ἰωάννου τοῦ ἀποστόλου ἐπιστολὴ καθολικὴ τρίτη, i. e. The third epiſtle general of the apoſtle John.] That this epiſtle was written by the author of the firſt and ſecond, and therefore by St John the apoſtle, appears by the agreement of them in words and phraſes, For,

1. The elder, ver. 1. I rejoiced greatly, that thou walkeſt in the truth, ver. 3.; He that doth good, is of God; he that doth evil, hath not ſeen God; are the uſual phraſes of the firſt and ſecond epiſtles.

2. Thoſe words, I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth, are in ſenſe the ſame with the 4th verſe of the ſecond epiſtle. The 13th and the 14th verſes are in words the ſame with the 12th verſe of that epiſtle.

3. Thoſe words, ver. 12. And we bear witneſs, and ye know that our witneſs is true, do characterize this apoſtle: for as they are words of confirmation, importing an apoſtolical authority, ſo are they twice uſed by this apoſtle, John 19. 35. and 21. 24. and by him only.

Ver. 1. [b] Gaius.] This Gaius, who is here commended for his charity to, and entertainment both of the brethren and ſtrangers, ver. 5. and eſpecially of thoſe who went out from the church of Jeruſalem, to preach the goſpel among the Gentiles, and who had given teſtimony of his love before the church, ſeems to be Gaius of Corinth, ſtyled by St Paul, Gaius, my hoſt, and of the whole church, Rom. 16. 23. where there is intimation of his charity to the brethren, and to himſelf, given by St Paul to thoſe at Rome; and ſo a teſtimony of it, from one of them who went out to preach the goſpel among the Gentiles, taking nothing of them. And indeed Paul and Barnabas went out upon this errand, firſt from Antioch, by the direction of the Spirit, Acts 13. 4. then from Jeruſalem, being ſent by that church to Antioch, Acts 15. 30. And they went out, ὑπὲρ ἐνέματος αὐτοῦ, for the name of Chriſt, ver. 26. taking nothing of the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 9. 5. 6. So did alſo Titus and Timothy, and all that were ſent by St Paul to Achaia, 2 Cor. 12. 17. 18. So did they at Theſſalonica, 1 Theſſ. 2. 9. and ſo did none of the reſt of the apoſtles, or brethren of the Lord, 1 Cor. 9. 5. 6. So that we have no ground from ſcripture to refer this to any other. And whereas it is ſaid, that Gaius of Corinth was the convert of St Paul, 1 Cor. 1. 14. whereas this Gaius is here ſtyled one of St John's children, and ſo muſt be ſuppoſed to have been the convert of St John: To this it may be anſwered, That St John calls all to whom he writes, his children, 1 John 2. 1. 12. 18. 28. and 3. 7. 18. and 5. 21. and ſo the word children ſignifies with him no more than the word Chriſtian brethren; and elders and fathers being oft of the ſame import, he ſtyling himſelf an elder, may well call them he writes to, children.

Ver. 4. [c] Ἵνα ἀκούω, than to hear.] This conſtruction of the conjunction ἵνα, ſaith Beſuleius, is ſufficient to ſhew that this is the epiſtle of St John, it being almoſt peculiar to him to uſe this conjunction for ὅτι, or ὅταν, or ἢ ἵνα, as John 15. 8. In this is my Father glorified, ἵνα, when you bring forth much fruit: and ver. 13. Greater love than this hath no man, i. e. ἵνα, than that a man lay down his life for the brethren, chap. 16. 2. The time will come, ἵνα, when they will put you out of the ſynagogues. And ver. 32. The hour cometh, ἵνα, when you ſhall be ſcattered. See note on 1 John 4. 17.

Ver. 6. [d] Οὓς προπέμψας ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, whom if you bring forward, as is worthy of God;] i. e. as it is fit to receive the miniſters of God. So, to receive Phœbe, ἀξίως τῶν ἁγίων, is to receive her, as it becometh Chriſtians to receive the ſaints, Rom. 16. 2. The word προπέμψας is the word ſtill uſed, concerning them who are to be ſent forward in preaching the goſpel, or in their travels concerning the affairs of the church, ſee Acts 15. 3. and 20. 38. and 21. 5. Rom. 15. 24. 1 Cor. 16. 6. 11. 2 Cor. 1. 16. Tit. 3. 13.

Ver. 7. [e] Ὑπὲρ γὰρ ἐνέματος αὐτοῦ ἐξῆλθον, for his name's ſake they went forth:] That is, ſaith one, "They "were expelled, or caſt out;" referring this to the Chriſtians, who, by the perſecution of the unbelieving Jews, were driven from Jeruſalem, Acts 8. 1. But, 1. The word ἐξῆλθον, they went forth, is only uſed in the forcible ſenſe, when mention is made of devils going forth, from thoſe they poſſeſſed, at Chriſt's command, and never of any Chriſtians expelled from any place for the profeſſion of Chriſtianity. 2. The apoſtle ſpeaks manifeſtly here of thoſe who went out as the apoſtles and miniſters of Chriſt, to preach to the Gentiles; whereas they of the diſperſion, mentioned Acts 8. 1. went out to avoid perſecutions, and preached to the Jews only, not thinking it lawful to converſe with, or preach to the Gentiles, Acts 11. 19.

Ver. 9. [f] Ἔγραψα, I wrote.] "I had written," ſo the Vulgar: "I would have writ," ſo the Syriac: the Hebrews often uſe the præteritum for the pluſquam perfectum: and Voſſius obſerves of the aoriſt, that it is ſo called, becauſe it is uſed ſometimes for the perfect, ſometimes for the preterperfect tenſe, and then ἔγραψα may be rendered, I had written. See examples of this nature, note on 1 Cor. 5. 9. The apoſtle then ſeems here to obviate an objection, why why he writes to Gaius, a ſingle perſon, and not to the whole church; declaring that he would have writ to the church, but then Diotrephes, and his party, would have hindered the effect of his writing. Now, who this Diotrephes was, is wholly uncertain: I ſee no ground for the conjecture of Grotius, that he was a Gentile convert, who would not admit thoſe Jews, who profeſſing Chriſtianity, ſtill obſerved the rites of the law, into the Chriſtian aſſemblies. Eſthius, on the contrary, conjectures, that he was one of thoſe Jewiſh zealots who held it neceſſary that even the Gentile converts ſhould be circumciſed, and obſerve the law; and rejected thoſe who had declared for the contrary, as we know from St Paul, and the council at Jeruſalem, St John had done: and that there were men in Corinth, and Galatia, who, upon this account, oppoſed the apoſtles, we learn from thoſe epiſtles; but read not of any Gentile converts who would not receive the weak Jews, or be hoſpitable to them, on the account of their obſervance of the law, much leſs of any of them who oppoſed themſelves to the apoſtles upon this account. Moreover, the ſubject of the apoſtle's writing, being to exhort Chriſtians to receive them who had gone out to preach the goſpel among the Gentiles, taking nothing of them; and all that did ſo, as far as we know any thing of them, being againſt theſe impoſitions, the apoſtle could not fear they ſhould not be received, becauſe obſervers of the law; but, on the contrary, becauſe they were dead to the law.

Ver. 10. ὑπομνήσω, I will remember his works.] Private offences againſt ourſelves muſt be forgiven, and forgotten; but when the offence εἰς τὴν πίστιν ἰμπόδιον φέρει, is an impediment to the faith, and very prejudicial to the church, it is to be oppoſed, and openly reproved.

THE PREFACE TO THE GENERAL EPISTLE of St JUDE.

HAVING proved, note on ver. 1. That Jude the apoſtle was the author of this epiſtle, I have nothing more to add, by way of preface to it, but the words of the learned Dr Lightfoot, which are theſe:

"As the ſecond epiſtle of St Peter, and this of "Jude, are very near akin, in ſtyle, matter, and "ſubject; ſo it is fairly conjecturable, that they "were not far removed in time, ſpeaking both of "wicked ones, and wickedneſs, at the ſame height "and ripeneſs. It may be Jude ſtands up in the "charge of his brother James among the circumciſion of Judea, and directs his epiſtle to all thoſe "who were ſanctified and preſerved in thoſe apoſtatiſing times, as his brother had done to all the twelve tribes in general.

"In citing the ſtory of Michael the archangel, "contending with the devil about the body of Moſes, ver. 9. he doth but the ſame that St Paul "doth, in naming Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. 3. "8. namely, alledge a ſtory which was current, and "owned among that nation, though there was no "ſuch thing in ſcripture; and ſo he argueth with "them, from their own authors and conceſſions: "for among the Talmudiſts, there ſeems to be "ſomething like the relics of ſuch a matter, viz. "of Michael and the angel of death diſputing, or "diſcourſing, about fetching away the ſoul of Moſes.

"His alledging the prophecy of Enoch is an arguing of the very like nature; as reciting and referring to ſome known and common tradition that "they had among them. To this purpoſe, the "book Sepher Jeſher, an Hebrew writer, ſpeaketh "of Enoch after ſuch a tenor; and in both theſe "he uſeth their own teſtimonies againſt themſelves, "as if he ſhould have ſaid at large, Theſe men ſpeak "evil of dignities; whereas they have, and own a "ſtory for current, that even Michael the archangel did not ſpeak evil of the devil, when he "was ſtriving with him about the body of Moſes: "and whereas they ſhew and own a prophecy of "Enoch, of God coming to judgment, theſe are "the very men to whom this matter is to be applied." Which words give a ſufficient anſwer to the only objection made againſt the authority of this book, viz. That it cites Apocryphal writings.

PARAPHRASE

ANNOTATIONS

GENERAL EPISTLE of St JUDE.

Verſe 1. JUDE the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, and [a] brother of James, to them that are ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt, and called: (Gr. To the called, who have been ſanctified by God the Father, and preſerved in (the faith of) Jeſus Chriſt):

2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love be multiplied.

3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common ſalvation, it was needful for me (Gr. I thought it neceſſary) to write unto you, and exhort you, that you ſhould earneſtly contend for [b] the faith which was once delivered to the ſaints.

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, (Gr. for certain men have entered, viz. into the church), who were of [c] old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, [d] turning the grace of our God into laſciviouſneſs, and denying the only [e] Lord God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though you once knew this, how that the Lord having ſaved the people (of Iſrael of whom you are a part) out of the land of Egypt; afterwards deſtroyed [f] them that believed not.

6. And the angels [g] which kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the judgment of the great day.

7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, [h] in like manner giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange (Gr. other) fleſh, [i] are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8. Likewiſe alſo [k] theſe filthy dreamers defile the fleſh, deſpiſe dominion, and ſpeak evil of dignities.

9. Yet Michael the archangel, when, contending with the devil, he diſputed [l] about the body of Moſes, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, The Lord rebuke thee.

10. But theſe ſpeak evil of [m] thoſe things which they know not: but what they know naturally as brute beaſts; in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves.

11. Wo unto them; for they have gone [n] in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and periſhed [o] in the gainſaying of Core.

12. Theſe are [p] ſpots in your [q] feaſts of charity, when they feaſt with you, feeding themſelves without fear (of intemperance, or eating things offered to idols): [r] clouds they are without water, carried about of winds; [s] trees whoſe fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots:

13. Raging

13. [t] Raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame; [u] wandering ſtars, to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever.

14. And Enoch alſo, the ſeventh from Adam, [x] propheſied of (Gr. to) theſe, ſaying, Behold, the Lord cometh [y] with ten thouſand of his ſaints,

15. To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him.

16. Theſe are [z] murmurers, complainers, walking after their own luſts; and their mouth ſpeaketh [aa] great ſwelling words, having mens perſons in admiration [bb] becauſe of advantage.

17. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were ſpoken before (by) the apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:

18. How that they told you there ſhould be mockers in the laſt time, who ſhould walk after their own ungodly luſts. (See note on 2 Pet. 3. 2. 3.)

19. Theſe be they [cc] who ſeparate themſelves, ſenſual, having not the Spirit.

20. But ye, beloved, building up yourſelves in your moſt holy faith, praying in [dd] the Holy Ghoſt,

21. Keep yourſelves in the love of [ee] God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life.

22. And of ſome have compaſſion, [ff] making a difference (betwixt the beguilers through ſubtilty, and the beguiled through ſimplicity):

23. And others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire; [gg] hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh.

24. Now unto him that is able (and willing to do his part, ſee note on Rom. 14. 4.) to keep you from falling, and to preſent you faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy,

25. To the only wiſe God (who alone is infinite in wiſdom, and hath wiſdom from himſelf, and who is) our Saviour, be glory and majeſty, dominion and power (aſcribed), both now and ever. Amen.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verſe 1. [a] Ἀδελφὸς Ἰακώβου, the brother of James.] This characteriſtic is ſufficient to aſſure us, this epiſtle can belong only to Jude the apoſtle, diſtinguiſhed from Judas Iſcariot by this title, that he was Judas the brother of James, Luke 6. 16.; and to confirm the title given to this epiſtle by the ancients, The general epiſtle of Jude the apoſtle; this being a plain demonſtration of the point. Grotius will have theſe words, The brother of James, to be an addition of ſome tranſcriber; but this being ſaid without any proof, lays the whole ſcripture uncertain, ſince every man may ſay, if that will be ſufficient without proof, that what he diſlikes is the addition of ſome tranſcriber. (a) Tertullian is poſitive, that Enoch apud Judam apoſtolum teſtimonium poſſidet, "hath the teſtimony of Jude the apoſtle "to confirm his prophecy;" and among the apoſtles of Chriſt Origen (b) reckons Peter the writer of two epiſtles, and James and Jude. That in this epiſtle he doth not ſtyle himſelf an apoſtle, can be no argument to conclude he was not an apoſtle; ſince the ſame argument will prove, that St James and St John, and even St Paul, were no apoſtles.

Ver. 3. [b] Τῇ ἅπαξ παραδοθείσῃ πίστει, the faith once delivered to the ſaints.] Here, ſaith Eſthius, the apoſtle inſinuates that which the fathers teach, viz. that nothing can be added to the faith, becauſe it was delivered all at once as a depoſitum, ſo to be kept that nothing ought to be added to it, or taken from it. Whence it is evident to a demonſtration, that the new articles added by the Trent council to the apoſtles creed, can be no articles of the Chriſtian faith, as being not delivered by Chriſt, or his apoſtles, to the world, nor known to the Chriſtians for many ages after their deceaſe.

Ver. 4. [c] Προεγγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρίμα, before ordained to this condemnation.] Gr. of whom it was before written, that this ſhould be their condemnation. For, that this cannot be meant of any divine ordination, or appointment of them to eternal condemnation, is evident; 1. Becauſe it cannot be thought, without horror, that God doth thus ordain men to perdition before they had any being. 2. The word κρῖμα here relates not unto ſin, but puniſhment, the fruit of ſin. So, Mark 12. 40. They ſhall receive περισσότερον κρῖμα, greater puniſhment. Thinkeſt thou this, Oh man, that thou ſhalt avoid τὸ κρῖμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, the judgment or puniſhment of God? Now, God ordaineth none to puniſhment but ſinners, and ungodly men, as theſe perſons here are ſtyled. And, 3. Theſe were men of whom it was before written, or propheſied, that they ſhould be condemned for their wickedneſs; for, ver. 14. Enoch προεφήτευσε, propheſied before to (or of) theſe men, ſaying, That God would come ποιῆσαι κρῖσιν, to do judgment upon all, and to reprove all the ungodly among them; and in the parallel place of St Peter, (2 Pet. 2. 3.), their puniſhment is ſtyled τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι, the puniſhment long ago denounced againſt them, viz. that they ſhould be reſerved unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed, ver. 9. that they ſhould periſh in their corruption, ver. 12. they being the men to whom the blackneſs of darkneſs was reſerved for ever, ver. 13. And this is the very thing that both St Peter from ver. 4. to 13. and St Jude from this verſe to the 16th, ſet themſelves to prove. And this alſo is the import of the word προγεγράφη, Rom. 15. 4. ὅσα προεγράφη, Whatſoever things were before written, were written for our inſtruction. And Gal. 3. 1. See the note there. "He ſpeaks "this of them," ſaith Oecumenius (c), "becauſe St "Peter and St Paul had before ſpoken of them, "that in the laſt time there ſhould come ſuch de- "ceivers; and before them Chriſt himſelf, ſaying, "Many ſhall come in my name, and deceive ma- "ny." And againſt this interpretation of Oecumenius and Dr Hammond, there lies only this objection, that the judgment mentioned by Chriſt and his apoſtles, not long before, cannot ſo properly be called κρῖμα τὸ ἔκπαλαι, the judgment long ago denounced; nor could theſe ungodly men be ſtyled οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι, the men propheſied of old, on that account, ſo well as if this be referred to the prophecy of Enoch, Jude 14. or to the words ſpoken before by the holy prophets, 2 Pet. 3. 2. For ἔκπαλαι and πάλαι joined with προγεγραμμένοι, ibid. ſeem plainly to import ſome ancient time in which this judgment was denounced againſt theſe ungodly men.

Ibid. ᵃ Μετατιθέντες, turning the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs.] This agrees exactly with the lewd doctrines of the Nicolaitans, mentioned note on 2 Pet. 2. and as exactly with the doctrine of Simon Magus, that "they who believed in him and his "Helena might freely do what they liſted," ſecundum enim ipſius gratiam ſalvari, ſed non ſecundum operas juſtas, "Men being to be ſaved by his grace, "and not by works," Iren. l. 1. c. 29. Theodoret. hær. fab. l. 1. c. 1.

Ibid. ᵇ Καὶ τὸν μόνον δεσπότην Θεὸν, καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι.] Theſe words may be thus rendered, and denying Jeſus Chriſt our only maſter, God, and Lord. And that they ought to be thus rendered, is argued, 1. Becauſe one article only is put before all theſe words, δεσπότης, Θεὸς, Κύριος, which ſhews they all belong to the ſame perſon. 2. Becauſe the perſon who is here δεσπότης Θεὸς, the only maſter God, is by St Peter, 2 Pet. 2. 1. ſtyled τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην, the Lord that bought them: Now, it is Chriſt who bought us with the price of his own blood. To the firſt of theſe arguments Grotius and Woltzogenius anſwer, That it is common in ſcripture to affix one and the ſame article to divers perſons, and in particular to God the Father, and to Chriſt: as v. g. No fornicator, or unclean perſon, ſhall have any inheritance in the kingdom τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ, of Chriſt and of God, Eph. 5. 5. I charge thee ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Tim. 5. 21. which 2 Tim. 4. 1. is τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, and 2 Pet. 1. 2. in the knowledge τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Ἰησοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, of God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. See 1 Tim. 6. 13. To the ſecond argument it may be anſwered, That in ſcripture, not only Chriſt, but the Father, is ſaid to have bought and purchaſed us, Acts 20. 28. 1 Cor. 6. 20. And that he is the perſon intended by St Peter, ſee the note there. And ſeeing the word δεσπότης is never elſewhere aſcribed to Chriſt, I think our verſion, which puts the comma after God, is without juſt exception. Note alſo, that Simon Magus denied both the God of Iſrael and Jeſus Chriſt, declaring that he himſelf was that (d) "in- "finite power, which appeared to the Samaritans "as the Father, and to the Jews as the Son of "God;" and ſo he and his followers denied both the Father and the Son.

Ver. 5. Εἰδότας ὑμᾶς ἅπαξ τοῦτο.] The Jews knowing the deſtruction which God brought upon the unbelieving Jews in the wilderneſs as well when St Jude writ, as before, it ſeemeth not ſo proper to ſay to them, You knew this once, as to ſay, You knew it before; which ſeems to be the import of the word ἅπαξ, ver. 3. and in thoſe words of Samſon, Judg. 16. 21. ἐξελεύσομαι ὡς ἅπαξ, I will go forth as before, and chap. 20. 31. The Benjamites began to ſmite them, ὡς ἅπαξ καὶ ἅπαξ, ſaying, They flee before us, ὡς τὸ πρότερον, as before. Or, 2. It may be rendered fully, plainly, or certainly; for τὸ ἅπαξ, ſaith Phavorinus, is put ἀντὶ τοῦ ὄντως, βεβαίως, for verily and firmly; and Suidas ſaith it is uſed ἀντὶ τοῦ ὅλως ὁλοσχερῶς, for entirely and fully; and ſo it anſwers to the Hebrew Achatz, or Achad, which ſignifies truly, or certainly, and is rendered by the Septuagint, ἅπαξ.

Ibid. ᶜ Τοὺς μὴ πιστεύσαντας, them that believed not;] i. e. ſaith Grotius, thoſe that obeyed not, for ſuch ſhew they believe not at all, or not aright. But this note is needleſs here; for the ſcripture expreſsly ſaith, they periſhed in the wilderneſs, becauſe they believed not in God, but tempted, i. e. diſtruſted him, ten times, Numb. 14. 22. Pſal. 106. 24. And St Paul, We ſee then they could not enter in becauſe of unbelief, Heb. 3. 18. 19. chap. 4. 2.

(d) Justin M. Apol. 2. p. 69. Iren. l. 1. c. 20. Theodoret. hær. fab. l. 1. c. 1.

Ver. 6.

Ver. 6. ε Μὴ τηρήσαντας τὴν ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, not keeping their original eſtate, ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας τὸ ἴδιον οἰκητήριον, but leaving their proper habitation.] That which we are to enjoy for ever, is in the ſtyle of ſcripture called τὸ ἴδιον, our own, that which is proper to us; that which we are to leave to others, τὸ ἀλλότριον, as in thoſe words, If you have been unfaithful in that which is another man's, who will give you that which is your own? Luke 16. 12. Theſe angels being therefore primarily deſigned to live for ever in the higheſt heavens, the regions of light and bliſs, they are here ſtyled their proper habitation. See note on 2 Pet. 2. 4.

Ver. 7. ζ Τὸν ὅμοιον τούτοις τρόπον ἐκπορνεύσασαι, fornicating then, and going after other fleſh in like manner,] as theſe do now. Of both theſe crimes the Nicolaitans were notoriouſly guilty. For, 1. They held that matrimony was a mere human inſtitution, that obliged no man's conſcience; and ſo did indiſcrete vivere, live without making any difference betwixt one woman and another. And, 2. They practiſed unnatural luſts, and Sodomitical copulations, as may be proved from the teſtimonies of Irenæus (e), Clemens of Alexandria, the conſtitutions of the apoſtles, Epiphanius, and others.

Ibid. η Πρόκεινται δεῖγμα πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέχουσαι, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire:] That this is ſpoken not of the cities themſelves, but of the inhabitants which dwelt in them, i. e. of them who had given themſelves over to fornication, and gone after ſtrange fleſh, is evident; but yet I conceive they are ſaid to ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire, not becauſe their ſouls are at preſent puniſhed in hell-fire, but becauſe they and their cities periſhed by that fire from heaven, which brought a perpetual and irreparable deſtruction on them and their cities. For, 1. We have proved, note 2 Pet. 2. 6. and 3. 7. that even the devils themſelves are not tormented at preſent in that infernal fire, but only will be caſt into it at the day of judgment; and therefore neither do the wicked Sodomites yet ſuffer in thoſe flames. 2. I would admoniſh you, ſaith the apoſtle, Though you once knew this, that Sodom and Gomorrha thus ſuffered the vengeance of eternal fire. Now, from the hiſtory of Geneſis, and the writings of the prophets, they might know that theſe cities, and the inhabitants of them, were overthrown, εἰς αἰῶνα, with a perpetual deſolation, Zeph. 2. 9. but they could not know from thence that their ſouls were afterwards caſt into hell-fire. 3. Τὸ δεῖγμα, an example, is to be taken from ſomething viſible to, or knowable by all who were to be terrified by it, eſpecially when it is δεῖγμα προκείμενον, an example manifeſted, and propoſed: now, ſuch was not the puniſhment of their ſouls in hell-fire; but nothing was more known and celebrated among authors, ſacred and profane, Jewiſh, Chriſtian, and Heathen writers, than τὸ πῦρ καταβᾶσον ἐπὶ Πενταπόλεως, the fire that fell down upon Pentapolis, or the five cities of Sodom, they being mentioned ſtill in ſcripture as the cities which God overthrew with a perpetual deſolation; in the Apocryphal writings, the waſte land that yet ſmoketh, and the plants bearing fruit that never come to ripeneſs, being, ſaith the book of Wiſdom, μαρτύριον τῆς πονηρίας, a teſtimony of their wickedneſs, Wiſd. 10. 7. and of the divine vengeance on them for it. The author of the hiſtory of the Maccabees ſaith, that God deſtroying them by fire and brimſtone, Mac. 3. 2. 5. παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐπιγινομένοις κατέστησεν, left them an example to the ages to come. (f) Philo ſaith, that the "cinders, brimſtone, and ſmoke, and the obſcure flame as it "were of a fire burning, yet appearing about Syria, are memorials of the perpetual evils which "happened to them." (g) Joſephus adds, that the things which are ſaid of Sodom, ἔχει πίστιν ἀπὸ τῆς ὄψεως, "are confirmed by ocular inſpection, there "being yet viſible ſome relics of the fire coming "down from heaven, and the ſhadows of the five "cities." This region, ſay Clemens Romanus (h), and other Chriſtian writers, being "condemned "by fire and brimſtone, made it apparent that God "reſerves the wicked for puniſhment and ſtripes." Even (i) Heathen writers do confeſs that it was traditionally received, "that formerly there were "fruitful fields, and large cities which were afterwards conſumed by thunder and lightning." And, 4. This ſenſe may be farther confirmed from the parallel place of St Peter, who ſaith, that God reducing the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha to aſhes, condemned (the inhabitants of) them by that overthrow, propoſing them for an example of his vindictive juſtice upon them who afterwards ſhould live ungodly: where plainly the τέφρωσις, the reduction of thoſe cities with their inhabitants into aſhes, or the burning them by fire and brimſtone falling down from heaven, is mentioned as the thing which placed them as an example of God's vengeance on the ungodly to all future ages: nor could any thing be a more fit example of it; for ſince Peter hath informed us, that the heavens and the earth that now are, are reſerved to fire againſt the day of judgment, and deſtruction of ungodly men, when the earth, and the works that are therein ſhall be burnt up, what could be a more exact emblem of that day, when God will come in flaming fire to take vengeance on the wicked, and leave them burning with the earth for ever, than was this burning of the cities and the inhabitants of Sodom by fire and brimſtone falling down from heaven? Nor is there any thing more common and familiar in ſcripture than to repreſent a thorough and irreparable vaſtation, whoſe effects and ſigns ſhould be ſtill remaining, by the word αἰώνιος, which we here render eternal. I will ſet thee εἰς ἔρημον αἰώνιον, in places deſolate of old, Ezek. 26. 20. I will deſtroy thee, and thou ſhalt be no more εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, for ever, ver. 21.; I will make thee ἐρημίαν αἰώνιον, a perpetual deſolation, and thy cities ſhall be built no more, chap. 35. 9.; ſee alſo Ezek. 36. 2. Iſ. 58. 12. They have cauſed them to ſtumble in their ways, to make their land deſolate, and σύριγμα αἰώνιον, a perpetual hiſſing, Jer. 18. 15. 16.; I will bring upon you ὀνειδισμὸν αἰώνιον, an everlaſting reproach, and a perpetual ſhame, which ſhall not be forgotten, Jer. 23. 40. and 25. 9.; I will make the land of the Chaldeans a perpetual deſolation, θήσομαι αὐτὴν εἰς ἀφανισμὸν αἰώνιον, they ſhall ſleep ὕπνον αἰώνιον, a perpetual ſleep, Jer. 51. 39. And this eſpecially is threatened where the deſtruction of a nation or people is likened to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha; thus Babylon ſhall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrha, οὐ κατοικηθήσεται εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα χρόνον, it ſhall never be inhabited, Iſ. 13. 19. 20.; and again, Jer. 50. 40. The like is ſaid of Edom, Jer. 49. 17. 18. and of Moab; Surely Moab ſhall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrha, ἀφανισμὸν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, a perpetual deſolation, Zeph. 2. 9.

Ver. 7. 8. The grammatical expoſition of theſe words ſeems to be thus: Even as, ὡς δὲ, and as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the other cities who were like to them in fornication, and unnatural luſts, were exemplarily puniſhed; ὁμοίως μέντοι καὶ οἱ ὗτοι ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, ſo likewiſe do theſe filthy dreamers act, defiling the fleſh as they did; and as the men of Sodom contemned the good angels which came to Lot's houſe, and ſpake evil of them, ſo do theſe men contemn and blaſpheme the good angels, who are ſtyled δόξαι καὶ κυριότητες, Eph. 1. 21. Col. 1. 16. and therefore ſhall alſo periſh as they did, ver. 11.

Ibid. [k] Οἱ ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, theſe filthy dreamers.] Theſe dreamers of dreams, or vain imaginations; for I find not that the word ἐνυπνιάζω bears any impure ſenſe, as ἐνυβρίζω ſometimes doth. The apoſtle therefore ſeems to refer to the delirious fancies of their filthy Æones, Prunice, and Calacauth, which gave the riſe to all the filthineſs the Nicolaitans committed, and after them the Gnoſtics and the Carpocratians; ſee the note ón 2 Pet. 2. 11. And therefore Clemens of Alexandria (k) ſaith of theſe Nicolaitans, and their ſucceſſors the Gnoſtics, and the Carpocratians, that St Jude ſpeaks of them in theſe words prophetically, the Nicolaitans being only then in being, and the Gnoſtics and Carpocratians ſucceeding them.

Ver. 9. [l] Περὶ τοῦ Μωσέως σώματος, about the body of Moſes.] That the body of the Jews and their ſervice ſhould be here called the body of Moſes, and that theſe words are to be referred to Zech. 3. 1. ſeems not very probable, ſeeing in that prophet there is no mention of Michael, or of the body or the death of Moſes; nor doth Onias ſpeak of the body of Moſes, 2 Mac. 15. 12. but περὶ παντὸς Ἰουδαίων συστήματος, of the whole Jewiſh nation. Moreover, that Moſes was not buried by the Jews, we learn from the ſcripture, which ſaith, No man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day, Deut. 34. 6. and therefore Philo (l) ſaith, he was buried χείρεσιν οὐ θνηταῖς, ἀλλ' ἀθανάτοις δυνάμεσιν, not by men, but angels. That there was an altercation betwixt Michael the archangel and Samael the prince of devils, about the body of Moſes, we learn from the traditions of the Jews (m); and it is moſt probable it was not only that his ſepulchre might be unknown, leſt the Jews, who were prone to idolatry, ſhould worſhip him, but about the aſcent of it into heaven, he being taken away as Enoch and Elias were, and not dying the common death of all men, which Satan contended he ought to do, διὰ τὸν τοῦ Αἰγυπτίου φόνον, for killing the Egyptian (n), but diſappearing only. Hence the Jews ſay, aſcendit ad miniſtrandum excelſo, "that he aſcended to mi-"niſter to the Lord." And Philo (o) ſaith, God brought him πλησίον ἑαυτοῦ, near to himſelf, ſaying to Ibid. Ver. 12. [q] Σπιλάδες, ſpots.] Σπιλὰς, πέτρα τις, the word ſignifies a rock, ſaith Phavorinus. They are hollow ſtones or rocks in the ſea, againſt which ſhips ſplit, ſay the lexicons: Σπιλάδες τοῖς πλέουσιν ἀλήθριοι ἀπροσδοκήτως ἐπιγινόμεναι, rocks which are pernicious to navigators, who fall upon them unawares; to which theſe perſons are compared, becauſe ἀνέλπιστον κακὸν, they bring an unexpected miſchief upon them that feaſt with them.

Ibid. [r] Ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις, in their feaſts of charity.] I ſee no neceſſity of referring this to the Chriſtians love-feaſts, celebrated after the holy ſacrament. It is obſerved by Dr Lightfoot, note on 1 Cor. 10. 16. that in the evening of the ſabbath the Jews had their κοινωνία, or communion, when the inhabitants of the ſame city met together in a common place to eat together; and that they had near to their ſynagogues their ξενοδόχια, or places where ſtrangers were entertained at the public charge, and where they had their dormitory; theſe ſurely were more likely places for ſuch perſons to come to, and play their pranks in, than the love-feaſts of the Chriſtians.

Ibid. [s] Νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι, clouds without water, carried about with the wind.] Such clouds, ſaith Oecumenius, refreſh no places with their ſhowers, for they have no water in them, but they blacken and darken the places over which they hang: even ſo theſe men diſtil the waters of life upon none, but blacken them with their filthy practices, being moved to them by the impulſe of Satan, as theſe clouds are moved by the winds.

Ibid. [t] Φθινοπωρινὰ, trees without fruit, twice dead;] i. e. ſaith Oecumenius, by caſting their fruit and their leaves too, which gives a beauty to them: and ſomething like this, ſaith he, happens to theſe men, who twice die, caſting off their fruit, διὰ τῆς σπερμοφαγίας, and putting away the beauty of a ſober converſation, whence they are rooted up out of the garden of the church of God.

Ver. 13. [u] Κύματα ἄγρια, raging waves of the ſea,] to which, ſaith he, they are likened for the inſtability of their life, καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἐνδιαλύτου αἰχρότητος· τοιοῦτον γὰρ ὁ πρὸς ὀργὴν παρακαθήμενον ἄφρον τῶν κυμάτων.

Ibid. [x] Ἀστέρες πλανῆται, wandering ſtars.] The Jews, ſaith Grotius, were wont to call them who took upon them to be teachers, ſtars: ſo the apoſtle calls theſe falſe teachers wandering ſtars, becauſe they kept not their ſtation, but wandered from the truth, having no true light in them.

Ver. 14. [y] Προεφήτευσε, prophecied.] From theſe words we learn, that Enoch was a prophet, which he ſhewed even in the name he gave to his ſon Methuſelah, by the ſpirit of prophecy, which ſignifies, ſaith Bochartus (p), That, when he is dead ſhall enſue an inundation of waters; whence that of Stephanus concerning Enoch or Hannock, ἐδόθη δὲ χρηστὸς ὅτι τότε τελευτήσαντος πάντες διαφθαρήσονται, "there was "an oracle given out, that when he was dead all "men ſhould be deſtroyed."

Προεφήτευσε τούτοις, he before propheſied to them.] This is ſaid very appoſitely, the prophecy of Enoch being directed to them, who in like manner had corrupted their ways by carnality, or fornication, Gen. 6. 2. and by idolatry, chap. 4. 26.

Ibid. [z] Ἐν μυριάσιν ἁγίαις, with his ten thouſand ſaints.] i. e. with his glorious attendance of myriads of angels, ſo called, Heb. 12. 22. So was he preſent at Mount Sinai, when he delivered the law; whence the pſalmiſt ſaith, The chariot of God is myriads of angels: ſo the Chaldee; and the Lord is among them as in Sinai, Pſal. 68. 18. So, Deut. 32. 2. The Lord cometh from Sinai with his myriads of holy ones: with myriads of holy angels, ſay the Talmud of Jeruſalem, and Jonathan; and Zech. 14. 5. The Lord my God ſhall come, and all his holy ones with him, i. e. and all his guard of angels; thoſe who attend him ſitting on his throne, Dan. 7. 10. or coming to execute judgment, Matth. 16. 27. and 25. 31. 2 Theſſ. 1. 7.

Ver. 16. [a] Murmurers and complainers.] I find nothing of this nature applicable to the Nicolaitans and Gnoſtics in church-hiſtory; only the apoſtle having ſaid, Be ye not idolaters, nor fornicators, with reſpect to them, 1 Cor. 10. 7. 8. adds, Neither be ye murmurers, ver. 10. And the Pſeud-Ignatius calls them συκοφάντας, malos calumniatores, Ep. ad Tral. § 11. But the Jews, of whom the Nicolaitans were a part, were notorious for their complaints againſt

Ibid. [aa] Ὑπέρογκα, great ſwelling words.] This Dr Hammond refers to Simon Magus, exalting himſelf above all that is called God; but ὑπέρογκα being only proud ſwelling words, called by St Peter in the parallel place ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος, ſwelling words of vanity, by which they allured, through the luſts of the fleſh, to laſciviouſneſs, thoſe who were clean eſcaped from them that live in error, 2 Pet. 2. 18. I think it may more probably refer to the words relating to their luſts mentioned in the note upon that place.

Ibid. [bb] Ὠφελείας χάριν, becauſe of advantage.] See note on 2 Pet. 2. 3. 14.

Ver. 19. [cc] Οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες ἑαυτὸς, ſeparating themſelves.] Of the Jewiſh zealots we read, that they ſeparated, and withdrew from all who were not circumciſed, Acts 11. 3. Gal. 2. 12. But of the Nicolaitans and Gnoſtics we read no ſuch thing, but rather that they aſſembled with the Chriſtians, or Jews, in their feaſts of love, ver. 12. 2 Pet. 2. 13. Ἀποδιορίζεσθαι, therefore, as it reſpects them, may rather ſignify that they diſtinguiſhed themſelves from others as more perfect, and as φύσει πνευματικοὶ, by nature (q) ſpiritual, ſtyling all other Chriſtians ψυχικοὶ, animal men; which perhaps made the apoſtle return this character upon them, as being truly ſenſual perſons.

Ver. 20. [dd] Ἐν πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, in the Holy Ghoſt.] The Holy Ghoſt, in the New Teſtament, always ſignifies ſome afflatus, or χάρισμα of the Spirit; and ſeeing the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt cannot here well be underſtood, it ſeems to follow, that the apoſtle here ſpeaketh of that gift of prayer which by the Holy Ghoſt was conferred upon them in their public aſſemblies and Chriſtian exerciſes, where they prayed by the Spirit, 1 Cor. 14. 15. and ſpake to one another in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, being filled with the Spirit, Eph. 5. 18. 19. Col. 3. 16. And ſo this paſſage is interpreted by (r) Oecumenius and Dr Hammond.

Ver. 21. [ee] Ἑαυτὸς τηρήσατε, keep yourſelves, &c.] Hence it is evident, that we are not ſo kept by the power of God, but that ſomething muſt be done on our parts, to preſerve ourſelves in the divine favour; and alſo that men once in this ſtate may neglect to keep themſelves in the love of God.

Ver. 22. [ff] Διακρινόμενοι, making, or putting a difference.] Diſcerning which of them are to be treated with this mercy, which of them with ſharp reproof. That this is the true ſenſe of the word διακρινόμενοι, ſee note on Rom. 14. 23. Oecumenius, and ſome manuſcripts, read not ἐλεᾶτε, of ſome have compaſſion, but ἐλέγχετε, ſome reprove, putting a difference betwixt them who are to be rejected, and them who only are to be reproved.

Ver. 23. [gg] Ἐσπιλωμένον χιτῶνα, hating even the garment.] To hate and fly the garments ſpotted with the fleſh, is only to hate every thing that doth defile, though in the leaſt degree, for ſo the leprous and unclean garments did. This text can therefore yield no argument againſt the uſe of our ceremonies, till it be proved there is ſome defilement or impurity in the uſe of them.

TREATISE

TRUE MILLENNIUM:

SHEWING,

That it is not a Reign of Perſons raiſed from the Dead, but of the Church flouriſhing glorioufly for a thouſand Years after the Converſion of the Jews, and the flowing in of all Nations to them thus converted to the Chriſtian Faith.

The PREFACE.

S*Caliger was pleaſed to ſay,* Calvinus ſapuit, quia non ſcripſit in Apocalypſin; "Calvin was wiſe, becauſe "he did not write upon the Revelation." I confeſs, I do it not for want of wiſdom; that is, becauſe I neither have ſufficient reading, nor judgment, to diſcern the intendment of the prophecies contained in that book. But yet conceiving that I have either found out the true ſenſe of thoſe words, chap. 20. 4. which uſually are alledged as the foundation of the ſuppoſed Millennium, or reſurrection of the martyrs to reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years; or, at the leaſt, have ſaid what is ſufficient to ſhew, it is not neceſſary to underſtand them in a proper ſenſe; I have compriſed my ſentiments of that controverſy in the enſuing treatiſe, which I ſubmit to the judgment of the reader.

The INTRODUCTION.

HAving employed ſome thoughts upon the myſtery of the converſion of the Jewiſh nation, mentioned by St Paul, Rom. 11. and comparing the glorious things he there ſays of it, with what the prophets had foretold of the ſame thing in very high expreſſions; I began to compare them with what was written in the Revelation concerning the new Jeruſalem, the new heavens, and new earth, and the bride of the Lamb made ready for a marriage with him; and finding that this bride was thought by the beſt commentators to be the Jewiſh church and nation, repreſented formerly by our Saviour, as not having on her wedding-garment, Matth. 22. 12.; that the new heavens and the new earth were the very things promiſed to the Jews; that the new Jeruſalem was deſcribed in the very words of the prophets and Jewiſh writers, ſpeaking of that glorious ſtate they expected towards the end of the world; I was ſtrongly inclined to conceive this glorious converſion, which St Paul ſaith, ſhall be even to the Gentile ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, life from the dead, Rom. 11. 15. and which is by the prophets frequently repreſented as the ζωοποίησις, ἀνάστασις, i. e. the new birth, reviviſcence, reſurrection of their dead church and nation, by the Meſſiah: ſo that ὁ θάνατος οὐκ ἔτι ἔσται, death shall be no more, Rev. 21. 4. might be the very resurrection intended by St John, and the flourishing condition and union both of the Jewish and the Gentile church thus raised from the dead, and so continuing in peace and plenty, and a great increase of knowledge and of righteousness, and a return of the primitive purity of doctrine, and of manners, might be the reign of the saints on earth a thousand years, which the apostle mentions: this naturally led me to a discourse of the Millennium; which being framed according to this new hypothesis, I shall now offer it to the consideration of the learned, in the following method.

1. I shall state the true Millennium of the ancients; shewing how far it was received, and by whom opposed, in the four first centuries, and what were the particular opinions which then obtained concerning the Millennium; and how far the modern patrons of the millenary state have discarded the received opinion of the ancients who embraced that doctrine.

2. I shall shew what reason I have to conceive that this Millennium is to begin with the conversion of the Jewish nation; and doth indeed relate to the most happy state, and flourishing condition the church of Christ shall at that time enjoy.

3. I shall attempt to answer all that hath been offered to prove a proper and literal resurrection of the martyrs, and other Christian sufferers and saints, to reign on earth a thousand years; consider the pretences of them who place this reign before the conflagration of the world, as most of the assertors of this doctrine do; and of the Rev. Dr Burnet, who makes it to begin after the conflagration of the world. And,

4. I shall offer some arguments against this doctrine of the Millennium, or of the literal resurrection of the saints and martyrs to reign on earth a thousand years.

A TREATISE of the TRUE MILLENNIUM.

CHAP. I.

That the doctrine of the Millennium was never generally received in the church of Christ, is proved, 1. From the testimony of Justin Martyr and Irenæus, § I. Of Eusebius, Origen, and Stephanus Gobarus, and the distinction which then obtained betwixt the allegorists and the disciples of the letter, § II. An answer to the pretended tradition of Papias, mentioned by Irenæus, § III. The Millennium of the ancients differed from that which is now asserted by the most judicious of the modern millenaries, in five particulars: 1. The ancients generally held, that the temple or city of Jerusalem should be new-built. 2. That all the just were then to rise, and not martyrs only. 3. That Jesus Christ should then reign on earth. 4. That they should fare deliciously, and enjoy corporal delights. 5. That they should beget children: all which things are denied by the modern millenaries, § IV. The necessity of these doctrines, according to the letter of the scriptures, cited for the Millennium, by those ancients who espoused that doctrine, § V. This error of some of the fathers, as to the Millennium, will not invalidate their authority as to any thing delivered by them as eye-witnesses, or which they deliver as the practice of the church of Christ in their days, § VI.

THE patrons of the Millennium do usually say, their doctrine was both generally received in the three first centuries, and was derived by tradition from the apostles; and that the first man who opposed it, was Dionysius of Alexandria. In opposition to this pretence, I shall endeavour to make it appear,

I. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ.

II. That there is no just ground to think it was derived from the apostles, but rather from a mistake of the words of the author of the Apocalypse; or from the notions of the Jews, and of the Sibylline author. See l. 2. l. 3. l. 4.

III. That the new patrons of the Millennium differ in many things of moment from the ancient assertors of it, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that Millennium which they do so stiffly maintain. And,

§ I. That this opinion was never generally received in the church of Christ, appears sufficiently from the confessions and very words of the two first assertors of it, whose writings are still extant, viz. Justin Martyr, and Irenæus. I begin with Irenæus, because his words will justify the ancient reading of the words of Justin Martyr, against the criticism upon them, or rather the corruption of them by (a) Mr Mead, and (b) Mr Daille. Irenæus therefore speaks thus: (c) "I am not ignorant, that "some among us, who believe, in divers nations, and by va- "rious works, and who believing, do consent with the just, "do yet endeavour transferre haec (Gr. μεταφέρειν), to turn "these things into metaphors," or to carry them from their proper to an improper sense, as metaphors are wont to do. That this is his meaning, is evident from these words following: "But if some have attempted to allegorize these things, "they have not been found in all things consistent with "themselves, and may be convinced from the words them- "selves." Again he complains, that (d) "the sentiments "of some were carried away by the discourses of the heretics; "so that they were ignorant of the appointments of God,

"and

" and the mystery of the resurrection of the just, and the " kingdom." Here then we may evidently discern three sorts of men: 1. The heretics denying the resurrection of the flesh, and the Millennium. 2. The exactly orthodox asserting both the resurrection, and the kingdom of Christ upon earth. 3. The believers who consented with the just, and yet endeavoured to allegorize, and turn into metaphor all those scriptures he had produced for a proper reign of Christ, and who had sentiments rather agreeing with those heretics who denied, than those exactly orthodox who maintained this reign of Christ on earth. Now, these being almost a translation of the words of (e) Just. Mart. they vindicate the reading of all the manuscript copies of that writer; and exclude the bold criticism of Daille and Mr Mead. (f) " Tell me truly," says Trypho, " Do you" [Christians] " indeed confess, that Jerusalem shall be built again, " and that your people shall be gathered together (there), " and rejoice with Christ, together with the patriarchs, and " prophets, and those of our nation, or those who are made " proselytes before the coming of your Christ, or before " you expect your Christ shall come (to judgment)? Or " do you only confess this, that thou mayst seem to over- " come us in questions?"

Here you see that Justin Martyr did before ταῦτα ὁμολογῆν, confess these things, as he doth plainly, p. 243. where Trypho having put the question thus; " What! do you " say, that none of us shall have any inheritance in the " holy mount of God?" Justin Martyr replies, " I say " not so, but that the Gentiles who repent and believe in " Christ, shall inherit (it), with all the patriarchs, and " prophets, and the just which proceed from Jacob:" And therefore he here answers thus: (g) " I have before con- " fessed, that I and many others are of this mind, that these " things shall happen. But then again, I have intimated to " you, that many Christians of a pure and pious judgment " do not own this: (I speak of Christians of a pure and " pious judgment); for as for those who are called Chri- " stians, but indeed are Atheists, and ungodly, and here- " tics, I have told you already, that they teach things " wholly blasphemous, atheistical, and absurd, (and there- " fore are not to come into the account of Christians). If " therefore you have met with some of them who blaspheme " the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and deny the re- " surrection of the dead, that confess not this, you are not " to esteem them Christians, (or to take an estimate of " the doctrines of the Christians from them). They indeed " deny the resurrection of the flesh, and the Millennium; " (h) But I, and all Christians who are exactly, and in all things " orthodox, know there will be a resurrection of the flesh, " and a Millennium in Jerusalem, built, adorned, and en- " larged." Here then, as in Irenæus, is a plain distinction of three sorts of men, 1. Of heretics, that were κατὰ παῦλα βλάσφημοι, entirely blasphemers of the God of Israel, and deniers of the resurrection of the flesh, and consequently of the Millennium which supposed this resurrection. 2. Of Christians, who were κατὰ πάντα ὀρθογνώμονες, in all things orthodox, who owned both the resurrection of the flesh and the Millennium: and Justin Martyr being of this opinion, and declaring here, that he thought it a doctrine delivered by God; it could not be expected that he should affirm of them that held it not, that they were of a right opinion in all things. 3. Of many Christians of a pure and pious judgment, who did not own this Millennium.

Object. But " where," saith Mr Daille, " had he made " mention before of any such?" I answer with another question, Where had he made mention before of the many who confessed the Millennium, as he here saith he had? Mr Daille should have considered, that Justin's memory could not serve him to write down all he had discoursed with Trypho, or that he might not think that part of his discourse necessary to be afterwards committed unto writing; and then this objection would not have seemed of force sufficient to have authorised him to change Justin's words without any consent of copies, into the direct contradictory words, and for Christians τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, of a pure judgment, to read, Christians μὴ τῆς καθαρᾶς γνώμης, of an impure judgment; since such bold criticisms will evacuate both the sense and force of any testimony.

§ II. 2*dly*, This is still further evident from the ancient writers of the church, who plainly tell us, that this was a particular opinion of some doctors of the church, and never was received by all. " It had its rise," saith Eusebius, " from Papias, a man of slender judgment. (i) But the " antiquity of the man prevailed with many of the eccle- " siastics to be of that opinion, particularly with Irenæus, " and if there were any other of the same judgment with " him." Now, he that confesseth that most of the eccleſiastics were of that opinion, plainly denies that all were of it. He that particularly speaks of Irenæus, adding, " if there " were any other of the same judgment," seems to intimate, they were not many. Origen in his Philocalia, [c. 26. p. 99.], saith, they were only τινὲς, some that held this doctrine, and that so clancularly, that it had not yet come to the ears of the heathens: and in his prolegomena to the Canticles, [f. 69. B.], that they were only simpliciores quidam, some of the simpler sort of Christians. Besides, of all the fathers of the Christian church, none hath spoken more severely and more contemptibly of that doctrine, than Origen, who represents it as "a wicked doctrine, a reproach to Christiani-"ty; the heathen," saith he, "having better sentiments "than these." He therefore being then the great doctor of the church, and continuing in great authority amongst all churchmen for above an hundred years; his scholars being also the most celebrated doctors of that age, and one of them, viz. Dionysius Alexandrinus, undertaking to confute this doctrine; and his Philocalia, where we find these severe sayings, being a collection of the two great lights of the fourth century, St Basil, and Gregory the Divine; it cannot be doubted but this opinion then lost ground daily, and was generally decried by the learned of those centuries. In a word, (k) Stephanus Gobarus, in his account of opinions in which the fathers differed from each other, reckons this as the tenth, "That the just shall rise first, and live deliciously "a thousand years, eating, drinking, and begetting chil-"dren; and that there should be no precedence in the re-"surrection, no millenary delight, no marriage then."

3*dly*, This will be more evident, if it be considered, that as the doctors of the church were then of different opinions, so were they then distinguished by different names; as they who denied the Millennium, saith Irenæus, attempted to allegorize the places produced by others for it, so had they, upon that account, the name of Allegorists; and therefore Nepos, a man, saith Eusebius, from Dionysius of Alexandria, otherwise orthodox, but a writer for the Millennium, styled his book Ἔλεγχον τῶν ἀλληγορισῶν, or, A refutation of the allegorists. H. eccl. l. 7. c. 24.

Accordingly, in (l) Origen, they who deny the Millennium, are Οἱ τροπολογοῦντες τὰ προφητικὰ, they who interpret the sayings of the prophets by a trope: and they who assert it are styled Solius literæ discipuli, disciples of the letter of the scripture only: the first, saith he, assert, horum vim figuraliter intelligi debere, "the passages which they produce "from scripture ought to be figuratively understood;" the other, saith he, understand the scripture, Judaico sensu, after the manner of the Jews. (m) Epiphanius speaking of the Millennium asserted by Apollinarius, saith, "There is indeed "a Millennium mentioned by St John; but the most, and "those pious men, look upon those words as true indeed, "but to be taken in a spiritual sense."

And here it may deserve to be observed by the by, that the primitive fathers derived almost all their considerable errors from the Jews, viz. That angels had to do with women, and begat giants of them; that the world was to end soon after the coming of the Messiah; that Elias was in person to usher in his second advent, &c.

§ III. 2*dly*, As for the pretended tradition from the apostle John, touching this doctrine, it is only mentioned by Irenæus, as received from Papias; and the words in which it is delivered are sufficient to demonstrate the incredibility, and the apparent folly of it: for these elders pretend to have heard from St John these romantic words: (n) "The "days shall come, in which there shall be vines which shall "severally have ten thousand branches, and every of these "branches shall have ten thousand lesser branches, and "every of these branches shall have ten thousand twigs, and "every one of these twigs shall have ten thousand clusters "of grapes, and in every one of these clusters shall be ten "thousand grapes, and every one of these grapes, being "pressed, shall give twenty-five metreta's" (that is, according to the mildest computation, 275 gallons) "of wine; "and when one shall take hold of one of these sacred "bunches, another shall cry out, I am a better bunch, take "me, and by me bless the Lord:" To omit what he says, from the same tradition, of every grain of wheat, and of apples, seeds, and herbs. Now, can any man be so wholly bereft of sense, as to imagine this stuff could ever come out of the mouth of an apostle? No certainly; he had it only from the converted Jews, in whose writings, some learned persons have informed me, the words cited by Irenæus from Papias are yet to be found. As for Papias, the only voucher of this tradition, Eusebius informs us, he was a man of a very slender judgment, as the story cited by Irenæus, from the fourth book of his discourse, may abundantly convince us, there being scarcely any things in the most infamous of Romish legends, more fabulous than, as Eusebius truly saith, his traditional relations were.

§ IV. 3*dly*, That the new patrons of the Millennium differ in many things of moment from the ancients, and have indeed scarce any suffrage of antiquity for that Millennium they maintain, will be apparent from a just representation of the Millennium of the ancients. For,

1. The ancient millenaries generally held, that the temple, or the city of Jerusalem, should be rebuilt, and that the land of Judea should be the habitation of those who were to reign on earth a thousand years. So Just. M. [Dial. cum Tryph, p. 243. C.] tells the Jews, That the believing Gentiles should then dwell ἐν τῷ ὄρει τῷ ἁγίῳ, in the holy mount, and that they should then acknowledge him [p. 259. E.] ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τόπῳ τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων, in the same place of Jerusalem where they had crucified him: he con-feſſes alſo to Trypho, [p. 306. B. 307. B.] ἀνοικοδομηθήναι τὸν τόπον Ἱερουσαλήμ, "That the place of Jeruſalem ſhould "be built, and that the ſaints ſhould ſpend a thouſand years "in Jeruſalem, built, adorned, and augmented," and that "all Chriſtians entirely orthodox knew this would be ſo; "and therefore they all," ſaith he, [p. 312. B.] "expected" τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ φανήσεσθαι, "Chriſt to "appear in Jeruſalem." (o) "In the times of that king-"dom Jeruſalem ſhall be built," ſaith Irenæus, and the Jews ſhall be reſtored to the land he gave to their fathers. (p) "He" (i. e. Chriſt) ſhall build the holy city," ſaith Lactantius, "and there ſhall be the reign of the juſt for a "thouſand years." St Barnaby is very poſitive, (q) "That "the very temple which was deſtroyed by their enemies, "ſhall be rebuilt glorioufly. They feign to themſelves," ſaith Origen, (r) "that the terreſtrial Jeruſalem ſhall be re-"built with precious ſtones, and that the aliens ſhall be their "ſervants to rebuild it." (s) Hence Dionyſius of Alexandria, in his book writ againſt them, derides their golden Jeruſalem upon earth, adorned with jewels, and the reſtoration of the temple. Whereas, ſcarce any of our new Millenaries dare aſſert, that this ſhall be the place of the habitation of the raiſed ſaints, and one of them makes the whole earth to become a paradiſe for the reception of them.

2*dly*, They held, this reſurrection was not to be confined to the martyrs only, but that all the juſt were then to riſe, and reign with Chriſt: this Juſt. Mart. confeſſes, touching all Chriſtian people, all the believing Gentiles, and the juſt progeny of Jacob in the forecited places. Irenæus frequently declares of the juſt in general, that they ſhall ariſe to inherit the promiſes. (t) Tertullian affirms, that ſome ſhall riſe ſooner, and ſome later, but that all the juſt ſhall riſe within the time of the Millennium. "This Millennium," ſaith Lactantius, (u) "belongs to all the juſt which ever "were from the beginning of the world:" whereas the millenaries of this age do generally, with (x) Dr Burnet, ſay, "The firſt reſurrection, and the reign of Chriſt, ſeem "to be appropriated to the martyrs," Rev. 20. 4.

Moreover, the ancients extended this reign on earth, not only to the dead, but to the juſt alſo who ſhall be then alive at this firſt reſurrection; this being a neceſſary conſequent of the former doctrine, that this Millennium belongs to all the juſt. Thus Irenæus, amongſt thoſe who are to enjoy the Millennium, reckons (y) "thoſe whom the Lord "ſhall find in the fleſh, expecting him from heaven, who "having ſuffered tribulation, did nevertheleſs eſcape the "hands of the wicked." (z) "Then they that are found "living, ſhall not die," ſaith Lactantius: whereas it is inconſiſtent with the hypotheſis of Dr Burnet, that any of the juſt ſhould be then living, ſince this Millennium only begins after the conflagration of the world, and the burning of all things that are in it.

3*dly*, The ancients generally conſent in this, that Jeſus Chriſt ſhall then come down from heaven, and be ſeen on earth, and reign there with his ſervants. Papias, the firſt aſſertor of this doctrine, declares, that (a) "it ſhall be a "reign of Chriſt bodily upon earth." Juſtin Martyr tells the Jews, "that they ſhould then ſee him whom they had "pierced," and this in that very place of Jeruſalem where they had crucified him, that both they, and Chriſtians ſhould then be gathered together, and rejoice with him. Victorinus ſaith, (b) "This is that true Sabbath," in quo Chriſtus cum electis ſuis regnaturus eſt, "in which Chriſt "is to reign with his elect;" and Lactantius ſaith expreſsly, That mille annos inter homines verſabitur, "he ſhall "be converſant with men a thouſand years." Irenæus (c) ſeems not ſo clear as to this matter; yet he declares the juſt ſhall reign on earth increaſing by the viſion of Chriſt; for, ſaith he, "Chriſt will be every where ſeen, as men are "worthy to ſee him:" that which ſeems moſt expreſsly in him to relate to this affair, is this; that diſcourſing of our Lord's promiſe, "to drink new wine with his diſciples in " the kingdom of heaven," he declares, (d) this " cannot be done by him, whilſt he remains in thoſe celeſtial " regions." But Nepos was expreſs in this, That (e) " after this reſurrection, the kingdom of Chriſt was to be upon " earth a thouſand years;" and the ſaints were to reign with him in pleaſures, or faring deliciouſly there: and therefore Dionyſius ſaith of him, and the brethren that magnified his book, " That (f) they had no ſublime or magnificent thoughts of the glorious and divine advent of our " Lord, or of our reſurrection, and our gathering together, " and aſſimilation to Chriſt;" but " hoped then for little " and mortal things, and ſuch as men now hope for in the " kingdom of God."

4*thly*, They all declare, they ſhall then fare deliciouſly, and ſhall enjoy the richeſt wines and moſt delicious fruits, build houſes, plant vineyards, and eat the fruits of them: Thus Juſtin Martyr (g) underſtands thoſe words of Iſaiah, (c. 65. 21.) of the Millennium, viz. " They ſhall build " houſes, and inhabit them; and they ſhall plant vineyards, " and eat the fruit of them." And Irenæus ſaith, (h) " They ſhall have a table prepared for them by God, who " ſhall feed them with dainties;" adding, that the promiſes he had cited, creaturæ epulationem ſignificant, do ſignify " the banquets they ſhould have upon the creature:" hence doth he tell us of the prodigious cluſters of grapes, and ears of corn, the vines, and the earth, ſhall then bring forth. " (i) The earth," ſaith Lactantius, " ſhall open its fertility, " and of its own accord produce fruits plentifully, the rocks " of the mountains ſhall ſweat with honey, wines ſhall run " down with ſtreams, and the rivers flow with milk." Of this opinion, doubtleſs, was Tertullian, in his book De ſpe fidelium: And Nepos, who promiſed, ſaith Dionyſius of Alexandria, " a thouſand years of corporal delights on " earth." Accordingly Gennadius ſaith, (k) " in the divine promiſes, we believe nothing concerning meat and " drink," as Irenæus, Tertullian, and Lactantius teach from their author Papias, " nor of the reign of a thouſand years " with Chriſt on earth after the reſurrection, and the ſaints " reigning deliciouſly with him," as Nepos taught. St Auſtin therefore ſaith of this opinion, (l) " That it might be tolerable, if they mentioned any ſpiritual delights which the " ſaints might enjoy by Chriſt's preſence; but ſince they " affirm, that they who then riſe, ſhall enjoy carnal and " immoderate banquets of meat and drink without modeſty, " theſe things can only be believed by carnal men." And becauſe all this plenty could not be procured and enjoyed, theſe houſes could not be built, nor theſe vineyards planted, nor this wine brought into the fat, nor this corn into the barn, threſhed, ground, and made fit for theſe new-raiſed inhabitants, without hands: the ancients have made proviſion for this alſo, telling us, " That they ſhall be (m) κυριεύοντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, " ſuch as lord it upon earth;" and therefore (n) Irenæus ſaith, that which was ſpoken to Jacob, " The nations ſhall ſerve, and princes ſhall bow down " to thee," Gen. 27. 27. 28. ad tempora regni ſine contradictione pertinet, quando regnabunt juſti ſurgentes à mortuis, without all contradiction belongs to this millenary kingdom. (o) " The nations ſhall not utterly be de" ſtroyed," ſaith Lactantius, " but ſome of them ſhall be " left to be triumphed over by the juſt, and ſubjected to " perpetual ſlavery. (p) " They think," ſaith Origen, " that aliens ſhall be given them to be miniſters of their de" lights, who ſhall either ſerve at the plough, or be their " maſons and carpenters to build up their fallen city, and " they ſuppoſe they ſhall have of their proviſions to eat, and " have dominion over their riches, ſo that they ſhall come " and offer to them gold, and frankincenſe, and precious " ſtones." And becauſe men can hardly do this whole buſineſs without beaſts, the ancients have made proviſions of them alſo, ſubjecting to them not only ſheep, and goats, and oxen or bulls; but wolves, and bears, and leopards, and lions, " which (q) with all other animals," ſaith Irenæus, ſhall " be then ſubject to man." And that the Doctor may not be at a loſs for the production of theſe beaſts, (r) Stephanus Gobarus informs him, the doctrine of the ancients was this, " That the juſt ſhould riſe firſt, καὶ σὺν αὐτοῖς πάντα τὰ ζῶα, " and all thoſe living creatures with them." Now, the new millenaries, as they ſay little of theſe ſlaves, and theſe brute beaſts, who are ſo neceſſary for the enjoyment of the univerſal plenty, and the goods of fortune prepared in this ſtate; ſo are they ſhy of owning futuras corporis voluptates et luxurias, ſuch luxuries and bodily pleaſures, as Origen ſaith (s) the millenaries of his time did expect.

For, 5thly, In their Millennium, they were not only to feaſt and junket it, but alſo to beget children. (t) " The " virgins," ſaith Irenæus, " ſhall rejoice in the aſſemblies " of the young men; and they that are left, ſhall be mul- " tiplied upon earth:" Accordingly he ſpeaks of ſome believers, whom God had prepared to multiply thoſe who were left upon the earth, to be under the kingdom of the ſaints, and miniſter to this Jeruſalem. " They ſhall beget an in- " finite multitude," ſaith Lactantius, (u) " and their ſeed " ſhall be holy." To their other luxuries, ſaith (x) Origen, they add, nuptiarum conventiones, et filiorum procreationes etiam poſt reſurrectionem futuras; " the ſolem- " nities of marriage, and the procreation of children, even " after the reſurrection:" And again, (y) " They think," ſaith he, " that after the reſurrection we ſhall eat and drink " corporeal meats, and ſhall uſe thoſe conjugal duties by " which our prayers are hindered, and which cannot be per- " formed without ſome impurity:" And a third time (z) they believe, " that, after the reſurrection, we ſhall, accor- " ding to the chief promiſes of the goſpel, eat and drink, " and, as ſome of them ſay, beget children; theſe things," ſaith he, " ſhould they come to the ears of heathens, would " lay a great imputation of folly upon Chriſtianity, ſince " many heathens have better opinions than theſe are:" So much are they miſtaken who reckon Origen among the patrons of the Millennium. Stephanus Gobarus gives us the opinion of the millenaries in theſe words, (a) " The juſt " ſhall riſe firſt, and for a thouſand years ſhall fare deliciouſ- " ly, eating and drinking, and getting children; and after " this ſhall be the general reſurrection." Methodius is the only perſon who (b) " denies they ſhall be thus employ- " ed after the reſurrection;" and with him doubtleſs all our modern millenaries do agree, as knowing this unworthy to be the matter of a goſpel-promiſe.

§ V. Moreover, if we conſider the ſcriptures on which the ancients grounded this Millennium, we ſhall perceive it neceſſary that all theſe doctrines ſhould be maintained by them. For,

1. That the temple, or city of Jeruſalem, ſhould be new built, and that the land of Judea ſhould be the habitation of thoſe who are to enjoy this new heaven and earth, can never reaſonably be denied by thoſe who interpret the ſayings of the prophets literally, ſince they ſo plainly and ſo fully ſpeak of a " Mount Zion to be eſtabliſhed upon " the top of the mountains," Iſ. 2. 2. 27. 13. 56. 7. and of God's promiſes to " beautify the place of his " ſanctuary, the houſe of his glory, and to make the place " of his feet glorious," c. 60. 7. 13. and of " all nations " flowing in to her," and being gathered to her, and of all " nations and tongues coming to ſee her glory," Iſ. 60. 5. and 66. 18. when God had brought them again into their own land.

2*dly*, That this reſurrection muſt belong to all faithful Chriſtians, and that they muſt all reign with Chriſt on earth, will follow from the literal interpretation of thoſe words of St John, (c) " Thou haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood, " out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, " and haſt made us to be kings and prieſts to God, and we " ſhall reign on earth," Rev. 5. 9. 10. For, according to the import of theſe words, if, as Dr Burnet ſaith, they belong to the firſt reſurrection, all that have been redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, muſt reign on earth. This follows also from those words, "I saw the souls of them that were "beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of "God, and (of them) which had not worshipped the beast, "nor his image, and which had not received his mark upon "their foreheads, nor upon their hands, and they lived and "reigned with Christ a thousand years," Rev. 20. 4. for "they who worshipped not the beast," are all they "whose "names were written in the book of life," Rev. 13. 8. and 17. 8. This follows from St Peter's new heaven and new earth, if truly interpreted by Dr Burnet of this resurrection; for these, saith he, we Christians do expect, and therefore are concerned "to be found of him without spot, "and blameless," 2 Pet. 3. 13. 14. This follows from the words of St Paul, if they belong to the Millennium, as he saith they do; for they introduce "the whole creation "groaning to be delivered from the bondage of corruption, "into the glorious liberty of the sons of God," and all that had "the first fruits of the Spirit, groaning for the adoption, "i. e. for the redemption of their bodies" from corruption, Rom. 8. 16. 23.

3*dly*, They must bring Christ from heaven to reign on earth, who contend that this reign is the very time of "the "restitution of all things," Acts 3. 21. for the heavens are only to contain him till that time; and who infer this reign of Christ from those words, "They that have part in the "first resurrection shall be priests of God and of Christ, and "shall reign with him a thousand years;" for if they reign on earth without him, they do not reign there with him. Moreover, if he continue still at the right hand of God, with what propriety is this resurrection called ἡ παρουσία, the presence, the appearance of our Lord, and that from heaven?

4*thly*, That in this Millennium they must fare deliciously, drink precious wines, and have those splendid banquettings of which the fathers often speak, must follow from the application of all those passages to this state, which say, "The "meek shall inherit the earth," that they shall "drink new "wine with Christ in his kingdom," that they shall receive (d) "an hundred fold increase of goods and lands;" that there shall be then a recompense of their alms given, and their feasts made for the poor; and from all the prophets who say, of the fruitfulness of the earth, and of the temporal blessings they shall then enjoy.

5*thly*, That the nations shall then serve them, and even build up Jerusalem for them, cannot be denied by them who literally interpret those words of the prophets, The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister to thee: the sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee, and they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet: and the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee, shall perish, Isaiah 60. 10. 12. 13. And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen and your vinedressers; you shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall you boast yourselves, chap. 61. 5. See also chap. 49. 22. 23. And,

6*thly*, That they shall have wives and children, and, as Irenæus saith, "shall be multiplied upon the earth," must follow from the literal exposition of our Saviour's promise, that they who have lost, or forsaken wife or children for his sake, shall receive an hundred fold; for children cannot lawfully be begotten without wives, and the use of the marriage-bed. And lastly, whereas the Millennium of the Reverend Dr Burnet is to begin after the conflagration of the world, that of the ancients is still placed before it: "We expect it," saith Justin Martyr, (e) "before Christ's coming to judg-"ment; (f) after this," saith Tertullian, "shall be the de-"struction of the world, and the conflagration at the day "of judgment, and we shall be changed in a moment into "an angelical substance." (g) "God shall after this reign on "earth a thousand years, and renew the world," saith Lactantius.

It therefore deserves to be admired, that learned men, with so much confidence, make use of these testimonies of scriptures, and these authorities of the fathers, to establish their Millennium, and yet so stiffly should deny the consequences which flow so naturally from those scriptures, and reject what these ancients so generally delivered as a part of that doctrine. But, to insist no longer on these things, hence I suppose it evident,

1. That the doctrine of the Millennium was not the general doctrine of the primitive church from the times of the apostles to the Nicene council, as Dr Burnet hath asserted; for then it could have made no schisms in the church, as (h) Dionysius of Alexandria saith it did, declaring how fully he confuted it, and reconciled the brethren that were contending about it, and prevailed upon Coracius, the author and ringleader of this doctrine, to own he was convinced of his error, and promise he would no more embrace, or discourse of it to the people.

2. That the old doctrine of the Millennium differed in many material points from that which is asserted by the new patrons of it.

§. VI. If any man think it not safe to discover so much of the nakedness of the fathers as I have done in this chapter, I answer,

Ist,

1*ſt*, That I think it more ſafe than to let it be confidently ſaid and believed, that they were all millenaries from the firſt to the fourth century, ſeeing that ſhakes the foundation of Epiſcopacy, and the tranſlation of the Sabbath to the Lord's day, and other conſtitutions derived from the apoſtles.

2*dly*, I anſwer, That this miſtake of the fathers, in a matter which they received from the traditions and notions of the Jews, will not invalidate their authority in any thing delivered by them as witneſſes of what they ſaw with their own eyes, or declared to have been then the practice of the church of Chriſt; nor will it affect their teſtimony in any other doctrine which they neither did nor could receive, only on the authority of the Jewiſh doctors.

CHAP. II.

How far I differ from the ancient and modern millenaries, and in what I agree with them, § I. The propoſition, That the true Millennium is only a reign of the converted Jews, and of the Gentiles flowing in to them, ibid. Where it is noted, 1. That all ſpiritual bleſſings have been ſtill conveyed from the Jews to other nations. 2. That there will be a glorious converſion of the Jews to the Chriſtian faith, § II. That the deſcription of this converſion of the Jews, made by their own prophets and writers, anſwers fully to the Millennium of St John, which he ſpeaks of in the very words of the ſaid prophets, § III. The characters which the patrons of the Millennium give of thoſe times, accord exactly with the characters given by the prophets of the converſion of the Jews, § IV. The prophets ſeem to intimate, that this converſion ſhall be effected by a full effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, § V. All the paſſages cited to this effect, from the Jewiſh writers, ſpeak only of the Millennium, the reſurrection, the new heavens and earth belonging to the Jewiſh nation, § IV.

HAving thus given you a juſt account of the Millennium of the ancients, and of the true extent of that opinion in the primitive ages of the church; I proceed now to ſhew, in what things I agree with the aſſertors of that doctrine, and how far I find myſelf conſtrained, by the force of truth, to differ from them.

§ I. I believe, then, that, after the fall of Antichriſt, there ſhall be ſuch a glorious ſtate of the church, by the converſion of the Jews to the Chriſtian faith, as ſhall be to it life from the dead; that it ſhall then flouriſh in peace and plenty, in righteouſneſs and holineſs, and in a pious offspring; that then ſhall begin a glorious and undiſturbed reign of Chriſt over both Jew and Gentile, to continue a thouſand years during the time of Satan's binding; and that, as John the Baptiſt was Elias, becauſe he came in the ſpirit and power of Elias; ſo ſhall this be the church of martyrs, and of thoſe who had not received the mark of the beaſt, becauſe of their entire freedom from all the doctrines and practices of the antichriſtian church, and becauſe the ſpirit and purity of the times of the primitive martyrs ſhall return. And therefore,

1. I agree with the patrons of the Millennium in this, that I believe Satan hath not yet been bound a thouſand years, nor will he be ſo bound till the time of the calling of the Jews, and the time of St John's Millennium.

2. I agree with them in this, that the true Millennium will not begin till the fall of antichriſt; nor will the Jews be converted till that time, the idolatry of the Roman church being one great obſtacle of their converſion.

3. I agree both with the modern and the ancient millenaries, that then ſhall be great peace and plenty, and great meaſures of knowledge and of righteouſneſs in the whole church of God.

I therefore only differ from the ancient millenaries in three things:

1. In denying Chriſt's perſonal reign upon earth during this thouſand years; and in this both Dr Burnet and Mr Mead expreſsly have renounced their doctrine.

2. Though I dare not abſolutely deny what they all poſitively affirm, that the city of Jeruſalem ſhall be then rebuilt, and the converted Jews ſhall return to it, becauſe this probably may be collected from thoſe words of Chriſt, Jeruſalem ſhall be trodden down till the time of the Gentiles is come in, Luke 21. 24. and all the prophets ſeem to declare the Jews ſhall then return to their own land, Jer. 31. 38. 39. 40.; yet do I confidently deny what Barnabas, and others of them, do contend for, viz. That the temple of Jeruſalem ſhall be then built again: for this is contrary not only to the plain declaration of St John, who ſaith, I ſaw no temple in this new Jeruſalem, Rev. 21. 22. whence I infer, there is to be no temple in any part of it; but to the whole deſign of the epiſtle to the Hebrews, which is to ſhew the diſſolution of the temple-ſervice, for the weakneſs and unprofitableneſs of it; that the Jewiſh tabernacle was only a figure of the true and the more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man; the Jewiſh ſanctuary only a worldly ſanctuary, a pattern and a figure of the heavenly one into which Chriſt our High Prieſt is entered, Heb. 8. 2. 9. 2. 11. 23. 24. Now, ſuch a temple, ſuch a ſanctuary, and ſuch ſervice, cannot be ſuitable to the moſt glorious and ſplendid times of the Chriſtian church; and therefore the apoſtle ſaith, The Lord God omnipotent, and the Lamb, ſhall be their temple.

3. I differ both from the ancient and the modern millenaries, as far as they aſſert that this ſhall be a reign of ſuch Chriſtians as have ſuffered under the Heathen perſecutors, or by the rage of antichriſt; making it only a reign of the converted Jews, and of the Gentiles then flowing in to them, and uniting into one church with them. This I believe to be indeed the truth of this miſtaken doctrine; and therefore I ſhall ſet myſelf more fully to explain, and to confirm it. Let it be noted therefore,

§ II. 1. That as the Jews were the firſt nation which were owned owned by God as his people, and therefore are ſtyled his firſt-born, Exod. 4. 22. Iſrael his elect, Iſ. 54. 4. the children of Jacob, his choſen ones, 1 Chron. 16. 13. Pſal. 105. 6. God having choſen them to be a peculiar treaſure to himſelf above all the people of the earth, Exod. 19. 5. Deut. 7. 6.; ſo all nations of the world have ever ſince received the word of God and the true religion from the Jewiſh nation, and Jeruſalem hath been ſtill the mother of all other churches. Before the advent of our Lord and Saviour, to them alone, ſaith the apoſtle Paul, belonged the adoption, the glory, and the covenant, and the giving of the law, and the ſervice of God, and the promiſes, Rom. 9. 3.; and none then could be joined to the Lord, Iſ. 56. 3. and worſhip him aright, unleſs he joined himſelf to the Jews, and became a worſhipper of the God of Iſrael, or a member of that church.

After Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, the goſpel was firſt ſent to them, as being the children of the kingdom, Matth. 8. 12.; our Lord exerciſed his miniſtry only among them, whence he is ſtyled, The miniſter of the circumciſion, Rom. 15. 8. and ſaith, he was not then ſent to any but only to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, Matth. 15. 24. And ſending his apoſtles, he forbids them, whilſt he was on earth, to go into the way of the Gentiles, or to enter into any city of Samaria, Matth. 10. 5. but ſaith to them, Go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael. After his aſcenſion, they were charged to begin their preaching at Jeruſalem, Luke 24. 47. as accordingly they did, preaching the word to none but the Jews only, Acts 11. 19. Paul, the apoſtle of the Gentiles, firſt offers his miniſtry to them, preaching Chriſt in their ſynagogues, as his manner was, Acts 9. 20. 13. 5. 14. 1. 17. 12. 17. 18. 4. and declaring it was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould be firſt ſpoken to them, Acts 13. 46. the goſpel being the power of God to ſalvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, Rom. 2. 10. and that through their fall, and rejection of it, the goſpel came unto the Gentiles, Rom. 11. 28. the halt, lame, and blind, being called to this feaſt, becauſe thoſe gueſts firſt bidden refuſed to come, Luke 14. 21.

Note alſo, That, notwithſtanding the infidelity of many of them, the firſt church that ever received the goſpel, the doctrine, the ſacraments of the New Teſtament, was the Jewiſh church, Acts 2. 42. 47. All the churches of the Gentiles received the goſpel from them, they being made partakers of their ſpiritual things, Rom. 15. 27. and the word of God coming out from them to other churches, 1 Cor. 17. 36. they being all graſted into their good olive-tree. Hence, in the primitive times, the church of Jeruſalem had the pre-eminence of all other churches; to her they went for the deciſion of their controverſies, Acts 15. and the biſhop of Jeruſalem is therefore ſtyled by the ancients, (1) "The firſt biſhop, the guide of prieſts, the top of the "heads, the biſhop, and chief of the apoſtles;" and the church of Jeruſalem is ſaid to be the church, cui omnes favorem impendunt quaſi matri Chriſtiani nominis, "which "all favoured as the mother of Chriſtians."

After the fall of Antichriſt, and before the ſecond coming of our Lord to judgment, the Jews ſhall be converted, and become a moſt famous church again. For this myſtery the apoſtle hath revealed, that blindneſs in part hath happened to Iſrael, until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in; and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, as it is written in the prophet Iſaiah, chap. 59 20. There ſhall come out of Sion the deliverer, and ſhall turn away ungodlineſs from Jacob: for this is my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord, when I ſhall take away their ſins. Theſe words are as a key to the great things ſaid by Iſaiah touching the Jewiſh nation, and teach us to interpret them of their glorious converſion to the Chriſtian faith, and the gathering them out of every kindred, and tongue, and nation, and people; that at the blowing of the great trumpet they may come from the land of Aſſyria and Egypt, and may worſhip the Lord in the holy mount in Jeruſalem, Iſ. 27. 13.; and they may fear the Lord from the weſt, and his glory from the riſing of the ſun. Iſ. 59. 19. This is that day when the Lord ſhall ſet his hand שנית, a ſecond time, to recover the remnant of his people, and ſhall aſſemble the outcaſts of Iſrael, and gather together the diſperſed of Judah from the four corners of the earth, Iſ. 11. 11. 12.; when he will ſo bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy on the whole houſe of Iſrael, as to leave none of them any more there, nor hide his face any more from them, Ezek. 39. 25. 28. 29.; when he ſhall ſo plant them in their land, that they ſhall no more be pulled up out of the land that he hath given them, Amos 9. 14. 15. So Tobit ſaith, that "when" πληρωθῶσιν αἱ καιροὶ τῦ αἰῶνος, "the times of the age ſhall "be accompliſhed, they ſhall return from all places of their "captivity, and build up Jeruſalem glorioufly, and the houſe "of God ſhall be built in it glorioufly, as the prophets have "ſpoken thereof," Tobit 14. 51. 6. 7. And when they ſhall be thus converted, and receive the goſpel, then ſhall ſalvation be again derived from them to the Gentiles, and they ſhall be the means of converting ſuch of them as ſtill remain to be converted; and ſhall draw them to as great purity and zeal, and as great knowledge of the truth, as ever the church enjoyed: for, ſaith the apoſtle, If the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminiſhing them the riches of the Gentiles, how much more their fulneſs? And if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what ſhall be the reconciling them but life from the dead, to the ſame world? Rom. 11. 12. 15. Of this the prophets ſpeak very fully, ſaying, In that day there ſhall be a root of Jeſſe which ſhall ſtand for an enſign to the people; and to it ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, and his reſt ſhall be glorious, Iſ. 11. 10. Behold, ſaith God, I will then lift up my hands to the Gentiles, and ſet up my ſtandard to the people; and they ſhall bring thy ſons in their arms, and thy daughters ſhall be carried upon their ſhoulders; and kings ſhall be thy nurſing-fathers, and queens thy nurſing-mothers; they ſhall bow down to thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the duſt of thy feet, Iſ. 49. 22. 23. Behold, thou ſhalt call a nation that thou knoweſt not, and nations that have not known thee, ſhall run unto thee, becauſe of the Lord thy God, and for the holy One of Iſrael; for he hath glorified thee, Iſ. 55. 5. The Lord God

(1) Cotel. Not. pag. 138.

that gathereth the outcaſts of Iſrael ſaith, yet will I gather others to him, beſides thoſe that are gathered to him, chap. 56. 8. And the Gentiles ſhall come to thy light, and kings to the brightneſs of thy riſing. Liſt up thine eyes round about, and ſee; all they gather themſelves together, they come to thee; thy ſons ſhall come from far, and thy daughters ſhall be nurſed at thy ſide; the abundance of the ſea ſhall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles ſhall come to thee, chap. 60. 3. 4. 5. And the ſons of ſtrangers ſhall build up thy walls, and their kings ſhall miniſter unto thee. Therefore thy gates ſhall be open continually, they ſhall not be ſhut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought. For the nation and kingdom that will not ſerve thee, ſhall periſh, and ſhall be utterly waſted, ver. 10. 11. 12. Thou ſhalt ſuck the milk of the Gentiles, and ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of kings, ver. 16. Ye ſhall be named the prieſts of the Lord; men ſhall call you the miniſters of our God: ye ſhall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory ſhall you boaſt yourſelves, chap. 61. 6. The Gentiles ſhall ſee thy righteouſneſs, and all kings thy glory, chap. 62. 2. Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing ſtream, chap. 66. 12. I will gather all nations and tongues, and they ſhall come and ſee my glory, ver. 18. And they ſhall bring all their brethren for an offering to the Lord, out of all nations, to my holy mountain in Jeruſalem. And I will alſo take of them for prieſts and for Levites, ſaith the Lord. For, as the new heavens and the new earth which I ſhall make, ſhall remain before me, ſaith the Lord, ſo ſhall their ſeed and their name remain, ver. 20. 21. 22. "Many nations," ſaith Tobit, "ſhall "come from far to the name of the Lord God, with "gifts in their hands, even giftsto the King of heaven, "when his tabernacle ſhall be built again with joy, and "he ſhall make his captives joyful in Jeruſalem; yea, all "nations ſhall turn, and fear the Lord God truly," chap. 13. 10. 11.

§ III. Now, here it is eaſy to obſerve, how fully this deſcription of the converſion of the Jews by their prophets, anſwers to the Millennium of St John, who uſeth the very words by which the prophets had foretold their glorious converſion, and ſaith, they ſhall be then accompliſhed. And,

1. St John ſpeaks of a reviviſcence of the church of the primitive martyrs that ſuffered for the teſtimony of Jeſus, and for the word of God, Rev. 20. 4. See chap. 3. § I. and with them all the juſt. Now, the very words ἀνάστασις and ἔζησαν, uſed by St John, are very frequently uſed by the prophets to expreſs the glorious ſtate of the Jewiſh church; and by St Paul, to ſignify the flouriſhing condition of the Gentiles then. St John ſaith, they who enjoy this Millennium, ſhall be prieſts to God and Chriſt, Rev. 20. 6. And the prophet Iſaiah ſaith of the converted Jews, Ye ſhall be named the prieſts of the Lord; men ſhall call you the miniſters of our God, chap. 61. 6. And of the Gentiles that come to them, I will take of them to be prieſts and Levites, chap. 66. 21. This was the very thing promiſed to the Jewiſh nation when God entered into covenant with them, that they ſhould be a kingdom of prieſts, Exod. 19. 6. Βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, a royal prieſthood, ſaith the Septuagint, מלכין כהנין i. e. kings and prieſts, ſaith the Targum. This all Chriſtians are already made, ſaith St Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 5. and St John, Rev. 16. 5. 10. "We are," ſaith (k) Juſtin Martyr, "truly prieſts to God;" it therefore may be expected men ſhould be more eminently ſo in that glorious ſtate of the church.

2. St John ſpeaks of a new heaven and a new earth that he ſaw, ſaying, The former heaven and earth were paſſed away, Rev. 21. 1. and introduceth our Lord, ſaying, Behold, I make all things new, ver. 5. And the prophet Iſaiah introduceth God, thus ſpeaking at the converſion of the Jews, Behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth; and the former ſhall not be remembered, nor come into my mind, Iſ. 65. 17. And again, I have put my word in thy mouth, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and ſay unto Zion, Thou art my people, chap. 51. 16. And, thirdly, in the very words of the author of the Revelation, Behold, I make all things new, chap. 43. 18. 19. Seeing then theſe new heavens and new earth muſt be contemporary with the converſion of the Jews, ſure they muſt be before the conflagration of the world, i. e. before the Jewiſh nation be conſumed to aſhes; and therefore can be only a new heaven and new earth, in that moral ſenſe in which Maimonides explains the phraſe, (l) when he ſays, "it ſignifies "that God will place them in perpetual joy, in lieu of their "former ſorrow and anxiety; ſo that the memory of their "former ſorrow ſhall no more remain.

I confeſs, there is this peculiarity in St John's new earth, that it is ſaid of it, καὶ ἡ θάλασσα οὐκ ἔστιν ἔτι, and the ſea is not yet, becauſe he had all along repreſented the beaſt as aſcending out of the abyſs, and ſitting upon many waters, which were the people, and multitude, and nations, and tongues, that had ſubmitted to her, Rev. 17. 1. 8. 15. Now, becauſe the beaſt was utterly deſtroyed, and Satan was bound up for a thouſand years, and Gog and Magog were not to be gathered till then, nor were the armies of the beaſt which were ſlain, to riſe again till the thouſand years were paſt, Rev. 19. 21.; 20. 6. therefore the apoſtle ſaith, that in this new earth the ſea was not yet.

3. St John ſaith, I heard a great voice from heaven, ſaying, The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they ſhall be his people, and God himſelf with them ſhall be their God, Rev. 21. 3. And Ezekiel the other prophet, who by the ancients is ſuppoſed to ſpeak of the Millennium, ſaith in like manner, I will make a covenant of peace with them, and will place them, and multiply them, and will ſet my ſanctuary in the midſt of them for evermore. My tabernacle alſo ſhall be with them ; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people, Ezek. 37. 26. 27.

4. St John ſaith, God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain ; for the former things are paſſed away, Rev. 21. 4. So alſo ſaith the prophet Iſaiah of Jeruſalem, that, after the former heaven and earth were paſſed away, the voice of weeping ſhall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying, chap. 65. 19. ; that the Lord will wipe away tears from all faces, chap. 25. 8. ; that they ſhall not hunger, nor thirſt, neither ſhall the heat nor ſun ſmite them ; [...] he that hath mercy on them, ſhall lead them, even by the ſprings of water ſhall he guide them, chap. 49. 10. Which words exactly anſwer to thoſe of St John, Rev. 7. 16. 17.

5. St John ſaith, The building of the wall of the city was of jaſper; and the city was of pure gold, like unto clear glaſs ; and the foundations of the wall of the city were garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones, Rev. 21. 18. 19. And Iſaiah ſaith, I will lay thy ſtones with fair colours, and thy foundations with ſapphires ; and I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleaſant ſtones, chap. 54. 11. 12. And Tobit ſaith, " Jeruſalem ſhall be " built up with ſapphires, and emeralds, and precious ſtones ; " thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold ; " and the ſtreets of Jeruſalem ſhall be paved with beryl, car- " buncle, and ſtones of Ophir," chap. 13. 16. 17. 18.

6. St John ſpeaks of the tree of life planted there, and of a pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb, Rev. 22. 1. 2. And the prophet Zachary ſpeaks of living water going out of Jeruſalem, chap. 14. 8. And he that paſſeth under the name of Eſdras, ſaith, " They ſhall have the tree of life planted for an orna- " ment of ſweet ſavour ; for unto you," ſaith he, " is para- " diſe opened, the tree of life is planted," 2 Eſdr. 2. 12.

7. St John ſaith, There ſhall be no night there, and they need no candle, neither light of the ſun, chap. 22. 5. Iſaiah ſaith the ſame, chap. 60. 19. And the prophet Zechariah ſaith, It ſhall be one day which ſhall be known unto the Lord, not day nor night ; and it ſhall come to paſs, that at evening-time it ſhall be light, chap. 14. 7.

Moreover, St John ſo repreſents the ſcene of things following the fall of antichriſt, as plainly to inform us, that he is ſpeaking of this glorious converſion of the Jewiſh nation, and God's marrying her again whom he had formerly divorced. For as the church of Chriſt is repreſented as the Iſrael of God, Gal. 6. 16. the commonwealth of Iſrael, Eph. 2. 12. the Jeruſalem which is above, Gal. 4. 46. the celeſtial Jeruſalem, Heb. 12. 22. ; ſo St John repreſents the new ſcene of things in the ſame language, ſaying, I John ſaw the holy city, new Jeruſalem, coming down from God out of heaven, Rev. 21. 2. And again, He ſhewed me the great city, the holy Jeruſalem, deſcending out of heaven from God, ver. 10. Now, that this great and holy city, this new Jeruſalem, is the Jewiſh church converted to God, the characters he gives of it will not ſuffer us to doubt. For, firſt, he ſaith, The city had no need of the ſun, neither of the moon to ſhine in it ; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof, Rev. 21. 23. So ſaith God of the converſion of the Jews : They ſhall call thee, The city of the Lord, the Zion of the holy One of Iſrael. Thou ſhalt call thy walls ſalvation, and thy gates praiſe. The ſun ſhall be no more thy light by day, neither for brightneſs ſhall the moon give light unto thee : but the Lord ſhall be unto thee an everlaſting light, and thy God thy glory, Iſ. 60. 14. 18. 19. He ſaith, The gates of this city ſhall not be ſhut at all by day; neither ſhall there be any night there, and they ſhall bring the glory, and honour, τιμην, the ſubſtance of the nations into it, Rev. 21. 25. 26. Even as Iſaiah had ſaid, Thy gates ſhall be open continually, they ſhall not be ſhut day nor night, that men may bring unto thee the wealth of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought, Iſ. 60. 11. Laſtly, he ſaith, The nations of them that are ſaved, ſhall walk in the light of this city ; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour to it, ver. 24. ; which I have ſhewed to be the very thing foretold by the prophets at the converſion of the Jewiſh nation.

Add to this, that he introduceth this holy city, this new Jeruſalem, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband, Rev. 21. 2. and ſaith, Come hither, I will ſhew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife, ver. 9. 10. and then ſhews the great city, the holy Jeruſalem : and chap. 19. 7. 8. he ſaith, He heard a voice, ſaying, The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herſelf ready ; and to her was granted, that ſhe ſhould be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, for the fine linen is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints. Now, thus have the prophets repreſented the Jewiſh church converted to God : hence is ſhe introduced, ſpeaking thus, I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my ſoul ſhall be joyful in my God ; for he hath clothed me with the garments of ſalvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs, as a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herſelf with jewels, Iſ. 61. 10. And again, Thou ſhalt no more be termed, Forſaken; neither ſhall thy land any more be termed, Deſolate : but thou ſhalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah ; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land ſhall be married, chap. 62. 4. and ver. 5. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, ſo ſhall thy ſons marry thee ; and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, ſo ſhall thy God rejoice over thee.

§ IV. Add to this, that all the characters which the patrons of the Millennium give of thoſe times, exactly accord with the characters given by the prophets of the converſion of the Jews, and are many of them taken from the very words of the prophets, foretelling thoſe times : for inſtance,

1. " Indolence and plenty," ſaith Dr Burnet, [b. 4. cap. 7. pag. 183.], " ſeem to be two ingredients of this happy " ſtate." Accordingly the prophets every where ſpeak, how the riches of the Gentiles ſhall then flow in to them, Iſ. 60. 5. 11. and they ſhall eat the riches of the Gentiles, chap. 61. 6. ; that there ſhall be then no hunger nor thirſt, no heat nor ſun to ſmite them, no voice of crying or weeping. See Iſ. 35. 10.

2. That it ſhall be " a time of univerſal peace, and free- " dom from war and perſecution," [ibid. pag. 184.] : and this he proves from the words of the prophets declaring, that at the day, that time when God ſhall create new heavens and new earth, the lamb and the lion ſhall lie down together, and the ſucking child ſhall play with the baſiliſk, and they ſhall not hurt in all my holy mountain, as it is written, Iſ. 11. 6. 7. 8. 9. and chap. 65. 25. and ſaying, that the nations ſhall beat their ſwords into ploughſhares, and their ſpears into pruning-hooks; nation ſhall not lift up a ſword againſt nation, neither ſhall they learn war any more, Iſ. 2. 4. Micah 4. 3.; as appears alſo from the promiſes, that God will then make her officers peace, Iſ. 60. 17. and will extend peace to her as a river, chap. 66. 12.

3. That it ſhall be "a kingdom of righteouſneſs." [ibid.] Accordingly of this holy city Jeruſalem, it is ſaid, There ſhall no more come into thee the uncircumciſed and unclean, Iſ. 52. 1. An highway ſhall be there, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs; the unclean ſhall not paſs over it, chap. 35. 8.; which exactly anſwers to thoſe words of St John, Into the holy city ſhall nothing enter that is polluted or unclean, Rev. 21. 27. And again, Thy people ſhall be all righteous, chap. 61. 21. See Zeph. 3. 9. Zech. 14. 20. 21.

Moreover this, ſaith he, [pag. 185.] will be "a ſtate "under a peculiar preſence and divine conduct, becauſe the "tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell "with them;" and this we ſee was promiſed at the converſion of the Jewiſh nation, Ezek. 37. 27.

"The laſt character," ſaith he, "that belongs to this "ſtate, or rather to thoſe that enjoy it, is this, that they "are kings and prieſts unto God;" and this alſo we have ſhewed to be promiſed to the converted Jews, Iſ. 61. 6. 65. 20.

I add, that as the ancient fathers generally held that the time would come when "all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved," and be converted to the Chriſtian faith; ſo did they as generally conceive that this ſhould happen at the cloſe of the world, (m) and about the time of our Saviour's ſecond coming; and moſt of them ſpeak of it as a branch of the Millennium.

So Juſtin Martyr ſays once and again, that (n) "then the "Jews ſhall ſee and ſhall acknowledge him whom they have "pierced;" and he confeſſes to Trypho, (o) that "Jeru"ſalem ſhall be rebuilt," and that (p) "Chriſtians ſhall re"joice with Chriſt, together with the patriarchs and pro"phets, and with the Jews and their proſelytes, i. e. the "nations then flowing in to them before the coming of our "Lord." So (q) Irenæus declares, that then "God will "reſtore them to the land which he had promiſed, and given "to their fathers, and they ſhall dwell in it in hope." And (r) Tertullian ſaith, that "he will then own the circumci"ſion," et Abrahæ gentem, cum ultimo venerit, acceptatione et benedictione dignabitur, "and at his laſt coming "will vouchſafe to accept, and bleſs the ſeed of Abraham." And this is ſuitable to the ancient opinion of the (s) Jews, "that, in the end of the world, there ſhould be to them a "world full of joy and exultation, ſo that their heaven and "earth ſhould as it were be renewed, according to the words "of Iſaiah, chap. 65. 17. So the Targum upon thoſe words of Hoſea, The children of Iſrael ſhall ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs in the latter days.

§ V. Nor is it to be wondered that there ſhould be then ſuch a glorious converſion of them, and ſuch a flowing in of the nations to them, ſeeing the prophets ſeem to intimate there ſhall be then a full effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, ſomewhat reſembling that which was vouchſafed to the firſt ages of Chriſtianity. So the prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks of the deſolation of the city, ἕως ἂν ἔλθῃ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς πνεῦμα ἀφ' ὑψηλοῦ, until the ſpirit be poured upon them from on high, Iſ. 32. 15. which is the very phraſe in which our Lord promiſeth the Spirit to his apoſtles, Luke 24. 49. St Paul proves their converſion from thoſe words of the prophet Iſaiah, The deliverer ſhall come out of Zion, and ſhall turn away iniquity from Jacob: with which theſe are immediately connected, And this is my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord, My ſpirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put into thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed's ſeed, from henceforth and for ever, chap. 59. 20. 21. And again, chap. 44. 3. I will pour water upon him that is thirſty, and floods upon the dry ground; I will pour my ſpirit upon thy ſeed and my bleſſing upon thy offſpring. So Ezek. 36. 24. I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. And ver. 27. I will put my ſpirit within you, and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes. And chap. 39. 28. 29. I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there. Neither will I hide my face any more from them; for I have poured out my ſpirit upon the houſe of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord. And this ſeems plainly to be hinted in theſe words of St Paul, 2 Cor. 3. 15. 16. 17. Even unto this day, when Moſes is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheleſs, when it ſhall turn to the Lord, the veil ſhall be taken away; for the Lord is (the giver of) that Spirit, (or ὃ δὲ) where the Lord is, there is the Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty from ſubjection to the law, and from that veil which hinders them from turning to Chriſt.

To this Mr Mead (p. 761. 767.) conjectures there ſhall be added a viſion of Jeſus Chriſt to them: for, ſaith God by his prophet Zechariah, chap. 12. 10. I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the ſpirit of grace and of ſupplications, and they ſhall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn for him. And Chriſt being aſked, What ſhall be the ſign of the end of the world, Matth. 24. 3. ſaith, ver. 30. Then ſhall appear the ſign of the Son of man in heaven, and they ſhall ſee all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they ſhall ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he ſpeaks to the Jews thus, Verily I ſay unto you, Yet a little while, and you ſhall not ſee me till you ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Matth. 23. 39.

Or, that according to the ancient and general doctrine both of Jew and Chriſtian, they ſhall have an Elias ſent to inſtruct them, a deliverer ἕνεκεν Σιὼν, for the ſake of Zion, as the Septuagint, Iſ. 59. 20. For, ſaith he, " It may be fit to " conceive magnificently of ſo great a work of God, to- " wards a people for whom he hath formerly ſhewed ſo ma- " ny wonders; eſpecially this being the greateſt work of " mercy and wonder that ever he did for them, far beyond " the bringing them forth of Egypt, and leading them in the " wilderneſs." And to this he refers theſe words of Eccleſiaſticus: " Elias was ordained to turn the hearts of the " father to the ſon, and to reſtore," καταστῆσαι, " the tribes " of Jacob: Μακάριοι οἱ ἰδόντες σε, καὶ οἱ ἀγαπήσει κεκοσμημένοι, καὶ γὰρ ἡμεῖς ζωῇ ζησόμεθα, " Bleſſed are they that ſee " thee, and are adorned with love, for we ſhall ſurely live," Ecclus 48. 10. 11. Where note, that their converſion is again repreſented by a new life, and by the very word uſed concerning the ſouls of the martyrs which were ſlain, Rev. 20. 4.

§ VI. Add to this, that as all the ancient millenaries held, that this reign on earth ſhould be at (t) Jeruſalem, and that the Jews converted then, ſhould reign together with the Chriſtians; ſo all the paſſages cited from Jewiſh writers concerning the Millennium, ſpeak only of the Millennium of the reſurrection, the new heavens and new earth the Jewiſh nation ſhall enjoy. This is apparent from thoſe words on which the Midraſh-Tehillim founds this Millennium, viz. " Comfort us, according to the days in which thou haſt " afflicted us," Pſal. 90. 15. in Babylon, in Greece, in Rome. From the words cited by Galatinus, l. 12. c. 1. from R. Eliezer, c. 34. " As I live, ſaith the Lord, I will " raiſe you in the time to come, in the reſurrection of the " dead, and I will gather you, with all Iſrael, into the land " of Iſrael." From thoſe cited from R. Saadias on Dan. 7. 18. " Becauſe the Jews rebelled againſt their Lord, their " kingdom ſhall be taken from them, and given to the four " monarchies who ſhall poſſeſs it in this world, and ſhall " ſubdue and carry captive Iſrael, till the age to come, in " which the Meſſiah ſhall reign." From the Targum on Hoſ. 14. 8. " They ſhall be gathered from the midſt of " their captivity;" and on Pſal. 50. 4. From the paſſage quoted by Galatinus, l. 11. c. 1. From the book Beracoth, that " Iſrael ſhall no more make mention of their departure " out of Egypt in the age to come, in the days of the Meſ- " ſiah." And from the words cited by Mr Mead, Luke 21. 24. " The Jews ſhall be carried captives into all nations, " till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled, and then ſhall " they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds." From the words of Tobit, cited by Mr Mead, p. 579. " Then " the children of Iſrael ſhall go into a very long captivity; " but the bleſſed God ſhall remember them, and gather them " from the four corners of the earth." Accordingly, Mr Mead ſums up their opinion, thus: " They expect their forefathers, " at leaſt ſuch as were juſt and holy, ſhould riſe in the be- " ginning of the ſame Millennium, and reign in the land of " Iſrael, with their offſpring, under the Meſſiah. And," ſaith he, " I can hardly believe that all this ſmoke of tra- " dition could ariſe, but from ſome fire of truth anciently " made known unto them." And this I freely grant, and do indeed ſuppoſe, by aſſerting a prediction of ſuch a general call of the Jews, near the cloſe of the world, as they ſtyled ζωοποίησις, a reviving, and a reſurrection of them. But how comes this tradition to relate to Chriſtian martyrs beheaded for the name of Chriſt, or to be fulfilled in the reſurrection of them only who are chiefly Chriſtians, not of the Jews, but of the Gentiles? Mr Mead ſolves the matter thus, p. 604. " Under the ſecond ſort of theſe reigners, I would " in a particular reſpect underſtand the nation of the Jews " then converted to the Chriſtian faith, who coming in to- " ward the end of the day, may, above all others, be ſaid to " be thoſe who had not worſhipped the beaſt, nor his image, " nor had received his mark upon their foreheads or their " hands." And thus will truth prevail at laſt, but to the ruin of this literal reſurrection: for how can they literally be ſaid " to live again, and to have a part in the firſt re- " ſurrection, who were never ſlain for the faith?" and who are not to be converted, ſay their own prophecies and traditions, till God createth a new heaven, and a new earth, and much leſs till the fall of Babylon?

CHAP. III.

This chapter contains an anſwer to all the arguments produced from ſcripture, to prove this literal reſurrection of the martyrs, and this reign of them on earth a thouſand years, viz. 1. To the chief argument for this opinion, from Rev. 20. 4. 5. 6. § I. To 2 Pet. 3. from ver. 5. 13. § II. To Heb. 2. 5. compared with chap. 1. 6. § III. To Matth. 5. 5. The meek ſhall inherit the earth, § IV. To Rom. 8. 19. 20. The creature ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, § V. To Acts 3. 20. 21. The heavens muſt receive him, till the time of the reſtitution of all things, § VI. To Matth. 19. 27. 28. 29. Ye that have followed me in the regeneration, ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, § VII. And they ſhall receive an hundred fold now in this life, ibid.

I Proceed now to the arguments produced from ſcripture, for the doctrine of the Millennium; to which I hope to return a clear and ſatisfactory anſwer, beginning with thoſe words of the Revelation, in which all the aſſertors tors of this doctrine place their confidence. And they are theſe:

§ I. Arg. I. And I ſaw thrones, and they ſat upon them, and judgment was given to them: and I ſaw the ſouls of them that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, and for the word of God, and which had not worſhipped the beaſt, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Chriſt a thouſand years, Rev. 20. 4.

But the reſt of the dead lived not again till the thouſand years were finiſhed. This is the firſt reſurrection, ver. 5.

Bleſſed and holy is he who hath part in the firſt reſurrection: on ſuch the ſecond death hath no power; but they ſhall be prieſts of God, and of Chriſt, and ſhall reign with him a thouſand years, ver. 6.

1. Here, ſay they, is mention of a firſt reſurrection, antecedent to the general reſurrection of the juſt, who are not to live again, till they who firſt riſe, have reigned a thouſand years on earth.

2. This reſurrection, ſay they, is proper to thoſe who were ſlain for the teſtimony of Jeſus, and the word of God, and were not worſhippers of the beaſt.

3. This reſurrection, ſay they, is not a metaphorical, but a proper reſurrection; for the ſouls, i. e. the perſons of them that were ſlain, live again.

4. They do reign with Chriſt a thouſand years, and that reign, ſay moſt of them, is to be upon earth; therefore there is to be a reign of thoſe martyrs who were ſlain for the teſtimony of Jeſus, and the word of God, upon earth a thouſand years.

Now, in anſwer to this argument, let it be noted,

Anſ. 1. That it is not the bodies, but the ſouls of them that are beheaded, who are ſaid to live. Now, the word ψυχὰς, rendered ſoul, occurs ſix times in this book, this place excepted; and in all theſe places, it ſignifies either the ſoul in ſeparation, or diſtinction from the body, or the living ſoul; for, chap. 6. 9. The ſouls under the altar, not only cry with a loud voice, but they are clothed with white robes, ver. 10. 11. Which expreſſions cannot be well applied to dead bodies, chap. 8. 9. The κτίσματα ἔχοντα ψυχὰς, are the creatures having animal ſouls by which they lived, chap. 12. 11. It plainly ſignifies their lives, i. e. the ſouls by which men live, chap. 16. 3. It is expreſsly ἡ ψυχὴ ζῶσα, the living ſoul, chap. 18. 13. It ſignifies the lives of men, or elſe the ſouls of men, which they did hunt for, or devour, as Ezek. 13. 18. 20. 22. 25. and ver. 14. ἐπιθυμία τῆς ψυχῆς is, the deſire, not of the body, but of the ſoul: why therefore muſt this word be here ſuppoſed to ſignify, not the ſoul, but that dead body oppoſite to it, which alone properly can be ſaid to riſe, and live again?

2. Let it be noted, that a proper and a literal reſurrection, is never in the whole New Teſtament expreſſed, or repreſented to us, by the living of the ſoul; but always by the living, raiſing, or the reſuſcitation of the dead, the raiſing of the bodies of the ſaints, of them that ſlept in the duſt, or in their graves and ſepulchres, or who were buried in the ſea, or in the earth: if then the Holy Ghoſt here meant a literal and proper reſurrection, why doth he ſo much vary from the terms he conſtantly doth uſe elſewhere, whenever he diſcourſeth of ſuch a reſurrection, and take up with the terms ſo oft applied in ſcripture to a moral and metaphorical reſurrection? As we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Anſ. 2. 2dly, I grant that here is mention of a firſt reſurrection, antecedent to the general and proper reſurrection; but then it plainly is a reſurrection, in which all that are bleſſed and holy, and over whom the ſecond death hath no power, have a part, ver. 6. and they are all whoſe names are written in the book of life, ver. 14. 15. It is a reſurrection of all who had not worſhipped the beaſt, ver. 4. and they are all the ſame perſons, Rev. 13. 8. It is a reſurrection of thoſe who are made kings and prieſts to God and Chriſt, which all good Chriſtians are, 1 Pet. 2. 5. 6. and therefore not of martyrs only.

Again, it is a reſurrection before the day of judgment, and before the ſea, and death, and the grave, deliver up their dead, as the words following intimate, ver. 12. 13. viz. I ſaw the dead, ſmall and great, ſtand before God, and the books were opened: and another book which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the ſea gave up her dead, that were in it: and death and hades delivered up their dead that were in them: and they were judged every man according to his works. Where note, that the dead delivered up, were all that were judged according to their works. It alſo is a reſurrection before Chriſt's coming to render to every man as his works ſhall be; for this he after promiſeth to do, chap. 22. 12. Whereas, according to the doctrine of the Millennium, Chriſt had already given to them whom he had raiſed to reign with him on earth, the bleſſing promiſed to him that overcometh, Rev. 2. 26. 27. and 3. 21. and 5. 10.

3dly, The reſt of the dead, that lived not again until the thouſand years were finiſhed, are not the juſt, but the ſynagogue of Satan, Gog and Magog, ver. 8. For St John, chap. 19. repreſents the King of kings, and Lord of lords, with the armies which were in heaven, making war with the kings of the earth, and their armies, and giving their fleſh to be meat unto them; in which war the beaſt was taken, and the falſe prophet, and caſt alive into a lake of fire, ver. 20. And then it follows thus, καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ, and the reſt of them who were gathered together to make war with this King of kings, were ſlain with the ſword that came out of his mouth, and all the fowls were filled with their fleſh, ver. 21. Now, it being by the Pagan emperors firſt, and by the beaſt afterwards, that Satan, the great dragon, made war with the ſeed of the woman which kept the commandments of God, and had the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt, Rev. 12. 17. theſe inſtruments of Satan being thus ſlain, and overcome by Chriſt, Satan is bound a thouſand years; i. e. he is ſo long diſabled from perſecuting and moleſting the church of Chriſt; and during this ſpace, ſhe is raiſed up to her primitive purity, and flouriſheth glorioufly, and ſo is repreſented as having a reſurrection from the dead: this thouſand years being ended, Satan is let looſe again, and gathers again his inſtruments, i. e. the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog to battle, and they compaſs the camp of the ſaints, Rev. 20. 8. 9. And this is the living of the rest of the dead again, after the thousand years were ended, ver. 5. For it is only οἱ λοιποὶ, the rest that were slain, chap. 19. 21. that lived again; it is only those who had no share in the first resurrection, and so were neither blessed nor holy, ver. 6. nor had their names written in the book of life; and, consequently, those on which the second death had place, which death they suffered when fire came down from heaven and devoured them, and they were cast into the lake of fire with the devil, ver. 10. 15.

And that οἱ λοιποὶ, the rest, chap. 19. 21. and chap. 20. 5. should signify the same persons, cannot seem strange, if we consider that only four verses intervene betwixt them. And that they must be the same persons, is evident from the connection of the words, thus: "The rest of the dead lived "not till the thousand years" of Satan's binding, and the saints reign was ended, ver. 5. And when those thousand years were ended, Satan was loosed, and gathered them together against that church of Christ which had thus reigned a thousand years, ver. 7. 8. 9. 10.

And this interpretation, of the rest of the dead rising again, gives a clear answer to the objection of Mr Mead, against the other senses commonly imposed upon these words, viz. "That it would be a most harsh and violent interpreta- "tion, to say, the dead and the living again of the dead, "should not be taken in the same sense:" for, according to this exposition, they are exactly taken in the same sense; the dead church living again, in the same metaphorical sense in which the rest of the dead, the enemies of the church, live again, at the end of the thousand years, when Satan is loosed, and gathers them to battle against the church.

4. The souls of them who were slain for the testimony of Jesus, and for the word of God, are those Christians who were slain in the time of the ten persecutions; and the souls of them who worshipped not the beast, are those Christians who chose rather to die, or suffer persecution, than to be guilty of Romish idolatry: and they are said to live again, as the beast which had received τὴν πληγὴν θανάτου, the wound of death, and one of whose heads was wounded to death, ἔζησεν, lived again, Rev. 13. 3. 12. viz. in the succession of the Antichristian beast, to him which exercised the power of the heathen emperors over the earth, and revived the idolatry of the heathen empire. And as the two witnesses, when slain, are said to live again, the spirit of life from God entering into them, Rev. 11. 7. 11. because a succession of men of the same faith, and the same opposition to the beast, revive and flourish after they were slain. Some here reply, that this was spoken of the two churches, that they were slain, and lived again, not of the suppositа. But why then may not the words of St John be spoken of the church of Jew and Gentile, then reviving, and not of the suppositа? Moreover, these two witnesses are said to be slain, ver. 7. and their dead bodies to lie in the streets of the great city, ver. 18. to be seen lying there three days and an half, and not to be suffered to be put into their graves, ver. 9. and after three days and an half, the Spirit of God is said to enter into them, to make them stand upon their feet and live again. If therefore nothing of this be spoken of the suppositа, why should those words, I saw the souls of them who were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and they lived again, be spoken of the suppositа, and not of the churches of the converted Jews and Gentiles? This being the prophetic scheme by which the scripture still represents the glorious restoration of God's church and people. For,

1. The restoration of the church is sometimes represented as a resurrection of it from the dead. So saith the prophet Isaiah, Ἀναστήσονται οἱ νεκροὶ, Thy dead shall arise, and be raised out of their tombs, chap. 26. 19. So God speaks to the Jewish nation by Ezekiel, saying, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel, Ezek. 37. 13. 14. The prophet Hosea speaks thus, In three days ἐξαναστησόμεθα, we shall rise up again, and we shall live before him, Hos. 6. 2. And the apostle, speaking of this very matter, viz the conversion of the Jews, saith, It shall be even to the Gentiles, ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, as life from the dead, Rom. 11. 15. Here then is a resurrection of the church of God, agreeable to that which our interpretation of this passage of the Revelation doth import: nor is there any more reason to say, the words of St John respect the suppositа, and not the churches, than to say the same of many of the places cited.

Moreover, the scripture doth more frequently mention the restoration of the church, and her return from a low, captive, and afflicted state, under the metaphor of "a new life, "a life from the dead, a revivíscence of God's church and "people." Thus when God moved the Persian kings to let the Jews return to their own land, he is by Ezra said to give them ζωοποίησιν, a revivíscence, Ezra 9. 8. 9. The Psalmist, speaking of himself, as the text, or of God's people also, saith the marginal reading, useth these words, Thou which hast shewed me great and sore troubles, shalt quicken me [marg. us] again, and shalt bring me up again [marg. us] from the depth of the earth, Psal. 71. 20. And the church speaketh thus to God, Ζωώσεις, Thou wilt quicken us, and we will call upon thy name, Psal. 80. 18. And again, Thou wilt return, καὶ ζωώσεις ἡμᾶς, and revive us, and thy people shall rejoice in thee, Psal. 85. 6. Ζήσονται οἱ τεθνηκότες σου, Thy dead men shall live, Is. 26. 19. say Symmachus and Theodotion: Ζησόμεθα, We shall live in his sight, saith the prophet Hosea, chap. 6. 2. 3. and chap. 14. 17. They shall live with their children, and return again, saith the prophet Zachary, chap. 10. 8. 9. The son of Syrach saith, at the coming of Elias, ζωῇ ζησόμεθα, we shall live again, chap. 48. 11. But the chief seat of this metaphor is in the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, where God is introduced inquiring of the Jews in Babylon, Εἰ ζήσονται, Can these bones live? ver. 3. and promising to put into them πνεῦμα ζωῆς, the breath of life, ver. 5. and saying, I will put my spirit into you, καὶ ζήσεσθε, and ye shall live; and bidding the prophet blow upon them, καὶ ζησάτωσαν, that they may live, ver. 9. and declaring, that when he had done so, breath entered into them, καὶ ἔζησαν, and they lived again, and stood upon their feet, ver. 10.: in all which places, the very word which St John useth to express the first resurrection, is here used to express the return of the church from her obscurity and thraldom, to a glorious state. Why therefore may not the word in St John bear that sense which it so often bears in the prophetic writings, and twice in the (u) New Teſtament, when ſpoken of the Gentiles? It hence at laſt appears, that, by this interpretation, I put no force upon the words, but do expound them in the familiar ſenſe in which they are ſtill uſed upon the like occaſion in the prophetic writings.

Now, it is generally agreed, by thoſe who own this converſion of the Jews, that it is not to commence till after the deſtruction of the beaſt, or the downfal of antichriſt, mentioned chap. 18. And therefore, in the next chapter, he begins his diſcourſe upon it, ſaying, chap. 19. 7. The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herſelf ready; i. e. She who was formerly put away, becauſe ſhe was not (x) prepared for the bridegroom's coming, was now to be married to God again. And, chap. 21. he reaſſumes this matter, and ſhews the bride, the Lamb's wife, in ſuch a deſcription, as will not ſuffer us to doubt ſhe is the Jewiſh nation converted to the Chriſtian faith: for he calls her the holy city, and the new Jeruſalem; and tells us in the very words of Iſaiah, chap. 60. 3. 10. that the nations which ſhall be ſaved, ſhall walk in the light of this city. He calleth her alſo the bride to be married to the Lamb; which is the deſcription the prophets make of this converted nation, viz. as of a bride adorned with her jewels, and as one that is to be married to the Lord, Iſ. 61. 10. and 62. 4. 5. and he goes on in a continual deſcription of this new Jeruſalem, in the words of the prophets Iſaiah and Ezekiel, ſpeaking of the converſion of the Jewiſh nation. The city alſo coming down from heaven, ver. 10. is the new church of the converted Jews, ſaid to come down from heaven, according to the Hebrew phraſe; becauſe of that divine wiſdom, and thoſe ſpiritual gifts and graces with which ſhe ſhall be adorned from heaven: for, as they were wont to ſay of one who treated of ſublime heavenly things, that he did עלה לרקיע, (y) aſcend into heaven, and ſpeak as one who was admitted into the divine counſels, Deut. 30. 11. 12. Prov. 30. 3. and of thoſe who had heard theſe things, that they were exalted to heaven, Matth. 11. 23.; ſo the pouring down of theſe gifts and bleſſings, is repreſented as the opening of heaven, and letting them down upon the earth. Thus, when St John receives his prophecy, he ſees a door opened in heaven, and hears a voice, ſaying, Come up hither, and I will ſhew thee what ſhall be hereafter, Rev. 4. 1. Where note, that the voice he heard then, was as the voice of a trumpet: and ſo the very ſame voice he heard when he was in the Spirit, Rev. 1. 10. The two witneſſes alſo, when they live again, are called up into heaven, Rev. 11. 11. 12. as being filled with heavenly wiſdom. And ſince the ſpiritual gifts, imparted to the church, are ſaid to come from above, from the Father of lights, James 1. 17. and they who were made partakers of them, to have taſted τῆς δωρεᾶς ἐπουρανίου, of the heavenly gift; ſeeing the church of Chriſt is the Jeruſalem which is from above, Gal. 4. 25. the heavenly Jeruſalem, Heb. 12. 22. it is no wonder that ſhe is repreſented here, as coming down from heaven, when ſhe was, as it were, to have a new birth which is from above, John 3. 3. and to be adorned with ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things in Chriſt Jeſus, Eph. 1. 3. and to be reduced to her primitive luſtre and purity; for then ſhall the purity of the church return, and be as it was in the times of the firſt martyrs for the faith; and the goſpel ſhall be profeſſed, without any antichriſtian mixture; as they who oppoſed the beaſt, endeavoured to preſerve it: and thus ſhall theſe martyrs, and oppoſers of the beaſt live again.

A reverend and worthy perſon, of more than ordinary ſkill in matters of this nature, is of opinion,

1. That "the firſt reſurrection," here mentioned, "will "be a literal reſurrection of them that have loſt their lives "for the teſtimony of Chriſt, to enjoy eternal life in heaven "a thouſand years before the general reſurrection, as the "martyrs of the Old Teſtament aroſe with the body of "Chriſt," Matth. 27. 52. They ſhall reign, ſaith he, with Chriſt, not on earth, but in heaven, where Chriſt is, and ſhall be, till he come to judgment.

2. He is of opinion, that "not only the martyrs ſhall "then riſe to heavenly bliſs, but that their murderers ſhall "then alſo ariſe to eternal puniſhment:" which he gathers from thoſe words of Daniel, chap. 12. 2. And many of them that ſleep in the duſt ſhall ariſe, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to everlaſting ſhame and contempt. Now,

1. Againſt the doctrine of the firſt and ſecond reſurrection, properly ſo called, I have offered ſome arguments in the annotations on 1 Cor. 15. and chap. 4. § 2. I therefore only farther note,

1*ſt*, That St Matthew ſpeaks not one word of any martyrs that aroſe after Chriſt's reſurrection, but only of the ariſing of ſome ſaints that ſlept, and their going into the holy city, and appearing unto many; which ſeems rather to make it probable, they were ſaints who had lived in the memory of thoſe to whom they appeared, and were known. (See the note there.)

2*dly*, St Matthew doth not ſay, as St John doth, that many ſouls lived; but, that, πολλὰ σώματα, many bodies of thoſe that ſlept, aroſe out of their ſepulchres: his words muſt therefore be underſtood of a proper reſurrection of the bodies of the ſaints; but it cannot be hence inferred, that the words of St John bear the ſame ſenſe.

3*dly*, St John doth not ſay his martyrs ſhall reign with Chriſt a thouſand years "before the general reſurrection," but only, that "they ſhall reign with Chriſt a thouſand "years;" which ſeems an odd expreſſion, when applied to them who are raiſed "to reign for ever with him:" add to this, that after the reſurrection of St John's ſaints to "reign "with Chriſt a thouſand years," Satan is looſed, and raiſes his armies to fight againſt, and compaſs about τὴν παρεμβολὴν τῶν ἁγίων, the camp of the ſaints, ver. 7. 8. 9. which fairly intimates, that the ſaints, mentioned ver. 6. as partakers of the firſt reſurrection, were ſtill on earth, and not reigning with Chriſt in heaven.

Laſtly, The ſecond part of this opinion ſeems to contradict many ſcriptures which expreſsly teach, that the time of the punishment of the wicked, shall be after the sentence of absolution hath been passed upon the blessed, Matth. 25. 41.—46. when all the good have gone into everlasting life, John 5. 28. 29. at the day of judgment, and when we shall appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, Rom. 2. 8. 9. 16. 2 Cor. 5. 10. and that they who have persecuted Christ's members, shall be punished at the revelation of Christ from heaven, 2 Thess. 1. 6.—9. at the conflagration of the world, 2 Pet. 2. 9. and 3. 7. at the day of judgment, Jude, ver. 14. 15. when he cometh in the clouds, Rev. 1. 7. and that the crown of glory shall be given to the righteous at the same time. (See note on 2 Tim. 4. 8.)

(u) Ὁ ἀδελφός σε οὗτος νεκρὸς ἦν, καὶ ἀνέζησε, Luke 15. 32. Rom. 11. 15.

Obj. 2. Some refer to this Millennium, those words of Christ, Matth. 5. 5. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth; saying, "That neither David, nor our "Saviour, could understand this otherwise than of a future "state; because it is not the meek, but the great ones of the "world, that slice the earth among them, and court-flatter-"ers that scramble for preferment."

Ans. But it is evident to a demonstration, that David did understand this of the present earth, or of the land of Canaan; for the tenor of this whole 37th Psalm is designed to shew, that wicked men shall, by God's judgment, suddenly perish, whilst righteous men lived easily and quietly in the land of Canaan: so ver. 9. Evil-doers shall be cut off: but they that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth: for yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be, but the meek shall inherit the earth. They that are blessed of him, shall inherit the earth; and they that are cursed of him, shall be rooted out. So ver. 34. Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee, τοῦ κληρονομῆσαι τὴν γῆν, to inherit the earth: When the wicked are destroyed, thou shall see it. See also ver. 14. 17. 19. 23. 24. 25. 29. It is therefore unadvisedly said, the Psalmist could not understand this of the present earth, and that upon a plain mistake of the import of the phrase; as if inheriting the earth, was enjoying a vast fortune, or a great share of temporal enjoyments here; whereas, the comfort of this life, as our Lord teacheth, Luke 12. 15. consisteth not in the abundance of the things that we possess. The phrase rather imports, that meekness is the best way to procure us a long and peaceable life on earth, Psal. 14. 12. 14. 1 Pet. 3. 10. And that the meek person shall ordinarily have the most sure enjoyment of these things, as far as they are needful: that he shall enjoy them with the greatest quiet and tranquillity, without that strife, debate, anxiety, and trouble, which imbitter the enjoyment of these things to others; and with the truest comfort, satisfaction, and contentedness of mind. For, as Chrysostom well observes upon the place, because the Jews had been oft taught this lesson in the Old Testament, our Saviour addresses himself to them, in the language they had been accustomed to; this Son of David repeateth and confirmeth to them the promise made by David. And this I judge to be the most natural and truest exposition of these words.

Obj. 3. Our Saviour promises to his disciples and followers, that, for the losses they should sustain here on his account, and for the sake of his gospel, they should receive there an hundred-fold, and sit upon thrones with him, judging the tribes of Israel. The words are these: And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, Matth. 19. 27. 28. These thrones must, in all reason, be the same with the thrones mentioned, Dan. 7. 9. Apoc. 20. 4. and therefore mark the same time and state. And seeing, in those places, they plainly signify the millennial state or the kingdom of Christ, and his saints, they must here signify the same in this promise of our Saviour to his suffering followers. And as to the word παλιγγενεσία, which is here translated regeneration, it is very well known, that both the Greek philosophers, and Greek fathers, use that word for the renovation of the world, which is to be at, or before the millennial state.

Ans. In answer to this argument, I shall not take notice, that what the argument saith is promised to Christ's disciples and followers in general, is indeed promised only to his twelve apostles, to them who had then lost all, and followed him, Matth. 12. 17. to them who had continued with him in his temptations, Luke 22. 28. The thrones here mentioned therefore, cannot be the thrones spoken of in Daniel, and the Revelations; for these thrones are peculiar to the twelve apostles: those in the Revelations are supposed to belong to all that have a share in the first resurrection: the apostles sit upon these thrones, only to judge the twelve tribes of Israel; but they who sit on the thrones mentioned in the Revelations, are to rule over the nations, and judge them, Rev. 2. 26. 27. and 3. 21. and 5. 10. 20. and 4. 6. But,

2. I grant, the παλιγγενεσία, or regeneration, here mentioned, may be referred to the consummation of the world, and to the new heavens and earth of which the prophets speak: but then I add, this παλιγγενεσία, or new birth, is only that of the church of Christ, that ζωοποίησις, or new life, that ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, life from the dead, she shall receive, when all Israel shall be saved, and the fulness of the Gentiles shall flow in to them. For,

1. The persons here to be judged, are only the twelve tribes of Israel; which makes it more than probable, that the whole promise made to the apostles, respects their government over these tribes, coming in at the close of the world, after the fall of antichrist; and that not by a resurrection of their persons, but by a revivisence of that spirit which resided in them, and of that purity and knowledge which they delivered to the world; and chiefly by admission of their gospel to be the standard of their faith, and the direction of their lives.

2. It hath been observed already, that the delivery of the Jews from their former captivities and miseries, is always represented as a ζωοποίησις, a giving of life, and a resurrection to the Jews. And thus may those words of St John be primarily referred to them, viz. I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them, chap. 20. 4. though these things belong not to them only, but in general to him that overcometh, chap. 2. 26. 27. and 3. 1. Seeing then their return from their captivity is, in the style of the prophets, usually represented as a παλιγγενεσία, a reviving, or new life; why may not the time of their most glorious conversion, conversion, and collection from all the corners of the earth, be by our Saviour here represented under that known metaphor? And this conversion of the Jewish nation, being by me placed in St John's epocha, viz. after the destruction of the beast, and the death and slaughter of the armies of them that fought for him, or worshipped his image; and her converted members being, in my opinion, the very bride of the Lamb which had made herself ready, and, after a long divorce, was now married to God again; I comply in this with all the ancient millenaries, and especially with (z) Justin Martyr, when he saith, this παλιγγενεσία "is the mystery "of the regeneration of all that expect Jesus Christ to ap-"pear at Jerusalem, spoken of by Isaiah," chap. 66. And that "all Christians entirely orthodox, expect to spend a "thousand years in Jerusalem, as the prophet Isaiah hath "foretold, saying, There shall be a new heaven and new "earth;" for as these things are spoken by a prophet of the Jews, (one sent to speak these things to them), so is it beyond dispute, that they chiefly and immediately concern that nation, and her τικτογονία, new birth of a numerous offspring, after a long barrenness, chap. 66. 7. 8. 9. and her exaltation to an high estate of excellence and glory; and that so visible to the Gentiles, that all nations and tongues shall see her glory.

As for the following words, urged stiffly by the ancient, and some latter millenaries, viz. And every one that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or sister, or father, or mother, or wife and children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houses, and brothers, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands; and in the world to come, eternal life: it is, in my opinion,

1. Very unreasonable, to interpret these words of blessings to be conferred on men after the resurrection; for they that are thought worthy to be sons of the resurrection, saith our Lord, neither marry, nor are given in marriage, Luke 20. 35. Whence therefore should they have these mothers, and these children, not to add wives, an hundred-fold? They are made like to angels at the resurrection; and what should such angelical persons do with, what advantage will they reap from an hundred houses, or a like increase of land, in earth?

If you reply, that these words of our Saviour relate not to the first resurrection; of which this text, which speaks of wives and children, is to be interpreted, but only to the second and general resurrection; I answer, that the words are general, and therefore must include all that are sons of the resurrection. Moreover, by admitting this double resurrection, the first, in which they that are raised might marry, or have wives and children, and the second, in which they could not, the objection or inquiry of the Sadducees is partly left unanswered; for this distinction doth suppose a resurrection, in which the ground of their inquiry might take place.

2. This wonderful increase is promised, νῦν, at present, ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τούτῳ, in this time of life, Mark 10. 30. Luke 18. 28. in opposition to what they shall receive in the age to come. Now, the Millennium is still placed by Dr B. in the age to come after the conflagration of the world; this promise therefore cannot refer to his Millennium, nor yet to any other which begins after the resurrection of these persons; for that time can with no propriety of speech be said to be now; nor can the blessings then received, be said to be received in this life. Moreover, these blessings are to be received, μετὰ διωγμῶν, with persecutions; it being the known observation of critics and (a) grammarians, that μετὰ with a genitive case, signifies with, and denotes, τὸν αὐτὸν καιρὸν, the same time; and only with an accusative case signifies after, and denotes ὑστεροχρονίαν, a following time; so that these persecutions must be contemporary with the enjoyment of these blessings; whereas a general peace, and (b) freedom from all persecutions, is made a necessary character of the millennial state.

Lastly, These words afford an argument against the doctrine of the Millennium; because, according to them, the only blessing to be received, ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι τῷ ἐρχομένῳ, in the age to come, is life everlasting; which blessing is confined to heaven, and not to be enjoyed on the earth, our house eternal being in the heavens, 2 Cor. 5. 1. and our inheritance eternal reserved in the heavens for us: And therefore they to whom the promise is here made, are not in the world to come to live a thousand years on earth, or to enjoy the temporal blessings promised here; because they are not to be enjoyed in the world to come, but now, in this present life; and because the only blessing promised in the world to come, is not to be enjoyed on earth, but is reserved in the heavens for us, 1 Pet. 1. 4.

Obj. 4. St Peter, in his sermon to the Jews, after our Saviour's ascension, tells them, that he will come again, and that there will be then a restitution of all things, such as was promised by the prophets: The heavens, saith he, must receive him till the time of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets since the world began, Acts 3. 20. 21.

Ans. I answer, That these words cannot be meant of a restitution of all things to their former state: for sure it is very improper to say, there will be a restitution of all things to their former state, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets; for since these things relate to the forerunner of our Lord Christ's coming in the flesh, his life, death, resurrection, and ascension, the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, the reign of antichrist, the calling of the Jews, and the coming in of the fulness of the Gentiles, these things may very well be said to be exhibited, performed, accomplished, and consummated: but I see not with what propriety or truth they can be said to be restored to their former states, or be renewed; and therefore ἄχρι χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως πάντων, is, by the Syriac, rendered, "until the fulness of the "time of all things;" by the Arabic, "till the time in "which all things shall be perfected or finished;" by (c) Tertullian, adusque tempora exhibitionis omnium; by (d) Irenæus, usque ad tempus dispositionis omnium, i. e. "till the time

(z) Ὅτε καὶ διὰ Ἡσαΐου ἐκέκραγτο διὰ πλειόνων, ἐν οἷς καὶ τὸ μυστήριον πάλιν τῆς γενέσεως ἡμῶν, καὶ ἁπλῶς πάντων, τὸν Χριστὸν ἐν Ἱερουσαλὴμ φανήσεσθαι προσδοκώντων. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 312. B. & p. 307.

" of the exhibition, or diſpoſal of all things;" by Oecumenius, " till the time that all things do εἰς τέρας ἐλθεῖν, come " to an end." And for the confirmation of this import of the word, we have the ſuffrage of Heſychius and Phavorinus, that ἀποκατάστασις is τελείωσις, " the conſummation of a " thing." Hence then I argue thus againſt this doctrine: ſince Chriſt is to continue in heaven till the completion, or conſummation of all things, ſpoken by the holy prophets, if the Millennium were any of them, Chriſt muſt continue in heaven till the conſummation of that alſo, and therefore is not to come down from heaven to reign on earth till the Millennium be ended; nor can that be contemporary with our Lord's ſecond coming, which is from heaven.

The arguments produced in favour of this Millennium, from Rom. 8. 19. 20. 21. from 2 Theſſ. 2. 1. from Heb. 1. 6. and 2. 5. and from 2 Pet. 3. 8.—12. are ſufficiently anſwered in the notes on thoſe places.

CHAP. IV.

This chapter contains arguments againſt the literal reſurrection, and the reign of martyrs upon earth a thouſand years. Firſt, From the inconſiſtency of it with the happy ſtate of ſouls departed, § I. Secondly, From the accurate deſcription of the reſurrection in the holy ſcripture, without any mention of a firſt and ſecond reſurrection, and with ſuch deſcriptions of the qualities of the bodies raiſed, the efficient cauſe, of the time, circumſtances, and conſequents of it, which ſuit not with the doctrine of the Millennium, § II. Thirdly, From the inconſiſtency of it with the genius of the Chriſtian faith, and the nature of the goſpel-promiſes, § III.

HAving thus ſhewed, that ſcripture and antiquity afford no ſure foundation for this ſuppoſed reſurrection of the ſaints and martyrs to reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years; I proceed now to ſhew the inconſiſtence of this doctrine, with many things delivered in the holy ſcripture. And,

§ I. Firſt, this doctrine ſeems not well conſiſtent with the happy ſtate of ſouls departed, recorded in the ſacred writings; for can it rationally be ſuppoſed, that thoſe ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, which are now with Chriſt, Heb. 12. 23. and, being abſent from the body, are preſent with the Lord, 2 Cor. 5. 8. Phil. 1. 23. ſhould leave thoſe bleſſed manſions, or quit that happy ſtate, to live on earth again a thouſand years? that they who are already entered into reſt, Luke 23. 43. and who enjoy all the delights and ſatisfactions which paradiſe itſelf affords, ſhould quit that ſtation to enjoy peace and plenty upon earth? Can they expect to be more righteous and holy, or to have more divine and heavenly ſpeculations, or better company, or a more full fruition of their Lord on earth, than they enjoyed in paradiſe? If not, who can imagine that God ſhould thus degrade them after ſo long enjoyment of thoſe happy regions, or that they ſhould voluntarily quit thoſe manſions for any temporal enjoyments of the body, any meat or drink, or earthly pleaſures, which they had formerly denied themſelves, and were even dead to whilſt they lived here; or for any temporary converſe upon that earth in which they only lived as pilgrims and ſtrangers, ſtill looking for a better country, that is, an heavenly? Heb. 11. 13. 16. And if this change ſeems not conſiſtent with the ſtate of happy ſouls in general, much leſs will it comport with thoſe eſpecial privileges and high prerogatives, ſuppoſed by ſome fathers to belong unto the ſouls of martyrs, viz. That they do inſtantly receive their crowns, and are admitted to a fuller viſion, and a more intimate enjoyment of the God of heaven; for the higher their advancement is, the greater muſt their degradation be, when they return again to live on earth. So that this doctrine ſeems leaſt of all conſiſtent with the ſtate of thoſe Chriſtian ſufferers, who are ſuppoſed to be the very perſons for whom it chiefly was deſigned, and to whom it is chiefly promiſed.

2dly, Let us compare the reſurrection mentioned by the holy ſcripture, with that ſuppoſed by the millenaries, and we ſhall eaſily diſcern, that no man reaſonably can deſire to enjoy the latter, who can be made partaker of the former.

They who believe the reſurrection promiſed in ſcripture, expect our Lord from heaven to change their vile bodies into the likeneſs of Chriſt's glorious body, Philip. 3. 21. The millenaries expect him to change, or to reſtore them into ſuch bodies, as ſhall be ſtill mortal, corruptible bodies; for elſe, what need of meat and drink, what pleaſure can they reap from their plenty? They firſt expect, this corruptible ſhould then put on incorruption, this mortal put on immortality, 1 Cor. 15. 53. The ſecond, that it ſhould do this only after a thouſand years; for they ſuppoſe, [b. 4. c. 9. p. 206.], " that nature may be weak," and they may be " deſirous to be diſſolved" in the millennial ſtate. The firſt expect, that their diſhonourable bodies ſhould be raiſed in glory, ver. 43. The ſecond, that they be firſt raiſed with their diſhonourable parts. The firſt, that the body ſhould be raiſed a ſpiritual and a celeſtial body, bearing the image of the heavenly Adam, ver. 44. 48. The ſecond, that it be firſt raiſed an earthly body, bearing the image of the earthly Adam. And oh! how inglorious, how deſpicable, is the reſurrection which theſe men expect, compared with the reſurrection promiſed in the holy ſcripture? How much more happy would the ſaints and martyrs be, could they immediately enjoy the ſcripture-reſurrection, than by enjoying that which the millenaries have allotted to them? " And " why ſhould any one conceive they ſhould not do it? Is it " becauſe there is a neceſſity they ſhould firſt live on earth " a thouſand years, (*) to prepare them for heaven and " and eternal glory; Ut paulatim aſſueſcant capere Deum,

" as Irenæus ſays, (f) that they may by degrees enlarge their " capacities, fit and accuſtom themſelves to receive God; " or, as he ſays in another place, that they may become ca- " pable of the glory of the Father, that is, capable of bear- " ing the glory and preſence of God." Sure this is not for the credit of the martyrs, that they ſhould not be fit or capable to receive God, and enjoy the glory of the Father, without employing their contemplations and devotions upon earth a thouſand years, when theſe holy perſons who riſe not till the general reſurrection, ſhall from that time be for ever with the Lord, 1 Theſſ. 4. 17. and be immediately partakers of the beatific viſion. Moreover, what is it that muſt be thus fitted and capacitated by contemplation to receive God, and to enjoy this bleſſed viſion? Is it not the ſoul? And can ſhe not as well contemplate him under the altar or the throne, or whilſt ſhe doth abide in paradiſe? Is coming down from thoſe celeſtial regions to this dull earth, the way to elevate the ſoul to heaven? Will putting on a corruptible body, a body needing plenty of earthly things, and finding pleaſure in them, be the way to quicken and invigorate her heavenly flights and aſpirations? Or, is there no true (g) friendſhip, no ingenuous converſation, to be had in paradiſe, that the ſoul muſt deſcend to earth to enjoy it? Or, is it neceſſary, as (h) Tertullian and (i) others argue, by way of retribution, " That the body which hath ſuffered, " may be rewarded in like kind;" i. e. that it may be now gratified with bodily delights, the pleaſures of the throat and palate, fine cloaths and innocent diverſions here on earth? As if a change of this vile body into the likeneſs of Chriſt's glorious body, were not a better and far more glorious reward of all its ſufferings.

Arg. 2. § II. A ſecond argument againſt this doctrine, of a proper reſurrection to reign with Chriſt a thouſand years on earth, is taken from the accurate deſcription of the reſurrection contained in the holy ſcripture. For,

1. In all the deſcriptions the Holy Ghoſt ſo largely gives us of the reſurrection, and the future judgment, in the evangeliſts, and the epiſtles, there is no mention of a firſt and ſecond reſurrection, or of any prerogative of ſome ſaints above others in it, or of any precedence of any before others, as to the reſurrection of their bodies; which might have reaſonably been expected, had this doctrine been then received in ſome of thoſe places where the thing is ſo largely and critically diſcourſed on, as to inform us twice, that the order of the reſurrection ſhall be this, That the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. 17. and then, we that are alive ſhall be changed, and that Chriſt is raiſed as the firſt-fruits, and that afterwards they that are Chriſt's ſhall be raiſed at his coming: here, I confeſs, is mention made of an order in the reſurrection; for it is ſaid, In Chriſt ſhall all be made alive, every man in his own order, 1 Cor. 15. 23. but then the order is expreſſed thus, Chriſt the firſt-fruits, afterwards they that are Chriſt's. Whereas, according to the millennial hypotheſis, the words ſhould rather have run thus, Chriſt the firſt-fruits, then the martyrs, and a thouſand years after, the reſidue of the juſt: in the epiſtle to the Theſſalonians alſo, there is no order of the reſurrection of the dead mentioned; but of them all together, and without diſtinction it is ſaid, Them that ſleep in Chriſt will God bring with him, and the dead in Chriſt ſhall riſe firſt.

In anſwer to to this argument, we have been told, that (k) " as the ſcripture ſpeaks of the reſurrection in groſs, " without diſtinguiſhing firſt and ſecond, ſo it ſpeaks of the " coming of our Saviour, without diſtinction of firſt and ſe- " cond." But this is a great overſight; for the ſcripture gives expreſs notice of Chriſt's coming ἐκ δευτέρου, a ſecond time, for the ſalvation of his ſervants, Heb. 9. 20. and of his coming again, to receive them into thoſe manſions he is gone to prepare for them, John 14. 3. There being therefore equal reaſon to expect a like diſtinction betwixt the firſt and ſecond reſurrection properly ſo called; the conſtant ſilence of the ſcriptures, as to that matter, is no ſmall prejudice againſt that hypotheſis, which doth ſuppoſe a firſt and ſecond reſurrection.

2. The ſcripture in thoſe places containeth many things which ſeem moſt plainly inconſiſtent with that doctrine; for either in thoſe places the ſcripture ſpeaketh only of the ſecond reſurrection excluſively of the firſt, and then it is not true which Mr Mead aſſerts, " That the day of judgment, " and the time of the reſurrection, includes both the Mil- " lennium and the general reſurrection;" or, that " the " ſcripture ſpeaks of the reſurrection in the groſs, without " diſtinguiſhing betwixt the firſt and ſecond;" for, if it ſpeaks only of the ſecond excluſively of the firſt, it muſt ſpeak of it diſtinctly from the firſt, or it muſt in thoſe places intend to ſpeak of both conjunctly and without diſtinction; and then what is ſaid in them muſt be applicable to them both without diſtinction.

Again, the ſcripture in thoſe places ſpeaketh many things: 1. As to the nature of the reſurrection, and the qualities of the bodies raiſed. 2. As to the efficient cauſe of the reſurrection, our Lord Jeſus. 3. As to the time of the reſurrection. 4. As to the circumſtances, and the immediate conſequences of that reſurrection, which are by no means applicable to the firſt and the particular reſurrection, ſuppoſed by the millenaries, but only to the general reſurrection, which all Chriſtians own. And,

1ſt, That which the ſcripture ſaith of the nature and the qualifications of the bodies raiſed, is this, that they ſhall be raiſed glorious, ſpiritual, immortal, and incorruptible bodies; for then this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality, 1 Cor. 15. 42. 49. then ſhall we bear the image of the heavenly Adam, or of that Lord from heaven, who ſhall change our vile bodies into the likeneſs of his glorious body, Phil. 3. 21. Then ſhall we be clothed upon with our houſe from heaven, and death ſhall be ſwallowed up in victory, 2 Cor. 5. 1. 4. Now, can a body raiſed in glory, i. e. in clarity and in ſplendor, ſhining like the ſun, and made like to Chriſt's glorious body, and like unto the angels, as they ſhall be, ſaith Chriſt, who are thought worthy of the reſurrection, have any need of all the plenty which Dr Burnet hath prepared for it on earth? Can it feed upon, or reliſh any of the banquets which God, ſaith Irenæus, and all the ancient millenaries, hath prepared for it? Can a body raiſed in power, i. e. free from all renitency, all pain and laſſitude, continue ſtill, as Dr Burnet [b. 4. c. 9. p. 206.] makes the bodies of his raiſed millenaries to do, under ſuch weakneſs of nature as "will not ſuffer them to continue long under ſtrong paſ-"ſions, or intenſeneſs of mind?" Can a ſpiritual body, free from groſſneſs and ponderoſity, from needing reſt, ſleep, cloathing, ſuſtenance, receive advantage from that univerſal plenty, [chap. 7. p. 184. p. 186.], or need thoſe goods of fortune, that external felicity, that temporal happineſs he hath provided for it upon earth? Can theſe men, raiſed with immortal and incorruptible bodies, which have already ſwallowed up death in victory, wiſh to be diſſolved, as he ſaith they will? [p. 206.]. Can the devil, when looſed, be ſo fooliſh, as to ſummon up his armies to fight againſt, and kill them who are immortal, and can die no more? Can Gog and Magog, with all their numerous hoſt, hope to prevail againſt them, or even dare to aſſault ſuch ſhining radiant bodies as they then will have? In a word, Can ſuch bodies need, or receive any further exaltation to fit them for heaven, or for their elevation into the clouds, to be for ever with the Lord? If not, why ſhould they live a thouſand years on earth after God hath thus fitted and prepared them for their habitation in the higheſt heavens? I therefore do imagine, that when the patrons of this millennial reſurrection find themſelves thus preſſed, they will aſſign to their new-raiſed inhabitants of the earth, a body capable of enjoying the good things on earth, and taking pleaſure in thoſe goods of fortune they have there provided for them, and leave their bodies to be changed after the Millennium, into the likeneſs of Chriſt's glorious body, and to ſuffer then another change into celeſtial and ſpiritual bodies, though not another reſurrection: and it ſeems neceſſary for them to admit of the forementioned abſurdities, or to admit of this hypotheſis; for when the apoſtle ſaith, The dead ſhall be raiſed incorruptible, and we ſhall be changed, their new-raiſed inhabitants muſt belong to the dead, and ſo be raiſed incorruptible, and ſo incapable of thoſe earthly goods they mention, as their reward on earth; or to the living, and then they muſt be changed. And yet the ſhift is plainly contrary to the account St Paul hath given us of the reſurrection of the body; for he expreſsly ſaith, that when this corruptible, weak, diſhonourable, earthy body ſhall be raiſed, it ſhall be raiſed in incorruption, glory, power, and be a ſpiritual body; that to the natural ſucceeds the ſpiritual body, to the earthy the heavenly body, 1 Cor. 15. 43. 44. To the body bearing the image of the earthy, the body bearing the image of the heavenly Adam. whereas this ſhift muſt infer a body raiſed not in glory, or in incorruption, not a ſpiritual and an heavenly body, and ſo muſt make theſe martyrs twice bear the image of the earthy Adam, or at leaſt at their reſurrection not to bear the image of the heavenly. Again, they who are then alive, and ſhall be changed, ſaith the apoſtle, are only thoſe who never ſlept in the grave, ver. 51. 52. Now, this cannot be true of martyrs raiſed from the dead, and ſo the change here mentioned cannot belong to them.

2*dly*, This doctrine ſeems inconſiſtent with what the ſcripture moſt plainly hath delivered concerning our Lord Jeſus, the efficient cauſe, as well as the exemplar of the reſurrection of thoſe that are Chriſt's; for he that is the author of this reſurrection, is ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανῦ, the Lord coming down from heaven, to effect it, 1 Cor. 15. 47. our Lord deſcending down ἀπ' οὐρανῦ, from the heavens, 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. The time when God ſhall give to thoſe that have been perſecuted and afflicted, reſt with the apoſtles, who, ſure, will have a ſhare in the firſt reſurrection, is the time of the revelation of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt from heaven, 2 Theſſ. 1. 7. The time of this Millennium, ſay the patrons of it, is the time of the reſtitution of all things. Now, at that time, ſaith the apoſtle Peter, our Jeſus is to be ſent down from the heavens, Acts 3. 20. 21. they being only to contain him till that time. And one would think, that if the ſaints muſt reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years, he muſt be with them on the earth; but this the patrons of the Millennium will by no means own, but look upon it as a great abſurdity. For that "Chriſt ſhould leave the right hand of his Father, "to come and paſs a thouſand years here below, living up-"on earth in an heavenly body;" this I confeſs, ſaith Dr Burnet, (l) "is a thing I never could digeſt." And (m) "I "dare not imagine," ſaith Mr Mead, "of this preſence of "Chriſt in his kingdom, that it ſhould be a viſible converſe "upon earth; for the kingdom of Chriſt ever hath, and "ſhall be regnum cœlorum, a kingdom whoſe throne and "kingly reſidence is in heaven." Here then the ſcripture-account of the reſurrection, that it ſhall be effected by the Lord Jeſus coming down from heaven, and the Millennium of the ancients, is at once rejected; for, as (n) Lactantius ſaith, "the Son of God ſhall come, and be converſant a-"mong men a thouſand years, and rule them with a righ-"teous empire: he ſhall reign with them upon earth;" ſo was this the avowed doctrine of all the ancient millenaries: for they not only did aſſert his reign on earth, but aſſigned Jeruſalem as the peculiar place of his reſidence whilſt he reigned upon it.

3*dly*, This doctrine is still more evidently repugnant to the time assigned for the resurrection of the just; for they are to be raised, saith the apostle, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, 1 Cor. 15. 52. for the trumpet shall sound, and (then) the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we that are alive, and have not slept, shall be changed. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Here we are taught, that the dead in Christ, and so the martyrs, shall not be raised till our Lord's descent from heaven; that then they shall be raised in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye; that, immediately upon their being raised, they that are then alive shall be changed. (o) St Jerom therefore said with good ground, that the apostle, by these words, cunctam primæ et secundæ resurrectionis excludit fabulam, "destroys the fable of the first and second resurrection;" by asserting, that the resurrection of all that are dead in Christ, and sleep in him, shall be performed in a moment, and in the twinkling of an eye, at the sounding of the last trump, and at the shout or voice of the last angel: which leaves no room for a whole thousand years betwixt the first and second resurrection, unless the angel should be supposed to shout, or the trump sound a thousand years. The hour cometh, saith our Lord, John 5. 28. when all that are in their tombs shall hear my voice, and shall come forth. And, sure, that must be a long hour which lasteth a full thousand years. Again, there shall be pious persons living and unchanged, when all the pious that were dead are raised; for the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive shall be changed, 1 Thess. 4. 16. 17. we that have not yet slept, saith the apostle. Place now the Millennium after the conflagration of the world, and all things in it, and where will you find these pious men alive, or how will you preserve them from those flames? (p) Dr Burnet finds a great difficulty, not common to all, as he imagines, but peculiar to his own invention, of a Millennium after the conflagration of the present earth; viz. "How Gog and Magog should get into "this new earth, the wicked being all consumed in those "flames." He is not hardy enough to say that this is "the "poetic tale of the giants," though he saith, (p. 219.), it hath great affinity with it. And therefore he produces these men, according to the philosophy of Lucretius and Mr Hobbs, (p. 220.), "from the slime of the earth, and the "heat of the sun, as brute creatures were at first:" but whence come these pious men that have not yet slept, into this new earth, is a fresh difficulty; and to this the Doctor hath yet nothing to say, for he either thought not of them, or was unwilling to take up with the Rabbinical notion, that they had eagle's wings given them to mount up into the air, whilst the earth was on fire.

4*thly*, This doctrine seems inconsistent with many circumstances of the resurrection mentioned in the holy scripture, for that speaks constantly of the resurrection of all saints, as of a resurrection not to a temporal life on earth, but to an eternal in the heavens. They shall come forth out of their tombs to the resurrection of life, John 5. 28. He that eateth and believeth in me, he that eateth my flesh, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day, chap. 6. 54. That teacheth us, that when Christ comes again, they shall be received into the heavenly mansions prepared for them, John 14. 2. 3. and 17. 24. and shall be with him where he now is; that when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, they shall appear with him in glory, Col. 3 14. that when he doth appear, they shall be like him, and see him as he is. Whereas, according to the hypothesis of the millenaries, when Christ appears, and when he comes again, they who have been his choicest and most faithful servants, shall not immediately be raised to eternal life, but first to that life which is but temporal: they shall not be received into heavenly, but into earthly mansions; they shall not be glorified with him, appear with him in glory, be like him in his glory, or see him as he is, till they have spent a thousand years on earth to fit them for those blessed mansions, and to prepare them for this beatific vision. Moreover, it is said of all the dead in Christ, of all that slept in Jesus, "that they "shall be raised first," and that then immediately we "that "are alive shall be snatched up with them in clouds to meet "the Lord in the air, and then we shall be for ever with the "Lord." Now, if this be so, surely we cannot afterwards expect to live on earth a thousand years; for, as (q) Nyssen puts the question, τί ἐστι χρεία τῆς κάτω γῆς οἷς ἡ μετάστασις ζωὴ ἐν ἐλπίσιν ἐστίν; "What need is there that they should "live below on earth, who hope thus to live in heaven," and to be ever with the Lord? Especially since these words plainly seem to speak not of a temporal, but an eternal life with Christ, not by enjoyment of him upon earth, but by translation from it to heaven? Again, when the same apostle saith, This I say, brethren, that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, neither shall corruption inherit incorruption, 1 Cor. 15. 20. and thence concludes, that the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; does he not sufficiently insinuate that we shall be raised not to enjoy an earthly, but an heavenly kingdom; and that our raised bodies being glorified, shall not consist of flesh and blood? And what then will they do with all that plenty, and that great affluence of the goods of fortune which the millenaries do so highly value? In a word, the comfort which the apostle gives the (r) Thessalonians concerning their departed friends, who had suffered much affliction, persecution, tribulation, and doubtless many of them death, for Christ's sake, is only this, that they who remained alive should not prevent them in the enjoyment of the happiness promised to the body, but the dead in Christ should rise first, and then the living should be changed; not this, that these sufferers for the sake of Christ should rise a thousand years before the rest to reign with Christ on earth, which yet is by the millenaries deemed great matter of their consolation, and so was very proper to have been mentioned there, had it been any article of Christian faith.

Arg. 3. § III. 3*dly*, This reign of Christians upon earth agrees not with the genius of Christian faith, or with the nature of Chriſtian promiſes, or with that frame and temper of ſpirit it requires from the profeſſors of Chriſtianity. For,

1. The Chriſtian is repreſented as one who is entirely dead to the world, and to the things of the world; one who is not to love it, or the things of it, who is to uſe it as if he uſed it not, as one whoſe converſation is in heaven, Phil. 3. 19. and it is made the character of one who is an enemy to the croſs of Chriſt, that he minds earthly things; whereas if this be a true goſpel-promiſe made to Chriſtians for their conſolation and encouragement, under the troubles of this preſent world, that they ſhall, after this life is ended, live again on earth a life of indolence, and peace, and plenty in the enjoyment of the goods of fortune: if this be one great part of the reward which God hath promiſed to thoſe that ſuffer for his name, ſure it becomes them to have their minds and their affections ſet upon it, to live in expectation of it, and to deſire to enjoy theſe goods of fortune, this peace and plenty upon earth; and it would rather be the character of thoſe who bear the croſs, in proſpect of theſe bleſſings, to mind earthly things. That, ſaith St Paul, which makes the ſufferings of this preſent world ſo light unto us, is this conſideration, that we look not at the things which are ſeen, but which are not ſeen, not at things temporal but eternal, 2 Cor. 4. 17. 18. even at an houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, chap. 5. 1. Whereas if this be one of the great and precious promiſes contained in the goſpel, and made for the encouragement of Chriſtians to ſuffer for Chriſt's ſake, they muſt then look not only at things eternal, but things temporal; or for a temporal houſe on earth, as well as one eternal in the heavens, for their ſuppoſed reign on earth will be but temporal.

Again, the exhortation of our Lord, in his admirable ſermon on the mount, runs thus: Lay not up for yourſelves treaſures upon earth, but lay up treaſures in heaven: for where your treaſure is, there will your hearts be alſo, Matth. 6. 19. 20. 21. And again, Provide yourſelves bags that wax not old, a treaſure in the heavens that faileth not, Luke 12. 33. 34. St Paul exhorts all that are riſen with Chriſt, to ſet their hearts and their affections not on things on the earth, but on things above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God, Col. 3. 1. 2. 3. and that becauſe they are dead with Chriſt unto theſe worldly things, and their life is hid with Chriſt in God; ſo that when Chriſt, who is their life, ſhall appear, they ſhall appear with him in glory. And yet if our Lord Chriſt, in that very ſermon, as the millenaries ſuppoſe, encouraged them to ſuffer with patience and meekneſs upon this conſideration, that they ſhould inherit the earth, and had pronounced them bleſſed upon this account, ſurely they might have ſuffered upon this very proſpect of laying up for themſelves treaſures upon earth in this Millennium, and might have had their hearts and affections placed upon them; for wherefore are they bid to lay up treaſures in heaven, and to ſet their affections on things above, but becauſe theſe are the bleſſings promiſed as the reward of Chriſtian piety and patience? if then theſe bleſſings to be enjoyed on earth after the reſurrection, be one great part of the reward which God hath promiſed to the piety and patience of the Chriſtian, what reaſon can be given why he ſhould not ſeek, and ſet his heart upon them alſo? If it be ſo great a privilege to have a part in the firſt reſurrection, to enjoy this indolence, peace, and plenty upon earth, that the apoſtle ſtyles them bleſſed who have a part in it, ſhould they not ſeek and ſet their hearts upon that very thing in which their happineſs conſiſts? And yet the comfort which our Lord and his apoſtles do afford thoſe Chriſtian ſufferers, is only this, that great is their reward in heaven, Matth. 5. 12. Luke 6. 23. that when they are tried, they ſhall receive a crown of glory, Jam. 1. 12. and that they have in heaven a better and a more enduring ſubſtance, Heb. 10. 34. which as it placeth the reward and comfort of Chriſt's ſuffering members not on earth, but in the heavens, and ſo gives us juſt reaſon to conclude our Lord, and his apoſtles, knew nothing of this reign on earth, or thought it no great matter of their conſolation; ſo did it give occaſion to the ancients to conclude thus, (a) "If the inheritance of martyrs be in "heaven, their reign on earth can be no better than a "fable."

Moreover, it is evident, that all the ancient patrons of the Millennium held that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the patriarchs and prophets were to be ſharers with the Chriſtians in this reign on earth, and that then would the promiſed Canaan be made good to them: whereas the apoſtle plainly tells us, that they expected no reward on earth, nor did they mind that Canaan where they dwelt, but only waited for an heavenly country: They confeſſed, ſaith the apoſtle, that they were ſtrangers and pilgrims upon earth, that they were not mindful of that country whence they came out, but ſought a better country, that is, an heavenly, Heb. 11. 13. 16. Since then theſe holy patriarchs, and choice friends of God, not only ſought not after, but even diſdained any inheritance on earth; ſeeing the only country they did expect and look for was an heavenly country; ſeeing this only was the inheritance God, as their God, provided for them, and therefore that only which they were to enjoy at their reſurrection, when they completely were to be made, and treated as the ſons of God; ſurely in vain muſt Chriſtians hope for any reign on earth with them, who profeſſing themſelves pilgrims and ſtrangers in it, declared they were not mindful of ſuch an habitation in the land of Canaan, and who are at the reſurrection to be made like the angels, and to enjoy not any earthly, but that heavenly country which God hath graciouſly prepared for them.

In a word, to foretel times of peace and plenty to ſucceeding ages, to raiſe the expectation of a people whoſe backs are bowed down, and have been long enſlaved and afflicted, is very ſuitable to this divine œconomy; but to promiſe plenty, and the goods of fortune, as the reward of Chriſtian piety and patience, and let them know that if they ſuffer for the ſake of Chriſt, he will be ſure to raiſe them up to plentiful enjoyments of the goods of fortune, this is too mean, too much beneath the ſublime ſpirit of Chriſtianity, to be one of her great and precious promiſes.

	Pſal. xxii.

The year after CHRIST.
	Matth. xxviii. Mark xvi. Luke xxiv. John xx.	On the third day, the next after the Jewiſh Sabbath, (April 5.) Chriſt riſeth from the dead: his reſurrection is declared by angels, to the women that came to the ſepulchre. Chriſt firſt appeareth to Mary Magdalen, and afterwards to his diſciples, and dineth with them.
33.	Acts i.	Chriſt bringeth his apoſtles to Mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jeruſalem the ſending down of the Holy Ghoſt.
	Matth. xxviii.	Sends them to teach and baptize all nations, and bleſſes them; and while they behold, he is taken up, and a cloud receives him out of their ſight. After his aſcenſion, the diſciples are warned by two angels to depart, and to ſet their minds upon his ſecond coming: they accordingly return, and giving themſelves to prayer, chuſe Matthias to be an apoſtle in the place of Judas.
	Acts ii.	On the day of Pentecoſt, (May 24.) the Holy Ghoſt deſcendeth on the apoſtles, in the form of cloven tongues, like as of fire, and enableth them to ſpeak all languages. Peter, the ſame day, preacheth Chriſt and the reſurrection, and about 3000 believers are added to the church.
	Acts iii.	Peter, by faith in Chriſt's name, healeth a lame man.
	iv.	The rulers of the Jews, offended at Peter's ſermon, and his miraculous cure of the lame man, caſt both him and John into priſon: upon their examination, they boldly avouch the lame man to be healed by the name of Jeſus, and that by the ſame Jeſus we muſt be eternally ſaved. After this, the Jews forbid them to ſpeak any more in that name: but the apoſtles anſwer, that it is fit they ſhould obey God, rather than men. They are threatened, and let go.
	v. 1.	Ananias and Sapphira, for their hypocriſy, are ſuddenly ſtruck dead.
	17.	The apoſtles are again caſt into priſon by the high prieſt; but an angel ſets them at liberty, and bids them preach the goſpel to the people without fear: being taken again teaching in the temple, they are brought before the council, where, by the advice of Gamaliel a Phariſee, and a doctor of the law, they are delivered.
34.	vi.	The number of believers increaſing at Jeruſalem, the apoſtles ordain ſeven deacons, who ſhould diſtribute the alms of the whole church to the widows, and poorer ſort of believers.
	vii.	Stephen, one of theſe deacons, having confounded ſome that diſputed with him, is by them falſely accuſed of blaſphemy, and brought before the council, where he reprehends their rebellion, and murdering of Chriſt; whereupon they caſt him out of the city, and ſtone him; he, in the mean time, praying for them.
	viii.	A great perſecution of the church at Jeruſalem, follows after the death of the firſt martyr Stephen.
	5.	Philip, one of the ſeven deacons, preacheth at Samaria, and converteth many; working miracles, and healing the ſick.
		Simon the ſorcerer, ſeeing the wonders that are done by Philip, believeth, and is baptized.
	15.	The apoſtles at Jeruſalem, hearing that Samaria had received the faith, ſend thither Peter and John, to confirm and enlarge the church. The apoſtles, by prayer, and impoſition of hands, confer the Holy Ghoſt on all believers. Simon Magus offers them money, that he may receive power of conferring the ſame; whoſe impiety is ſharply reproved by Peter.
		Having completed their miniſtry in thoſe parts, they return to Jeruſalem.
	26.	An angel ſendeth Philip to teach and baptize the Æthiopian eunuch.
35.	xi. 1.	Saul, a violent perſecutor of all that call on the name of Jeſus, and one who conſented to the death of Stephen, goes now towards Damaſcus, with commiſſion from the high prieſt, and the council, to apprehend all Chriſtians in thoſe parts, and to bring them bound to Jeruſalem: on the way, he is miraculouſly converted by a voice from heaven; and three days after, baptized by Ananias at Damaſcus, where he preacheth the goſpel of Chriſt with great boldneſs, to the aſtoniſhment of thoſe that knew upon what deſign he was ſent thither.
38.	23.	Saul, having preached the goſpel at Damaſcus a long time, the Jews lay wait to kill
	2 Cor. xi. 32. Gal. i. 18.	him; but he eſcapeth from thence, and comes to Jeruſalem; there he ſees Peter, and James the brother of our Lord, and abides with them fifteen days: here he ſpeaks boldly in the name of Jeſus, and diſputes with the Grecians, or rather Jews that uſed the Greek tongue. Theſe alſo conſult how they may kill him.

The year after CHRIST.
	Acts xxii. 17.	While Saul prays in the temple, he is in a trance, and the Lord appears unto him, and bids him depart from Jeruſalem, becauſe they will not receive his teſtimony; adding, that he will ſend him to the Gentiles.
	Acts ix. 30.	Saul, leaving Jeruſalem, goes to his own country Tarſus, and from thence travels into Syria and Cilicia.
38.	Gal. i. 21.
	Acts ix. 32. 36.	Peter viſits the churches of Judæa, Galilee, and Samaria, &c. At Lydda he cureth Æneas of the palſy, and at Joppa reſtoreth Tabitha to life.
41.	x.	At Cæſarea, Cornelius a Centurion, by prayer and alms, finds favour in the ſight of God, and is commanded by an angel to ſend for Peter, now at Joppa. God, by a viſion, teacheth Peter not to deſpiſe the Gentiles; and being ſent for by Cornelius, goes and preacheth Chriſt to him, and a great company that were met at his houſe: while Peter preacheth, the Holy Ghoſt falls upon them all, and immediately the apoſtle baptizeth them.
	xi.	Peter, at his return to Jeruſalem, is accuſed by thoſe of the circumciſion, for converſing with the Gentiles; but he declares to them his viſion, and the whole matter concerning Cornelius; and they glorify God, for granting to the Gentiles alſo repentance unto life.
		The believers, who, ever ſince the martyrdom of Stephen, and the perſecution thereupon enſuing, had been diſperſed throughout all Phœnice and Cyprus, come now to Antioch, and preach the goſpel to the Greeks there, having before preached to none but the Jews. The church at Jeruſalem underſtanding this, and that the number of believers increaſed exceedingly, ſends Barnabas thither to confirm them: he goes to Tarſus, and takes Saul along with him to Antioch, where they continue a whole year, converting multitudes to the faith. Here the diſciples were firſt called Chriſtians.
44.	xii.	About this time, James the brother of John is beheaded, by the command of Herod Agrippa: he alſo impriſoneth Peter, whom an angel delivers, upon the prayers of the church. This ſame Herod, not long after, ſpeaking to the people at Cæſarea, ſome of them cry out, It is the voice of God, and not of man; and immediately an angel of the Lord ſmites him, becauſe he gave not the glory to God, and he is eaten of worms, and dieth.
45.	xiii.	Barnabas and Saul ſet forward in their preaching of the goſpel: they plant the Chriſtian faith in Seleucia, Cyprus, and other places. At Paphos they preach the goſpel to Sergius Paulus, governor of that country; Elymas the ſorcerer, withſtanding them, and endeavouring to turn away Sergius from the faith, is, at Saul's rebuke, ſtruck blind. From this time Saul is always called by his new name, Paul: he preacheth at Antioch; the Gentiles believe, but the Jews gainſay and blaſpheme; whereupon he and his aſſiſtants turn to the Gentiles, and come to Iconium.
46.	xiv.	At Iconium they are perſecuted, and ready to be ſtoned; from hence they fly to Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia. At Lyſtra, Paul healing a cripple, the multitude cry out, that the gods are come down; and call Barnabas, Jupiter, and Paul, Mercurius; and would have ſacrificed to them, had not the apoſtles, with cloaths rent, run in among them, and aſſured them, that they were men like themſelves. Soon after there came Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who excite the people againſt them. Paul is by the furious multitude ſtoned, and drawn out of the city, as dead; but whilſt the diſciples ſtand about him, he riſeth up, and the next day departs with Barnabas to Derbe.
	2 Cor. xi. 5.
	2 Cor. xii. 2.	In this year, perhaps at this very time, Paul was caught up into the third heaven, and heard unſpeakable words, fourteen years before he wrote his ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians.
	2 Tim. i. 2. 5.	About this time Timothy though a child, with his mother Eunice, and his grandmother Lois, embrace the Chriſtian faith preached by Paul.
52.	Acts xv.	Certain judaizing Chriſtians come from Judea to Antioch, and teach, that the Gentiles ought to be circumciſed, and obſerve the law of Moſes: theſe Paul and Barnabas oppoſe; and a council is held by the apoſtle and others at Jeruſalem, to determine this controverſy. The decrees of the ſynod are ſent to the churches.
53.	36.	Paul and Barnabas, thinking to viſit the churches together, fall at ſtrife, and part aſunder: Barnabas and Mark go into Cyprus; Paul and Silas, into Syria and Cilicia.
	xvi.	Paul coming to Derbe, finds there Timothy, whom (becauſe his mother was a believing Jew, though his father a Gentile) he cauſed to be circumciſed, and takes along with him.

He

The year after CHRIST.
53.		He is by a viſion, admoniſhed to go into Macedonia: coming to Philippi, the chief city of that part of Macedonia, he converts Lydia; caſteth out of a certain maid-ſervant a ſpirit of divination, whoſe maſter loſing a conſiderable gain thereby, brings Paul and Silas before the magiſtrates: theſe cauſe them to be whipt, and impriſoned; but at midnight, Paul and Silas ſinging pſalms, the doors of the priſon fly open, and their bonds are looſed: the jailor, ready to kill himſelf, is converted to the faith, and baptized the ſame night, with his whole family. Next day the magiſtrates come themſelves, and pray them to depart the city.
54.	Acts xvii.	From Philippi, Paul takes his journey through Amphipolis and Apollonia, and comes to Theſſalonica, where he finds a ſynagogue of the Jews, there he preacheth three Sabbath-days; ſome believe, others perſecute him: leaving Theſſalonica, he comes to Beræa, and ſoon after arrives at Athens, diſputes with the philoſophers, and declares unto them, that UNKNOWN GOD whom they had ignorantly worſhipped. He converts Dionyſius the Areopagite, and thence paſſeth to Corinth.
55.	xviii.	Paul at Corinth meets with Aquila and Priſcilla, not long before baniſhed from Rome by the decree of Claudius. Here he continues a year and ſix months, and thence writes to the Theſſalonians.
	18.	Paul is accuſed by the Jews, and brought before Gallio, proconſul of Achaia, who refuſeth to be a judge in a controverſy about religion, and ſo drives them away from the judgment-ſeat.
56.		Paul departs from Corinth, and paſſeth to Epheſus; thence he ſets out towards Jeruſalem, that he may be at the feaſt; he lands at Cæſarea, goes down to Antioch, and comes into the regions of Galatia and Phrygia, confirming the diſciples in all thoſe places.
57.	xix.	Paul returns to Epheſus, diſputes daily in the ſchool of Tyrannus, and continues
58.		preaching there, and in the parts thereabouts. He writes his epiſtle to the Galatians.
60.		At Epheſus, Demetrius a ſilverſmith, jealous of his gain, raiſeth a tumult againſt Paul, which is appeaſed by the town-clerk.
	1 Cor. i. 11. xvi. 8.	About this time a ſchiſm ariſeth in the church of Corinth, which cauſeth Paul (now in or about Epheſus) to write his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians.
	Acts xx.	Paul departs from Epheſus, and comes into Macedonia, and gathers a contribution for
	2 Cor. viii. 1. 2. 6. 19.	the relief of the ſaints at Jeruſalem.
	1 Cor. xvi. 5.	The apoſtle having learned from Titus the ſucceſs of his firſt, writes now his ſecond epiſtle to the Corinthians: out of Macedonia he goes into Greece, and comes to Corinth, where he writes his epiſtle to the Romans.
	Acts xx. 3. 4.	Paul purpoſing to go directly from thence into Syria, that he may carry the collections to Jeruſalem, the Jews lay wait for him; he underſtanding this, thinks it beſt to return into Macedonia the ſame way he came, and thence to paſs into Aſia.
	6.	After the days of unleavened bread, Paul ſails from Philippi, and comes to Troas; there he reſtores Eutychus to life. Having paſſed through ſeveral cities of Greece, he arrives at Miletus, from thence he ſends to call the elders of the church of Epheſus, whom he earneſtly exhorts to the performance of their duty.
	xxi.	Paul comes to Jeruſalem, is apprehended in the temple, and ſecured in the caſtle; he claimeth the privilege of a Roman, and eſcapeth ſcourging.
	xxii. xxiii.	Paul pleadeth his cauſe before Ananias the high prieſt. The chief captain, underſtanding that above forty Jews had bound themſelves under a curſe, neither to eat nor drink till they had killed him, ſends him to Felix the governor of the province, by whom he is impriſoned at Cæſarea.
62.	xxiv.	Paul is accuſed before Felix, by Tertullus the orator: Felix goes out of his office, and, to gratify the Jews, leaves Paul in priſon. Portius Feſtus ſucceeds him in the government.
	xxv.	The Jews come to Cæſarea, and accuſe Paul before Feſtus. He anſwers for himſelf, and appeals to Cæſar. King Agrippa comes to Cæſarea, and Feſtus opens the matter to him.
63.	xxvi.	Paul makes his defence in the preſence of Agrippa, who thereby is almoſt perſuaded to be a Chriſtian; and the whole company pronounce him innocent.
	xxviii.	Paul comes to Rome, is a priſoner at large, and preacheth there two years.

Here ends the hiſtory of the Acts of the apoſtles, written by St Luke, St Paul's beloved companion in his travels.

1. ABYLENE is one of the four tetrarchies, mentioned Luke 3. 1. It fell, ſay St Luke and Joſephus, (a) to the ſhare of Lyſanias: It was ſo named from the city Abyla in Cœloſyria, mentioned by (b) Pliny, and from the tetrarch of it bore his name; for, ſaith Ptolemy, Ἄβιλα ἐπικληθεῖσα Λυσανίου, "Abila "bears the name of Lyſanias."

2. ACHAIA, in the largeſt ſenſe, comprehends Greece, properly ſo called, and ſo is bounded on the weſt by Epirus, on the eaſt by the Ægean ſea, on the north by Macedonia, on the ſouth by Peloponneſus; and ſo it ſeems to ſignify, when St Paul, according to the Roman acceptation, mentions all the regions of Achaia, and directs his ſecond epiſtle to all the ſaints in Achaia, 2 Cor. 11. 10. Thus, what is Achaia, Acts 19. 21. is Hellas, i. e. Greece, Acts 20. 2. and ſo Mela ſpeaks of it. 2dly, Achaia, ſtrictly ſo called, is the northern region of Peloponneſus, bounded on the north by the gulf of Corinth, on the ſouth with Arcadia, on the eaſt with Sycionia, and, on the weſt, with the Ionian ſea.

3. ACELDAMA was a place without the ſouth wall of Jeruſalem, beyond the river of Siloam, and was called the Potter's Field, Matth. 27. 7. 10. becauſe they dug thence the earth of which they made their pots; and the Fuller's Field, becauſe they dried their cloth there; but being afterwards bought by that money by which the high prieſt and rulers of the Jews purchaſed the blood of the holy Jeſus; it was, by the providence of God ſo ordering it, called Aceldama, that is, the field of blood, Acts 1. 19. Matth. 27. 7. 8.

4. ADRAMYTTIUM (mentioned Acts 27. 2. where it is ſaid, that St Paul entered into a ſhip of Adramyttium) is, by (c) St Jerom, and others, ſaid to be a city of Egypt, built by Alexander M. as a monument of his triumphs, at the Cannobic mouth of the river Nile, from which it received its water, and is, by Livy, the old Etymologus, and Phavorinus, made to be (d) the ſame with Thebes; but it was rather Adramyttium in Myſia, mentioned by Strabo, l. 13. p. 417. by Pliny, l. 5. c. 30. p. 298. and by Mela, l. 1. c. 18. l. 17. For in this ſhip, St Paul and his company ſail from Cæſarea to Myra in Lycia, the direct way to Adramyttium in Myſia, ver. 5. whither ſhe being bound, and not to Italy, they there quit her, and finding a ſhip of Alexandria ſailing in to Italy, went aboard her, ver. 6.

5. ADRIA is mentioned Acts 27. 27. where St Paul ſaith, that they were toſſed in Adria: he ſaith, not in the Adriatic gulf, which ends with the Illyrican ſea, but in the Adriatic ſea, which, ſaith Heſychius, is the ſame with the Ionian ſea: and therefore to the queſtion, How St Paul's ſhip, which was near to Malta, and ſo either in the Lybian, or Sicilian ſea, could be in the Adriatic? it is well anſwered, That not only the Ionian, but even the Sicilian ſea, and part of that which waſheth upon Crete, was called the Adriatic. Thus, Ptolemy ſaith, that Sicily was bounded on the eaſt, (e) ὑπὸ τῦ Ἀδρίε, by the Adriatic; and that Crete was compaſſed on the weſt, (f) ὑπὸ τῦ Ἀδριατικῦ πελάγυς, by the Adriatic ſea: and (g) Strabo ſaith, that the Ionian gulf μέρος ἐστὶ τῦ νῦν Ἀδρίε λεγομένυ, is a part of that which in his time was called the Adriatic ſea.

6. ÆNON, or ENON, ſignifies the place of ſprings, which made it a convenient place for St John's baptiſm, John 3. 23. It is uncertain where it was, whether in Galilee, or Judæa, or Samaria, where Lûbin places it, viz. in the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, within Jordan.

7. ALEXANDRIA, that noble mart, whence merchandiſes were carried through all the world, was, after the deſtruction of Carthage, the chief city of the world, next to Rome, and was therefore called emphatically, (h) πόλις, as that was called urbs; and Athens Ἄστυ. The Ptolomys of Egypt chuſing it as their ſeat, beautified it to that degree, that it gave place to Rome only; and the Romans, when they had taken it, were careful to preſerve its ſplendor, divers emperors adding new ornaments to it, and confirming its privileges. It was a large city, ſaith (i) Joſephus, in length thirty furlongs, in breadth ten, which provided Rome with four months corn; and paid as much tribute to it in a month as Jeruſalem did in a year. Here was a celebrated academy, which bred famous phyſicians and philoſophers, as Philo the Jew, and hiſtorians; and a great library, collected by Ptolemy Philadelphus, containing 500000 volumes, and conſumed in the wars betwixt Cæſar and Pompey. Near to it is the iſland Pharos, where ſome deceitful Jews ſhewed J. Martyr the remains of the cells where the LXXII interpreters tranſlated the Hebrew Bible into Greek apart, and yet in the ſame words; of which ſee the preface to St Matthew. Here dwelt the Jews in vaſt numbers; Alexander M. for the ſervice they did him in his wars, permitting them to dwell there, and giving them equal privileges with the Gentiles. Here they had many ſynagogues, a famous cathedral of ſeventy ſtalls, and afterwards a temple built by Onias; but they found the Alexandrians their conſtant enemies, they cruelly murdering many thouſands of them in the time of Caius, of which Philo gives a large account in his embaſſy to him; and 50,000 of them in the time of Nero, ſaith Joſephus, de bell. Jud. l. 2. c. 56.

8. ÆTHIOPIA is only mentioned in the hiſtory of the baptiſm of the Eunuch, Acts 8. 27. where I have ſhewed the evangeliſt ſpeaks not of Æthiopia in Arabia, where the Queen of Sheba dwelt, but of Æthiopia in Africa, under Egypt, where Candace had been long the name of their queens; whence (k) Strabo makes mention of a Candace, ἡ καθ' ἡμᾶς ἦρξε τῶν Αἰθιόπων, who, in his time, was queen of Æthiopia, and (l) Dio of the ſame Candace living in Æthiopia under Ægypt. See the note on Acts 8. 27.

9. AMPHIPOLIS, mentioned Acts 17. 1. is a city of Macedonia, in the confines of Thrace, ſo called, ſaith (m) Thucydides, becauſe the river compaſſeth it about. Suidas, who places it, as others do, in Thracia, ſays it was alſo formerly called the Nine Ways. See Mr Wells's geogr. p. 134. and Stephanus de urbibus.

10. ANTIOCHIA, the metropolis of Syria, was built, ſay ſome, by Antiochus Epiphanes, ſay others, by Seleucus Nicanor, the firſt king of Syria after Alexander M. in memory of his father Antiochus, and was (n) the royal ſeat of the kings of Syria, or the place where their palace was: for power and dignity, ſaith (o) Strabo, it is not much inferior to Seleucia, or Alexandria: it was, ſaith (p) Joſephus, the third great city of all that belonged to the Roman provinces; it was called Antiocha apud Daphnem, near Daphne, i. e. the village where her temple was, to diſtinguiſh it from the other fourteen, mentioned by Stephanus de urbibus, and by Euſtathius in Dionyſ. p. 170. or, as others, and among them Appianus in Syriacis, ſixteen cities in Syria, and elſewhere, which bore that name. It was celebrated among the Jews, for the jus civitatis, which Seleucus Nicanor had given to them in that city, with the Grecians and Macedonians, and which, ſaith (q) Joſephus, they ſtill retained; and for the wars of the Maccabæans with thoſe kings. Among Chriſtians, for being the place where they firſt received that name, and where both St Luke and Theophilus were born, and inhabited. There was alſo another Antioch in Piſidia, mentioned Acts 13. 14.

11. ANTIPATRIS; this place was formely called Capharſalama, 1 Maccab. 7. 31. and was of little repute till it was rebuilt by Herod in the plain of Capharzaba, which, ſaith (r) Joſephus, was watery, and fit for plants, with a river, and a grove compaſſing the city; it was eighteen miles from Jeruſalem, and in the way to Cæſarea Paleſtinæ, Acts 23. 31. and within the borders of Samaria, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh.

12. APOLLONIA was a city of Macedonia, lying betwixt Amphipolis and Theſſalonica: for, ſaith St Luke, "When we had paſſed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, we "came to Theſſalonica." Geographers ſay there were 14 cities, and two iſlands of that name, and Stephanus reckons 25.

13. ARABIA is only mentioned by St Paul, ſaying, that, after his converſion, he went firſt into Arabia, Gal. 1. 17. where ſome make him to have ſtaid three years, without any buſineſs he did there, that they know of, and without any ground; for both the deſign of St Paul, which was to prove, that he received not his goſpel from man, but from the immediate revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; and his declaration, that he preached firſt at Damaſcus, and then at Jeruſalem, Acts 26. 20. ſeem to make it no improbable conjecture, that as Chriſt, after his baptiſm, went immediately into the wilderneſs of Judæa, ſo did St Paul, after his baptiſm, go into Arabia Deſerta, where he received his knowledge of that goſpel, which he preached by revelation from Chriſt Jeſus, and thence returning to Damaſcus, Gal. 1. 17. he ſtraightway preached Chriſt at Damaſcus, Acts 9. 20. and ſo continued to do many days, or a conſiderable time, ver. 23. We read alſo of Cretes and Arabians, Acts 2 11. where, by Cretes, ſome think we are not to underſtand the inhabitants of Crete, that iſland being far from Arabia, but the Cherithim, a Philiſtine nation and country, rendered Κρῆτες by the Septuagint, Ezek. 25. 16. Zeph. 2. 5. 6. But Lybia and Rome, mentioned ver. 10. were at a greater diſtance. The Arabians were anciently called Iſhmaelites and Hagarens, the firſt from Iſhmael the ſon of Hagar, the ſecond from Mount Hagar in Arabia. See note on Gal. 4. 25. This large country, reaching from Euphrates to Egypt, was divided into three parts; Arabia Deſerta, ſo called, probably from the word Araba, which ſignifies deſert, which lay full eaſt of Judæa, and is called by (s) Strabo, Schenitis, by reaſon of the tents in which that wandering nation dwelt; and the inhabitants of it are in ſcripture called the men of the eaſt, Gen. 25. 6. Judg. 6. 3. having Syria on the weſt, Meſopotamia on the north, Arabia Felix on the eaſt, and Petræa on the ſouth. 2. Petræa, ſo called from the rockineſs of it, or from the ſtrong city Petra, built on a rock, whence the Soldans keep their treaſure in it; and in this Arabia was Mount Sinai, where the law was given. 2*dly*, It hath Paleſtine and Arabia Deſerta on the north, on the eaſt and ſouth Arabia Felix, on the weſt part of Egypt and the Arabian gulf. 3*dly*, Arabia Felix, lying betwixt the Perſian gulf and the Red ſea, a fertile country, producing laudanum, myrrh, caſſia, and many other drugs and ſpices, celebrated on that account not only by the poets, (ſee Lloyd's dictionary), but by Dionyſius P. and (t) Euſtathius upon him, by Strabo, Pliny, Herodotus, and Q. Curtius; and that part of it eſpecially, ſaith Strabo, p. 535. which is the moſt happy nation of the Sabæans, and where is gold which the Arabian magi brought with them when they came to Chriſt. See the note on Matth. 2. 1.

14. ASIA, as it is mentioned by ancient geographers, is one of the largeſt diviſions of the world into three parts; but, in the New Teſtament, it is always taken for Aſia Minor only, as it contains the Proconſular Aſia, conſiſting of four regions, of Phrygia, Myſia, Caria, and Lydia, ſaith (u) Cicero; of which ſee Biſhop Uſher in his treatiſe of the Leſſer Aſia. In this Proconſular Aſia were the ſeven churches, mentioned in the Revelations, chap. 2. & 3.

15. ASSOS, Acts 20. 13. is a town in Troas; for St Paul went from Troas to it. It is memorable, ſaith (x) Pliny, for the lapis ſarcophagus, which burns up and conſumes fleſh; of which ſee Voſſius in P. Melam, p. 88. 89. Beſides this, there ſeems to have been another Aſſos in Crete, of which ſee the note on Acts 27. 13.

16. ATHENS was a city of Greece, properly ſo called, and of the ſubdiviſion of it named Achaia. It was ſo called from Ἀθήνη, i. e. Minerva, to whom it was conſecrated. In it was a celebrated academy, which, ſaith (y) Cornelius N. for antiquity, humanity, and learning, made it excel all the cities of the world; whoſe inhabitants, ſaith (z) Cicero, were the inventors of all learning, the men who invented and perfected eloquence, and from whom humanity, learning, religion, and laws were diſperſed through the whole world; but then, to qualify theſe commendations, he adds, They only knew what was right, but would not do it; they were, ſaith (a) Plutarch, ſuſpicious, and vain-glorious; they were, ſaith the apoſtle, δεισιδαιμονίστερους, very ſuperſtitious, and great worſhippers of idols, and ſo were vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkened. See the note on Acts 17. 16.—22. and Dr Hammond there, and Lloyd in voce.

17. ATTALIA was a city of Pamphylia, built by King Attalus, whence St Paul goes from Perga in Pamphylia to it, Acts 14. 25. It was a ſea-port, and the chief reſidence of the præfect. Strabo, l. 14. p. 459.

18. AZOTUS, the Aſhdod of the Philiſtines, where the ark of God triumphed over their Dagon, 1 Sam. 5. 2. and where Jonathan (b) having routed the army of Apollonius, burnt both their god and their temple, and all who fled to it for refuge. It lay about thirty miles diſtant from Gaza toward Joppa, ſo that the angel, when he caught up Philip, Acts 8. 40. carried him ſo many miles. It was in the tribe of Dan, and lay in the middle betwixt Acaron and Geth.

1. BABYLON. By Babylon, the Jews underſtand not only Chaldæa, but alſo Meſopotamia, Aſſyria, and even all thoſe kingdoms to which they were carried in the Babylonian captivity; and for this they have ground from the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, which extend that name to the whole empire of Babylon; as when the deſtruction of Babylon is repreſented as the deſtruction ὅλης τῆς οἰκουμένης, of the whole empire, Iſ. 12. 9. 11. and from the uſe of the word among the Heathens; for Pliny ſaith, Babylon, of the Chaldaic nation, had long the eminency over the whole world, (c) "on which account the reſt of Me-"ſopotamia and Aſſyria was reckoned a part of it." I have ſhewed, note on 1 Pet. 5. 13. that, according to the fathers, the name of Babylon was given to Rome by St Peter, and, according to the ſame fathers, the name of (d) Myſtical Babylon was given to her alſo, partly for her greatneſs, pride, and oppreſſion of God's people, and partly for her reſemblance of it in idolatry, that kingdom ſo fully repreſenting the idolatry of the church of Rome in the deſcription given of it in the ſixth chapter of Baruch, that ſcarce any real difference betwixt them can be obſerved.

2. BERÆA, mentioned Acts 17. 10. is a city of Macedonia; (e) a great and populous city, ſaith Lucian. This was the city to which Paul and Silas fled from Theſſalonica, and where they found a ſynagogue of the beſt-natured Jews and proſelytes they met with; for they received the word with all readineſs, and examined it by the beſt teſt of truth, the ſcriptures; and ſo the converts there were many of both ſorts, ver. 11. 12.

3. BITHYNIA is a region of Aſia Minor, (f) bounded on the north with the Euxine ſea, on the ſouth with Phrygia, on the weſt with the Propontis, on the eaſt with Galatia. It was anciently called Bebraica, and Mygdonia, ſay (g) Servius, Solinus, and Mart. Capella, and afterwards Bithynia, from Bithynus the king of it, ſay moſt geographers; from Bethen, the belly or interior parts, ſaith Bochart, both (h) Pliny and Mela repreſenting them as poſſeſſing the inward parts of that region only. The old geographer, publiſhed by Gothofred, ſtyles them (i) the greateſt and moſt happy nation, in which the firſt general council of Nice was held.

4. BETH-HABBARA ſignifies a place of paſſage. It was a water diſtinct from Jordan, and removed ſomewhat from it, John 1. 28. 10. 40. to which men paſſed over Jordan; the town was out of the precincts of Judea, in the Scythopolitan country, where the Jews dwelt among the Syro-Grecians, and was overagainſt Galilee. So Dr Lightfoot, overagainſt Jericho, Joſh. 3. 16.

5. BETHANY took its name from a tract of ground ſo called from Athene, which ſignifies the dates of palm-trees, which grew there plentifully. The town of Bethany, where Lazarus dwelt, and where he was raiſed from the dead, was fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, John 11. 8.; but the tract of ground that bore that name reached within eight furlongs of Jeruſalem, it being only a Sabbath-day's journey from it, Luke 24. 50. Acts 1. 12.; and then began the tract called Bethphage, from the phagi, i. e. the green figs, which grew upon it, which ran along ſo near to Jeruſalem, that the utmoſt ſtreet within the walls was called by that name. St Jerom ſaith there was villula, a little village there, of the ſame name.

6. BETHLEHEM, the houſe of bread, was the place where Chriſt, the Bread of Life, was born, as the Jeruſalem Gemariſts confeſs. It was a city in the time of Boaz; for he ſtyles it the city of his people, Ruth 3. 11. and goes up to the gates of it, chap 4. 1. It was a city fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. 11. 6. It is called David's city, 1 Sam. 20. 6. 29. and therefore, when every tribe and family went up to their reſpective cities to be taxed, Luke 2. 3. Joſeph goes up to this city of David, ver. 4. Though therefore it be called by the Jews κώμη, a town or village, John 7. 42. that only ſignifies, that, being one of the leaſt cities, it might comparatively be called ſo, as Nain is by Joſephus, vid. Nain; and the Hebrew, עיר, a city, is often rendered by the Seventy κώμη, where our tranſlation ſpeaks of cities, as Joſh. 10. 37. 15. 9. 1 Chron. 27. 25. Iſ. 42. 11. it might be after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, a village, as it is twice called by (k) Juſtin M. In St Jerom it is ſometimes a city, and ſometimes a village; but then that he ſtyles it only comparatively a village, may be gathered from his (l) own words on Micah 5. 2.

7. BETHESDA, the pool of Bethesda, is the ſame with the pool of Siloam, of which ſee there, and note on John 5. (a)(b). It was a pool in Jeruſalem, ſaith St Jerom, and had the name προβατικὴ, the ſheep-pool, from the ſacrifices waſhed there by the prieſts; he adds, that "there is yet a lake there (m) whoſe waters are very red, "as if mixed with blood, giving teſtimony of what was "done there of old." Dr Lightfoot ſaith, theſe ſacrifices were waſhed elſewhere, and that the unclean waſhed in this pool; and whilſt they did ſo, laid up their cloaths in one of the porches. Of the miracles wrought there by the angel deſcending, and of the miracle wrought by our Lord, ſee the note there.

8. BETHSAIDA, ſaith Bochart, is a place of fiſhing, as it might be called, becauſe ſituated, ſaith (n) Pliny, on the eaſt of the lake Genneſareth, in Batunea, and the Lower Gaulonitis, ſaith (o) Joſephus, at the beginning of the mountainous country. It is a place of hunting, ſaith Dr Lightfoot, ſo called becauſe it ſtood near Nephthali, where there were ſtore of deer, Nephthali abounding in veniſon, Gen. 49. 21. It was raiſed by Philip from a village to the honour of a city, and called Julia, in honour of the emperor's daughter. It was one of the cities againſt which Chriſt denounced a wo, Matth. 11. 21. for her impenitence and infidelity, after the mighty works he had done in her. It alſo was the city where three apoſtles dwelt; viz. Philip, Andrew, and Peter, John 1. 45.

1. CANA. There were two Cana's without Galilee; one in the tribe of Aſer, Joſh. 19. 28. called by St Jerom, Cana the Great; another in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. 16. 8. 17. 9. and two in Galilee, one in the north part of the Lower Galilee, and dividing it from the upper; and Cana of Galilee, or the Leſs, ſituated overagainſt Julius Betharampta, on the weſt of Capernaum, whence Chriſt, after he had wrought his firſt miracle there, went down to Capernaum, John 2. 12. and when he was returned thither, the nobleman comes from Capernaum to him there, John 4. 46. 47. Of this Cana Joſephus ſpeaks, ſaying, ἐν κώμῃ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ἡ προσαγορεύεται Κάνα, (p) "In a village of Galilee which was called Cana."

2. CANAAN was twofold. The larger terminated on the ſouth part with the deſert of Sin or Cades, on the north with M. Libanus and Antilibanus, on the eaſt with the river Euphrates, and with the Mediterranean ſea on the weſt; ſo Deut. 11. 24. Joſh. 1. 3. 4. Every place that the ſole of your foot ſhall tread upon, that have I given you, from the wilderneſs (of Paran) and (or, even to) Libanus, and to the great Euphrates, and to the great ſea ſhall your coaſt be; accordingly Joſhua ſaith, God gave to Iſrael all the land which he ſware to give to their fathers, and they poſſeſſed it and dwelt in it, Joſh. 21. 43. 45. and chap. 23. 14. There failed not any good thing which the Lord had ſpoken to the houſe of Iſrael; all came to paſs. How this could be ſaid by him who had left ſo much of the ſeven nations unſubdued, Judg. 1. and who divided not to them the whole land of Canaan, but only that part of it which was poſſeſſed by the ſeven nations, is a great queſtion; to which the uſual anſwer is, that he gave them a right to the whole country, dividing it among them by a lot ordered and directed by him, and he gave them the actual poſſeſſion of the greateſt part of it, with power to ſubdue the reſt if they continued obedient; and more was not intended preſently, the Lord not having promiſed to give them the whole land at once, they being not ſufficient to people the whole country, but by degrees, as their increaſe ſhould make them ready for, and their obedience ſhould continue their right to it: for thus ſaith God by Moſes, Exod. 23. 29. I will not drive them out before thee in one year, leſt the land become deſolate, and the beaſts of the field multiply againſt thee; but by little and little I will drive them out before thee, until thou be increaſed to inherit the land. To which may be added, that Joſhua gave them all the land their feet had trod on, and more God did not promiſe to them in the words cited from him.

CANAAN the Leſs, is extended from the wilderneſs in the ſouth, to Libanus in the north, and from Jordan on the eaſt, to the Midland ſea on the weſt, the length of it being 160 miles, the breadth of it only 50; and it is thus deſcribed, Gen. 10. 19. The borders of the Cannanites (i. e. the ſeven nations of them voted to deſtruction) were from Sidon, (i. e. the country of Sidon, which extended itſelf eaſt as far as Jordan), as thou comeſt to Gerar unto Gaza, and (the ſouthern border is) as thou goeſt to Sodom and Gomorrah, Adma and Zeboim, even unto Laſhah, i. e. the Λάσα in (q) Joſephus, towards Arabia Petræa. See Bochart. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 37.

3. CAPERNAUM was a city ſeated near to the ſea of Galilee, at the bottom of the lake of Gennesareth; for Chriſt's diſciples came from the wilderneſs of Bethſaida over the lake to the land of Gennesareth, Matth. 41. 34. Mark 6. 46. and yet to Capernaum, John 6. 16. 24. It was in the borders of Zebulon and Nephthali, Matth. 4. 13. renowned on the account of Chriſt's habitation and his many miracles, which brought a wo upon them for their infidelity, Matth. 11. 23. Near this town was the mountain where Chriſt preached his excellent ſermon; for, coming down thence, he went to Capernaum, Matth. 8. 5. i. e. a journey of ten miles, if Thabor was that mount, as it is conjectured by St Jerom on the place; and near it alſo was the cuſtomhouſe, at which Matthew the publican ſat when Chriſt called him, for he called him as he paſſed from his own city, Matth. 9. 1. 9.

4. CAPPADOCIA was a kingdom bounded on the (r) eaſt with Armenia, on the weſt with Paphlagonia and Galatia, on the north with the Euxine ſea, on the ſouth with that part of Mount Taurus which looks towards Cilicia. It was famed for (s) mules and horſes, of which it gave yearly to the Perſians, horſes 1500, mules 2000. It was a nation ſo ſervile, ſaith (t) Strabo, that when the Romans offered them their freedom to live by their own laws, they ſaid they could not endure liberty. They were, ſaith Cicero, de grege venalium. Orat. poſt red. in ſenat. N. 12.

5. CÆSAREA-PALESTINÆ, ſo called, as being the metropolis of Paleſtine, and the ſeat of the Roman proconſul, was formerly named the tower of Strato; but being a mart-town, whoſe haven was very incommodious, Herod the Great built there a large city with many (u) ſtately marble buildings, a theatre of ſtone, and a moſt capacious amphitheatre, (where Herod Antipas was ſmitten by an angel of God; ſee the note on Acts 12. 23.), and an admirable haven, with marble edifices and towers, the greateſt of which he called Druſus, in honour of the emperor's ſon; the city Cæſarea, in honour of Cæſar. It was ſituated between Doron and Joppa, thirty-five miles from Jeruſalem, and was inhabited (x) partly by the Jews, who had their ſchools there; but chiefly by the Greeks or Syrians, betwixt whom there were feuds περὶ τῆς ἰσοπολιτείας, concerning equal privileges, the Cæſareans killing about 1200 Jews, when Florus was procurator of Judea. Here Peter converted Cornelius and his kinſmen, the firſt-fruits of the Gentiles, Acts 10. Here lived Philip the evangeliſt, Acts 21. 8. and here Paul defended himſelf againſt the Jews, and their orator Tertullus, Acts 24.

6. CÆSAREA-PHILIPPI, mentioned Matth. 16. 13. Mark 8. 27. was firſt called Lais, or Laſhem, Judg. 18. 7. and when ſubdued by the Danites, Dan. 5. 29. It was built by Philip the tetrarch of Ituræa and Trachonitis, Luke 3. 1. who made it the place of his reſidence, as being conveniently ſeated between both. He built it, ſaith

Joſephus,

(y) Joſephus, at Paneas, by the ſprings of Jordan, and called it Cæſarea-Philippi, and alſo Nerodiada, in honour of Nero. It was ſeated at the ſprings of Jordan the Leſs, not far from Libanus in the midland Phœnicia, ſaith Ptolomy, and was a Decapolitan city, called Cæſarea-Panias, or, Sub Panio; not becauſe of the worſhip of Panius Philoſtorgius, or by reaſon of the ſprings of Paneas, as Pliny (z) but by reaſon of the mountain Panius, mentioned by Joſephus and Euſebius, under which it lies. What Euſebius ſaith of the two ſtatues of Corinthian braſs, erected here by the woman cured at Capernaum of the bloody flux, ſee confuted in the note on Mark 5. 26.

7. CEDRON. Of the brook Cedron, which our Lord paſſed over to go into the garden where he was betrayed, John 18. 1. mention is made when David fled from Abſalom, for he paſſed over the brook Kidron, 2 Sam. 15. 23. and when king Solomon ſaith to Shimei, In the day that thou paſſeſt over the brook Kidron, thou ſhalt ſurely die. See alſo Jer. 31. 40. where the Septuagint always ſpeaks of Κίδρων or τῶν Κιδρων, in the plural; it was, ſaith (a) Jerom, a torrent or valley near to Jeruſalem, on the eaſt ſide, betwixt it and mount Olivet; a deep valley, ſaith (b) Joſephus: and into this valley was conveyed the blood poured out at the foot of the altar, which, becauſe it made the river look black, ſome think it was called Cedron from the word Kiddar, which ſignifies blackneſs; others from the cedar-trees planted on each ſide, whence, ſay they, it is ſtill named in the plural, τῶν Κιδρων, from theſe cedar-trees.

8. CHALDÆA is only mentioned in theſe words, Acts 7. 4. And Abraham came out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran; where, by the land of the Chaldeans we are not to underſtand the country ſo named in Aſia Major, which was in the plain, but a mountainous country, which is part of Meſopotamia, as appears from theſe words; God appeared to Abraham while he was in Meſopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, ver. 2. then came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran. That both this Charran and Chaldea lay in Meſopotamia, ſee Bochart Phaleg. l. 2. c. 6. and the note on Acts 7. 4.

9. CENCHREA was the iſthmus of Corinth, diſtant ſeventy furlongs from it, where were celebrated the Iſthmian games; whence the apoſtle, in his epiſtle to the Corinthians, ſpeaks ſo oft in alluſion to theſe games. See notes on 1 epiſt. 9. (h)(i)(k), 2 epiſt. 4. 7. 8. 9. Hence he tells them of a corruptible crown for which they wreſtled, their coronets being either of the σέλινον, parſley, which quickly withered, or of πίτυς, the pine-tree, which ſoon decayed.

10. CLAUDA, Acts 27. 16. was an iſland near Crete, ſituated at the meeting of the ſouthern and the weſtern ſea, of which geographers ſay nothing, unleſs it be the Gaudus mentioned by Pliny, l. 4. c. 12. and by Mela, l. 2. c. 7.

11. CHIOS, Acts 10. 15. is an iſland of the Ægean ſea, betwixt Leſbos and Samos, celebrated by (c) Horace, and (d) Martial, for the wine and figs that came from thence, and alſo by Pliny, l. 5. c. 31. and Strabo, l. 14. p. 444. for its marble and white earth.

12. CILICIA, a country of Aſia Minor, betwixt Pamphilia on the weſt, and Pieria on the eaſt, the mount Taurus on the north, and the Cilician ſea on the ſouth, celebrated on the account of Cicero, proconſul there, but more on the account of St Paul's birth at Tarſus, a city of Cilicia, Acts 21. 15.

13. COLOSSE, was a city of Phrygia Major, built by the river Licus, near the place, ſaith Herodotus (e) where it begins to run under ground, as it doth for five furlongs before it riſes again, and ſlides into Meander. To this city, ſituated at an equal diſtance betwixt Laodicea and Hierapolis, mentioned Coloſſ. 2. 1. came Xerxes, in his expedition againſt Greece, and to this city St Paul writ an epiſtle (f). All theſe three cities periſhed by an earthquake, ſaith Euſebius, in the tenth of Nero, that is, but two years after St Paul's epiſtle was ſent to them.

14. COOS, Acts 21. 1. was an iſland in the Ægean or Icarian ſea, near Myndus and Cnidus, which had a city of the ſame name, from which Hippocrates the celebrated phyſician, and Apelles the famous limner, were called Coi. Here was a large temple of Æſculapius, and another of Juno: it abounded in rich wines, and here were made thoſe Coæ veſtes, which were tranſparent, and are ſo often mentioned by the poets.

15. CHORAZIN, ſaith St Jerom, is a town in Galilee, which our Lord deplores for her incredulity, Matth. 12. 22. Dr Lightfoot wonders how ſuch a wo ſhould be denounced againſt it, when we read not, in the whole New Teſtament, that our Lord had ever been there; but that our Lord was frequently at Bethſaida and Capernaum, copartners in that wo, we read: now, Chorazin being, by Dr Lightfoot, placed betwixt them, and being, ſaith (g) St Jerom, but two miles diſtant from Capernaum, a. d, in many maps, but little diſtant from Bethſaida, and it being ſaid expreſsly, that mighty works were done in her, doubtleſs Chriſt muſt be often there.

16. CNIDUS, mentioned Acts 27. 7. was a city and promontory in the peninſula of Paria, celebrated for the worſhip of Venus, hence called Venus Cnidia; whence (h) Horace ſings thus, O Venus regina Cnidi; and for the ſtatue of Venus, made by Praxiteles, and by (i) Pliny reckoned among the admirable works of that artificer.

17. CORINTH was a moſt noble city of Achaia Propria, called anciently Ephyre, ſaith (k) Pliny; and after Corinth, from one Corinthus, who took and rebuilt it. It was conſiderable among Heathen authors for its citadel Acro-Corinthus, built on a very high mountain, and for its (l) inſolence againſt the Roman legates, which cauſed L. Mummius, thence ſtyled Achaicus, to deſtroy it; in the conflagration of which city ſo many ſtatues were melted down, that the remains of them made that famous Corinthian braſs which was eſteemed above gold or ſilver; and of which, ſaith Joſephus, the beautiful gate of the temple of Jeruſalem was made, See the note on Acts 3. 2. The Corinthians were noted for their wiſdom, hence ſtyled by (m) Cicero, "the light of all Greece," by Florus, Decus Græciæ, "the glory of Greece;" and for their riches, for, ſaith (n) Strabo, πλουσία διαπαντὸς ὑπῆρξεν, it was always rich. They were filled with orators and philoſophers; and from them, ſay the fathers, came the contentions and falſe doctrines which ſprang up in that church, on the account of which, St Paul ſpeaks thus to them, Ye are rich, ye are wiſe, ye are honourable, 1 Cor. 4. 9. 10. They alſo had a temple of Venus; to whom, ſaith (o) Strabo, "1000 "whores were conſecrated," whence they became infamous to a proverb for that vice, and for all kind of laſciviouſneſs; which cauſed the apoſtle, in his epiſtles to them, to ſpeak ſo much againſt it. See the preface to the firſt epiſtle. Laſtly, there was a great reſort of the Jews to this city, who, ſaith Philo, inhabited Κόρινθον, τὴν πλείστα καὶ ἄριστα Πελοποννήσου, Corinth, and the chiefeſt and beſt parts of Peloponneſus, and had one or more ſynagogues there, Acts 18. 8. whence came thoſe Judaizers and falſe apoſtles, ſo often mentioned in the epiſtles to thoſe churches.

17. CYPRUS, ſo called from the flower of the cypreſs-trees growing there, as (p) Pliny, ſpeaking of the kinds of cypreſs, and (q) Euſtathius, ſay, was an iſland, having on the eaſt the Syrian, on the weſt the Pamphilian, on the ſouth the Phœnician, on the north the Cilician ſea. It was celebrated among the Heathens for its fertility, as being, ſaith (r) Strabo, and Ammianus Marcellinus, ſufficiently provided of all things within itſelf, & nullius externi indigens; whence it was alſo called the rich and happy iſland, but was very (s) infamous for the worſhip of Venus, who had thence her name Κύπρις, and her title Venus Cypria; that demon, ſaith Euſtathius, delighting in that iſland for their adultery, and proneneſs to venery, they conſecrating their women to whoredom, and by a law compelling them to lie with ſtrangers, as the Babylonians did. It was memorable among the Jews for being an iſland in which they ſo abounded, that at one time they ſlew, ſaith (t) Dio, 240,000 of the inhabitants, and were, on that account, forbid to come afterwards to that iſland; and, among Chriſtians, for being the place where Joſes, called Barnabas, had the land he ſold, Acts 4. 36. and where Mnaſon an old diſciple lived, Acts 21. 16.

DALMANUTHA, vid. Magdala.

1. DAMASCUS, a moſt ancient city, where Eliezer, the ſervant of Abraham dwelt; built, ſaith (u) Joſephus, by Uz, the ſon of Aram, mentioned Gen. 10. 23. and ſituated in the valley betwixt Libanus and Antilibanus, watered by the rivers Abana and Pharphar, 2 Kings 5. 12. one of which is by (x) Pliny, Strabo (y), and others, called Chryſorrhoas, by reaſon of its golden ſands; it was made tributary to David, 2 Sam. 8. 6. Afterwards it was the capital city of the kings of Syria, Iſ. 7. 8. It is a city famous for its antiquity, and for being ſtill one of the richeſt and moſt magnificent cities of the Levant, but moſt of all for being the place of the miraculous converſion of St Paul. Here the Jews had their ſynagogues, and converted to their religion (z) moſt of the women of the place, but the men entirely hated them, and killed at one time twelve, at another eighteen thouſand of them and their families.

2. DECAPOLIS, ſaith St Jerom, was a country of ten cities beyond Jordan, which all do not reckon alike, ſaith (a) Pliny, who places them all beyond Jordan, except Scythopolis: (b) Joſephus ſaith, that Juſtus of Tiberias τὰς ἐν τῇ Συρίᾳ Δεκαπόλεις ἐπολιόρκει, fought againſt the cities of Decapolis in Syria; and that when Veſpaſian came to Ptolemais, (c) οἱ πρῶτοι τῶν τῆς Συρίας Δεκαπόλεων, the chief men of the cities of Decapolis in Syria complained to him againſt Juſtus upon that account; and of theſe cities (d) he ſaith, that Hippo and Gadara were two; whence it is evident Bochardus muſt miſtake, when he places all theſe cities in Galilee, and makes Tiberias to be one of them, it being Juſtus of Tiberias that fought againſt them. They were all cities inhabited chiefly by the Gentiles, though ſome of them might be within the region of Judea.

3. DERBE was a city of Lycaonia near Iſauria, mentioned Acts 14. 6. It was the ſeat of Antipater Derbæus, and the country of Timothy.

by Lybia, and the desert of Barca. It is divided into the Upper Egypt, through which Nile runneth with a single stream; and into Lower Egypt, which begins where Nile divides, and so makes the island, from its resemblance of the Greek Δ, called Delta; and then runs down to the Mediterranean shore, whence it is also called Egyptus Maritima. Of the river Nile, the pyramids, their mummies, cities, customs, see geographers. Of the names it hath in the Old Testament, see Bochart. For explication of some passages in the New, consider,

1*st*, The Egyptian language, which differed from the Greek, as (e) Bochart proves against Kircher, and from the Hebrew, whence the Jews in it are said to have heard a strange language, Psal. 81. 6. and coming from it, to have come from a barbarous people, Psal. 114. 1. See the note on 1 Cor. 14. 11. Hence Joseph, representing an Egyptian, speaks to his brethren by an interpreter, Gen. 42. 23; and it is prophesied by Isaiah, chap. 19. 18. that five Egyptian cities should speak the language of Canaan, i. e. of those who lived there. Hence Chiun, which in the Hebrew is put for Saturn, (as also it signifies among the Persians and Ishmaelites), is, by the Septuagint, who made their translation in Ægypt, turned into Ραιφὰν, Amos 5. 26. which in the Egyptian language is put for Saturn, and is cited by St Stephen Ρεμφὰν, Acts 7. 43. See the note there.

2*dly*, The Egyptian learning, which had it not been considerable, sure we should not have heard of Homer, Solon, Musæus, Dædalus, Pythagoras, Plato, Democritus, and others, going thither to learn wisdom, and bringing to their respective countries the learning they had there acquired. Egypt would not have been called by Horus in Macrobius, (f) "the mother of arts;" nor the inhabitants, "the parents of all philosophy:" nor would (g) Athenæus have told us, that both the Greeks and Barbarians had all their learning from the Alexandrians. But of this see more in the commentary upon these words, And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, Acts 7. 22.

3*dly*, Egypt is, by profane authors, as well as by the fathers, said to be guilty of most vile idolatry. (h) Herodotus informs us, they first made altars, images, and temples for the gods, and that almost all the names of the gods came from Egypt (i) into Greece; and Jupiter in (k) Lucian, confesses, that the Egyptian gods were αἰσχρὰ καὶ γελοιότερα, filthy, and more ridiculous than those of other nations. Their gods were called, not only by the (l) fathers, but even by the poets, (m) portenta magis quam numina. They are also noted in scripture for afflicting, persecuting, and destroying the people of God; upon both these accounts the great city Rome, is, by St John, styled spiritually Egypt, Rev. 11. 8.

4*thly*, That Moses led the children of Israel out of Egypt, is attended by many (n) profane authors, and that he led them through the sea, and that the Egyptians, following after them, were drowned, is owned by Artabanus; (o) Diodorus Siculus adds, that the fame of this drying up of the Red sea, was preserved till his time among the (p) Ichthyophagi, who lived near to it: and (q) Origen informs us, that it was common among the Heathens, to exorcise demons by that God who did καταποντίσαι ἐν τῇ ἐρυθρᾷ θαλάσσῃ τὸν Αἰγυπτίων βασιλέα, καὶ τὰς Αἰγυπτίους, overthrow the Egyptians and their king in the Red sea, according to these words of St Paul, By faith they passed through the Red sea, as by dry land, which the Egyptians essaying to do were drowned, Heb. 11. 30.

2. ELAMITES are only mentioned in these words, Acts 2. 9. Parthians, Medes, and Elamites: where St Luke goes from east to west, the Elamites lying west of the Medes; for the Susians are joined to the Elamites, saith Strabo, and to them the Medes. Elam and Madai are also mentioned in scripture together, Is. 21. 2. Jer. 25. 25. They were so called from Elam the son of Sem, Gen. 10. 22. and their capital city was Elymais: they were a warlike people living by rapine, and fighting with bows and arrows, Is. 22. 6. Jer. 49. 35. as the Susians and Persians did; but were a different people from them; for they were joined to Susia, saith (r) Strabo, and there was an ingress to them from Persia, and the Susians and Elamites are mentioned apart, Ezra 4. 9. though they are both comprehended sometimes under the name of Elam. See Dan. 8. 2.

3. EMMAUS, saith St Luke, chap. 24. 15. and (s) Josephus in his book of the wars of the Jews, was a village distant sixty furlongs from Jerusalem; it was after made a city, and a Roman colony, and called Nicopolis.

4. EPHESUS, the metropolis and noble mart of the Proconsular Asia, situated upon the river Layster, was famous for the temple of Diana, one of the stateliest structures in the world: it was, as (t) Pliny saith, the wonder of magnificence, built at the common charge of all Asia, properly so called,

called, and was 220 years in building: it was 425 feet long, 220 broad, and ſupported by 127 pillars 60 feet high, and was generally accounted one of the ſeven wonders of the world: it was burnt the ſame day that Socrates was poiſoned, 400 years before Chriſt; and again, the ſame night that Alexander M. was born, but rebuilt and adorned by the Epheſians, whence that city is ſtyled νεωκόρος, Acts 19. 35. an adorner of the temple of the goddeſs Diana, which, ſay the ſcholiaſts upon Ariſtophanes and Suidas, ſignifies to (u) adorn and beautify. See note there. The Epheſians were noted for their ſkill in the art of magic, ſee the note on Acts 19. 19. and for their luxury and laſciviouſneſs; ſee the note on Epheſ. 5. 5. The Jews dwelt here in abundance, having obtained the privilege of citizens, ſaith (x) Joſephus: but this city was chiefly celebrated among Chriſtians for St Paul's ſtay here almoſt three years, Acts 20. 31. his mighty miracles done there, Acts 19. 11. 1 Cor. 16. 9. and the oppoſition he met with from the Jews, Acts 20. 19. for Timothy, made biſhop there; for the beloved apoſtle who governed the Aſiatic churches; and for being one of the ſeven churches to which Chriſt ſent inſtructions, Rev. 2. 1.

5. EPHRAIM. We read, John 11. 54. that Chriſt went from Jeruſalem to a country near the wilderneſs, and to a city named Ephraim: now, Ephraim and Bethel, ſaith (y) Joſephus, were πολιχνία, little cities ſituated in the land of Benjamin, near the wilderneſs of Judea, in the way from Jeruſalem to Jericho.

G.

GADARA was, according to (z) Joſephus, the metropolis of Perea, or the region beyond Jordan: It is now called Hippodion, ſaith (a) Pliny, and hath the river Hieramax or Jarmoc flowing by it; both make it a (b) Decapolitan city, and ſo of Heathen juriſdiction, whence perhaps it was deſtroyed by the Jews, but was rebuilt by Pompey in favour of Demetrius Gadarenſis, his manumitted ſervant, ſaith (c) Joſephus. The inhabitants of this city being rich, ſent legates to Veſpaſian coming againſt Judea, and gave up this ſtrong city to him; both the city and villages belonging to it, lay within the region of the Gergeſenes, whence Chriſt going into the country of the Gadarenes, Mark 5. 1. is ſaid to go into the region of the Gergeſenes, Matth. 8. 28.

2. GALATIA is a province of the Leſſer Aſia, ſo called from the Gauls, who, ſaith (d) Strabo, ſeated themſelves there under their captain Leonorius. It was bounded on the weſt by Phrygia, on the eaſt by the river Halys, on the north by Paphlagonia, and on the ſouth by Lycaonia. Its chief cities were Ancyra, Tavium, and Peſſinuntum; whence Grotius ſaith St Paul, writing to the churches of Galatia, writ to theſe. They worſhipped the mother of the gods, and eſpecially they of Peſſinuntum, and ſo, as St Paul ſaith, Galatians 4. 8. They knew not God. Callimachus in his hymns, and Hilary who was himſelf a Gaul, repreſent them as (e) "a "very fooliſh people;" whence St Paul ſaith, chap. 3. 1. O fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you? This church was ſo dangerouſly perverted, and almoſt overturned by the Judaizers there, that the apoſtle, in his epiſtle to them, doth not call them ſaints.

3. GALILEE contained the tribes of Iſſachar, Zebulon, Naphtali, Aſher, with part of Dan, and Perea, beyond the river. It was bounded on the north by Lebanon and Syria, on the weſt by Phœnicia, on the ſouth by Samaria, on the eaſt moſtly by the river Jordan, and the ſea of Galilee. It is divided, by (f) Joſephus, into the Upper and the Lower Galilee: but Dr Lightfoot divides it into three parts; the Upper Galilee, ſo called, becauſe it abounded in mountains; it was eminently called Galilee of the Gentiles, Matth. 4. 15. becauſe it abounded with them, being partly inhabited, ſaith (g) Strabo, by Egyptians, Arabians, and Phœnicians; this contained the tribes of Aſher and Nephthali: the Lower, which contained the tribes of Zebulon and Iſſachar, becauſe it was champaign, was called the Great Field; and, 3*dly*, the vale, which is the border of Tiberias. It was, ſaith (h) Joſephus, very populous, containing 204 cities and towns, the leaſt of which towns had πεντακισχιλίους ὑπὲρ τοὺς μυρίους οἰκήτορας, above 15,000 inhabitants. It was alſo a very rich country, as paying for its tribute, ſaith he, 200 talents: they were, ſaith he, a warlike people, defending themſelves againſt all the aſſaults of their enemies round about; and their wealth and proweſs made them a ſeditious people, and prone to rebel againſt the Romans.

4. GAZA, or AZZA, was a city in the tribe of Judah. It was taken by Judah, Judg. 1. 18.; but becauſe they deſtroyed not the inhabitants, as they ſhould have done, but only made them tributaries, ver. 28. it was regained by them, after the of time Jephtha, when the children of Iſrael did evil again, and the Lord delivered them into the hands of the Philiſtines, chap. 13. 1. It was one of the five ſatrapies of the Philiſtines, which offered their golden emerods to the God of Iſrael, for a treſpaſs-offering, 1 Sam. 6. 17. and the city whoſe gates Samſon took away, Judg. 16. 2. and whither he was carried when taken, ver. 22. and where he pulled down the houſe of their god Dagon upon the lords of the Philiſtines, ver. 30. This old town was deſtroyed by Alexander, and ſo made deſolate, as the prophet had foretold, Zeph. 2. 4. and is therefore called, ſaith (i) Strabo, a continued deſert. See the note on Acts 8. 26. For whereas this old city was ſeven furlongs from the bay, the new, built by Conſtantine, was, ſaith (k) St Jerom, in another place nearer to it.

5. GENNESARETH was a region 30 furlongs in length, length, and in breadth 20; a very pleaſant and fruitful place, abounding in the gardens of great men, whence it had its name from Gen and Sar, as being the garden of princes; it lay at the bottom of the lake of Genneſareth, and gave that name to it, Luke 5. 1. The celebrated city of Tiberias was built cloſe by it on the eaſt, and gave it the name of the ſea of Tiberias, John 21. 1. And it was called the ſea of Galilee, John 6. 1. as being ſituated in Galilee, in the tribe of Nephthali, ſaith Dr Lightfoot; of Zebulon, ſay others: it was, ſaith (l) Joſephus, 40 furlongs in breadth, and 100 in length; ſaith (m) Pliny, ſixteen miles long, and ſix in breadth: its waters were ſweet and pleaſant; and as the Jews ſay, that God loved this more than all the other ſeas; ſo did our Saviour much frequent it, and after his reſurrection appeared to his diſciples at it, John 21. 1.

6. GERGESA was a town near Gadara, ſo called either from the Gergeſites, the poſterity of Canaan; for neither did Zebulun nor Nephthali drive out all the Canaanites, Judg. 1. 30. 33. or from Gergiſhta, ſignifying clay, the ſoil being clay: it gave name to a region ſo called, which comprehended in it Gadara, Hippo, and Magdala. See Gadara.

7. GETHSEMANE was a garden beyond Kedron, at the foot of Mount Olivet, ſo called, from the wine-preſſes in it.

8. GOLGOTHA ſignifies a ſcull, from the rolling of it; as we read, Luke 23. 33. the place was called the place of a ſcull, Matth 27. 33. Mark 15. 32. John 19. 17. of which (n) St Cyril gives this very improbable reaſon, that it was called ſo prophetically, becauſe Chriſt, our head, was crucified there; he being not κρᾶνιον, our ſcull, but ἡ κεφαλὴ, our head: others think it was ſo called, from the head of Adam, buried there; this we have received by tradition, ſay (o) Origen, Cyprian, Athanaſius, St Baſil, Epiphanius, Ambroſe, Chryſoſtom, St Auguſtin: Whereas they could receive no ſuch tradition from the Jews, who taught, that Adam was buried at Kiriath-Arbe, or Hebron; whence St Jerom on the place, ſays, this tradition is pleaſing, but not true: he therefore ſaith, it was ſo called, as being a place full of ſculls, by reaſon of the malefactors executed, and buried there. Againſt which opinion it may be objected, that it is never called the place of ſculls, but of a ſcull: others therefore ſay, it was ſo called, becauſe it was a little hill in form like to a man's ſcull.

9. GREECE, called alſo Hellas, was celebrated throughout the world, for learning and wiſdom: it was that little part of Europe, ſaith (p) Cicero, "which flouriſhed in "fame, glory, in learning, and in moſt arts." Hence (q) Tatian ſaith, "they divided wiſdom among themſelves," and ſaid, "it belonged to them alone;" and to this the apoſtle ſeemeth to refer, when he ſaith, I am a debtor to the Greek and to the Barbarian, to the wiſe and to the unwiſe, Rom. 1. 14. they calling all other nations Barbarians: (See the note on 1 Cor. 14. 11.); becauſe, ſaith (r) Strabo, τὸ παιδείας καὶ λόγων ὀλιγῶν, "Learning and reaſon obtained a-"mong them, but was neglected by other nations, (s) who "the more they were diſtant from them, the more were they "ignorant:" but then the apoſtle alſo adds, that which all the (t) apologiſts for the Chriſtian faith obſerve, that, profeſſing themſelves wiſe they became fools, by their idolatry, Rom. 1. 21. 22. none being more addicted to it than the Grecians, and the Athenians, (ſee there), who were eſteemed as the eye of Greece: (u) Tatian ſaith, "They rather choſe "to have more demons, than one God." "Their gods," ſaith (x) Cicero, were firſt men, and with theſe, we," ſaith he, "and they have filled the heavens:" and yet it is, with the higheſt reaſon, ſaid in the ſame author, that nothing can be more abſurd, quam homines morti deletos reponere in deos, "than to make gods of dead men," de nat. deorum, l. 1. n. 29. Note alſo, that Greece, in its largeſt acceptation, comprehended all Macedonia, Theſſaly, Epirus, Achaia, (i. e. Greece properly ſo called,) Peloponneſus, and the circumjacent iſlands; and ſo was bounded on the north with the Scardian mountains, on the weſt with the Ionian, on the ſouth with the Cretian, and on the eaſt with the Ægean ſeas: henee in Daniel, chap. 8. 22. and 10. 20. and 11. 2. it is uſed in the largeſt acceptation, to denote Macedonia, as well as the more ſouthern parts of Greece; whereas, in Acts 20. 2. it is uſed excluſively of Macedonia, when it is ſaid, that St Paul, going through the parts of Macedonia, came to Greece.

1. FAIR-HAVEN, Acts 27. 8. ſtyled by Stephanus, καλὰ ἀκτὴ, the fair ſhore, is a part of Crete, where, ſaith he, was a city or great village: but whereas it is there ſtyled a part, ᾧ ἐγγὺς ἡ πόλις Λασαία, near to the city of Laſæa, that troubles the commentators, who can find no city in Crete of that name, beſides one mentioned by Pliny, which he places in the continent. St Jerom, and from him other geographers, ſpeak of it as civitas littoralis, a city by the ſhore: moreover, Dr Lightfoot ſhews, that ἐγγὺς, and ὁ πόρρω, are ſometimes uſed by geographers of places diſtant almoſt 100 miles.

hollow place called Plutonium, not much exceeding a man's length, whose noisome exhalations suffocate every thing that enters into it, except a capon: it was so called, saith Stephanus, ἀπὸ τῶν ἱερὰ πολλὰ ἔχειν, from the many temples it had in it.

I.

1. ICONIUM was a city of Lycaonia, the chief of the fourteen belonging to that tetrarchy, saith (z) Pliny; a well-built city in the richest part of Lycaonia, saith (a) Strabo. Here was a synagogue of Jews and proselytes, to whom Paul and Barnabas preaching, and confirming their doctrine by miracles, made many proselytes, Acts 14. 1. 2. 3. and where the unbelieving Jews and Gentiles made an assault upon them, to use them despitefully, and to stone them, ver. 5.

2. IDUMEA, Mark 3. 8. is not the region of Syria, in which the Edomites, or the posterity of Esau, dwelt, but the Jewish Idumea, or the south part of Judea, and hence, in Diodorus Siculus, the sea of Sodom, which is in the south of Judea, is said to be (b) κατὰ μέσην τὴν τετραπόλιν τῆς Ἰδουμαίας, in the midst of the province of Idumea. In the book of the Maccabees are many places mentioned, as in Idumea, which were almost in the middle of Judea, v. g. Bethoron is Κώμη Ἰδουμαίας, a village of Idumea, 1 Mac. 4. 29. It is κώμη τῆς Ἰουδαίας, a village of Judea, saith (c) Josephus; and ver. 61. Bethsura near to Jerusalem, is fortified to be a defence against the Idumeans. Josephus adds, that Judas and his brethren left not off fighting with the Idumeans, but fell upon them every where, (d) taking the cities of Hebron, Merissa, and Azotus, which were all in the land of Judah. It therefore is conjectured, that in the time of the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, the Edomites had invaded their possessions, and fixed their tents there; though afterwards, by the powerful arms of the Maccabees and Asmoneans, they were either rooted out, or constrained to embrace Judaism: thus Josephus informs us, that when Hircanus had taken Sechem, and M. Gerizim, and the country of the Cutheans or Samaritans, he proceeds to take the city of Idumea, Ador and Marissa, both in Judea; and having subdued all the Idumeans, he declares he would expel them from their seats, if they would not be circumcised, and submit to the Jewish laws: and that, hereupon, they out of love to their country, (e) καὶ τὴν περιτομὴν, καὶ τὴν ἄλλην τοῦ ἔθνους διαίταν ὑπέμειναν τὴν αὐτὴν Ἰουδαίοις ποιήσασθαι, received circumcision, and conformed to the same course or diet with the Jews, and styled themselves their domestics, and compatriots, de bell. Jud. l. 4. c. 16. 17.

3. JERICHO was a wealthy city in Benjamin, which Joshua destroyed, with a curse upon him that should rebuild it, chap. 6. 26. Nevertheless, Hiel the Bethelite rebuilt it, in the days of Ahab; and the curse pronounced upon him by Joshua for so doing, was punctually fulfilled, 1 Kings 16. 34. After its restauration, it was ennobled by the schools of the prophets; near to it was a large spring, but unwholesome, and making the land unfruitful, till Elisha cured it, 2 Kings 5. 21. and from that time it produced fruitfulness in abundance. The country, saith (f) Josephus, was seated in a plain, narrow, but long; for it runs out northward to the country of Scythopolis, and southward to the land of Sodom, being 150 miles in length, and 15 in breadth. Opposite to it lay a mountain beyond Jordan; and this great plain is, by St Matthew, styled ἡ περίχωρος τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, the region about Jordan, Matth. 3. 5. It was planted, say Strabo and Pliny, with a grove of palm-trees, (whence the city of palm trees, Deut. 34. 3. Judg. 1. 16. is, by the Targum, called Jericho), and well watered with springs, and fruitful with balsam, which, saith (g) Josephus, is the best commodity of the place. Under the second temple, it gave place to no city of Judea but Jerusalem; had a (h) royal palace in it, where Herod ended his days; an hippodromus, where the Jewish nobility being imprisoned by him, were to be slain after his death, and an amphitheatre, where his will was publicly opened and read: it was distant from Jerusalem almost 19 miles; but the way from Jerusalem to it being desert and rocky, it was infested with thieves; (See the note on Luke 10. 30. 32.); and Jericho having 12,000 priests and Levites which served at the temple, it is no wonder that a priest and Levite should pass by that way.

4. JERUSALEM may be considered, either, 1*st*, as the capital city of Judea, in compass six miles and a quarter, standing in the two tribes of Benjamin and Judah, and built upon three mountains: Mount Zion, on which the upper city, which was on the north of Jerusalem, was built; Acra, on which stood the lower city, properly called Jerusalem; and Mount Moriah, the mountain of the Lord's house, which was compassed about by the city, as a theatre, and walled round: it was a perfect square of 500 cubits on each side, and 2000 in the whole. And, as the city of Jerusalem is called the holy place, Matth. 24. 15. and the holy city, Matth. 4. 5. and was so esteemed by the Jews, 1 Maccab. 10. 31.; so this mountain was called holy ground, to which they who had issues, or were menstruous, or women in childbed, during the time of their uncleanness, might not come. Or,

2*dly*, It may be considered as the place where our Lord was crucified, where the gospel was first preached, and where it found the greatest opposition: and, in reference to this, it hath been shewed,

1. That, before Christ's passion, the Scribes and Pharisees were the great enemies to our Lord's person, and his doctrine: but when the apostles began to assert his resurrection, and the resurrection of believers, by his power, the Sadducees also were vehement opposers of his doctrine: (see the note on Acts 4. 2.)

2. That they not only persecuted the Christians in Judea, and throughout all the synagogues of the Jews, but instigated all Heathen governors where they had any footing; they perſecuting and killing them with their own hands, where they had power, and perſuading others ſo to do, where they had an intereſt ſufficient, Acts 13. 50. and 14. 2. 5. and 17. 5. 13. See the note on Gal. 3. 4. and the preface to the epiſtle of St James.

3. That for their infidelity, and oppoſition to the goſpel, the kingdom of God was taken from them, Matth. 21. 43.; they were blinded, and given up to a ſpiritual ſlumber, Rom. 11. 7. 8. were rejected, and broken off, ver. 15. 17. for their unbelief, ver. 20. Or,

3*dly*, We may diſcourſe of it as it was the city, which, with the temple, and the inhabitants, was therefore to be deſtroyed, laid waſte, and trodden down by the Gentiles. And here obſerve,

1. That both our Lord, and his forerunner, declared their ruin was at hand, if they would not repent, and believe the goſpel; that the axe was then laid to the root of the tree, Matth. 3. 10.; that Jeruſalem ſhould be laſt deſolate, and all the blood of the prophets, ſhed from Abel, ſhould be required of that generation, Matth. 23. 35. 38.; that all he had foretold, concerning the deſtruction of the temple, the city, and the people of Jeruſalem, ſhould be fulfilled, before that generation paſſed away, Matth. 24. 34. See Matth. 16. 28. and 26. 64. Luke 19. 41. 42. 43. and the notes there.

2. That this was the conſtant doctrine taught in moſt of the epiſtles, and the continual expectation of the believing Jews and Chriſtians, that wrath was coming upon that nation for their infidelity and perſecution of the Chriſtians; and that Chriſt would ſhortly come to deſtroy them, for thoſe ſins. See Rom. 11. 22. 1 Theſſ. 2. 15. 16. chap. 5. 9. 2 Theſſ. 2. 8. Heb. 10. 36. James 5. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 17. 18. and the notes on thoſe places; and Gal. 4. 20. and 6. 12. Phil. 3. 18. 19.

3. That Joſephus ſpeaks frequently of the τέρατα καὶ σημεῖα, the ſigns, wonders, and certain indications then given of their approaching ruin, de bel. Jud. l. 1. c. 1. l. 4. c. 17. l. 7. c. 30. 31. as alſo doth the Heathen Tacitus. (l) Joſephus adds, that God was now ἀπεστραμμένος τὰ ἅγια, rejecting their holy things, and would have both their temple and city purged by fire: that he in vain attempted to ſave τοὺς ὑπὸ Θεοῦ κατακρίτους, them whom God had condemned; and that their ruin was foretold by their own prophets, and not to be avoided, τὸ γὰρ τέλος εἶναι τοῦ Θεοῦ. (k) Eleazer, from what was done, takes notice, that all might thence know, that once beloved nation, now ἀπολεῖσθαι κατέγνωσται, was condemned to deſtruction; and even (l) Titus ſays, their actions ſhewed their deſtruction was wrought Θεοῦ μένει, by the anger of God, and that they proſpered in their attempts againſt them Θεοῦ συνεργοῦντος, by the divine aſſiſtance: in a word, the hiſtory of theſe wars, compoſed by that Jewiſh prieſt, is the beſt comment on, and the greateſt confirmation of the truth of Chriſt's predictions of all the circumſtances of their ruin, as is ſhewed on Matth. 24.

5. JOPPA, Acts 9. 13. was a famous port-town betwixt Cæſarea and Azotus, ſo called, as ſome think, from Japhet the ſon of Noah, who built, or rather rebuilt it, after the flood; for (m) Solinus and (n) Mela ſay, it was built before the flood. It was famous among the Heathens, for the fable of Andromeda and Perſeus; among the Jews, for being a port-town from whence they went up to Jeruſalem, which they might ſee, ſaith (o) Strabo, from Joppa, though it were above a day's journey; and for the miſerable (p) ſhipwreck of the Jews, when Veſpaſian took it; and among the Chriſtians, for Tabitha, there raiſed from the dead by Peter, Acts 9.

6. JORDAN is a river ariſing in the region of Daphne, near to Libanus; not out of two fountains or rivers, Jor and Dan, as St Jerom and Suidas ſay; but from one that is in the cave, called Phanium, as (q) Pliny ſaith, and Joſephus often: though, in his third book of the Jewiſh wars, he ſays, that it was found out by Philip the Tetrarch, to have its riſe from the ſprings of Phialæ which run under ground 26 furlongs, and appear only at the cave of Phanium, which therefore is aſſigned for its apparent riſe. It is called Jordan the Leſs, till it falls into the Lake Samochonitis, whence coming forth augmented, it is called Jordan the Greater, and falling into the lake of Gennesareth, it paſſes through it, and ends in the Dead ſea. It is famous among the Jews, for being dried up at a time when it overflowed all its banks, to give a paſſage to the children of Iſrael into Canaan; and among Chriſtians, for being the place of our Lord's baptiſm by St John.

7. ITUREA, mentioned as part of the tetrarchy of Philip, Luke 3. 1. was ſo called, from Jethur the ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. 25. 15. and lay edging upon Arabia, but was in, or bordering upon Cœleſyria. It was part of the tribe of Dan and Gad, and made a tetrarchy by Tiberius, and was partly the ſame with Puronitis, in (r) Joſephus; for whereas St Luke ſaith, Philip was tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis; Joſephus ſays, Batanea, Trachon, and Puronitis, were aſſigned to him by Cæſar. Moreover, Iſhmael being a ſkilful archer, Gen. 21. 20. the Itureans are celebrated, by (s) poets and hiſtorians, for their ſkill in fighting with bow and arrow.

8. JUDEA, as it ſignifies the whole land of promiſe, is, by (t) Tacitus, ſaid to be terminated with Arabia on the eaſt, Egypt on the ſouth, Phœnicia on the weſt, and Syria on the north: as it is diſtinguiſhed from Galilee and Samaria, and contains the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan, the (u) bounds towards the north are the village Annach, or Dorceus; on the ſouth, it reaches to a village called Jarda in Arabia, and its breadth is from the river Jordan to Joppa, and Jeruſalem is in the centre of it. It is divided into the mountains, the plain, and the ſouth: the ſouth lay towards Seor and Amalek, from the inlets into the land at the utmoſt part of the Dead ſea, and reached to the riſing of the mountains not far below Hebron: the mountains began near Hebron, and ran along northward to, and beyond Jeruſalem, having the plain of Jordan ſkirting on the eaſt, till you come to the borders of Samaria: hence the bleſſed virgin, going to viſit her couſin at Hebron, a city of the prieſts, is ſaid to go into the hill-country, Luke 1. 39. The plain joins to the mountainous country on the eaſt, and though more level than that, yet hath its hills; to the plain eaſtwardly joins a valley lower than the plain, which is the coaſt of Sodom, and at length that of Jordan. The wilderneſs of Judea, where John firſt taught, Matth. 3. 1. and Chriſt was tempted, lay betwixt Jericho and Jordan, and from Jericho towards Jeruſalem both of them were comparatively deſert, (whence (x) Strabo ſaith, Jeruſalem was a place not to be envied by any one, as having about it χώραν λυπρὸν καὶ ἄνυδρον, a dry barren country), though both theſe deſerts were alſo populous, and had many towns.

L.

1. LAODICEA, mentioned Col. 2. 1. was that which Stephanus calls Laodicea ad Lycum, by the river Lycus, and which (y) Ptolemy and Philoſtratus ſay, was a city of Caria; it was ruined by an earthquake in the 10th of Nero; and was rebuilt, ſaith (z) Tacitus, by its own wealth.

2. LIBYA was ſo called from the Arabic word Lub, which ſignifies thirſt, as being a dry, thirſty earth and therefore, by ſome grammarians, ſaid to have its name ἀπὸ τῦ λείπειν καὶ ὕειν, from its want of rain; among the Greeks, it is uſed as another name for Africa, as it imports a part of it. It was divided into (a) Lybia Interior and Exterior: but the Libya mentioned by St Luke Acts 2. 10. is that which is by Ptolemy called Libya Cirenaica; and by (b) Pliny, Pentapolitana Regio, from its five chief cities, viz. Berenice, Arſinoe, Ptolemais, Apollonia, and Cyrene, as appears from theſe words, Egypt, and τὰ μέρη τῆς Λιβύης τῆς κατὰ Κυρήνην, the parts of Lybia about Cyrene. It is noted, in the Old Teſtament, for its chariots and horſes uſed in fight, 2 Chron. 16. 8. whence it is ſtyled, by (c) Dionyſius Periegetes, Κυρήνη ἱππότις, and by (d) Strabo, ἱπποτρόφος, the country that bred the beſt horſes; of which ſee Bochart, Phaleg. l. 4. c. 33. but it is mentioned by St Luke, on account of the Jews, who living in ſuch vaſt numbers in Alexandria, that 50,000 of them were ſlain at one time, may well be thought to have had ſome colonies and proſelytes in this neighbouring country.

3. LYCAONIA. The Lycaonia mentioned Acts 14. 6. was not that which is called Arcadia, but a province in the Leſſer Aſia, accounted the ſouthern part of Cappadocia, having Iſauria on the weſt, Armenia Minor on the eaſt, and Cilicia on the ſouth. Its chief cities are all mentioned in this chapter, viz. Iconium, Lyſtra, and Derbe. They ſpake, ver. 10. in the Lycaonian tongue; i. e. in ſome proper dialect of the Greek tongue.

4. LYDDA, ſaith Joſephus, was a village (e) not yielding to a city for greatneſs; it was a part of Judea, not far from Joppa, Acts 9. 38. eminent for its ſchools of Jews and learned men: ſee the note there. (f) Joſephus elſewhere ſtyles it a city, and ſaith it was burnt by Ceſtius, whilſt the men were gone from it to Jeruſalem, to celebrate the feaſt of tabernacles; God, after they had crucified our Saviour, not taking that care of them at theſe times, as formerly. It is now called Dioſpolis, ſaith (g) St Jerom.

5. LYSTRA was a city of Lycaonia, chiefly celebrated for the cure done there upon the lame man, which made the Lycaonians think the gods were come down to them in the likeneſs of men, Acts 14. 10. 11. and for the circumciſion of Timothy, chap. 16. 1.

1. MACEDONIA was a vaſt province of Greece, formerly called Emathia; and from the kings of Macedon, Macedonia. It was bounded on the north by the mountains of Hœmus, on the ſouth by Epirus and Achaia, on the eaſt by the Ægean, on the weſt by the Ionian and Adriatic ſeas; celebrated in all hiſtories, for being the third kingdom that under Alexander the Great obtained the empire of the world, and had under it (h) 150 people. To this country, whoſe metropolis was then Theſſalonica, St Paul was called by a viſion, Acts 16. 9.; and the churches planted by him in it, are celebrated for their great charity, and ready contribution to the diſtreſſed Jews in Judea, 2 Cor. chap. 8. 9. when they themſelves lay under the extremeſt poverty; and both in Theſſalonica and Macedonia, ſaith (i) Philo, lived a great number of Jews.

2. MAGDALA was a city and territory beyond Jordan, on the bank of Gadara. It reached to the bridge above Jordan, which joined it to the other ſide of Galilee, and contained within its precincts, Dalmanutha: whence St Matthew ſaying, chap. 15. 39. Chriſt came into the coaſts of Magdala, St Mark ſaith more particularly, chap. 8. 10. he came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

3. MEDIA, mentioned Acts 2. 9. in theſe words, Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, was a vaſt region, having on the north the Hyrcanian ſea, on the weſt Armenia and Aſſyria, on the ſouth Perſia, on the eaſt Hyrcania and Parthia. It had its name from Madai the ſon of Japhet, mentioned Gen. 10. 2. and advanced into the ſecond monarchy, ſtyled the monarchy of the Medes and Perſians, under Darius the Mede, ſon of Aſtyages. Of the riches of this country, and of the vaſtneſs of its chief city Ecbatan, ſee (k) Bochartus. In the Babylonian captivity, the Jews were carried captive into Aſſyria, and placed in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings 17. 6. and 18. 11. Hence we find many of them and their proſelytes at Jeruſalem, when the Holy Ghoſt fell on the apoſtles.

Medes

4. MELITE, the iſland Malta, where St Paul was ſhipwrecked; of which ſee the note on Acts 28. 1.

5. MESOPOTAMIA is a country in Aſia Major, between the rivers Euphrates and Tygris, as the Greek word imports; hence it is ſtyled in the Hebrew, Aram Narajam, i. e. Syria of the rivers, and the inhabitants (l) οἱ ἐκ μέσης τῶν ποταμῶν, they who dwell in the midſt of the rivers: but that in ſcripture, and profane authors, it is ſometimes uſed in a larger ſenſe, ſee the note on Acts 7. 2.

6. MIDIAN, the land into which Moſes fled from the Egyptians, Acts 7. 29. It was the place where Jethro lived, Exod. 12. 11. and the people came from (m) Madian the ſon of Abraham by Keturah, Gen. 25. 2. whence we have reaſon to believe they ſtill retained the worſhip of the true God. It was in Arabia Petræa, whence (n) Philo ſaith, Moſes fled, εἰς τὴν ὁμορον Ἀραβίαν.

7. MILETUS, a port-town of Aſia Minor, and a city of Ionia, where, ſaith St Jerom, St Paul majores Epheſi alloquitur, "ſpeaks to the elders of Epheſus," taking no notice of any other biſhops there convened. It was the city where (o) Thales, one of the ſeven wiſe men, Anaximander his diſciple, Timotheus the muſician, and Anaximenes the philoſopher, were born. There was another Miletus in Crete, mentioned by (p) Pliny, and by (q) Homer, where St Paul left Trophimus ſick: ſee the note on 2 Tim. 4. 20. and the preface to Titus. There was alſo, ſaith Euſtathius in Dionyſ. P. Κρητικὴ νῆσος, an iſland of that name in Crete.

8. MITYLENE, corruptly Mytilene, ſaith (r) Voſſius, was a large and beautiful city of the iſland Leſbos, where Pittacus one of the wiſe men, Alcæus the poet, Diophanes the orator, and Theophanes the hiſtorian, were born. The whole iſland was alſo called by (s) that name; as alſo Pentapolis, from the five cities in it, viz. Iſſa, or Antiſſa, Pyrrha, Ereſſos, Ariſba, Mitylene. If it had that name in St Luke's time, you may underſtand either the iſland or the city, when he ſaith, Acts 20. 14. We came to Mitylene.

9. MYRA was one of the ſix great cities of Lycia, ſaith (t) Strabo, and it lay nigh the ſea, ſaith (u) Pliny; whence St Luke ſaith, Acts 27. 5. that ſailing over the ſea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, they came to Myra in Lycia. It had its name, ſay Stephanus de urbibus and Porphyrogenetes, l. 1. them. 14. ἀπὸ τῶν μύρων, from the ointments made there, and is by both of them called a city of Lycia. The Latin copies inſtead of Myra, read Lyſtra in Lycaonia, far diſtant from theſe ſeas; againſt the Greek, and the authority of St Jerom and Chryſoſtom.

10. MYSIA, mentioned Acts 16. 7. 8. was bounded on the north with Bithynia, on the eaſt with Phrygia Minor, on the weſt with Troas, on the ſouth by the river Hermus: there, perhaps, St Paul attempted not to ſtay; becauſe, as (x) Cicero notes, in his oration for Flaccus, they were a people deſpicable, and baſe to a proverb.

N.

1. NAIN, mentioned Luke 7. 11. 12. was a city in the extreme borders of Iſſachar, towards Samaria, two leagues from Nazareth, and not much more from Tabor, ſaith Brochard, at the gates of which our Lord reſtored the widow's ſon to life; it was ſo called, from the pleaſantneſs of the place. If (y) Joſephus ſpeaks of the ſame place, and not rather of Nain, a village in Samaria, he thrice calls it a village, and ſaith, it was walled about by Simon ſon of Gejorah the robber; but St Luke aſſures us, it had gates in our Saviour's time.

2. NAZARETH was a city of the Lower Galilee, in the confines of Iſſachar and Zebulun, but within the latter: here the bleſſed virgin was born, and lived: it was of ill fame in our Saviour's time, as appears from the queſtion of Nathanael, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? John 1. 47. Whence Chriſt was, by contempt, called a Nazarite, and Chriſtians, Nazarenes. See the note on Matth. 2. 23.

3. NINEVEH was the chief city of Aſſyria, by the Greeks called Ninus, from the builder of it, named in ſcripture, Nimrod, and by the Greeks Νῖνος, which ſome think to be hinted in the name, as being Nin-Nave, the habitation of Ninus, who came from Shinar to Aſſyria, and built it, Gen. 10. 10. See the Biſhop of Ely there. It is called in the ſcriptures, πόλις μεγάλη τῷ Θεῷ, Jonah 1. 2. and 3. 3. i. e. a very great city, (as Moſes was ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, very fair, Acts 7. 20. See the note there); as well it might, being, ſaith (z) Diodorus Siculus, in length 150 ſtadia, i. e. almoſt 19 miles; in breadth 90 ſtadia, i. e. 12 miles and an half; in circuit 480 ſtadia, i. e. 60 miles; and ſo counting 20 miles for a day's journey, as the Greeks uſed to do; a city of three days journey, not in length, but in circuit, ſay St Jerom, Cyril, and Theodoret upon the place, Jon. 3. 3. (a) Strabo ſays it was larger than Babylon, which contained in circuit 350 ſtadia. (b) Euſtathius on Dionyſius Periegetes, adds, that in building of it, 140,000 men laboured eight years. It was famous for being the city in which the firſt monarchy was erected, and which repented, at the preaching of Jonas, and ſo, it ſeems, owned the God of Iſrael as the true God; as generally thoſe eaſtern kingdoms did, though they had topical gods of their own. See the note on Luke 1. 76. It was taken 58 years after the time of Jonas, by Arbaces rebelling againſt Sardanapalus, and deſtroyed 182 years after by Nebuchodonoſor and Aſſuerus, Tobit 14. 15. Al. by Nabopolaſer and Aſtyages, and was never built again: whence ( ) Strabo ſaith, ἡ μὲν δὴ Νίνος πόλις ἠφανίσθη παραχρῆμα μετὰ τὴν τῶν Σύρων κατάλυσιν. And (d) Lucian to Charon, ἡ Νίνος μὲν ἀπόλωλεν ἤδη, καὶ δοῦ ἴχνος ἔτι λοιπὸν αὐτῆς, Ninus was ſo deſtroyed, that no footſteps of it now remain; God having ſaid, by his prophet Nahum, chap. 1. 8. that he would make an utter end thereof. As for its ſituation, it is commonly ſaid, that it was built on the weſt ſide of the river Tigris; but, as (e) Bochartus ſhews, hiſtorians and geographers differ ſo much as to the ſituation of it, that they ſeem thereby to confirm the words of the prophet Nahum, chap. 3. 17. It ſhall be as the locuſts, who when they flee away, their place is not known where they were.

O.

MOUNT OLIVET, mentioned Acts 1. 12. had its name from the multitude of olive-trees that grew upon it; whence at the foot of it was Gethſemane, Matth. 26. 26. the place of oil-preſſes, derived from Gath, a preſs, and Schemen, oil. It was diſtant from Jeruſalem, ſaith St Luke, a Sabbath-day's journey, that is, a mile. It lay overagainſt the city, ſaith (f) Joſephus, that is, the eaſt part of it, and was diſtant from it five furlongs; he ſpeaking only of the foot of Mount Olivet, which was no farther diſtant from the city: whereas St Luke ſpeaks of the place whence Chriſt aſcended, which was three furlongs farther; whence he informs us, that Chriſt led his diſciples out ἕως εἰς Βηθανίαν, even to the borders of Bethany; not to the Bethany mentioned John 11. 18. which was fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, but to that tract of the mount where the name of Bethphage ceaſed, and that of Bethany began, Luke 24. 50. 51.

1. PAMPHYLIA is a province of Aſia Minor, having to the ſouth the Pamphylian ſea, mentioned Acts 27. 5. Cilicia to the eaſt, Piſidia to the north, (whence we find St Paul paſſing through Piſidia to Pamphylia, Acts 14. 24. and from Pamphylia to Piſidia, Acts 13. 14.), and Lycia to the weſt. The cities mentioned in the ſcripture as belonging to it, are Perga and Attalia, Acts 13. 13. Here alſo the Jews dwelt, ſaith (g) Philo; whence they of Pamphylia are mentioned among thoſe who appeared at Jeruſalem at the day of Pentecoſt, Acts 2. 10.

2. PAPHOS was a city of Cyprus, Acts 13. 4. 6. the metropolis of that iſland, and the place where the proconſul had his reſidence; and Venus, ſaith Tacitus, had the moſt (h) ancient temple, which he deſcribes more largely in the beginning of his ſecond book of hiſtories; whence it became, ſaith Arator, (i) laſcivus ager ſacrilegæque libidinis antrum, being the place where the virgins proſtituted themſelves before marriage, to get a dowery, as we learn from (k) Juſtin, and (l) Herodotus. Here St Paul ſtruck blind Elymas the ſorcerer, and converted Sergius the proconſul. That the Jews dwelt here in abundance, we learn from Elymas a Jew, ver. 6. See Cyprus.

3. Of PARTHIA we have only mention indirectly, in theſe words, Acts 2. 9. Parthians, Medes, and Elamites. It laſted an empire for 400 years, and diſputed for the empire of the eaſt with the Romans: they were celebrated for the (m) veneration of their kings, and for their way of fighting by flight, and ſhooting their arrows backwards. They are not mentioned in ſcripture, ſay Ethicus and Orotius, ſave under the name of Medes. They dwelt between Media and Meſopotamia; in all which Tranſeuphratenſian places, except ſome little parts of Babylon, and of ſome other little prefectures, the Jews, ſaith (n) Philo, abounded, and ſo were at Jeruſalem when the Holy Ghoſt fell on the apoſtles.

4. PERGE, or PERGA, is a city of Pamphylia, Acts 13. 13. memorable among the Heathens for a temple of Diana, built there; whence ſhe was called, ſaith (o) Mela, Diana Pergæa, Περγαία Ἄρτεμις, ſaith Stephanus; among the Chriſtians, for the departure thence of John Mark from Barnabas and Paul, to Jeruſalem, which occaſioned the rupture betwixt them for a ſeaſon, Acts 15. 37. 40.

5. PHOENICIA was a province of Syria, divided into two parts; Phœnicia Maritima, which reached from Tripolis to Ptolemais, ſay ſome; to Peluſium in Egypt, ſay others; and Mid-land Phœnicia, of which Damaſcus was the metropolis. They had their names, ſaith Bochart, not ἀπὸ τῶν φοινίκων, from the palm-trees growing in their land, nor from the Red ſea; nor a puniceo colore, from their purple colour; nor ἀπὸ τοῦ φόνου, from the ſlaughters they made where they came, but from their riſe, they being beni ynak, ſons of the Anakims in Canaan; whence being beaten by Joſhua, they fled to the ſide of the Mediterranean ſea, where, ſaith (p) Procopius, they erected pillars with this inſcription, Ἡμεῖς ἐσμεν οἱ φεύγοντες ἀπὸ προσώπου Ἰησοῦ τοῦ λῃστοῦ υἱοῦ Ναυῆ, We are they who fly from the face of Joſhua, the ſon of Nave, the robber. They were celebrated for their navigations, of which, ſaith Bochart, they have left indications in all places; and for the invention of letters, for from them, ſaith Herodotus, letters were brought by Cadmus into Greece, and were thence called Φοινικήια γράμματα, Phœnician letters, Herodot. l. 5. c. 58. Tatian. edit. Oxon. p. 3. Euſeb. præp. evang. l. 10. c. 5. and they had them, ſaith Eupolemus, from the Jews, Clem. Alex. ſtrom. 1. p. 343.

6. PHILIPPI

6. PHILIPPI was a city of Macedonia, ſo called from Philip King of Macedon, who repaired it, whence it loſt its former name of Dathos. It is called by St Luke, ἡ πρώτη τῆς μερίδος τῆς Μακεδονίας πόλις, not becauſe it was the metropolis of it, for that was Theſſalonica; ſee note on Phil. 1. 1.; but becauſe it was the firſt city belonging to it, which they who came from Neapolis in Thrace, as St Paul did, Acts 16. 11. or from the gulf of Strymon, touched at. See the note on Acts 16. 12. It was celebrated among the Romans, for being a Roman colony, Acts 16. 21. and for the Campi Philippici, where Cæſar and Pompey firſt, and afterwards Auguſtus and Mark Anthony fought with Caſſius and Brutus; and among Chriſtians, for their converſion by St Paul, and the liberal contribution they, and they only, ſent him in his neceſſity, by Epaphroditus, Philip. 4. 15. 18. and for his epiſtle directed to them.

7. PISIDIA, mentioned Acts 14. 24. was a country in Aſia Minor, having Pamphylia on the ſouth, Galatia on the north, Iſauria on the eaſt, and Phrygia on the weſt. Its chief city was Antioch in Piſidia, Acts 13. 14. ſo called, to diſtinguiſh it from Antioch in Syria. Its inhabitants are commended by (q) Livy, for their ſkill in war above other Aſiatics; and were anciently, ſaith (r) Pliny, called Solymi, who were compared to lions, for their courage.

8. PONTUS, a province in Aſia Minor, bounded on the north with the Euxine ſea, on the ſouth with Cappadocia, on the weſt with the river Halys, on the eaſt with Chalcis; celebrated among the Heathen poets for its poiſonous herbs, and therefore called by (s) Virgil, Viroſa Pontus, and hence Medea is ſaid to have had her poiſons from thence: among the Jews, for the diſperſions of that nation through Pontus, &c. 1 Pet. 1. 1. (t) Philo declaring, that they ſent their colonies, ἄχρι τῶν τοῦ Πόντου μυχῶν, to the utmoſt bounds of Pontus: among Chriſtians, for the birth of Aquila, Acts 18. 2. and for the name of an epiſtle ad Ponticos, given to the firſt epiſtle of St Peter, as being ſent unto them. See Tertul. Scorp. c. 12. Cyprian. teſtim. l. 3. c. 36. 37.

9. PHRYGIA is a province of Aſia Minor, divided into the Greater, which had Bithynia on the north, Galatia on the eaſt, Pamphylia and Lycia on the ſouth, Lydia and Myſia on the weſt, and was called in the (u) Notitiæ, Pacatiana, where the chief cities mentioned in ſcripture, Col. 2. 1. are Laodicea and Hierapolis; and of this St Luke ſeems to ſpeak, Acts 2. 10. becauſe he joins it with Pamphylia below it; and Phrygia Minor, of which he ſpeaketh, Acts 16. 6. 18. and 22. when he ſaith, they paſſed through Phrygia and Galatia. The inhabitants were a ſervile people, kept in their duty beſt by (x) ſtripes, and made wiſe only by ſufferings, ſaith (y) Cicero. In all theſe parts of Aſia Minor, even to Bithynia and the Euxine ſea, the Jews abounded, ſaith Philo, in the place forecited.

10. PTOLEMAIS was a city of Galilee by the ſeaſide, dividing the Upper from the Lower Galilee, and the land of Iſrael from Phœnicia: it was ſeated in a plain compaſſed about with mountains, having on the eaſt the mountainous part of Galilee, on the north the Scalæ Tyriorum, on the ſouth Carmel. Near to it, ſaith (z) Joſephus, is the ſepulchre of Memnon, and the vale of ſand that turns into glaſs; the fragments of which glaſs being brought back to the place, will return again into ſand. It was memorable among the Jews, for the coming of Petronius thither to ſet up the ſtatue of Caius Caligula, which, at the intreaty of the Jews, declaring, that their law admitted no images either in their temple, or profane places, he deferred to execute, till he had writ to Cæſar, who (a) died before his anſwer came to the hands of Petronius; and alſo for the ſlaughter of 2000 Jews by the inhabitants of Ptolemais; and among the Chriſtians, for St Paul's journey in a ſhip of Phœnicia to Tyre, where the ſhip unladed her burden, Acts 21. 3. from Tyre to Ptolemais 32 miles on foot; from thence to Cæſarea, ver. 7. 8. and from Cæſarea to Jeruſalem, ver. 15. See the note on Acts 21. 7.

11. PUTEOLI, a famous mart-town in Italy, having a commodious haven for ſhips, made, ſays (b) Strabo, by art and labour. It was built, ſay St Jerom, and the epitomator of Stephanus, by the (c) Samians; and called Puteoli, ſaith (d) Varro, from the pits of hot and cold water; by the Greeks it was called Dicæarchia. Here St Paul, by the favour of the Centurion, ſtaid ſeven days. See more, note on Acts 28. 13.

1. RAMA, Matth. 2. 18. was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, diſtant from Jeruſalem, ſaith (e) Joſephus, forty furlongs; ſaith (f) St Jerom, ſix miles; and being on a hill, as the word Rama ſignifies, might be within ſight of Jeruſalem, as may be probably collected from Judg. 19. 13. It was, ſaith Dr Patrick, late Biſhop of Ely, northward of Jeruſalem; and not far from it, as appears from the Levite going from Bethlehem-Judah to Jebus or Jeruſalem, and being benighted when he came there, and not able to reach Shilo, whither he was going, conſulted with his ſervant, whether they ſhould lodge at Rama, or Gibeah, Judg. 19. 11. 13. 18. and truly, being the place to which he might divert when he was on the weſt of Jebus, in his way to Shilo, after the ſun went down, and being near to Gibeah, Judg. 19. 13. 1 Sam. 22. 6. ſomewhat north-weſt of Jeruſalem, and yet not far from it, and ſo the coaſts of Bethlehem four miles from Jeruſalem, and the coaſts of Rama might be at a leſs diſtance. But others, to avoid this difficulty, how the coaſts of Bethlehem could reach Rama in the tribe of Benjamin, and the children ſlain in thoſe coaſts could cauſe a weeping in Rama, give us Rama near Gibeah, north of Jeruſalem, and at a greater diſtance from it on that ſide, than Bethlehem was on the ſouth, and place another Rama near Bethlehem, and ſouth of it: but it is certain, from 1 Sam. 10. 2. that Rachel's ſepulchre was in the border of Benjamin, and only in the way from Bethel to Bethlehem, Gen. 35. 16. 20. and ſo the voice of Rachel weeping at Rama, muſt refer to Rama in Benjamin: either then their territories, or the villages belonging to them, muſt be near, or the words of St Matthew muſt be conſtrued thus; Καὶ ἀποϛείλας (ſub. ἀπὸ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ), And ſending from Jeruſalem, he ſlew all the children in Bethlehem, τὴν ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς ὁρίοις αὐτῆς, and in all the coaſts of Jeruſalem; it being ordinary for pronoun-relatives to refer to a remoter antecedent, as is ſhewed, note on Luke 5. 17. and for nouns to be included in a verb relating to them.

2. RHEGIUM is a port-town in Italy, oppoſite to Sicily, ſo called by the Greeks, as judging it was broken off from thence by the ſea; of which ſee Cluverius de Italia antiqua, l. 1. p. 276. Here St Paul ſtaid but one day, Acts 28. 13. and did nothing which St Luke thought fit to mention: but in that day, ſay the fabulous writers of the church of Rome, he converted ſome of the inhabitants and ſtrangers that were there, by burning a large ſtone pillar with a little candle; preached to the fiſhes of the ſea; and commanded the graſhoppers, which with their noiſe diſturbed his preaching, to be ſilent, from which time they left the land. See Lorinus on the place.

3. RHODES was an iſland in the Carpathian ſea, ſo called, ſay the Greeks, ἀπὸ τῶν ῥόδων, from the roſes growing there. It is accounted, for dignity, among the Aſiatic iſlands, next to Cyprus and Leſbos: it was of ſo clear an air, that Solinus ſaith, there was not a day in the year in which the ſun did not ſhine upon it; whence it is ſtyled by Horace, Clara Rhodus. Tiberius, ſaith (ε) Suetonius, ſailed thither, amœnitate et ſalubritate inſulæ captus, "being taken with the "pleaſantneſs and healthineſs of the iſland;" which was therefore, by the Roman nobility, made a place for their (ʰ) receſs: on the north-weſt of it were Coos and Cnidus, on the eaſt Patara, whence St Paul ſails from Coos to Rhodes, and thence to Patara, Acts 21. 1. It was famous for a college in which the ſtudents were eminent for eloquence and mathematics; for a coloſſus of the ſun, which paſſed for one of the wonders of the world, it being ſeventy cubits high, and falling by an earthquake; but chiefly for the expertneſs of the inhabitants of that city and iſland in the art of navigation, which made them ſovereigns of the ſea: their conſtitutions alſo, and judgments in affairs relating to the ſea, being withal ſo juſt, as to become incorporated afterwards into the Roman Pandects. See Strabo, l. 14. p. 448.

4. ROME. Of this city, becauſe I can never ſay enough, I will ſay only that which ſome way tends to the interpretation or the illuſtration of ſomething contained in the New Teſtament. And,

1*ſt*, I have obſerved already, that it was the ſeat of the fourth empire, and was therefore called orbis terrarum, mundi caput, regina, domina, dea; the lord of the whole earth, the head and queen of it: (ſee Lloyd de Roma); and in ſcripture, πᾶσα οἰκουμένη, the whole world, Luke 3. 1. See the note on Heb. 2. 5.

2*dly*, That being ſo, all the Roman provinces, ſtyled the world, of neceſſity repaired to it, not for religious cauſes, but on civil accounts, ob potentiorem principalitatem; ſee the note on Acts 28. 15. it being an (ı) old law, that all other cities ſhould follow the cuſtom of Rome, the head of the world.

3*dly*, That the epiſtle to the Romans, though it was written after the epiſtle to the Theſſalonians and Corinthians, was placed firſt in order, as ſome of the fathers conjecture, by reaſon of the dignity of that city. See the preface to that epiſtle: to which add, that it was called urbs ſepticollis, and ἑπταλόφος, from the ſeven hills on which it was built, and was celebrated on this account, when St John wrote his Revelations, not only by her famous poets, Virgil, Horace, Martial, Ovid, Propertius, but by her orator (κ) Cicero, and many others; which makes it reaſonable to conceive, St John points to this city, when he ſpeaks of the woman ſitting upon ſeven hills, Rev. 17. 9. there being then no other city to which the character of that woman could agree; none drunk with the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Chriſt Jeſus, as ſhe was, or having ſeven heads, and ten horns, or making the kings of the earth drunk with the wine of her fornication.

2*dly*, That the beaſt ſitting upon theſe hills, would ſuffer no man to buy or ſell, who had not his name or mark upon him, Rev. 13. 17. Now, this agrees exactly to the church of Rome, which hath, in (ı) three ſeveral councils, decreed, that none of her members ſhould ſell any thing to, or buy any thing of heretics, or have any commerce, or merchandiſe, or any dealings with them. Add to this,

3*dly*, That the name of the beaſt, who made all men, rich and poor, great and ſmall, free and ſervants, to take his character upon them, Rev. 13. 16. 17. was the number of a man whoſe name contained 666, as (m) Irenæus ſays the name Λατεῖνος, given to the Latin church, did: but, as for the name Evanthus and Teiton, which, ſaith he, contains the ſame number, and other names added by Feuardentius, who can apply any thing of the characters belonging to this beaſt, to them? Whence I conclude, this beaſt muſt certainly be Rome; and that not Rome Heathen, which made no ſuch decrees, and had many more than ten kingdoms under her, but Rome Chriſtian.

1. SALAMIS, mentioned Acts 13. 5. was a city in the eaſtern part of Cyprus, where was a ſynagogue of the Jews, and where the Jews, in the time of Trajan, deſtroyed the city, and killed all the inhabitants. See Cyprus. This city was famous among the Greek writers for the ſtory of the dragon killed by Chycreas their king, and for the death of (n) Anaxarchus, whom Nicocreon, the tyrant of Cyprus, pounded to death with iron peſtles, he crying out, Tundis Anaxarchi vaſculum, Anaxarchum non tundis; the body being ſtyled, both by the ſcriptures and philoſophers, Σκεῦος, the veſſel, Θύλακος, the repoſitory of the ſoul: See 1 Theſſ. 4. 4. It is alſo the name of an iſland in the Saronic gulf, Strabo, l. 9. p. 271.

2. SALEM, famous for being the ſeat of Melchiſedec king of Salem, is, by (o) Joſephus, called Solyma, and ſaid to be the ſame place which afterwards was called Jeruſalem; that, by the pſalmiſt, being called Salem, in theſe words, At Salem is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion, Pſal. 76. 2. But, (p) St Jerom ſaith, it was a village of the Schichemites, and lay in the vale betwixt Sodon and Damaſcus, eight miles from Scythoplis, or Bethſhan: ſo the Septuagint muſt underſtand the word, when they ſay, Gen. 33. 18. Jacob went down εἰς Σάλημ, to Salem, a city of Sichem; and then it muſt be the place mentioned John 3. 23. when it is ſaid, John was baptizing in Enon near Salem, both theſe places being in the tribe of Manaſſeh.

3. SALMONE is only mentioned by the by, Acts 27. 7. and is, ſay Pliny, l. 4. c. 12. p. 213. Mela, l. 2. c. 7. and Dionyſius, v. 110. an eaſtern promontory of Crete, where alſo was a city of that name.

4. SAMARIA, as it was the capital city of the ten tribes, belongs to the hiſtory of the Old Teſtament: as it is mentioned in the New, it comprehends the two tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh within Jordan, lying in the middle betwixt Galilee and Judea, John 4. 3. 4. See the note there. It began at Ginea lying in the great plain, ſaith (q) Joſephus, and ended at the toparchy of the Acrobateni It was deſtroyed by Hircanus, but was rebuilt and much augmented by Herod the Great, and by him called Sebaſte, in honour of Auguſtus; but it ſtill retained the name of Samaria, Acts 8. 5. and Sichem; and by the Jews, in deriſion, Sychar: See note on John 4. 5. The Samaritans, though, in our Saviour's time, and long before, they owned the true God, were circumciſed, and owned the five books of Moſes; ſee the note on John 4. 22.; yet were they much hated by the Jews, by reaſon of the controverſy betwixt them, concerning the place where they were to worſhip, and to which they were to bring their ſacrifices; they ſaying, it was Mount Gerizim, the Jews, Mount Zion, where the temple ſtood: See the note there. Hence, ſaith the ſon of Syrach, My ſoul abhorreth them who ſit upon the mountain of Samaria, and the fooliſh people that dwell at Sichem, chap. 50. 25. 26. 27. See the note on John 4. 9. But our bleſſed Lord did not hate them; for, as they expected the Meſſiah, ſo he declared to them, that he was that Meſſiah who was to come, John 4. 25. 26. and, at his aſcenſion, commanded his diſciples to go through Judea, and Samaria, and then to the Gentiles, Acts 1. 8. which they did with good ſucceſs, both in the city, and the villages about it, Acts 8. 5. 25.; though Juſtin Martyr doth inform us, that through the deluſions of their two famous magicians, Simon Magus, and Doſitheus, they became the worſt of Chriſtians, Apol. 2. p. 88.

5. SAMOS was an iſland in the Icarian ſea, of which the ſcripture only ſaith, that Paul paſſed by Chios to Samos, and thence to Miletus, Acts 20. 15. It had its name, ſaith (r) Bochart, from the high rocks there, named שמו, and was famous among the Heathens for the worſhip of Juno, and for the earthen veſſels there; for Pherecydes, the maſter of Pythagoras, who foretold an earthquake that happened there, by drinking of the waters; for the birth of Pythagoras, who was vir ortu Samius, ſaith (s) Ovid, and for one of the Sybils, called Sibylla Samia, and for a place called by Plutarch, Samiorum Flores, where they did (t) καθ' ὑπερβολὴν τρυφῆς, commit all manner of lewdneſs with women.

6. SAMOTHRACIA, an iſland in the Ægean ſea, near Thracia, where Hebrus falls into the ſea, was ſo called, ſaith (u) Euſtathius, πρὸς ἀντιδιαστολὴν, by way of diſtinction from the Ionian Samos, and from another mentioned by Homer, and called Cephalenia. Here the (x) Dii Cabiri, or great gods, mentioned in the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius, were worſhipped, into whoſe ſacred ceremonies they who were initiated, were eſteemed more holy and juſt, and even ſecure from ſhipwreck, as alſo of preſervation in all dangers whatſoever. See Bochart. Canaan, l. 1. c. 12. & Lloyd in voce.

7. SAREPTA, Luke 4. 26. was a city of Sidon betwixt that city and Tyre; it had the name Zarephath, as being a conflatory for the boiling of metals. It was the place where Elijah dwelling, was preſerved by the widow's cruſe of oil, and barrel of meal, that waſted not, 1 Kings 17. 9. (y) Joſephus ſaith, the three years drought which occaſioned his going thither, was mentioned by Menander.

8. SARON, mentioned Acts 9. 35. was a ſpacious champaign, or fertile vale, betwixt Lydda and the ſea, having ſeveral villages in it; it was ſo called from Sharra, to let looſe, becauſe there they turned out their cattle, and is famous among the Rabbins for its wines.

9. SELEUCIA, a city not of Meſopotamia, Cilicia, or Piſidia, but of Syria, was the firſt city to which Paul and Barnabas came, when they were ſent on a peculiar temporary miſſion, by the direction of the Holy Ghoſt, Acts 13. 3. 4.

10. SICHEM was, ſaith (z) Joſephus, the metropolis of Samaria, built at the foot of Mount Gerizim; on which mount, hanging over Samaria, they had a temple, at which they offered all their ſacrifices. This temple was (a) there built by Sanballat, for his ſon Manaſſeh, chaſed away by Nehemiah, becauſe he would not put away the daughter of Sanballat. This temple was, after it had ſtood two hundred years, deſtroyed by Hircanus, and never was rebuilt in the ſame place; but that which they called the holy mount, remaining, and being, in their Pentateuch, (here differing from the Hebrew text), the place where God commands the Jews to ſet up an altar; (not on Mount Gerizim, as the Samaritan copies have it, but on Mount Ebal, Deut. 27. 4. 5.); this they alledge to juſtify their building a temple there; and here they had ſtill their altar for ſacrifice, which made the ſchiſm betwixt them and the Jews. This controverſy ſeems to be decided by the pſalmiſt, ſaying, He choſe not the tribe of Ephraim, (where that mountain was), but he choſe the tribe of Judah, and the mount Zion which he loved, and there he built his ſanctuary, Pſal. 78. 67. 68; and is more certainly decided in favour of the Jews, by Chriſt, John 4. 22. It was built in a valley betwixt Mount Gerizim and Ebal, in the tribe of Ephraim; was eight miles diſtant from Samaria, had its name from Sechem the ſon of Galaad, Numb. 26. 31. and was after called Neapolis, Plin. l. 5. c. 13.

11. SIDON is, by (b) Joſephus, thought to have had its name from Sidon the ſon of Canaan; but Trogus ſaith, it had its name a piſcium ubertate, from the abundance of fiſhes, the ſea upon which it lay, ſay the Hebrews, abounding with them: accordingly, the Hebrew Said, from which it is derived, ſignifies fiſhery, or fiſhing; and Bethſaida is a place of fiſhing, and it was afterwards called Saida: "I "came to Saida, the greateſt of cities," ſaith Benjamin in Itinerario. The men of Sidon being great ſhipwrights, were famous above other nations for hewing and poliſhing timber, there being none who were ſkilled how to hew timber like the Sidonians, 1 Kings 5. 6. One of the gods of the Sidonians, mentioned in ſcripture, is Aſhtaroth, Judg. 2. 13. 1 Kings 11. 5. a goddeſs, by Philo Biblius, Theodoret, Nicetas, and Procopius Gazæus, called (c) Venus; as alſo, ſay the Greeks, and Cicero. Hence ſhe had her whores to miniſter to them who committed whoredom in her ſervice.

12. Of the Tower and Pool of SILOAM.] The fountain of Siloam, ſaith (d) Joſephus, was a ſweet and large fountain on the weſt of Jeruſalem without the wall; and its waters bending towards the ſouth, ran all along the ſouth of Jeruſalem without the wall, but at the eaſt ſide came within the Lower Jeruſalem, and made the Pool of Siloam, or Bethesda, mentioned John 5. 2. 9. 11. and near it, toward the weſt, ſtood the Tower of Siloam, which fell upon the eighteen perſons, Luke 13. 4. ſo proper was the mention of men, ſlaughtered whilſt they were offering ſacrifice in the court of the temple, and in the lower city, by a tower falling on them, to the very ſame things befalling the Jews at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. See the note there.

15. SINAI was a mountain in Arabia Petræa, where the law was given. It had two tops; the one lower, called Horeb, or, the mount of God, Exod. 3. 1. where he appeared to Moſes in a flame of fire in a buſh; this Horeb is therefore, by St Stephen, Acts 7. 30. and by (e) Joſephus, called Sinai, who alſo ſaith, (f) δόξαν ἴσχυν ὑπολήψεως αὐτῷ τὸ Θεῖον, it was believed the Divinity reſided there, and therefore other ſhepherds durſt not feed upon it: the other top of Sinai, where the law was given, was a very high mountain, ſaith (g) Joſephus, to the top of which one could ſcarce ſee, and was accounted religious, it being thought that the Divinity dwelt there alſo. That here, afterwards, dwelt the Hagarenes, and had houſes cut out of the rock, ſee Bochart. Phaleg. l. 4. c. 27. p. 312. and the note on Gal. 4. 25.

14. SODOM was the chief of the Pentapolitan cities, and therefore gave the name to the whole land. It was burnt, with three other cities, by fire from heaven, for their unnatural luſts; of the truth of which, we have, from the Heathens, the teſtimonies of Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Tacitus, Solinus; from the Jews, the teſtimonies of Joſephus, Philo, and the book of Wiſdom; of which ſee the note on Jude, ver. 7.

the Scholiast upon (h) Pindar, out of four cities which he overthrew, and turned into one. It is called by Pindar, Μεγαλαπόλις Συράκοσαι, it being the most noble city, not only of Sicily, but of all Greece; six miles in compass, saith (i) Strabo: it is called by Ausonius, Quadruplex Syracusa, as being divided into four parts, Acradina, Tyche, Neapolis, and the island; to which Strabo adding Epipolus, calls it Pentapolis. The first of these contained in it the famous temple of Jupiter; the second was called Τύχη, because it had the temple of Fortune in it; and surely fortune favoured them, since when the Romans took the city, they found, say (k) Livy and (l) Plutarch, more riches in it than they did in Carthage: in that part called Neapolis, was a great amphitheatre, and a wonderful statue of Apollo, in the midst of a large square: in the isle of Ortygia was Hiero's palace, two temples of Diana and Minerva, and the famous fountain of Arethusa; and this, saith Strabo, was the only part which Augustus rebuilt, after it had been destroyed by Marcellus. Archimedes, who, by his mathematical engines, had much galled the Romans, was slain in the storming of it, while he was intent upon his figures, as Livy and Plutarch say. Ibid.

16. SYRIA, among the ancients, viz. Justin, Herodotus, and Strabo, was as large as Assyria, they being after called Syri: but Syria (m) properly so called, is either taken largely, so as to comprehend Phœnicia, and the holy land, and so it is bounded on the west with the Sicilian sea, on the east with Euphrates, and Arabia Deserta, on the north with Cilicia, and on the south with Arabia Petræa, and had, in ancient times, for its capital city, where the president resided, Damascus, and afterwards Antioch of Syria: in the New Testament, it always seems to signify Syria in the stricter sense, as it is distinguished from Judea, Matth. 4. 24. 25. and from Phœnicia, Acts 21. 2. 3. in which sense it is also used by Ptolemy, who divides Palestine from it; by (n) Strabo, saying, Ἐχόμενα Συρίᾳ ἡ Φοινίκη, then comes Syria and Phœnice; by (o) Pliny, who saith, Syriam circumfundi Phœnice, "Syria is surrounded by Phœnice;" and by Dionysius, P. V. 904. 905. who places Syria, properly so called, in the continent, and Phœnicia in the tract along the sea. Hence, the proverb in Suidas, Σύροι πρὸς Φοινίκας, i. e. one deceitful nation against another.

17. SYRO-PHŒNICIA is only mentioned in the history of the woman's daughter, called a woman of Canaan, Matth. 15. 22. but a Greek and a Syro-Phœnician, Mark 7. 26.; a Greek, because she was of their religion, and used the Greek tongue; the Greeks being mingled with the Syrians, saith (p) Josephus; a woman of Canaan, because Phœnicia was also called Canaan: see the notes there. A Syro-Phœnician, as being of that part of Phœnicia, which lay betwixt Syria properly so called, and Phœnicia by the sea-side; and which was called also, saith (q) Bochartus, Cœlosyria, and contained Heliopolis, Chalcis, and the tract of Marsya, Damascus, and Alala. Hence of Damascus, (r) Justin Martyr and (s) Tertullian say, that it belonged to Syro-Phœnice.

1. TRES TABERNÆ. Of these, and of Appii Forum, not before mentioned, see the note on Acts 28. 15. And that they are not ill translated taverns, or places of reception, I gather, not only from (t) Isidore, Pelusiota, and (u) Œcumenius, who call them πανδοχεῖα ἢ καπηλεῖα, but also from (x) Zosimus, when he saith, Severus was strangled at the place called the Three Taverns, by men placed there by Maxentius for that purpose.

2. TIBERIAS was a city (y) built by Herod the Tetrarch, in Galilee, near the lake of Gennesareth, and so called in honour of Tiberius Nero: Hegisippus says, it was but two miles from (z) Magdala, and was the same with Cinnereth: the privileges he gave to the inhabitants of the place, made it grow to be one of the prime cities of the Lower Galilee, where were thirteen synagogues, and an academy; here was the last session of the sanhedrim, and here the Talmud was collected. Of the sea of Tiberias, see in Gennesareth.

3. TARSUS was a city of Cilicia, Acts 21. 39. the metropolis, and most renowned city, which, saith (a) Josephus, gave name to the whole country; the mother of cities, saith (b) Solinus, celebrated among the Romans, for being, saith Pliny, libera civitas, and having the freedom of a Roman colony, or the highest privileges under Julius Cæsar and Octavian, and the very name of Juliopolis: see the note on Acts 22. 28. Among the Jews, it was famous for being the place whither Jonas designed to fly, and the metropolis of that country, where many of them, saith Philo, dwelt; among the Christians, for being the place where St Paul was born: in fine, it was a city very rich and populous, where was an academy, furnished with men, so eminent, that, as Strabo (c) saith, they excelled in all arts of polite learning and philosophy; even those of Alexandria, and Athens, and Rome itself, were beholden to it for its best professors.

4. THESSALONICA was the metropolis of Macedonia; see the note on Phil. 1. 1. a noble mart, and a city, which, saith (d) Strabo, is the most populous of all Macedonia. It is, ſaith (e) Pliny, a free city, and had in it a ſynagogue of the Jews, they living, ſaith (f) Philo, in Macedonia and Theſſaly. The inhabitants of Theſſaly, ſaith (g) Athenæus, were given to luxury and diſſoluteneſs, and, by their luxury, invited the Perſians into Greece: their maidens and women alſo danced naked, as their cuſtom was: which things might give occaſion to thoſe inſtructions of the apoſtle to them, to avoid fornication, and to poſſeſs their veſſels in ſanctification and honour, and not in the luſts of concupiſcence, as did thoſe nations which knew not God, 1 Theſſ. 4. 3. 4. 5. To this church St Paul wrote his two firſt epiſtles.

5. TROAS was a country and city in the Leſſer Aſia, where St Paul came to preach Chriſt's goſpel, and had a door opened to him of the Lord, 2 Cor. 2. 12. (h) Strabo and Ptolemy place the city in Phrygia Minor: it is, by St Jerom, ſaid to be the ſame with Troy, celebrated in the works of Homer. It was, ſaith (i) Pliny, a Roman colony.

6. TRACHONITIS was a region and tetrarchy, or rather part of a tetrarchy, in Syria, anciently called Argob, Deut. 3. 14. It lay north of Peræa, and eaſt of Batanea, and was ſo called, ſaith G. Tyrius, from dragons, or ſecret lurking-places, in which this country abounded, the inhabitants living upon (k) robbery, till they were reſtrained by Herod.

7. TROGYLLIUM, Acts 20. 15. is a promontory, ſaith (l) Strabo, as it were the foot of Mount Mycale, oppoſite to, and five miles from Samos; to which Paul coming, goes on to Trogyllium, to harbour there. There was alſo a town there of the ſame name, mentioned by Pliny, l. 5. c. 29. p. 295.

8. TYRE and SIDON. Theſe two places being ſo often mentioned in ſcripture together, and lying but 200 ſtadia, ſaith (m) Strabo, that is, 25 miles aſunder, I ſhall ſpeak of them both together. And,

1*ſt*, As to antiquity, though it be certain, that, as (n) Strabo ſaith, both theſe cities were πάλαι ἐνδοξοι καὶ λαμπραὶ, of old illuſtrious and renowned cities, inſomuch, ſaith he, that they were incomparable for greatneſs, ſplendor, and antiquity; though Tyre be ſtyled by Dionyſius the Ogygian, and by the poets, the Cadmean Tyre; and by the prophet, the city whoſe antiquity is of ancient days, Iſ. 23. 7. yet was Sidon much the elder. For, 1. Though (o) Homer mentions Sidon, and ſpeaks of the Sidonians as πολυδαίδαλοι, excellent artificers, he hath not one word, ſaith (p) Strabo, of Tyre, or the Tyrians. 2. Trogus, in (q) Juſtin, ſaith, that, after many years, the Sidonians being overcome by the king of Aſcalon, and beaten to their ſhips, built Tyre the year before the Trojan war, i. e. ſaith (r) Joſephus, 240 years before Solomon began to build the temple; hence moſt interpreters conceive, that Tyre is called the daughter of Sidon, Iſ. 23. 12. 3. We read of Sidon, the firſt-born of Canaan, Noah's grandſon, who was the builder of Sidon, as Joſephus (s) ſaith, ſee Gen. 10. 15.; and read of Sidon, as the border of Canaan, ver. 19. but we read nothing of Tyre, at leaſt till it be mentioned by Joſhua, chap. 19. 29.

2*dly*, Sidon, at leaſt for a long time, excelled Tyre in greatneſs, whence it is ſtyled Sidon Rabba, the Great, Joſh. 11. 8. & 19. 28. Mela ſaith, that before it was taken by the Perſians, it was maritimarum urbium maxima, "the greateſt of maritime cities:" (t) Diodorus Siculus, having made mention of the city of the Arvadians, the Sidonians, and Tyrians, i. e. Arvad, Sidon, and Tyre, as the Phœnician Tripolis, he adds of Sidon, that (u) πλέτῳ δὲ καὶ ταῖς ἄλλαις χορηγίαις ἡ πόλις πολὺ προεῖχε τῶν κατὰ τὴν Φοινίκην πόλεων, for riches, and other proviſions, it far exceeded the other cities of the Phœnicians, that city having long quietly enjoyed that trade which brought in theſe riches; whence, to live quietly and ſecurely, is to live after the manner of the Sidonians, Judg. 18. 7. Moreover, in ſkill in aſtronomy and arithmetic, and all the arts of merchandiſe, in philoſophy and philoſophers, (x) Strabo makes them ἀνάμιλλοι, emulous, or equal in compariſon, and ſaith the Greeks had their philoſophy from them. Hence both of them, in ſcripture, are repreſented as very wiſe, Zech. 9. 2. Ezek. 27. 8. 9. But then,

4*thly*, Tyre is to be preferred before Sidon for ſtrength, as being built in the ſea, four furlongs from the land, till Alexander joined it to the continent, whence it is called the ſtrong city, Joſh. 19. 29.; and after Sidon ſuffered by the Perſians, it excelled in riches, it being ſtyled, the crowning city, as ſending crowns of gold to kings, and being the city whoſe merchants were princes, and whoſe traffickers were the honourable of the earth, Iſ. 23. 8. Hence (y) Q. Curtius ſaith, that, in the time of Alexander, it was "memorable above all other cities of Syria and Phœnicia, "for ſplendor and greatneſs." They are mentioned in the New Teſtament, as places, to whoſe coaſts Chriſt reſorted, Matth. 15. 21.; ſometimes, as people who reſorted to him from their coaſts, Mark 3. 8. and ſometimes to upbraid the cities of Chorazin and Bethſaida, lying eaſtward of them, as being more incredulous, Matth. 11. 21. 22.

To ſpeak ſomething of Tyre in particular, it is to be obſerved, that there was (z) Old and New Tyre. The Old Tyre, mentioned Joſh. 19. 29. and called Paletyrus, was built upon the continent; whence they of New Tyre tell Alexander, that there was a place without the city, called Paletyrus, where he might ſacrifice to Hercules: it was, ſaith (a) Strabo, diſtant 30 furlongs from the other Tyre, which was four furlongs within the ſea; hence ſaith God to her by the prophet, Thy borders are within the ſea, Ezek. 27. 4. She ſent colonies, ſaith (b) Curtius, pæne orbe toto, "almoſt through the world," viz. to Carthage, Leptis, Utica in Africa, to Thebes in Bœotia, and Gades in Spain, whence it was accounted the mart of the world; they alſo worſhipped, beſides Hercules, the goddeſs Aſtarte at Memphis; whence (c) Herodotus ſaith, the Tyrians had there the temple ξένης Ἀφροδίτης, of Venus the ſtranger, to diſtinguiſh her from that Venus whom the Ægyptians worſhipped.

Though, in ſpeaking of the places near the ſea of Genneſareth or Tiberias, I have followed Dr Lightfoot; yet, becauſe he is ſingular in the ſituation of them, I have left them in the map, as they are ordinarily placed by others.
